committed by some loudmouth don't know nothing about it takes 2 to fuck and it takes 2 to fuck things up And because making apologies that nobody gives a shit about

And because failing to sing my song

finally finally

got on my absolute last nerve

I pick up my sword
I lift up my shield
And I stay ready for war

Because now I live ready for a whole lot more than that

↑ Index

262. Rachel Levitsky

Re: for my sederless Boulder Passover

Fri 10 Apr 1998

---

so it'll be me, the cats, the mouse and

CYBER SEDER!!

http://www.jewmu.com/cyberseder/

↑ Index

263. Karen Kelley
Re: local issue: byrkit performance
Fri 10 Apr 1998

Thanks for the poem, Hugh. As the mother of a 10 year old, I know that the word "fuck" would cause quite a stir among the children, but my response to that is kind of humorous, because the kids I know don't use swear words in common discourse, but get a HUGE kick out of them, and especially love to watch their parents respond to them. As for "jerking off in socks," I suspect that'd be a difficult line for a 13 year old to experience in a group of peers. I can't imagine what response Becky was going for.

And with (is it Barnes & Noble or B. Dalton?) fighting to keep Jock Sturges' book on their shelves, the whole question of what children should be exposed to flares up again.

A good book: _The Body in Question_. Photography & questions of trangression (includes Jock Sturges, Mapplethorpe, the woman who photographs transvetites/transexuals). And for a GREAT essay, check out Dave Hickey on Mapplethorpe in Hickey's _The Invisible Dragon: Four Essays on Beauty_.

I have a Robert Morris book with an image of Morris naked on the cover. All of the kids in the neighborhood are aware of this book, because my daughter, who insists it be turned cover-down in her presence, MUST show it to everyone. And then she explains that we have lots of naked covers on our books, because they're art.

I also think of Richard Serra's "Tilted Arc," the gorgeous sculpture that was removed from a public space because at least part of the "public" hated having to walk around it to get to their places of business, etc. It caused quite an argument between two of my friends: one a curator, one a sculptor who often makes public pieces.

I don't know the answer to this; but it's a great subject.

Hugh Steinberg wrote:

> Frankly we've all heard worse, the problem was audience. I think Becky Byrkit clearly screwed up big. The Tucson Poetry Festival got smeared in the process.
>
> Rachel writes "there is nothing inherently damaging to children about sexual or homoerotic material."
>
> I agree with this one hundred percent, but there are plenty of parents who disagree with this vehemently and who certainly do not want their kids performing on stage while such material is being presented.

> The question is: do you screen those people out of your event, or do you program your event around those people? I suspect most organizations do a little of both.
>
> Rachel, what if the young "channeler" you mentioned in your previous post was on the same bill as someone who read children's poetry, or who brought a lot of kids and their parents into the audience? Wouldn't your cringe factor be multiplied? What if these same parents then went to the local newpaper, and through this your reading series receives the only media publicity it has ever received in the local newsmedia?
>
> So, do you tell the "channeler" to censor himself, or do you tell the other reader they might not want to bring their kids to the reading? I find both alternatives somewhat distasteful, but I'm still not quite sure how I would handle it myself.
>
> Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

264. charles alexander

Re: local issue: byrkit performance

Sat 11 Apr 1998

The Byrkit issue is a tough one.

I do fault Becky Byrkit for getting children involved in a performance they didn't know, and their parents didn't know, would have the kind of content it had.

I also don't think children need to be saved from the erotic, not at all. But I don't think that's what we're talking about here. More about a poet who didn't let children or parents (not in the audience, but IN her performance) know what that performance was about. Should they have asked? Probably so. But that doesn't excuse Byrkit.

As far as what she read or performed, I have no problem with it, nor with it being available to audiences of all ages. I'm not enthused about her work at all, but I would never censor it or try to limit its audience.

I do think the newspaper article was ridiculous, although not AS ridiculous as some community responses to it. If you want to see the online version of the article, I believe you can find it at http://www.azstarnet.com or at least you can today, I don't know what they do there when the next day's issue of the online paper comes out. But the online version has responses from the community linked to it. While one I read this morning supports the poet, others do not, and even invoke more strangeness than the newspaper quote about speaking "negatively about god." One respondent decries the foibles of liberals and ends with the question, "Where is Joe McCarthy when we need him?" We can laugh at that, but it's also scary.

And of course, the sad thing to me is, after all the 16 years of this poetry festival, years which have featured people like bp Nichol, Robert Creeley, Daphne Marlatt, Kamau Brathwaite, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Amiri Baraka, Allen Ginsberg, Nathaniel Tarn, Ron Silliman, Susan Howe, Michael Palmer, Rosmarie Waldrop, Jerome Rothenberg, Gwendolyn Brooks, Nathaniel Mackey, and many many more -- THIS is what commands the newspaper's front page attention. It (the Byrkit event) wasn't good poetry, and it's not good news.

charles

↑ Index

265. George Bowering
Re: Poetics of comic strips
Sat 11 Apr 1998

> Comics sit side by side with poetry in my mind
> some of my favorites
> 1 Daredevil

Do you mean the original one in (I think) EC Comics, or the more recent one in the red outfit , the blind guy for Marvel?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

266. Karen and Trevor
Re: MOVING BORDER/MM KIM
Sat 11 Apr 1998

Myung Kim can be reached at Department of Creative Writing
San Francisco State Univ
1600 Holloway Ave
San Francisco, CA 94132

linda russo wrote:
>

> ------ Message Follows -------
>
> help!!
>
> my copy of Moving Borders went to Oregon by mistake & I have to wait > another week . . . what agony! Was wondering if any would be so kind > as to share -- I'd love a peak at the table of contents . . . maybe > someone can fax me a photocopy? of give a quick rundown here or > backchannel? thx.
>
> also, am looking for the e or s mail of Myunk Mi Kim. . . thx. again

↑ Index

267. Karen and Trevor

Re: Poetics of comic strips

Sat 11 Apr 1998

ScoutEW wrote:
>
> Ever seen the stuff Ron Padgett and Joe Brainard have done with comics?
> At the current display at the NY public library sits is one of their > originals.
> Comics sit side by side with poetry in my mind
> some of my favorites
> 1 Daredevil
> 2 Mighty Mouse (yeah he was a superhero)
> 3 The Invisible Woman
> 4. Iron Fist and Power Man
> 5. Hawkeye > and yours..

Sandman Books of Magic House of Secrets
Various mini series along these lines usually involving Gaiman and/or McKean

I'm interested in selling some Vertigo titles as well--anyone can backchannel if interested

Karen McKevitt

↑ Index

268. Robert J. Tiess
Spring 1998 Poetfest Anthology
Sat 11 Apr 1998

~-~-~-

pages we mumble through so as to avoid the Arizona ambush problem ourselves).

Ron

↑ Index

270. Wendy Kramer
thy cables breathe the bell atlantic
Sat 11 Apr 1998

Date: Sat, 11 Apr 1998 11:32:33 -0500
From: Wendy Kramer <[redacted]> Organization: none
To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
Subject: thy cables breathe the bell atlantic References: <[redacted]>

swill!

took the walk across the brooklyn bridge yesterday and there threw the choiring strings rang said trademark. (this is the view crossing from brooklyn to manhattan).

my poetic sentiment quickly switched to poetic hilarity amidst sunny skies and the steady streams of tourists. i hadnt known the promenade would be dead center, with car traffic running both sides below. it was like walking a boardwalk, like walking down the champs elysee, like the biggest most permissive guiliani jaywalk ever invented! one more amusement park enclave, and pleasant.

those cables amazing; it really is like walking threw a harp.

on collage: there's an exhibit at Krispy Kreme donuts hear near nyu of a man named michael albert: the brochure reads: "The Serial Artist. Serialism: Cerealism + Sir Realism." he's made puzzle-like collages out of cereal boxes, POST cereals (for post-cerealism get it). And too, innerestingly has been at both ends of appropriation of product labels-- said cereal box collages and other collages made of food labels (man afta my own heart) , but also some of his artwork has been made _into_ product labels, for his self start company Tri-State Natural Foods. whose fruit juices are avail. "here at Krispy Kreme." a quote from the brochure agin: "Though some question the practicality of art as a thing in general, no one can deny the necessity of the label for product packaging, and what a dream for any young American to combine the joy of creating unique and beautiful designs and images within the framework of reality in this busy, moving, ever-evolving world of commerce in which we live."

hmmm...reality dream indeed...
eye stickin my "patent name on a signboard brother"

wendy

↑ Index

271. dbkk
A. Berrigan/Y. Morrison at Canessa Park
Sat 11 Apr 1998

Small Press Traffic and Canessa Park Reading Series present:

Anselm Berrigan
Yedda Morrison

Tuesday, April 14, 7:30 p.m. at Canessa Park 708 Montgomery at Columbus
San Francisco
$5

I remember going to a reading way back in the 1990s when Anselm Berrigan was introduced as "the sexiest poet in San Francisco." Well, he's grayed and matured now (and moved to Brooklyn) but the former It Boy still knows how to pack a poem with wit, touch, a shimmering irony and plenty of U-turns between sense and bafflement. Berrigan is a vortex, a nexus, a weather system all to himself. Wherever he goes he catalyzes atmospheres, scenes, admirers, and this fine new work. Words--the right words--spin his way like darts. Berrigan is the author of On The Premises (Gas Editions) and They Beat Me Over the Head with a Sack (Edge Books). He currently teaches at Brooklyn College. This event marks a happy return for us.

We celebrate with Yedda Morrison the publication of her first book, Her Knife, Fork & Spoon: A Book of Etiquette (Double Lucy Press), and the first issue of Tripwire, the magazine of youth poetics she edits with David Buuck. She was born in San Francisco, lived in a free store in the Haight Ashbury, and spent her childhood "on communes, attending anti-nuclear power rallies, etc." She was the assistant editor for Moving Border_ and a former intern at Small Press Traffic. In Morrison's writing distinctions disappear between person and object, object and subject, tense and waistcoat. On this shifting ground of raw, burnt satin, an uneasily female perspective emerges, evoking the claustrophobic sensuality of Eva Hesse, Gloria Grahame, Jean Rhys.

↑ Index

272. RaeA100900
Moving Borders
Sat 11 Apr 1998

I haven't gotten my copy of Moving Borders either - and I'm a contributor! I wonder if this is typical or if I have a unique situation which I should take up with "the proper authorities."

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

273. Burt Kimmelman
Talisman Announcements
Sat 11 Apr 1998

From: MX%"[redacted]" 11-APR-1998 11:15:04.08
To: MX%"[redacted]"
CC:
Subj: Re: see below

Date: Sat, 11 Apr 1998 11:15:13 -0400 (EDT)
From: Edward Foster <[redacted]>
To: "Burt Kimmelman [redacted]" <[redacted]> Subject: Re: see below

burt: could you please forward this to the buffalo chat line?

GRAND OCCASIONS FOR WONDER AND JOY. POETRY LIVES!

(1) A GREAT AND WONDERFUL EVENING OF CONTEMPORARY RUSSIAN POETRY IN ENGLISH TRANSLATION:

with Vitaly Chernevsky, Alex Cigale, Thomas Epstein, Vladimir Gandelsman, Henry Gould, John High, Bob Holman, Lisa Jarnot, Julia Kunina, Mark Lipovetsky, Yaroslav Magutin, Kristin Prevellet, Vadim Mesyats, Leonard Schwartz, Eleni Sikelianos, Tod Thilleman, Sam Truitt, Lewis Warsh, and others

Tuesday, April 14th; 7:00 P.M

Bissinger Room, Stevens Center, Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, New Jersey. -- Convenient to PATH -- Please call [redacted] for directions and further information.

FREE!

(2) PLEASE JOIN US TO CELEBRATE THE PUBLICATION OF:

MOVING BORDERS: THREE DECADES OF INNOVATIVE WRITING BY WOMEN, edited by Mary Margaret Sloan.

Readings from the anthology by Abby Child, Jessica Grim, Erica Hunt, Maureen Owen, Julia Patton, Mary Margaret Sloan, Rosmarie Waldrop, Marjorie Welish, and others.

Friday, April 17, 1998; 7:30 P.M.

CERES GALLERY, Suite 306, 584/588 Broadway (nr. Spring Street, Soho), New York City.

FREE!

↑ Index

274. Maria Damon
Re: Talisman Hegemony at Last!
Sat 11 Apr 1998

---

just had a chance to look at this book, courtesy of mark nowak, one of its inmates...it's a lovely book, quite satisfying, and aroused the admiration of several of my guests at last night's anti-seder party (there was some leavened bread served and no haggadahs available until after desert).

At 3:28 PM +0000 4/10/98, Robert Archambeau wrote:
>So there I was in downtown Lake Forest, IL on my way to grab what passes >for a bagel around here when I see a stack of the >Jarnot/Schwartz/Stroffolino Talisman "Anthology of New (American) Poets" >gleaming in the window display of the local B. Dalton's.
>
>Given the sort of books they normally carry, this is an occurence on par >with seeing a cardboard cutout of Tom Raworth in the window of the local >hardware store. Whoever is handling distribution at Talisman House has >my eternal admiration. Today B. Dalton, tomorrow the world!
>
>By the way -- anyone else find Rosmarie Waldrop's cover blurb -- "it's >the language of the future" a little ominous? Will the second edition >say "We will bury you"?
>
>Best,
>
>Bob
>
>
>--
>Robert Archambeau
>Department of English
>Lake Forest College

>Lake Forest, IL 60045
>http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/
>
>" on the end
>of each decision stands a heretic"
>--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

275. linda russo
Re: Treaded chit-chat
Sat 11 Apr 1998

---

i really fell out of the loop on this thread; i hope it's not too late . . . the conversation has gone many places & it's been fun catching up -- & in light of the quiteness of this (apostate?) list time i'll jump right in. . .

so here i am, "womankind, with her tools of magic, the broom and the mop" (Hawthorne)

but mostly i want to respond to Mark Weiss' post:

> Somebody a long time ago decided that rhymes ending with an unstressed syllable were "female." The designation was certainly applied by a male, and while the designation is rich with suggestion about attitudes about gender, it's prosodically nonsensical.

isn't it also, though, prosidically _sensical_ -- one way to make sense, which happens to be mapped onto another sense-making system (gender)?

> Men and women have been more-or-less communicating with language for a long time, and men and women have been unselfconsciously enjoying each other's writing for almost as long as there's been writing, and usually without the need of a translator. So the differences must be relatively superficial.

Or rather, men have been "communicating" to women . . . not to forget that we're also talking about a power relation. But this thread has, i think, moved beyond that -- i agree with you, more or less about the genders understanding eachother -- only it's not that the differences are superficial, but that they're so widespread & undetectable; i mean to stake difference between two genders is just one way of mapping, delimiting & so discussing, "difference";

just as cixous & irigaray map gender onto writing to talk abt. it. Of course women don't write differently from men as a gender -- but women relate to the whole set of relationships, of which language is but one, "differently" (in a set which includes innumerable differentlies). So as reductive as French feminisms is in places, I can understand the use, however temporal/ary in making that reduction. When Irigaray & Kristeva try to get at a different understanding of time, of narrative, of logic, they want nothing less than to rewrite (or at least irrupt) the whole of western metaphysics -- & they see possessing a body marked "other" as being capable in some ways of accomplishing that; they see the text as one thing that can be a marker of that different set of relations, in this case in text's opacity, rather than in its transparency (to pull out a whole other set of binaries that are often dispute)

> I don't know that the suggested gender difference, however slight or major, is important to any agenda, but I would be intrigued if it exists. Rather than quoting theorists why not present a text and explain convincingly why it has to be by a member of one or another gender?

I don't think this is what Katy was after -- rather she saw certain formal/syntactic qualities as having been employed by women writers to perhaps mark or "gender" a text. (hence katy's words:
>I think it is also entirely possible to do individual readings of > various "experimental" female writers through a lens of gender > identificiation

i.e. a lense that sees gender -- am i right, katy?) I'd like to talk a little more about the gendering though -- if we're trying (as an intellectual socius) to think beyond binaries then we have to allow that texts can be multiply marked "others" with the understanding that there is no "self" (in the self/other equation) -- & by singling out women writers we undermine that effort -- though i'd feel pretty comfortable saying texts can be marked "other" than hegemonic, i.e. antinomian, thereby relating "otherness" to a whole set of operations (in some places denoted as patriarchy -- though what does that really mean anymore?) rather than to a particular "gender" (o great now i have to put that in scare quotes)

Of course women aren't more prone to dashes or rupture or hypotaxis. But according to Irigaray, until we find a "female" language that women can't exist as other than "other"; now if you're a lacanian this makes perfect sense!! -- but this is just the sexier version of the "dream of a common language" -- it doesn't exist & there's no reason why men can't go searching for it as well!

I think a lot of what goes on in contemporary women's poetry is the refusal to be "othered" & a claiming of language as a material to explore all sorts of difference -- while still being a "feminist" (in Howe's antinomian sense of the word, or Dodie's sense of it not being a valid word). But that just might be my sense of my ill-fraught intentionalism which doesn't make it through my texts anyway.

↑ Index

276. dbkk
SF catsitting gig
Sat 11 Apr 1998

Hi, this is Kevin Killian in San Francisco. Dodie Bellamy and I will be out of town from April 24th through May 3, and I'm looking for someone who can come and stay in our apartment while we're away. If you're coming to San Francisco during this period and looking for a place to stay let me know. Basically I need someone to feed our two cats and take in all the mail. The cats, Blanche and Stanley, are quite friendly and love having visitors. The apartment is close to downtown San Francisco and right in the middle of everything. For those of you who have never been here it was featured in Feb 1995 issue of ARTFORUM and believe me has not changed much in the intervening years. So, let me know if you can help me out here. Even if you are not staying long or just for a weekend or whatever it would still help me.

Back channel please, although all would be interested I'm sure in how I'm solving this common problem.

Thanks

Kevin K.

↑ Index

277. Billy Little
comics page collage
Sat 11 Apr 1998

one aspect of this was used quite effectively by the situationists, including guy debord, and was known as detournement. Primarily the panels remained, the dialogue was all rewritten to support political mayhem, Rex Organ, was early american one by Jess? http://www.nothingness.org/SI/fullindex.html

↑ Index

278. morpheal
Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies
Sat 11 Apr 1998

> Bob Ez. is this what you mean by Cherenkov radiation (see definition below)? Can you provide a better definition than the one below? Can you provide an explanation why Cherenkov radiation is important to your argument or I guess I don't really understand tachyons and how they would emit light and what speeds that light would travel at?

I backchanneled the grisly details.

> quick flashes of blue Cherenkov light that result from gamma ray air showers. These gamma rays originate from astrophysical sources at galactic and extragalactic distances. When they enter the earth's atmosphere, the gamma rays interact with air molecules, creating an extensive shower of high-energy particles. These particles go faster than the speed of light in air, and thus emit light, or Cherenkov radiation. This radiation (at optical and ultraviolet wavelengths) is beamed to the ground, where it is readily collected by the heliostat mirrors."

Actually it is the blue light emitting aliens that I would worry about most. The ones that emit a a blue glow might cook you with the likes of high energy gammas much more easily than the green glow aliens. The green glow aliens are nothing nice, to take home to dinner, either. They could cook you almost as easily. This is why I always laugh about the friendly green glowing men from Mars. They are anything but friendly. More alike to walking into an xray machine without any lead shielding ? Possibly.

The yellowish scintillating glow aliens, and the orange yellow glow and reddish glow aliens are relatively safe in comparison. Might be a little warm settling down to dinner with a reddish glow alien, but it should be safe enough unless spontaneous combustion happens.

The yellowish scintillations are most common of all, and safest of all.

Some ghost stories include those. That is what the ghosts appear to be. They are sensed as yellowish or yellowish orange scintillations.

I myself have had some experiences of that kind. The first when I was a an early teen. It was a battlefield of the war of 1812 - 14, in Stoney Creek Ontario and while in the park I "bumped into" something. It was perceivable as a human form of yellowish scintillation to orange scintillation like the profile of a person from head to foot. Stronger at the head and about five feet roughly in height. I am sure it was a dead soldier. At least the energetic imprint of one that might have died there, leaving some emanations as information locked into the local matrix of material stuff that had persisted from that time period.

Inter dimensionals also manifest as yellowish and yellowish orange scintillations sometimes. Lots of stories to that effect, so I tend to believe there is a basic natural phenomenon in common to all of that, and in common to what is at the basis of Cherenkov radiation.

M.

↑ Index

279. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: re : Alien Dreams Now: EMRadiation and New Cosmologies

Sat 11 Apr 1998

---

morpheal wrote:
>
> >Bob Ez. is this what you mean by Cherenkov radiation (see definition below)?
> >Can you provide a better definition than the one below? Can you provide an > >explanation why Cherenkov radiation is important to your argument or I guess I > >don't really understand tachyons and how they would emit light and what speeds > >that light would travel at?
>
> I backchanneled the grisly details.
>
> >quick flashes of blue Cherenkov light that result from gamma ray air showers.
> >These gamma rays originate from astrophysical sources at galactic and > >extragalactic distances. When they enter the earth's atmosphere, the gamma > >rays interact with air molecules, creating an extensive shower of high-energy > >particles. These particles go faster than the speed of light in air, and thus > >emit light, or Cherenkov radiation. This radiation (at optical and ultraviolet > >wavelengths) is beamed to the ground, where it is readily collected by the > >heliostat mirrors."
>
> Actually it is the blue light emitting aliens that I would worry about most.
> The ones that emit a a blue glow might cook you with the likes of high energy > gammas much more easily than the green glow aliens. The green glow aliens are > nothing nice, to take home to dinner, either. They could cook you almost as > easily. This is why I always laugh about the friendly green glowing men from > Mars. They are anything but friendly. More alike to walking into an xray > machine without any lead shielding ? Possibly.
>
> The yellowish scintillating glow aliens, and the orange yellow glow and > reddish glow aliens are relatively safe in comparison. Might be a little > warm settling down to dinner with a reddish glow alien, but it should be > safe enough unless > spontaneous combustion happens.

>
> The yellowish scintillations are most common of all, and safest of all.
>
> Some ghost stories include those. That is what the ghosts appear to be. They > are sensed as yellowish or yellowish orange scintillations.
>
> I myself have had some experiences of that kind. The first when I was a > an early teen. It was a battlefield of the war of 1812 - 14, in Stoney Creek > Ontario and while in the park I "bumped into" something. It was perceivable > as a human form of yellowish scintillation to orange scintillation like the > profile > of a person from head to foot. Stronger at the head and about five feet > roughly in height. I am sure it was a dead soldier. At least the energetic > imprint of one that might have died there, leaving some emanations as > information locked into the local matrix of material stuff that had > persisted from that time period.
>
> Inter dimensionals also manifest as yellowish and yellowish orange > scintillations sometimes. Lots of stories to that effect, so I tend to > believe there is a basic natural phenomenon in common to all of that, and in > common to what is at the basis of Cherenkov radiation.
>
> M.

"Cherenkov [Cerenkov] radiation (P.A. Cherenkov) Radiation emitted by a massive particle which is moving faster than light in the medium through which it is travelling. No particle can travel faster than light in vacuum, but the speed of light in other media, such as water, glass, etc., are considerably lower. Cherenkov radiation is the electromagnetic analogue of the sonic boom, though Cherenkov radiation is a shockwave set up in the electromagnetic field."

This comes from

http://www.goto.com/p/resultframes.mp?rawq=Cherenkov+radiation&canon=%28cherenkov%26radiation%29&index=0&urllist=eD%2f%2bdQ02Q2Im5iRX5uelglXnJlboF2RUFmcmF%2bvnJJYX6ydjak3MyU2sAqvOy09KzYGrRzZftzg5Uy8nM0mvFEiD3BLsGgBVmJhjDDUTAJpKL9E%3d&type=search

Obviously, this doesn't [didn't? won't? -- I guess it depends on how quick you are...] help.

Help! Does the Cherenkov radiation derive [proceed? precede?] only from tachyons? & even if so [<so?], what has that to do with the sort of wraith-persistence you describe, & what has that to do with poesis? Also, you mention only a range within the visible spectrum; surely events of such energies ramify at higher [& perhaps lower?] energies, no?

Curious [yellow?],

Dan

↑ Index

280. ScoutEW
Daredevil, Diane Wakowski
Sun 12 Apr 1998

I am pretty sure that Daredevil aka MATT Murdock has been around in comic form before anyone on this poetics list was born, who knows? like 1920s.. What say someone backchannel me with Sean Killian (of Catskill fame)'s phone numbers so I can tell him about the Tortoise show in NYC _On the Poetics of collage, I see some of Scalapino as collage, Dead Souls possibly but what I enjoy the most is some of Ezra Pound's Cantos...it depends.. When growing up my favorite thing to say around the late 70s was "Wondertwins Power ACTIVATE" touching invisible rings to my sister Tanya's hand. "Form of a Bucket of water" and then throwing myself down on the ground headache county! So somebody explain something to me about Diane Wakowski, in some of her earlier poems she talks about a twin brother who commits suicide, in a later interview I read that this brother possibly never existed.. and when people asked her about it she would look away. So what's the deal with this, did she make him up or what? I know it shouldn't matter but it doesn't make sense to make up a twin suicide, if it is real that is truly horrible....my nightmare.. "Form of a mouse astronaut!"

↑ Index

281. Steve Carll
Antenym 15 celebration in Golden Gate Park
Sun 12 Apr 1998

(Apologies to anyone who receives this message more than once)

announcing A CELEBRATION OF THE PUBLICATION OF Antenym 15
Sunday, April 26th 2:00 PM $3 donation
Redwood Trail, Strybing Arboretum, Golden Gate Park

featuring a reading by Eric Selland

Improved directions to reading: 1. Enter Strybing Arboretum through its main entrance gate, located adjacent to the Golden Gate Park Entrance at the intersection of 9th Avenue and Lincoln Way.

2. After entering Strybing Arboretum gate, look for the paved path heading south towards Lincoln Way (sign marked "California Natives").

3. Follow this paved path, staying roughly parallel to Lincoln Way until you reach the nursery buildings.

4. After passing the nursery buildings, bear right (north) on the paved path and look for the Redwood Trail sign. The Redwood Trail is an unpaved path.

5. Follow the Redwood Trail and look for markers #17 and #18. Nearby is a tree-ringed clearing with benches and a tree-stump podium. The reading is here.

For more information or a map, call Steve Carll at [redacted], or email [redacted], or write 106 Fair Oaks St. #1, San Francisco, CA 94110-2951.

Antenym 15 features the complete text of Eric Selland's The Condition of Music, as well as work by: Stephen Collis (Burnaby, B.C.), Ann Erickson (Santa Rosa, CA), Norman Fischer (Sausalito, CA), Celestine Frost (New York City), Jim Leftwich (Charlottesville, VA), Patrick Pritchett (Boulder, CO), Elizabeth Robinson (Berkeley), Joe Ross (San Diego), Standard Schaefer (Pasadena, CA), Paul Silvia (Lawrence, KS), and Perrin Wright (Brooklyn) and two front covers designed by Spencer Selby and Steve Carll.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

282. dbkk
Re: Moving Borders
Sun 12 Apr 1998

Date: Sat, 11 Apr 1998 14:39:54 EDT
From: RaeA100900 <[redacted]>
Subject: Moving Borders

I haven't gotten my copy of Moving Borders either - and I'm a contributor! I wonder if this is typical or if I have a unique situation which I should take up with "the proper authorities."

Rae Armantrout

Rae,

Nobody's gotten their contributors copy. The book's only been in print for like two weeks. We had two cases of them at the reading at SPT and we sold out. We could have easily sold another case. 120 people came. The readers kept saying what a "moving" experience it was.

Though I don't have time to print out the entire table of contents, here are Rae's poems: Grace, Dusk, Single Most, Admission, Home Federal, Mechanism, The Book, Attention, Covers, The Daffodils, A Pulse, Kinds, and The Plot. A great selection and we're looking forward to your new book from Atelos, True. You're sandwiched between Abigail Child and Kathy Acker.

Dodie

↑ Index

283. dbkk

Re: local issue: byrkit performance

Sun 12 Apr 1998

This is Kevin Killian, thinking anecdotally about the issue of children and how they're affected by the performance of the erotic on stage....

Dodie remembers seeing Asa Watten placidly and studiously coloring and drawing on the floor of some of the most bizarre poetry events in Bay Area history. Nothing fazed Asa, he always had a new picture to draw. And he could sit through the lo-n-n-g-est poetry marathons too, he had the incredible, grave, patience of a Buddha.

I remember putting on Raymond Pettibon's play "Horror Tape Script" at New Langton Arts last year, or two years ago, and for the first time worrying, wow, what if kids come to this. [Those of you who have read the script will know it's a text originally written for videotape about 3 high school football players and their cheerleader girlfriends. Spending a weekend at a deserted, spooky mountain lake.] The other actors and I had to simulate all kinds of sex on stage, as well as mouth some raw language of the Pettibon kind. None of us were actually teens, though Edmund Berrigan came close.] I told the box office, don't sell any seats to kids. I didn't want their little faces staring in shock. I don't like them anyhow and don't think they bring much to the party. Hopefully the choir children in Becky Byrkit's performance will tonight be looking at their socks in a new way, etc. Dear Charles (Alexander), I'm coming to Tucson next month and plan to behave as decorously as possible!

When I was a little boy Ann-Margret came to our school and sang and danced dressed up as one of Santa's helpers and I was terrified, she was so sexy, I started crying and crying and haven't stopped since.

↑ Index

284. Gleason
Re: catsitting gig
Sun 12 Apr 1998

---

even though i've been fairly silent for a few months now, i thought it would be worth it to break my silence for kevin and dodie's cats.

both these cats are real sweethearts. if blanche likes you, your lap becomes her new favorite seat. stanley used to spook me, he just looks at you with some weird calm gaze. this cat knows something. but i think he comes to respect you if you act like you know something too.

and they don't even make me sneeze much.

eryque

↑ Index

285. Billy Little
Re: women poets from Ireland
Sun 12 Apr 1998

---

eilleen ni cuchulain
medb mcgucken(sp?)

↑ Index

286. David Zauhar
women poets from Ireland
Sun 12 Apr 1998

A little help here: My wife got hooked into participating in an event at a local used bookstore wherein she (and about a dozen others) are going to read Irish poets. She's fairly certain the usual suspects will be well represented, and would like to read some women poets. The problem: I'm either drawing a blank on women poets from Ireland (except Eaven Boland), or I'm thoroughly ignorant on this topic (I'm casting the first vote for the latter). So as I said, a little help, please... The reading will by saturday, april 18. And all help, however little, will be appreciated. Backchannel if you prefer...

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

to belong to whatever moves us outward into
the wideness, for journeying...

--Hilda Morley

↑ Index

287. k. lederer
Re: women poets from Ireland
Sun 12 Apr 1998

I saw Medb read a few years ago.... she was super excellent. I think that a lot of her work (or a portion of it) was in some pretty heavy dialect... but some of it was also in standard (readable/pronouncable) English...

Katy
***

On Sun, 12 Apr 1998, Billy Little wrote:

> eilleen ni cuchulain
> medb mcgucken(sp?)

↑ Index

288. Rprunty
Re: Antenym, improved directions to reading
Sun 12 Apr 1998

Improved directions for reading enter Probing.

arboretum through its nonmain entrance. gate located adjacent to.
Golden Gate sPark at the intersection.

of 9th hA-venue and Langpo Way.

after entering Stray, bing the Arboretum gate, palooking paved path for all others heading south.
towards (sign marked "California Natives").

follow this paved path, straying roughly. parallax L'way until you hear the screech, the nursery buildings. children ambushed by erotica.

after pasting the nursery buildings, bare (its your right) (north) on the paved path and look for the Assonance enTrail sign. this is an unpaved path.

follow the Reading sWay and look for markers... #17.... #18.
three-ring bound clearing with benches and a tree-stump podium. the reading is here.

R Prunty

↑ Index

289. Keith Tuma
Re: women poets from Ireland
Sun 12 Apr 1998

Not to be missed: Catherine Walsh

They'll especially like the opening of _Pitch_ (Pig Press) maybe

Si yo pudiera tocar la luna

Si yo pudiera colgarlo desde mi ventana

como una nina tonta con su afan de verle las tripas
de toda

(Don't know how to make those irish diacritical marks on the computer)

See also _idir eatortha and making tents_ (invisible books)

These and earlier books available SPD and elsewhere

Work in _Out of Everywhere_ as well

Other stuff forthcoming in Talisman

↑ Index

290. Miekal And after emmett
Sun 12 Apr 1998

---

after emmett

a dispersion

of
ninetiles

a typofantastic epic voyage by Miekal And

http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/afteremmett/bonvoyage.html

after emmett was created during april 1998 using selected letters from the following fonts: albatross, arial, attic, avant garde, bodoni, cochin, contraband, cooper black, courier, exocet heavy, friz quadrata, georgia, gilligans island, goudy heavy, goudy oldstyle, goudy thin, harlequin, harrington, helvetica, impact, kronk, lemiesz, lubalin graph, milano, oakwood, OPTIflare, optima, poster bodoni, potsdam, premium truetype, rocky, stonecutter, stiletto, thunderbird, trajan, ultrablack, university roman, ursa serif , utopia, vedome, verdana. animations rendered using adobe photoshop & the nifty shareware gifbuilder.

↑ Index

291. Keith Tuma
Re: women poets from Ireland
Sun 12 Apr 1998

> Not to be missed: Catherine Walsh
>
> Work in _Out of Everywhere_ as well

Whoops, misremumbled, no Walsh there, no Ireland, lots of other everywhere

↑ Index

292. David Kellogg
Re: women poets from Ireland
Sun 12 Apr 1998

On Sun, 12 Apr 1998, Billy Little wrote:

> eilleen ni cuchulain
> medb mcgucken(sp?)

spellcheck:

Eilean Ni Chuilleannain
Medbh McGuckian (pron. "mave")

Others:
Nuala Ni Dhomnhaill (she writes in Irish; very good translations available from Wake Forest/Gallery Press) Paula Meehan

Catherine Walsh
Sara Berkley

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

295. laura and jeff goodbye
Mon 13 Apr 1998

---

it's been fun and interesting, but i've got to sign off for a bit. too much going on.
thanks.
jeff.

> Listen,
> if the stars are lit
> it means there is someone who needs it.
> It means it is essential > that every evening > at least one star should ascend > over the crest of the building.
>
> -mayakovsky, from "listen"

↑ Index

296. Miekal And
Re: Scavenger hunt suggestions
Mon 13 Apr 1998

Bern Porter has produced 10s of books & 100s of pages from the trash can at the post office & the copy shop, they tend toward a very demographic diversity of materials...

also would highly recommend showing the kids a copy of one of his big found books like Books of Dos or Book of Donts which need no explanation & a quick-flip thru can be a delightful way to worm thru a student's self-conscious hesitations.

one of my personal favorites (for collage writing) is scanning the spines of books in bookstores & libraries. likewise a hologram of the writerly impulse.

also this is oftrack of your request, but far & away the most success Ive had working with kids is with creating neologisms, defining them & using them in sentences. its also very revealing of where each kid is at, one's words will be body sounds & swear words & another might all be about friends, & another about mosh pits.

miekal

↑ Index

297. Robert Archambeau

Re: women poets from Ireland

Mon 13 Apr 1998

Futher to Catherine Walsh:

The most reliable, and probably the fastest, way to get your hands on her work is to go through the distribution service set up by hardPressed Poetry in Ireland (hardPressed is run by Walsh and Billy Mills, another wonderful Irish experimental poet, but one whose X/Y ratio excludes him from the reading in question).

hardPressed Poetry
37 Grosvenor Court
Templeville Road
Templeogue
Dublin 6W
Irleand

Note that hardPressed will have a new journal of the same name coming out this fall -- write for info.

Bob

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

" on the end
of each decision stands a heretic"
--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

298. r. drake

fwd: Arguelles/Foley reading, & interview

Mon 13 Apr 1998

> From: JASFOLEY <[redacted]>
> Date: Mon, 13 Apr 1998 01:07:15 EDT
> Subject: reading
>
> For those of you who can attend the reading, please do. Everyone else might be interested in the interview.

> Book Release Celebration
>
> for New Poetry from California: Dead / Requiem
>
> Ivan Arguelles & Jack Foley
> Introduced by Neeli Cherkovski
>
> Sunday, April 19
> 4 - 6 PM
> City Lights Books
> 261 Columbus Avenue
> San Francisco
>
> *
>
> The online magazine, CitySearch, interviewed Jack Foley for National Poetry Month. Foley talked about the literary history of the San Francisco Bay Area from the 1940's to the present. CitySearch is also featuring a time line in which significant literary events of that time period are cited. The interview and time line will be posted April 13th.
>
> Look for:
>
> http://www.citysearch.com
>
> Then click on "San Francisco."
>
> Click on "Feature Stories" (NOT "Arts & Entertainment").
>
> Click on "Local Howlers."
>
> Alternative method:
>
> If you want to go to "Local Howlers" directly, the address is:
>
> http://www.citysearch7.com/E/F/SFOCA/0000/07/92/

↑ Index

299. Gary Sullivan
Hey, Kids! Comics!
Mon 13 Apr 1998

Hi, Erik & Others:

Thought you might be interested in exploring some of these non-mainstream & self-published "poetic" comic-artist heroes of mine . . .

Dame Darcy's _Meat Cake_ . . . cartoon renderings of original gothic/Helen Adamesque tales . . . spine chilling! . . . poetic! . . . super groovy! . . .

The Fascist . . . Marxist rhetoric cut & pasted into the speech balloons of Archie Comics characters . . . I don't know who the Minneapolis-based creator of this is, or if s/he's still producing this magazine, but it was one of maybe three things I actually liked about the Midwest . . .

Chester Brown's _Yummy Fur_ and _Underwater_ . . . bizarre retellings of Bible stories, "Ed the Happy Clown," surreal, "silent" "movies," cartoon-essays on schizophrenia interweave with autobiography . . .

Lynda Barry's "Ernie Pook's Comeek" . . . her intensely realized and plainly told remembrances of childhood, which subtly address things often ignored in comics like racism, class, misogyny, etc., have been a big influence on my own poetry comics ("The New Life") . . . my personal fave of all comics artists working today . . .

Bill Griffith's "Zippy the Pinhead" . . . chains of non-sequitors, skewed pop-culture references, quotidian settings . . . If Zippy isn't poetry, well, like, "whatever" . . . you can access Zippy's Active Filter (which turns the usually boring language of any web-page into poetic Pinheadisms) at:

http://www.metahtml.com/apps/zippy/

Nancy Bonnell-Kangas's _Nancy's Magazine_ . . . I have Dan Davidson to thank for turning me on, nearly 10 years ago, to my all-time favorite magazine . . . poet/librarian/mom, NB-K publishes her always hilarious theme-issue collections of opinions, cartoons, poetry, & "facts" very irregularly, but the mag's cheap ($7 for two issues) and always worth the wait: N's M, P.O. Box 02108, Columbus, OH 43202

Julie Doucet's _Dirty Plotte_ . . . often violent . . . take-no-prisoners feminist . . . occasionally quotidian/anecdotal . . .

Joe Matt's _Peep Show_ . . . Crumb-inspired autobiography . . . revealing & hilarious . . .

Seth's _Palookaville_ . . . Seth's autobiographically-based comics-obsessed narrator tracks down Kalo, a real-life, one-time _New Yorker_ cartoonist of the 40s . . . beautifully rendered . . . see review of Seth's _It's a Good Life If You Don't Weaken_ in this month's _Rain Taxi_ . . .

Very Vicky . . . I don't remember the Boston-based team who does this, but it's a great comic . . . plot largely stolen from "It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World" . . . Vicky is a hip, young, snotty, New York alcoholic stuck for the summer in a North Carolina beach town . . .

Dan Clowes's _Eightball_ . . . an exceptional comic . . . poetic satire . . . horrific dream-narratives . . .

Rick Veitch's _Rarebit Fiends_ . . . that's not the exact title . . . Veitch illustrates his own and others's dreams . . .

OTHERS OF SIMILAR INTEREST: Jessica Abel, Chris Ware, Mary Fleener, Jim Woodring, Gary Panter . . . well . . . there's lots . . . & I gotta get back to, barf, "work" . . .

Have fun,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

↑ Index

300. louis stroffolino
Re: Dodie chat
Mon 13 Apr 1998

reply

On Thu, 2 Apr 1998, SSSCHAEFER wrote:

> Dodie:
>
> In a message dated 98-04-01 20:58:18 EST, you write:
>
> << Why don't you try reading my writing and the writing of the rest of the women on the list and then you'll see how much of it is all about technique. And the notion of a female form has been kicked around ad nauseum since when--the 70s, the 80s? It's essentialist gaga. Why should we have to kick it around again to conform to your idea of a serious discussion? >>
>
> I have read your writing and much of the rest of the writing on this list and many others. Nice condescension, though. Excellent technique. And of course all writing is about technique at some point. Not sure why you're so hostile to my questions. I thought I was sincerely trying to get someone to help me think about these issues and I think it is happening. I'm not exactly sure why reference to "serious" discussion type things like Shoptaw's book should be attacked here when books, theorists, etc. are mentioned constantly in order to direct a conversation. I'm a little offended by the tone of your post and wonder if I offended you. However, the fact that the female form has been kicked around ad nauseum seems obvious to me. Simply restating it doesn't help. And is why serious conversation should occur.
>
> So many of your posts have been interesting and informative. Never thought you'd be the type to grind an axe. Was there some humor in your post that I > missed?

>
> Standard

↑ Index

301. David Zauhar
Mackey Reading in Chicago
Mon 13 Apr 1998

For listmembers in the Chicago area this week:
Nathaniel Mackey will be reading on the campus of the University of Illinois at Chicago on April 15 and 16. Here's the more specific schedule:

Wednesday, April 15 at 3:00 p.m.: A Reading of Poetry and Prose. (at the African-American Cultural Center, 2nd Floor, Adams Hall)

Thursday, April 16th, at 11 a.m.: "On the Influence of H.D. on My Poetry." (at the Humanities Institute, Basement, Stevenson Hall)

Both events are free and open to the public. However, the University of Illinois at Chicago is not the easiest place to find your way around, and these aren't the most convenient of times for those who lead non-academic lives, but it'll be worthwhile if you can make it.

In fact, says one list member of Mackey's visit to her campus, "It was terrific... highly recommended; dense duncan-mediated, cecil taylor thrown in as well as Kamau Brathwaite as well as oceanic consciousness ("tidalectics"), good for those of us in the midwest."

-- Maria Damon, University of Minnesota

Any further questions or for directions contact me backchannel.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

↑ Index

302. Gary Sullivan
"Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
Mon 13 Apr 1998

http://www.tcj.com/ (_Comics Journal_ . . . great place to begin exploration beyond always-invoked DC, Marvel, Jess, Brainard & Morice . . .)

http://ism.opal.de/ (Rick Veitch's _Rare Bit Fiends_ and John Mitchell and Jana Christy's _Very Vicky_, etc.)

http://www.kitchensink.com/ (R. Crumb, etc.)

http://www.fantagraphics.com/ (Dame Darcy, etc.)

http://www.hardboiledegg.com/quarterly/ (Julie Doucet, Joe Matt, Seth, D. Clowes, etc.)

http://deepseacomics.at.org/deepsea2.html (_Reid Fleming, World's Toughest Milkman_)

http://www.chivian.com/chivian/Comics.html#Independents (_Cerebus_, _Freak Brothers_, _Fat Freddy's Cat_, etc.)

↑ Index

303. ScoutEW
Re: Hey, Kids! Comics!
Mon 13 Apr 1998

---

hey gary, comics and poetry! In the book on Jess Collins that the Albright-Knox art museum put out there are some great pictures in color of the "Tricky Cad" series Jess did And yes for a while now I have read Peepshow which is absolutely hilarious, Dame D'Arcy, (Hate, EightBall) both which have become stupid. There is a good one, StraY BULLETS AND Billy Corgan the Smartest Kid on earth- I really like the search for Kato in Palookaville but I was raised on corner store comics like Spiderman and even the Archies(lame huh) but my sister and I had to find titles we could both like, i think she likes fantastic four anyways check out those tricky cad drawings everyone, a play on dick tracy Flame On! PS i wrote a letter on behalf of Steve McCafferey and got a lame letter back saying he was never formally hired so it shouldn't matter if he isn't working there now, it was a "form" letter i'd be interested to see how many people got the same one.

↑ Index

304. Gary Sullivan
Tricky Cad, etc.
Mon 13 Apr 1998

Hi, Erik!

First saw Tricky Cad long, long ago on a faraway planet (Berkeley, 1980-something) in the "Made in the USA" show at the UCB Museum . . . my intro to Jess, been a fan since . . . also, roughly same time, read volumes of _C Comics_ at whatever the rare book room is called there . . . Me & Dan D. used to get kicked out for uncontrollable laughing . . . haven't yet read _Stray Bullets_ and didn't know of _Billy Corgan_, so thanks for those . . . Eightball has become stupid? Or Darcy & Matt? I admit I haven't looked into Darcy's world in a while . . . but still love Eightball . . . I was raised on _Creem_ magazine, myself . . . Lester Bangs, et al. . . . and, speaking of comics & _Creem_, do you remember The Mad Peck?!? . . . YEE-haw . . . cartoon-rendered record reviews . . . & whatever happened to Futsy Nutzle? . . . BIG fan, too, of Roz Chast . . . blah blah blah . . . anyway, of DC/Marvel I must admit to devouring ANYTHING by Jack Kirby . . . anyway, some MORE sites & then I'll shut up . . .

http://www.geocities.com/CapitolHill/2770/LyndaBarry.html (Lynda! Can't . . . breathe . . . thinking about . . . how . . . GREAT . . . she is . . . ! . . . dizziness . . . gasp! . . . etc. . . .)

http://www.cloudnet.com/~hamlinck/spz.htm (The Small Press Zone . . . comics reviews, catalogues & how-to-publish/distribute info . . .)

http://www.sp.uconn.edu/~epk93002/ComicsScholarship/ (General comics info)

All for now, yours . . . Gary

↑ Index

305. Carolyn Guertin

Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net

Mon 13 Apr 1998

Wow. Thanks for these.

Don't forget:

Patricia Seaman's _New Motor Queen City_ :
<http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/seaman/nmqc.html>

Ron Mann's _Comic Book Confidential_:
<http://voyager.learntech.com/cdrom/catalogpage.cgi?comic>
and _Poetry in Motion I_ and _II_
<http://voyager.learntech.com/cdrom/catalogpage.cgi?pim>

bpNichol's electro-poetics (none of his comics, alas):
<http://www-nmr.banffcentre.ab.ca/Artists/tmcl/saviours.html>

And a query: is Debbie Drechsler Canadian?

Cheers,
Carolyn

> http://www.tcj.com/ (_Comics Journal_ . . . great place to begin exploration beyond always-invoked DC, Marvel, Jess, Brainard & Morice . . .)
>
> http://ism.opal.de/ (Rick Veitch's _Rare Bit Fiends_ and John Mitchell and Jana > Christy's _Very Vicky_, etc.)

> http://www.kitchensink.com/ (R. Crumb, etc.)
>
> http://www.fantagraphics.com/ (Dame Darcy, etc.)
>
> http://www.hardboiledegg.com/quarterly/ (Julie Doucet, Joe Matt, Seth, D. Clowes, etc.)
>
> http://deepseacomics.at.org/deepsea2.html (_Reid Fleming, World's Toughest Milkman_)
>
> http://www.chivian.com/chivian/Comics.html#Independents (_Cerebus_, _Freak Brothers_, _Fat Freddy's Cat_, etc.)

_____ Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted] Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>

"Language is a virus."
-- Laurie Anderson

↑ Index

306. Mark Weiss

Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net

Mon 13 Apr 1998

Dorn's La Gran Apacheria was initially issued as a comic book. I imagine it's hard to find.

At 12:35 PM 4/13/98 -0600, you wrote:
>Wow. Thanks for these.
>
>Don't forget:
>
>Patricia Seaman's _New Motor Queen City_ :
><http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/seaman/nmqc.html>
>
>Ron Mann's _Comic Book Confidential_:
><http://voyager.learntech.com/cdrom/catalogpage.cgi?comic>
>and _Poetry in Motion I_ and _II_
><http://voyager.learntech.com/cdrom/catalogpage.cgi?pim>
>
>bpNichol's electro-poetics (none of his comics, alas):
><http://www-nmr.banffcentre.ab.ca/Artists/tmcl/saviours.html>
>
>And a query: is Debbie Drechsler Canadian?

>
>Cheers,
>Carolyn
>
>>http://www.tcj.com/ (_Comics Journal_ . . . great place to begin exploration >>beyond always-invoked DC, Marvel, Jess, Brainard & Morice . . .)
>>
>>http://ism.opal.de/ (Rick Veitch's _Rare Bit Fiends_ and John Mitchell and >>Jana
>>Christy's _Very Vicky_, etc.)
>>
>>http://www.kitchensink.com/ (R. Crumb, etc.)
>>
>>http://www.fantagraphics.com/ (Dame Darcy, etc.)
>>
>>http://www.hardboiledegg.com/quarterly/ (Julie Doucet, Joe Matt, Seth, D.
>>Clowes, etc.)
>>
>>http://deepseacomics.at.org/deepsea2.html (_Reid Fleming, World's Toughest >>Milkman_)
>>
>>http://www.chivian.com/chivian/Comics.html#Independents (_Cerebus_, _Freak >>Brothers_, _Fat Freddy's Cat_, etc.)
>
>
>_____
>Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta
>E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted]
>Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>
>
>"Language is a virus."
>-- Laurie Anderson
>
>

↑ Index

307. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
Mon 13 Apr 1998

---

my system doesn't recognize the bpnichol site. are u sure it's right?

At 12:35 PM 4/13/98, Carolyn Guertin wrote:
>Wow. Thanks for these.
>
>Don't forget:
>
>Patricia Seaman's _New Motor Queen City_ :
><http://www.chbooks.com/onlinebooks/seaman/nmqc.html>
>
>Ron Mann's _Comic Book Confidential_:
><http://voyager.learntech.com/cdrom/catalogpage.cgi?comic>
>and _Poetry in Motion I_ and _II_
><http://voyager.learntech.com/cdrom/catalogpage.cgi?pim>
>
>bpNichol's electro-poetics (none of his comics, alas):
><http://www-nmr.banffcentre.ab.ca/Artists/tmcl/saviours.html>
>
>And a query: is Debbie Drechsler Canadian?
>
>Cheers,
>Carolyn
>
>>http://www.tcj.com/ (_Comics Journal_ . . . great place to begin exploration >>beyond always-invoked DC, Marvel, Jess, Brainard & Morice . . .)
>>
>>http://ism.opal.de/ (Rick Veitch's _Rare Bit Fiends_ and John Mitchell and >>Jana
>>Christy's _Very Vicky_, etc.)
>>
>>http://www.kitchensink.com/ (R. Crumb, etc.)
>>
>>http://www.fantagraphics.com/ (Dame Darcy, etc.)
>>
>>http://www.hardboiledegg.com/quarterly/ (Julie Doucet, Joe Matt, Seth, D.
>>Clowes, etc.)
>>
>>http://deepseacomics.at.org/deepsea2.html (_Reid Fleming, World's Toughest

>>Milkman_)
>>
>>http://www.chivian.com/chivian/Comics.html#Independents (_Cerebus_, _Freak >>Brothers_, _Fat Freddy's Cat_, etc.)
>
>
>_____
>Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta
>E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted]
>Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>
>
>"Language is a virus."
>-- Laurie Anderson

↑ Index

308. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
Mon 13 Apr 1998

I recently found a copy. It features a comic book cover. The poems, however, while printed on cheap comic book paper, are straight text - no illustrations. Tom Peters, owner of the Beat Book Shop here in Boulder, had a handful of these comics three months ago when I bought mine. Whether he has any left, I don't know. You can contact him, though, at: [redacted]

Patrick Pritchett

From: Mark Weiss
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
Date: Monday, April 13, 1998 1:53PM

Dorn's La Gran Apacheria was initially issued as a comic book. I imagine it's hard to find.

↑ Index

309. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Mackey Reading in Chicago
Mon 13 Apr 1998

---

zauhar's post reminds me that i didn't cover the final Mackey-in-Twin-Cities event in my previous post (because it hadn't happened yet). he read at the Nomad Gallery, a new place run by the brother of the guy who runs the Khyber

Pass Afghani restaurant in St Paul. It was their inaugural reading, and Habib the proprietor said it was an honor to be able to host Mackey. The space was really lovely, nicely lit, and NM sat w/ his back to a big window. There were Afghani rugs covering the space behind him, and he sat at a table likewise draped w/ rugs, a beautiful effect, and on the table was a vase with a single rose. he sat behind the table as he read. he started w/ the Jimi Hendrix poem from "Eroding Witness," in response to a request from me (i forgot to thank him afterwards). then he read mostly from the forthcoming Atet:A.D. and some, as i recall, but maybe i'm wrong, from Udhra. Very responsive audience and a good feeling. An aesthetically satisfying experience, especially on top of the wonderful meal we'd just enjoyed at the Khyber Pass. Highly recommended to all traveling thru the TCs. At times during the reading, sitar music floated over from the restaurant, a thin wall away, and heavy treads above from the folks in the apartment upstairs. those sound effects "haunted" the space appropriately. i think it was NM's favorite "event" of his visit, and small wonder, it was really a fine evening, organized by Mark Nowak of XCP fame.

At 9:22 AM 4/13/98, David Zauhar wrote:
>For listmembers in the Chicago area this week:
>Nathaniel Mackey will be reading on the campus of the University of >Illinois at Chicago on April 15 and 16. Here's the more specific schedule:
>
>Wednesday, April 15 at 3:00 p.m.: A Reading of Poetry and Prose.
>(at the African-American Cultural Center, 2nd Floor, Adams Hall)
>
>
>Thursday, April 16th, at 11 a.m.: "On the Influence of H.D. on My Poetry."
>(at the Humanities Institute, Basement, Stevenson Hall)
>
>Both events are free and open to the public. However, the University of >Illinois at Chicago is not the easiest place to find your way around, and >these aren't the most convenient of times for those who lead non-academic >lives, but it'll be worthwhile if you can make it.
>
>In fact, says one list member of Mackey's visit to her campus, "It was >terrific... highly recommended; dense duncan-mediated, cecil taylor thrown >in as well as Kamau Brathwaite as well as oceanic consciousness >("tidalectics"), good for those of us in the midwest."
>
>-- Maria Damon, University of Minnesota
>
>Any further questions or for directions contact me backchannel.

>
>David Zauhar
>University of Illinois at Chicago

↑ Index

310. DANIEL L. COLLIER
Poetry Comics
Mon 13 Apr 1998

Thanks to Ron, "ScoutEW" and Billy Little for the references.

I'm a little far from New York, and will be until at least September, so I'm pretty sure I'll miss the Padgett/Brainard piece. Are there any interesting examples of misappropriation of comic strip panels in books or journals which I can look up when I get back to the US? I'm particularly interested in Jess/Jess/Burgess' purported Shakespearian range.

Thanks again.

Danny

"Ivanov reads his book until the controller gives him a fine; on Monday morning, life is a bit hard." -- Aquarium, "Ivanov"

↑ Index

311. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: Scavenger hunt suggestions
Mon 13 Apr 1998

> My idea is to have the students make up scrapbooks, and what I'm looking for are short, simple, scavenger hunt type instructions/exercises to provide them with tools for extracting possible poetic material out of text.

one (possibly collaborative) game the surrealists used was to take an existing text with a recurring word - product labels are good for this - and substitute another.
Alternately, you can treat an existing text as a mad-lib (everyone remembers these, right?): remove selected words in favor or their parts of speech (noun, adj., verb), of which you make a separate list noun

adj.
verb etc.

without having seen the original or the text with which they are playing, the other participants supply words that match the categories, re-assembling the text by substitution. It might be especially useful if you employ either a text familiar to yr students, or a text that carries some authority - e.g., Clinton's inaugural speech or a Frost poem.

another variation is to limit the possible responses to, say words associated with the "peace talks" in Northern Ireland. Often, the players responsible for "filling in the blanks" take up a narrative or associative thread of their own, which is fully disr8upted by its distribution within the prior text.

so, for instance:

PropertySheetHandlers and {3EA48300...: Here, the key structure does not directly reveal the purpose of the {3EA48300... key, but if that subkey is opened under the CLSID key (not shown in the figure), its Contents Pane identifies it as an "OLE Docfile Property Page."

[noun] and [noun]: Here, the [noun] does not directly [verb] the [noun] of the {3EA48300 key, but if that [noun] is opened [prep] the [adj] key (not [verb] in the figure), its [noun] [trans. verb] it as an "[adj] Property Page."

where noun=breakfast noun=artifice noun=tree frog verb=ruin noun=the President of the United States noun=cheese preposition=within adj=admirable verb=disgust

noun=Senator John Glenn transitive verb=revile adj=unpleasant

yields

Breakfast and artifice: Here, the tree frog does not directly ruin the the President of the United States of the {3EA48300 key, but if that cheese is opened within the admirable key (not disgusted in the figure), its Senator John Glenn reviles it as an "unpleasant Property Page."

chris - etcetera

..

Christopher Alexander [redacted]
Marriott Library Instruction [redacted] (lv. msg.)
http://www.lib.utah.edu/instruction/mltech.html

↑ Index

312. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy

Re: women poets from Ireland

Mon 13 Apr 1998

I can but add my voice to those who have recommended Catherine Walsh's work. Not to be missed.

The Irish writer Philip Casey has a web site called "The Fabulists" which contains a dictionary of Irish writers. Any search engine should find it for you. It contains information on a variety of Irish women poets.

Randolph Healy

↑ Index

313. beth lee simon

Re: Mackey Reading in Chicago

Mon 13 Apr 1998

For those of you a bit more east, Nathaniel Mackey will be reading here (deictically speaking), in Fort Wayne, April 14, at 7:30. Great venue--the auditorium of Art Link.

beth simon
assistant professor, linguistics and english indiana university purdue university

↑ Index

314. Safdie Joseph

Re: Robeson, H.D., Bryher

Mon 13 Apr 1998

So Aldon (and others) was it on or not? I had a Seder to attend that night, but I could have taped it. Speaking of which, yesterday was a real good day on cable -- I taped, in order, part of "The Fifties" (documentary on the History Channel), then the Thelonious Monk "Straight No Chaser" (on IFC), followed by a Bravo profile on Kerouac! After all that I was wondering what decade I was in (a problem which the folks in Arizona seemed to have as well) -- recommended viewing for those who have already had too much of the millennium!

Duncan McNaughton has an interview in the latest _Mike and Dale's_ that, in effect, repeats what I think Jack Spicer said -- namely, the Fifties were the real revolutionary decade, until the Beatles killed it all off in 1964 (thus starting "the Sixties") -- whaddya think, listees?

_____

> According to my TV guide, the American Movie Classics cable ch. is showing the seldom-seen silent film _Borderline_ tonight, which features Paul Robeson, H.D., Bryher, Kenneth MacPherson etc.
>
> If true, this is not-to-be-missed -- check your local listings --

↑ Index

315. George Bowering
Re: Dorn comics
Mon 13 Apr 1998

> I recently found a copy. It features a comic book cover. The poems, however, while printed on cheap comic book paper, are straight text - no illustrations.
> Patrick Pritchett
> ----------

You got a defective copy. There should be a drawing of a bunch of TV antennae and paddleboards with the poem "Fifteen Hundred Tons of Hay @ 1c per Pound" and a crucifix picture a few pages before the end. Pictures by Michael Myers.

I had students handle this text in a course this spring.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

316. Pierre Joris
Poems for the Millennium VOL II
Mon 13 Apr 1998

We -- Pierre Joris & Jerome Rothenberg -- would like to announce our anthology _Poems for the Millennium: The University of California Book of Modern & Postmodern Poetry_ (Vol 2: From Postwar to Millennium), just out from University of California Press.

ISBN 0-520-20864-1
$24.95 paper
850 pages, 6 x 9", b/willustrations

For those interested, you may view the cover via the EPC homepage or directly : http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/presses/mill/2mill.html. The Table of Contents and the Introduction to the book will be available on the same site in another week.

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

317. ScoutEW
Re: Tricky Cad, etc.
Mon 13 Apr 1998

---

the smell of fried chicken from the downstairs apartment is driving me crazy, I should go downstairs and demand a taste seeing as that the girl downstairs keeps me up all the time with doors slamming and woofy dogs ruf ruf. -So I think i mean the jimmy corrigan the smartest kid on earth comic, it is really funny...so could someone fill me in on how michael mcClure was at UB seeing is that i couldn't make it to my hometiown to see him. "whay are you staring at me i'm not a flower" so did anyone care to respond about diane wakowski's twin brother story.. anyways whats on tap in old Buffalo anyways, any conferences coming up like that great Zukofsky one of last year..Don't ever dance on the chairs at the Tralfamadore Cafe to James Brown downtown or they will politey ask you to get down..if anyone ever sees David Landrey around the Queen city tell him Erik Sweet says hi, he was one of the greatest teachers I ever had. So for now, lets hear more about comics and poetry, what about the great comic "Berrigan" with joe brainard I think with Ted Berrigan as a poet/detective any poet/magnum P.I.'s out there what about T.C....?

↑ Index

318. Ryan Whyte
letter
Mon 13 Apr 1998

April 12

Dear Schiller

... I am a painter; I put out my eyes for you. Tell me, again, the bleeding darkness, of the things in me I cannot see, I will never see. Tell me, there are cities beneath the grasses of the plains of Sicily; tell me of the impenetrable lead. Of the Roman earth. These come back to me in a woodcut.... I am naive, love me thus -- is it, then, of humility to be at one with your nature? Is it humility? What is the propriety, the patrimony of these states....

Waste me in a wanton hour, turn of the pen; no, it is the distance which destroys me, the haze of an idyll. I ask you to defeat me even before I've opened my mouth. You have seen your end in me. You've written as much.

The city, since you asked, spills along the shore forever eastward. Always in spring and summer: hot, humid and hazy. It is the stuff of New York and Boston that wafts across the lake. The cities jostle, shoulder to shoulder.

The ladies here have a curious habit. They will, in small or large groups, swim and bathe along the public shores of the lake; they are indifferent to passers-by, and do not scream at the approach of men. Indeed, they are a pleasant sight: grouped on the large rocks, submerged to their faces and bathing caps, and often holding their children.

This tedious example resonates, I believe, with something of the beautiful, those things which you have written me. Strange that a foreign practice should find accord with some more primary thing in man.

And yet this is to a certain split.

Ah, since you asked I will write of love only in white ink

↑ Index

319. groberts

Dear Joe Brainard,

Mon 13 Apr 1998

I recently saw you mentioned in an old poem, I can't remember its title,
by your friend Jimmy Schuyler, whom I call James because he never was anyone I knew, and he knew a lot of people, a lot them people who also knew and liked you,
all of them people I don't know,
though I know what I like when I see it,
like your art, which I also saw recently in an article in Art in America.
You seemed to have loved, besides guys,
flowers and the Sunday funnies,
and you found ways to draw from them
icons for your various and sundry beatitudes.
Like Nancy, the girl from the strip of the same name, whom you transmorgrified lovingly in a couple of paintings and collages even though she could never reciprocate your attentions in her own world by lifting up her skirt to show a penis.
That would have been as crazy as having Sluggo throw a brick to the back of her head
the way Ignatz would do for Krazy Kat with his brick trailing its quiet -ZIP-though it could also go -ZIZsame as a comet does as it comes and goes from perigee to apogee (actually they're called "perihelion" and "aphelion"
but I prefer "perigee to apogee") and back again, unless it gets drawn into the Sun or bumps into something else or has its ellipse perturbed into a parabola of no return, its tail gone out, the next nearest star
a ways away, if it's lucky, though typically it's not.
Bye for now, see you soon,
if not, then eventually.

Yours,
Kamandi, the Last Boy on Earth

↑ Index

320. Tom Orange
nyc secondhand bookshops
Tue 14 Apr 1998

---

hey new yorkers,

planning a trip to the big city and would appreciate hearing about yr fave used bookstores, specially ones with lotsa good poetix stuff. already know about the strand and east village books but need help adding to my itinerary. backchannel is fine.

thanks,
t.

```
_____________________________________________________
| The ground acknowledges my every step as the road's own |
| scrawl in eyesight's hand                               |
|                -- Andre du Bouchet --                   |
```

~~~
~~~

> cultural nexus. Papers may employ a number of critical methods; > philosophical, psychoanalytic, art historical, literary theoretical, etc.
> We especially encourage submissions dealing with the following areas:
>
> * comics, comix (alternative comics) and graphic novels > * mail art and correspondence art > * hypermedia art > * assembling art > * artists' books > * concrete poetry > * advertising, counter-advertising, and "culture-jamming" > productions
> * zines
> * reviews of secondary literature devoted the above topics
>
> Traditional academic essays should generally fall between 3500 and 7000 > words. We are also seeking non-traditional submissions, interviews, > hypertext/multimedia projects and book reviews.
>
> All submissions are due May 1, 1998. Please mail one hard copy and > one electronic copy (floppy disc), or email the electronic text (as an > attachment) to:
>
> Other Voices
> Attn: Vance Bell
> P.O. Box 31907
> Philadelphia, PA 19104
> [redacted]
>
> Please direct all questions/comments to the same.
>
> --
>
+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==
+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+
> Vance E. Bell, Jr. | Other Voices
> University of Pennsylvania | P.O. Box 31907
> [redacted] | Philadelphia, PA 19104
>
> http://dept.english.upenn.edu/~ov
>
>

```
+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==
+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+==+
>
>
>
==================================================
>        From the Literary Calls for Papers Mailing List
>                [redacted] >                    Full Information at >              http://www.english.upenn.edu/CFP/>         or write Jack Lynch: [redacted]
>
==================================================
>
```

↑ Index

322. rsillima

Where are they now?

Tue 14 Apr 1998

A poet whose work I liked quite a bit during the late 60s, early 70s, was Tom Veitch, a NYC school (gen 3) poet with a strong spiritual undercurrent. He was in SF for awhile around the early to mid-70s and then moved, up to Sonoma or beyond I think. Does anyone know what the man is up to these days?

In a very similar vein, Victoria Rathbun? I had heard that she was sick about a decade ago, but nothing since.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

323. Charles Alexander

Re: more closings

Tue 14 Apr 1998

> I have also known them to tell people that in-print books from publishers not on their master list were out of print and could not be ordered. I tend not to believe in conspiracy theories, so suspect this might just be incompetent local staff.

Could this have anything to do with amazon.com getting information about lots of small press books that those books were "out of print." Someone alerted me that a Chax book listed with Amazon had that "out of print" status according to amazon, when in fact it was most definitely in print. I checked, and they had virtually all Chax books as out of print, which was false. I did contact someone there, and they corrected this information with some help from me. Others have told me that other small press books with Amazon are falsely listed as out of print. The Amazon person I talked with said "that was just the information as we received it" -- but didn't tell me where they received it from. I know that after the information was corrected, Chax started receiving a few orders from amazin (not a lot), whereas before that we had received no such orders from them.

charles

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/ :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

324. daniel bouchard
nyc secondhand bookshops
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Had back-channeled at first; re-post for JK:

The Academy bookstore on W.18th
Also, the one right across the street.

Inexpensive goldmines. Ask Jordan, who works around the corner.

Saw The Hotel Wentley Poems at the Academy, signed by the author to one Leroi Jones. This item however was not inexpensive (about $100). Picked up first cloth edition of MAXIMUS pretty cheap. Also Zukofsky's LITTLE, John Wiener's NERVES, some New Directions Poet of the Month chapbooks from early 40s for a couple bucks a piece. The Academy also has Folocroft reprints with library bindings for 3 or 4 dollars a pop. I found Thoreau's LETTERS thus; collected Hazlitt writings, Whitman's journalism. And cheap, 2nd hand poetry: CIVIL NOIR, I DON'T HAVE ANY MORE PAPER SO I BETTER SHUT UP, among others.

Also, I believe Keston Sutherland is reading in NYC this weekend. At the Zinc Bar. W.Houston and LaGuardia. A great reading series-- go go go go go go go go

daniel bouchard

- db

>
>hey new yorkers,
>
>planning a trip to the big city and would appreciate hearing about yr fave

>used bookstores, specially ones with lotsa good poetix stuff. already >know about the strand and east village books but need help adding to my >itinerary. backchannel is fine.
>
>thanks,
>t.
> _____
> | The ground acknowledges my every step as the road's own |
> | scrawl in eyesight's hand |
> | -- Andre du Bouchet -- |
>
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

326. Keston Sutherland
Re: nyc secondhand bookshops
Tue 14 Apr 1998

> Also, I believe Keston Sutherland is reading in NYC this weekend. At the Zinc Bar.

Thanks for mentioning it Dan, but actually I'm not. Not that is until May 17th. But are there other readings, anyone else be around, anyone want to meet,

k

↑ Index

327. daniel bouchard
nyc firstrate readings
Tue 14 Apr 1998

At 09:51 AM 4/14/98 -0400, Keston Sutherland wrote:
>Thanks for mentioning it Dan, but actually I'm not. Not that is until >May 17th. But are there other readings, anyone else be around, anyone >want to meet,
>
>k
>

well, SOMEONE is, goddammit! And frontiers-people, Niagra and otherwise, would do well to attend. Perhaps Marcella Durand will post a reminder of the readers if she can, as Anselm is away and Douglas not on the list.

- db

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

328. J. Kuszai
Re: nyc secondhand bookshops
Tue 14 Apr 1998

---

hey tom of orange and all of those who reside in New Yorka, you're not by chance going to the Dan Farrell reading are you? i think some of the Niagara frontiersmen will be there, incl. myself and Scott Pound.

please advise of other fun activities. And please dont backchannel used bookstore lists...

jk

Tom Orange wrote:
>
> hey new yorkers,
>
> planning a trip to the big city and would appreciate hearing about yr fave
> used bookstores, specially ones with lotsa good poetix stuff. already > know about the strand and east village books but need help adding to my > itinerary. backchannel is fine.
>
> thanks,
> t.
> _____
> | The ground acknowledges my every step as the road's own |
> | scrawl in eyesight's hand |
> | -- Andre du Bouchet -- |
>
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

330. Carolyn Guertin
Re: "Art/Poetry" Comics Sites on the Net
Tue 14 Apr 1998

>my system doesn't recognize the bpnichol site. are u sure it's right?
Urgh. Well, it works for me.

Try the main url for the >>>iceflow>> site:
http://www.interaccess.org/iceflow/index.html
and then select Tim McLaughlin's 'Threw the Read Window'. The bpNichol section is called 'possible saviours.

Good luck,
Carolyn

_____ Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted] Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>

"Language is a virus." -- Laurie Anderson

↑ Index

331. Laura Moriarty
stanza/paragraph (new non)
Tue 14 Apr 1998

---

new non at http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

In working on the latest non additions I've been lead to wonder about writers' use of the paragraph and/or stanza. Debrot's new stuff in non seems like desiccated paragraphs to me - not surprisingly as it is in relation to Tender Buttons - but he calls it 'songs.' Shaw's work seems more stanzaic, Scalapino's is mostly prose and Davis is of course all over the map.

In general, the stanza seems more song-like, the paragraph to relate more back to prose. I find I am currently using both in different combinations.

Wondered how others relate to using these sub-forms -

Laura

[redacted]
http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

↑ Index

332. lee ann brown
Tax Relief Reading
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Please Come!

Lee Ann Brown
Heather Ramsdell

Wednesday, April 15th
8pm

The Poetry Project
@ St. Mark's Church
2nd Avenue & 10th Street
New York City

↑ Index

333. Miekal And
Re: place(less Place)
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Michael J. Kelleher wrote:
>
> Correction:
>
> the six gallery reading happened in October 1955. Thus, all born after > this date, are welcome. Thanks to Karen MacCormack for the correction.
>
> Mike

that would include even oldtimers like me, to bad buf is so far away, maybe I could holler into a phone..

miekal

↑ Index

334. Miekal And
Re: Bern Porter
Tue 14 Apr 1998

---

mark

welcome to the list, is there a dog ear website up yet?

miekal

↑ Index

335. Maria Damon
Re: Tax Relief Reading
Tue 14 Apr 1998

---

wish i could. knock 'em dead.

At 12:51 PM -0400 4/14/98, lee ann brown wrote:
>Please Come!
>
>Lee Ann Brown
>Heather Ramsdell
>
>Wednesday, April 15th
>8pm
>
>The Poetry Project
>@ St. Mark's Church
>2nd Avenue & 10th Street
>New York City

↑ Index

336. AERIALEDGE
Moving Borders Reading
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Sunday, April 19th @ 8 PM

a publication celebration for the Talisman House anthology _Moving Borders: Three Decades of Innovative Writing by Women_

Readers will include the editor, Mary Margaret Sloan, Tina Darragh, Lynne Dreyer, Joan Retallack, and Fiona Templeton.

Bridge Street Books
2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington, DC
ph [redacted]

↑ Index

337. Michael J. Kelleher
place(less Place) gathering
Tue 14 Apr 1998

---

the Buffalo Small Press Collective announces:

place(less Place)

a gathering of poets born after the Six Gallery reading of "Howl" (1956)

"Place there is none; we go forward and backward and there is no place..."

Augustine

date: June 19-21, 1998
place: Buffalo, NY

"a placeless space a) is active and does not issue from a lack b) involves writing and c) engages community."

-Scott Pound

all are invited to come and participate in a weekend of symposia, poetry, rants, manifestos, papers and talks on the subject of poetics, Placelessness and place schedule:

friday, June 19 at 8 pm: symposia on poetics, place and Placelessness

saturday, June 20 at 6: Book display, fair, and exchange. Bring your own books or books you have published for an evening of print exchanges.

at 8: reading. all poets who come to buffalo and want to read will be given time to do so. there are no featured readers

sunday, June 21: farewell brunch place(less Place) will primarily be a gathering of young poets from different places in this here place to read and discuss poetry and poetics, place and the Placeless, with one another. no funding is being provided by any institution or person. if you would like to come, please contact one of the following people by may 15th and we will try to fnd you a place to stay and/or give you the numbers of local hotels, etc.

michael kelleher: [redacted] graham foust: [redacted]
scott pound: [redacted]
taylor brady [redacted]

"The only work is moonlighting and clandestine...a capture...an assymetrical block, an a-parallel evolution...always 'outside', always 'between'"

-Gilles Deleuze

↑ Index

338. Keston Sutherland
fuer Alle und Keine von Andrea Brady
Tue 14 Apr 1998

CHICKEN BREASTS

He flushed my shirtwaist over this bubble-drain that clenches under the floor a nocturne of the peril maxim:
break the skin of pain, soft implosion-notes on jellied fruit driving up to the teeth of his lust. Crawfish eyes sucked, popped, reft of beauty, my waste merges with positivity of loss:
we used to patter enraged towards what now glows
as much as anything else, lil patriots permanently out on the town.
The dried bounty of my loss has been burnt on drying wrecks senseless of the larger bounty, and gives, dying the blankets over which it is cooled in the amber bedroom of pleasant sojourns and diurnal rest.
I'm a wreck of fashion, becoming precisely a wraith of lassitude up to the grease-trap where face slathered as if with remorse in hair, tallow, frying muck, splits asunder or is chorefully drained. So much for shunning the torches of panic: clutching my ragged skin for another ride, board up for the work-district, flick distention into the token box.
Such that we are no longer niggardly with our shameful supplies, but blow out the ear of taste with munchies and burnt recipes
he corrects, he ladels, in the pine forest I picnic on nipples if there's nil else and gaze radiantly from a bared rock sun or no sun.

↑ Index

339. Douglas
America Awards
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Since America Awards (the "Ferns," instituted in honor of Anna Fahrni) were begun in 1994 to counter the boredom and meaninglessness of the National Book Awards and Pulitzer Prizes, etc. I think this might be as good a day as any to announce to the poetics list the 1997 awards.

International Award (awarded to a living writer of international stature for a body of literary writing)

Friederike Mayrocker (Austria)

[previous winners are Aimé Césaire (1994); Harold Pinter (1995) and José Donoso (1996)]

FICTION

Echoes, by Dennis Barone [Potes & Poets]

[judges: Carla Harryman, Tom La Farge, and Robert Steiner]

POETRY

The Silhouette of the Bridge, by Keith Waldrop [Avice Books]

[judges: Charles Bernstein, Norma Cole, and Marjorie Welish]

DRAMA

Throwin' Bones, by Matthew Maguire (La Mama/Creation Production Company, New York)

[judges: John Jesurun, Susan Mosakowski, Ronald Tavel)

BELLES LETTRES AND SELECTED OR COLLECTED WORKS

Collected Works, Vols I-III (Coffee House Press)

[judges: Joan Retallack, Jerome Rothenberg, Wendy Walker]

↑ Index

340. David Kellogg
Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Charles Wright won the Pulitzer for poetry today for his collection _Black Zodiac_. I happen to have read this book one afternoon last week, not having read much of Wright's work in several years. He writes a beatiful phrase, but I can't see what was behind the decision. It seems like the same old thing for him. Does anybody know who were the other nominees?

~~~
~~~

341. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Agreed, David. This volume is neither more nor less distinguished than his previous _Chickamauga_ or the one before that - or the one before that. He does have a lapidary way with a line, as they say,and I've often enjoyed him. But adventuresome he's not. Once again - and in vain - the cry goes up: what about Susan Howe? What about Charles Bernstein? Etc. Oh funky day.

This is from www.pulitizer.org: Also nominated as finalists in this category were: "Desire" by Frank Bidart (Farrar, Straus and Giroux), and "The Vigil" by C.K. Williams (Farrar, Straus and Giroux).

There's also a list of the judges.

From: David Kellogg
To: [redacted]
Subject: Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
Date: Tuesday, April 14, 1998 3:28PM

Charles Wright won the Pulitzer for poetry today for his collection _Black Zodiac_. I happen to have read this book one afternoon last week, not having read much of Wright's work in several years. He writes a beatiful phrase, but I can't see what was behind the decision. It seems like the same old thing for him. Does anybody know who were the other nominees?
~~~
~~~

of books that Bern has published or authored. His work would have fit perfectly into the area of the show devoted to publishers from other parts of the country who were active before 1960. Along with Ferlinghetti, J. Williams, Laughlin, et al, Bern was one of the most important small press publishers of the post-war era. Unfortunately, just about all of the histories and exhibits of that era don't give him the sort of credit he deserves.

James Schevill's WHERE TO GO, WHAT TO DO, WHEN YOU ARE BERN PORTER: A PERSONAL BIOGRAPHY (Tilbury House, 1992) is an excellent read into all that Bern has accomplished. It's out-of-print, but I have a few copies left.

Mark Melnicove
216 Cedar Grove Road
Dresden, ME 04342
[redacted]

> Bern Porter has produced 10s of books & 100s of pages from the trash can at the post office & the copy shop, they tend toward a very demographic diversity of materials...
>
> also would highly recommend showing the kids a copy of one of his big found books like Books of Dos or Book of Donts which need no explanation & a quickflip thru can be a delightful way to worm thru a student's self-conscious hesitations.
>
> miekal

↑ Index

343. Michael J. Kelleher
place(less Place)
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Correction:

the six gallery reading happened in October 1955. Thus, all born after this date, are welcome. Thanks to Karen MacCormack for the correction.

Mike

↑ Index

344. ScoutEW
Re: place(less Place)
Tue 14 Apr 1998

i think i'll return to the queen city for this, where is the reading or meeting going to take place on that friday or when will you have a list of where the events are going to be? I was born at Children's Hospital on Bryant Street, 1971 any other 71'ers out there?

↑ Index

345. Mark Melnicove
Re: Bern Porter
Tue 14 Apr 1998

---

no dog ear site, no other sites, not yet, though I'm also working for National Poetry Foundation, whose website is www.ume.maine.edu/~npf/

can you email me an up-to-date price list for your Bern books that you still want me to distribute to check against mine to make sure I'm accurate as of this minute?

Thanks,
Mark

> mark
>
> welcome to the list, is there a dog ear website up yet?
>
> miekal

↑ Index

346. Susan Wheeler
Re: Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
Tue 14 Apr 1998

Must have been the National Book Critics Circle Awards nominees reading at the National Arts Club a few weeks back here -- Wright took that prize, too.

At 06:20 PM 4/14/98 -0600, you wrote:
>>Charles Wright won the Pulitzer for poetry today for his collection _Black >>Zodiac_. I happen to have read this book one afternoon last week, not >>having read much of Wright's work in several years. He writes a beatiful >>phrase, but I can't see what was behind the decision. It seems like the >>same old thing for him. Does anybody know who were the other nominees?
>>~~~

>something or other, maybe the Pulitzer. The other poet I happened to flip >onto before eventually a Jefferson biographer put me into high snooze was >Frank Bidart, reading from _Desire_. Wright read a poem about Hopkins, I >think, and seemed at home in tweed but not behind that podium, and who can >blame him? Nothing really against Wright but the cadence still seems rife >with echoes of Pound and might suffer in that comparison. But then I >haven't engaged the book beyond what he mumbled and so can't really offer >an opinion. Peering at the tube I judged it a TKO for Bidart, though the >applause was appropriately chipper for all. There probably were still other >nominees, no? Is it that if one hangs around in certain quarters of po-biz >long enough sooner or later Dick and Ed come around with an oversized >letter and a cameraman?
>
>KT
>
>
Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

347. Billy Little
Re: place(less Place) gathering
Tue 14 Apr 1998

how about a conference of poets in pre-school?

↑ Index

348. Miekal And when visiting maine do as the mainelanders do
Tue 14 Apr 1998

this from captain D's online tour guide of belfast, maine.

For a memorable experience, check out the Institute of Advanced Thinking on Salmond Street in Belfast. Open daily year round, the Institute features outdoor sculpture shows, indoor art shows, festivals and readings. Admission is free. The Institute is the brainchild of Bern Porter, who has been variously described as a "maverick publisher, rebel physicist, master of found art," and "The da Vinci of the Atomic Age."

↑ Index

349. Rachel Levitsky
Re: more closings
Tue 14 Apr 1998

PW Daily for Booksellers from Publishers Weekly
The First Daily E-Mail Service for Booksellers

Contents for Thursday, April 9, 1998:

Dropping Out: Shepherds Book Center, Ne Little Professor, to Close

Bob Shepherd changed his store's name from Little Professor to the more personal Shepherds Book Centers, but this didn't save his 4500-sq.-ft. bookstore. The State College, Pa., bookseller announced this week that he will close his doors as early as the end of the month.

With a Penn State campus nearby, State College is rife with readers. (Unfortunately, he said, this is probably also what attracted superstore competition there.) So six years ago, Shepherd, a former engineer, decided to make a foray into bookselling. He thought that "Little Professor had some good ideas" and became a franchisee. But things began to deteriorate with the arrival of Encore in State College in 1994 and further with a B&N in 1996. Still, Shepherd says he was in denial. "I should have given up right when the superstores moved in, but I didn't want to believe it," he said.

In January, Shepherd thought that removing the Little Professor name would help, as have other recent franchisee defectors such as Nicola's Books in Ann Arbor, Mich. "Little Professor does not recognize that as a system they have become irrelevant," Shepherd charged. "Their approach to running a bookstore and the assistance they give is totally inadequate to compete with superstores."

Non-college bookselling in State College consists of the two chains and Svoboda's Technical books.--Steven M. Zeitchik

----
Amazon's New 'Man on the Street' Marketing Ploy?

Is this where some of that multi-million-dollar marketing budget is going?

> At least one Amazon representative has been spotted this week handing out $3 coupons advertising the online bookseller's services in front of independent bookstores in San Francisco, several local booksellers report.
>
> The man distributed coupons that read: "Can't find your book? Try Amazon.com with this $3 Gift Certificate. 2.5 million Titles, up to 40% off."
>
> One bookseller commented, "A suggestion for other independents out there who have been targeted: It's 'never' a bad time to hose down your sidewalk."

↑ Index

350. David Zauhar
Re: America Awards
Tue 14 Apr 1998

On Tue, 14 Apr 1998, Douglas wrote:
> Since America Awards (the "Ferns," instituted in honor > of Anna Fahrni) were begun in 1994 to counter the boredom
> and meaninglessness of the National Book Awards and > Pulitzer Prizes, etc. I think this might be as good a > day as any to announce to the poetics list the 1997 awards.
><snip>
> BELLES LETTRES AND SELECTED OR COLLECTED WORKS
>
> Collected Works, Vols I-III (Coffee House Press)
>
> [judges: Joan Retallack, Jerome Rothenberg, Wendy Walker]

I assume this is Paul Metcalf's Collected works, which is incredible and deserving of wider honors than it's going to get.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

to belong to whatever moves us outward into
the wideness, for journeying...

--Hilda Morley, 1919-1998

↑ Index

351. Keith Tuma
Re: Charles Wright wins Pulitzer
Tue 14 Apr 1998

> Charles Wright won the Pulitzer for poetry today for his collection _Black Zodiac_. I happen to have read this book one afternoon last week, not having read much of Wright's work in several years. He writes a beatiful phrase, but I can't see what was behind the decision. It seems like the same old thing for him. Does anybody know who were the other nominees?
> *~~~

issue a brief, though major objection: Svoboda's is NOT a "technical" bookstore, it's the best kind of independent bookstore, the ideal college-town bookstore, located close to campus and near coffeehouses, etc. "The Little Professor" store, I'm afraid to say, was (and I'm deliberately going for understatement here) not very good. The kind of store, basically, that makes me long for a Borders or a Barnes and igNoble's If you're ever in State College, be sure to check out Svoboda's And there's a good used bookstore there, too, called Seven Mountains, where, last time I was there, found _Sounds that Arouse Me_ by Bern Porter. I won't miss the Little Professor as long as Svoboda's and 7 Mountains are around.

Dave Zauhar

> ---
> Amazon's New 'Man on the Street' Marketing Ploy?
>
> Is this where some of that multi-million-dollar marketing budget is going?
>
> At least one Amazon representative has been spotted this week handing out $3 coupons advertising the online bookseller's services in front of independent bookstores in San Francisco, several local booksellers report.
>
> The man distributed coupons that read: "Can't find your book? Try Amazon.com with this $3 Gift Certificate. 2.5 million Titles, up to 40% off."
>
> One bookseller commented, "A suggestion for other independents out there who have been targeted: It's 'never' a bad time to hose down your sidewalk."

↑ Index

353. Pritchett,Patrick

Re: more closings

Tue 14 Apr 1998

Caught a piece on C-SPAN two or three nights ago where Andre Schiffren - formerly of Random House, but now founder of The New Press - said that there have been 300 closings of independent bookstores over the past decade. Since publishing has become part of other industries (see The Nation conglomerate chart), the 4% annual profit margin that was traditional in the industry has been pushed to become 15 or 20%. Even so, Schiffrin estimates that presses like his can flourish in the 10% of the market the Big Companies either ignore, concede or fail to dominate.

And yet, and yet - when I go to Barnes & Noble, they have every critical theory title I could ask for and then some. And Boulder Books has - squat. In addition, the owner of BB is by all accounts a colossally conceited individual who badgers and intimidates the used bookstore owners of the area - I won't go into all that here. But it makes me not want to support Boulder Books. My real affection and devotion goes to these used stores and their counterparts everywhere - these are where the pages of dream unfold in the rimefrost of dust.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Rachel Levitsky
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: more closings
Date: Tuesday, April 14, 1998 7:06PM

> PW Daily for Booksellers from Publishers Weekly
> The First Daily E-Mail Service for Booksellers
> ---
>
> Contents for Thursday, April 9, 1998:
>
> ---
> Dropping Out: Shepherds Book Center, Ne Little Professor, to Close
>
> Bob Shepherd changed his store's name from Little Professor to the more personal Shepherds Book Centers, but this didn't save his 4500-sq.-ft. bookstore. The State College, Pa., bookseller announced this week that he will close his doors as early as the end of the month.

↑ Index

354. Maria Damon
Re: more closings
Tue 14 Apr 1998

---

apparently one ploy of the chain bookstores is to haunt independents looking for titles --in Cambridge, for inst, they'll go to Grolier's for poetry titles and Harvard books for theory and cult studs, stock up on those and put those sections in prominent places in their own chain store, then, after they've driven the indies out of business, phase out the poetry and the cult studs. so, i try not to buy books there no matter what, even if it means special ordering from an independent. but yes, my faves are the used bookstores, long may they thrive around the edges of commerce.

At 7:27 PM -0500 4/14/98, Pritchett,Patrick @Silverplume wrote: >Caught a piece on C-SPAN two or three nights ago where Andre Schiffren - >formerly of Random House, but now founder of The New Press - said that there >have been 300 closings of independent bookstores over the past decade. Since >publishing has become part of other industries (see The Nation conglomerate >chart), the 4% annual profit margin that was traditional in the industry has >been pushed to become 15 or 20%. Even so, Schiffrin estimates that presses >like his can flourish in the 10% of the market the Big Companies either >ignore, concede or fail to dominate.
>
>And yet, and yet - when I go to Barnes & Noble, they have every critical >theory title I could ask for and then some. And Boulder Books has - squat.
>In addition, the owner of BB is by all accounts a colossally conceited >individual who badgers and intimidates the used bookstore owners of the area
>- I won't go into all that here. But it makes me not want to support Boulder >Books. My real affection and devotion goes to these used stores and their >counterparts everywhere - these are where the pages of dream unfold in the >rimefrost of dust.
>
>Patrick Pritchett
> ----------

↑ Index

355. Steven Marks
Re: Bern Porter
Tue 14 Apr 1998

The latest issue of American Book Review has a piece, "New Poetry and its Technology Anchorage," by Lee Ballentine in which there is mention of a site about Bern Porter. The URL is:

www.henrymiller.org/newsletter/html/porter.html

Haven't taken a look myself, so I'm not sure what's there.

Steven

On Tue, 14 Apr 1998, Mark Melnicove
wrote:

> no dog ear site, no other sites, not yet, though I'm also working for National Poetry Foundation, whose website is www.ume.maine.edu/~npf/

> can you email me an up-to-date price list for your Bern books that you still want me to distribute to check against mine to make sure I'm accurate as of this minute?
>
> Thanks,
> Mark
>
> >mark
>
> welcome to the list, is there a dog ear website up yet?
>
> miekal

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

356. Michael J. Kelleher
a l y r i c m a i l e r 4
Wed 15 Apr 1998

Attention Poets and Friends!

a l y r i c m a i l e r NUMBER 4

alyric prose issue

featuring:

Thousands

by Laird Hunt

is up and running at:

http//writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm

Laird Hunt works as a Press Officer at the United Nations. He has published work in Grand Street, Sulfur, Talisman et al.and has work forthcoming from No Trees, The World, & City Lights Review. Also forthcoming is a chapbook, Dear Sweetheart, from Talisman House Publishers. He lives in Manhattan, owns two ornery cats & co-edits the journal Psalm 151.

Upcoming issues include work from Heather Fuller, a sound file and text poem for three voices by Carrie Tocci, a critical isssue on the work of Ben Friedlander (critical submissions and queries welcome at the above e-mail address), and work by Heather Ramsdell.

Enjoy.

Mike

<HTML>
Attention Poets and Friends!

<P>a l y r i c m a i l e r   NUMBER 4

<P>alyric prose issue

<P>featuring:

<P>Thousands

<P>by Laird Hunt

<P>is up and running at:

<P><A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm">http//writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm</A>

<P>Laird Hunt works as a Press Officer at the United Nations. He has published work in Grand Street, Sulfur, Talisman et al.and has work forthcoming from No Trees, The World, & City Lights Review. Also forthcoming is a chapbook, Dear Sweetheart, from Talisman House Publishers. He lives in Manhattan, owns two ornery cats & co-edits the journal Psalm 151.

<P>Upcoming issues include work from Heather Fuller, a sound file and text poem for three voices by Carrie Tocci, a critical isssue on the work of Ben Friedlander (critical submissions and queries welcome at the above e-mail address), and work by Heather Ramsdell.

<P>Enjoy.

<P>Mike

 </HTML>

----------D5A71E6FB488BFA583E6F99B--

↑ Index

357. Tom Orange nyc books reading
Wed 15 Apr 1998

yes joel not by chance but by design i'm going for the farrell/andrews reading. more the merrier. further plotting ensues...

thanks dan, keston, mark s for suggestions. keep 'em comin. where's jordan davis hiding?

t.

↑ Index

358. AERIALEDGE
New New New @ Bridge Street Books
Wed 15 Apr 1998

It's a BIG list. Ordering & discount information at the end of the list. Thanks for your support.

1. _Towards the Primeval Lightning Field_, Will Alexander, O Books, $10.50. A work of "vertical philosophy", including "Within the Scope of the Post-Mortem Imam," "Ratio as Wealth by Nomadic Lemur," and "The Whirling King in the Runic Psychic Theatre."

2. _Wakefulness_, John Ashbery, FSG, $20. "What good are rules anyway / They apply only to themselves and other rules" "go get a job in the monument industry."

3. _Hegel After Derrida_, Stuart Barnett ed., Routledge, $25.99. Robert Bernasconi, John H. Smith, Jean-Luc Nancy, Werner Hamacher, Stuart Barnet, Suzanne Gearhart, Andrzej Warminski, Simon Critchley, Heinz Kimmerle, Kevin Thompson, Henry Sussman. "A number of things need to be pointed out here."

4. _Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word_, Charles Bernstein ed., Oxford, $24.95. Susan Stewart, Nick Piombino, Bruce Andrews, Marjorie Perloff, Susan Howe, Joanna Drucker, Steve McCaffery, Dennis Tedlock, Bob Perleman, Peter Quartermain, Jed Rasula, Peter Middleton, Lorenzo Thomas, Maria Damon, Susan M. Schultz, Ron Silliman. "What is the relation of sound to meaning?"

5. _Chloroform: An Aesthetics of Critical Writing_, Nick Lawrence & Alisa Messer ed, $10. Fiona Templeton, Jena Osman, Abby C., Amy Nestor, Lisa Lucenti, Beth Gerwin, William Howe, Scott Pound, Paul Auster, Benjamin Friedlander, Sheri Weinstein, Charles Bernstein, Micahel Basinski, Michael Stancliff, Cynthia Kimball, Carla Billiteri, Bruce Andrews, Loss Glazier, Martin Spinelli, Ken Sherwood, Ted Pearson, Taylor Brady, Jack Clarke, Kristin Prevallet.

6. _The Little Door Slides Back_, Jeff Clark, Sun & Moon, $10.95. "Fathoming his pomatum."

7. _Life & Death_, Robert Creeley, New Directions, $19.95. "Whatever the hope, / here it is lost. // Because we coveted our difference, here is the cost." The three sections of the book: "Histoire de Florida," "Old Poems, Etc." & "Life & Death / There / Inside My Head."

8. _Explosive Magazine_, fourth issue, ed Katy Lederer, $5. Lisa Lubasch, Prageeta Scharma, Rod Smith, Michael Basinski, Eleni Sikelianos, Darin De Stefano, Gillian Kiley, Albert Flynn DeSilver, Mark Salerno, Travis Ortiz, Leslie Scalapino, and poetry comics by Dave Morice.

9. _The Tel Quel Reader_, Patrick ffrench and Roland-Francois Lack ed, Routledge, $24.99. Julia Kristeva, Jean-Joseph Goux, Jean-Louis Baudry, Michel Foucault, Michelin Pleynet, Philippe Sollers, Marc Devade, Guy Scarpeta, Roland Barthes. There are 3 pieces by Pleynet, 2 each by Kristeva & Sollers, as well as a chronological history of Tel Quel.

10. _Aether_, William Fuller, Gaz, $10. "What exhausts the circuit signifies its revival, without surplus or deficit. Gold is fire, the dialectical solvent, substratum and act: its vacant murmurings vest the appetites; crooked and straight, it kindles and extinguishes the mind."

11. _The Germ #1_, ed MacGregor Card and Andrew Maxwell, $6. Guest, Godfrey, P Gizzi, Coolidge, Prevallet, K Waldrop, Ramke, Hejinian, Rehm, F Howe, Osman, Spahr, Mac Low, Champion, Zurawski, Joron, R Waldrop, Ducornet, many others.

12. _Shi: A Radical Reading of Chinese Poetry_, Yunte Huang, Roof, $9.95. "In acknowledging the foreigness of its source texts, this collection reimagines the task of translation and the possibilities for cross-cultural points of contacts, in the process changing the way we view Chinese poetry." --Charles Bernstein

13. _An Anthology of New (American) Poets_, Lisa Jarnot, Leonard Schwartz, and Chris Stroffolino ed, Talisman, $21.95. Beth Anderson, Lee Ann Brown, Mary Burger, Brenda Coultas, Jordan Davis, Thomas Sayers Ellis, Benjamin Friedlander, Drew Gardner, Peter Gizzi, Renee Gladman, Judith Goldman, Yuri (Riq) Hospodar, Garrett Kalleberg, Candace Kaucher, Bill Luoma, Kimberly Lyons, Jeffrey McDaniel, Mark McMorris, Jennifer Moxley, Claire Needell, Hoa Nguyen, Mark Nowak, Heather Ramsdell, Pam Rehm, Elio Schneeman, Susan M. Schultz, Eleni Sikelianos, Rod Smith, Juliana Spahr, Edwin Torres, Mark Wallace, Elizabeth Willis, Thad Ziolkowski. "I wake up and turn again to poetry"

14. _Lost Wax_, Heather Ramsdell, U Illonois, $11.95. "To welcome the fateful crumb, press 2"

15. _Rhizome 2_, ed Standard Schaefer & Evan Calbi, $10. Contributors include Barbara Guest, Scott Katano, Jacques Debrot, Tan Lin, Joe Ross, Graham Foust, Nick Piombino, Laynie Browne, Ted Greenwald, Patrick Pritchett, W.B. Keckler, Bruce Andrews, Eugenia Butler, Norma Cole, David Bromige, Mark Wallace, & a generous section of reviews.

16. _Real Love: In Pursuit of Cultural Justice_, Andrew Ross, NYU, $17.95. The essays included: "Jobs in Cyberspace," "Mr. Reggae DJ, Meet the International Monetary Fund," "The Gangsta and the Diva," "The Private Parts of Justice," "If the Genes Fit, How Do You Acqit? _O.J. and Science_," "The Great Un- American Numbers Game," "What the People Want from Art?," "The Lonely Hour of Scarcity," and "Claims for Cultural Justice."

17. _Poems for the Millenium: The University of California Book of Modern and Postmodern Poetry, Volume Two_, ed Jerome Rothenberg and Pierre Joris, $24.95.

871 pages, too many contributors to list. As with the first volume the scope is truly international & the editorial commentary is actually informational. "Put war away with time, come into space."

18. _The Situationist City_, Simon Sadler, MIT, $29.95. "We are not attached to the charm of ruins"

19. _Poems_, Sappho, translated w/ intro by Willis Barnstone, Sun & Moon, $10.95. "Don't stir up / small heaps / of beach refuse."

20. _Moving Borders: Three Decades of Innovative Writing by Women_, ed. Mary Margaret Sloan, Talisman, $27.95. Niedecker, Guest, Fraser, Mayer, Waldrop, Brossard,Waldman, Weiner, F Howe, Hejinian, Lauterbach, Notley, Owen, Dahlen, Berssenbrugge, Child, Armantrout, Acker, S Howe, Drucker, Dreyer, Scalapino, Moriarty, DuPlessis, Dientsfry, Cha, Darragh, Harryman, Welish, Retallack, Templeton, Swensen, Myles, Moure, Ward, Day, Mac Cormack, Scott, Mullen, Hunt, Patton, Cole, Sloan, Bellamy, Grim, Roy, Gevirtz, Kim, Robertson, Neilson, & wow. Plus 150 pages of poetics.

21. _Writings 1903-1932_, Gertrude Stein, Library of America, $35. Includes Q.E.D., Three Lives, Portraits and Other Short Works, & The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas. The Portraits and Other Short Works covers 375 pages and includes Tender Buttons, Yet Dish, Turkey and Bones and Eating and We Liked It, Lifting Belly, Marry Nettie, Acscents in Alsace, An Instant Answer or A Hundred Prominent Men, A Book Concluding With as a Wife Has a Cow, Composition as Explanation, An Acquaintance with Description, Patriarchal Poetry, Four Saints in Three Acts, and much else.

21. _Writings 1932-1946_, Gertrude Stein, Library of America, $35. Stanzas in Meditation, Henry James, Lectures in America, Narration: Lecture 3, What are Masterpieces and Why are There So Few of Them, Geographical History of America, What Does She See When She Shuts Her Eyes, Picasso, The World is Round, Doctor Faustus Lights the Lights, Ida, Three Sisters Who Are Not Sisters, Brewsie and Willie, The Mother of Us All, Reflection on the Atomic Bomb.

22. _Free Space Comix_, Brian Kim Steffans, Roof, $9.95. "Hello! broken / "Grease!" cast throwing lots at the / Leprechaun / II -- fast as they could say "Sheena / Easton," / a lung collapsed. Where / is the teeming / parlor?"

23. _Tripwire: a journal of poetics_, ed Yedda Morrison & David Buuck, $6. Noah de Lissovoy, Eleni Sikelianos, Kathy Lou Schultz, Carolyn Castano, Rodrigo Toscano, Sarah Anne Cox, Elizabeth Robinson, Tan Lin, Sarah Rosenthal, Robert Hale, Jocelyn Saidenberg & Brian Strang, Tim Davis, Michelle Rollman, Elizabeth Treadwell, Myung Mi Kim, Dana Lomax, Molly Hankwitz, Poetry Center Archives at SF State, Thiagarajah Selvanithy, Mark Wallace, Sherry Brennan.

24. _The Movement of the Free Spirit_, Raoul Vaneigem, Zone, $12.50. Vaneigem examines the heretical and millenarian movements that challenged social and ecclesiastical authority in Europe from the 1200s into the 1500s. "What needs to be sought out is the kind of fullfillment that comes when the heart learns to extract from the uncertain or the unknown a quintessence of love that allows these circumstances to seem somehow favorable."

25. _WellWellReality [collaborations]_, Rosmarie & Keith Waldrop, Post-Apollo, $10. "body al- / together too / sophisticated / for the soul if sun / relentless burns crying _I_ its / image on our retina bit / by bit another"

26. _My Christmas Poem (Sixteen Inches of Snow and a Void)_, Mark Wallace, PNY/MEB, $5. "I write the day / my own special way-- / bring me as well your drifting gift."

Some Bestsellas:
Sound States: Innovative Poetics and Acoustic Technologies, ed A. Morris, $24.95.
Debbie: An Epic, Lisa Robertson, $14.
Artificial Heart, Peter Gizzi, $10.
A Thousand Years of Nonlinear History, Manuel De Landa, $24.50.
Ancestral Cave, Tom Mandel, $7.50.
The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book, ed Andrews & Berstein, $18.95.
The Mooring of Starting Out: The First Five Books, John Ashbery, $25.
Some Other Kind of Mission, Lisa Jarnot, Burning Deck, $11.
Some of the Dharma, Jack Kerouac, Viking, $32.50.
Continuous Discontinuous, Andrew Levy, Potes & Poets, $13.50.
Another Language: Selected Poems, Rosmarie Waldrop, Talisman, $10.50.
Frame (1971-1991), Barrett Watten, Sun & Moon, $13.95.

On the Level Everyday: Selected Takes on Poetry and the Art of Living, Ted Berrigan, Talisman, $12.95.
The Psychic Life of Power, Judith Butler, Stanford, $15.95.
The Politics of Truth, Michel Foucault, Autonomedia, $8.
The Lost Lunar Baedeker, Mina Loy, FSG, $13.
Imagination Verses, Jennifer Moxley, $8.95.
_I-VI_, John Cage, $24.95.
MUSICAGE: Cage Muses on Words. Art. Music., Joan Retallack, $19.95.
Chain 4, $10.
Crayon Premier Issue: Jackson Mac Low Festschrift, $20.
Ghostlier Demarcations: Modern Poetry and the Material World, Michael Davidson, $35.
In Memory of My Theories, Rod Smith, $10.50.
Guy Debord--Revolutionary: A Critical Biography, Len Bracken, $14.95.
Essays Clinical & Critical, Guy Deleuze, $17.95.
il cuore : the heart, Selected Poems Katthleen Fraser, $12.95
Perhaps this is a rescue fantasy, Heather Fuller, $10.
Nothing Happened and Besides I Wasn't There, Mark Wallace, $9.50.

Poetics folks receive free shipping on orders of more than $20. Free shipping + 10% discount on orders of more than $30. There are two ways to order. 1. E-mail your order to [redacted] with your address & we will bill you with the books. or 2. via credit card-- you may call us at [redacted] or e-mail [redacted] w/ yr add, order, & card # & we will send a receipt with the books. We must charge some shipping for orders out of the US.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC 20007.

↑ Index

359. Alan Myouka Sondheim
(no subject)
Wed 15 Apr 1998

-

Julu and Jennifer and Nikuko and Julu and Jennifer Visit Nikuko

You'll get tired of seeing the shrines, Jennifer.
But, Julu, they fascinate me.
When you've been here six years like I have, they'll exhaust you.
We all go through the same things.
We all have been there before.
But, Julu, we're all different.
That's what I thought as well.
But you'll think differently.

Oh, it's Nikuko, hello.
Hello, Nikuko.
We're talking about shrines.
Ah yes, they fascinate me.
We Japanese people do not believe in anything.
We are very homogeneous in our one identity.
Ah, Nikuko, you always speak like you are reading Soseki.
Ah, that is true, Jennifer, I get all my thoughts from I am a Cat.
Yes, that is his most wonderful book.
You will get tired of reading books, Julu.
Ah, although I have read many books, I am already getting tired.
Books can be very tiring, especially after reading for six years.
You are making fun of me, Jennifer, but I have been here longer.
How long have you been here.
I have been in Fukuoka for six years and before that twenty in Tokyo.
Do you love Tokyo, Nikuko.
Yes, Julu, I do.
I love the old shrines which continue to fascinate me.
Shrines can be fascinating for many years.
There are so many to see and so many customs.
There are wonderful stories which readers of Gon will enjoy.
Ah, Jennifer, you will soon tire of manga, everyone does.
But Nikuko, I love manga for the wonderful graphics and high-powered sex.
The sex is very simple, but a lot of parts are cut out, Nikuko.
Do you think so, Julu.
Yes, I do, for example, the dildos and labia are now cut out.
Were they cut out before.
Yes they were cut out before.
There are so many men and women in manga.
I love the enormous breasts wet to the bursting point.
I love the big eyes and high cheekbones and spiky hair.
Everyone passes through that stage, Jennifer.
Do you think I am just passing through a stage, Nikuko.
Yes I do, Julu because you have just been here six months.
I have been here nine months, Julu.
I thought you were here six years, Nikuko.
I have been here all my life, Jennifer, because it is very beautiful.
I especially love the old shrines and the manga which are my favorite.
Perhaps you could be teasingly photographed for a manga.
Yes, that would be wonderful, to be teasingly photographed.
Perhaps I could pose in front of a wonderful old shrine.
I would be very religious in front of the shrine with bursting breasts.

Hello, Julu, welcome back.
I am very sorry but I had to leave for a moment.
I just had to look at some manga and walk around for good air.
Did you find the air very much to your liking.
Yes, the air around these shrines is very pleasant.
You will think otherwise, perhaps, when you are here longer.
Perhaps, since we gaijin are very homogeneous in our identity.
Do you think we think alike.
Yes, perhaps it becomes clear that we think alike, Julu.
Jennifer, do you have anything to say to this point.
Certainly, Nikuko, since for example we love Japanese food.
Julu, do you love Japanese food because you are here for six years.
Jennifer, I agree that it is a very short time and maybe it is otherwise.
Nikuko, that may be an answer to your thoughts on this matter.
Julu, I would have thought so, when I first arrived.
Everyone said, Jennifer, that I would pass through this.
Nikuko, you are more than correct, you are exact.
Yes, I do love shrines and my photographed breasts.
Everyone has homogeneous identities when they first arrive.
Bursting-manga wet my dreaming face and appetite for food.
There are times when Japanese books are loved the best by everyone.
Goodbye, Jennifer.
Goodbye, Julu.
Goodbye, Nikuko.
Goodbye, Jennifer.
Goodbye, Julu.
Goodbye, Nikuko.

↑ Index

360. Charles Alexander moved site
Wed 15 Apr 1998

I was shocked to find out my local ISP, in a system configuration changed, lost about half of the web sites located there, including the one for Chax Press.

So Chax has a new site, albeit only a very slightly updated bit of information, with more to come over the next two months.

The site is now located at http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

but if you happen to go to the old site at http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax

it should take you to the new URL in about 6 seconds, or there's a link to click to get to the new URL, too.

charles

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

361. daniel bouchard
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

My god! here I am in Cambridge helping people fight evictions and landlord harassment, and all the while the Real Evil is taking place at the quaint book shops down the street in Harvard Square (aka The Outdoor Mall).

Maria, how are these "ploys" of the chains apparent? I worked at three different Borders stores for a total (combined) of 3 years. I still have many friends who work at Borders as assistant managers (all over the country). Deploying staff to carry out ploys against independent bookstores must be a secret only you are in on.

I know a lot of stories of how employees are treated poorly (at best, like children), how they don't make a living wage, are intimidated for a variety of reasons, and so on. But the conspiracy you outline below is ludicrous. Don't get me wrong: I hate Borders and Barnes & Noble too. To be fair, I also hate Grolier, but that's another story.

The "chain" bookstores are demonized, no doubt about it. Fuck 'em, they deserve it. That doesn't give people leave however to spread war stories about the atrocities.

daniel bouchard

At 09:25 PM 4/14/98 -0500, Maria Damon wrote:
>apparently one ploy of the chain bookstores is to haunt independents >looking for titles --in Cambridge, for inst, they'll go to Grolier's for >poetry titles and Harvard books for theory and cult studs, stock up on >those and put those sections in prominent places in their own chain store, >then, after they've driven the indies out of business, phase out the poetry >and the cult studs. so, i try not to buy books there no matter what, even >if it means special ordering from an independent. but yes, my faves are >the used bookstores, long may they thrive around the edges of commerce.

>
<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

362. George Thompson
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

If Maria's conspiracy theory is sheer paranoia, it is shared by most well-informed indie book people. Reports on Barnes & Noble in particular show that it has targeted specific book markets wherever it has perceived a vulnerable indie, and it has gone in to complete the kill at every opportunity. This is not esoteric knowledge. Even PBS and CNN have done takes on the story.

The latest rumor is that they are now planning to move into the used book market. You will soon be watching your favorite used bookstores going under. Borders may not be as ugly about this, but there is no doubt that B & N is.

Daniel, I would urge your friends to treat B & N and Borders like their landlords: tell them to watch their backs.

GT.

> My god! here I am in Cambridge helping people fight evictions and landlord harassment, and all the while the Real Evil is taking place at the quaint book shops down the street in Harvard Square (aka The Outdoor Mall).
>
> Maria, how are these "ploys" of the chains apparent? I worked at three different Borders stores for a total (combined) of 3 years. I still have many friends who work at Borders as assistant managers (all over the country). Deploying staff to carry out ploys against independent bookstores must be a secret only you are in on.
>
> I know a lot of stories of how employees are treated poorly (at best, like children), how they don't make a living wage, are intimidated for a variety of reasons, and so on.
> But the conspiracy you outline below is ludicrous. Don't get me wrong: I > hate Borders and Barnes & Noble too. To be fair, I also hate Grolier, but that's another story.

>
> The "chain" bookstores are demonized, no doubt about it. Fuck 'em, they deserve it. That doesn't give people leave however to spread war stories about the atrocities.
>
> daniel bouchard
>
> At 09:25 PM 4/14/98 -0500, Maria Damon wrote:
> apparently one ploy of the chain bookstores is to haunt independents looking for titles --in Cambridge, for inst, they'll go to Grolier's for poetry titles and Harvard books for theory and cult studs, stock up on those and put those sections in prominent places in their own chain store, then, after they've driven the indies out of business, phase out the poetry and the cult studs. so, i try not to buy books there no matter what, even if it means special ordering from an independent. but yes, my faves are the used bookstores, long may they thrive around the edges of commerce.
>
> <<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
> Daniel Bouchard
> The MIT Press Journals
> Five Cambridge Center
> Cambridge, MA 02142
>
> [redacted]
> phone: [redacted]
> fax: [redacted]
> <<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

363. Gary Sullivan
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

Daniel:

There was a senate hearing on B&N's practices several years back . . . you can find it in the library . . . Maria's not at all paranoid . . . Borders totally fucked Dan Odegaard out of a bookstore maybe 5 years ago in MPLS . . . a couple of their coprorate heads came & met with Dan . . . told him if he didn't sell to them, they'd move in anyway & screw his business . . . He declined their offer . . . they're now sitting in the space where his bookstore used to be . . .

I worked for Legal Aid while in MPLS . . . helped tenants go up against the worst slimeball landlords there . . . and researched & wrote about Barnes & Noble at the same time . . . not sure why you priviledge one concern over the other . . . it might surprise you to know that a group of concerned MPLS citizens actually stopped a Starbucks from moving in, once . . . Starbucks uses similar practices . . . make deals with landlords to ensure exclusivity . . . always move in near independents, ultimate goal being to drive them out of business . . .

Again, this is all stuff well-documented . . . look into it before accusing others of being paranoid . . . "a courtesy thing" . . .

Thanks,

Gary

↑ Index

364. Mark Prejsnar
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

Although I'm mostly a library person, in my secret nonpoet identity, I have had some contact with book retail; and I've worked there some.

George Thompson and Maria are right: the basic strategy Maria outlines is a very ordinary marketing tactic, from the capitalist point of view and is indeed something that goes on.

Dan Bouchard is more than a little naive about this; and just why is he so het up (as well as wrong??)

↑ Index

365. daniel bouchard
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

At 09:22 AM 4/15/98 -0400, George Thompson wrote:
>Daniel, I would urge your friends to treat B & N and Borders like their >landlords: tell them to watch their backs.

They don't need me to tell them. This is a job axiom we all share: booksellers, teachers, paper-shufflers.

I don't watch the news programs you mention, and have no experience with BarnsNoble.

- db

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

366. daniel bouchard
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

At 09:35 AM 4/15/98 -0400, Mark Prejsnar wrote: >Dan Bouchard is more than a little naive about this; and just why is he so >het up (as well as wrong??)
>

Because it is easier to be naive and wrong than it is to be Mark Prejsnar.

daniel bouchard

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

367. Maria Damon
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

---

perhaps this is a paranoid fantasy on the part of the person i heard it from; it was told to me by the proprietor of one of the independent bookstores in harvard square. keep up the good fight.

At 9:07 AM -0400 4/15/98, daniel bouchard wrote:
>My god! here I am in Cambridge helping people fight evictions and landlord >harassment, and all the while the Real Evil is taking place at the quaint >book shops down the street in Harvard Square (aka The Outdoor Mall).
>
>Maria, how are these "ploys" of the chains apparent? I worked at three >different Borders stores for a total (combined) of 3 years. I still have >many friends who work at Borders as assistant managers (all over the >country). Deploying staff to carry out ploys against independent bookstores >must be a secret only you are in on.
>
>I know a lot of stories of how employees are treated poorly (at best, like >children), how they don't make a living wage, are intimidated for a variety >of reasons, and so on.
>But the conspiracy you outline below is ludicrous. Don't get me wrong: I >hate Borders and Barnes & Noble too. To be fair, I also hate Grolier, but >that's another story.
>
>The "chain" bookstores are demonized, no doubt about it. Fuck 'em, they >deserve it. That doesn't give people leave however to spread war stories >about the atrocities.
>
>
>daniel bouchard
>
>
>
>At 09:25 PM 4/14/98 -0500, Maria Damon wrote:
>>apparently one ploy of the chain bookstores is to haunt independents
>>looking for titles --in Cambridge, for inst, they'll go to Grolier's for >>poetry titles and Harvard books for theory and cult studs, stock up on >>those and put those sections in prominent places in their own chain store,
>>then, after they've driven the indies out of business, phase out the poetry
>>and the cult studs. so, i try not to buy books there no matter what, even >>if it means special ordering from an independent. but yes, my faves are >>the used bookstores, long may they thrive around the edges of commerce.
>>
><<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
>Daniel Bouchard
>The MIT Press Journals
>Five Cambridge Center
>Cambridge, MA 02142

>
>[redacted]
>phone: [redacted]
> fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

368. daniel bouchard
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

All this and Maria hasn't even cyber-slapped me yet. Here is what I know: my experiences at Borders (and subsequent information from people who have stayed with the company). From this framework, I stand by my original reply to Maria. The idea that Borders would consider it worth their time to infiltrate small shops like Grolier and Harvard to copy their title stock AS A MEANS of driving them out of business continues to strike me as pretty stupid.

But my naivete is apparent. My credibility to speak of capitalist business practices, marketing strategies, and so forth wanes in the face of B&N's business practices and Starbuck's real estate deals.

Why do I privelege one concern (organizing tenants) over another (defending small bookstores)? Well, why do people defend a particular for-profit small bookstore when it's vulnerable to a bigger for-profit bookstore?

Finally--especially to you Gary--go back and read the three messages I posted this morning. You will not find the word "paranoid" in them, nevermind my accusing someone of being paranoid. Please read what is right before your eyes before replying, "a courtesy thing."

At 09:32 AM 4/15/98 -0400, Gary Sullivan wrote:
>Again, this is all stuff well-documented . . . look into it before accusing >others of being paranoid . . . "a courtesy thing" . . .

- db

<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]

fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

369. daniel bouchard
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

If it was the proprietor of the Grolier, then "paranoid" is the right word.

At 08:57 AM 4/15/98 -0500, Maria Damon wrote:
>perhaps this is a paranoid fantasy on the part of the person i heard it
>from; it was told to me by the proprietor of one of the independent >bookstores in harvard square. keep up the good fight.
>
<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

370. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

Dan,

I'll bite: What's the problem with Groliers? (other then they don't have enough room and I keep tripping over stuff when I go in)

E. Hatmaker

↑ Index

371. Gary Sullivan
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

Hi, Daniel:

I've gone back over your words. You tell Maria "Deploying staff to carry out ploys against independent bookstores must be a secret only you are in on" and "the conspiracy you outline below is ludicrous." It seems obvious to me that, as well as being dismissive and condescending here, you're accusing Maria of being paranoid.

Why I wouldn't privilege one concern over the other: in both instances what we're talking about are unscrupulous & often totally illegal abuses of real estate. I'm equally concerned about smaller, single-owner businesses participating in similar abuse, as & when it happens.

But, maybe more to the point: as well as being aware of individual instances like these . . . well, I think it helps to have as good a sense as you can as to how these things, generally, can take place . . . some cognizance of the social/economic system(s) that allow for these sorts of manifestations.

Yours,

Gary

↑ Index

372. MAYHEW
More Closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

St. Louis book chronicles:

A couple of years ago I walked into an independent bookstore in St. Louis looking for Ishiguro's _The Unconsoled_ which had been published a few weeks before--a present for a family member. No luck, so I had to go to a still independent, but larger store (since purchased by Border's).

I was sorry when the smaller independent store went out of business, since they had a great poetry section, yet I understood. They were forcing customers like me to go the stores where I was assured of finding so obvious a book--a new novel by a well-known novelist published by a major commercial press.

I was sorry when the local independent mega-store was bought out by Border's also. Yet this "independent" store was already, in their own business practices, fairly ruthless, engaging in some of the same tactics mentioned in relation to B&B and B's. Trying to out-border borders, they ended up being swallowed up anyway.

Luckily, Left Bank books is still open in the Central West End.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas

[redacted]

↑ Index

373. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

---

with respect to harvard square, it was barnes and nobles, not borders, that was the bookstore in question. though the borders gary speaks of, that took over odegaards, is right next to myhouse. occasionally i do buy books there, but after all this info, will be even more reluctant in the future.

At 10:09 AM 4/15/98, daniel bouchard wrote:
>All this and Maria hasn't even cyber-slapped me yet. Here is what I know: my >experiences at Borders (and subsequent information from people who have >stayed with the company). From this framework, I stand by my original reply >to Maria. The idea that Borders would consider it worth their time to >infiltrate small shops like Grolier and Harvard to copy their title stock AS >A MEANS of driving them out of business continues to strike me as pretty >stupid.
>
>But my naivete is apparent. My credibility to speak of capitalist business >practices, marketing strategies, and so forth wanes in the face of B&N's >business practices and Starbuck's real estate deals.
>
>Why do I privelege one concern (organizing tenants) over another (defending >small bookstores)? Well, why do people defend a particular for-profit small >bookstore when it's vulnerable to a bigger for-profit bookstore?
>
>Finally--especially to you Gary--go back and read the three messages I >posted this morning. You will not find the word "paranoid" in them, >nevermind my accusing someone of being paranoid. Please read what is right >before your eyes before replying, "a courtesy thing."
>
>
>At 09:32 AM 4/15/98 -0400, Gary Sullivan wrote:
>>Again, this is all stuff well-documented . . . look into it before accusing >>others of being paranoid . . . "a courtesy thing" . . .
>
>
>- db
>

>
><<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
>Daniel Bouchard
>The MIT Press Journals
>Five Cambridge Center
>Cambridge, MA 02142
>
>[redacted]
>phone: [redacted]
> fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

374. morpheal
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

> My god! here I am in Cambridge helping people fight evictions and landlord harassment, and all the while the Real Evil is taking place at the quaint book shops down the street in Harvard Square (aka The Outdoor Mall).

As the effective size of corporations grows, and lesser economic entities find it harder and harder to compete effectively with those that are growing, amalgamating, joint venturing, and consolidating....this reflects into the book trade as well as everywhere else....

In the book trade one of the biggest problems has been the difficulty small presses, and self published authors, have in obtaining any meaningful distribution and promotion. This leads to a few getting most of the market share and the others not even recouping costs,....With fewer and fewer independent dealers, there will be even less opportunity for many individuals. Fewer will have any chance to be known, even in lesser ways, and more shall have their work perish, at an ever faster pace.

The wierdest part about it is that it is also reflecting into little known affinity and interest groups, where a similar attitude is happening as occurs in big business and big distribution. Fewer and fewer individuals are having any real chance of any success, even in terms of getting meaningful readings as to their writing. A smaller and smaller group tend to get the good gigs, paid or unpaid, where they can get significant, meaningful, exposure and a chance at any kind of hope of any success.

In past years one such organization allowed every member who attended their spring meeting to read something of their work. It was an afternoon of sharing new creative efforts by all, where anyone could participate. Now this has changed, to a big publisher sponsored reading by four or five of the better established, better known, names, from within the organization. They are now the Barnes and Nobles, Chapters, or whatever chain congolomerate equivalent, while everyone is merely a "consumer".

Is this to be the current and future trend ?

A trend of more and more silenced voices in the arts ?

M.

↑ Index

375. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: report on Bromige reading
Wed 15 Apr 1998

---

cd we get some reports on the Mackey extravaganzas in chicago and indiana? thanks guyzies

At 8:43 AM 4/14/98, MAYHEW wrote:
>Approximately fifty people heard poet David Bromige read selections from >his work last night (Monday, April 13) at the Canterbury House near the >campus of the University of Kansas in Lawrence. The audience responded >warmly to Bromige's unprepossessing manner and witty, serious poems.
>
>Speaking only for myself... I had not been to a poetry reading in a >couple of years and felt invigorated afterwards. Thanks to Maryrose Larkin >and everyone else who brought Bromige to Lawrence.
>
>Jonathan Mayhew
>Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>University of Kansas
>[redacted]
>[redacted]

↑ Index

376. Keston Sutherland
Re: more closings (fwd)
Wed 15 Apr 1998

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 15 Apr 1998 11:18:11 -0400
From: daniel bouchard <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: more closings

Keston,

I've exceeded my posting limit for the diem (5). Can you please forward this to the UberList? This is it for me today.

Date: Wed, 15 Apr 1998 11:14:01 -0400
To: buff post
From: daniel bouchard <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: more closings

What "seems obvious" to you Gary is not obvious to everyone. Or, if I am speaking again beyond my naive realm of knowledge, it is not obvious to me. I would rather be quoted than interpreted, especially in a tricky medium such as e-mail.

Anyway, we now know that the person who IS in on the secret ploys of the big bookstores is "the proprietor of one of the independent bookstores in harvard square."

- db

At 10:48 AM 4/15/98 -0400, Gary Sullivan wrote: I've gone back over your words. You tell Maria "Deploying staff to carry out ploys against independent bookstores must be a secret only you are in on" and "the conspiracy you outline below is ludicrous." It seems obvious to me that, as well as being dismissive and condescending here, you're accusing Maria of being paranoid.

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

377. k. lederer
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

Re: Morph et al's worries....

It seems to me that the greatest hope for the avaialability of lots and lots of writers would be something like this list. I mean Rod just got to post a list of new books to a pretty big chunk of the poetry readers who would purchase such books.

I also think that Amazon and other electronic "bookstores" will have a pronounced and really positive effect on the book industry.

I mean, it's not like B & N has any real interest in keeping us all from, say, HD. They just don't have the space or the inclination to necessarily purvey her books.

I think a much larger issue in this instance (re: availability) would be the buying practices of libraries.

I like to browse around in a used bookstore as much as the next guy...but I don't really mind the idea of buying my books over the net.

I understand that one of the issues here regards the owners of these small stores. But (as someone has already pointed out, I believe) why are these owners any "nicer" than other owners?

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

378. Judy Roitman
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

> Daniel:
>
> There was a senate hearing on B&N's practices several years back . . . you can find it in the library . . . Maria's not at all paranoid . . . Borders totally fucked Dan Odegaard out of a bookstore maybe 5 years ago in MPLS . . . a couple of their coprorate heads came & met with Dan . . . told him if he didn't sell to them, they'd move in anyway & screw his business . . . He declined their offer . . . they're now sitting in the space where his bookstore used to be . .
> .
>
> I worked for Legal Aid while in MPLS . . . helped tenants go up against the worst slimeball landlords there . . . and researched & wrote about Barnes & Noble at the same time . . . not sure why you priviledge one concern over the other . . . it might surprise you to know that a group of concerned MPLS citizens actually stopped a Starbucks from moving in, once . . . Starbucks uses similar practices . . . make deals with landlords to ensure exclusivity . . . always move in near independents, ultimate goal being to drive them out of business . . .
>
> Again, this is all stuff well-documented . . . look into it before accusing

> others of being paranoid . . . "a courtesy thing" . . .
>
> Thanks,
>
> Gary

The natural food chains use similar tactics. Here in Lawrence KS we drove one (Wild Oats) out of town. That the new Borders is indeed only a half a block away from the one remaining semi-serious indie bookstore makes it easier to park when going to the indie, but unfortunately the indie is quite small and necessarily has large gaps. Luckily the local Borders hasn't figured out the market (I will drop no hints here) and therefore is not more attractive. Unluckily before it opened the two other semi-serious indies closed in anticipation of bankruptcy.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

379. Judy Roitman
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

> Why do I privelege one concern (organizing tenants) over another (defending small bookstores)? Well, why do people defend a particular for-profit small bookstore when it's vulnerable to a bigger for-profit bookstore?

This is easy to answer. Small bookstores make independent judgements when buying books, and the existence many small bookstores makes the existence of many publishers possible.

Just try getting your local micro-press, or any press not on the master list, into Borders or B & N. Books by local authors occasionally manage to get in (shelved in the local interest section, no matter what sort of book it is), and other books absolutely cannot.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |

memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

380. Keston Sutherland
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

> Just try getting your local micro-press, or any press not on the master list, into Borders or B & N. Books by local authors occasionally manage to get in (shelved in the local interest section, no matter what sort of book it is), and other books absolutely cannot.

I was pleased to find books by Ange Mlinko, Lisa Jarnot, Peter Gizzi and several other young writers at Waterstone's on Newbury St. in Boston. It's a massive store, and a massive chain (in the UK particularly). This is, though, as you say rare; but maybe the beginning of a trend? It doesn't sound as if anybody here wouldn't -want- their book to be in Borders, or would refuse to have it there -- should the big co.s decide to patronise books relatively marginal to money, how would they be stopped? Why do so many 'small press' books in the US have ISBNs? Doesn't everyone quite plainly WANT to be less benooked? Follow your own logic..

↑ Index

381. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Barnes & Noble & Social Darwinian
Wed 15 Apr 1998

I haven't been following the discussion about Barnes & Noble and the demise of the small independent bookstore; I've been too busy running my own bookstore here in Washington DC, the country's county seat of corruption. No one should equate what Barnes & Noble or what any other corporation does with the natural order. Here in Washington we stay acutely aware of how the Big Boys manipulate the system to their advantage. They write legislation that is favorable to their industry. They litter my pseudo-intellectual landscape with think-tank whores whose sole purpose is to influence legislation and sell anti-democratic ideas to a gullible populace e.g. the privatization of Social Security or the natural efficacy of markets. They offer political appointees, regulators, elected officials and members of the military lucrative positions, de facto bribes, for supporting government spending for their particular products and services. They have off-shore bank accounts that are beyond U.S.tax laws. They run their operations in the red, borrowing from cronies in the banking industry, in order to drive weaker competitors out of business. Then they cut back services and employees in the name of greater efficiency. I could go on, but the point is if it was just a matter of competition, especially with books, knowledge should be king. Further, with books a knowledge of their content can be detrimental to your business if you let that knowledge cloud your 'business sense' as I so often do. Indeed, books like any other commodity is subject to market forces. But with outfits like Barnes & Noble and Borders you reach a new threshold where capital concerns eliminate all others. You may have your backlist today but what about when all the independents have been squeezed out. My shop is used and out-of-print. Norman Kemp Smith's Commentary on Critique of Pure Reason is Out-Of-Print! That's the market at work. A few years ago before the new edition of Yeat's collected poetry had been published, MacMillan almost dropped the title from its list because their computerized sales system showed that not enough copies had been sold that year to justify continuing publication. A junior editor perusing the print-out discovered this abomination and the Yeat's title was restored. This is what we are moving toward. The price I pay daily for rescuing some of the best our culture and other cultures have produced is eighty hour work weeks, near poverty, and the ridicule and derision of a society that largely because of material excess has discarded its instinct and empathetic regard for life.---Carlo Parcelli

↑ Index

382. Gary Sullivan
Re: more closings (fwd)
Wed 15 Apr 1998

Hi, Daniel:

I wholly understand your concern not to be misinterpreted. Anyway, I did quote you, & others can decide for themselves whether or not an accusation of paranoia seemed likely in your words. I apologize for my own response if you indeed didn't mean it.

I'll quote you again: "we now know that the person who IS in on the secret ploys of the big bookstores is 'the proprietor of one of the independent bookstores in harvard square.'" I feel compelled to remind you that many, many others are on to them as well. Just because you don't have firsthand knowledge of this doesn't mean it's not true, & I'm at a loss to understand why you're so dismissive of those of us who've looked into the subject at any length. If "dismissive" is a misinterpretation of your words, I apologize again. That's how you're coming across. To me, at least.

As Jonathan Mayhew points out, some chain-bookstore practices ultimately have consequences further-reaching than who will make money from what. I don't think he'd be surprised to hear that the senate subcommittee hearings I mentioned earlier were undertaken to determine whether or not chain bookstores were in collusion with the largest NYC presses as regards pricing and returns policies that, in effect, destroyed chances for smaller publishers to participate. The hearings were labeled "anti-trust" hearings. Again, some understanding of how monopolies are created & maintained in this culture, and what the consequences tend to be, is necessary, I think, in being able to determine the value of resistance. Not to mention specific options open to those genuinely wanting to resist.

To offer one answer Katy's question here: "why are these [independent] owners any 'nicer' than other owners?" -- the point isn't niceness, but diversity. Again, chain bookstores, in proven collaboration with the larger presses, have different, and much more rigid book-buying policies than independent bookstores. B&N's return policy alone has really hurt Coffee House Press (one of the larger nonprofits in the country), to the point where they were--at the time I worked there, four years ago or so--reconsidering dealing with the chains at all. And CHP has an annual budget of over a million dollars a year (or did then).

Long ago on this list, I posted a sort of mini-history of Bookslinger's demise . . . in great part the result of Consortium's business practices. I won't repost that here, but you can find it, early 95, in the archives, if you're at all interested in this sort of thing. Bookslinger, by the way, was comparable to SPD. Consortium isn't.

I'm not angry with you, Daniel, and I hope that I'm not coming across that way. But I have to say, I'm surprised--having seen you read recently at Zinc--that someone as dedicated to Olson's art as you are (or seemed to be, to me) is unsympathetic to some of the more general social concerns addressed in his _Maximus Poems_.

Anyway . . . my dimes have been spent, too . . . I'm glad to see others with some experience/knowledge w/respect to this subject piping in . . . people DO care about this, Daniel . . .

Yours,

Gary

↑ Index

383. Judy Roitman

Re: more closings

Wed 15 Apr 1998

> Just try getting your local micro-press, or any press not on the master list, into Borders or B & N. Books by local authors occasionally manage to get in (shelved in the local interest section, no matter what sort of book it is), and other books absolutely cannot.
>
> I was pleased to find books by Ange Mlinko, Lisa Jarnot, Peter Gizzi and several other young writers at Waterstone's on Newbury St. in Boston. It's a massive store, and a massive chain (in the UK particularly). This is, though, as you say rare; but maybe the beginning of a trend? It doesn't sound as if anybody here wouldn't -want- their book to be in Borders, or would refuse to have it there -- should the big co.s decide to patronise books relatively marginal to money, how would they be stopped? Why do so many 'small press' books in the US have ISBNs? Doesn't everyone quite plainly WANT to be less benooked? Follow your own logic..

If the big companies decided to give local managers local control and let a thousand thousand small publishers bloom, who would complain? But Borders and B&N don't do that. They do something much more subtle, picking up a small number of small presses that have shown some base of loyal readers, but not encouraging others. If you go to the Barnes and Noble in the Plaza in Kansas City you might get all excited because as a matter of course they do carry, say, books by Susan Howe. But if you look closely at the publisher you'll discover that what most of us consider interesting books on their shelves are coming from a very small number of presses, most of them university presses. Other presses need not apply.

They also put pressure on publishers to cut them deals. Marginal presses can't do that.

I have also known them to tell people that in-print books from publishers not on their master list were out of print and could not be ordered. I tend not to believe in conspiracy theories, so suspect this might just be incompetent local staff.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

384. Mark Weiss
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

As a publisher my experience with the chains has been marginal--mostly special orders and occasional large orders, almost entirely returned, of books by readers at a given store. My understanding is that they operate by assigning a value per inch or foot of shelf space--the given space must produce x amount of sales per unit of time, otherwise the stock is reshuffled. This requires a lot of traffic, which in turn requires a high-rent loaction, which in turn requires optimum sales per shelf unit, etc. It does work within their criteria--they make a lot of money. So they're not going to carry a lot of my books. The system also requires that customers not linger--that slows the traffic. Poetry customers linger--we taste a lot before we decide. A low-traffic indie, which provides the time to linger, usually has a lower profit-per-shelf-unit expectation, so books that don't sell can stay on the shelves longer. On the down side, they rarely buy more than one or two copies, they often pay grudgingly, and when they agree to take a book from a small press publisher it's usually in a face-to-face encounter in which this publisher, at least, is made to feel like a pauper at the gate, hat in hand. Labor-intensive and unrewarding. And the books usually sit on the shelves until they are covered with dust or dog-eared beyond recognition. And what are we talking about nation-wide, 40 stores? Mailorder can sell books, but you can't browse, which means only books already known to the reader get ordered. Hard to make a surprise discovery at Amazon.com. Witness my recent offering of half-priced copies of two Junction titles to the list. Only a very few ordered (thank you), even at give-away prices. I sell, one way or another, a fair number of books to individuals, but library sales via wholesalers are what keep this press afloat, and I do hope those copies get read. Wholesalers, like bookstores, require ISBNs (and barcodes), as do the major journals that review books for the library trade. That's why we have ISBNs.

It >doesn't sound as if anybody here wouldn't -want- their book to be in >Borders, or would refuse to have it there -- should the big co.s decide to >patronise books relatively marginal to money, how would they be stopped?
>Why do so many 'small press' books in the US have ISBNs? Doesn't everyone >quite plainly WANT to be less benooked? Follow your own logic..
>
>

↑ Index

385. MAYHEW
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

I think Gary Sullivan might have given me credit for insights made by others; I have relatively little expertise in this question compared to those who have more experience working in bookstores and in publishing or who've followed the news reports more assiduously.

I bought some books from Amazon and they've helpfully suggested other books that might interest me:

"Hello, Jonathan Mayhew, Based on the items you've bought at Amazon.com we think you'll like these. Please check back often as the list changes daily":

The Collected Poems of Amy Clampitt Tales from Ovid (trans. Ted Hughes)
Glare (Ammons)
Wittgenstein's Ladder (Perloff) [a good suggestion but of course I already have it]
Collected Works of Yeats Collected Poetry and Prose (W. Stevens)
The Odes of Horace
Sonnets (Shakespeare)
Sonnets (Stephen Booth edition)
Complete Poems of Anna Akhmovota Alive Together (Lisel Mueller)
Bryne (A. Burgess)
Desire (Bidart not Bromige)
Nietzsche in Turin
Passing Through (Kunitz)
War Music (Logue
The Work of Poetry (John Hollander)
The Elgin Affair
The Best American Poetry 1997 (ed. J. TATE)
A Day with Picasso
Collected fiction of Spackmann
Otherwise (J. Kenyon, ed. by donald hall)
The Iron Tracks (Green)
The Norton Shakespeare

This would be frightening if it weren't so far off base.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese

University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

386. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: New New New @ Bridge Street Books
Wed 15 Apr 1998

rod rites: 9. _The Tel Quel Reader_, Patrick ffrench and Roland-Francois Lack ed, Routledge, $24.99. Julia Kristeva, Jean-Joseph Goux, Jean-Louis Baudry, Michel Foucault, Michelin Pleynet, Philippe Sollers, Marc Devade, Guy Scarpeta, Roland Barthes. There are 3 pieces by Pleynet, 2 each by Kristeva & Sollers, as well as a chronological history of Tel Quel.

is this the real editors' names? too good to be true!

↑ Index

387. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: after emmett
Wed 15 Apr 1998

just chect this out it's cool

At 1:43 PM 4/12/98, Miekal And wrote:
>after emmett
>
>a >dispersion
>of >ninetiles
>
>
>a typofantastic epic voyage by Miekal And
>
>http://net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/afteremmett/bonvoyage.html
>
>
>after emmett was created during april 1998 using selected letters from >the following fonts: albatross, arial, attic, avant garde, bodoni, >cochin, contraband, cooper black, courier, exocet heavy, friz quadrata, >georgia, gilligans island, goudy heavy, goudy oldstyle, goudy thin, >harlequin, harrington, helvetica, impact, kronk, lemiesz, lubalin graph, >milano, oakwood, OPTIflare, optima, poster bodoni, potsdam, premium >truetype, rocky, stonecutter, stiletto, thunderbird, trajan, ultrablack, >university roman, ursa serif , utopia, vedome, verdana. animations >rendered using adobe photoshop & the nifty shareware gifbuilder.

↑ Index

388. Ctfarmr
addresses needed
Wed 15 Apr 1998

Anyone with this information -- a backchannel would be greatly appreciated

Forward from Tom Beckett:

Subj: addresses
Date: 98-04-15 05:40:11 EDT
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted]

Bobbie--
Could you, for our project, do a query to the poetics list? I need addresses both ground and electronic for--

Carla Harryman &
Steve Evans (he's apparently somewhere in France now)

Thanks.
tom

[redacted]

↑ Index

389. Kevin Varrone
Reading Announcement
Wed 15 Apr 1998

For those in the Philadelphia area:

5 Corners Poetry Series Presents:

Jennifer McCreary & Rod Smith

Thursday, April 23rd, 8 p.m.
@George's 5th Street Cafe

(Corner of 5th and Gaskill, between Lombard & South Streets)

Call Kevin @ 215/[redacted] for info.

Thanks.

↑ Index

390. David Zauhar
Nathaniel Mackey reading
Wed 15 Apr 1998

In an under-air conditioned room, in front of about 90 people (most of them decidedly not there to earn extra credit), Nathaniel Mackey read from 3 volumes of his poetry today at UIC. He opened with 3 poems from Eroding Witness (his Jimi Hendrix poem called "Black Snake Visitation," his Coltrane poem entitled "Ohnedaruth's Day Begun" (not sure of the spelling there), and Passing Through, dedicated to the Ghanian scholar Ivan Van Sertima). These are poems that at times can be difficult to get off the page, but NM offered enough background to give attentive listeners something to latch on to (between that, and the fact he has one of the greatest reading voices I ever heard, he did a great job holding the audience in what could have been sleep-inducing conditions). Mackey then moved on to work from School of Udhra, including "Amma Seru's Hammer's Heated Fall," (dedicated to the sculptor Ed Love. And I didn't know this, but Amma Seru is a blacksmith figure from Dogon Mythology) and "Slipped Quadrant." Mackey closed with three parts of the _Song of the Andoumboulou_ (18, 19,20), which will be in the forthcoming _Whatsaid Serif_. I knew that the "Andoumboulou" refers to a funeral song of the Dogon, but I didn't know that, as Mackey pointed out that he just learned, Dogon lore sees the Andoumboulou as earlier versions of humanity that just didn't work out, sort of like "first drafts" of us, in Dogon cosmology. He also pointed out that the "Whatsaid" refers to a figure called the Whatsayer, whose job is to interrupt the story teller by asking questions, interrupting, heckling, or as Mackey put it, "to roughen the weave of the story." (especially interesting in light of Tom Becket's questions awhile back about "stoppage" in poetry). These poems, too, rocked. After reading for about an hour in a stuffy room, Mackey very generously took questions from the audience for 30 additional minutes. Among the many highlights was a response to some very ParisReview-type questions: when asked if he envisioned a particular response in his audience -- say an intellectual response or a particular political act, etc -- when he writes, NM said no, that as a poet he is the "instigator of meaning" and then proceeded to tell of some of the responses he gets via letters, including two ARCHITECTS(!) who have found inspiration in his work. NM pointed out that, if he had set out w/ a pre-established audience response in his mind, there's no way he would ever be surprised like he is in such cases. Tomorrow, NM will lecture here on HD's influence, which I won't post about unless he goes over different ground than he did when Maria heard him two weeks ago. By the way, Whatsaid Serif will be published by City Lights, and should be out in June. So if you're in Chicago, and you didn't come to UIC, catch Mackey tomorrow at Columbia College on Michigan Avenue.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

to belong to whatever moves us outward into
the wideness, for journeying...

--Hilda Morley, 1919-1998

↑ Index

391. morpheal
Re: Barnes & Noble & Social Darwinian
Wed 15 Apr 1998

> continuing publication. A junior editor perusing the print-out discovered this abomination and the Yeat's title was restored. This is what we are moving toward. The price I pay daily for rescuing some of the best our culture and other cultures have produced is eighty hour work weeks, near poverty, and the ridicule and derision of a society that largely because of material excess has discarded its instinct and empathetic regard for life.---Carlo Parcelli

I agree with you fully about the plight of the small book seller, and in fact the hopeless plight of the small business entrepreneur, who finds he/she must become a bigger and bigger business simply to survive as a business, with less and less hope of making what can be deemed a livelihood. The economics, and the tendency towards higher and higher costs applied to cost of doing business in that mode, are very complicated. Beyond the scope and subject of this listserv.

Disagree most strongly about the latter part as to "instinct and empathic".

The latter "instinct" does not exist anywhere in nature. Nature is brutal. When human beings sink down too near to their natural origins they become brutal. They become the same as the beasts.

That is what separates human beings from beasts. The faculty of reason and the ability to learn what potentiallty distinguishes them from the absolute natural violence that they spring from. Empathy is a combination of emotion and reason. Without the ability to reason there is no empathy. (I do not mean the ability to simply find causal connections, reasons, in explication of events. I mean the whole complexity of cognitive processes that human beings are potentially capable of. That is "Reason" rather than only "reasons".

Human beings can descend down to behaving the same as insects do towards one another. If you have ever observed, closely, and objectively, enough, with enough detachement,...then you know. Compare the evolution of warfare, and its mechanisms, to the development/evolution of insect life and its natural instincts and machinations and you will quickly understand how, for instance, Nazi Germany (for example) descended down to the level of insect life, rather than ascending to the "ubermensch" (above-man).

I think it would do well to some to read more William Seward Burroughs. The insect and the human are a constant theme. I do not know if he ever alluded to the historical instance of Nazi Germany, but that isn't the point I am making.

M.

↑ Index

392. morpheal
Re: more closings (fwd)
Wed 15 Apr 1998

> I wholly understand your concern not to be misinterpreted. Anyway, I did quote you, & others can decide for themselves whether or not an accusation of paranoia seemed likely in your words. I apologize for my own response if you indeed didn't mean it.

Actually, to intrude a little dark wit into this apparently stray from the backchannels conversation....

...the phrase that used to plague would be writers, allegedly from Uncle Sam originations was.....

> "Anything you write can and will be used against you in a > court of anything at all."

There are variants, but that particular variant is the most obvious as to its intentions. Of course, it must certainly come from those who believe that anything that a writer writes is not a true and lordly writ, but is in some ways or others "twisted" use of the languish....I mean...language.

Ah well, we cannot ever be write, or is it rite, promptly having at that very moment to avoid any Freemasons, so we might as well ex-press what we have on our mineds....I mean...minds....

M.

↑ Index

393. Schuchat Simon
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

---

re this bookstore thread:

two principles of economics are involved, one is "Hoteling's paradox" which says that sellers always aim for the center of the market, geographically and otherwise, in order to reach the largest number of buyers.

second principle is from Maoist critique of capitalism: big fish eat the little fish and the little fish eat the shrimps.

however, when I returned to the U.S. after living overseas for seven years I was appalled at the poor selection of poetry & other literature at most of the bookstores in the DC area. (this is 1992 we are talking about) one decent independent store near where I lived was going out of business slowly and had no new stock. the main local chain in dc, which had at earlier times been pretty good, had next to nothing. the main local discount chain had less than nothing. there were two small independent bookstores with excellent poetry stock (Rod Smith knows which ones they were) but I didn't find them immediately, one has since gone out of business and I think in fact the stock from one moved to the other.

however I remember the first time I went to borders, again in 1992 (or early '93) and was amazed to find so much stuff, including poetry.

I don't doubt that the big superstores want to put the small stores out of business, but I don't understand the logic that the big stores will no longer stock the poetry, cultural studies, etc, that they now stock once the independents are out of business. they still have all that shelf space to fill and inch for inch there is not such a high cost in keeping it on the shelf, at least until it sells. (they may not reorder that title, its true, but will the title still be available to be reordered anyway?) admittedly, I have been outside of the U.S. again for three years and don't know what has happened in the interval, certainly the megastore chains have a bigger presence now than five years ago when they were first coming in.

I can understand privileging the petit bourgeois small proprietor in this discourse, over the bureaucratic large scale corporate entity, but that's all we're really talking about. neither of them are in business for their health, right?

↑ Index

394. Karen Kelley
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

I worked in independent bookstores for twelve years, four of those years at an independent Harvard Square bookstore: Reading International. I had carte blanche for ordering for the poetry section, and had a blast: my manager didn't even point out the obvious--that the Grolier was right up the street. Reading International was a union shop, as was Harvard Bookstore, so the employees had been there a long time--usually ten or more years--and made a decent living. Most of us were pre-computerized bookstore people, so we had to know our specific sections pretty well.

I don't think the indies are going down due to conspiracies: it's mostly a case of the computerized inventory system making bookstore owners feel comfortable hiring people who really know very little about books & publishing & paying them very poorly--they figure any idiot can read a computer screen that says: YES we have the book, or NO we don't. AS far as special ordering goes, it's a bit labor intensive, and you pay shipping on an individual book, often get less of a discount from the publisher, and basically no one wants to bother.

The bookstore business used to be a trade. Now it's just a crappy job that no one really wants to have. The profit margins are poor, so intense volume is the only way for an owner to get rich on it.

daniel bouchard wrote:

> If it was the proprietor of the Grolier, then "paranoid" is the right word.
>
> At 08:57 AM 4/15/98 -0500, Maria Damon wrote:
> perhaps this is a paranoid fantasy on the part of the person i heard it
> from; it was told to me by the proprietor of one of the independent > bookstores in harvard square. keep up the good fight.
>
> <<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
> Daniel Bouchard
> The MIT Press Journals
> Five Cambridge Center
> Cambridge, MA 02142
>
> [redacted]
> phone: [redacted]
> fax: [redacted]
> <<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

395. Rachel Levitsky
Re: more closings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

A friend opened a tiny progressive/gay/lesbian bookstore. Having witnessed it first as a dream, the barn-raising style of its beginnings, the effort put toward the first bank loan approved so the stock could be broadened, and the decline when Barnes & Noble came to the neighborhood, though the problem may also be the lesbian bar next door--those girls were more committed to spending money on social drinking than in going home with the latest Dorothy Allison or they want to apply their 20% Barnes and Noble discount to the next pint of beer. Anyway, it never struck me she expected to get rich from this but alas, some idealistic dream to live surrounded by books and in the hood. Carlo Parcelli's post is eloquent enough here. I am romantic about Adrienne Monier's project and I do see this as political, not at all unrelated to Daniel Bouchard's work with evicted tenants, because it is how things are spread around. At some point we must figure out a way to get together and refuse to pay higher and higher rent for smaller and smaller dumps. And we must refuse to give more and more of our money to fewer and fewer giants. I have just as much trouble as the next person. Everytime I buy underwear and look for the union label and can't find it and buy the underwear anyway because who has the time to search for a union label. I find it really insulting that they write 'assembled in Dominican Republic' like we wouldn't want our panties 'made' there or suggesting that parts are shipped from the U.S. so perhaps it's almost like being made in the U.S. So I was buying Oscar de la Renta bras for a while just cause they had the union label but they no longer exist, can't compete I bet with the cheaper labor.

The ABA via several bookstores in California is suing Barnes and Noble.
There is an article about it on their website:
http://www.bookweb.org/special/19980318/story.html

one little quote:
"According to figures from the NPD Group and the ABA research department, the independent booksellers' market share of adult titles fell 42 percent between 1991 and 1996, from 32 percent to 18.6 percent."

Call me spooked or woowoo but I wont even enter a Barnes and Noble, the energy just reeks like hell. And the coffee upstairs reeks of unsavory practices on the backs of South American coffee growers.

For a while I was ordering from Amazon but now I'm trying to go more directly to distributors like Small Press. I was thinking about ways we as readers could work with our small bookstores to get our need better met. Any ideas? One thing that worked really well for the Left Hand Book Collective this year was soliciting left profs at CU to have us sell their books.

Pat Pritchett--I think the Left Hand is better than Boulder Bookstore about individual orders--is my own experience.

=rdl

↑ Index

396. Keston Sutherland
Re: Barnes & Noble & Social Darwinian
Wed 15 Apr 1998

> Nazi Germany (for example) descended down to the level of insect life

ACH

further holocaust ethnography

I know that neither bee nor bonnet avails, but it DOES seem quite important, to me at least, that we of all vapid interlopers speak with some precision and care about something so incredibly significant, stop -scapegoating-, maybe I'll implode

↑ Index

397. Marcella Durand
Zinc bar readings
Wed 15 Apr 1998

All right, all right, here I am with some Zinc Bar readings ...

Although belatedly, as I've been away from the computer for a few days.

Anyway, for the next couple of weeks (don't have full list in front of me, sorry)

April 19th: Simon Pettet and Dawn someone (sorry again)

April 26th: Kristen Prevallet and Ted Greenwald.

I'll post May as soon as I filch the list from work.

Also, I remember someone asking about HERE, well HERE are the readings:

April 18th: Julie Patton, Chris Mann

and after that reading, same day...
Poetry Reading in Praise of Forces of Nature, Space Untitled, 137 Greene Street, 6-8 pm, featuring: me, Ted Greenwald, Carter Ratcliff, Vincent Katz, Star Black and Ilka Scobie.

April 25th: Elizabeth Walder and (change in schedule) Camille Roy

May 2nd: Bruce Andrews, Dan Farrell

May 9th: Heather Fuller, Heather Ramsdell (who just gave a great reading at the Poetry Project tonight)

May 16th: Deirdre Kovac, Rod Smith

May 23rd: Jean Day, Andrew Levy and then zip until fall.

And finally, regarding used bookstores, my personal favorite is the Mercer Street Bookshop on Mercer between Houston and Bleecker. Otherwise, pickings are slim in Megastore-dominated NYC.

↑ Index

398. morpheal
Re: Barnes & Noble & Social Darwinian
Thu 16 Apr 1998

> Nazi Germany (for example) descended down to the level of insect life
>
> ACH
>
> further holocaust ethnography
>
> I know that neither bee nor bonnet avails, but it DOES seem quite important, to me at least, that we of all vapid interlopers speak with some precision and care about something so incredibly significant, stop -scapegoating-, maybe I'll implode

Best recent example we have available. Cannot think of a better one.

However, I think the allusion to Burroughs and his use of insect metaphors was more interesting. The part insect, part human. The thing transformed to insect. What is the causality that transforms in that manner, and manifests in that manner, becomes so very intriguing.

M.

↑ Index

399. Billy Little
where is David
Thu 16 Apr 1998

----- The following addresses had permanent fatal errors ----- <[redacted]>

anyway Dave

thank you for olding your breat

you silver tongue devil you

↑ Index

400. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Scavenger hunt suggestions
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Thanks everyone for all your suggestions.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

401. Hugh Steinberg
Re: stanza/paragraph (new non)
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Laura writes:

>In working on the latest non additions I've been lead to wonder about >writers' use of the paragraph and/or stanza. Debrot's new stuff in non seems >like desiccated paragraphs to me - not surprisingly as it is in relation to >Tender Buttons - but he calls it 'songs.' Shaw's work seems more stanzaic, >Scalapino's is mostly prose and Davis is of course all over the map.
>
>In general, the stanza seems more song-like, the paragraph to relate more >back to prose. I find I am currently using both in different combinations.
>
>Wondered how others relate to using these sub-forms -
>
As a very basic rule of thumb, if the poem is lineated (linebreaks matter, are deliberate, etc.), then groups of lines are stanzas. If the poem is unlineated, then the blocks are paragraphs. There are probably exceptions, of course.

Hugh Steinberg

PS: new non looks great!

↑ Index

402. Mark Melnicove
Publication reading
Thu 16 Apr 1998

P U B L I C A T I O N P A R T Y on Saturday, April 18
at 3 p.m.

there will be a Reading by John Tagliabue from his
NEW AND SELECTED POEMS: 1942-1997
(National Poetry Foundation, 388 pp., 19.95 pbk, $49.95 cl)

at Gulf of Maine Books (founded 1979--one of Maine's oldest independent stores--run by poet/publisher Gary Lawless and his partner Beth Leonard) 134 Maine Street
Brunswick, Maine
[redacted]

Mark Melnicove
National Poetry Foundation
http://www.ume.maine.edu/~npf

↑ Index

403. Maz881
sf reading
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Dear Poetics List,

Here is a reminder to come to hear Juliana Spahr & Bill Luoma read poetry at New Langton Arts in San Francisco. It's this Saturday April 18 at 8pm. New Langton Arts is located at 1246 Fulsom St between 8th & 9th.

Also note that you will be able to pick of copies of Juliana's Response from Sun & Moon which if you haven't read you should & it won the National Poetry Award. Plus advanced copies of my new collection Works & Days will be available at the reading.

Works & Days . . .

* is co-published by Hard Press and The Figures.
* is 148 pages.
* is 6 x 9.
* sports a color image by James Siena.
* is blurbed by Eileen Myles, Benjamin Friedlander and Alice Notley.

* is not ironic.
* contains misspellings, typos, incorrect usages of capitalization plus many instances of awkward phrasing because Douglass has trouble with these & Helena died.
* also contains My Trip to New York City, 12 Peanuts & an Easton, Astrophysics & You, we were in burrito, Asheville, The Replacements, The Annotated Trip to NYC, plus a number of reading reports that first appeared here on the Poetics Channel.
* will be available from Rod & Small Press Distribution in a few weeks.
* does not contain any french-influenced or otherwise bland abstract lyrics.
* describes the world in local place type & travel narratives that are allegorical maps for thinking & writing.
* doesn't really tell you how to plant crops like in Hesiod's verison.
* is really a love poem.
* is really poetics.

Hope to see you in SF.

↑ Index

404. Maryrose11
Re: where is David
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Billy:

David was in Kansas (where he did a wonderful reading) until yesterday....He is in Boulder (where he will do a wonderful reading at the left hand) today.

↑ Index

405. Henry Gould
Re: more closings
Thu 16 Apr 1998

> I can understand privileging the petit bourgeois small proprietor in this discourse, over the bureaucratic large scale corporate entity, but that's all we're really talking about. neither of them are in business for their health, right?

I think Rachel Levitsky's last post addressed this pretty well. Some supposedly leftist "discourse" is just as abstracted and distanced from local realities on an intellectual level as big corporations are on a political-economic level. (Follow that?) All politics is local and utopia will be local as well, when we learn how to get along without letting greed and profit sharks rule the roost. Where is the happy mean between vegetable socialism and ruthless greed - a healthy respect for money and enterprise and careful business practices along with an independence from totalizing effects of mega-capitalism? It's gotta be out there somewhere in the 8th dimension... is it possible that poetry & literature carry the germs of that consciousness within the shark-body of the chains? Not necessarily (most of it is pure sell- yourself). But there is something to be said for INDEPENDENCE, DIVERSITY, COMMUNITY-BASED ENTERPRISE that that reducto-marxism quoted above tends to miss. In the ghetto grows the rose. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

406. morpheal

Re: more closings

Thu 16 Apr 1998

> I think Rachel Levitsky's last post addressed this pretty well. Some supposedly leftist "discourse" is just as abstracted and distanced from local realities on an intellectual level as big corporations are on a political-economic level. (Follow that?) All politics is local and utopia will be local as well, when we learn how to get along without letting greed and profit sharks rule the roost. Where is the happy mean between vegetable socialism and ruthless greed - a healthy respect for money and enterprise and careful business practices along with an independence from totalizing effects of mega-capitalism? It's gotta be out there somewhere in the 8th dimension... is it possible that poetry & literature carry the germs of that consciousness within the shark-body of the chains?

Essentially, yes, that makes perfect sense. The only real difficulties tend to be education of those you desire to be careful, and regulation such that they are not hog-tied and unable to function in the real world beyond dealing with various departments, agencies, beaurocracies, administrations, at so many levels, in so many areas, in such complicated legislation and formalities, that it takes a skyscraper full of legal eagles, not the average legal beagle (such as the average entrepreneur MIGHT be able to call on (on rare occassion of desparate and dire need) to unravel, deal with, and otherwise survive it. Not to mention the army of accountants.

This is another reason why multi-branch chains tend to win in terms of their being a truly solid investment option as opposed to independent small busienss. It is impossible for the average person, even the exceptional person, to wade through the quagmire. It is impossible to do anything else than wade through the quagmire, and then it is not really a "living", is it ?

> Not necessarily (most of it is pure sell-yourself).

No, it is not. No one in fact can self sell, though some _believe_ differently.

This is, in most ways, the world of the "middle man".

To do otherwise than to use the middle man, the agent, the promoter, the distributor, the representative, the professional salesman, is to fail to recognize the necessity, in this culture, of a messiah. The whole tradition, even in its purely secular side, is build wholly of and from that concept.

It is a mediated culture. The immediate relation is most often rendered impossible, ineffective, disempowered, to preserve the role of the middle-man. Of course not everyone can be a middle-man, because if everyone could then everyone would be. Effective representation is the carefully guarded preserve of the few, and not of the many. That is how they keep themselves in business, and are kept in business by those who support the system in terms of status-quo. In turn the middle-man works for those who support the concept and empower it, as well as for whom the middle-man represents as producer of product. That relation maintains the middle-man's borrowed power.

In essence the messianic "license" to effectively sell, represent, promote, is granted by a power-elite.

Surely you know that the Marxists recognized this as being a fact ?

That does not necessarily make it an "evil". I am not value judging the concept, but only stating that that is how it is. Some people have the illusion that they are their own benefactors, their own best promoters, their own sales people, but in every instance I know of, they are deluded and nothing of the sort. They are always promoted, represented, made effective, by someone else. That they do not recognize who their messiah is does not obviate the fact that there is one. They do not have to recognize that fact, but only to live it.

> But there is something to be said for INDEPENDENCE,
> DIVERSITY, COMMUNITY-BASED ENTERPRISE that that reducto-marxism > quoted above tends to miss. In the ghetto grows the rose. - Henry Gould

Very funny.....

M.

↑ Index

407. Hank Lazer
Re: tusc reading
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Poetry Reading
Charles Bernstein
April 16

7:30 p.m.
Morgan Auditorium
University of Alabama

A talk by Charles Bernstein
April 17
noon
301 Morgan
University of Alabama

↑ Index

408. Judy Roitman
Re: where is David
Thu 16 Apr 1998

> Billy:
>
> David was in Kansas (where he did a wonderful reading) until yesterday....He is in Boulder (where he will do a wonderful reading at the left hand) today.

And while he is travelling his e-mail is off.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
---
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

409. k e n n i n g
how to find?
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Has anyone got a current e-mail address for Taylor Brady? The one I'd been using is suddenly bouncing back, this is the same as listed on his website, etc. Thanks -- Patrick F. Durgin

|
|
k e n n i n g``````|``
a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
|418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

↑ Index

410. Charles Alexander

more on tucson

Thu 16 Apr 1998

Just a couple of more notes to round out recent and tonight's Tucson activities. Yesterday afternoon Robert Kaufmann gave a talk at the U of Arizona on Adorno and Michael Palmer -- I couldn't be there but would appreciate a report from anyone who was there.

Last night, Susan Aiken and co-editors of the new book, MAKING WORLD: Gender, Metaphor, and Materiality, gave a presentation at Antigone Books, talking about, taking questions and reading from that book which comes out of a conference here on the topic, really about space and metaphors about space and how they work, effect us, and otherwise operate. An attempt to approach the topics cross-discipline, with contributions from art, poetry, queer theory, Nortena gardening, and more. The book was published by Univ. of Arizona Press.

And tonight, there's an event sponsored by Kore Press, and I am forwarding their notice of this event, which appears below:

April 18

A BOOK OPENING for Sylvia Um's THE ROOTED HEART, published by Kore Press 6-8pm at 402 N Main St, the Franklin House.

::::::::::::::::::

I live in the desert where everything touches the ground
I am either fluid or menacing silhouettes strange buds branches gold-leafed anthropomorphic forms quiet fracas
I see movement
find the door dear heart take a breath greater than yours

(from "A schematic drawing of eternal love")

::::::::::::::::::

Sylvia was a student (of Barbara Cully and Susan Aiken among others--and Tenney too, I believe she and I were in your American Lit class years ago) during her undergraduate career in creative and critical writing at the U of A. She was in her second year of the MFA/poetry program at U of Maryland when she died of heart failure as a result of treatments for Non-Hodgkins Lymphoma in November of '96. Her poems will be read by Boyer Rickel and Barbara Cully. Since Sylvia was an accomplished violinist (playing with AZ Opera Co and UA Symphony Orchestra) there will be a string quartet (comprised of musicians from Tucson Symphony and Tucson Chamber Orchestra) playing from 7-8pm. Music and food and books will follow readings. There will be several members of Sylvia's family there, a few who will be flying in from out of state.

Please spread the word and join us if you can.

cheers,
Lisa Bowden
Kore Press

all for now,

charles

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

411. Joseph Noble
Zinc Bar Readings
Thu 16 Apr 1998

For anyone interested, Anselm Berrigan sent me the schedule of readings for the Zinc Bar for April and May. He's not on the list, so I thought I'd post them. Here they are:

April 19 - Dawn Baude & Simon Pettet

April 26 - Ted Greenwald & Kristen Prevallet

May 3 - Elaine Equi & Joseph Lease

May 10 - Mark Salerno & Magdalena Zurawski

May 17 - Keston Sutherland & Marco Villalobos

May 24 - Sherry Brennan & Maureen Owen

May 31 - Tim Davis & Brian Kim Stefans

Enjoy!

Joseph Noble

↑ Index

412. Steve Carll
other readings you won't want to miss
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Friday night, April 17th:

Anselm Berrigan
Edmund Berrigan

at Adobe Books (16th St. @ Guerrero)
7:30 PM (don't know if there's an admission fee for this)

********** &&&

Saturday, April 18th:

Juliana Spahr
Bill Luoma

at New Langton Arts, 1246 Folsom St. between 8th and 9th Sts. 8:00 PM $5-$7

********** &&&&

Sunday, April 19th:

Guy Bennett Standard Schaefer

at Canessa Park Gallery, 708 Montgomery @ Columbus
3:00 PM $5

****
[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

413. Scott Pound
Re: how to find?
Thu 16 Apr 1998

[redacted]

is current, least I got mail from Taylor from that address today

Scott Pound

> Has anyone got a current e-mail address for Taylor Brady? The one I'd been using is suddenly bouncing back, this is the same as listed on his website, etc. Thanks -- Patrick F. Durgin
>
> |
> |
> k e n n i n g```|```
> a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
> |418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

↑ Index

414. Christina Fairbank Chirot

Re: Scavenger hunt suggestions& comix poetix

Thu 16 Apr 1998

There are many simple ways to do collage-- for example--just pick up anything close to hand, give a time limit and quickly cut it up and rearrange tear/scissors & glue for this you could study for example books like The Third Mind by William S Burroughs--as well his various interviews in say The Job-or works by Brion Gysin--who influenced Burroughsalso--another way to think of it is as editing, following examples from comic books and movies--just make or take a series of words and images, cut up and arrange in sequences, series--make little books or zines as "journals"

collect materials from hither and yon and keep by bedside--good time to work is first thing in morning, when dreams collide with waking and before dross of the day has settled in on "conscious" mind-- materials can be anything--scraps from street, old magazines, comic books books (dictionaries and encylopedias work great)-- can use paint and ink on top of junk found in street as stencils and stamp into the pages with the images and or words-- work fast, practise daily and each maker will find that over time their own themes obsessions images begin to move, repeat, play and form rhythms and patterns-- many books in libraries students wd like--on collage, Dada etc--Burroughs is cool with lot of kids-- also check out the book on comics/art that Scott MeCloud did--great book!

lot of written poetry work is collage--in "modern poetry"--check out Pound, Paul Metcalf, Olson--

(even old USA trilogy by John Dos Passos) for movies a good one to check out for some great ideas is (you can get on video) for eample Dziga Vertov's MAN WITH A MOVIE CAMERA all best --& a great time!
dave baptiste chirot

↑ Index

415. Steve Carll
other readings you won't want to miss addendum
Thu 16 Apr 1998

The three readings mentioned previously are all taking place in San Francisco, in case my omission of that fact led to any confusion.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

416. David Zauhar
Women poets from Ireland
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Thanks to everyone who made suggestions. I had no idea how little I knew about the great stuff that was out there. I'd like to single people out, but I can't find the list on which I kept names. Still, my wife now has plenty of material to chose from. Thank you all again.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

to belong to whatever moves us outward into
the wideness, for journeying...

--Hilda Morley, 1919-1998

↑ Index

417. Annie Finch
For Mark Melnicove
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Mark Melnicove,

Will you please backchannel me? I've misplaced your e-ddress--- Thanks!

Annie

_____
_____
_____
Annie Finch
 http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

418. Ryan Whyte
letter
Thu 16 Apr 1998

...

Ah exhaustion, seize of the engine. I think: someday the letters stop. Then it is the concrete interval between letters, velvet of time, the page has been, now the fog rolling in off the lake. I think: one day I live again, as, if, not on nails. But this is not to betray you.

I am this way not out of compulsion but of inner necessity --

It is a temperment.

Then some will claim that my temperment tends toward caprice. But is it not a moral relationship, that to one's own temperment? And yet I can not say to you: I am 'naive', naive, as you would write. Naive never lets you write naive: why you face up to your own lack in the face of genius. (Indeed, here I am like you.)

I am 'naive' (then love me) --

For is it not the apostrophe which chases away the last shreds of naivete: fatality of that canny decorative typography....

Schiller, this explication of those tempers of art, your dissection of my economies, my psychological trade-routes: it is so much unbroken rail, the shuddering planes, thousand miles of night.

I can not even say it.

In the dark you can see the lines of my back. I think of such things, in the dark. It is something that nature would allow: it would spring out of the lake-air. In such a climate the knife-edge of shame crumbles. There are other things the centuries maintain; those are the things which interest me. The dyes which persist. For example, blue. And red.

The dyes are not ghosts, they are not writing which furrows the surface, they are not painting. You understand: I dream of writing which dyes, sinks into the cloth, marking beyond question and irrevocably. Then I could not write words.

You might understand this.

↑ Index

419. Steve Shoemaker
Re: more closings
Thu 16 Apr 1998

Just dropping in on this, but, sure, it's not that the owners of small stores have to be nicer, it's just that sometimes they are. Because they got into the biz in the first place for the love of books, and maybe even more generally for a love of "art." Lots of stuff bound up together here. I know thinking back to that old now-closing fave of mine in C-ville, Williams Corner, that in addition to having a great poetry section Mike Williams also employed a fair number of poor young potes and grad students over the years, and sold books by local writers, and sponsored readings etc etc. That can all add up to a contribution to the community in a way that B&N or Borders just will not....or will only perhaps simulate for as long as it is profitable or useful to them...certainly not out of love.

s

At 11:06 AM 4/15/98 -0500, you wrote:

> I understand that one of the issues here regards the owners of these small stores. But (as someone has already pointed out, I believe) why are these owners any "nicer" than other owners?
>
> Best,
> Katy

↑ Index

420. morpheal
Re: more closings
Fri 17 Apr 1998

> *Just dropping in on this, but, sure, it's not that the owners of small stores have to be nicer, it's just that sometimes they are. Because they got into the biz in the first place for the love of books, and maybe even more generally for a love of "art." Lots of stuff bound up together here. I know thinking back to that old now-closing fave of mine in C-ville, Williams Corner, that in addition to having a great poetry section Mike Williams also employed a fair number of poor young potes and grad students over the years, and sold books by local writers, and sponsored readings etc etc. That can all add up to a contribution to the community in a way that B&N or Borders just will not....or will only perhaps simulate for as long as it is profitable or useful to them...certainly not out of love.*

At least small book shop proprietors are _REAL_ people.

Not the zombified staff of a large chain who live in paranoia of those dreaded "mystery shoppers" hired by the store management.

I hate dealing with large chain stores. The simulated people androids that staff them are the main reason.

M.

↑ Index

421. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Bromige Does Boulder
Fri 17 Apr 1998

My dear Rachel - I stand properly chastised!

In other news: David Bromige, Cole Swensen and Anselm Hollo read last night to a crowd of 60+ poetry lovers at Left Hand Books, not Barnes & Noble. It was SRO and a bravura reading by all. Even the fire marshall who descended on us for code violations was stilled in his zeal by the Orphean strains of "T as in Tether." I hope to assemble a more coherent report later but right now I'm hungover and short of sleep. Bromige seemed to spend most of his time flirting with my wife. But I'm not entirely sure since I was so preoccupied flirting with his.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

422. ScoutEW
Re: letter
Fri 17 Apr 1998

maybe not

↑ Index

423. Christopher W. Alexander
Winston Break
Fri 17 Apr 1998

Winston Churchill was born in a ladies' room during a dance.

↑ Index

424. Robert Archambeau
Has anyone heard of this magazine...
Fri 17 Apr 1998

I'm looking for some information about a poetry magazine called "Samizdat," published in California in, I think, the late 70s and early 80s. If anyone could backchannel me information about the publisher, the dates of publication, etc., I'd appreciate it.

Best,

Bob
--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

" on the end
of each decision stands a heretic"
--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

425. henry gould
Winston Break
Fri 17 Apr 1998

It's clear he inherited his mother's sense of good timing.

----------Original message---------- Winston Churchill was born in a ladies' room during a dance.

↑ Index

426. Rachel Levitsky
Re: more closings
Fri 17 Apr 1998

---

morpheal wrote:

>Not necessarily (most of it is pure sell-yourself).No, it is not. No one in fact can self sell, though some _believe_ differently.

This is, in most ways, the world of the "middle man". To do otherwise than to use the middle man, the agent, the promoter, the distributor, the representative, the professional salesman, is to fail to recognize the necessity, in this culture, of a messiah. The whole tradition,even in its purely secular side, is build wholly of and from that concept.

It is a mediated culture. The immediate relation is most often rendered impossible, ineffective, disempowered, to preserve the role of the middle-man. Of course not everyone can be a middle-man, because if everyone could then everyone would be. Effective representation is the carefully guarded preserve of the few, and not of the many. That is how they keep themselves in business, and are kept in business by those who support the system in terms of status-quo. In turn the middle-man works for those who support the concept and empower it, as well as for whom the middle-man represents as producer of product. That relation maintains the middle-man's borrowed power.

In essence the messianic "license" to effectively sell, represent, promote,
is granted by a power-elite.

Surely you know that the Marxists recognized this as being a fact ?

That does not necessarily make it an "evil". I am not value judging the concept, but only stating that that is how it is. Some people have the illusion that they are their own benefactors, their own best promoters, their own sales people, but in every instance I know of, they are deluded and nothing of the sort. They are always promoted, represented, made effective, by someone else. That they do not recognize who their messiah is does not obviate the fact that there is one. They do not have to recognize that fact, but only to live it.

-- Thanks Morph! This is perfectly stated, and a good thing for us to remember as we apply for our grants, send to mags etc etc

RDL

↑ Index

427. Rod4rigo
Query: Andrew Levy's Address
Fri 17 Apr 1998

If anyone has Andy's address, could you please backchannel me. Much appreciated....

RT

↑ Index

428. Judy Roitman
Re: other readings you won't want to miss addendum
Fri 17 Apr 1998

> The three readings mentioned previously are all taking place in San Francisco, in case my omission of that fact led to any confusion.
>
> **********
> [redacted] Steve Carll
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym
>
> In seed-
> sense
> the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.
>
> --Paul Celan
> **********

It would be nice if translators were mentioned in citations.

Cheers,

The Translator's Wife

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----

http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

429. megan minka lola camille roy nyc: a reading
Fri 17 Apr 1998

A reading:
Melissa Ragona & Camille Roy---reading from her new book SWARM amongst other stuff

HERE
Center for Independent Arts 145 6th Avenue
(cross Spring & Broom)
Saturday April 25th
3 pm

↑ Index

430. MAYHEW
bookstore sagas
Fri 17 Apr 1998

From a local newspaper (St. Louis)

"Left Bank Books sues Borders, Barnes and Noble

Among the alleged illegal practices are price discounts, special breaks on small orders, free shippping, promotional allowances and favorable retrun policies. The suit states these are not available to independent stores."

Inotherwords: the chains demand special deals for themselves from publishers. an independent store has no leveragre to get such deals, creating an uneven "playing field."

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

431. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Bromige reading
Fri 17 Apr 1998

I really have nothing further to add about David Bromige's reading here in Boulder last night except to say that every community should put on a rummage sale and bring him out to read. You'll have a great time and you'll be a better person for it.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

432. morpheal
Re: bookstore sagas
Fri 17 Apr 1998

> From a local newspaper (St. Louis)
>
> "Left Bank Books sues Borders, Barnes and Noble
>
> Among the alleged illegal practices are price discounts, special breaks on small orders, free shippping, promotional allowances and favorable retrun policies. The suit states these are not available to independent stores."

Tto me that does seem ludicrous. (Though I strongly empathize with those making suit against the giants, in an attempt to survive as small independents.)

The fact is that the buying power of a larger customer has always favoured such customers in every kind of business. The more you buy the bigger the discount and the more favourable the terms of sale are from the supplier.

The biggest customers have _always_ been given the biggest discounts.

The biggest customers in every kind of business have also enjoyed special terms not available to lesser entities.

Some small customers, in some areas of business (such as manufacturing) have to pay list price for one off or for buying a few items, to their supplier, when larger competitors get substantial discounts from the same supplier. This, believe it or not, is common practice. (I speak from direct fact and not from the fiction section. It is perfectly acceptable business practice.)

Their larger competitor, who buys either a dozen or a hundred or spends a certain dollar amount per year with the supplier, gets a discount, of anywhere from as little as 5 to as much as 60 percent or more. There are no limits to that discounting. It could be any amount that the supplier chooses. That is the essence of "free enterprise". Each business sets its own prices and decides what its discounting is to be. Some of that discounting in relation to list price is unbelievable in terms of how wide the spread of values is.

The only pertinent factor beyond that fact is that a supplier could get into trouble if they are not equitable. For instance if Joe's Garage buys 100,000 in oil and gas and Fritz's Auto buys 100,000 in the same product mix, for the exactly same kinds of oil and gas, then Luigi's Garage Supply Inc. will likely have to give Joe and Fritz the same 20% off for being a customer of 100,000 or up. Note same product mix. Particularly if that offer of discount is part of a price list. If one buys more oil and less gas this factor might not apply. Product mix and volume of sales in dollars both usually matter as profit margins vary as to mix.

Also, it is not uncommon for a supplier to make a special offer to a customer who buys more than the others, and is beyond the levels specified in a list. It is justified on reduced margin, but maintenance of total profits, due to the volume of business provided by that specific customer. It adds another pricing tier to the list, albeit an unwritten on. This sometimes attracts another large customer to the same supplier. Word gets around.

Some suppliers discount different products differently, but also expect a certain total dollar volume based on last year's purchases, or sometimes allow the discount when a certain total is achieved by a new customer. A few even credit it. The practices are very, very, variable. Again, "free enterprise".

Likely, IMHO, for a small independent to go up against the giants of standardized fair play towards competition and suppliers, ie. ethical equitable practices, is a suicide leap.....

That skyscraper full of legal eagles again will eat the independent alive.

The independent cannot expect to find a David to slingshot that Goliath.

M.

↑ Index

433. Steven Marks
Re: Has anyone heard of this magazine...
Fri 17 Apr 1998

Samizdat: I think it was published by Merritt Clifton who now publishes (last I knew) a magazine called "Animal People." Address is PO Box 960, Clinton, WA 98236. More info re that mag in 32nd ed. of Int'l Directory of Little Magazines.. Hope this helps.

On Fri, 17 Apr 1998, Robert Archambeau wrote:

> I'm looking for some information about a poetry magazine called "Samizdat," published in California in, I think, the late 70s and early > 80s. If anyone could backchannel me information about the publisher, the dates of publication, etc., I'd appreciate it.

>
> Best,
>
> Bob
> --
> Robert Archambeau
> Department of English
> Lake Forest College
> Lake Forest, IL 60045
> http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/
>
> " on the end
> of each decision stands a heretic"
> --Michael Barrett

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

434. Joseph Noble
Zinc Bar Addendum
Fri 17 Apr 1998

All, I neglected to add the time and place for Zinc Bar readings. The Zinc Bar is at 90 W. Houston St., NYC. Readings begin at 6:30, & they ask for a $3 donation for the readers.

↑ Index

435. John Tranter
Cambridge UK Poetry Conference
Fri 17 Apr 1998

The list may like to know about the following:

THE CAMBRIDGE CONFERENCE OF CONTEMPORARY POETRY

FRIDAY 25TH -SUNDAY 27TH APRIL

AT KINGS COLLEGE CAMBRIDGE (KEYNES HALL)

TIMETABLE

FRI 8pm. Bob Perelman. + Reception.

SAT 11am Michelle Grangaud, Roger Langley, Helen Macdonald

2pm Frank O'Hara and Allen Ginsberg: films by Colin Still

4pm John Forbes memorial reading

8pm Roy Fisher, Peter Gizzi, Gig Ryan

SUN 2pm Olivier Cadiot, Lisa Jarnot

4pm Peter Blegvad.

7pm Lee Ann Brown, Philippe Beck, Keston Sutherland

Exhibition of art and craft works by and associated with Tom Raworth will run concurrently with the Conference, in the Chetwynd Room, Kings College (open only during conference events)

Week-end ticket: £22 concession £12
Per reading: £4 / £2.50

Bookings, enquiries:
Ian Patterson
King's College, Cambridge CB2 1ST
tel 01223-331196
email [redacted]

Inquiries:
Peter Riley
27, Sturton Street, Cambridge CB1 2QG
tel/fax: 01223 576422
email: [redacted]

from
John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/tranter/3poems-interview.html
Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

↑ Index

436. Karen Kelley
Geocities
Fri 17 Apr 1998

Anyone had any dealings with Geocities? I'm thinking about taking them up on their free site to put up some literary material. Is this another case of "no free lunch"? As I understand it, they let space on their server if you'll place a banner somewhere on your page.

Any insights will be appreciated.

↑ Index

437. Ctfarmr
Dain Olsen
Sat 18 Apr 1998

I recently came across a slightly water-warped & somewhat mildewed copy of _Desert Expansion Texts, Book 2_ by Dain Olsen (Penumbra Press 1985), and it followed me home. The text is not what I'd call innovative, but still surrealistic enough to be interesting. And the drawings are wonderfully bizarre. Can anyone tell me more about Dain Olsen and/or Penumbra Press?

Bobbie West

↑ Index

438. Rachel Levitsky
Re: oy vey morpheal!
Sat 18 Apr 1998

Really, how pessimistic and upholding of the status quo (its always been done this way, it always will be done this way) you sounded in your last post.

Some other ways of looking at the law suits:

1)you never know until you try 2)by any means necessary 3)perhaps there is evidence that stated policies of distribution discounts are in fact violated, I dunno but all these independent bookish sorts are probably not stupid and suicidal 4)publicity will favor the little guy in this case 5)you gave us that brilliant schpiel on the middle man, well, why not challenge how this is being mediated, at least rhetorically? This "culture"'s epic is being penned in the courts. 6)Legal means should not be the only means of challenging those big smelly giants but the probable means for a network of indies. Its up to us patrons to go in and slip "don't buy from Barnes & Noble" sheets into their books. 7)Not that this is my cause, but I never thought, nor did most, that the legal challenges to cigarette giants would ever get so far as they've gotten. I think the logic of most of these lawsuits is flawed, but I like very much that the free range power of the corporation is being fucked with. Marketing strategies become more transparent--thus consumers have more choice as to whether their going to buy into it. (Though one need only open a _Rolling Stone_ magazine to see jazz greats modeling for designers, to feel like everyone's getting in on the corporate thang) 8)I'm also thinking of the Christic (sp?) Institute's legal challenge to the CIA, I hope I'm not getting this wrong, which was the means by which many people learned of it's involvement in the drug trade. They never won that case but the newspaper coverage of something that would have otherwise been ignored was absolutely worth their work.

↑ Index

439. Billy Little
Re: oy vey morpheal!
Sat 18 Apr 1998

---

right on rachel, nothing ventured, nothing gained to a twenty year old it may seem that the corporation has had the stranglehold forever, perestroika may have come first to the Kremlin but the laws of physics are older than capitalism or communism, the equal and opposite reaction will be felt on the potomac, ain't gonna let no policeman turn me round, turn me round, aint gonna let no policeman turn me round, gonna keep on walking, keep on talking, walking down to freedomland

↑ Index

440. George Bowering
Re: Bromige Does Boulder
Sat 18 Apr 1998

> Bromige seemed to spend most of his > time flirting with my wife. But I'm not entirely sure since I was so > preoccupied flirting with his.
>
> Patrick Pritchett

Yeah? Well, years and years ago Bromige flirted with my wife, then girlfriend,, with a poem. The bastard!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

441. morpheal
Re: oy vey morpheal!
Sat 18 Apr 1998

> 1)you never know until you try

Sound Reasoning will often tell you, long before you leap into the abyss. Such things are often launched not in the spirit of Reasoning, but from a basis of emotion. The latter is how many a small business has perished to doing no good other than increasing its overhead to where it cannot carry it anymore, in addition to its other sometimes overwhelming challenges.

> 2)by any means necessary

Decidedly uncivilized. The emphasis on _any_.

Tooth and claw, kill or be killed, etc., is not civilized.

> 3)perhaps there is evidence that stated policies of distribution discounts are in fact violated, I dunno but all these independent bookish sorts are probably not stupid and suicidal

Perhaps, but unlikely. Even then, it would be on very weak grounds, as a supplier has the right to amend any list of prices and discounts, such that a customer gets a special discount and terms, upon some argument or other. For instance, projected business volume rather than historic actual. A rationale is a rationale, for exceptions.....and is quite a common business practice.

Besides, those giants are the biggest customers. No argument possible. Therefore, within the capitalist system, the largest get the best terms and the best prices. There is no socialism from suppliers to smaller businesses, and no commissary from where they can request their needs according to their abilities to pay. System simply does not work that way.

The small dealers commisar has not been apppointed yet. The commissary has not been built yet....

> 4)publicity will favor the little guy in this case

Not necessarily. Spin is owned by the large, not the small. Spin doctors do not work solely for politicians. They work for corporations.

> 5)you gave us that brilliant schpiel on the middle man, well, why not challenge how this is being mediated, at least rhetorically? This "culture"'s epic is being penned in the courts.

The small cannot afford to be there, in most instances. I do agree that some system of mediation, rather than litigation, for commercial disagreements is necessary. I do believe that some states have a "commercial code" allowing such things as mediation. Pennsylvania, is one of those, but I do not know if mediation would apply in the instance we are discussing.

The costs of mediation are not the same as litigation. The lesser entity then has a chance.....of survival, even if the loser on the particular question. The loser has no chance in litigation because a counter suit is inevitable and that would involve damages (bad publicity, loss of business) and the huge costs incurred by the larger entity. The can sue for everything they spent, and can spend essentially as much as they choose.

> 6)Legal means should not be the only means of challenging those big smelly giants but the probable means for a network of indies. Its up to us patrons to go in and slip "don't buy from Barnes & Noble" sheets into their books.

They are not necessarily "big smelly giants", but they are losing some consumers because they are not always passing on a true cost saving to the customer. They are simply putting more profits into their own pockets. That does cause intelligent consumers to go elsewhere. Then they are likely to drop their prices somewhat to regain those consumers..... Another fact of business.

> 7)Not that this is my cause, but I never thought, nor did most, that the legal challenges to cigarette giants would ever get so far as they've gotten. I think the logic of most of these lawsuits is flawed, but I like very much that the free range power of the corporation is being fucked with. Marketing strategies become more transparent--thus consumers have more choice as to whether their going to buy into it. (Though one need only open a _Rolling Stone_ magazine to see jazz greats modeling for designers, to feel like everyone's getting in on the corporate thang)

At the risk of sounding too flippant...poetry books will have to have warning labels on them saying "The Psychiatrist General has determined that Reading this material may be hazardous to your psyche"..... Sure....some would go for that.

Well, when the poetry giants are flooding the market with dangerous poetry publications, perhaps a lobby group, a class action suit, etc., will have some effect on stopping that growing flood of subversive evil verse.... before it destroys the whole country and damages the well being of millions.....

> 8)I'm also thinking of the Christic (sp?) Institute's legal challenge to the CIA, I hope I'm not getting this wrong, which was the means by which many people learned of it's involvement in the drug trade. They never won that case but the newspaper coverage of something that would have otherwise been ignored was absolutely worth their work.

That is funny. The truth will set them free.... <laughing>

Don Quixote and his windmills made more sense than that story.

M.

↑ Index

442. morpheal
Re: oy vey morpheal!
Sat 18 Apr 1998

> right on rachel, nothing ventured, nothing gained > to a twenty year old it may seem that the corporation has had the stranglehold forever, perestroika may have come first to the Kremlin but the laws of physics are older than capitalism or communism, the equal and opposite reaction will be felt on the potomac, ain't gonna let no policeman turn me round, turn me round, aint gonna let no policeman turn me round, gonna keep on walking, keep on talking, walking down to freedomland

Buy your own printing press, set type, and print them in your basement, distributing them yourself on street corners....if you can afford to do it.

There magic has happened, little black marks on the page, saying.... you are free, I am free, we are free together....googoogachoo....

We have proven that to be an indisputable fact.

M.

↑ Index

443. JBCM2
Re: oy vey morpheal!
Sat 18 Apr 1998

In a message dated 98-04-18 00:19:45 EDT, you write:

<<
8)I'm also thinking of the Christic (sp?) Institute's legal challenge to the CIA, I hope I'm not getting this wrong, which was the means by which many people learned of it's involvement in the drug trade. They never won that case but the newspaper coverage of something that would have otherwise been ignored was absolutely worth their work.
>>

rachael, you're certainly right on about the Christic Institute's attempt to expose a continuing criminal operation/conspiracy perpetrated by former & current cia operatives. not only does it document the drug trafficking sanctioned by these operatives, the complaint also points out the earlier activities of these same operatives in southeast asia, the middle east, africa and central america -- very bloody activities. when carlo parcelli, rosalie gancie and myself were producing Print News Report, a weekly alternative news program on public access chanels (washington, dc & northern va) we read the entire complaint, all 300 pages, verbatim. unfortunately the Christic Institute paid a heavy price for this action; several days before the complaint was to be heard in the federal courts, judge king dismissed the complaint and ordered the Christic Institute to pay the legal fees of these operatives, which totaled more than a million dollars. unable to do so the institute went out of existence.

joe brennan

↑ Index

444. Douglas Barbour
Re: bookstore sagas
Sat 18 Apr 1998

Morpheal replies:

<<>"Left Bank Books sues Borders, Barnes and Noble
>
>Among the alleged illegal practices are price discounts, special breaks on >small orders, free shippping, promotional allowances and favorable retrun >policies. The suit states these are not available to independent >stores."

Tto me that does seem ludicrous. (Though I strongly empathize with those making suit against the giants, in an attempt to survive as small independents.)

The fact is that the buying power of a larger customer has always favoured such customers in every kind of business. The more you buy the bigger the discount and the more favourable the terms of sale are from the supplier.

The biggest customers have _always_ been given the biggest discounts.>>

But this seems to do exactly what the monsters want: place literature as commodity on the same terms as widgets & wadgets. Even if we say there's no way to save the little stores in this world of social darwinism, it might pay wo wonder what happens to the small presses where, due to these very pressures on the big ones, almost the only innovative, etc. writing gets published. They too are suddenly forced to give discounts they simply cant handle, & if they dont perhaps they cant sell any books because the independent stores they depended on for their sales have all been driven out. Oops. Now Mark seems to be managing with library sales, but still. A hard road has been made much harder. For whom? For what? At what cost to culture as a whole (& I speak as someone who very much enjoys various aspects of popular culture too)?

Maybe the small press world will be an electronic village hidden among the giant 'trees' of the web/forest? Maybe...(but I still really like going into a small bookstore & soaking up the ambience of the books I can look at, check out, etc. not to mention those readings -- like the one Patrick Pritchettjust reported to us...).

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

A run-of-the-mill miracle:
winds mild to moderate turning gusty in storms.

A miracle in the first place:
cows will be cows.

Next but not least:
just this cherry orchard
from just this cherry pit.

A miracle minus top hat and tails:
fluttering white doves

A miracle(what else can you call
it):
the sun rose today at three fourteen
a.m.
and will set tonight at one past eight.

A miracle that's lost on us:
the hand actually has fewer than six fingers
but still it's got more than four.

A miracle, just take a look around:
the inescapable earth.

An extra miracle, extra and ordinary:
the unthinkable
can be thought

WISLAWA SZYMBORSKA

english translation copyrite 1995 by Harcourt, Brace & Company

↑ Index

446. Chris [Steve] Piuma

Re: Geocities

Sat 18 Apr 1998

Karen Kelley showed great grace and sensitivity to write on 98.04.17:

> Anyone had any dealings with Geocities? I'm thinking about taking them up on their free site to put up some literary material. Is this another case of "no free lunch"? As I understand it, they let space on their server if you'll place a banner somewhere on your page.

> Any insights will be appreciated.

Check out Ron Henry's web lit mag "Aught" at http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/8789/aught.htm

As far as the "free lunch" goes -- since I used a somewhat dated web browser on my somewhat dated home computer, I'm incapable of seeing the banner ads that occasionally pop on GeoCities web pages. Drat.

You can email Ron at [redacted] and ask him more about the GeoCities experience.

-- Chris [Steve] Piuma, etc. Nothing is at: http://www.brainlink.com/~cafard flim: http://www.brainlink.com/~cafard/flim/index.html from the current issue: These feelings are real--only the memes have been changed to protect the guilty.

↑ Index

447. morpheal
Re: oy vey morpheal!
Sat 18 Apr 1998

> Institute paid a heavy price for this action; several days before the complaint was to be heard in the federal courts, judge king dismissed the complaint and ordered the Christic Institute to pay the legal fees of these operatives, which totaled more than a million dollars. unable to do so the institute went out of existence.
> joe brennan

The Little Fish

The little fish dreamt it was a huge white shark. It imagined its teeth and jaws powerful. It imagined it was ferocious. It dreamt this many times and it eventually _believed_ that this was the truth. The little fish then attacked another fish....and the little fish was immediately eaten. In being eaten it found its freedom.

That is the end of the story of the little fish.

The little fish perhaps exists somewhere in another parallel universe, in a kind of afterlife, or perhaps it reincarnated in another time period as a great white shark. I shall remain agnostic to what happens to fish after they are eaten.

Now how does that apply to Little Book Shop versus Huge Bookselling Chainstore ?

Big fish eat little fish. Sometimes little fish forget that fact. Then they are eaten, even faster, than they otherwise would have been.

That is all there is to it.

M.

↑ Index

448. charles alexander
tucson activities
Sat 18 Apr 1998

I've only been back receiving poetics messages for a few weeks, and haven't seen anybody reporting on Tucson activities, so thought I'd summarize.

The POG series which started a year ago with readings and/or talks by David Bromige, Karen Mac Cormack, Steve McCaffery, Tom Mandel, Bob Perelman, Jim Waid, Margaret Bailey Doogan,and others -- continued this year with sometimes monthly and sometimes more-than-monthly readings or presentations by a mixture of poets, visual artists, video artists, music composers. These have included Leslie Scalapino, Roberto Tejada, Cynthia Miller, Robert Hogg, Sheila Murphy, Rae Armantrout, A.C. Huerta, Victor Masayesva, Tom Raworth, Charles Alexander, Jerome Rothenberg, Alex Garza, Clayton Eshleman, Michael Davidson, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Larry Solomon, Lisa Cooper, and Lydia Davis (and I'm sure I've left something out).

The latest of these readings were the Michael Davidson one about three weeks ago, and the Lisa Cooper/Lydia Davis reading one week ago today.

When possible, Chax Press has made chapbooks by visiting and/or local writers to accompany these events (books by Davis, Cooper, Armantrout, Raworth/Alexander, one by POG co-founder Tenney Nathanson who read in a university-sponsored series, and one last spring by Perelman).

The literary readings have been energetically complemented by artistic presentations in the case of Cynthia Miller (painting), A.C. Huerta (painting/photography), Alex Garza (sculpture), Larry Solomon (musician/composer), and Victor Masayesva (video/photography).

The events have included visiting and local artists and writers; they have also shifted locations purposefully, including events at three locations in downtown Tucson, on the far west side at Pima Community College, and in predominantly Hispanic South Tucson. More informal talks in the series have been at an older stucco former-home which is an annex to the Poetry Center of the U of Arizona.

Besides POG, which is a collective of about 15 people including Jill McCartney, Tenney Nathanson, Dan Featherston, Kali Tal, Charles Alexander, Lisa Bowden

(all of those on the organizing committee for the group), and others; a couple of the events have had co-sponsorship from the Writing Works/Extended University program at U of Arizona, or from the Poetry Center at the U of Arizona. The events have also had support from the Tucson/Pima Arts Council and the Arizona Commission on the Arts. Still, financially, it's been a struggle in which several people have stuck their necks and wallets out, and we're counting a lot on an upcoming fundraising dinner (May 4 -- please send me a direct email if anyone wants more information about this, wants to come or reserve/buy a seat we can donate to someone who can't afford it) to help us break even and continue doing this next year.

The final event in the series this year is Saturday, May 9, at 7pm.
It is a reading by Kevin Killian and Dodie Bellamy, and a performance by artist Ned Schaper, at the Mat Bevel Institute, 530 N. Stone Ave., in Tucson.
Free & open to all.

if you're near, please come.

charles
[redacted]
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

449. Pierre Joris
MILLENNIUM VOLUME II EVENTS
Sat 18 Apr 1998

We would like to announce two events in connection with the publication of the 2nd volume of POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM:

-- For those in the San Diego area: On Sunday 19 April at 3p.m. in the Seuss Room of the Geisel (Central) Library at UCSD: Readings and performances by Pierre Joris, Jerome Rothenberg, David Antin, Rae Armantrout, John Cayley, Michael Davidson, Hiromi Ito, George Lewis, Quincy Troupe, Bertram Turetsky and Pasquale Verdicchio.

-- For those in the Bay Area: On Monday 20 April at 7p.m. at Diesel Books (5433 College Avenue in the Rockbridge section of Oakland): readings by Pierre Joris, Jerome Rothenberg, Lyn Hejinian, Nathaniel Mackey, Michael McClure, David Meltzer, Michael Palmer, Carl Rakosi and Eric Selland. For information call: [redacted].

Pierre Joris & Jerome Rothenberg

==========
========== Pierre Joris | "Poetic knowledge...is the knowledge of finitude, Dept. of English | of words and things that happen once and SUNY Albany | once only, measurable but not repeatable, the Albany NY 12222 | intuitions of _nonstatistical_ probabilities tel&fax:[redacted] | that are _creative_, not merely re-creative
email: | (or recreational)." -- Don Byrd [redacted]|
==========
==========

↑ Index

450. Mark Nowak

Mpls. events

Sat 18 Apr 1998

Upcoming _Xcp/Cross Cultural Poetics_ & related events in Mpls:

1.)Kirin Narayan, anthropologist/novelist, author of _Storytellers, Saints & Scoundrels_ (U Penn), co-editor of _Creativity/Anthropology_ (Cornell), and a new collection of Hindi folktales from Oxford. Reading--Friday, April 24th, College of St. Catherine-Mpls, Room 250 (Old Main), noon Talk @ University of MN, 207 A Lind Hall, 3:15pm, also April 24th

2.) LitLink Festival panel on the State of Publishing, w/ Mikeil And, Allan Kornblum, Mark Nowak, Bill Truesdale, & others, Maria Damon moderator. Sunday, April 26th, Calhoun Square (also displays from dozens of small press publishers, reading stages, open mikes, etc.) 11:00am-4:00pm

3.) _Xcp no. 2_ publication reading, Saturday May 2nd, 7:00pm, Hungry Mind Bookstore (w/ Lise Erdrich McCloud, Diane Glancy, Chung Na Yei, Rita Chakrabarti, Carolyn Erler, & Mark Nowak

(also, Arthur Sze will be in town for the Rain Taxi reading series on Sunday, May 3d: time & location to follow).

↑ Index

451. Maria Damon

Re: oy vey morpheal!

Sat 18 Apr 1998

---

wow this is heavy. thanks for letting us (we who didn't know, or knew but forgot) know about it.

At 11:14 AM -0400 4/18/98, JBCM2 wrote:
>In a message dated 98-04-18 00:19:45 EDT, you write:

>
><<
> 8)I'm also thinking of the Christic (sp?) Institute's legal challenge to > the CIA, I hope I'm not getting this wrong, which was the means by which > many people learned of it's involvement in the drug trade. They never > won that case but the newspaper coverage of something that would have > otherwise been ignored was absolutely worth their work.
> >>
>
>rachael, you're certainly right on about the Christic Institute's attempt to >expose a continuing criminal operation/conspiracy perpetrated by former & >current cia operatives. not only does it document the drug trafficking
>sanctioned by these operatives, the complaint also points out the earlier >activities of these same operatives in southeast asia, the middle east, africa
>and central america -- very bloody activities. when carlo parcelli, rosalie
>gancie and myself were producing Print News Report, a weekly alternative news >program on public access chanels (washington, dc & northern va) we read the >entire complaint, all 300 pages, verbatim. unfortunately the Christic >Institute paid a heavy price for this action; several days before the >complaint was to be heard in the federal courts, judge king dismissed the >complaint and ordered the Christic Institute to pay the legal fees of these >operatives, which totaled more than a million dollars. unable to do so the >institute went out of existence.
>
>
>joe brennan

↑ Index

452. Maria Damon

Re: Mpls. events

Sat 18 Apr 1998

---

minor amendment: the talk at the U of MN will be at 3:00, rather than at 3:15.

At 1:41 PM -0500 4/18/98, Mark Nowak wrote:
>Upcoming _Xcp/Cross Cultural Poetics_ & related events in Mpls:
>
>1.)Kirin Narayan, anthropologist/novelist, author of _Storytellers, Saints >& Scoundrels_ (U Penn), co-editor of _Creativity/Anthropology_ (Cornell), >and a new collection of Hindi folktales from Oxford.
> Reading--Friday, April 24th, College of St. Catherine-Mpls, Room 250 >(Old Main), noon

> Talk @ University of MN, 207 A Lind Hall, 3:15pm, also April 24th
>
>2.) LitLink Festival panel on the State of Publishing, w/ Mikeil And, Allan >Kornblum, Mark Nowak, Bill Truesdale, & others, Maria Damon moderator.
>Sunday, April 26th, Calhoun Square (also displays from dozens of small >press publishers, reading stages, open mikes, etc.) 11:00am-4:00pm
>
>3.) _Xcp no. 2_ publication reading, Saturday May 2nd, 7:00pm, Hungry Mind >Bookstore (w/ Lise Erdrich McCloud, Diane Glancy, Chung Na Yei, Rita >Chakrabarti, Carolyn Erler, & Mark Nowak
>
>(also, Arthur Sze will be in town for the Rain Taxi reading series on >Sunday, May 3d: time & location to follow).

↑ Index

453. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski

Re: bookstore sagas

Sat 18 Apr 1998

Although a micro press publisher as well as a poet, here in Portland (with great independent bookstores like Powells, Looking Glass & Boradway), i have an ongoing relationship with one of the local Borders. i should say that i also consider myself in the progressive-radical range in politics, as well as a strong union supporter. but about 3 years ago when the first borders came to town, a person from the store came up to me at local book fair, where we both had tables (well, they had several tables, i had a 1/2), and said i'd been pointed out as a person who has organized readings. while porland has tons of writers/poets, there arent many venues for reading--3-5 (changing every couple months) regular open readings; occasional 1-3 person readings at above mentioned bookstores; & the ocaisonal traveling poet at one of the local schools. as a reader and reading organizer i like the 3 at 15 minutes each format. the readings are generally great, almost always local, averages around 18 people. i continually get flack for working with borders. i figure theyre the ones giving in this without getting much back (dont know how big a pr impact these readings, or any local poetry, could have), other than some stolen books. readers geta place to read around triple the standard open reading slot, get an attentive audience & a small gift certificate. who's co-opting whom. and relating to anothe entry on this topic, the people i deal with at borders are nice folks, if not always totally present, but ive never encountered any rudeness or paranoia.

dan raphael

↑ Index

454. Steve Shoemaker
George Oppen wins Pulitzer
Sun 19 Apr 1998

Mention of the Pulitzer makes me think of something I've always wondered about--anyone know how the hell George Oppen managed to win one back in the sixties? Just seems so unlikely--but then, it was the sixties. s

↑ Index

455. MAYHEW
Bookstore sagas
Sun 19 Apr 1998

I should clarify that this lawsuit is brought by the ABA; it is not one local bookstore against the chains. And it is quite possible that some of their practices ARE illegal. Antitrust is a quite complicated area of the law. So I will await the results with a great deal of interest. It may be quixotic but I wouldn't term it "ludicrous."

(I believe it is the American Booksellers Association; various ind. stores in diff. locations are joining in)

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

456. Rachel Levitsky
Re: oy vey morpheal!
Sun 19 Apr 1998

>
> Big fish eat little fish. And AIDS and cancer kill. Still, we on the losing end who have some style like to have some say how we will die. Which for some means giving on over to the doctor, for others blue crystals and for others still it is screaming like hell so the silence doesn't get us before the killer cells do.
>
> That is all there is to it.
> Now, is that so so.
> --RDL

↑ Index

457. Hugh Steinberg

Re: George Oppen wins Pulitzer

Sun 19 Apr 1998

Steve Shoemaker writes:

> Mention of the Pulitzer makes me think of something I've always wondered about--anyone know how the hell George Oppen managed to win one back in the sixties? Just seems so unlikely--but then, it was the sixties.

The list of writers who did or did not get Pulitzers is an interesting (or disheartening) one. Among the non-winners are: T.S. Eliot, Ezra Pound, Louis Zukovsky, Langston Hughes, Adrienne Rich, C.K. Williams, Allen Ginsberg, Robert Creeley, Robert Duncan, Denise Levertov, Mark Strand and lots of others. A biography of Louise Bogan has won a Pulitzer, Bogan has not. On the other hand such giants as Audrey Wurdemann, Mark Van Doren, Leonard Bacon, Peter Viereck, & Phyllis McGinley have won (the 20's through the 40's are particularly lean years as far as good choices made by the selection committee). Since 1922, only three African-Americans have won, no other writers of color have ever won a Pulitzer prize in poetry. About 77% of the winners are male.

The list of winners is quintessentially mainstream (I think that's the role of the Pulitzer, to valorize the mainstream). A number of recipients have a sort of "wait your turn" feel to them, a twenty to thirty year gap between achievement and recognition, such as William Carlos Williams in 1963, Wallace Stevens in 1955 and Marianne Moore in 1952. I think Oppen winning in 1969 falls under this rule (and also because _Of Being Numerous_ is a darn good book). My hunch is this wait your turn rule applies to Charles Wright and most of the other winners in the nineties (such as James Tate and Philip Levine), much of whose work defined the mainstream of the seventies. Creeley, Strand and Rich are probably all due within the next few years, especially if they release books of collected poems. And who knows, maybe the collected poems of Susan Howe or Michael Palmer will win the Pulitzer in 2010 (which is possible if the mainstream moves in their direction). It's a dead certainty however that the collected works of Robert Hass will win a Pulitzer long before they do.

Personally, I don't lose much sleep over who wins or doesn't win Pulitzer prizes, any more than I'm going to buy an album because it won a Grammy.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

458. Stephen Cope
Re: George Oppen wins Pulitzer
Sun 19 Apr 1998

This is a good question which I should, though don't, have a good answer for. There is little in the letters to suggest that Oppen actively sought the award (indeed, he seems fairly ambivalent about it). Anyone know who might have been responsible?

Stephen Cope

RE:

> Mention of the Pulitzer makes me think of something I've always wondered about--anyone know how the hell George Oppen managed to win one back in the sixties? Just seems so unlikely--but then, it was the sixties. s

↑ Index

459. morpheal
Re: oy vey morpheal!
Sun 19 Apr 1998

>> Big fish eat little fish. And AIDS and cancer kill. Still, we on the losing >end who have some >style like to have some say how we will die. Which for some means >giving on over to the doctor, for others blue crystals and for others >still it is screaming like hell so the silence doesn't get us before the >killer cells do.
>
>That is all there is to it.
>Now, is that so so.
>--RDL

Do we ever really get to say how we shall live ?

Or with whom ?

Now that is an even more painful cry for some freedom _to_ rather than freedom _from_.

It is so easy for others to set one free from almost all that one loves. Then they call themselves saviours and pat one another upon their shoulders as though they have all done good.

M.

↑ Index

460. Billy Little
Re: oy vey
Sun 19 Apr 1998

you poor sad man loving slavery, resignation, acquiescence, collaboration, ask your mother to open the door and let you out, there's a world beyond the computer screen and you know what if you put these tiny little seeds in the dirt sometimes flowers come out and melons, never platitudes, take some time out to read a book, i recommend toni morrison's paradise, her best yet, maybe you'll have some new ideas and give us a chance to discuss poetics

↑ Index

461. Burt Kimmelman
Re: George Oppen wins Pulitzer
Sun 19 Apr 1998

Louis Simpson was the judge responsible for Oppen's Pulitzer--that is, as far as I know, based on a breakfast conversation with Simpson and Armand Schwerner who would know more about this. Armand?

↑ Index

462. morpheal
Re: oy vey
Sun 19 Apr 1998

> you poor sad man loving slavery, resignation, acquiescence, collaboration,

I have met many who are exactly that, and would never want it any different. It is alright if they are truly happy being that. Then do not disturb them, is perhaps as good an option as any. As for me, I agree, as to the recoil in abject horror from such dismal circumstances becoming the given or the chosen lot in life. Worse if it is the sum and average of the given to.

Then again, some kinds of committed relation, and enthusiastic involvement, courageous communicative interaction, and collaborations, are to be hoped for, wanted, sought after, invited, responded to,.... Of course one person's slavery is in fact another person's freedom, is something we must keep in mind. That has to do with trading some of one's so called freedom for the sake of having something else that oneself truly wants to have, even if that is a loving relationship with a specific other human being. Though that fact of human existence, of human lives, goes too often without saying. In that too there is individuality, and potentially, freedom of association, freedom of communicative interaction, freedom of personal expression, and so the relation then is in some ways poetic, but invariably something has to be sacrificed for the sake of that having. Exactly what is sacrificed, and how much is sacrificed, is variable, as to different situations. That is itself slavery, and oppressive, only if what is gained is not wanted, or the sacrifice does not achieve its purpose. Then it is sad sacrifice without celebrations.

Anyway, in my approximately 42nd year, a few years ago I wrote this poem about something somewhat related to what Billy Little refers to:

WE'VE GOT CLASS

Today they draped another pauper's coffin
with a dollar bill,
and there was a silent salute
for another victim of money forbid.

The wealthy save their own bodies
for this life,
too often telling the poor to save their souls
for the afterlife.

Those in between supposed to make coffins,
print dollar bills,
serve the wealthy,
give to the poor,
and preach sermons.

From: "Before and After"
---------- By: Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

463. Rachel Levitsky
Re: underdog wins
Sun 19 Apr 1998

Thanks Joe for the memory refresher. Yes I now recall this and that the case actually planted a seed of hope that some truth might be set on the record. The sad outcome doesn't negate the importance of the work. The history of struggle is a history of mainly losses and that occasional win that makes all the rest possible. The successful, though not victimless (deaths and beatings of activists, plus three still in jail--on AMNESTY's prisoner of conscience list) blockage by the people Tepotzlan, Mexico, 1995, of the construction of a Jack Nicklaus golf course that would have destroyed their entire eco system. Or that George Oppen did get the Pulitzer. Or UNITE's exposure of child labor in a GAP factory in El Salvador. Or _Howl_. --RDL

JBCM2 wrote:
>
> In a message dated 98-04-18 00:19:45 EDT, you write:
>
> <<
> 8)I'm also thinking of the Christic (sp?) Institute's legal challenge to > the CIA, I hope I'm not getting this wrong, which was the means by which > many people learned of it's involvement in the drug trade. They never > won that case but the newspaper coverage of something that would have > otherwise been ignored was absolutely worth their work.
> >>
>
> rachael, you're certainly right on about the Christic Institute's attempt to > expose a continuing criminal operation/conspiracy perpetrated by former & > current cia operatives. not only does it document the drug trafficking
> sanctioned by these operatives, the complaint also points out the earlier > activities of these same operatives in southeast asia, the middle east, africa
> and central america -- very bloody activities. when carlo parcelli, rosalie
> gancie and myself were producing Print News Report, a weekly alternative news > program on public access chanels (washington, dc & northern va) we read the > entire complaint, all 300 pages, verbatim. unfortunately the Christic > Institute paid a heavy price for this action; several days before the > complaint was to be heard in the federal courts, judge king dismissed the > complaint and ordered the Christic Institute to pay the legal fees of these > operatives, which totaled more than a million dollars. unable to do so the > institute went out of existence.
>
> joe brennan

↑ Index

464. Martin Spinelli

oy

Sun 19 Apr 1998

A Wanton Elegy

Marxists! Oh Messiah! treading their failed steps on the other side of the free market when they see you coming Or should we just buy more guns, 'cause consuming and defensiveness are always the next best things Reasoning's spirit was seen with Elvis at the 7-11, they were reading each other questions from the Cosmo democracy quiz Posturing, or is it "preening," for peanuts--ten bad analogies wins you a free Enterprise Decoder Ring--don't tell sis!
Home-spun hyperbole just like mamma used to make with confidence smelling like those ooey-gooey chocolate chips Economics lessons for adolescents stain the windows like a 50 percent gas and oil mix
A fact is a fact is a fact, "fact" in fact makes it so, just ask your anchorman when thinking tires Legal eagling may free your mind but who do you think really wants deregualtion, it ain't the little fishies

Literally,

Martin

_____

Martin Spinelli SUNY Buffalo English Department
Granolithic Productions

[redacted]
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
ENGAGED http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk

↑ Index

465. michael corbin
Re: bookstore sagas
Sun 19 Apr 1998

---

late to this:

I think someone mentioned warehouses. They are a particular kind of tyranny. In the calculus of 'production' and 'distribution'. there are 'independent' book-sellers that cannot obtain escape velocity from Ingram, Baker & Taylor, Koen etc. Can't get that publisher discount so you play the time and usury game with the wholesaler. the chains know its all about margin not the fucking books yous selling/.

And then the remainder houses play an interesting game. better than pulping those books I guess. but no returning those remainders. Used seller marks up the 'remainder'.

Amazon has operated at a loss since its inception. What bookseller could do that? I been trying to operate at a loss for years. I gave up having a 'check-book'. But they don't take my loss at the grocery store. Gotta have the right specie. I don't even try that shit with my landlord. cash-money.

I-S-B-N

group identifier (i.e., 0=NorthAmerica)-Publisher Identifier (the so-called 'vendor' number)-title identifer (or 'edition' identity)-single digit check (an interesting truth value quotient of the first nine digits).

Poems for the Millennium II= 0-5202-0864-1 hAS anyone read 0-226-10672-1? bookstore sagas?

fugitive publication w/o a ISBN often gets a SKU. (a stock keeping unit)

barcodes= three types: UPC-A (12-digit), UPC-E (6-digit) massy-markets etc. gets E's., and bookland EAN (Not just an Universal Product Code, but a European Article Number.) Sometimes you get EAN's that are ISBN's and somethimes yous gets EAN's that more: EAN_8's and EAN_13's. but them folks ain't americans anyway.

mc

↑ Index

466. Kenneth Goldsmith

UbuWeb Visual, Concrete, & Sound Poetry: April 1998 Updates

Sun 19 Apr 1998

U B U W E B : VISUAL, CONCRETE, & SOUND POETRY

http://www.ubu.com

APRIL 1998 UPDATES

+ +

HISTORICAL:

Augusto de Campos, Brazil, PDF files and New Animations

Decio Pignitari, Brazil, Organismo Animation (1960)

SOUND :

Jaap Blonk, Holland, "Flux de Bouche"

Lars-Gunnar Bodin, Sweden

Augusto de Campos, Brazil "Sound Poems 1956-1974"

Ilmar Laaban, Sweden

Sten Hanson, Sweden

Ake Hodell, Sweden

Bengt Emil Johnson, Sweden

Edwin Torres, USA, "Holy Kid"

CONTEMPORARY:

Laurel Beckman, USA "Polysemous Unit Hovering Over Love & Respect"

Craig Dworkin, USA, "Soundpoem (for Tom Raworth)"

Elson Froes, Brazil "Animations"

Neil Hennessy, Canada, "vOw(h)e(e)ls 1 & 2"

Bill Luoma, USA, "New Visual Poems"

William Marsh, USA, "4 c's in Season"

Juliet Ann Martin, USA, "oooxxxooo"

Brian Stefans, USA, "New Visual Poems"

Irving Weiss, USA, "New Visual Poems"

Darren Wershler-Henry, Canada, "Grain: a prairie poem"

Doc Wright, Australia, "Nixon"

TABLE OF CONTENTS
+ +

H I S T O R I C A L

Guillaume Apollinaire
Carlo Belloli
Max Bense
Wallace Berman
Jean Francois Bory
Claus Bremer
Jose A. Caceres
John Cage
Julio Campal
Henri Chopin
Augusto de Campos
Haroldo de Campos
Paul de Vree
Early Visual Poetry 1506-1726
Ian Hamilton Finlay
Carl Fernbach Flarsheim

John Furnival
Heinz Gappmayr
Jochen Gerz
Mathais Goeritz
Eugen Gomringer
Corrado Govoni
Philip Guston's Poem-Pictures
Vaclav Havel
Dom Sylvester Houedard
Ronald Johnson
Jiri Kolar
Ferdinard Kriwet
Lilian Lijn
Duda Machado
Armando Mazza
Franz Mon
b.p. Nichol
Clemente Padin
Decio Pignatari
Antonio Riserio
Aram Saroyan
Kurt Schwitters
Gino Severini
Takahashi Shohachiro
Mary Ellen Solt
Vagn Steen
Salette Tavares
Arrigo Lora Totino
Ivo Vroom
Emmett Williams
Pedro Xisto
Louis Zukofsky

C O N T E M P O R A R Y

Bruce Andrews
Connie Beckley
Susan Bee
Laurel Beckman
Felix Bernstein
Charles Bernstein
Jake Berry
John Cayley

Cheryl Donegan
Johanna Drucker
Craig Dworkin
Elson Froes
Loss Peque~no Glazier
Kenneth Goldsmith
Kenneth Goldsmith & Joan La Barbara Neil Hennessy
Dick Higgins
Peter Jaeger
Alison Knowles
Bill Luoma
William Marsh
Juliet Ann Martin
John Reeves
Dirk Rowntree
Blair Seagram
Spencer Selby
Linda Smukler
Alan Sondheim
Brian Stefans
Ward Tietz
Nico Vassilakis
Ron Wakkary
Irving Weiss
Darren Wershler-Henry
Doc Wright
Jody Zellen
Komninos Zervos
Janet Zweig

REAL AUDIO SOUND POETRY

Guillaume Apollinaire
Jaap Blonk
Lars-Gunnar Bodin
William S. Burroughs
John Cage
Henri Chopin
Jean Cocteau
Augusto de Campos
Marcel Duchamp
Brion Gysin

Sten Hanson
Ake Hodell
Bengt Emil Johnson
Ilmar Laaban
Wyndham Lewis
Jackson Mac Low
F.T. Marinetti
David Moss
Kurt Schwitters
Cecil Taylor
Edwin Torres
Gregory Whitehead

P A P E R S

Laurel Beckman
Sergio Bessa
Roland Greene
Roland Greene & Harvard Students
Peter Jaeger
Clemente Padin
Charles A. Perrone
Ward Tietz

F O U N D / I N S A N E

The Orion Series
The Free Jack Ads Series
Assorted Found/Insane Poems

+ +

U B U W E B : VISUAL, CONCRETE, & SOUND POETRY

http://www.ubu.com

+ +

↑ Index

467. Aaron Vidaver
Speaking of George Oppen
Mon 20 Apr 1998

My copy of the video recording of the 1983 George Oppen Tribute arrived here (in Vancouver) last week, after being manhandled and taxed by customs agents. What a disappointment! I have the sense that the tape must have cut-out mid-way, after Burton Hatlen. Neither the recordings played nor the projected images come through. And it's hard to believe it was only an hour long. Was anyone here (on this list) there? What really puzzles me is the emotional ambiguity of the speakers. There's a weird coldness throughout.

And a related matter. I've been brooding over a remark in one of Oppen's letters to Robert Duncan. It's the part where he says, "a landscape appears between our extremes." Has anyone written on the topic? Sketched that landscape?

Aaron Vidaver

↑ Index

468. Jim Andrews
V I S P O ~ L A N G U (I M) A G E
Mon 20 Apr 1998

> At V I S P O, you'll find my work in graphical, animated, pop-up, and other poetry, short > story/poem morphs, essays on technologies of the word and Web art, intriguing visual work by Ted > Warnell (Poems By Nari) and Nico Vassilakis, links to Mocambopo, a literary venue in Victoria
> B.C., and a fine collection of literary links.

If you have not visited it, I doubt that you will have read/seen anything like it.

The most recent piece at V I S P O, "The Pen," is in Gallery Ã2 at http://www.speakeasy.org/~jandrews/vispo/jimvisp1_1.htm. "The Pen" traces through eight graphics and the letters P O E M a visual lyricism mentioned by Apollinaire but quite different from concrete.

The site is my 'book,' is the centre of my writing.

Regards,
Jim Andrews
--
V I S P O ~ L A N G U (I M) A G E
The main door: http://www.islandnet.com/~jandrews/mocambo/jimvispo.htm

↑ Index

469. rsillima
Octavio Paz
Mon 20 Apr 1998

From today's NY Times,
April 20, 1998

Octavio Paz, Mexico's Foremost Poet, Dies at 84

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MEXICO CITY -- Octavio Paz, Mexico's foremost literary figure and the winner of a Nobel Prize for poetry and essays mapping the labyrinths of the Mexican mind, has died. He was 84.

Mexican President Ernesto Zedillo announced Paz's death early Monday aboard his airplane while returning from the Summit of the Americas in Chile, Mexican news media reported. Zedillo did not give a cause of death or say when the author died.

Soft-spoken and at times aloof, Paz could be harsh. But he was so precise and clear that he changed the very way Mexicans express themselves.

Like most Mexican writers, Paz was preoccupied with his country's many paradoxes and contradictions, the contrasts between its ancient Indian past and a more recent Spanish heritage. That combination has given rise to a culture often baffling even to Mexicans.

Even Mexican novelist Carlos Fuentes -- a rival who was one of Paz's sharpest critics -- conceded that Paz has "forever changed the face of Mexican literature."

Phones rang unanswered early Monday at Paz's home. At the prestigious literary magazine Vuelta, which Paz founded, a security guard said he hadn't heard the news and that no one was available to confirm it.

In 1982, Paz won the Miguel Cervantes Prize, Spain's most prestigious award. In 1987, he took the T.S. Eliot Award in Chicago. Three years later, he captured the Nobel Prize for literature.

Paz still is best known for two of his earlier works: the book-length essay "The Labyrinth of Solitude" and the poem "Sun Stone."

"Labyrinth," published in 1950, described Mexican history as a search -- "for our own selves, deformed or masked by strange institutions," he later explained to a friend. Many friends stopped speaking to him after the book's publication.

"Sun Stone" was a harsh critique of what he said was a proud apathy common among Mexicans. Again, many colleagues reacted with shock, but he picked up a number of fans as well.

Paz considered poetry the most noble form of literature. "Poetry comes from the very depths of one's being. It corresponds to experiences that are more profound" than prose, he told the Spanish literary magazine La Vanguardia in 1987.

"Good prose is invisible," he said. "In poetry, it is not. In a poem, each word carries weight."

The clarity of his writing inspired many other authors to abandon the convoluted style long common in Mexico.

Paz was born on March 31, 1914, and grew up on the edge of Mexico City. His grandfather, a strongly anti-clerical army general, playwright, lawyer, journalist and sometime revolutionary was an ally of dictator Porfirio Diaz.

Paz's father and namesake, who called himself an anarco-socialist, was secretary to Emiliano Zapata, a peasant leader of Mexico's 1910-1920 revolution. He later became the diplomatic representative of Zapata's revolutionary forces in Washington.

When Zapata was murdered in 1919, the Paz family went into brief exile in Los Angeles.

Back in Mexico, the family fell on hard times. When Paz was a teen-ager, the family was selling pieces of furniture -- and then the entire house -- to make ends meet.

Paz published his first poem when he was 16 and his first essay a year later. He later went to law school at Mexico City's National Autonomous University, where he joined a Marxist student group. He married a young writer, Elena Garro, and continued to write poems.

In his early 20s, Paz sent a manuscript to the late Chilean poet Pablo Neruda, who also would go on to win a Nobel Prize. Neruda was so impressed with Paz that he wrote a favorable review and suggested the young Mexican go to a congress of anti-fascist writers in Spain.

In Madrid, Paz met other leftist writers including Andre Malraux, Andre Gide, Stephen Spender, Antonio Machado and the Soviet propagandist Ilya Ehrenburg.

Paz stayed in Spain after the congress and joined the leftist-dominated Republican forces fighting rightist Gen. Francisco Franco. He insisted on going to the front.

He was sent to a brigade commanded by a Mexican painter David Alfaro Siqueiros but was never given a rifle and, apparently because some doubted his leftist credentials, was sent back to Mexico on a vague mission "to divulge the Spanish cause."

After returning to Mexico City, he later accepted a scholarship to study at the University of California, Berkeley, and worked in New York translating Hollywood scripts into Spanish.

A diplomat impressed with his writing in the Mexican magazine Manana offered him a job as cultural attache to the embassy in Paris in 1946. He went on to work in the diplomatic service in Japan and the United States.

In 1968, Paz resigned as ambassador to India when troops quashed student protests in Mexico City's Tlatelolco Square, killing hundreds of people.

"It would be difficult to represent a government under these circumstances," he told reporters in New Delhi.

Paz had frequent disagreements with the leftist movement, equating Cuban President Fidel Castro with right-wing Chilean dictator Augusto Pinochet and calling Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista revolution inconsequential.

But he also was a fierce critic of the government, denouncing the long- ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party as corrupt and distanced from the Mexican people.

Paz's marriage to Elena Garro ended angrily after two decades, and in 1966 he married Marie-Jose Tramini.

In 1976, Paz founded Vuelta, which would become one of Latin America's most prestigious literary magazines. He remained the magazine's director.

Paz lived in a spacious and quiet apartment in a high-rise off one of Mexico City's busiest avenues, surrounded by thousands of books, mementos, pre-Columbian ceramics and art objects. Despite the pollution and noise, Paz refused to seek calmer surroundings in the suburbs.

"I'm Mexican," he said. "I have to live like the Mexicans. I adore my city. ... It was beautiful, and it's going to be beautiful again someday."

↑ Index

470. Robert Archambeau

Re: Has anyone heard of this magazine...

Mon 20 Apr 1998

Thanks to everyone who replied to my post, backchannel & otherwise.

For those of you who were wondering, it turns out Merritt Clifton edited a quarterly magazine called "Samisdat" (with an s, not a z) from 1973-1990, and also published books and chapbooks under the imprint "Samisdat Associates" -- some of these are still available.

Fortunately, Merritt tells me that he has no problem with the title "Samizdat" (with a z, not an s) being used for a new journal with which I'm involved. First issue in August, several listees to be included. More info later, and my thanks to those who helped me track Merritt Clifton down in the wilds of Washington State.

Bob

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

" on the end
of each decision stands a heretic"
--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

471. Burt Hatlen
Re: Speaking of George Oppen
Mon 20 Apr 1998

I was there. There were tributes by me, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Jerome Rothenberg--all printed in Sagetrieb 3.1 (Spring 1984). Also, as I recall by Michael Palmer--anyway I remember him being there. Perhaps also by Michael Davidson? Perhaps some people simply read a poem. I don't know about the tone of the occasion. George came in with Mary, sat in the back, said nothing. I think we were all a little uncertain about what that meant.

Burt Hatlen

↑ Index

472. Douglas
Re: kanji
Mon 20 Apr 1998

John,

If I understand correctly, you and Yang Lian will be reading on 21st or 22nd of May in San Diego. Could you possibly come up to Los Angeles on that Sunday morning. Because then we could have a late (4:00) salon, and you could meet the sizeable poetic community of LA. And I'd take you two to dinner...etc. I would be able to find a bed for the two of you, or put you up at a local hotel, near my offices. Otherwise, the next weekend might also be available, although being a holiday, it might be more difficult. I do want to see Yang.

Douglas

John Cayley wrote:
>
> On the Mac, it is not enough just to set document encoding to one of the > Japanese standards in your browser, you must also have at least one > Japanese font installed on your system and also the latest Worldscript > extensions and also (I think, although maybe the font and worldscript are > enough) the 'Japanese Language Kit' (you'd definitely need the latter for > inputting/editing Japanese.

>
> The situation is basically the same for Chinese (excepty you need Chinese > fonts, etc.) on the Mac, which is where I have direct experience.
>
> I am not so clear about how Wintel copes.
>
> Bests,
>
> - >
> John Cayley / Wellsweep Press http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/
> 1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK > Tel & Fax: ([redacted] Email: [redacted]
> < -

↑ Index

473. Rachel Blau DuPlessis
Re: Speaking of George Oppen
Mon 20 Apr 1998

I was at the Oppen tribute and spoke; there was a kind of heightened feeling. Not coldness. Photographs of his poems made into slides (by Charles Amirkanian I think) were projected on the white wall. Gave it a kind of "meeting" feel as in Quaker meeting--austere, noble, and poignant. George was pretty far along with Alzheimer's and he was (probably) not a full listener or full player at this event. If there's more to say after I keep reading the posts I will try to say it. Rachel (Blau DuPlessis)

↑ Index

474. Gary Sullivan
Drucker, Rodefer, etc. Reading
Mon 20 Apr 1998

FREE READING IN NYC

Johanna Drucker
Stephen Rodefer
Gary Sullivan

Lewis Warsh
Thad Ziolkowski

will read at 6:00 p.m. this Thursday, April 23

at Kenny Schachter Gallery
534 La Guardia
New York, NY
[redacted]

↑ Index

475. Poetics List Administration

Brit visiting Cleveland Ohio and NY seeks gigs (fwd)

Mon 20 Apr 1998

The Poetics Office was closed over the weekend. This arrived here by mistake. Sorry if it was already posted to the list...

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 17 Apr 1998 16:34:51 +0000
From: Alaric Sumner <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Brit visiting Cleveland Ohio and NY seeks gigs

TO THE POETICS LIST

An excruciating british distaste for self promotion.

Shameless.

Necessary.

I am a lecturer on the PERFORMANCE WRITING degree course at Dartington College of Arts in Devon, UK (Subject Director: Caroline Bergvall). I am visiting the US to present a performance of The Unspeakable Rooms at the CLEVELAND PERFORMANCE ART FESTIVAL on 20th May. Rory McDermott (movement/voice) has devised an event from my text using video, audio tape and live performance which has been funded by the Arts Council of England and which will tour in Britain in the Fall.

I am seeking gigs to talk to people who want to know more about the Performance Writing course, in particular potential undergraduate students, students considering joining the postgraduate taught courses planned for 1999, students considering applying to do research at Dartington. These would not be formal information sessions organised by the college, but chats from my perspective as a member of staff.

I am also seeking poetry reading gigs. I was resident writer at the TATE GALLERY in ST IVES, CORNWALL (book: Waves on Porthmeor Beach (illustrated by Sandra Blow RA), a diary of precise descriptions of the waves on the beach during the six months combined with brief image poems and texts discussing the process of writing and the nature of the collaboration with Sandra Blow). My performance piece for 9 voices speaking at the same time (Voices (for 9)) was performed at the Royal Court in London in 1994. Other works have been presented at the Tate St Ives, Dartington Arts, Ferens Gallery in Hull, at the Edinburgh Fringe etc etc. I edit/publish words worth language arts (writers include: Carlyle Reedy, C Bergvall, J Mac Low, Mac Wellman, H Chopin, dsh, Ken Edwards, cris cheek, Ernst Jandl etc). I have edited a section of PERFORMING ARTS JOURNAL on Performance Writing which should be coming out fairly soon. Publishers: Stride, Spectacular Diseases, Lobby, Talus, RWC, SubVoicive, Arts Council etc.

I am in the States for only a week or two but I would appreciate any suggestions/offers. Texts can be emailed to any who want to see the sort of stuff I write. It ranges from multi-voice work aiming at the condition of music through the overlapping of many speaking voices and texts without apparent coherence or meaning to comparatively coherent and comprehensible poems and patches of prose.

backchannel on [redacted]

↑ Index

476. Susan Wheeler
Reading in PA
Mon 20 Apr 1998

For anyone near Harrisburg, Camp Hill etc. this week --

Susan Wheeler
Public Reading & Reception
Thursday, April 23, 8:00 p.m.
Messiah College, Grentham PA
for specific location: [redacted]

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

477. Douglas Barbour

Re: Octavio Paz dies

Mon 20 Apr 1998

On the CBC as I read: the death of Octavio Paz, another great one gone. At least, Canada's national radio notices, with a major story on what he meant & stood for.

Too many such losses these years, yet they are to be expected. I remember how long ago I first read _Sunstone_, that amazing book (& another New Directions gift to us all). And the essays, too.

My colleague, Bert Almon, did some translations: here's one:

RHETORIC

Octavio Paz

1

The birds sing, and sing
not knowing what they sing:
they know only their throats.

2

Form that adjusts itself to movement is not thought's fetter but its skin.

3

Clarity of crystal
isn't clear enough for me:
clear water is running water.

trans. Bert Almon, Seneca Review IV.1 (May 1973)

We mourn. And we write on...

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

This is the year the old ones,
the old great ones
leave us alone on the road.
Denise Levertov

↑ Index

478. Jordan Davis
bkstrs for tom orange
Mon 20 Apr 1998

Tom -- been hiding in the flmth dump -- distributing my work by the logic of peepers -- some advices re: new york bookstores -- east village books (101 st marks) is good for paperback fiction but otherwise overpriced -- tompkins sq books on 7th btw 1 & a a lot better -- dishevel thy hair! -- marcella's right re: mercer, (mercer btw bleecker & houston) worth looking into for poetry -- bookstore row (18th btw 5 & 6) is kinda thin now but academy and skyline usually have two or three good books -- some people like alabaster (around the corner from the strand, 4th ave btw 12 & 13) -- the argosy is worth a touristy trip (58th or 59th betw 5 & park) but not for recent stuff -- overpriced but terrific is pomander (by appt only) say hi to Suzanne Zavrian for me if you go uptown -- if you do go uptown there's Ideal (110 betw bway & amsterdam) and (not used) Labyrinth (112 btw bwy & amst) and there used to be one called No Real Specialty (amst (btw 118 & 119) but they've probably changed into something less interesting -- tho I did pick up a Grove Press version of the Sonnets there for four bucks once -- anyway am jotting preciously because back at work and needing to work -- more complete listings somewhere at www.papermag.com (look for the bookstore guide) -- the real place to go for used books is Cambridge MA (SF CA was about like NY when I stopped thru -- haven't yet regretted not getting the Muqaddimah) -- and the noplace to go of course is www.bibliofind.com -- hey drop me a line and let me know when you're due in town, they let me out for lunch now and again -- all best -- Jordan

↑ Index

479. Billy Little
Re: Octavio Paz dies
Mon 20 Apr 1998

Poetry does not attempt to discover what there is at the end of the road; it conceives of the text as a series of transparent strata within which the various parts--the different verbal and semantic currents--produce momentary configurations as they intertwine or break apart as they reflect each other or efface each other. Poetry contemplates itself, fuses with itself, and obliterates itself in the crystallizations of language. Apparitions, metamorphoses, volatilizations, precipitations of presences. These configurations are crystallized time: although they are perpetually in motion, they always point to the same hour--the hour of change. Each one of them contains all the others, each one is inside the others: change is only the oft-repeated and ever different metaphor of identity. The vision of poetry is that of the convergence of every point. The end of the road.

Octavio Paz The Monkey Grammarian

↑ Index

480. Alaric Sumner

Alaric Sumner visiting Cleveland Ohio and NY seeks gigs

Mon 20 Apr 1998

An excruciating british distaste for self promotion.

Shameless.

Necessary.

I am a lecturer on the PERFORMANCE WRITING degree course at Dartington College of Arts http://www.dartington.ac.uk/ in Devon, UK (Subject Director: Caroline Bergvall). I am visiting the US to present a performance of The Unspeakable Rooms at the CLEVELAND PERFORMANCE ART FESTIVAL (last years info at http://www.performance-art.org/perfcore.html) at the Cleveland Public Theatre http://www.en.com/cpt/on on 20th May (despite what it says on the website!). Rory McDermott (movement/voice) has devised an event from my text (using video, audio tape and live performance) which has been funded by the Arts Council of England and which will tour in Britain in the Fall.

I am seeking gigs between 17th and 31th May to talk to people who want to know more about the Performance Writing course, in particular potential undergraduate students, students considering joining the postgraduate taught courses planned for 1999, students considering applying to do research at Dartington. These would not be formal information sessions organised by the college, but chats from my perspective as a member of staff.

I am also seeking poetry reading gigs. I was resident writer at the TATE GALLERY in ST IVES, CORNWALL (their site is at http://www.tate.org.uk/menu.htm). (Text and images from my book Waves on Porthmeor Beach (illustrated by Sandra Blow RA) were displayed on the walls of the Gallery amongst the paintings during the exhibition 'Porthmeor Beach: A Century of Images' (1995/6). The book is a diary of precise descriptions of the waves on the beach during the six months combined with brief image poems and texts discussing the process of writing and the nature of the collaboration with Sandra Blow). My performance piece for 9 voices speaking at the same time (Voices (for 9)) was performed at the Royal Court in London in 1994. Other works have been presented at the Tate St Ives, Dartington Arts, Ferens Gallery in Hull, at the Edinburgh Fringe etc etc. I edit/publish words worth language arts (writers include: Carlyle Reedy, C Bergvall, J Mac Low, Mac Wellman, H Chopin, dsh, Ken Edwards, cris cheek, Ernst Jandl etc). I have edited a section on Performance Writing for PERFORMING ARTS JOURNAL (their site is at http://128.220.50.88/journals/performing_arts_journal/) which should be coming out fairly soon. I've been publishered by: Stride, Spectacular Diseases, Lobby, Talus, RWC http://www.geocities.com/Athens/Oracle/6753/rwcmain.html, Arts Council etc.

I am in the States for only a week or two but I would appreciate any suggestions/offers. Texts can be emailed to any who want to see the sort of stuff I write. It ranges from multi-voice work aiming at the condition of music through the overlapping of many speaking voices and texts without apparent coherence or meaning to comparatively coherent and comprehensible poems and patches of prose. I have a postgraduate degree from the University of Leeds and am doing research for a PhD at Dartington. What else might be of use... er...

backchannel on mailto:[redacted]

↑ Index

481. louis stroffolino

Re: Has anyone heard of this magazine...

Mon 20 Apr 1998

Merritt Clifton definitely edited a magazine called SAMIZDAT in the late 80's from the border of Ontario/Vermont..... It had been around awhile, because I think it was issue #216 around then.....so it's possible he also edited the magazine about which Achembeau speaks. But that was "before my time"-- I know that CLifton was a VERY interesting man, moved around a lot, both geographically as well as in terms of jobs, etc.... good to hear (from Steven Marks) that he's still at it..... Chris Stroffolino

On Fri, 17 Apr 1998, Steven Marks wrote:

> Samizdat: I think it was published by Merritt Clifton who now publishes (last I knew) a magazine called "Animal People." Address is PO Box 960, Clinton, WA 98236. More info re that mag in 32nd ed. of Int'l Directory of Little Magazines..
> Hope this helps.
>
> On Fri, 17 Apr 1998, Robert Archambeau wrote:
>
> I'm looking for some information about a poetry magazine called

> "Samizdat," published in California in, I think, the late 70s and early 80s. If anyone could backchannel me information about the publisher, the dates of publication, etc., I'd appreciate it.
>
> Best,
>
> Bob
> --
> Robert Archambeau
> Department of English
> Lake Forest College
> Lake Forest, IL 60045
> http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/
>
> " on the end
> of each decision stands a heretic"
> --Michael Barrett
>
> ---
>
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
>
> ---

↑ Index

482. r.drake

Certainty Series by Dean Taciuch

Mon 20 Apr 1998

Burning Press is pleased to announce our latest release:
Certainty Series, a book of poems by Dean Taciuch.

---

certainty

leaves trails. The way back, though, may be through. Less certain, uncertain. You said no one ever came by, but the bicyclist disagreed- there were other roads, lesser known paths into questions.

Or around the answers as though they were trees. Such shade they cast fell to us, covering us in cool demonstrations. No need, no need. We have not returned.

Blankets, the chill of evening, the blue light fading into black. The fringes are a comfort, marking the transition from wool to skin. leaves it open, allows air to breathe through. Into the question, where leaves trail

less certain, unstable elements beyond a sense that can or can't be seen there the cyclist's broken spokes

spoken answers as though they were leaves cool demarcations no need for the blanket blue fading into fringes of comfort wood to skin leaves they open into steady questions of relative ease study questions in the quiet uncertainty of bookish introductions looking at instructions not reading them

a stream of information just this side of breaking through into sense. Give it a break, break it off, listen:

what sound? the fingers rake across a blank expanse of leaves.

Dean Taciuch live in Burke VA, just outside of Fairfax, but "I retreat to the hills of WVa every chance I get." Having attended Kent State, Ohio University, and University of Southwestern Louisiana, he is now Visiting Assistant Professor at George Mason University, teaching Composition, Creative Writing, Literature courses. Dynamic Ribbon Device published his chapbook _( )box ( )set_ in 1996; his work has also appeard in Die Young, Texture, Mirage/Period(ical), Articulate (DC Arts journal), Situation, and Antenym. Two of his Java based visual poems are available at the Wr-Eye-Tings Scratchpad site: http://www.burningpress.org/wreyeting/ .

Certainty Series, poems by Dean Taciuch; $7.50 ppd from Burning Press
PO Box 585
Lakewood OH 44107

Feel free to contact Burning Press for additional information:

[redacted]
www.burningpress.org/bphome.html
luigi-bob drake, editor

↑ Index

483. Rachel Blau DuPlessis
Re: Speaking of George Oppen
Mon 20 Apr 1998

---

a further note RE: Oppen. If Adam could indicate which letter it was, I should be glad to try and intepret it as best I can or to contextualize it. I probably could have identified every word in that book soon after it was published, but at a distance of 8 years, I need a little date or something to help out. Or page number. Rachel

↑ Index

484. Rachel Blau DuPlessis
Re: Speaking of George Oppen
Mon 20 Apr 1998

---

sorry--Aaron, not Adam. (no indication of accuracy of my editing job) Rachel

↑ Index

485. Michael J Kelleher
mayday97mayday98 (fwd)
Mon 20 Apr 1998

---

day Thursday

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 20 Apr 1998 13:35:30 +0100
From: cris cheek <[redacted]>
To: "Michael J. Kelleher" <[redacted]>
Subject: mayday97mayday98

Hi, Mike, hope you're well. Thinking stuff out for your mailer. Do visit the following site on May 1st, and make responses.

Hope that you'll be interested in news of this forthcoming web site and be inspired to contribute an observation from your everyday of May 1st 1998

PLEASE PASS THIS ON TO ANYONE YOU THINK MAY BE INTERESTED and apologies if you've received this message twice!

mayday97mayday98
http://www.mayday.var.org

(hosted by var e-zine)

a web site re-evaluating one year on since the 'sea-change' General Election through observations of everyday life

The site goes on-line at 00.01hrs (BST) May 1st 1998 unfolding over the day on an hourly basis until 23.59 hrs (BST). It presents selected extracts from a project, initiated by poet / publisher cris cheek, as a homage to Mass Observation, which generated a wide range of texts and images from the everyday lives of people around Britain, on Mayday 97. cris cheek (Sound & Language), together with Var editor, Kirsten Lavers invite responses throughout mayday 98 to be uploaded as they come in.

Not another Mass Observation project surely!

No. This is not about one person snooping on their neighbour, or their community. These are those details of their own everyday lives, that people have a desire to register. 'mayday97mayday98' begins to map what people make a 'note' of, what strikes them, what catches their attention. What is important to them, in that place and at that time, however mundane or ephemeral that may appear to be.

Why this site, now?

Contributions to mayday97 inevitably included a lot of references to the General Election. We thought that, one year on, some reconsiderations were called for. The contributions invited to this site on May 1st this year form part of that process. What results will remain on-line for the foreseeable future, hosted by var e-zine, at this URL. There will be other onward developments from this project, including a planned book publication.

- - - How to take part this year - - -

Everyone is encouraged to contribute to mayday98. Either in response to something seen or read on the site OR an observation that YOU make on May 1st this year. When we get your observation it will be loaded up, asap. And your name (unless you ask otherwise), will be added onto the growing list of contributors. You can contribute texts and images of all kinds (photos, drawings, scans, photocopies, writing), shorter, pithier, things are best. We might make a selection. NB. (Please do it on May 1st only!)

- here's how
1. fax on 01223 576082
2. e-mail [redacted]
3. send an attachment with your e-mail message (we can accept rtf, text,

j.peg formats)
4. telephone a message to 01223 576082 we will check the answer machine every half an hour and transcribe your message direct onto the site

Things to include (optional)
- your location (or the location of the observation)
- your name (names will not be attached to individual contributions on the site)
- how we can contact you (a book is in the planning stages, and other developments are likely from this site)

###

Mass Observation

Mass Observation was founded, sixty years ago, in 1937, by Tom Harrison, a self trained anthropologist, Charles Madge, poet and journalist, and Humphrey Jennings, painter, poet, writer and film-maker. Mass Observation challenged the claim of the press to represent the views of ordinary people. Despite the male grouping that mobilised it, Mass Observation archived an extraordinary and incomparably rich body of writing by women.

The Mass Observation Day Survey of May 12th 1937 exploded simplistic notions of collective identity. It compiled reports, written on that day by hundreds of people in all 'walks of life'. The result stands as an interrogation of the construction of meta-narrative. However, Mass Observation did contribute to the sense that 'big brother was watching you', and resulted in some prurient 'othering'.

May 12th 1937 was the Coronation day of George VI - a day that was claimed to represent a 'sea-change' for the British people. 'mayday 97' marked another such defining moment.

we look forward to receiving your observation cris cheek and Kirsten Lavers

mayday97mayday98
http://www.mayday.var.org

↑ Index

486. dbkk
Donahue, Roberson at SPT
Mon 20 Apr 1998

Small Press Traffic presents

Joseph Donahue
Ed Roberson

Thursday, April 23, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

Joseph Donahue's new chapbook will be out in time for this event . . . Terra Lucida (Heaven Bone Press). Though he spent many years in New York, he comes to us now from Seattle. He's the author of World Well Broken (Talisman House, 1995), Monitions of the Approach (Red Dust, 1991) and Before Creation (Central Park Editions, 1989). He was one of the editors of Primary Trouble: An Anthology of Contemporary American Poetry. Donahue¹s poetry is devotional, dark, always on the edge--Bataille meets The Song of Bernadette. Its panoramic energy is harnessed by a stunning prosody, but still the margins of his poems look awfully vulnerable, like something's bound to burst out.

Ed Roberson is the celebrated author of Voices Cast Out to Talk Us In, winner of the 1994 Iowa Poetry Prize, as well as several earlier books including When Thy King Is a Boy, Etai-Eken, and Lucid Interval as Integral Music. His selected poems (Just In/Word of Navigational Challenges) will appear in the fall, and you heard it here first! Roberson has been compared to such masters as Ornette Coleman, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Romare Bearden in his complexity and dedication to experiment. This formal bravura and elasticity explores as has no other poetry the mysteries of the African-American experience, seen and heard backwards and forwards in time and space. Ed Roberson is assistant director of special programs at Cook College, Rutgers University. This is a rare San Francisco appearance by one of the great poets of our time.

↑ Index

487. dbkk
Small Press Traffic webpage
Mon 20 Apr 1998

Though still very much under construction, the Small Press Traffic webpage is up:

http://www.sptraffic.org

Be our guinea pigs--check it out! Any suggestions, comments, or corrections would be appreciated.

The website includes upcoming events, bio blurbs from past authors, as well as book reviews from our last two newsletter.

Soon the never-before-seen reviews from the overdue SPT newsletter will also be posted.

Many thanks to Diana Cage and Pamela Lu for all their hard work on this project.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

488. William Burmeister Prod
Octavio Paz 1914-1998
Mon 20 Apr 1998

Adios maestro, capitan mi capitan.
- un miembro de su sociedad secreta.

O Captain! my Captain! our fearful trip is done,
The ship has weather'd every rack, the prize we sought is won,
- Walt Whitman

William Burmeister

↑ Index

489. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy
Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
Mon 20 Apr 1998

Still under construction but no need for hard hats or much ducking here. It looks very well. Attractively laid out, simple to use and already substantial. I had no idea that spt had published so many authors. The review page is particularly good. A site capable of carrying a great deal of stuff while still having a nice airy feel. Well worth bookmarking.

Randolph Healy

At 11:00 20/04/98 -0700, you wrote: >Though still very much under construction, the Small Press Traffic webpage >is up:
>
>http://www.sptraffic.org
>
>Be our guinea pigs--check it out! Any suggestions, comments, or >corrections would be appreciated.
>
>The website includes upcoming events, bio blurbs from past authors, as well >as book reviews from our last two newsletter.
>
>Soon the never-before-seen reviews from the overdue SPT newsletter will >also be posted.

>
>Many thanks to Diana Cage and Pamela Lu for all their hard work on this >project.
>
>Dodie Bellamy
>
>

↑ Index

490. Marcella Durand
Poetry Project Symposium
Mon 20 Apr 1998

The Poetry Project's 1998 Symposium: Invention & Identity, is taking place May 7-10th, St. Mark's Church, 2nd Ave & 10th St in Manhattan.

Thursday May 7th
8 pm
Reading with Tim Atkins, Mark Nowak, Julie Patton, Wang Ping.
reception to follow

Friday May 8th
1 pm
Panel Discussion: Writers & Judaism: Personal Diaspora with Jane Delynn, Hettie Jones, Elinor Nauen, Douglas Rothschild & Bob Rosenthal, moderator.

3:30 pm
Panel Discussion: Tongue-less or Double-Tongued: The Experience of Latin American Poetry in the U.S. with Ernesto L. Grosman, Jaime Manrique, Mercedes Roffe, Carmen Valle & Cecilia Vicuna, moderator

8 pm
Reading: Brenda Coultas, Maggie Estep, John S. Hall & Sharan Strange reception to follow

Saturday, May 9th
11 am
Panel Discussion: Blues & Hip-Hop Identity with Steve Cannon, Beth Coleman, Tracy Sherrod, Christopher Stackhouse & David Henderson, moderator.

1 pm
Panel Discussion: The Invention of Class with Patricia Spears Jones, Sharon Mesmer, Murat Nemet-Nejat, Rod Smith & Gary Lenhart, moderator

3 pm
Short Takes on Identity & Invention: Eddie Bell, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Lee Ann Brown, Regie Cabico, Ava Chin, Jordan Davis, Tim Davis, Zhang Er, Chris Funkhouser, Lisa Jarnot, Kimberly Lyons, Mark McMorris, Ange Mlinko, Murat Nemet-Nejat, Sianne Ngai, Leonard Schwartz, Prageeta Sharma, Sparrow, Sharan Strange, Chris Stroffolino & more.

8 pm
Reading/Performance: Todd Colby & the Yogurt Boys, Darius James, Edwin Torres with Gina Bonati & Ladislav Czerneck & Vole.
reception to follow

Sunday, May 10th
2 pm
Short Takes Part II: Rosa Alcala, Meena Alexander, Bruce Benderson, Anselm Berrigan, Tracy Blackmer, Daniel Bouchard, Jorge Clar, Todd Colby, Jeffery Conway, Brenda Coultas, Marcella Durand, Merry Fortune, C.S. Giscombe, Kimiko Hahn, Marcella Harb, Darius James, Julia Kunina, Jocelyn Lieu, Gillian McCain, Josie McKee, Ed Morales, Mark Nowak, Julie Patton, Wang Ping, Keith Roach, Mark Salerno, Eleni Sikelianos, Pamela Sneed, Brian Kim Stefans, Edwin Torres, John Yau and more.

Individual events are $7, $4, free to members. All-day Saturday pass is $20 ($15 students & members). Passes to all events are $40, $30 students, $25 members. Sponsors' passes are $100 (includes 1-year membership to the Project).

For more information/answers/questions, call [redacted].

↑ Index

491. Billy Little
Re: Speaking of George Oppen
Mon 20 Apr 1998

do you find all your mistakes that quickly, the navaho disrupt their geometric patterns, build an error in because only god is perfect or so i've been told, so the perfect pattern would be the mistake, the forgery, the insincere prayer.

↑ Index

492. Stephen Cope
Re: Donahue, Roberson at SPT
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Ed Roberson will also, for those closer to this end of the state, be reading at UCSD (San Diego) on April 29, 4:30PM at the Visual Arts Performance Space.

Stephen

> Small Press Traffic presents
>
> Joseph Donahue
> Ed Roberson
>
> Thursday, April 23, 7:30 p.m.
> New College Cultural Center
> 766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
> $5
>
> Joseph Donahue's new chapbook will be out in time for this event . . . Terra Lucida (Heaven Bone Press). Though he spent many years in New York, he comes to us now from Seattle. He's the author of World Well Broken (Talisman House, 1995), Monitions of the Approach (Red Dust, 1991) and Before Creation (Central Park Editions, 1989). He was one of the editors of Primary Trouble: An Anthology of Contemporary American Poetry. Donahue's poetry is devotional, dark, always on the edge--Bataille meets The Song of Bernadette. Its panoramic energy is harnessed by a stunning prosody, but still the margins of his poems look awfully vulnerable, like something's bound to burst out.
>
> Ed Roberson is the celebrated author of Voices Cast Out to Talk Us In, winner of the 1994 Iowa Poetry Prize, as well as several earlier books including When Thy King Is a Boy, Etai-Eken, and Lucid Interval as Integral Music. His selected poems (Just In/Word of Navigational Challenges) will appear in the fall, and you heard it here first! Roberson has been compared to such masters as Ornette Coleman, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Romare Bearden in his complexity and dedication to experiment. This formal bravura and elasticity explores as has no other poetry the mysteries of the African-American experience, seen and heard backwards and forwards in time and space. Ed Roberson is assistant director of special programs at Cook College, Rutgers University. This is a rare San Francisco appearance by one of the great poets of our time.

↑ Index

493. dbkk
more readings you don't want to miss
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Hi everyone, it's Kevin Killian. Thanks to all who replied to my plea for someone to come stay in my apartment while I'm out of town next week. Yes, we have several winners who will arrive in shifts, to take care of our two cats, Blanche and Stanley. I'm sure you all have heard the story about how I inserted their names "Blanche and Stanley" into the popular anagram program on the web and the first thing that came up was "Channeled by Satan" (!!!) but that is a calumny of the alphabet, they are sweet and timid, like field mice or lilies.

Anyhow while I'm there, back east, at my brother's wedding in the Bronx, Dodie Bellamy and I will also be reading at the Poetry Project at St Marks on Wednesday April 29th (2nd Avenue at East 10th Street). Dodie¹s novel "The Letters of Mina Harker" will be hot off the presses by then (Hard Press) and she will be reading from it. "The Letters of Mina Harker is a great book in every respect," says Dennis Cooper. "Mesmerisingly secretive, yet huge and generous in scope, it's a dazzling stylistic and intellectual feat down to its tiniest syllables and asides, and almost sure to be one of the touchstones of contemporary fiction. Mark my words."

Then the intermission and then I come on with my short play "Cut," the Alfred Hitchcock story, staged reading with a cast of NY poets, painters, and novelists: D-L Alvarez, Bruce Andrews, Lee Ann Brown, Tim Davis, Kenward Elmslie, Eileen Myles, Sianne Ngai, Michelle Rollman, Eleni Sikelianos, Lynne Tillman, Laurie Weeks and Joe Westmoreland; and myself. A discontented faculty wife (Myles) embarks on a sultry affair with a young cub reporter (Davis), while her husband (Elmslie), director of the Berkeley Film Commission, plans a theory-heavy salute to the films of Alfred Hitchcock (also played by Davis). In another plot line, couture king Karl Lagerfeld (Andrews) descends onto Berkeley to dethrone Lancome spokesmodel Isabella Rossellini (Tillman) and replace her with the younger, Bard-educated Chita du Sumatra (Rollman).

Then onto Washington D.C. where we will read again on Saturday, May 2 at 7:30 p.m. at the Ruthless Grip Art Project, 1508 U Street NW, near the corner of U and 15th. Dodie will again read from her cornerstone of contemporary fiction, and I will be reading from my own work, and also first reading of the newly discovered "³Fix Poems" of Jack Spicer, discovered in November 1997 and soon to be published as a book by Steven Clay of Granary Books (with pictures by Fran Herndon). Sure to cause a stir on the Beltway and we are inviting Monica Lewinsky too.

Sorry to make this post so long--you can see I don't get out much.

Kevin

↑ Index

494. John Tranter

Jacket # 3 is complete, and awaits your attention

Tue 21 Apr 1998

JACKET magazine - fast-loading, international, FREE quarterly in January, April, July and October full of stylish writing - on the Internet, at http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

Announcement from Jacket editor John Tranter:

Jacket # 3 is now complete. Issue # 3 is dedicated to the memory of the Australian poet JOHN FORBES, who died unexpectedly on 23 January at the age of 47 at his home in Melbourne. It contains his stylish and laconic ode to drugs titled "Speed: A Pastoral", and poems by many of his friends, including Gig Ryan, Karlein van den Beukel, Rae Desmond Jones, Tracy Ryan, Keston Sutherland, John Kinsella, Ken Bolton, Hugh Tolhurst, John Tranter, and a portrait painting by Ken Searle of Mr Forbes as the god Zeus wearing a towel and holding a barbecue fork. As well: Special article: Eliot Weinberger on the lost Chilean poet Omar Cáceres. Interview: Russell Chatham, artist and publisher from Clark City Press, interviewed in the wilds of Montana. Reviews: Charles Nicholl's enlightening biography "Somebody Else - Rimbaud in Africa", and Drew Milne on John Wilkinson's "Sarn Helen". Poems by Andrea Brady, Tom Clark, Johanna Drucker, Hans Magnus Enzensberger, Mark Ford, Peter Gizzi, Kris Hemensley, Michele Leggott, Joel Lewis, Harry Mathews' thought-provoking and Oulipian "Chronogram for 1998", Drew Milne, Ron Padgett, Hugh Tolhurst, John Wilkinson . . . Plus many photographs and quirky works of art, the article "Thank God for the Bourgeoisie", Jacket's Photo Tips, Great Moments in Literature (metamorphic diathermal annealing, 1943), etc.

Plus Jacket's growing illustrated list of links to Literary Sites on the Internet, bookstores around the world (many with direct e-mail and Internet links!), and links to sites offering tips and resources for designing your own Web pages.

Q: Golly! Tell me more about Jacket! A: Well, since you ask . . . In November 1997, Jacket was the featured Internet site on the Electronic Poetry Center at the State University of New York at Buffalo. In December 1997, Jacket was among the top recommended sites and the subject of an extended review on Web Del Sol, a major literary arts Internet conglomerate site in the US. In December 1997, Jacket won the "Best of the Web" award from the Poetry Mining Company, an Internet site in New York. In April 1998 Jacket was "Featured Site" on the Booksmith Bookstore's "Literary Links" site in San Francisco at http://www.booksmith.com/links.html

Q: Tell me about the rich treasure trove of back issues - are they always available?
A: Absolutely!

JACKET # 1 - a piece on cyber-poetry in the age of the Internet, interviews with English poet Roy Fisher and Australian aboriginal poet Lionel Fogarty, a look at the 1943 hoax poet Ern Malley (including rare childhood photos!), work by Charles Bernstein, Elaine Equi, Pamela Brown, Alfred Corn, Joanne Burns, Tracy Ryan, Carl Rakosi, Beth Spencer, Peter Minter, Susan Schultz and Paul Hoover, together with reviews, other prose and poetry pieces and plentiful photos and art work. Jacket # 1 was complete in October 1997.

JACKET # 2 - John Ashbery : two interviews (1985 and 1988), and a new Ashbery poem / Marjorie Perloff on "Normalizing John Ashbery" / John Tranter : 3 John Ashberys / Eliot Weinberger on James Laughlin (1914-1997) / David Lehman - more on the Ern Malley hoax / Bob Perelman's "The Marginalization of Poetry" discussed by Ron Silliman, Anne Lauterbach, Juliana Spahr, Steve Evans and Kate Lilley ... and Bob Perelman! / Yasusada - Hoax, deception, or work of art? Johnson-Nagahata letters / poems by Peter Riley, Lee Ann Brown, John Kinsella, Eileen Myles, August Kleinzahler, Jennifer Moxley, Robert Adamson, Forrest Gander, Tim Davis, Michael Heller, Denis Gallagher / Eliot Weinberger's "Letter from New York: Vomit" / and other poems and articles. Jacket # 2 was complete in January 1998.

Q: And just how much does this glittering jewel of the Internet cost?
A: Nix!
Nowt!
Nil!
Zilch!
Jacket is FREE, and (thus) is at present unable to pay contributors. Also, I don't have the time yet to deal with unsolicited submissions. Sorry. My e-mail address is

[redacted]

Please tell your friends about Jacket, whose motto is "bop till you drop!"

END

from
John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/tranter/3poems-interview.html
Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

↑ Index

495. linda russo

query

Tue 21 Apr 1998

---

forever in search of women editors, i'd appreciate EMAiL addresses for --

Jessica Grim

Liz Fodaski

Melanie Nielson

Susan Smith Nash

Thanks Kindly

↑ Index

496. AERIALEDGE
Philadelphia Reading
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Thursday April 23rd, 8 PM

Jennifer McCreary
& Rod Smith

at George's 5th St Cafe

corner of 5th & Gaskill
(1/2 block north of South St)

↑ Index

497. dbkk
Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
Tue 21 Apr 1998

> Date: Mon, 20 Apr 1998 20:00:55 +0100
> From: "L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy" <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
>
> Still under construction but no need for hard hats or much ducking here. It looks very well. Attractively laid out, simple to use and already substantial. I had no idea that spt had published so many authors. The review page is particularly good. A site capable of carrying a great deal of stuff while still having a nice airy feel. Well worth bookmarking.
>
> Randolph Healy

Randolph,

Thanks for the encouragement. We purposely kept the webpage simple--and the simplicity and elegance of Laura Moriarty's non inspired us to go through with the project. We used PageMill because a trained monkey could do a web-site with PageMill--and because Pam Lu works for Adobe and therefore could purchase a copy for Small Press Traffic for pennies. Also, it's available at the computer labs of San Francisco State and New College, where much of the work on the page took place--as well as on people's home computers. Small Press Traffic's computers, god bless their micro hearts, are not powerful enough to run PageMill. Pam and Diana Cage, both of whom had some previous experience (unlike me who had to go through the PageMill tutorial just to be able to talk to them) also did some hand coding. Originally Diana, who is a creative writing student at SF State, designed a version with frames, but the computer lab guy at SF State recommended against it, saying that many of the types of people who would access our site wouldn't have computers powerful enough for frames. The autho bios section is Pam's brainchild. The project was/is fun, very grassroots, with the SPT board putting in input as well, and myself and SPT intern Sonia Greenfield acting as assistants to Diana and Pam.

A photo section is soon to be added.

Dodie

↑ Index

498. Maria Damon
hannah weiner queries
Tue 21 Apr 1998

---

in weiner's Clairvoyant Journal, who is "Rhys?" is "charlemagne" Charles Bernstein? what was jackson mac low's name before he changed it? thanks, all respondents, in advance--md

↑ Index

499. Miekal And
Re: hannah weiner queries
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Schuchat Simon wrote:
>
> I believe "rhys" is "Rhys Chatham" a musician active in NY in 70s 80s, > played with Peter Gordon, the Lovely Music Orchestra, various others that > used to perform at the Kitchen
>
> not 100 percent sure though

in that vein, perhaps charlemagne would be charlemagne palanstine, the pianist?

↑ Index

500. Tom Thompson
D.A. Powell, NYC Reading
Tue 21 Apr 1998

For any in the New York environs, the lovely and spectacularly talented Doug Powell is in town from San Francisco to read from his new book TEA.

4PM
Saturday, April 25

LABYRINTH BOOKS
536 W. 112 Street
(btw bwy & amst)

[he'd make my bed jumble and squeak. a parrot must have lit inside. potty mouthed]
a song of Regan MacNeil

he'd make my bed jumble and squeak. a parrot must have lit inside. potty mouthed

I wouldn't have said, "quaquaquaquaqua" but his fingers pushed the dark: sores raised like letters

he wanted to gather all the air: buzzarding. cold air flaps against the back of my skull perched upon as a child bride: I felt my abdomen surge. captain howdy is kicking me hurt red pulp of a melon. I bless the beak the tiny beak. he has long black lashes like wings.

--from TEA

↑ Index

501. Steven Marks
Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
Tue 21 Apr 1998

On Tue, 21 Apr 1998 [redacted] wrote:

> We purposely kept the webpage simple--and > *the simplicity and elegance of Laura Moriarty's non inspired us to go* > through with the project.

An excellent webzine to model.

> Originally Diana, who is a creative writing student at SF State, designed a > version with frames, but the computer lab guy at SF State recommended > against it, saying that many of the types of people who would access our site wouldn't have computers powerful enough for frames.

Thank you, thank you, to the unknown computer lab guy. I wish I had frames. There must be a lot of good stuff I'm missing because I don't. But that dude's right.

And now I'm going to go take a look at the SPT site myself. With Netscape 1.0.

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

502. Rachel Levitsky

Re: Homi Bhabha

Tue 21 Apr 1998

Hello

I have and am using an essay called "The Commitment to Theory" by Homi K. Bhabha, paginated 111-131. But the person who gave it to me doesn't have the reference, nor does the person who gave it to her. I'd like to site it. Does anyone know where this comes from??????

Also, would anyone be interested in me posting who will be at Naropa this summer (June 15-July 12) and when?

best,
RAchel D.

↑ Index

503. dbkk

Re: Speaking of George Oppen

Tue 21 Apr 1998

> Date: Sun, 19 Apr 1998 23:40:25 -700
> From: Aaron Vidaver <[redacted]>
> Subject: Speaking of George Oppen
>
> My copy of the video recording of the 1983 George Oppen Tribute arrived here (in Vancouver) last week, after being manhandled and taxed by customs agents.
> What a disappointment! I have the sense that the tape must have cut-out mid-way, after Burton Hatlen.

I'm curious about this too. Was this event held in San Francisco, because if it was, I think I was there. I remember an auditorium and Rachel at the podium speaking, and George Oppen sitting in the back of the auditorium, and a tape being played of Oppen speaking or reading because he was too ill to do so in person.

My knowledge of the poetry world was quite fuzzy back then--and I went to everything, an anything. I was eager. Did this really happen? Was I really there?

Dodie

↑ Index

504. Aldon Nielsen
PAZ
Tue 21 Apr 1998

This morning's LA TIMES carries a front page story on Paz, as does the NY TIMES -- then also has an editorial, a reprint of a Paz essay (in the "LIVING" section interestingly enough) and Mario Vargas Llosa's tribute -- the couple of times that I met him he was a friendly and encouraging man -- i was deeply saddened by the political feuds of his later years, but continue to find his poetry and essays inspiring -- a word I don't often use -- his RENGA remain a delight --

↑ Index

505. Aldon Nielsen
Bromige and Davidson in Los Angeles
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Tired of reading about Bromige's readings in Kansas and Colorado? Fly into L.A. this week and see for yourself --

Thursday, April 23
David Bromige and Michael Davidson
Poetry reading
7:30 PM
Loyola Marymount University
Hilton #300B & C
Los Angeles

Friday, April 24
Noon
Michael Davidson and David Bromige
open discussion of poetry

Loyola Marymount University
Hilton #300B & C
Los Angeles

Directions:

From the 405, take Manchester towards the ocean --
Turn right on Loyola Blvd., which leads directly into the campus
Stop at guard's booth for parking info. and directions

↑ Index

506. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Homi Bhabha
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Rachel Levitsky wrote:
>
Rachel,
Homi K. Bhabha: an Overview

Benjamin Graves '98, Brown University

In "The Commitment to Theory," an essay collected in The Location of Culture (1994), Homi K. Bhabha foregrounds the unfortunate and perhaps false opposition of theory and politics that some critics have framed in order to question the elitism and Eurocentrism of prevailing postcolonial debates...

from:
http://www.stg.brown.edu/projects/hypertext/landow/post/poldiscourse/bhabha/bhabha1.html

The Location of Culture
by Homi K. Bhabha
List: $20.99
Our Price: $16.79
You Save: $4.20 (20%)

Availability: This title usually ships within 2-3 days.

Paperback, 285 pages
Published by Routledge
Publication date: February 1994
Dimensions (in inches): 0.91 x 9.20 x 6.14
ISBN: 0415054060

Perhaps?

Dan Z

Hello
>
> I have and am using an essay called "The Commitment to Theory" by Homi > K. Bhabha, paginated 111-131. But the person who gave it to me doesn't > have the reference, nor does the person who gave it to her. I'd like to > site it. Does anyone know where this comes from??????
>
> Also, would anyone be interested in me posting who will be at Naropa > this summer (June 15-July 12) and when?
>
> best,
> RAchel D.

↑ Index

507. William Burmeister Prod

Re: PAZ

Tue 21 Apr 1998

On Apr 21, 12:52pm, Aldon Nielsen wrote:
> Subject: PAZ
> This morning's LA TIMES carries a front page story on Paz, as does the NY > TIMES -- then also has an editorial, a reprint of a Paz essay (in the > "LIVING" section interestingly enough) and Mario Vargas Llosa's tribute --
>
> the couple of times that I met him he was a friendly and encouraging man -- > i was deeply saddened by the political feuds of his later years, but > continue to find his poetry and essays inspiring -- a word I don't often > use --
>
> his RENGA remain a delight --
>-- End of excerpt from Aldon Nielsen

When Octavio Paz was here in S.Fla two years ago he was kind and generous to all of those who sought him for autographs even while Derek Walcott and Ceslaw Milosz stood off somewhat neglected. I do remember hearing that in the same trip, a conservative Cuban-American managed to snag him for a talk on Castro and Cuba, which surprised me because of his earlier stand against ideological involvement. What was the nature of his political feuds in Mexico in his later years?

William Burmeister

↑ Index

508. MAYHEW
Guerra y paz
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Paz was never politically unengaged, to the best of my knowledge. And of course he was virulently anti-castro, anti-communist. He had notorious feuds with Neruda, who was an unrepentant Stalinist to the end.

Paz was also a sort of literary dictator in Mexico. His magazine Vuelta published the same writers over and over. An extremely powerful man.

His essays on modern poetry are worth reading, especially Children of the Mire. He can be somewhat facile at times, almost glib; yet even when he is glib he has more to say than many other writers at their most profound. His knowledge of modern poetry was both broad and deep. He knew cummings, Pound, French poetry, as well as Spanish language poetry.

There are very few of the original modernists of the 1920s and 1930s still alive now. Paz was a little younger (b. 1914) but lived much of this history beginning with the Spanish civil war.

His poetry often leaves me unimpressed; this may be just me, though I've found similar reactions among many other people I've known, many of them specialists in Latin American poetry. Can he be compared to Neruda, Vallejo, or Lezama Lima? I have my doubts. He often seems to be "willing" himself into avant-garde postures in a way that doesn't convince me totally (somewhat like Huidobro the generation before).

I feel an epoch has come to a close with his death.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

509. Aldon Nielsen
Re: Paz Dispenser
Tue 21 Apr 1998

My own feeling (underscore -- no time to back it up with actual thought, for god's sake) is that Paz can compare favorably with Neruda -- but I would agree that Lezama Lima and Vallejo are considerably more interesting (to me) -- here again, though, the circumstances of career affect (and effect) what we have of each poet to read --

Further on the "feuds" -- much of the battle was a proxy war, with Krause (sp?) advancing the Paz line against Fuentes et al -- it was ugly --

↑ Index

510. k. lederer
Re: Naropa info--
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Yes, Rachel...

I'd like to know about Naropa summer stuff...

Thanks,
Katy

↑ Index

511. MAYHEW
Paz dispenser
Tue 21 Apr 1998

You are right, Aldon, Paz can be compared to Neruda, in that Neruda wrote so much and of so variable a quality. He was a "gran poeta malo" as someone once called him. I was thinking of the Neruda of Residencia en la tierra, not of the various mediocre and awful Nerudas.

The feuds were ugly and often carried out by proxy, as you indicate. I have very little interest in them beyond their obvious interest as pure gossip.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

512. Michael Magee
movin' to providence - advice?
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Hi all, sorry for the personal note but I just found out recently that my wife & I are moving to Providence in June & I know there are a few Providence lurkers on the list - so, good used bookstores? bars, cafes, poetry-reading spots, jazz closer than Cambridge, other things a young man like meself should know about? Thanks for any helpful hints. -Mike.

↑ Index

513. r.drake
Re: Homi Bhabha
Tue 21 Apr 1998

check: http://www.naropa.edu/sum97/swriting.htm

> Also, would anyone be interested in me posting who will be at Naropa this summer (June 15-July 12) and when?
>
> best,
> RAchel D.

↑ Index

514. Charles Bernstein
Re: hannah weiner queries
Tue 21 Apr 1998

> in weiner's Clairvoyant Journal, who is "Rhys?"

This is Rhys Chatham, a friend of Hannah's, a composer/new music person, who was active around The Kitchen (NY) in the 70s, may have even have been the music director. Quick web search found
http://www.goddard.edu/wgdr/kalvos/chatham.html
http://www.trouserpress.com/bandpages/RHYS_CHATHAM.html

"charlemagne" This is (Brooklyn born) Charlemagne Palestine, a fabulous pianist/composer, also active in New York in the 70s, who I believe has stopped performing, and I think also stayed away from recordings of his work as well. He gave mesmerizing performnaces of work somewhat in the area of Young or Riley or Reich or Glass but more idiosyncratically expressive, more driven. He is also a visual artist and continues to show his work, mostly in Europe as far as I know. Found this item, a 1989 "interview"/phone call with Charlemaigne Palestine: http://home.cdsnet.net:80/~michaelm/death/ch_int.html It's quite interesting --

Both were quite well-known on the Downtown new music/performance scene of the mid-70s.

↑ Index

515. Schuchat Simon
Re: hannah weiner queries
Tue 21 Apr 1998

I believe "rhys" is "Rhys Chatham" a musician active in NY in 70s 80s, played with Peter Gordon, the Lovely Music Orchestra, various others that used to perform at the Kitchen

not 100 percent sure though

↑ Index

516. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Guerra y paz
Tue 21 Apr 1998

True Paz was never politically unengaged, but he did advise against the dangers of confusing poetry and ideology (as I meant) such as he accused Neruda and Louis Aragon of doing. This was the man who adopted Gide's saying "The writer must know how to swim against the tide." Paz was an individualist. For Paz, liberalism, positivism, and Marxism-Leninism were enthusiastically embraced by Latin America intellectuals as "abstract formulas" without being thoroughly reexamined "by and for Latin Americans." Paz the politically involved said that "we must cultivate and defend particularity, and irregularity--life. Human beings do not have a future in the collectivism of bureaucratic states or in the mass society created by capitalism." To be fair, it must also be remembered that Paz said the dangers attendant upon discord are irresponsible song OR silence.

It is unfavorable to compare Paz with Vallejo,and other innovators like him. And this is not because his poetry doesn't stand up to theirs, but rather because Paz and Vallejo came from vastly different backgrounds and took quite different approaches to the way they handled their spanish. Paz and Neruda at least shared a sense of clarity in their language, but Vallejo sought to destroy and then rebuild, or reinvent spanish in a way more reminiscent of Celan. Vallejo's poetry being like the "war machine" of Celan's (to borrow a phrase from Pierre Joris whose it is). Paz seemed more to parallel Machado and Guillen in their form and language. He didn't appear to try to be the incessant innovator type, at least not after the 50's. And rather than will himself into any particular avant-garde posture, he advanced the strong influence of Andre Breton and the surrealists, personal friends of his, as did Rene Char, another dear friend of his. Paz came to live a most enviable life of poetry in his many travels, associations and friendships with some of the most famous writing figures, poets, and philosophers of this century many of whom were the avant-garde of their day. He was witness to the literature and events of almost the entire 20th century. I just think that many of the objections to Paz's poetry have stemmed from what was perhaps seen as a perpetuation of an already traditional spanish surrealism over and against a call for an overt populist poetry in his country and in Latin America. Then of course there was the critical backlash here too against a revised (and I believe improved) surrealism in the 60's and 70's.

Paz's poetry will be for Mexico as monolithic and timeless as he meant for it to be in a country of contradiction and influence.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

517. Pam Brown
overland* bits, call for submissions & launch*
Tue 21 Apr 1998

> overland* has passed the 150 mark, and is celebrating.*
> ``//``''''''

OH AND from issue 151 we welcome on board Dean Kiley as Fiction Editor and Pam Brown as Poetry Editor.

CALLS:

*[1] We're wanting risky fiction, the SHORTS section ([redacted] words) is set up for you to play in and we'll soon have overland extra!, a web journal, as another innovative venue.*

[2] Looking for, before 30 November 1998,essays, poetry, fiction, graphics, comics or hybrid work dealing with issues around
(a) privacy, censorship and media control; or
(b) crime writing (all genres and modes, from detective thriller to tabloid reportage).

---

*LAUNCH: overland Issue 150 will be launched at* Melbourne Trades Hall
9 May 1998 at 7.30 pm
with food and entertainment and
Big Wharfie Defence.
ALL WELCOME: waged $5; unwaged/student $4.

Queries: Ian Syson @ [redacted]

http://dingo.vut.edu.au/~arts/cals/overland/overland.html
*++++++

519. Scott Keeney
Re: Where are they now?
Tue 21 Apr 1998

On Tue, 14 Apr 1998 05:34:37 -0500 [redacted] writes:
>A poet whose work I liked quite a bit during the late 60s, early 70s,
>was Tom
>Veitch, a NYC school (gen 3) poet with a strong spiritual >undercurrent. He was >in SF for awhile around the early to mid-70s and then moved, up to >Sonoma or >beyond I think. Does anyone know what the man is up to these days?
>
>
>Ron Silliman
>

Just waded through the past few daysworth of messages, disappointed not to see an answer posted. Veitch's bio-part in Padgett/Shapiro _Anthology of NY Poets_ has got to be one of the all-time best contributor's notes, between the tongue-out-eyes-up pic and that "awaiting the painful emergence of god in his flesh" bit, well. (BTW, if anyone has a copy of that book they want to unload for a few hundred pennies, but probably not.) Anyway, anyone know if Sotere Torregian is still alive? & while I'm here, if he published anything after _The Wounded Mattress_, which I was surprised to see is still listed in Books in Print?

Scott

_____ You don't need to buy Internet access to use free Internet e-mail. Get completely free e-mail from Juno at http://www.juno.com Or call Juno at (800) 654-JUNO [[redacted]]

↑ Index

520. Maria Damon
Re: hannah weiner queries
Tue 21 Apr 1998

---

thanks to all who answered, like, thanks a lot.

At 7:34 PM -0400 4/21/98, Charles Bernstein wrote:
>>in weiner's Clairvoyant Journal, who is "Rhys?"
>
>This is Rhys Chatham, a friend of Hannah's, a composer/new music person, >who was active around The Kitchen (NY) in the 70s, may have even have been >the music director. Quick web search found

>http://www.goddard.edu/wgdr/kalvos/chatham.html
>http://www.trouserpress.com/bandpages/RHYS_CHATHAM.html
>
>"charlemagne"
>This is (Brooklyn born) Charlemagne Palestine, a fabulous pianist/composer, >also active in New York in the 70s, who I believe has stopped performing, >and I think also stayed away from recordings of his work as well. He gave >mesmerizing performnaces of work somewhat in the area of Young or Riley or >Reich or Glass but more idiosyncratically expressive, more driven. He is >also a visual artist and continues to show his work, mostly in Europe as >far as I know.
>Found this item, a 1989 "interview"/phone call with Charlemaigne Palestine:
>http://home.cdsnet.net:80/~michaelm/death/ch_int.html
>It's quite interesting --
>
>Both were quite well-known on the Downtown new music/performance scene of >the mid-70s.

↑ Index

521. Aviva99999
Re: Small Press Traffic webpage
Tue 21 Apr 1998

In a message dated 98-04-21 15:24:49 EDT, you write:

<<
 Thank you, thank you, to the unknown computer lab guy. I wish I had frames. There must be a lot of good stuff I'm missing because I don't. But that dude's right.
  >>
I have frames, but hey! you're not missing anything, to my way of thinking. I hate frames. I find them unnecessarily fussy, and a physically unpleasant way to view a web page. Too many small compartments -- no need for them -- would rather go to these "sections" or "compartments" via old-fashioned links.

↑ Index

522. morpheal
Re: Guerra y paz
Tue 21 Apr 1998

>Human beings do not have a future in the collectivism of bureaucratic states or in the mass society created by capitalism." To be fair, it must also be remembered that Paz said the dangers attendant upon discord are irresponsible song OR silence.>

The die hard Marxists give a powerful push in the direction towards more and more amorphous and unindividuated mass society capitalism.

The die hard Capitalists give a powerful push in the direction towards more and more amorphous and unindividuated mass state collectivism.

Soon either everyone becomes dehumanized or something breaks....in the middle.

That was more obvious during the overt Cold War when two (to each other's points of view) evil empires faced off against one another. Not so obvious now when it is all mostly covert rather than overt.

So, in a way, Paz is not wrong. There is some truth to that, if that refers to the preservation of the individual, and of humanity as creative individuality rather than one or another kind of mass collectivization.

M.

↑ Index

523. Karen Kelley
Still seeking free web server
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Thanks to all for the Geocities responses. No go with them, though, as they won't allow me to list subscription information (I want to put up some material & point readers to the print mag). Does anyone know of a free service? Surely someone must provide this for the arts... And if the service doesn't include garish banners and pop up windows, all the better!

Karen

↑ Index

524. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Homi Bhabha/Naropa
Tue 21 Apr 1998

Thanks all of you who sent me the info. on Bhabha. Below I leave the Naropa webside that r.drake posted. I checked it out and it seems its all there. later, rdl.

Also for those of you in the area of Boulder:

May 14, 8:30 pm

Bobbie Louise Hawkins
Lindsay Hill
Laura Wright

The Left Hand Book Collective 1825 Pearl Street
Boulder CO 80302
[redacted]

r.drake wrote:
>
> check: http://www.naropa.edu/sum97/swriting.htm
>

↑ Index

525. henry
Re: movin' to providence - advice?
Wed 22 Apr 1998

Dear Mike,

I don't get around much, but here are a few places:

used bks - Cellar Stories, downtown, is the biggest; Myopic Books, in Wayland Square has a good selection.

jazz: there's CAV, an interesting bar/restaurant/antique store/music venue, run by this eccentric grande dame poet-lady from Egypt named Sylvia Moubayed. There's Chan's, in Woonsocket, a half hour drive north, a huge Chinese restauarnt whose owner loves jazz & books big names. probably some other places. AS220 downtown is a kind of punk gallery dada poetry/art music place.

pick up a copy of the Providence NewPaper, a weekly - it covers most of what's going on & will give you a lot of info. You'll learn fast, RI is a small place but with a lot of layers. Enjoy!

- Henry G.

↑ Index

526. henry g
sorry shdv bkchnld
Wed 22 Apr 1998

---

sorry list, should have backchanneled to M. Magee. but while I'm at it, Mike, you might want to check the Providence website: www.providenceri.com

↑ Index

527. MAYHEW
Guerra y paz
Wed 22 Apr 1998

The phrase "war machine," attributed on this list to Pierre Joris, is also found in an essay by Monique Wittig collected in _The Straight Mind__. She compares Proust to a "Trojan horse." I know that Joris knows Wittig's work.

The clarifications about the differences between Paz and Vallejo, offered by Wm. Burmeister, are completely on the mark. I too understood him to be talking about Jorge Guillen, not Nicolas.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

528. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Guerra y paz
Wed 22 Apr 1998

On Apr 21, 5:54pm, Aldon Nielsen wrote:
> Subject: Re: Guerra y paz > Guillen?
>
>
> i would guess that's Jorge, and not Nicolas?
>-- End of excerpt from Aldon Nielsen

I should've specified. Yes, Jorge of Cantico fame.

↑ Index

529. louis stroffolino
NYC APARTMENT SHARE POSSIBILITY
Wed 22 Apr 1998

For anybody moving to NYC, or thinking of moving IN NYC, there is an apartment share available starting June 1st in Brklyn. It's a "room with a view" in which one may have "a room of ones own"--or maybe even "two" (Not that one has to be a british modernist). Backchannel for more information..... Thanks, chris stroffolino

P.S.---the wfmu station is playing van morrison's
"it's all over now baby blue"--so nice to hear that riff without beck's soulless overdubbing.....
c

↑ Index

530. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Where are they now?
Wed 22 Apr 1998

On Tue, 21 Apr 1998, Scott Keeney wrote:

> Anyway, anyone know if Sotere Torregian is still alive? & while I'm here, if he published anything after _The Wounded Mattress_, which I was surprised to see is still listed in Books in Print?
>
> Scott

I checked into Torregian recently for the first time, Scott...Almost certainly because someone dropped his name on the List. Anyway I encountered it somewhere...

My local library has The Wounded Mattress (which is 1970) and one other book:

The age of gold : poems.
New York : Kulcher Foundation, 1976.
128 p.

It would indeed be interesting to hear from someone on the list what background there is to tell, about Torregian. The books supply nothing about the poet; ....a total obsurity, to me, just a name I overheard somewhere. The two books are worth checking out, for an intriguing instance of surrealist poetry in the U.S.

Mark P.
@lanta

↑ Index

531. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Guerra y paz
Wed 22 Apr 1998

Thanks to Jonathan Mayhew for the "war machine" reference. The one time I heard the interesting phrase was when I was at the New Hampshire conference in aug '96. I had just met the gracious Susan Schultz and had mentioned my reading of _Breathturn_ to her when Pierre Joris suddenly turns up and takes a moment between panel discussions to talk about Celan and his translations vs Hamburger's. Out comes this phrase.

William Burmeister

↑ Index

532. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Where are they now?
Wed 22 Apr 1998

His name certainly sounds Armenian to me. For those interested, there is also (according to Amazon.com) a book called "Amtrak Trek: being poems and prose written cross-country from California to New York."

↑ Index

533. Annie Finch
New versification mailing list
Wed 22 Apr 1998

> X-Confirm-reading-to: "Steven J. Willett"
> <[redacted]>
> X-PMrqc: 1
> Date: Fri, 17 Apr 1998 22:22:14 +0000
> From: "Steven J. Willett" <[redacted]>
> Subject: New versification mailing list
> To: Annie Finch <[redacted]>
> MIME-version: 1.0
> Priority: normal
>
> Dear Annie,
>
> I've started a new mailing list dedicated to prosody and versification. It is to replace the existing Prosody list, which is dedicated to the technical side of speech processing and analysis. If you'd like to subscribe, send the command "subscribe" (not case sensitive but be sure to omit the quotes) in the subject line, not in the message body, to

[redacted]

Be sure to send it in the subject line, since the list serve software I'm using reads commands from there, not the message body.

Following is the original message I sent Prosody about the new list.

Yours,

Steve

Dear Prosody List,

I am happy to announce the start of a new mailing list dedicated to literary prosody and versification. The list is called Versification, and should answer to the needs of those who are not interested in speech processing or other highly specialized, nonpoetic areas of linguistics.

Over the past five years, it's become clear that the split between speech processing linguists and all others interested in poetry, poetics, versification, metrics and literary prosody is too broad to bridge. The rash of departures the past week testifies to that quite understandable fact. It is also clear that the list is, for long stretches--sometimes months in length--quite moribund. Since the list was not originally founded for literary prosody, the time is now ripe for a new list to serve those with literary interests.

The list will be operated from the same server that publishes the Versification web page, and will utilize the SVList3.0 software system for list maintenance. All the normal mailing list functions found in listproc, listserv and majordomo are available with SVList3.0.

"subscribe" (which is NOT case sensitive, but be sure to omit the quotation marks) in the SUBJECT LINE of an email to

[redacted]

Unlike some other list processing software, you need not send anything in the message body of the email. If you include your name or other information in the message body, the server will ignore it. On validation of your email address, the server will forward a welcome message with a list of of server commands. Please note: the command "subscribe" (in any combination of upper and lower case > letters but without quotes) must be sent in the SUBJECT LINE and not in the message body of your email. That's all there is to it.

>
> To start the ball rolling, I would like to propose two innocuous topics:
>
> (1) What are the ten most important books of prosody published this century without regard to language, and why?
>
> (2) What are the most pressing tasks now facing prosody if we are to make it an accepted part of formal literary studies? Conversely, ought we try to make prosody an accepted part of formal literary studies?
>
> If you have any questions or problems with subscribing, please feel free to write me.
>
> Steven J. Willett
> Versification list owner
>
> ==========
> Steven J. Willett
> University of Shizuoka, Hamamatsu Campus
> Voice: [redacted], Fax: (053) 4555
> Japan email: [redacted]
> US email: [redacted]

Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

534. Christopher W. Alexander
Afghanistan
Wed 22 Apr 1998

this pertains to the tacit issue of womens' rights in the current negotiations in Afghanistan; I'm sure it has something to do with poetry.

please read the following and if you are in agreement, 'help' President Clinton do right by mailing a copy of this message to <[redacted]>.

All of these facts are taken from the current iss. of Women Leaders Online (WOC Alert - 4/23/98), a free e-newsletter pertaining to u.s. and internat'l womens' issues. for more information, visit their www site @ <http://wlo.org>.

thanks, chris

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------

Mr. President - the Afghanistan peace effort spearheaded by U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. Bill Richardson is welcome news, and the success of that mission would be cause for joy. However, I'm greatly concerned that the rights of Afghanistani women be addressed at the negotiating table, and I'm not sure that's happening now. As you may know, women in the regions of Afghanistan under Taliban control are:

* banned from working outside the home;
* banned from attending university;
* banned from going to school;
* prohibited from leaving their homes unless accompanied by a husband, father, brother, or son;
* required when leaving their homes to be covered from head to toe in a 'burqa,' with only a mesh opening to see and breathe through;
* banned from wearing shoes that make noise;

in addition,

* homes with women are required to paint their windows opaque so the women inside cannot be seen.

Such conditions are tantamount to a life in solitary confinement, comparable to the worst of prison conditions here in the U.S. The penalty for defying any of these commands is stoning and death.

As a citizen of the United States, represented in these peace talks by Ambassador Richardson, I insist these issues be addressed. It is imperative that Ambassador Richardson bring a non-negotiable initiative for womens' rights to these talks.

thank you,

[ YOUR SIGNATURE HERE ***]

P.S., more information on the situation of women in Afghanistan is available at the Feminist Majority's website http://www.feminist.org

↑ Index

535. David Zauhar
Fw: lyotard's death (fwd)
Wed 22 Apr 1998

-----Original Message-----
From: [redacted] <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
<[redacted]>
Date: Tuesday, April 21, 1998 2:51 PM
Subject: lyotard's death

> Jean-Franois Lyotard, auteur de "La condition postmoderne", est mort dans la nuit de lundi mardi l'ge de 73 ans des suites d'une longue maladie, a annonc sa famille. N en 1924 Versailles, il avait milit au sein du groupe Socialisme ou Barbarie au ct de Cornlius Castoriadis et Claude Lefort jusqu'en 1966. Il tait l'auteur de "Discours, Figure" (1971), "Economie libidinale" (1974), "la condition postmoderne" (1979), "Le diffrend" (1984).
> --
> N. B. - La Republique des Lettres
> Site Web : http://perso.wanadoo.fr/republique.des.lettres/

↑ Index

536. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: Where are they now?
Wed 22 Apr 1998

According to my Armenian connections, Sotere Torregian is alive (is in his sixties) and lives in the Philadelphia area.

--Elizabeth Hatmaker

↑ Index

537. Gwyn McVay
Re: Where are they now?
Wed 22 Apr 1998

> obsurity,

I like this word and am going to muse it to mean "obscure absurdity" in the sense that it is absurd that a given poet should be so obscure...

Gwyn "I'm both" McVay

↑ Index

538. BETSY ANDREWS
Re: NYC APARTMENT SHARE POSSIBILITY
Wed 22 Apr 1998

Hey, Chris. We met at Cary Nation with Rachel, remember? Tell me more about the apt. I've got a friend who's coming back here in June from SF...

betsy
([redacted])

> From: louis stroffolino <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: NYC APARTMENT SHARE POSSIBILITY
> Date: Wednesday, April 22, 1998 10:32 AM
>
> For anybody moving to NYC, or thinking of moving IN NYC, > there is an apartment share available starting June 1st in Brklyn.
> It's a "room with a view" in which one may have "a room of ones > own"--or maybe even "two" (Not that one has to be a british > modernist). Backchannel for more information.....
> Thanks, chris stroffolino
>
> P.S.---the wfmu station is playing van morrison's
> "it's all over now baby blue"--so nice to hear that > riff without beck's soulless overdubbing.....
> c

↑ Index

539. BETSY ANDREWS
Re: Where are they now?
Wed 22 Apr 1998

Yo, Gwyn. What's up?

bets([redacted])

> From: Gwyn McVay <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Where are they now?
> Date: Wednesday, April 22, 1998 1:40 PM
>
> >>>obsurity,
>

> I like this word and am going to muse it to mean "obscure absurdity" in > the sense that it is absurd that a given poet should be so obscure...
>
>
> Gwyn "I'm both" McVay

↑ Index

540. Thomas Bell
Re: the "audience" . . ./
Wed 22 Apr 1998

Saved this until the info i was seeking surfaced inmy bookpile. I think your reply about 'reading' is worth expanding on, particularly in re visual poetry. When I am 'reading' a visual poem i am 'reading' a painting and my response is a kinetic body response as well as visual. Does someone who sees a visual poem out there without a body response really read it or is it just seen. might explain some peoples' less than enthusiastic responses to vispo?

info i whose surfacing i was awaiting is 2 books _Voice_ by David Appelbaum and _Reclaiming the Tacit Dimension_ by George Kalamaras, both of which have some interesting things to offer about noncognitive poetic processes. "Voicing existence is directed, not to the Cartesian ego, but to the membrane capable of perceiving existence; the propriceptive film upon which human conscious is based." - Appelbaum tom bell

At 09:07 AM 3/10/98 +0000, Miekal And wrote: >Nuyopoman wrote:
>
>
>> A poem is not written until you read it.
>
>
>so what of all those visual poems which defy reading/performance, the >ones that the "audience" absorbs thru internal & often non-cognitive >processes. for instance, clemente padin's signographics, when I spend >time with it, there is a "reading" involved, but for me its the semiotic >gestures I cue on, & the reading of it would be similar to "reading" a >rothko painting which seems to me separate from the mouth & its >spectacular affections.
>
>

↑ Index

541. morpheal
Re: Afghanistan
Wed 22 Apr 1998

> this pertains to the tacit issue of womens' rights in the current negotiations in Afghanistan; I'm sure it has something to do with poetry.
>
> However, I'm greatly concerned that the rights of Afghanistani women be addressed at the negotiating table, and I'm not sure that's happening now. As you may know, women in the regions of Afghanistan under Taliban control are:
>
>  banned from working outside the home;*
>  banned from attending university;*
>  banned from going to school;*
>  prohibited from leaving their homes unless accompanied by a husband, father, brother, or son;*
>  required when leaving their homes to be covered from head to toe in a 'burqa,' with only a mesh opening to see and breathe through;*
>  banned from wearing shoes that make noise;*
>
> in addition,
>
>  homes with women are required to paint their windows opaque so the women inside cannot be seen.*
>
> Such conditions are tantamount to a life in solitary confinement, comparable to the worst of prison conditions here in the U.S. The penalty for defying any of these commands is stoning and death.

FIRST OF ALL - so there are no wrong interpretations - I AGREE that that is horrible. That ought not to happen to human beings. However.....

That is actually indicative of Islamic fundamentalism.

You must realize that Islamic fundamentalists argue that such women choose freely, and consider themselves liberated by the tradition. Not only that, but they typically say if asked why they do it that they do it because they _like_ it.

The latter creates a terribly thorny problem in speaking for persons who themselves argue that they are choosing something that they themselves want to choose. While I agree with the sentiments, from a Western and modern North American standpoint, it is abhorrent, horrible, unthinkable that people would live in that manner, or be forced to conform to those kinds of standards, I am still perplexed as to how we, as foreigners, can in fact speak for a different culture ? Any ideas as to that ? It is a different culture. It has different values. Values _we_ do not agree with and would fight to the death to keep from being imposed on _us_, but they would fight to the death to have those values, as different as they are from our's. So, what do we do ? How do we reconcile our concepts of freedom with the their claiming that their differences from us are their expressions of freedom ? Big problem.

Do we in fact have a petition or some other claim by Afghanistani people alleging oppression and asking for foreign assistance to liberate them from that oppression ? Is there a request before the UN from a significant portion of the peoples of Afghanistan asking for intervention and liberation ?

Bigger problem if there is not.

Of course, I was one of the few who felt that the Soviet action in Afghanistan, as an attempt to prevent Islamic takeover of the region was justified, and that it is a tragedy that it became their Vietnam, rather than a victory for human rights and freedoms. Sadly the United States sided with the anti Soviet mostly Islamic rebels and so here we are today....asking the United States government to reverse its previous intentions and oppose the regime it helped put into power, even if covertly, in its supply of weapons to that regime against the Soviet army during the Afghan war ?

That too seems strange....

I have this odd feeling that world politics has become more and more of a "here we go round the mulberry bush, the mulberry bush...."

M.

↑ Index

542. Alan Myouka Sondheim
for Aram Saroyan from Nikuko Daishin
Wed 22 Apr 1998

-

fulllly skin

↑ Index

543. Aviva99999
Fwd: Amazon.com Books
Wed 22 Apr 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_893292938_boundary

In a message dated 98-04-22 14:54:00 EDT, [redacted] writes:

<< Subj: Amazon.com Books
Date: 98-04-22 14:54:00 EDT
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted] (Aviva99999)

Greetings!

We receive regular electronic updates to our online catalog from a variety of different sources including distributors, publishers, and independents. Many of these sources make this information available to retailers across the country. It is likely we obtained information on many of small press titles from one or more of these sources.

Please know that we in the catalog department are always trying to improve the quality of our catalogs listings. We work with many small presses each day. We actively help them add books to our catalog, update existing listings, and add descriptive materials.

If you have any additional questions or concerns please do not hesitate to contact us. Thanks for your interest in Amazon.com!

Best Regards,

Hannah Burke >>

--part0_893292938_boundary

air09.mail.aol.com (vx) with SMTP; Wed, 22 Apr 1998 14:54:00 -0400
by relay21.mx.aol.com (8.8.5/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with ESMTP id OAA00859 for <[redacted]>;
Wed, 22 Apr 1998 14:53:57 -0400 (EDT)
From: [redacted]
by amazon.com (8.8.5/8.8.5) with ESMTP id LAA31523
for <[redacted]>; Wed, 22 Apr 1998 11:53:57 -0700 (PDT)
(PDT)
LAA31680; Wed, 22 Apr 1998 11:29:54 -0700 (PDT)
Date: Wed, 22 Apr 1998 11:29:54 -0700 (PDT)
[redacted] using -f
To: Aviva99999 <[redacted]>
Subject: Amazon.com Books
from-address: [redacted]

Greetings!

We receive regular electronic updates to our online catalog from a variety of different sources including distributors, publishers, and independents. Many of these sources make this information available to retailers across the country. It is likely we obtained information on many of small press titles from one or more of these sources.

Please know that we in the catalog department are always trying to improve the quality of our catalogs listings. We work with many small presses each day. We actively help them add books to our catalog, update existing listings, and add descriptive materials.

If you have any additional questions or concerns please do not hesitate to contact us. Thanks for your interest in Amazon.com!

Best Regards,

Hannah Burke
Catalog Department
Amazon.com Books
http://www.amazon.com

>X-Mailer: AOL 3.0 for Windows 95 sub 64
>Subject: small press listings may be wrong?!?
>To: [redacted]
>Date: Fri, 17 Apr 1998 19:31:42 EDT
>From: Aviva99999 <[redacted]>
>
>I have some concerns about the following post I found online. I order (or try >to order) quite a few books which are published by small presses, and I have >been disappointed often by the dread "out of print." However, I assumed the >information was accurate. Now, I'm not so sure. Is there any efficient way >for amazon.com to check the accuracy of their database, perhaps by contacting >small presses with a letter advising them to check their booklistings' >accuracy on amazon.com's database? I mean, it would be in the presses' best >interests to be proactive. It would be in amazon.com's best interests to be >proactive as well.
>
>EXCERPT:
>
>Could this have anything to do with amazon.com getting information about >lots of small press books that those books were "out of print." Someone >alerted me that a Chax book listed with Amazon had that "out of print" >status according to amazon, when in fact it was most definitely in print. I >checked, and they had virtually all Chax books as out of print, which was >false. [This has been corrected by amazon.com]

>
>Others have told me that other small press books
>with Amazon are falsely listed as out of print.
>
>Chax started receiving a few orders from amazon.com
>whereas before that we had received no such orders from them.
>
>

--part0_893292938_boundary--

↑ Index

544. k. lederer
Re: Afghanistan
Wed 22 Apr 1998

Morpheal,

It seems to me that there is a big difference between the exercise of religious rights and freedoms... and being stoned to death for not practicing them!

How can you say that these people (women) "like" it? If they liked it so much, then why would the prohibitions need to be backed up by such horrible sanctions?

Katy

↑ Index

545. Margie Cronin
*Re: overland bits, call for submissions & launch*
Wed 22 Apr 1998

---

dear pam,
hi! margie cronin here. just a query: overland accepted a couple of my poems last year some time. may i just check if they're still using them (or have already) as i'm getting an acknowledgments page ready for a book and hadn't heard from overland in a while. thanks margie cronin
ps. i publish under mtc cronin

At 11:54 22/04/98 +1100, you wrote:
>>overland has passed the 150 mark, and is celebrating.
>>``//``''''''

>>
>>[2] Looking for, before 30 November 1998,essays, poetry, fiction, >>graphics, comics or hybrid work dealing with issues around
>> (a) privacy, censorship and media control; or >> (b) crime writing (all genres and modes, from detective >> thriller to tabloid reportage).
>>_____
>>
>>LAUNCH: overland Issue 150 will be launched at >> Melbourne Trades Hall
>> 9 May 1998 at 7.30 pm
>> with food and entertainment and
>> Big Wharfie Defence.
>> ALL WELCOME: waged $5; unwaged/student $4.
>>
>>
>>Queries: Ian Syson @ [redacted]
>>
>>http://dingo.vut.edu.au/~arts/cals/overland/overland.html
>>++++++

> From: [redacted]
> To: [redacted] (Aviva99999)
>
>
> Greetings!
>
> We receive regular electronic updates to our online catalog from a > variety of different sources including distributors, publishers, and > independents. Many of these sources make this information available to > retailers across the country. It is likely we obtained information on > many of small press titles from one or more of these sources.
>
> Please know that we in the catalog department are always trying to > improve the quality of our catalogs listings. We work with many small > presses each day. We actively help them add books to our catalog, update > existing listings, and add descriptive materials.
>
> If you have any additional questions or concerns please do not > hesitate to contact us. Thanks for your interest in Amazon.com!
>
>
> Best Regards,
>
> Hannah Burke >>
>
>Content-ID: <[redacted]_out.mail.aol.com.2>
>Content-type: message/rfc822
>Content-transfer-encoding: 7bit
>Content-disposition: inline
>
>Return-Path: <[redacted]> >Received: from relay21.mx.aol.com (relay21.mail.aol.com [172.31.106.67]) by > air09.mail.aol.com (vx) with SMTP; Wed, 22 Apr 1998 14:54:00 -0400 >Received: from amazon.com (154-31.amazon.com [204.177.154.31])
> by relay21.mx.aol.com (8.8.5/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
> with ESMTP id OAA00859 for <[redacted]>;
> Wed, 22 Apr 1998 14:53:57 -0400 (EDT)
>From: [redacted]
>Received: from zephyr.amazon.com (zephyr.amazon.com [204.177.154.23])
> by amazon.com (8.8.5/8.8.5) with ESMTP id LAA31523
> for <[redacted]>; Wed, 22 Apr 1998 11:53:57 -0700 (PDT)
>Received: by zephyr.amazon.com id LAA27705; Wed, 22 Apr 1998 11:53:55

-0700
> (PDT)
>Received: (from [redacted]) by barracuda.amazon.com (8.8.5/8.7.3) id
> LAA31680; Wed, 22 Apr 1998 11:29:54 -0700 (PDT)
>Date: Wed, 22 Apr 1998 11:29:54 -0700 (PDT)
>Message-Id: <[redacted]>
>X-Authentication-Warning: barracuda.amazon.com: hburke set sender to > [redacted] using -f
>To: Aviva99999 <[redacted]>
>Subject: Amazon.com Books
>from-address: [redacted]
>Mime-Version: 1.0
>Content-type: text/plain; charset=US-ASCII
>Content-transfer-encoding: 7bit
>
>
>Greetings!
>
>We receive regular electronic updates to our online catalog from a >variety of different sources including distributors, publishers, and >independents. Many of these sources make this information available to >retailers across the country. It is likely we obtained information on >many of small press titles from one or more of these sources.
>
>Please know that we in the catalog department are always trying to >improve the quality of our catalogs listings. We work with many small >presses each day. We actively help them add books to our catalog, update >existing listings, and add descriptive materials.
>
>If you have any additional questions or concerns please do not >hesitate to contact us. Thanks for your interest in Amazon.com!
>
>
>Best Regards,
>
>Hannah Burke
>Catalog Department
>Amazon.com Books
>http://www.amazon.com
>
>
> >X-Mailer: AOL 3.0 for Windows 95 sub 64

> >Subject: small press listings may be wrong?!?
> >To: [redacted]
> >Date: Fri, 17 Apr 1998 19:31:42 EDT
> >From: Aviva99999 <[redacted]>
> >
> >I have some concerns about the following post I found online. I order (or >try > >to order) quite a few books which are published by small presses, and I >have > >been disappointed often by the dread "out of print." However, I assumed >the > >information was accurate. Now, I'm not so sure. Is there any efficient >way > >for amazon.com to check the accuracy of their database, perhaps by >contacting
> >small presses with a letter advising them to check their booklistings' > >accuracy on amazon.com's database? I mean, it would be in the presses'
>best > >interests to be proactive. It would be in amazon.com's best interests to >be > >proactive as well.
> >
> >EXCERPT:
> >
> >Could this have anything to do with amazon.com getting information about > >lots of small press books that those books were "out of print." Someone > >alerted me that a Chax book listed with Amazon had that "out of print"
> >status according to amazon, when in fact it was most definitely in print. I > >checked, and they had virtually all Chax books as out of print, which was > >false. [This has been corrected by amazon.com]
> >
> >Others have told me that other small press books
> >with Amazon are falsely listed as out of print.
> >
> >Chax started receiving a few orders from amazon.com
> >whereas before that we had received no such orders from them.
> >
> >
>

↑ Index

547. Maz881
veitch
Wed 22 Apr 1998

Scott, Ron,

Last I heard, Tom Veitch was doing comics for marvel up in Varmint. I like his work a lot: death collage and a novel the title of which i'm blanking on but was published by z or sun. haven't seen any of the comics he's done. lewis warsh might know more about this as he if memory serves is the one to have told me about Veitch's recent whereabouts.

Hey. Gary Lenhart lives in Varmint. Gary, what's up with mr. Veitch?

Bill Luoma
Date: Tue, 21 Apr 1998 21:38:46 EDT
From: Scott Keeney <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Where are they now?

On Tue, 14 Apr 1998 05:34:37 -0500 [redacted] writes:
>A poet whose work I liked quite a bit during the late 60s, early 70s,
>was Tom
>Veitch, a NYC school (gen 3) poet with a strong spiritual >undercurrent. He was >in SF for awhile around the early to mid-70s and then moved, up to >Sonoma or >beyond I think. Does anyone know what the man is up to these days?
>
>
>Ron Silliman
>

Just waded through the past few daysworth of messages, disappointed not to see an answer posted. Veitch's bio-part in Padgett/Shapiro _Anthology of NY Poets_ has got to be one of the all-time best contributor's notes, between the tongue-out-eyes-up pic and that "awaiting the painful emergence of god in his flesh" bit, well. (BTW, if anyone has a copy of that book they want to unload for a few hundred pennies, but probably not.) Anyway, anyone know if Sotere Torregian is still alive? & while I'm here, if he published anything after _The Wounded Mattress_, which I was surprised to see is still listed in Books in Print?

Scott

↑ Index

548. ScoutEW
Re: for Aram Saroyan from Nikuko Daishin
Wed 22 Apr 1998

crickets
crickets
crickets
crickets
triscuits
triscuits tricksters
"lighghghgh

550. MAYHEW
Some queries
Thu 23 Apr 1998

Is it unhappy or happy families that are all alike?

Does anyone have e-mail addresses for the following poets:

William Carlos William?
Raymond Roussel
Yogi Berra
Jack Spicer?

Why is Spicer's ghost not present in _Poems for the Millenium_?

Who is "John" in Robert Creeley's "I know a man." Is his name really not John? What kind of car was it?

Who is Guillame Apollinaire in Berrigan's line "Guillame Apollinaire is dead"? What is "The Code of the West"?

What is the poetic significance of the ampersand in contemporary poetry? Should it be pronounced "and" or &? How about the quotation marks in _The Descent of Alette_--how are they pronounced and what do they mean?

Why are paragraphs emotional and sentences not? What is Chinese about "The Chinese Notebook"? Is it better to be vile or vile esteemed? Is it "Imaginary qualities of actual things" of "Actual qualities of imaginary things"? What is the difference?

Thanks in advance.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

551. Judy Roitman
Re: the "audience" . . ./
Thu 23 Apr 1998

> Saved this until the info i was seeking surfaced inmy bookpile. I think your reply about 'reading' is worth expanding on, particularly in re visual poetry. When I am 'reading' a visual poem i am 'reading' a painting and my response is a kinetic body response as well as visual. Does someone who sees a visual poem out there without a body response really read it or is it just seen. might explain some peoples' less than enthusiastic > responses to vispo?

>
> tom bell

kinetic body response, yes. To everything.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
---
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

552. Judy Roitman
Re: Afghanistan
Thu 23 Apr 1998

.
>
>You must realize that Islamic fundamentalists argue that such women >choose freely

In Afghanistan the women are not choosing freely, they are forced to give up daily activities that they chose, inasmuch as anyone chooses, freely.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
---
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

553. PRAPRA
define terms
Thu 23 Apr 1998

Hi everyone, I'm wondering if you could help me with some terminology. I just read an interesting essay which used the terms "supermodernity," and "non-place." While I understand the terms in relation to the essay, I want to use them more freely but am unclear as to how proper the context is for them. i.e. how do these terms relate to post-colonial theory? I apologize if this is a bit unclear but I don't have the article in front of me which basically discusses these terms in relation to airports,atms, technology, and identity. Basically, I am just asking you to associate what you know about these terms because I want to talk about them in relation to experimental theater. I want to discuss "non-place" as a point of departure for the artist but I may be just liking the term. Anyway, I just value some thoughts as well as the academics here who understand the contexts and will set me straight if I need to be. thank you, Prageeta Sharma.

↑ Index

554. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: Afghanistan
Thu 23 Apr 1998

Morpheal,

It sucks that we live in a time when every motivation can be used by "those in power" to control the lives of others. Indeed, to suggest that fundamental Islam is somehow an unreasonable choice for women is to remove their agency (a human right by most people's standards) and I suspect westoxification is one of the main reasons that fundamental Islam has had a resurgence.

And I see/fear how demanding "agency" is more cynically used (not that you seem to be doing this in your post) to condone both apathy and exploitation: "poor people like to live in the slums," "those people working in sweatshops make a decent living by third world standards and they took the job." "We should be taking care of people in this country before we worry about other countries"

And, of course, Pol Pot dies piecefully in his sleep --rhetorical hammer to the head that that statement is.

Can I think of who might gain by refraining from intervention in women's rights in Afghanistan? Might it be, creepily enough, the same people who might benefit by intervening in a different culture? If this is the case, what agency do these women have, both on an individual level and on a cultural level?

-- oh and apologies for my misinformation on Sotere Torrigian. As it is cold and rainy on the East Coast, living in California sounds much better than Philly.

Elizabeth Hatmaker

↑ Index

555. morpheal
Re: define terms
Thu 23 Apr 1998

> Hi everyone, I'm wondering if you could help me with some terminology. I just read an interesting essay which used the terms "supermodernity,"

I am not at all sure that I could seriously assist with that...but....

Supermodernity must be new ? Never seen the term in philosophical usage before, though I was quite familiar with postmodern in that sense of it.

Supermodernity comes after postmodernity ? Seems that we would then end up at Postsupermodernity ? What then ? Supersupermodernity ? Postsupersupermodernity ? Ad infinitum ?

> them more freely but am unclear as to how proper the context is for them. i.e. how do these terms relate to post-colonial theory?

What post-colonial theory ? Is someone referring to post British colonialism ? That came BEFORE modernity and post-modernism.

American colonialism ? That is only beginning in this latter 25 years of the 20th century. The zenith of American colonialism, whether for good or ill remains to be seen, shall be in the 21st century.

There are other colonialisms currently in the world. Islamic colonialism is the major one, exerting its influence mostly in Southern and Southeast Asia and in Africa. Though not exclusively there. There are Islamic colonies in America, today, mostly amongst black muslims. Similarly Islamic colonies in Europe and Britain.

Those are the two major colonial powers today and into the next century, the American, meaning the United States of America, and the Islamic (which is a looser but not necessarily more free association of states having common intentiosn and ideology)....

Marxist colonialism is dead as a doornail.

> to discuss "non-place" as a point of departure for the artist but I may be just liking the term. Anyway, I just value some thoughts as well as the academics here who understand the contexts and will set me straight if I need to be.

Is "non place" something essentially political ? Claims of geographic control are replaced by "non geographic" or "non place" economic and socio-political colonialism where control and influence do not have physical geographic boundaries. Art then would be tending to reflect that very tendency towards socio-political "non place" would it not ?

Though I know I have diverged from the original intentions, I think it is nevertheless relevant.

M.

↑ Index

556. morpheal
Re: Afghanistan
Thu 23 Apr 1998

> You must realize that Islamic fundamentalists argue that such women choose freely
>
> In Afghanistan the women are not choosing freely, they are forced to give up daily activities that they chose, inasmuch as anyone chooses, freely.

I see it that way too...as an outsider.

I also understand what psychological warfare and brain washing is about.

The element of a psychological "jihad" (holy war) is increasingly prevalent, and we get some of the mild backwash from the massive waves out there, that we hardly notice here in our sheltered harbours. They are absolutely swamped with it. Their minds become saturated. What then ?

Has anyone taken the matter to the United Nations ?

That is the appropriate forum for international debate on that subject.

Would you go so far as to empower a United Nations force, with sufficient military muscle, to effectively change the situation that you, and others, feel needs to be changed, if negotiated and mediated settlements fail to resolve the matter ? After all, mediation in political matters, is worthless without backing it up with military might sufficient to enforce.

Ultimately, as a last resort, to save and protect the freedoms of those people, in terms of safeguarding them from the jeopardies you see inflicted upon them, to end the physical and mental (brain washing) violence that imposes what you see as such harsh conditions, is it what you would choose to spill blood over ?

Do you see any viable alternatives ?

I agree that it is horrible. Definitely absolutely horrible. I am simply asking, how far are you willing to go, or do you suggest going, in terms of effective action ?

M.

↑ Index

557. Don Cheney
Re: veitch
Thu 23 Apr 1998

bill

it's EAT THIS! and THE LUIS ARMED STORY

and ANTLERS IN THE TREETOPS (w/ron padgett)

don

> Scott, Ron,
>
> Last I heard, Tom Veitch was doing comics for marvel up in Varmint. I like his work a lot: death collage and a novel the title of which i'm blanking on but was published by z or sun. haven't seen any of the comics he's done. lewis warsh might know more about this as he if memory serves is the one to have told me about Veitch's recent whereabouts.
>
> Hey. Gary Lenhart lives in Varmint. Gary, what's up with mr. Veitch?
>
> Bill Luoma
> ++
> Date: Tue, 21 Apr 1998 21:38:46 EDT
> From: Scott Keeney <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Where are they now?
>
> On Tue, 14 Apr 1998 05:34:37 -0500 [redacted] writes:
> A poet whose work I liked quite a bit during the late 60s, early 70s, was Tom > Veitch, a NYC school (gen 3) poet with a strong spiritual undercurrent. He was > in SF for awhile around the early to mid-70s and then moved, up to Sonoma or > beyond I think. Does anyone know what the man is up to these days?
>
> Ron Silliman
>
> Just waded through the past few daysworth of messages, disappointed not to see an answer posted. Veitch's bio-part in Padgett/Shapiro _Anthology of NY Poets_ has got to be one of the all-time best contributor's notes, between the tongue-out-eyes-up pic and that "awaiting the painful emergence of god in his flesh" bit, well. (BTW, if anyone has a copy of that book they want to unload for a few hundred pennies, but probably not.)
> Anyway, anyone know if Sotere Torregian is still alive? & while I'm here, if he published anything after _The Wounded Mattress_, which I was > surprised to see is still listed in Books in Print?

>
> Scott
> ++

↑ Index

558. daniel bouchard
Re: Jeff Conant
Thu 23 Apr 1998

Anselm Berrigan asked me to forward this to the list.

>
> As you probably know by now, Jeff & eleven others were banned for >life from Mexico last week & also accused of violating the Mexican >constitution. Jeff had been in touch with Greg Fuchs via e-mail & had told >Greg he thought something like this would happen soon, as the army had been >cracking down on zapatista-sympathetic villages around Chiapas for some >time. According to Jeff, they were rousted by about 1,000 soldiers in the >middle of the night. They were not officially arrested, but were taken from >the village forcibly & prevented from contacting anyone until a certain >point when they were allowed to contact the American consulate in order to >be deported. Jeff said they were punched, slapped & prodded with M-16s ("not >too hard") by soldiers, some of whom covered their faces. They were bruised >but not severely hurt, tho' Jeff's friend Michael had only stopped urinating >blood by this past Thursday.
> Jeff seemed pretty composed on Fri. night, but he's worried about >the Mexicans in the village where he'd been staying; reports were coming to >him that villagers were disappearing in large numbers & the village had been >mostly burned down. Jeff & his friends were working during the week at >finding out what was happening & also relaying this information to the >Mexican press, which apparently doesn't cover or doesn't have access to what >seems to be happening. None of the foreigners were allowed to take any of >their belongings with them; Jeff has been trying to figure out how to get >his laptop with all his writings back, but it didn't sound very likely.
> Apparently the crackdown came not too long after a Zapatista >ceremony during which a piece of land in Chiapas was declared autonomous.
>Jeff & the others claimed to be witnesses, to have been present at the >ceremony only as witnesses. They were, at least Jeff & the other two >Americans, part of an organization whose name escapes me but whose work is >that of agricultural development in the Indian regions of south Mexico. A >week or two before these events a friend of Jeff's, a Mexican in one of the >villages (possibly the village Jeff was staying in) was killed by a >soldier(s) who took a machete to his skull.

> Jeff is in Washington DC right now, having been flown along with >Michael & the other American, a woman named Travis, to DC for a conference >on Chiapas that had been previously scheduled. Jeff always said Chiapas was >in a state of undeclared war, & he was saying Fri. night that he thought a >full-fledged war was likely to break out in the coming weeks. According to >Jeff there has been no fighting on the part of the Zapatistas since the >initial uprising in 1994. He also said the Mexican govt. doesn't realize >that the number of Zapatista supporters (& I'm not sure if he meant chiapas >exclusively or the whole of Mexico) is in the range 0f 100,000. But he >doesn't think the Zapatistas themselves are well-equipped for any kind of >prolonged fighting. I suspect there will be more information forthcoming on >the whole situation. I may have some of the details slightly wrong, but I >think Jeff wants the information to be circulated as widely as possible.
>
>
<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

559. morpheal
Re: Afghanistan - Some prophecies....for the millenium
Thu 23 Apr 1998

> It sucks that we live in a time when every motivation can be used by "those in power" to control the lives of others. Indeed, to suggest that fundamental Islam is somehow an unreasonable choice for women is to remove their agency (a human right by most people's standards) and I suspect westoxification is one of the main reasons that fundamental Islam has had a resurgence.

The availability of hard and soft science, technology in effect, has furthered the conflict, mostly by providing the means of influence, and external control. Even highly educated people, if without very specialized experience and training, tend to be mere dupes to the systems in effect. Systems that are in effect even in the most "primitive" locations, such as Afghanistan. A lot of the tech is long range and hard to track down as to origins, and most of it is quite accessible "off the shelf" to those with the know how to build and use it.

I suppose the equivalent of Radio Free Europe is Radio Free Afghanistan, courtesty of a different source and different concepts of freedom. Tehran has strong interests in the whole region, so we can expect their support for Islamic fundamentalist broadcasting. Of course that is only one piece of the ideological pie, and there is a lot more to the covert and the overt activity than that.

Of course, American believed in RFE, and those who broadcast Islamic broadcasts and messages, by whatever means they happen to use, believe in that. There is the unresolvable conflict. They are willing to die for their beliefs and the rightness of what they do.

You can see where that leads.

They get a different poem, the Koran, running through their heads, over and over again, until they completely mesmerized by it and the accompanying message as to what is right, what one ought to do, how one ought to live.....

What poem would we replace their poem with ? Replacing it with the Bible ? That is as bad as what they do. Though some would argue otherwise.

What then ? The constitution of the USA or the Declaration of Independence ? That's a different poem. They would not understand a word of it, even in translation. They would only resent the strange, foreign, and to them essentially irrelevant, verses.

This is not the same world as in the year 900, but some hold to the same aggenda, using the new methods of conquest over human minds, customs, beliefs, ways of life. Heretics shall be stigmatized, persecuted, and put to death by means that will frighten others away from any dissent and heresy. Conquest of the human mind and conquest of the population are very much a part of any program towards hegemony in that region by those who empower selves by technology and force of arms, to impose their will upon it. Iran, as do other Islamic states, has great ambitions and sees itself as having a special mission in this world. Does that sound familiar as regards other would be or actual great powers ? Rome, Spain, Britain, America,...It is our history. They are no different, really. Another would be empire. Our history is the bloody and violent history of power against power, and empire against empire. It began as tribe against tribe. Nothing really poetic in that, or is there ?

The Soviets attempted to counter force with force, brain washing with brain washing,...and failed, suffering severe casualties and experiencing a political, economic and human wound the likes of which they had not seen since WWII. Many soldiers returned half insane, as well as physically the victims, of the conflict. It was a conflict on two levels. The mental and the physical. The Soviet effort had no European and American overt support, only criticism.

That is all indicative.

Worse that those areas least able to provide sustenance in the long term, are encouraged to rapid population growth. Why, we might ask ? The old principle of fodder for the guns. The machinery of conquest still involves highly brain washed, die hard, believers in an ideology who are willing to enter into imposition of their beliefs upon others by means of force of arms. If a power lacks enough guns and sophisticated weaponry, they choose force of numbers. They gamble that any opposition will flinch away from leaving a heap of dead bodies on the battle field of high principles. A million men wielding pitchforks is a formidable political weapon, no matter how we look at it. It is hard to send in the marines to kill them off, without suffering extreme political damage at home and abroad. So it is a dual force of numbers, as deterent and the planet can scrace afford such rapid population growth in its most fragile and least sustaining regions before something explodes violently. That is what we are faced with into the next century. That explosion of over population in regions encouraged to it by the ideological opposition to what we hold true.

If we do the same, as to our beliefs, there is always the argument that "might does not make right", and that "one is as bad as the other", or "two wrongs" to discourage the backing of intervention with effective power. And if nothing is done then what does it say ?

On the other hand pacifism local to the violence, as a reaction to violence, leaves the pacifist dead. That is victory for those who choose violence against pacifism. Mahatma Gandhi today is nothing more than a man who would sit in front of a tank and be crushed under its treads. More like a man attempting to stop a freight train. Gandhi would not have been spared in today's violent world.

Thus is it that all that is left are the principles, the basic beliefs, concerning human freedoms of belief, expression, the press, association, democratic institutions,....that we might be willing to use violence to uphold and safeguard as well as promote to other parts of the world in hope of some kind of salvation there before the kettle boils over and becomes that sea of deliberately overpopulated anger turned to a sea of blood. that is in part the legacy of Catholicism, Marxism and now Islamization of those parts of the world?

What are those who believe those human freedoms willing to put on the line ? There is that or isolationism. I do not know any other answer. I wish I did know another answer, but I cannot find any. In that sense George Bush was more right about the dangers than those who foresaw a less perilous course for the planet.

Remember too that economic embargos are very violent actions, and require military force to effectively impose and maintain them. They are a weapon of war in the cloak of diplomacy. They occur after diplomacy has already failed.

> And I see/fear how demanding "agency" is more cynically used (not that you seem to be doing this in your post) to condone both apathy and exploitation: "poor people like to live in the slums," "those people working in sweatshops make a decent living by third world standards and they took the job." "We should be taking care of people in this country before we worry about other countries"

It is horrible...what happens. There are no easy answers. Sometimes there are no answers of any kind.

> And, of course, Pol Pot dies piecefully in his sleep --rhetorical hammer to the head that that statement is.

What stirred up the Khmer Rouge to their orgy of blood and death ? I assure you it was NOT Pol Pot. Believe in such leaders if you want to, but they are only pawns in the larger scenario. It was, I have every reason to believe, Sino-Soviet involvement in the region, taking advantage of the local beliefs and conditions, that ultimately led to that bloodbath. Pol Pot was merely a dupe of a foreign power. Little more than that. A manipulated figurehead in that largest deadliest and most dangerous game.

Should a western, American led, force have gone in and occupied and pacified the region, returning it to sanity and democratic norms ? At what cost ?

Apply that same question to Afghanistan or anywhere else.

> Can I think of who might gain by refraining from intervention in women's rights in Afghanistan? Might it be, creepily enough, the same people who might benefit by intervening in a different culture? If this is the case, what agency do these women have, both on an individual level and on a cultural level?

I do not believe for a moment that women are the only sufferers.

All people there are the sufferers. The men, the women, and the children all suffer and shall suffer from it. Too much emphasis on what women suffer means that the difficulties there have not been well enough understood.

> -- oh and apologies for my misinformation on Sotere Torrigian. As it is cold and rainy on the East Coast, living in California sounds much better than Philly.>Elizabeth Hatmaker

I gave up listening to weather reports, long ago. Contrary to getting all the news I need on the weather report, there was far too much news on the weather reports...(apologies to Paul Simon)

Anyway, I like the weather in Canada, and apart from some instances of natural grandeur and architectural fascination, there is nothing that really attracts my interest south of the border. I am too poverty stricken to travel in the USA anyway, as much as I would like to see the sights someday. Being a visual artist, amongst other things, that is particularly difficult to accept as something I cannot really do anything about.

M.

↑ Index

560. Billy Little
He regrets that he has never been to Philadelphia.
Thu 23 Apr 1998

---

he never saw the final duchamp, why fields would rather be there and Camden across the river for Whitmaniacs

↑ Index

561. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Bachelard's take
Thu 23 Apr 1998

Morpheal--

I came across this and thought of our bookstore dx:

"A man is a man insofar as he is a superman. A man must be defined by the tendencies which impel him to go beyond the _human condition_. Any psychology of the mid in action is automatically the psychology of an exceptional midn, one tempted by the excetion of a new image grapfted upon an old one. The imagination invents more thatn things and actions, it invents new life, new spirit;it opens eyes to new types of vision. The imagination will see only if it has _visions_." (_On Poetic Imagination and Reverie_, p. 16)

I doubt I agree that such a mind has to be exceptional, perhaps it is such a spirit that is so in our Prozac nation. I always thought the great irony about activists is that they who are accused of being so cynical and sour are the most innocent really, always trying and trying again, in the manner of wiley coyote?

I think in the situation of women in Afganistan, like the situation of female genital mutilation, is one of conscience. If you are watching it and it strikes you it is torture, mustn't you reach out to stop it? I would just caution that before judging the tortures of other cultures we make sure we are vigilant of what is happening in our own. How many of us grew up in homes where there existed a conspiracy of silence around sexual, verbal or physical abuse?

rdl

↑ Index

562. MAYHEW
a more serious query
Thu 23 Apr 1998

My tongue in cheek inadvertently hit the list at a time more sombre issues are at the fore (sorry for those mixed metaphors).

I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through" various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca Variations_.

1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?

You may "British Columbia" me-- or post to the list if you think this might be of interest to others as well.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

563. k. lederer
EXPLOSIVE #5 BENEFIT
Thu 23 Apr 1998

The EXPLOSIVE #5 benefit has been scheduled! Mark your calenders:

Saturday, May 30th
8:00 pm
Segue Performance Space
NYC

EXPLOSIVE #5 will be featuring work by:

Emily Wilson, Martin Corless-Smith, Ishmael Klein, DA Powell, Josh May, Alex Cory, Tan Lin, Pam Lu, and Juliana Spahr

The benefit will feature readings by:

Jen Hofer, Max Winter, Anselm Berrigan.... and many many as yet unscheduled readers.....

COME!

↑ Index

564. L.MacMahon and T.R.Healy

Re: a more serious query

Thu 23 Apr 1998

It would be a shame not to mention _EVOBA_ by Steve McCaffery an exhilarating and subtle remodelling of Wittgenstein's Philosophical Investigations published by The Coach House Press Toronto in 1987.

Randolph Healy

A quote from EVOBA:

The writer enters with a sign around his neck that reads:

TAKE YOURSELF SERIOUSLY

there is a blank space where the faces of the audience should be he writes in that space about the spaces used to fill it:

_under the pen is a fish-mouth
inside the mouth is a stone in the stone runs a river entering a porch by a pebble fence

by the fence is another way which leads to a lake

over the lake a green parrot is made to fly

low and close to the level of a different lake

it is made to observe itself but it disappears beneath the surface of the word_ water

_the water in this space disappears_

a reader enters.

At 13:26 23/04/98 -0500, you wrote:
>My tongue in cheek inadvertently hit the list at a time more sombre issues >are at the fore (sorry for those mixed metaphors).
>
>I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in >which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book >or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through" >various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca >Variations_.
>
>1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
>2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?
>
>You may "British Columbia" me-- or post to the list if you think this >might be of interest to others as well.
>
>Jonathan Mayhew
>Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>University of Kansas
>[redacted]
>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

565. Billy Little
Re: a more serious query
Thu 23 Apr 1998

---

michael Ondaatje collected billy the kid sharon thesen's confabulations

↑ Index

566. Karen Kelley
Re: the situation of women in Afganistan
Thu 23 Apr 1998

Okay, this may sound/be politically incorrect, but here goes:

Rachel Levitsky wrote:

> If you are watching it > and it strikes you it is torture, mustn't you reach out to stop it? I > would just caution that before judging the tortures of other cultures we make sure we are vigilant of what is happening in our own.

I think we also have to admit & be aware of our lack of understanding of other cultures, for one thing. Perhaps a hallmark of our own culture is the need to intervene. The Islamic culture is deep and deeply foreign, at least to me, and it seems...well, American, to have this impulse to "fix" it. No doubt there is pain and oppression in Afganistan, but to think we can/should judge &/or "fix" it seems, I dunno...patriarchal?....presumptuous? Anyone who really feels MOVED by this issue ought to do some serious research into the LONG history that culminates in this situation we're so cavalier about dismissing as wrong wrong wrong.

↑ Index

567. Karen Kelley
oops, AfgHanistan
Thu 23 Apr 1998

See, I said I didn't know enough to challenge their culture!

↑ Index

568. Schuchat Simon
Re: a more serious query
Thu 23 Apr 1998

---

as for "writing through"

Ted Berrigan's THE COMPLETE PRELUDE is put together from Wordsworth's The Prelude in a manner similar to Johnson's RA D I OS etc, as is Berrigan's novel CLEAR THE RANGE which is a re-visioning of Max Brand.

↑ Index

569. morpheal
Re: He regrets that he has never been to Philadelphia.
Thu 23 Apr 1998

> he never saw the final duchamp, why fields would rather be there and Camden across the river for Whitmaniacs

I was there and did see the Duchamp. Museum of Art. Definitely worth seeing.

Camden, though, is one of the most squalid places on Earth. Almost a ruin of boarded up and falling down buildings. Street after street of them. People living in there. A quick turn around and back across the bridge into civilization....

M.

↑ Index

570. Gwyn McVay
"writing through"
Thu 23 Apr 1998

---

another example--has anyone already posted this? my server is out of order--if so I'll just have to blush--is Jackson Mac Low's /Words Nd Ends From Ez/, if I have that spelling right.

Gwyn

↑ Index

571. Stephen Cope
Re: "writing through"
Thu 23 Apr 1998

John Cage's works clearly fit into this genre, and as for more recent examples, there's Joel Kuzsai's ongoing work with Elizabethan materials (Meow's done some).

Stephen

↑ Index

572. Don Byrd
Re: a more serious query
Thu 23 Apr 1998

MAYHEW wrote:

> I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor.
>
> 1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?

Ron Johnson's _Rad i os_ (which is made by erasing pieces from Pa(radi)se L(os)t
Robert Kelly's _Mont Blanc_
And, of course, Mac Low's many homages

There are also Duncan's early setting to new meters of Shelley and Milton, a good chunk of the Cantos, writing through many different texts...

I just got an amazing book manuscript from Jed Rasula that includes a long poem (30 pages or more, that is selected words and phrases from James's _The Ambassadors_ in the order they appear in the original text). In fact, I should add, in case some of the publishers on the list are listening, this is one of the most important collections of poems I have seen in ten years.

As to genre, I am not sure this particular device constitutes a unified genre. Often they might be thought of as belonging to the homage, but that is not always the case, at least in any very direct sense, of _Radi os_. Perhaps the back-handed homage.

In a note to "The Ambassadors," Rasula says that he feels that in a work as gloriously multitudinous as James's, there are any number of other works waiting for someone to release them. Actually, I see that he says it much better than that: "The poem enacts a longstanding conviction that James's syntax, cadences and analogies subtly conspire to germinate works within his works which merit emanicpation to another order of events."

And, I see no reason why works, thus emancipated, should belong to a particular genre. It is perhaps not generic but an order of translation.

db

****
Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
Department of English
State University of New York
Albany, NY 12222
[redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
****

↑ Index

573. Hugh Steinberg
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Jonathon Mayhew writes:

>I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in >which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book >or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through"
>various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca >Variations_.
>
>1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
>2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?
>

I think there are two categories at work here: imitations/translations/ reenactments such as Stephen Berg's "With Akhmatova at the Black Gates" or Robert Lowell's "Imitations" and writing through or overwriting, where a poet takes a text and creates a new text by erasing portions of it. My two favorite examples of this genre are Ronald Johnson's "Radi Os" and Tom Phillips's "A Humument."

Has any critical work been done on or about erasure-type poems?

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

574. Miekal And
codex "writing through"
Fri 24 Apr 1998

my book RAW.SWAY.ALOUD is reconstructed from the Modoc-English dictionary of 1909.

my book 21 Refrains from Body Laws was channelled (ala Hannah some years before I met her) from the OED.

Xexoxial publishes Crag Hill's book Dict which likewise is a very pristine rereading of dictionary fragments.

back to planting

miekal

↑ Index

575. Marcella Durand
Chiapas
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Dan & Anselm--thanks for posting what's going on. It's important to be made aware of it. Jeff & friends sound amazingly courageous in the face of "urinating blood" and being prodded with rifles, as well as losing writings. Keep us posted.

↑ Index

576. rsillima
The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Jonathon Mahew's question about the lack of Spicer in Poems for the Millenium (vol. 2) is a good one, given that if you reduced the last 50 years of English language poetry to just, say, 20 people, Spicer would have to be among them. Maybe even to 10 people. Maybe even to five.

It's really devastating for the book's credibility, even more than the inclusion of anyone who ever attended a Fluxus event (or the inclusion of songwriters a la Tom Waits, Robert Johnson and Dizzy Gillespie, all of which makes them seem like doofuses, which none ever were [not to mention the thereby curious absence of Jim Morrison or Leonard Cohen or Nanci Griffith or Public Enemy or Lennon & McCartney or the Glimmer Twins or Bob Dylan, if one is seriously trying to include the antipoetics of song]).

But Spicer's absence, even tho it's on a scale of missing Stein or Pound, isn't alone. I note the following omissions: Benson, Brautigan, Bromige, Bronk, Ceravolo, Thomas A. Clark, Corbett, Curnow [father & son], Dahlen, Darragh, Davey, Davidson, Dewdney, Dudek, Estrin, Fraser, Grahn, Grenier, Guest, Hickman, Hocquard, F. Howe, Inman, Ron Johnson, Jonas, Koch, Kulik, Kyger, Lansing, Mandel, Marlatt, Melnick, Moriarty, Mullen, Natambu, Padgett, Parshchikov, Pearson, Pickard, Pleynet, Prigov, Robinson, Roche, Roubaud, Schuyler, Scott, Stanford, Stanley, Thomas, Tomlinson, Tysh (either one), Wah, Welch, Jonathon Williams, Zhdanov.... And that's just a one-time perusal of the index and the glaringly obvious omissions from traditions I have some feel for. One can probably make the argument that the book is also amazingly Americocentric, tho the roster above wouldn't particularly solve that problem.

This really isn't a Pierre & Jerry issue, tho the Spicerlessness of it all is a "gotcha" that foregrounds the problem. In the American Tree is certainly vulnerable to the question of why McCaffery or Dahlen or Scalapino, say, are not there. And the absence of Joanne Kyger, easily the most influential progressive woman poet of the 1960s and '70s, from Moving Borders is every bit as much a boggler as Spicer's lacuna here.

Anthologies are, in this sense, impossible. Everyone is going to have a blind spot, since the last I checked everyone was still human and full of such frailty. It's why I used such a sociological definition for determining inclusion in the Tree. Tho, of the poets who met the formal terms I used, I still managed to miss Abby Child, which looks really dumb from the hindsight of 14 years.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

577. Pierre Joris
Re: "writing through"
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Robert Kelly's _Mont Blanc_ (a writing-through of Shelley's poem of the same title). My own _Reading/Writing_ sequences in _Breccia_. & many many others. -- Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

578. Hank Lazer
Re: "writing through"
Fri 24 Apr 1998

---

see also "H's Journal" (in my _3 of 10_, Chax Press) -- autobiography, journal, poem via Henry David Thoreau's Journal and the writings of various other H's...

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

579. Douglas Barbour
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Jonathan Mayhew asks:

<<I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through" various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca Variations_.

1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?>>

1. Something similar is going on in the work of bpNichol or Steve Mccaffery when they 'translate' writing already in English, as in McCaffery's wonderful _Intimate Distortions: a displacement of Sappho_ which rewrote Mary Barnard's translations of Sappho.

2. The term for this is 'homolinguistic translation,' which Stephen Scobie & I also used in our collection of same, _The Pirates of Pen's Chance_. Others have tried various forms of same. It is both homage & inheritence, a new poem made out of, somehow, an older one.

Homolinguistic translation is not the only way this is done, but it is great fun.

There's also George Bowering's _Kerrisdale Elegies_, a re/vision from contemporary Vancouver of Rilke's great poem.

If I had time I'm sure I could think of more...Zukofsky's Catullus work, for example, surely set an example for some of what I'm pointing to here...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

LITTORAL EXPLORATIONS >OUT OF IMAGE<: convergences of sound, speech and the seen

Alaric Sumner (words/voice) and John Levack Drever (electroacoustic sound-scapes) talk about 'out of image (sandra blow)', their site specific collaboration created in response to, and perfomed with, the paintings/collages of Sandra Blow RA during her exhibition at the New Millennium, St. Ives on 25 July 1997. A St Ives Quality of Light (Peninsula Project) event.

5pm PTC, Control Room 1: Complete CD will be played 6pm Higher Close M.R.: Seminar (with selections from CD)

mailto:[redacted]

Performance Writing
Dartington College of Arts
Totnes
Devon TQ9 5SQ

http://www.dartington.ac.uk/prospectus/pw.html

↑ Index

581. Judy Roitman
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

> Jonathan Mayhew asks:
>
> <<I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through" various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca Variations_.
>
> 1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
> 2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?>>
>
> 1. Something similar is going on in the work of bpNichol or Steve Mccaffery when they 'translate' writing already in English, as in McCaffery's wonderful _Intimate Distortions: a displacement of Sappho_ which rewrote Mary Barnard's translations of Sappho.
>
> 2. The term for this is 'homolinguistic translation,' which Stephen Scobie & I also used in our collection of same, _The Pirates of Pen's Chance_. Others have tried various forms of same. It is both homage & inheritence, a new poem made out of, somehow, an older one.
>
> Homolinguistic translation is not the only way this is done, but it is > great fun.

>
> There's also George Bowering's _Kerrisdale Elegies_, a re/vision from contemporary Vancouver of Rilke's great poem.
>
> If I had time I'm sure I could think of more...Zukofsky's Catullus work, for example, surely set an example for some of what I'm pointing to here...
>
> ==========
> Douglas Barbour

I think we may have slipped into another category, but Anne Carson's translations of whoever begin to fit. (Not sure how many have appeared in books, over the years have appeared in print.)

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

582. sylvester pollet

Poetry/Jazz event

Fri 24 Apr 1998

Tonight in Bangor, Maine, 8:00. Kathleen Lignell Ellis, Terrell Hunter, John Burns, Sylvester Pollet, reading their own stuff & work of others with music of Dr. Jay Bregman & his Neoboppers--Welch Everman, trumpet, Jim Frick , guitar & congas, Dr. Jay, alto, and Bart-the-bass. I'm going to read two poems of Stuart Z. Perkoff in the first set:" Bird, an elegy for charles parker, musician," and "Blues for Billie Holiday." Second set a new piece of mine, "First Will & Testament." The Perkoff pieces come from his forthcoming book Voices of the Lady: Collected Poems. National Poetry Foundation, 1998. It's a terrific book, 475 pages, foreword by Creeley. We just received advance review copies--the book will be out officially in July. To respond belatedly on the "what to do with 'bad' words in a kid-laden environment" thread: I'm muting two words in the Bird poem--cock to joint, and fucking to humping. Normally I'm a total purist on such matters, but in this instance a lot of parents & kids will be hearing it, miked, by accident--not by having chosen to go to an arts event. Stuart-in-heaven, I apologize. Welch will be muting his horn, too.

↑ Index

583. groberts
Re: "writing through"
Fri 24 Apr 1998

What about a poem such as Zukofsky's sestina "Mantis" and its companion poem "An Interpretation"? If one thinks that it is a good idea to consider "writing-through" poems as part of a genre, then these two poems along with many other examples of intertextual poetics should complicate or at least make more interesting the task of defining the rules of selection for such a genre. Is writing-through different than quotation or allusion? What about Zuk's uses of Marx's Capital?

Gary R.

↑ Index

584. Mark Prejsnar
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

I'm a little startled that only one response has so far mentioned Mac Low...(and then just one of his pieces that writes through); to myself and a number of acquaintances, Mac Low is the exemplary instance of really interesting writing-through strategies...

There is an interesting difference between basing a work of poetry on a "privileged text," such as Virgina Woolf, and a humble text...Different implied weights, attitudes, different tonalities about the democracy or otherwise of writing. An example of using a humble text (and it is an astonishing, very exciting poem) is Sentences, by Charles O. Hartman and Hugh Kenner, which is based on a nineteenth-century elementary school usage primer, manipulated using two computer programs written by the poets.

The Atlanta poet John Lowther frequently uses writing-through techniques, and some of his work, derived from secondary texts on Duchamp (and part of a large work-in-progress related to Duchamp) will be appearing Misc. Proj. These utilize the "stoppage" forms Duchamp used in his work, and are a complex, jazzy sequence of lyrics called Stoppages.

Finally, I may be about to shock Bill Freind a bit as he may not have quite received my reply, but I'd mention some recent work of his, utilizing synonymic parallel structures to manipulate well-know anthology pieces (Robert Frost, Richard Wilbur) as some of the funniest and lovliest writing I've seen in a while; some will appear in Misc. Proj, and hopefully others will show up elsewhere....

Mark Prejsnar
@lanta

↑ Index

585. ScoutEW
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Silliman give em a break.. if you think there should be inclusions then go edit your own anthology..

↑ Index

586. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

I'd agree that anthologizing (and editing anything, for that matter) is very personal, as Silliman's list, also full of exclusions, indicates.

Maxine Chernoff

On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, ScoutEW wrote:

> Silliman give em a break.. if you think there should be inclusions then go edit your own anthology..

↑ Index

587. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

More writing through in Paul Hoover's Viridian where "South of X" is written from his own Viet Nam novel, Saigon, Illinois, and several other pieces are written through Duras "The Lover" and James M. Cain's "Postman Always Rings Twice." Maxine Chernoff

On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, Taylor Brady wrote:

> The list might include, off the top of my head and allowing for rather permeable boundaries between "writing-through" and criticism; poetry and fiction; homages to single authors and works that, cento-like, string together quotes from / readings of multiple sources:
>
> Kathy Acker -- prominent placement of Genet and William Gibson texts in Empire of the Senseless, Faulkner in In Memoriam to Identity

> Bruce Andrews' Dante project (title escapes me at present)
>
> Dodie Bellamy -- The Letters of Mina Harker (ok, based on what I've read so far, Dracula is more a jumping-off point than a constant reference -- but it ain't Mina Harker for nothing)
>
> Robin Blaser -- most of the Image-Nations poems, "Great Companions," the Nerval translations
>
> my own Is Placed / Leaves
>
> Clark Coolidge -- The Rova Improvisations and liner notes to ROVA's album The Crowd (do musicians count in this?)
>
> Samuel R. Delany -- Atlantis: Model 1924
>
> Rachel Blau DuPlessis -- most any of the Drafts
>
> Dan Farrell's writing-through of Bucky Fuller (http://www.erols.com/dfar -- I think that's right)
>
> Bill Griffiths -- Rousseau and the Wicked
>
> Alan Halsey -- A Robin Hood Book and The Text of Shelley's Death
>
> Lyn Hejinian -- Oxota: A Short Russian Novel (shades of Evgeny Onegin)
>
> Joel Kuszai's recent work with the various Renaissance anthologies, which I believe someone else here mentioned
>
> Alice Notley -- Homer's Art and the subsequent epic writing in White Phosphorus and The Descent of Alette
>
> Stephen Ratcliffe -- Campion On Song
>
> Charles Reznikoff's Biblical adaptations
>
> Viktor Shklovsky -- the Cervantes and Laurence Sterne chapters in Theory of Prose
>
> Jalal Toufic -- Over-Sensitivity (if film might be counted as a "source text")
>
> Rosmarie Waldrop -- The Reproduction of Profiles and Lawn of Excluded Middle (Wittgenstein)
>
> Rosmarie and Keith Waldrop -- "Words Worth Less" (well, you know . . .)

Louis Zukofsky -- Bottom: On Shakespeare

For most of these, I would wholly agree with Don Byrd that the attempt to assign a genre seems a shaky proposition at best. One might instead look at the ways such work seeks to reconfigure and destabilize genre. One of the projects of the writing-through / adaptation / homage as practiced by these writers would seem to be the elaboration of a poetics of reading which avoids, on the one hand, an historically-naive voluntarism of the creative act (these are derivative works in Duncan's sense of that term), and, on the other, a fatalistic relation to the sedimented detritus of that history -- genre, tradition, etc. For many of these writers, I see this happening by a dispersal and relocation of genre from the level of structure (the already-achieved within which one writes) to that of construction (the still-contested with which one writes).

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

MAYHEW wrote:

My tongue in cheek inadvertently hit the list at a time more sombre issues are at the fore (sorry for those mixed metaphors).

I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through" various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca Variations_.

1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?

You may "British Columbia" me-- or post to the list if you think this might be of interest to others as well.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

588. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

---

seems like we're talking intertextuality by now; jonathan, i assume u had something more specific in mind?

At 11:28 AM 4/24/98, Taylor Brady wrote:
>The list might include, off the top of my head and allowing for rather >permeable boundaries between "writing-through" and criticism; poetry and >fiction; homages to single authors and works that, cento-like, string >together quotes from / readings of multiple sources:
>
>Kathy Acker -- prominent placement of Genet and William Gibson texts in >Empire of the Senseless, Faulkner in In Memoriam to Identity
>
>Bruce Andrews' Dante project (title escapes me at present)
>
>Dodie Bellamy -- The Letters of Mina Harker (ok, based on what I've read so >far, Dracula is more a jumping-off point than a constant reference -- but it >ain't Mina Harker for nothing)
>
>Robin Blaser -- most of the Image-Nations poems, "Great Companions," the >Nerval translations
>
>my own Is Placed / Leaves
>
>Clark Coolidge -- The Rova Improvisations and liner notes to ROVA's album The >Crowd (do musicians count in this?)
>
>Samuel R. Delany -- Atlantis: Model 1924
>
>Rachel Blau DuPlessis -- most any of the Drafts
>
>Dan Farrell's writing-through of Bucky Fuller (http://www.erols.com/dfar --
>I think that's right)
>
>Bill Griffiths -- Rousseau and the Wicked
>
>Alan Halsey -- A Robin Hood Book and The Text of Shelley's Death
>
>Lyn Hejinian -- Oxota: A Short Russian Novel (shades of Evgeny Onegin)

>
>Joel Kuszai's recent work with the various Renaissance anthologies, which I >believe someone else here mentioned
>
>Alice Notley -- Homer's Art and the subsequent epic writing in White >Phosphorus and The Descent of Alette
>
>Stephen Ratcliffe -- Campion On Song
>
>Charles Reznikoff's Biblical adaptations
>
>Viktor Shklovsky -- the Cervantes and Laurence Sterne chapters in Theory of >Prose
>
>Jalal Toufic -- Over-Sensitivity (if film might be counted as a "source >text")
>
>Rosmarie Waldrop -- The Reproduction of Profiles and Lawn of Excluded Middle >(Wittgenstein)
>
>Rosmarie and Keith Waldrop -- "Words Worth Less" (well, you know . . .)
>
>Louis Zukofsky -- Bottom: On Shakespeare
>
>For most of these, I would wholly agree with Don Byrd that the attempt to >assign a genre seems a shaky proposition at best. One might instead look at >the ways such work seeks to reconfigure and destabilize genre. One of the >projects of the writing-through / adaptation / homage as practiced by these >writers would seem to be the elaboration of a poetics of reading which >avoids, on the one hand, an historically-naive voluntarism of the creative >act (these are derivative works in Duncan's sense of that term), and, on the >other, a fatalistic relation to the sedimented detritus of that history -- >genre, tradition, etc. For many of these writers, I see this happening by a >dispersal and relocation of genre from the level of structure (the >already-achieved within which one writes) to that of construction (the >still-contested with which one writes).
>
>-- Taylor Brady
>editor, Cartograffiti
> http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti
>

>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
> http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc
>
>MAYHEW wrote:
>
>> My tongue in cheek inadvertently hit the list at a time more sombre issues
>> are at the fore (sorry for those mixed metaphors).
>>
>> I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in >> which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book >> or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through"
>> various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca >> Variations_.
>>
>> 1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
>> 2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?
>>
>> You may "British Columbia" me-- or post to the list if you think this >> might be of interest to others as well.
>>
>> Jonathan Mayhew
>> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>> University of Kansas
>> [redacted]
>> [redacted]
>
>
>
><HTML>
><BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600"
>ALINK="#FF0000">
>The list might include, off the top of my head and allowing for rather >permeable boundaries between "writing-through" and criticism; poetry and >fiction; homages to single authors and works that, cento-like, string together >quotes from / readings of multiple sources:
>
><P>Kathy Acker -- prominent placement of Genet and William Gibson texts >in <I>Empire of the Senseless</I>, Faulkner in <I>In Memoriam to >Identity</I><I></I>
>
><P>Bruce Andrews' Dante project (title escapes me at present)

>
><P>Dodie Bellamy -- <I>The Letters of Mina Harker</I> (ok, based on what >I've read so far, <I>Dracula </I>is more a jumping-off point than a constant >reference -- but it ain't Mina Harker for nothing)
>
><P>Robin Blaser -- most of the <I>Image-Nations</I> poems, "Great Companions,"
>the Nerval translations
>
><P>my own <I>Is Placed / Leaves</I>
>
><P>Clark Coolidge -- <I>The Rova Improvisations</I> and liner notes to >ROVA's album <I>The Crowd</I> (do musicians count in this?)
>
><P>Samuel R. Delany -- <I>Atlantis: Model 1924</I>
>
><P>Rachel Blau DuPlessis -- most any of the <I>Drafts</I>
>
><P>Dan Farrell's writing-through of Bucky Fuller (<A >HREF="http://www.erols.com/dfar">http://www.erols.com/dfar
></A>-- I think that's right)
>
><P>Bill Griffiths -- <I>Rousseau and the Wicked</I><I></I>
>
><P>Alan Halsey -- <I>A Robin Hood Book </I>and <I>The Text of Shelley's >Death</I><I></I>
>
><P>Lyn Hejinian -- <I>Oxota: A Short Russian Novel</I> (shades of <I>Evgeny >Onegin</I>)
>
><P>Joel Kuszai's recent work with the various Renaissance anthologies, >which I believe someone else here mentioned
>
><P>Alice Notley -- <I>Homer's Art</I> and the subsequent epic writing in
><I>White Phosphorus</I> and <I>The Descent of Alette</I><I></I>
>
><P>Stephen Ratcliffe -- <I>Campion On Song</I><I></I>
>
><P>Charles Reznikoff's Biblical adaptations
>
><P>Viktor Shklovsky -- the Cervantes and Laurence Sterne chapters in

<I>Theory >of Prose</I><I></I>
>
><P>Jalal Toufic -- <I>Over-Sensitivity</I> (if film might be counted as >a "source text")
>
><P>Rosmarie Waldrop -- <I>The Reproduction of Profiles </I>and <I>Lawn >of Excluded Middle</I> (Wittgenstein)
>
><P>Rosmarie and Keith Waldrop -- "Words Worth Less" (well, you know . .
>.)
>
><P>Louis Zukofsky -- <I>Bottom: On Shakespeare</I><I></I>
>
><P>For most of these, I would wholly agree with Don Byrd that the attempt >to assign a genre seems a shaky proposition at best. One might instead >look at the ways such work seeks to reconfigure and destabilize genre.
>One of the projects of the writing-through / adaptation / homage as practiced >by these writers would seem to be the elaboration of a poetics of reading >which avoids, on the one hand, an historically-naive voluntarism of the >creative act (these are derivative works in Duncan's sense of that term), >and, on the other, a fatalistic relation to the sedimented detritus of >that history -- genre, tradition, etc. For many of these writers, I see >this happening by a dispersal and relocation of genre from the level of >structure (the already-achieved <I>within</I> which one writes) to that >of construction (the still-contested <I>with</I> which one writes).
>
><P>-- Taylor Brady
>
editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>
>
 <A >HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http:/ >/writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>
>
><P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
>
 <A >HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://wings.buffal o
>.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>
>
><P>MAYHEW wrote:
><BLOCKQUOTE TYPE=CITE>My tongue in cheek inadvertently hit the list at >a time more sombre issues

>
are at the fore (sorry for those mixed metaphors).
>
><P>I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre >in
>
which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D.
>book
>
or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through"
>
various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca
>
Variations_.
>
><P>1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
>
2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?
>
><P>You may "British Columbia" me-- or post to the list if you think this
>
might be of interest to others as well.
>
><P>Jonathan Mayhew
>
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>
University of Kansas
>
[redacted]
>
[redacted]</BLOCKQUOTE>
>
></BODY>
></HTML>

↑ Index

589. Taylor Brady

Re: a more serious query

Fri 24 Apr 1998

The list might include, off the top of my head and allowing for rather permeable boundaries between "writing-through" and criticism; poetry and fiction; homages to single authors and works that, cento-like, string together quotes from / readings of multiple sources:

Kathy Acker -- prominent placement of Genet and William Gibson texts in Empire of the Senseless, Faulkner in In Memoriam to Identity

Bruce Andrews' Dante project (title escapes me at present)

Dodie Bellamy -- The Letters of Mina Harker (ok, based on what I've read so far, Dracula is more a jumping-off point than a constant reference -- but it ain't Mina Harker for nothing)

Robin Blaser -- most of the Image-Nations poems, "Great Companions," the Nerval translations

my own Is Placed / Leaves

Clark Coolidge -- The Rova Improvisations and liner notes to ROVA's album The Crowd (do musicians count in this?)

Samuel R. Delany -- Atlantis: Model 1924

Rachel Blau DuPlessis -- most any of the Drafts

Dan Farrell's writing-through of Bucky Fuller (http://www.erols.com/dfar -- I think that's right)

Bill Griffiths -- Rousseau and the Wicked

Alan Halsey -- A Robin Hood Book and The Text of Shelley's Death

Lyn Hejinian -- Oxota: A Short Russian Novel (shades of Evgeny Onegin)

Joel Kuszai's recent work with the various Renaissance anthologies, which I believe someone else here mentioned

Alice Notley -- Homer's Art and the subsequent epic writing in White Phosphorus and The Descent of Alette

Stephen Ratcliffe -- Campion On Song

Charles Reznikoff's Biblical adaptations

Viktor Shklovsky -- the Cervantes and Laurence Sterne chapters in Theory of Prose

Jalal Toufic -- Over-Sensitivity (if film might be counted as a "source text")

Rosmarie Waldrop -- The Reproduction of Profiles and Lawn of Excluded Middle (Wittgenstein)

Rosmarie and Keith Waldrop -- "Words Worth Less" (well, you know . . .)

Louis Zukofsky -- Bottom: On Shakespeare

For most of these, I would wholly agree with Don Byrd that the attempt to assign a genre seems a shaky proposition at best. One might instead look at the ways such work seeks to reconfigure and destabilize genre. One of the projects of the writing-through / adaptation / homage as practiced by these writers would seem to be the elaboration of a poetics of reading which avoids, on the one hand, an historically-naive voluntarism of the creative act (these are derivative works in Duncan's sense of that term), and, on the other, a fatalistic relation to the sedimented detritus of that history -- genre, tradition, etc. For many of these writers, I see this happening by a dispersal and relocation of genre from the level of structure (the already-achieved within which one writes) to that of construction (the still-contested with which one writes).

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

MAYHEW wrote:

> My tongue in cheek inadvertently hit the list at a time more sombre issues are at the fore (sorry for those mixed metaphors).
>
> I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through" various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca Variations_.
>
> 1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
> 2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?
>
> You may "British Columbia" me-- or post to the list if you think this might be of interest to others as well.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

<HTML> <BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000"> The list might include, off the top of my head and allowing for rather permeable boundaries between "writing-through" and criticism; poetry and fiction; homages to single authors and works that, cento-like, string together quotes from / readings of multiple sources:

<P>Kathy Acker -- prominent placement of Genet and William Gibson texts in <I>Empire of the Senseless</I>, Faulkner in <I>In Memoriam to Identity</I><I></I>

<P>Bruce Andrews' Dante project (title escapes me at present)

<P>Dodie Bellamy -- <I>The Letters of Mina Harker</I> (ok, based on what I've read so far, <I>Dracula </I>is more a jumping-off point than a constant reference -- but it ain't Mina Harker for nothing)

<P>Robin Blaser -- most of the <I>Image-Nations</I> poems, "Great Companions," the Nerval translations

<P>my own <I>Is Placed / Leaves</I>

<P>Clark Coolidge -- <I>The Rova Improvisations</I> and liner notes to ROVA's album <I>The Crowd</I> (do musicians count in this?)

<P>Samuel R. Delany -- <I>Atlantis: Model 1924</I>

<P>Rachel Blau DuPlessis -- most any of the <I>Drafts</I>

<P>Dan Farrell's writing-through of Bucky Fuller (<A HREF="http://www.erols.com/dfar">http://www.erols.com/dfar </A>-- I think that's right)

<P>Bill Griffiths -- <I>Rousseau and the Wicked</I><I></I>

<P>Alan Halsey -- <I>A Robin Hood Book </I>and <I>The Text of Shelley's Death</I><I></I>

<P>Lyn Hejinian -- <I>Oxota: A Short Russian Novel</I> (shades of <I>Evgeny Onegin</I>)

<P>Joel Kuszai's recent work with the various Renaissance anthologies, which I believe someone else here mentioned

<P>Alice Notley -- <I>Homer's Art</I> and the subsequent epic writing in <I>White Phosphorus</I> and <I>The Descent of Alette</I><I></I>

<P>Stephen Ratcliffe -- <I>Campion On Song</I><I></I>

<P>Charles Reznikoff's Biblical adaptations

<P>Viktor Shklovsky -- the Cervantes and Laurence Sterne chapters in <I>Theory of Prose</I><I></I>

<P>Jalal Toufic -- <I>Over-Sensitivity</I> (if film might be counted as a "source text")

<P>Rosmarie Waldrop -- <I>The Reproduction of Profiles </I>and <I>Lawn of Excluded Middle</I> (Wittgenstein)

<P>Rosmarie and Keith Waldrop -- "Words Worth Less" (well, you know . . .)

<P>Louis Zukofsky -- <I>Bottom: On Shakespeare</I><I></I>

<P>For most of these, I would wholly agree with Don Byrd that the attempt to assign a genre seems a shaky proposition at best. One might instead look at the ways such work seeks to reconfigure and destabilize genre. One of the projects of the writing-through / adaptation / homage as practiced by these writers would seem to be the elaboration of a poetics of reading which avoids, on the one hand, an historically-naive voluntarism of the creative act (these are derivative works in Duncan's sense of that term), and, on the other, a fatalistic relation to the sedimented detritus of that history -- genre, tradition, etc. For many of these writers, I see this happening by a dispersal and relocation of genre from the level of structure (the already-achieved <I>within</I> which one writes) to that of construction (the still-contested <I>with</I> which one writes).

<P>-- Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>

<P>MAYHEW wrote:
<BLOCKQUOTE TYPE=CITE>My tongue in cheek inadvertently hit the list at a time more sombre issues are at the fore (sorry for those mixed metaphors).

<P>I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through"

various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca

Variations_.

<P>1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?

<P>You may "British Columbia" me-- or post to the list if you think this might be of interest to others as well.

<P>Jonathan Mayhew

Department of Spanish and Portuguese

University of Kansas

[redacted]

[redacted]</BLOCKQUOTE>

</BODY>
</HTML>

----------01682A7B320A15A797591EE2--

↑ Index

590. Robert Hale
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

If it's "very personal", then I'm afraid it's VERY POLITICAL as well.

I haven't read the Millennium II, but I did give a glowing review (in the St. Mark's News Letter) to the first volume, precisely because of its contents.

I have to admit, from my perspective, Silliman's list does not bode well for Vol.2. Preconceptions aside, I guess I'd better get a copy and review it, as well.

At 08:53 AM 4/24/98 -0700, you wrote:
>I'd agree that anthologizing (and editing anything, for that matter) is >very personal, as Silliman's list, also full of exclusions, indicates.
>
>Maxine Chernoff
>
>On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, ScoutEW wrote:
>
>> Silliman give em a break.. if you think there should be inclusions >> then go edit your own anthology..
>>
>
>

↑ Index

591. Jerome Rothenberg
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Oh, Ron ... do you think the best first response to what Pierre and I have attempted is to draw up a list of omissions that the two of us could as well have done (and didn't) if we wanted to follow your example in In the American Tree - something approaching a hundred names listed in your intro (and only three or four of them owned up to in the present note). It is all only too obvious and has the feeling of a cheap shot, which we're all capable of but which makes little sense to me on a first perusal of what you've written. The book tries to be inclusive of the kinds of openings that happened during the time in question - or at least to give a sense of them - and to reduce it without further comment to a question of who's in and who's out is to similarly reduce our lives as poets. But if you think a gathering like this is inevitably a collection of names, then obviously we will have failed (at least for you) in one aspect of what we were after.

By the same token In the American Tree will have failed on that point alone (& even more so), and that is also something that I won't concede.

Affectionately (for all of that),

JERRY

ScoutEW wrote:
>
> Silliman give em a break.. if you think there should be inclusions
> then go edit your own anthology..

↑ Index

592. Eric Blarnes
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

I want to alert everyone to the new Madagascar anthology of poetry in English, SWIMMING WITH THE BUTTERFLIES, just out from Sveeshalm Press. Over 4500 pp of 20th century innovative poetries ranging from Aalso Aarnhem's crypto-hic-haiku, via such names as Beauregard Plasm, Chanella Teems, Leffto Marganato, all the way to Zina Zharlovsky's amazing proto-epic in reverse phonetics, "Llems Rewolf". Indispensable. This book CREATES TIME - as you read! Unusual phenomenon - you open it up at 4 pm (eastern standard, let's say) - and when you finish an hour later it's 2 PM - same day, same time zone!! So delve into this one - AT YOUR LEISURE!!

I'm getting younger every day myself!
- Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

593. Laura Moriarty
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

It seems like there is difference between being in some way "possessed" by another writer as Spicer with Lorca and using a text to actually generate the lines as MacLow is more inclined to do - I sense that most writers "write through" in some sense a lot of the time - Lately I've been working with Blake and the I have done much work with Spicer - Do the New York School influenced among you feel less inclined to be textually inspired as opposed to being in relation to experience? Is there such a thing as being more direct?

I remember reading about Sylvia Plath writing with a dictionary on one knee and a thesaurus on the other - Many current writers seem to write with a favorite (or popular or simply found) text on both knees -

BTW - new non - an homage/lament for Kathy Acker by Robin Tremblay-McGaw

Laura

[redacted]
http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

↑ Index

594.]||kenning||[

Re: a more serious query

Fri 24 Apr 1998

Laura, I think that's an important distinction. I wouldn't say that Waldrop, for instance in The Reproduction of Profiles, is "writing through" Witt. More coming to or bringing him to terms. As for the NYSchool influenced among us: It's too problematic for me to say that "direct" experience, instead of mediated (literary -- "writing through") experience, inspires me moreso. I'd say that Schuyler's "Morning of the Poem" is a typical NYS example of being "possesed" (Baudelaire's skull) which may serve as his sort of writing through. Would your distinction be that between influence and inspiration? My reading serves the former, my living serves the latter. Patrick F. Durgin

|
|
k e n n i n g`````````````````````|``
a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
|418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, Laura Moriarty wrote:

> It seems like there is difference between being in some way "possessed" by another writer as Spicer with Lorca and using a text to actually generate the lines as MacLow is more inclined to do - I sense that most writers "write through" in some sense a lot of the time - Lately I've been working with Blake and the I have done much work with Spicer -
> Do the New York School influenced among you feel less inclined to be textually inspired as opposed to being in relation to experience? Is there such a thing as being more direct?
>
> I remember reading about Sylvia Plath writing with a dictionary on one knee and a thesaurus on the other - Many current writers seem to write with a favorite (or popular or simply found) text on both knees -

> BTW - new non - an homage/lament for Kathy Acker by Robin Tremblay-McGaw
>
> Laura
>
> [redacted]
> http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

↑ Index

595. William Burmeister Prod
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

> It seems like there is difference between being in some way "possessed" by another writer as Spicer with Lorca and using a text to actually generate the lines as MacLow is more inclined to do - I sense that most writers "write through" in some sense a lot of the time

Viva la difference! As old T.S. Elliot once said (in the "Phillip Massinger" essay), "goode poets make it into something better, or at least different."

Don't shoot the Massinger!

- Harold Bloom

Laura, could you flash the non URL onto the list? Thanks

Willaim Burmeister

↑ Index

596. ScoutEW
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

uh hello, yeah I read all of Silliman's post , don't presume pal-o...? I know Silliman edited his own anthology but lets face it, Rothenberg and Joris at least attempted (and this volume is thick enough for a good doorstop) to include different "galleries" of poets and I think they did a great job. Silliman's post seemed strange , I mean who cares if they included Robert Johnson instead of Jim Morrison, Public Enemy got the first page in Norton's Anthology of African-American Literature and if you want to include MC's as poets then people like Kool Keith -Gang Starr- Method Man and the RZA, just to name a few could fill an anthology with their rhymes themselves..that is a whole nother story..sorry if this seems mean because i have no personal gripes with anyone, I only react to what comes into my mailbox and if we are going to complain about anthologies then we could complain forever..Anthologies are basically an editors choice thing.. You can't please all of the people all of the time so why complain about people left out..Silliman if you were trying to say you could do a better job, then why not out and say it? don't squabble about who was left out, it is useless...

↑ Index

597. Aldon Nielsen
Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting
Fri 24 Apr 1998

I thought the personal was the political.

↑ Index

598. Billy Little
Re: The Book of Visibility
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Thanks for posting that reminder Ron,
the who is less important than the breadth of the ommission in one of the best anthologies available, digging poetry requires digging
nobody's going to give it to you in one click even Jerry Rothenberg who has served poetry all his life and given us so much of what we need these past three decades and the who IS very important for those starting out as pointers poetry makes demands on its practitioners Duncan taught us Spicer put it: you'll be punished for your visibility.

↑ Index

599. Laura Moriarty
Re: a more serious anthology
Fri 24 Apr 1998

About anthologies - There clearly is no one anthology - as we tend to imagine there was with the famous ones of the past - many of which however also don't include key people (Zukovsky, Niedecker etc) - Any reader needs a pile of them and that at least is good - It is hard on writers to be excluded (I've been both in and out) though of course it helps when the writers you are crazy about are also ignored - and rage can be honorable - And it isn't just career but needing to feel recognized as being part of a community that one has worked to be part of -

> Laura, could you flash the non URL onto the list? Thanks
>
> Willaim Burmeister

Sorry - I try to have it planted in my signature but am not sure it occurs each time -

http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

[redacted]
http://socrates.berkeley.edu/~moriarty/

↑ Index

600. k. lederer
Re: writing through others--Ronell and Corless-Smith
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Speaking of writing through other texts--through the voices and tonalities of other writers....

Mortin Corless-Smith gave a wonderful reading last night at Prairie Lights. He read primarily from his new book OF PISCATOR--but also read some selections from a new (so far) chapbook-length series entitled Worcestershire, Mass.

In much of his work Martin writes through such 'archaic' voices as Dorothy Wordsworth, Basil Bunting, and others...

Martin doesn't footnote his sources.

It struck me last night that there was a big difference between what in OF PISCATOR seems like a resuscitation of 'sincerity' through the medium of archaism (I would argue that Moxley in her IMAGINATION VERSES makes similar moves...) and a more canonically oriented poetics of citation (something along the lines of Jorie Graham's MATERIALISM in which the speaker doesn't take on the voices of precursors, but rather dialogues with them)....

It seems to me that a major aspect of writing through (and maybe this is a matter of what someone else here deemed the sub-genre of the homage) other writers and voices is that of citation.

Best,
Katy

Some poems by Martin Corless-Smith:

Day beats breathes bye derkenesse is

I'l from the light
take up the flamy branch to shadow-wise

let me behind your trolley word after passes word
we dreamt community

---

noon-glass under water
watch yr st
eyes, dreams, lips and the night goes brode, Queen, black gown

jug jug jug jug rush down to the death death death cries or blood blood

---
and in lowly accents
he says the rest
trut in words
per you may catch this on the hill Epsom, Capitol in hevyn on hight stern--o value stern of heven
all briht in boure
(Space of one line)
Section XI (end of section, shace of 5 lines)
I'm try to pleas with swords like leaves and horses wear coats feastal in valley
previous the fish we choke I choke responsible random the last quarter
So Sargus the fish quit the sea to lie with the she-goat in her pasture

↑ Index

601. Charles Bernstein
Olivier Cadiot NY reading
Fri 24 Apr 1998

---

forwarded
From: Christophe Ippolito <[redacted]>

It is our pleasure to announce the lecture of Olivier Cadiot at Columbia University French House, Tuesday April 28 1998 at 8pm. Olivier Cadiot is a French poet and novelist. He is also the general editor of the Revue de Litterature Generale in Paris, France. He will read from his work and comment on the situation of French poetry today, including the perspectives for translations. Currently working with the publisher P.O.L. along with Pierre Alferi, he has been instrumental in helping to develop new trends in French literature in recent years. The lecture will be moderated by Chet Wiener, Columbia University.

The French House is located on Columbia University Main Campus, Bway and 116 Street, in Buell Hall (a small red-bricked house in the middle of the campus, near the chapel), first floor, East Gallery.

Again, the date is April 28, 1998 at 8:00 p.m.

For the Poetry Discussion Group and its members.

For more information please contact:
Chester Wiener [redacted]
Christophe Ippolito, French House [redacted]

A wine and cheese reception will be held after the lecture.

↑ Index

602. groberts
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

It's funny that the contents of this anthology are defended on "very personal" grounds (granted, not by its editors), but that some other anthology with a different editor, or focus, or purpose, might be attacked on ideological grounds, e.g. Weinberger's anthology of a few years back, or anything put together by "official verse culturists." I may be reasonable to assume that all anthologists have some combination of personal and "x" (ideological, poetic, critical, historical, etc.) reasons for what they do and do not include. I may be reasonable to expect that poems and not names are driving the fame train. I also may be reasonable to think that we need a more subtle conversation about this than "personal vs. political" arguments would suggest.

Gary R.

↑ Index

603. ]||kenning||[
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

It is not useless to draw one's attention to the gaps. I don't read Ron Silliman's post as a squabble but as an alert. Sure, the nature of anthologizing demands that we raise these alerts, since I think we all might agree these tomes are frequently mis-construed as a "shelf" in of themselves. The anthologies in question, by the way, are structured in such a way as to preclude such mishandling . . . although perhaps the title is a bit ambitious. -- Patrick F. Durgin

```
                    |
                    |
k e n n i n g``````````````|```````````````````````````
a newsletter of contemporary |poetry,  poetics,  and  non-fiction writing
                    |418 Brown St. #10  Iowa City, IA 52245  USA
```

On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, ScoutEW wrote:

> uh hello, yeah I read all of Silliman's post , don't presume pal-o...? I know Silliman edited his own anthology but lets face it, Rothenberg and Joris at least attempted (and this volume is thick enough for a good doorstop) to include different "galleries" of poets and I think they did a great job.
> Silliman's post seemed strange , I mean who cares if they included Robert Johnson instead of Jim Morrison, Public Enemy got the first page in Norton's Anthology of African-American Literature and if you want to include MC's as poets then people like Kool Keith -Gang Starr- Method Man and the RZA, just to name a few could fill an anthology with their rhymes themselves..that is a whole nother story..sorry if this seems mean because i have no personal gripes with anyone, I only react to what comes into my mailbox and if we are going to complain about anthologies then we could complain forever..Anthologies are basically an editors choice thing..
> You can't please all of the people all of the time so why complain about people left out..Silliman if you were trying to say you could do a better job, then why not out and say it? don't squabble about who was left out, it is useless...

↑ Index

604. k. lederer
EXPLOSIVE benefit--IOWA
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Announcing:

A benefit event to celebrate the publication of EXPLOSIVE MAGAZINE #5

Monday, May 4th
@ Jen Hofer's house
Iowa City:
714 Kirkwood Avenue
8:00 pm

Lots of food, drink, and readings by Emily Wilson, Tina Celona, Josh Bell, Joe Milford, Nick Twemlow, Sathosh Daniel and others....

COME!

↑ Index

605. Taylor Brady
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Maria Damon wrote:

seems like we're talking intertextuality by now; jonathan, i assume u had something more specific in mind?

Looking over my list again, it does seem to me there's a fairly broad definition of "writing-through" at work. This breadth, though, is something I find in the post which started this thread: surely, any definition of writing-through which might include both Word nd Ends from Ez and The H.D. Book begs a bit of latitude in the application. I agree with you that we're talking about intertextuality here -- but not just any intertextuality. The works I've cited all involve in some measure a sustained engagement with the features of another's work -- whether they be character, narrative arc, or the "actual" words in the "actual" order -- as a means of elaborating a writer's "own" poetics. In other words, this is a far different intertextuality from the mere distribution of cultural markers across the surface of a text.

I wouldn't make so much of this -- especially since, fine points aside, I'm basically in agreement with you about the unwieldiness of what this "writing-through" category has become -- if it weren't for the positioning of intertextuality as the postmodern device par excellence, and the assumption, in much recent literary study, of a kind of default progressive valence for it. I'd claim, rather, that it's entirely possible to operate within the confines of a reactionary historical narrative of fate while producing even the most thoroughly intertextual work.

This is surely the message of much poetic work which seeks to revive, rather than to rewrite or reinhabit, some sense of "tradition" held in stasis through an obligatory repertoire of citations, forms, and allusions -- the purely negative sense that Romanticism, or high Modernism, or whatever, is still writing our texts for us. Compare the conservative side of the American university's reception of deconstruction, whose credo might run, "We'll get around to changing the world only after we've finally settled our accounts with the Phaedrus." Intertextuality in these cases is simply an index of the writer's residence in the "prison-house of language" -- and nary a plan for jailbreak in sight. To put it another way: intertextuality is the status of the archive before anyone does any work on it one way or the other.

The works I've cited as instances of a broadly interpreted "writing-through," by contrast, are invested in an interventionist or constructivist relation to the archive -- the imagination that one might use the cinderblock and rebar of the prison-house to build apartments, or roller derby rinks. All in all, I'd say you're right that the list might not have been precisely what Jonathan was looking for (though I think The H.D. Book bear some of the responsibility for that category-confusion), but I'd like to avoid collapsing the whole thing onto a catch-all notion of intertextuality. Maybe the distinction is one between the citational and the polemical intertext? Just a thought.

All best,

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
 http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
 http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

<HTML>
<BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000">
Maria Damon wrote:

<P><I>seems like we're talking intertextuality by now; jonathan, i assume u had</I>

<I>something more specific in mind?</I>

<I></I>

<P>Looking over my list again, it does seem to me there's a fairly broad definition of "writing-through" at work. This breadth, though, is something I find in the post which started this thread: surely, any definition of writing-through which might include both <I>Word nd Ends from Ez</I> and <I>The H.D. Book</I> begs a bit of latitude in the application. I agree with you that we're talking about intertextuality here -- but not just any intertextuality. The works I've cited all involve in some measure a sustained engagement with the features of another's work -- whether they be character, narrative arc, or the "actual"

words in the "actual" order -- as a means of elaborating a writer's "own" poetics. In other words, this is a far different intertextuality from the mere distribution of cultural markers across the surface of a text.

<P>I wouldn't make so much of this -- especially since, fine points aside, I'm basically in agreement with you about the unwieldiness of what this "writing-through" category has become -- if it weren't for the positioning of intertextuality as the postmodern device <I>par excellence</I>, and the assumption, in much recent literary study, of a kind of default progressive valence for it. I'd claim, rather, that it's entirely possible to operate within the confines of a reactionary historical narrative of fate while producing even the most thoroughly intertextual work.

<P>This is surely the message of much poetic work which seeks to revive, rather than to rewrite or reinhabit, some sense of "tradition" held in stasis through an obligatory repertoire of citations, forms, and allusions -- the purely negative sense that Romanticism, or high Modernism, or whatever, is still writing our texts for us. Compare the conservative side of the American university's reception of deconstruction, whose credo might run, "We'll get around to changing the world only after we've finally settled our accounts with the <I>Phaedrus</I>." Intertextuality in these cases is simply an index of the writer's residence in the "prison-house of language" -- and nary a plan for jail-break in sight. To put it another way: intertextuality is the status of the archive before anyone does any work on it one way or the other.

<P>The works I've cited as instances of a broadly interpreted "writing-through," by contrast, are invested in an interventionist or constructivist relation to the archive -- the imagination that one might use the cinderblock and re-bar of the prison-house to build apartments, or roller derby rinks. All in all, I'd say you're right that the list might not have been precisely what Jonathan was looking for (though I think <I>The H.D. Book</I> bear some of the responsibility for that category-confusion), but I'd like to avoid collapsing the whole thing onto a catch-all notion of intertextuality. Maybe the distinction is one between the citational and the polemical intertext? Just a thought.

<P>All best,

<P>-- Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn

.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>
</BODY>
</HTML>

----------B2C3F24079A6B27FEC38E6D9--

↑ Index

606. Fred Muratori
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Poor Bronk -- Hoover skipped him (and Oppen!) in the Norton Postmod, too. Like Ron Silliman, I also get annoyed with omissions (moreso than with inclusions), especially when the anthologists are acknowledged experts who know what they're doing, but I also know that some exlusions are attributable to nasty permissions offices, greedy estate executors, untraceable heirs, and other agents beyond the anthologist's control. If anything, Ron's star-studded list proves just how much worthy stuff is out there, in spite of those depressing moments when it seems like it's all just contempo Wordsworth.

-- Fred M.

****
Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

607. Loss Pequen~o Glazier
New at the EPC
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Pages recently added or updated at the EPC:

Close Listening edited by Bernstein
Creeley: Life & Death
Poems for the Millennium, Vol. Two Creeley Cortland Interview
Harryette Mullen Author Page Passages: Eigner Issue

Hilda Morley, 1919-1998
Nick Piombino Author Page
Rachel Blau DuPlessis Author Page
EPC Statistics

You can find links to these under "New" from the EPC Home Page
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

↑ Index

608. Douglas
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Jonathan,

My new book of poetry, AFTER, will be published in a few weeks. It's completely about these issues and is a true example of the genre. I even have one poem after Spicer after Lorca.

Douglas Messerli

MAYHEW wrote:
>
> My tongue in cheek inadvertently hit the list at a time more sombre issues
> are at the fore (sorry for those mixed metaphors).
>
> I do have a more serious poetics question. I am thinking about genre in > which a poet "writes through" the work of a precursor. Duncan's H.D. book > or his homage to Stein, Spicer's _After Lorca_, Cage's "writing through"
> various authors (Pound, Joyce, etc...), Rothenberg's _The Lorca > Variations_.
>
> 1. Any other good examples of this occur to any of you?
> 2. What would be a good name for this "genre"?
>
> You may "British Columbia" me-- or post to the list if you think this > might be of interest to others as well.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

↑ Index

609. Maz881
Re: Bachelard's take
Fri 24 Apr 1998

<<I think in the situation of women in Afganistan, like the situation of female genital mutilation, is one of conscience. If you are watching it and it strikes you it is torture, mustn't you reach out to stop it? I would just caution that before judging the tortures of other cultures we make sure we are vigilant of what is happening in our own. How many of us grew up in homes where there existed a conspiracy of silence around sexual, verbal or physical abuse?

rdl>>

yes that is the question. or questions Rachel. thank you for stating it that way. in addtion to sexual and other forms of abuse, we should think about "our" own genital mutilation that is often rendered on peoples born with "ambiguous genitalia" or so-called intersexuals. one american doctor was recently quoted like this when asked about why he cuts:

"I don't think it's an option for nothing to be done. I don't think parents can be told this is a normal girl, and then have to be faced with what looks like an enlarged clitoris, or a penis, every time they change the diaper. We try to normalize the genitalia to the gender to reduce psychosocial and functional problems later in life."

You all can read more about this on the Intersex Society of North America Web Site: http://www.isna.org/

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

610. Don Wellman
Re: "writing through"
Fri 24 Apr 1998

the model of writing through that seems most relevant to me --and germane to most of the examples offered -- is H.D.'s use of palimpsest ....

which perhaps also points not so much toward a conception of genre as one of method ...

Don Wellman

↑ Index

611. k. lederer
Women/culture/torture
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Bill and Rachel,

It seems to me that women's situation in Afghanistan is not readily comparable to genital mutilation for religious reasons NOR to the genital mutilation of ambiguously sexed newborns.

To choose to be mutilated for religious reasons (even if this "choice" seems to be the product of coercion),or to have your genitals mutilated at birth without your consent--these do seem comparable to Afghani women "choosing" to wear veils or to stay indoors....

But these examples are not (in my mind) comparable to being STONED TO DEATH for not "choosing"...

It seems to me that the cultural directive in these examples (staying indoors, being unambiguously sexed, having your clitoris removed) is quite distinct from the punishments that are doled out for refusing to comply.

Katy

↑ Index

612. Safdie Joseph
Poetry at the White House, Anthologies
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Did anyone hear the NPR report yesterday about the Millenium night at the White House Wednesday night featuring American poets? It was a different list of attendees than either Jerry and Pierre's or Ron's (of course?) -- but Merwin, Ashbery, Hass, Pinsky, Dove, Forche (who I always associate with the ears on the general's table in El Salvador) were there, along with other, largely predictable, names who swim in the main stream -- (is Stanley Kunitz still alive? Donald Justice?) Anyway, there was one mild bit of frisson in the report when the report mentioned that some poets had been invited but chose not to attend -- one was Hayden Carruth, who was then asked "Are you saying that poets like Haas and Pinsky are hypocrites, then?" There was a long pause, and Carruth then said "I'd really rather not comment." I'm sure 95% of folks listening had no idea of whom he was talking about, but it was enough to make me go "whoa"! Adrienne Rich's refusal of a big poetry prize last year was also mentioned at about that time . . .

I bring up the report not because anyone on this list would envy those present, or want to shoot the shit with Bill (who was actually quite funny, saying that memorizing a hundred lines from _Macbeth_ taught him that political fame was fleeting), but to raise more generally the question of political action (viz Afghanistan) and what it has to do with poetry. "Poetry makes nothing happen," said Auden, famously, and Ashbery, in this report, agreed: "Poetry is poetry, and social action is social action, and never the twain shall meet." Forche agreed. But they were there Wednesday night. Wasn't that a political act? I think of the answer given by Ed Dorn in an interview, when someone asked him what the function of the poet was in "today's society," and he said something like, "surely the function of the poet is to stay away from all permanent associations with power."

Easy enough to do, most of us would say! Maybe . . . but what is this questioning of the inclusion list of anthologies ABOUT, really? Is it really about a high-minded attempt to shape the literary tastes of a generation, or is it about the anxiety of career and one's place in the canon? (I mean, I'm still pissed that Andrei left me out of _Staying Up Late_, and that was ten years ago!) I applaud Laura's comment, to the effect, that we should just let a thousand flowers bloom, and the more anthologies published with different people in them the better. Is it really as simple as that? Or does arguing about the people selected for the latest big anthology really just planning the White House dinner party for the year 2020?

↑ Index

613. Brent Long
Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies
Fri 24 Apr 1998

I did hear the NPR story you mentioned, and have mixed feelings both about those attending and those who refused to attend, which I will not bore the list with. Interesting post, however, Safdie. And yes, Kunitz is still alive.

At 03:34 PM 4/24/98 -0700, you wrote:
>Did anyone hear the NPR report yesterday about the Millenium night at the >White House Wednesday night featuring American poets? It was a different >list of attendees than either Jerry and Pierre's or Ron's (of course?) -- >but Merwin, Ashbery, Hass, Pinsky, Dove, Forche (who I always associate with >the ears on the general's table in El Salvador) were there, along with >other, largely predictable, names who swim in the main stream -- (is Stanley >Kunitz still alive? Donald Justice?) Anyway, there was one mild bit of >frisson in the report when the report mentioned that some poets had been >invited but chose not to attend -- one was Hayden Carruth, who was then >asked "Are you saying that poets like Haas and Pinsky are hypocrites, then?"
>There was a long pause, and Carruth then said "I'd really rather not >comment." I'm sure 95% of folks listening had no idea of whom he was talking >about, but it was enough to make me go "whoa"! Adrienne Rich's refusal of a >big poetry prize last year was also mentioned at about that time . . .

>
>I bring up the report not because anyone on this list would envy those >present, or want to shoot the shit with Bill (who was actually quite funny, >saying that memorizing a hundred lines from _Macbeth_ taught him that >political fame was fleeting), but to raise more generally the question of >political action (viz Afghanistan) and what it has to do with poetry.
>"Poetry makes nothing happen," said Auden, famously, and Ashbery, in this >report, agreed: "Poetry is poetry, and social action is social action, and >never the twain shall meet." Forche agreed. But they were there Wednesday >night. Wasn't that a political act? I think of the answer given by Ed Dorn >in an interview, when someone asked him what the function of the poet was in
>"today's society," and he said something like, "surely the function of the >poet is to stay away from all permanent associations with power."
>
>Easy enough to do, most of us would say! Maybe . . . but what is this >questioning of the inclusion list of anthologies ABOUT, really? Is it really >about a high-minded attempt to shape the literary tastes of a generation, or >is it about the anxiety of career and one's place in the canon? (I mean, I'm >still pissed that Andrei left me out of _Staying Up Late_, and that was ten >years ago!) I applaud Laura's comment, to the effect, that we should just >let a thousand flowers bloom, and the more anthologies published with >different people in them the better. Is it really as simple as that? Or does >arguing about the people selected for the latest big anthology really just >planning the White House dinner party for the year 2020?
>
>

↑ Index

614. Henry Gould
Re: writing through
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Ronald Johnson erases parts of PARADISE LOST in order to produce RADI OS. Was it necessary in order to write ARK? There are serious poets who can't take poetry seriously in an uneraserious era. Or perhaps this was a serious endeavor and I'm being obtuse again. Pope writes an epic about cutting a lock of hair. To "rewrite" so obviously seems so conflictedly serious/ unserious. And then came the Glorious Revolution(s)... Intertextuality is progressive or reactionary? Cheese smells no matter what.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

615. morpheal
Re: Women/culture/torture
Fri 24 Apr 1998

> But these examples are not (in my mind) comparable to being STONED TO DEATH for not "choosing"...

Or those who fail to choose being driven insane and / or driven to suicide ?

In the latter, most common, instances is there any difference from being murdered ?

Somewhat aside to the discussion of Afghanistan, the current Pope of the Catholic church has condoned suicide for those who cannot take the pressure any more. In other words, the Pope, has condoned murder. Pressure them until they kill themselves since we can no longer stone them, torture by means of the Inquisition, or burn them at the stake.

Oh, the world has come a long way from the burning of witches.

Now a religious leader says what is essentially: "have them kill themselves". What wonderful progress. Civilization at last ! A truly Socratic tradition.

As for other traditions having the same tendencies....I am sure they do.

> It seems to me that the cultural directive in these examples (staying indoors, being unambiguously sexed, having your clitoris removed) is quite distinct from the punishments that are doled out for refusing to comply.

The very common, but foreign to North America, practice of removing the clitoris is to destroy a woman's sexual enjoyment. Some people, quietly, believe that that is _necessary_ or a woman will be likely to be unfaithful to her husband. Also that she would want too much from her husband so the removal of the clitoris means that she will not marry on the basis of gaining sexual satisfaction. At least that is how much I have gleaned as to that particular practice.

As far as I can determine it is common in many Islamic countries, but is more ancient in origins and more widespread as to origins than that particular tradition. Coincidence in a lot of instances, that both traditions happen in the same locations among the same peoples.

The world is not a civilized place.

Do not dream for an instant that the primitive, brutal, cruel, practices of the past, including religious and secular practices, have been driven from this world as the true demons that they in fact are. If there are any demons then they surely are the demons incarnate.

M.

↑ Index

616. Gwyn McVay
Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Safdie Joseph wrote:
>
> but Merwin, Ashbery, Hass, Pinsky, Dove, Forche (who I always associate with the ears on the general's table in El Salvador) were there,

Yep yep yep, and WCW is that wheelbarrow guy. Astute bit of reader-response, eh.

along with other, largely predictable, names who swim in the main stream -- (is Stanley Kunitz still alive? Donald Justice?) <<

Yes, both. Neither one makes my most-frequently-bookmarked list, but is mainstream equivalent to actual decease? Do people die of writing sonnets? Please advise.

Gwyn "I'd rather drink expensive shots" McVay

↑ Index

617. Henry Gould
(no subject)
Fri 24 Apr 1998

Yes, both. Neither one makes my most-frequently-bookmarked list, but is mainstream equivalent to actual decease? Do people die of writing sonnets? Please advise. Gwyn "I'd rather drink expensive shots" McVay

Yes, Gwyn, but it's only a little death.

- "Henry" Gould

↑ Index

618. Aviva99999
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

In a message dated 98-04-24 11:55:47 EDT, you write:

<<
On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, ScoutEW wrote:

> Silliman give em a break.. if you think there should be inclusions then go edit your own anthology.. >>

While I am not interested in arguing with, nor supporting, Silliman's ideas for the poets that should have been included in this Rothenberg/Joris "Poems for the Millenium II" anthology...I find Silliman's tone unnecessarily "blaming." There's room for another anthology by Silliman, or anyone else.

The misconception that anthologies can inclusively and comprehensively "represent" a period, a genre, etc., has been around long enough, and has been lamented over long enough, that I think we should retire it.

↑ Index

619. Aviva99999
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

In a message dated 98-04-24 13:28:08 EDT, you write:

<< I may be reasonable to expect that poems and not names are driving the fame train. >>

Yes! and Yes! Yes! Yes!

Thank you.

↑ Index

620. Henry Gould
Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies
Fri 24 Apr 1998

On Fri, 24 Apr 1998 15:34:41 -0700 Safdie Joseph said:
>"Poetry makes nothing happen," said Auden, famously, and Ashbery, in this >report, agreed: "Poetry is poetry, and social action is social action, and >never the twain shall meet." Forche agreed. But they were there Wednesday >night. Wasn't that a political act? I think of the answer given by Ed Dorn >in an interview, when someone asked him what the function of the poet was in
>"today's society," and he said something like, "surely the function of the >poet is to stay away from all permanent associations with power."

Poetry is a social action.
This story is a parable. Power corrupts... language.
Hurray for Carruth & Dorn (& Joe Safdie).

Nevertheless: poetry is not a subculture. The poet inhabits a confrontation by default. I.e. the truth will out... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

621. Aviva99999
Re: The Book of Absences
Fri 24 Apr 1998

In a message dated 98-04-24 14:42:43 EDT, you write:

<< Sure, the nature
of anthologizing demands that we raise these alerts, >>

What, in your view, IS "the nature of anthologizing," and what, specifically, would these "alerts" serve to accomplish? I'm interested in understanding your viewpoint. I'm especially interested in understanding what you, and other folks, expect from anthologies, and I'm further interested in examining whether our expectations might be changed, or whether anthologizers need to conform more to such expectations, or...?

↑ Index

622. Schuchat Simon
Re: a more serious query
Fri 24 Apr 1998

---

another instance of writing through or translations from English would be manymany poems by Gerard Malanga, e.g., take "To a young heiress" and "To the Harbormaster" (Frank O'Hara) and see how the former is a demetaphoricized, etc, version of the latter. There's an anecdote I vaguely remember about O'Hara and somebody else listening to a Malanga reading and picking out their own (and others) poems as the models/originals for everything.

is Gerard about to be revived? I saw a photo of his of Andrew Wylie in a recent New Yorker and journal excerpts were published somewheres (can't remember where).

↑ Index

623. Aldon Nielsen
Vase of Fresh Language
Fri 24 Apr 1998

On Thursday evening Michael Davidson and David Bromige teamed up for a reading at Loyola Marymount University's campus -- spotted in the audience were Chris Reiner, Will Alexander and Marjorie Perloff. Thanks to United Airlines, Bromige had an unexpected opportunity to entertain audiences at the San Francisco airport in a rare three hour show, while Maera Schreiber and Davidson spoke of Zukofsky over dinner. But Bromige abrupted upon the scene at last, and the reading was on. "You Were Saying," Davidson read, from new work in progress, followed immediately by its shadow poem, echoing voice, re-write, "Footnote: Enthymeme." (footnote to self: remember to explain to students next week what an "enthymeme" is) to please good men is unfortunate given a square

of which the novel

thing is not proportion but the action performed there that proves its opposite

"Henry James in Hoboken" was a personal favorite. New Davidson book en route soon.

Bromige read, among his newer works, "2 from T as in Tether," and yes, that does amount to two for T. "The other has been ingested / I stand in the safeway and smile." Not content to read from just ONE not-yet-printed volume, Bromige also read from the most timely NOT SANE ENOUGH FOR THE DEATH PENALTY.

I do not believe in psychology
What did it ever do for me

Except provide a living
For doctors who cared less

But were polite to me
As one form of domination

A state I appear to prefer Leastwise in my dreams

Davidson and Bromige, who do not appear in _Poetry for the Millennium_ but you can xerox their poems and lay them into your copy of that or any other anthology, re materialized on Friday at noon to regale a small audience of students and friends with their bemused and astute assessments of one another. It all went swimmingly, as Bromige splashed off to his weekend and Davidson picked up a double-expresso before heading down the 405.

↑ Index

624. David Zauhar
Re: a more serious query(Gerard M.)
Fri 24 Apr 1998

On Sat, 25 Apr 1998, Schuchat Simon wrote:

> is Gerard about to be revived? I saw a photo of his of Andrew Wylie in a recent New Yorker and journal excerpts were published somewheres (can't remember where).

I started wondering about that, too: in Reva Wolf's book, _Andy Warhol, Poetry and Gossip in the 1960s_ (1996 or 97, U of Chicago Press), he gets more attention than any other NY poet, including Ashbery, Berrigan, and even O'Hara. Obviously, it's because of his proximity to The Factory compared to those others, but it was interesting (and at times disturbing) to see his poems get such close attention in that company.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

"I believe that the devil is in these poets. They destroy all universities. And I heard from an old master of Leipsic who had been Magister for 36 years that when he was a young men then did the university stand firm, for there was not a poet within 20 miles."

Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum, ii.46. Quoted in Helen Waddell's _The Wandering Scholars_

↑ Index

625. Gwyn McVay
Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies] (fwd)
Sat 25 Apr 1998

I asked, and got this answer:

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sat, 25 Apr 1998 12:00:55 -0400 (EDT)
From: "CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON" <[redacted]>
To: Gwyn McVay <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies]

Dear Gwyn, The White House event went very well. I was a bit disappointed that the only avant poet there was Charles Bernstein. But the invitee lists were drawn from organizations, primarily...The Academy of American Poets, the NEA, etc. People there included Ashbery, Levine, Merwin, Dove, Pinsky, Hass, C.K. Williams, James Tate, William Meredith, Lorna Dee Cervantes,

Jorie Graham, David Mura, Garrett Hongo, Kate Daniels, C.D. Wright, Forrest Gander, Heather McHugh, Frank Bidart, Yusef K., Lucille Clifton, Anthony Hecht, Stanley Plumly, Michael Collier, Susan Shreve, Alan Cheuse, Mark Doty, Carol Muske...more, but I can't think of them. The Clintons were both there, and didn't leave until 11:30 or so. It started at 6:30 p.m. It was a celebration, really, of the history of American poetry. Readings were from Dickinson, Whitman, Frost, Williams, O'Hara, Countee Cullen, Robert Hayden, Elizabeth Bishop...more, but again, I can't think of all. Dove, Pinsky and Hass read, and all read quite well. The reading was broadcast on C-Span, and to 44 satellites and the internet. Then we had dinner. It was all very moving and lovely, and I felt very fortunate to have been part of it. Oh, yes, Galway Kinnell and Louise Gluck were also there. Some I noticed who were not: Creeley, Kunitz, Kumin, Kizer, Olds, and a host of experimental poets. Hayden Carruth was the only person to decline, and did so because he thinks the Clintons are not supportive enough of the arts. I think it is the legislative branch that hasn't been supportive, so I guess I disagree with Hayden. But I respect his decision. I'm not sure that going to the White House for dinner constitutes an association with "permanent power." But I come out of a human rights tradition, and we'll go anywhere and talk to anyone who will listen... Best, Carolyn

↑ Index

626. Matt Kirschenbaum

Blake Archive's April Update

Sat 25 Apr 1998

The latest news of work completed here at the Blake Archive. Apologies for cross-posting. Please forward as appropriate. Matt K.

--

The editors of the William Blake Archive <http://www.iath.virginia.edu/blake> are pleased to announce the publication of seven new electronic editions of Blake's illuminated books. They are:

The [First] Book of Urizen copy G
The Book of Los copy A
The Book of Ahania copy A
The Song of Los copy B
America, a Prophecy copy A
Europe, a Prophecy copy E
Visions of the Daughters of Albion copy F

We had announced _Urizen_ copy G as forthcoming two months ago, but formatting the double-columned text diplomatically in SGML for both Netscape and Internet Explorer proved more taxing and time consuming than anticipated.

Such are the joys and tribulations of electronic publishing. Solving the problems there, though, ensured diplomatic transcriptions for Blake's other books with double-columned texts, _The Book of Ahania_ and _The Book of Los_. Together, these three works are often referred to as Blake's Bible of Hell or, simply, the Urizen books. _Urizen_, of which there are only seven extant copies, was first produced in 1794, color printed to form copies A, C, D, E (untraced), F, and J. It was printed again in 1795 to form copy B, which was produced as part of a set of illuminated books printed on large paper, and then one last time in c. 1818 to form copy G, which was produced in Blake's late printing and coloring style. The editors are currently working on copies A, B, C, and F and expect to have them in the Archive by the end of the year. _The Book of Ahania_ and _The Book of Los_ exist in unique copies, with only a few proof impressions extant. They were printed in 1795 and executed in intaglio instead of in relief etching, the technique Blake normally used for his illuminated books. Although their texts are printed in intaglio, their frontispieces are beautifully color printed from the surface of the plates.

With _The Song of Los_, which consists of two parts entitled "Africa" and "Asia," we complete Blake's other series of illuminated books, sometimes known as the Continental Prophecies, begun in 1793 with _America_ and continued in 1794 with _Europe_. The copy of _The Song of Los_ included here is one of six extant; all were color printed in the same printing session in 1795.

With fourteen complete copies extant, _America_ is not as rare as these other illuminated books, but copy A, which was printed and colored in 1795 as part of Blake's large-paper set of books, is, along with copies K, O, and M, one of only four colored copies-- and it was the model for copy K. Moreover, only it and copy O have the last four lines on plate 4, which was masked in the printing of the other copies. The Archive will include copies M and O (c. 1807 and 1818) later this year.

Only nine copies of _Europe_ are extant, and only two of those, copies H and O (1795 and 1818), have plate 3, the Preludium. The Archive will include both of these copies by the end of the year. Copy E, included here, was lightly color printed on both sides of the paper in 1794 and joins copy B, color printed more heavily on one side of the paper the same year.

Visions of the Daughters of Albion copy F is an exquisitely beautiful copy, heavily color printed (especially its frontispiece) in c. 1794, and never before reproduced. It joins copies C and J (both 1793), and will be joined later this year by copies G and P (1795 and 1818).

All of these editions have newly edited texts; all images in the editions were scanned from either 4x5 or 8x10 transparencies, nearly all of which were made specifically for the Archive. Like our other editions, these are all SGMLencoded, fully searchable for both text and images and supported by the unique Inote and ImageSizer applications described in our previous updates.

The Archive now contains sixteen copies of ten illuminated books. In the coming months, we will be adding copies of _All Religions are One_, _There is No Natural Religion_, _For the Sexes_, _Milton_, and _Jerusalem_, along with copies of books already in the Archive but from different printings. Our goal is to have the entire illuminated canon online this year. In addition, work continues on the SGML edition of David V. Erdman's _Complete Poetry and Prose of William Blake_, which we anticipate releasing sometime this spring.

Morris Eaves
Robert Essick
Joseph Viscomi

↑ Index

627. Pierre Joris
Re: The Book of Absences
Sat 25 Apr 1998

I'm only getting to Silliman's post re MILLENNIUM II now, after too full a day in the saltmines of the U.

My irritation at his post has not diminished, however, -- cheap shot is right, as Jerry put it in his reply.

Here is someone who put together a large (600+ pages) anthology covering one small neck of the poetic woods in one country (treed, as he is, in these States) during one very limited period -- & included something like a hundred names of those he couldn't or wouldn't include. Such a one should know better than to hastily assess a somewhat larger (850 pages) book that tries to cover a much wider period (postwar onward) on as global a scale as possible, by making an insta-list of those (mainly Americans) not included and dismissing the book on those grounds.

The point is, an anthology, as any book, needs to be judged by what it is & does , i.e. by the writing that it proposes, and not by what is is not, i.e. does not include and didn't mean to be. The fact that Silliman's U.S. TREE omits a great number of those American poets of that period _I_ think very highly of, does _not_ diminish my interest and pleasure in his book. I'm not interested in reading it for what I already know or am familiar with, but to discover what I don't yet know. Otherwise it's all done with mirrors. So that the pleasure & instruction Silliman's book provided was to discover poets I didn't know or didn't know well, or rediscovered inside the specific articulation created by his book — & that, I believe, is or should be the aim of any anthology.

The bitching about american-centeredness (a question we ourselves address in the introduction, a fact neither mentioned nor discussed by Silliman, who seems to have perused only the index, and even that rather shoddily -- some of the poets he mentions as absent are in fact in the book) is odd when the post itself is deaf & dumb in relation to what, finally, is core to MILLENNIUM, namely its international intent, and the -- at least to Jerry & me -- fascinating and illuminating juxtapositions that happen in the process.

Again, the intent of the book is to map & link territories, to foreground areas of experimentation, to point to ongoing possibilities, NOT to do a headcount of the best and brightest canonic or anti-canonic heads. In that sense, Silliman's critique is Vendleresque (though she would have, obviously, a different list of individual poets not represented). ((There would, in this respect, be another, more intelligent way of looking at "absences" — namely in terms of strategic absences in a quasi "official anthology" i.e. one published by a major University Press, with a telling subtitle.))

Given the to me surprising shoddiness of Silliman's response, his critique is not, as he would like to suggest, "devastating for [our] book's credibility" — it is, unhappily, so only for his own critical acumen.

Pierre Joris

[redacted] wrote:

> Jonathon Mahew's question about the lack of Spicer in Poems for the Millenium (vol. 2) is a good one, given that if you reduced the last 50 years of English language poetry to just, say, 20 people, Spicer would have to be among them. Maybe even to 10 people. Maybe even to five.
>
> It's really devastating for the book's credibility, even more than the inclusion of anyone who ever attended a Fluxus event (or the inclusion of songwriters a la Tom Waits, Robert Johnson and Dizzy Gillespie, all of which makes them seem like doofuses, which none ever were [not to mention the thereby curious absence of Jim Morrison or Leonard Cohen or Nanci Griffith or Public Enemy or Lennon & McCartney or the Glimmer Twins or Bob Dylan, if one is seriously trying to include the antipoetics of song]).
>
> But Spicer's absence, even tho it's on a scale of missing Stein or Pound, isn't alone. I note the following omissions: Benson, Brautigan, Bromige, Bronk, Ceravolo, Thomas A. Clark, Corbett, Curnow [father & son], Dahlen, Darragh, Davey, Davidson, Dewdney, Dudek, Estrin, Fraser, Grahn, Grenier, Guest, Hickman, Hocquard, F. Howe, Inman, Ron Johnson, Jonas, Koch, Kulik, Kyger, Lansing, Mandel, Marlatt, Melnick, Moriarty, Mullen, Natambu, Padgett, Parshchikov, Pearson, Pickard, Pleynet, Prigov, Robinson, Roche, Roubaud, Schuyler, Scott, Stanford, Stanley, Thomas, Tomlinson, Tysh (either one), Wah, Welch, Jonathon Williams, Zhdanov.... And that's just a one-time perusal of the index and the glaringly obvious omissions from traditions I > have some feel for. One can probably make the argument that the book is also amazingly Americo-centric, tho the roster above wouldn't particularly solve that problem.

>
> This really isn't a Pierre & Jerry issue, tho the Spicerlessness of it all is a "gotcha" that foregrounds the problem. In the American Tree is certainly vulnerable to the question of why McCaffery or Dahlen or Scalapino, say, are not there. And the absence of Joanne Kyger, easily the most influential progressive woman poet of the 1960s and '70s, from Moving Borders is every bit as much a boggler as Spicer's lacuna here.
>
> Anthologies are, in this sense, impossible. Everyone is going to have a blind spot, since the last I checked everyone was still human and full of such frailty. It's why I used such a sociological definition for determining inclusion in the Tree. Tho, of the poets who met the formal terms I used, I still managed to miss Abby Child, which looks really dumb from the hindsight of 14 years.
>
> Ron Silliman

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel: [redacted] fax: [redacted]
email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

"What often prevents us from giving ourselves over to
a single vice is that we have several of them."
  — La Rochefoucauld
“All my life I’ve heard
one makes many”
  — Charles Olson
==========

↑ Index

628. MAYHEW
writing through
Sat 25 Apr 1998

Sat's digest is full of great responses to my query. Thanks to all. I was originally thinking of books that, instead of being surreptitious rewritings of precursors, as Harold Bloom claims about everyone in American poetry stuck on Emerson, do so quite overtly.

Don Byrd is right about this not being a genre per se.

Interesting list from Sillimon of omissions. Yet this is not after all an anthology of AMERICAN poetry, but claims to represent much more. While I have a hard time seeing justification for Spicer's absence, on the whole American poetry is OVERrepresented--unless we think the 70th most significant American poet is more important than anyone from Spain or Tunisia or numerous other nations.

Yet Poems for the Millenium is still a wonderful book, whatever its flaws--what is there is valuable despite what isn't and should be.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

629. Rachel Levitsky

Re: Bachelard's take

Sat 25 Apr 1998

"in addtion to sexual and other forms of abuse, we should think about
> "our" own genital mutilation that is often rendered on peoples born with > "ambiguous genitalia" or so-called intersexuals."

Bill--

so right. This shit makes me insane. I read a great article in, of all places, Rolling Stone Magazine about John/Joan Case in which after a botched circumcision, the parents of twins agreed to let the murderous "sexologist" John Money turn the baby, not such a baby--18 mos--into a girl. It didn't work, John/Joan always felt he/she was male, and finally forced the truth out of dad, sex changed back to male, was found out in small town, ostracized, suicide attempts, and finally and luckily a happy marriage but a tortured and destroyed psyche and physique. Money published lies about the success of the experiment and is still employed and revered and taught.

argh!

RDL

↑ Index

630. Judy Roitman

Re: Bachelard's take

Sat 25 Apr 1998

> "in addtion to sexual and other forms of abuse, we should think about "our" own genital mutilation that is often rendered on peoples born with "ambiguous genitalia" or so-called intersexuals."
>
> Bill--
>
> so right. This shit makes me insane. I read a great article in, of all places, Rolling Stone Magazine about John/Joan Case in which after a botched circumcision, the parents of twins agreed to let the murderous "sexologist" John Money turn the baby, not such a baby--18 mos--into a girl. It didn't work, John/Joan always felt he/she was male, and finally forced the truth out of dad, sex changed back to male, was found out in small town, ostracized, suicide attempts, and finally and luckily a happy marriage but a tortured and destroyed psyche and physique. Money published lies about the success of the experiment and is still employed and revered and taught.
>
> argh!
>
> RDL

Anne Fausto-Sterling (a feminist biologist who is well known in women's studies) has done a lot of research on this stuff, I think she might even have a book out. She claims that there are naturally 5 (did I get that number right?) genders, and had some articles about this in popular media a couple or so years ago. She is very passionate and humane and quite wonderful. Anyone interested in this would be well advised to look her stuff up.

And what this says about the two standard genders...

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

631. k. lederer
EXPLOSIVE #5
Sun 26 Apr 1998

E X P L O S I V E M A G A Z I N E # 5
" S p e c t a c u l a r E m o t i o n "

Featuring work by:

Emily Wilson, Martin Corless-Smith, Ishmael Klein, Josh May, DA Powell, Tan Lin, Pamela Lu, Juliana Spahr and a tape of sound collage/poetry by Alex Cory

Subscriptions are: 1 issue=$5 2 issues=$10 3 issues=$15

Issue #4 is still available and features work by:

Lisa Lubasch, Rod Smith, Travis Ortiz, Leslie Scalapino, Dave Morice and many others...

Future issues will feature work by:

Lisa Jarnot, Dale Smith, Anselm Berrigan, Sianne Ngai, Anselm Hollo, Bill Luoma and many many others...

Each issue is hand-produced, with hand-painted covers.

Checks should be made payable to Katy Lederer and sent to:

420 E Davenport #2, Iowa City, IA 52245

↑ Index

632. Dougolly
women, torture, etc.
Sun 26 Apr 1998

We have reached the limits of poetry: Western people's ignorance of traditionalist societies is too profound. Like Alice Walker and Pratibha Parmar working in West Africa, you could make a courageous film on the subject. Failing that, a poem might yet become a sort of film shot from a distance, an attempt to project on to the air, via a beam of good wishes, an imagined ceremony for the sake of young girls who are infibulated without ceremony by nomad Somalians, almost on the move.

The Infibulation Ceremony

A Jeep, its shock absorbers gone, thumps across pocks in the level desert scrub faster than the black-faced sheep with fat tails prodded onwards by the nomad women.

If we have time and water
we stop and let the clan drink;
if we have neither we drive on inventing our film about infibulation.

We drive up to a low escarpment and look down on a hollow littered with people, livestock scattered among the rocky slopes
by a well cairned with boulders.

Near this home well on their April journey
the women dismantle the hut sticks from the ship slew of camel humps, setting up Nissen huts of mats and skins.

Herded then by a man, disburdened camels sigh and settle down in the rubbled hollow of the home well in the northern Somali Republic.

Off to the side -- we swivel the camera -- where thorns are piled for the fence
the nomads are busy at their camp fastening the huts with bark ropes.

One little hut that's new arrived on the coarse grass from the sky.
It's the virgin spirit placed there somehow,
dazzling the nomads with the sunshine on it.

They sew up its door flaps with the ropes so no man may crawl through a tiny slit left at the bottom
like a button hole in a Western shirt.

Then on dry highlands of Somalia
we set their young girls to go dancing in virginity round the sutured hut:
this is their sorrow in private places.

They dance in a hurt, stiff motion, stick-legged as if avoiding stones blood gleaming on brown thighs tears in expressionless eyes.

The mouths of these children are silenced
by tradition: that they be made clean,

that they not become promiscuous, that they be desirable for marriage with a sewn vagina, stripped of pleasure, crossed with thorns, as if the surgeons had sutured the mouth of a healthy baby leaving the palette uselessly cleft.

But this film is fantasy imagined from books and my inability to suffer the thorns that make religions stand erect, or that make a temple's entrance so narrow.

We shoot the girls from a distance, telephoto,
forgetting the funds we raised in Britain,
forgetting the clan-lords warring in Mogadishu, forgetting the entrenchment of Islam

into hard-line law, here called Shafi'i;
while the West threatens Islam with bombs or rich products bearing our labels, may our Jeeps not insult their culture.

We know these illiterates will never see our film;
so will the children make their children dance that queer dance in this cinema-wilderness?
Our Jeep moves on, its tracks soon blown over.

The film is more penetrant than propaganda;
for it shows the silence here and the thorny look in the girls' eyes;
it shows the male wind, harsh, hot.

[Dancing and film imagery influenced by Alice Walker's and Pratibha Parmar's work in West Africa. I have recently learnt that the self-declared independent Republic of Somaliland, whose capital is Hargeisa in the north-west, has been trying to eradicate female circumcision by 2000 and that UNICEF is backing them.]

↑ Index

633. Dougolly
The Book of Absences
Sun 26 Apr 1998

I have always been one of the first to recognise US poetic/artistic achievements and cultural generosity. But it may be helpful to say that, as a Brit living in Paris; I find the tone of much of this anthology squabble absurd. As I've been left out of the very narrow Brit contribution I have no axe to grind when I say that most US poets have been just blind to what the anthology has done. For the first time ever an anthology this size is truly international. So far, the debate reminds me of the closing week of Maastricht Treaty discussions when, with so many Third World countries, especially in Africa, cast into client status by US-European gerrymandered global trading regulations, the US and French delegations hogged nearly all the debating time for snarls over the cinema and soy bean industries.

Do we have to have more of this US neo-colonialism about an anthology already dominated by one nation whose denizens seem to want more of the action yet?

I can see bias in the selections as easily as anyone else: what did anyone expect with a window on the world this wide -- the anthologist as universal mind? An anthology is always a way-stage, not an eternal inscription on the final peristyle. Fergodssake stop griping, respect what a grind it is for editors both to retrieve so much good poetry from all over, and to hold out, in the teeth of such attitudes, such hope of the more vital internationalism to come. For surely that's the real avant-garde?

Greetings, nonetheless.

↑ Index

634. Bob Grumman
Re: The Book of Absences
Sun 26 Apr 1998

I haven't seen the second volume of the new anthology but a reliable source tells me that its introduction emphasizes that it was not intended to be a "best of" collection. Ergo, though it leaves out a lot of poets I would have liked to have seen in it, and has a number of poets in it that seem second-rate to me, I applaud it. It took on an impossible job and seems to have done it about as well as the job could have been done.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

635. morpheal
Re: Poetics of Freedom (was women / torture, etc.)
Sun 26 Apr 1998

> We have reached the limits of poetry: Western people's ignorance of traditionalist societies is too profound. Like Alice Walker and Pratibha Parmar working in West Africa, you could make a courageous film on the > subject. Failing that, a poem might yet become a sort of film shot from a distance, an attempt to project on to the air, via a beam of good wishes, an imagined ceremony for the sake of.....

I am not at all certain what you are saying. Are you saying that as sarcasm or as fact ? It is not quite clear where you yourself stand on the matter.

It seems to me to be a very complicated, but essential, question, verging closely into the question of the very nature of poetics and the functions of poetic expression. I do not want to belabour the matter, but I feel a need to say what I feel needs to be said and then leave it to dispute.

First of all, western (meaning western European and North American), ethnography, anthropology, sociology, studies of comparative religions and philosophies, are definitely the best in the world and a large part of those truly attempt and sometimes succeed at being impartial, objective, rigorous and scientific.

As to the pragmatic worth, or value, of ANY traditional practice we might also ask about it in terms of evaluation:

1). Does it increase the greatest sustainable freedoms for the greatest number of persons ? (Nothing has ever truly achieved this ideal.)

2). Does it provide a positive, truly wanted, freedom ? For instance even a seemingly silly practice such as the wearing of purple robes with white polka dots on them can be a positive provision of a truly wanted freedom if someone wants to wear such robes within a society. The individual is made free to wear those robes, without incurring harm from others, by means of a social practice that sustains that freedom. That social practice is not immediately obvious, but is the basis for the freedom to wear purple robes with white polka dots, as well as being the basis for other specific expressions of freedom.

3). Does it provide a freedom to some that does not significantly harm the freedoms of others, including the freedom from enduring added psychological and/or physical suffering. For instance the dervish might be free to dance a dervish, but not to force others to do the same. On the other hand, Pythagorean forbidding the eating of beans is unthinkable, as beans are a source of well being to many. The Pythagorean cannot be allowed to force his ways on others, taking away their freedom to eat beans. However, the Pythagorean could be free to not eat beans.

3). Does it impose real psychological and/or physical sufferings that are otherwise avertable, or that would not otherwise occur ?

4). Does it prevent real psychological and/or physical sufferings that are unwanted by the sufferers and are averted by the practice ?

If the practice does not provide and/or sustain a positive, truly wanted, freedom, and/or if the practice causes physical and/or psychological sufferings that would otherwise have been averted, then surely the practice cannot claim "right". Likewise if the practice does not truly, effectively, prevent unwanted increase in psychological and/or physical sufferings, as a negative freedom from those unwanted sufferings, then it cannot claim "right". The practice then is surely at best dysfunctional and at worst completely oppressive. (Though we might always fall short of the ideals.)

We might examine any practice in a similar kind of manner.

I think that we need to realize that traditional practices are often more wrong than right. We still tend to revert to the idea that everything traditional is of value, including every brutal and uncivilized practice derived from ancient ignorance. Simply because something is traditional, cannot make it right, or best, or even good. Neither can the fact that that is how everyone does it. Everyone could be wrong. We have to be more critical of our own institutions, our own customs, our own beliefs, in the name of progress, as well as being objectively critical of the institutions, practices, customs, and beliefs of other cultures. We cannot simply accept them because they are other than our own. We certainly cannot give them more acceptance as if that is the appropriate response to what is more alien rather than objective, critical, evaluation.

The practice of female circumcision is a practice of extreme barbarity. There is no way that any justification can be given to it. It is clearly physically and psychologically extremely damaging to those who suffer it and in a number of ways that even the most unbiased science can clearly prove. No amount of ideological argument can overcome that fact, no matter how twisted the use of ideas and language that attempts to maintain and promote the traditional, the customary, it still remains the same ignorance.

Do we fail at respect for the sufferings of the sufferers of a barbaric practice when we make light of it, joke about it, revert to sarcasm ? Do we make it less of an issue, and less worthy of discussion ? Depending on how a poem is written, does the poetic medium tend to do that also, in some instances ? Do such methods sometimes add to the linguistic quagmire, and thus ignorance ?

The discussion began as a discussion of that ignorance. I began to wonder if we know what freedom is. I began to wonder why we equate freedom with the imposition of suffering, rather than its alleviation, as if belief in freedom essentially ought to be a belief in freeing people to their causing others to suffer unwanted sufferings - such as in the Afghanistani situation, or in the instance of female circumcision. Freedom to oppression, totalism, and barbaric practices, seems as horrible to me as the freedom from food, water, sleep, shelter and love would be. A purely negative and destructive freedom.

A poem as to the barbarity of some practice, might make a difference, if those who suffer that practice become aware of that poem, and begin to see the world differently. If it shows them that their suffering is not necessary, and that the arguments to the contrary need not prevail against Reason. If it shows them that their suffering is not an integral part of who they are, contrary to what their tradition and their elders claim against them. If it shows them that there are more humane, gentler, kinder, better ways to love and live....

There are very few such poems.

....but can a poem change a whole culture ?

There are perhaps no such poems (in the sense of truly positive changes).

Or is there a point where the Reason plus emotion comprising the empathies of the poetic medium, break down as to pragmatism and we must revert to more prosaic means ? Is the poem as liberating as it claims to be, or do we, in such matters need to revert to more liberating means and ways that are more directly and easily understood by those who have no knowledge of poetry as we know it ?

I think the answer is obvious as to the limited function of poetry.

I wonder what people, or what nation, will in fact achieve the bringing of genuine freedoms, to the understanding and practices of the world, and stand against their own tendencies towards traditionalism as well as against the barbaric, horrific, traditionalisms that encroach upon those freedoms in so many parts of the world. Is the United States of America to become that voice, or the United Nations, or both ? Or some other voice crying in the wilderness of too many archaisms, and traditional barbarities, to even take a count of ? The world is very savage, under its thin veneer of civilization, in part because it does not have a clear idea, poetic or prosaic, of freedom.

M.

aka Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

636. J. Kuszai
Daniel Kanyandekwe (1963-1997)
Sun 26 Apr 1998

What follows is the text of an invitation, extended over e-mail, to the grad student community at SUNY-Buffalo.

forwarded text (from UB grad, Jim O'Loughlin):

I would like to invite all English graduate students to attend a celebration of the life and work of Daniel Kanyandekwe, a collegue of ours who passed away last year. The celebration will feature readings from Daniel's novels, remembrances of Daniel, and Rwandan food and music. It begins this Sunday at 2:30 at Hallwalls. $5 for students/$10 gen. ad. All proceeds go to Daniel's estate.

I hope all of Daniel's friends will make an effort to attend this event. But even if you didn't know Daniel, please consider attending and learning about this talented author and scholar. His writing was both outrageously funny and poignant. We hope this event will highlight those elements of his work and his life.

(end forwarded text)

Daniel Kanyandekwe left behind a wife and a young child. His wife had come over to the United States recently from Rwanda (around the time of the genocide) and they had been living in south Florida, where Daniel was teaching at a small college. As far as I know, they lost their entire family and she has no relatives in the U.S. Her immigration status is unclear. Hopefully, this situation will be straightened out, but nothing can make up for the loss of Daniel, in his early 30s, to a sudden stroke.

Meow Press has published a chapbook of Daniel's writing, and it will be available today at the memorial. It will also be available, as part of the regular Meow Press series, with all sales to benefit his family. Please, if you can, order this book. Backchannel me if you are interested in contributing to help support this family, now in a precarious position. After today, I should have information about where to send checks, etc.

In the meantime, here is the introduction to the chapbook, by Julie Husband and Jim O'Loughlin, who also edited Daniel's work for this publication:

"Writer, scholar, husband and father, Daniel Kanyandekwe (1963-1997) was also friend to many in Buffalo during the five years he and his family spent here. Arriving from Rwanda in 1992, Daniel began studying in the UB English Department as a Fulbright fellow. During the five years he spent at UB, Daniel not only completed his Ph. D. dissertation, Dreaming of Africa: American Writers and Africa in the Twentieth Century, but wrote four novels, The Last Writer, The Buttocks of the Almighty, Seasons of the Eternal Grooms Death, and The Chronicles of Melancholy.

"This collection offers selections from Daniels last three novels. Influenced by writers including Saul Bellow, Gabriel Garca Mrquez and Ngugi wa Thiongo, Daniel created characters who were both larger than life and devastatingly flawed. An undercurrent of political commentary runs throughout all these novels, which are set in Daniels native Rwanda. In his fiction, Daniel created worlds of magic and great humor; worlds in which anything could, and did, happen."

I've cut and pasted this text from quark xpress, so my apologies for the failure of some of the above typography. Ok, here is the first paragraph of the selection from _The Buttocks of the Almighty_:

"After the defense of his dissertation, Beatitudinis Philosophiarum Historiae (A Short History of the Philosophies of Happiness), during which defense the greatest Latinist of the Pontifical Gregorian University dies of a heart attack, Father Moses Bazirishuli, S. J., is struck by a severe mental breakdown. Soon, he leaves the Vatican and returns to Kigali, Rwanda, where he settles in a small convent with two other Jesuits, one a Rwandan who is dying of stomach ulcers, the other a Belgian who will eventually die of shame after it has been discovered that the book he reads all night long is not Le Roman de la rose, but the erotic Arabian classic, The Perfumed Garden. After he has lost one testicle to surgery (he has prostate cancer), Moses incurable migraines will finally lead him to a mental asylum. Having been raped by a female patient, he totally loses his mind. Thats when he takes refuge in the prehistoric caves of Mount Kigali with Animus, his faithful dog, whence he will emerge with a mythic phallus on his shoulders, causing the bodyguards of the Patriarch President to shoot the scared mob. Moses (and his dog) will be the only survivors of the civil war that he himself has caused, and from which the United Nations peacekeeping forces, led by the Marines, will flee, only to return when the violence has abated."

Please order this lovely little chapbook. Contact me privately and I will indicate where to send donations. The cost will be $5, but please, if you can, send more.

Thanks for your help.

Joel Kuszai
[redacted]
http://www.acsu.buffalo.edu/~kuszai

↑ Index

637. Douglas Barbour

Re: RADI OS as 'writing through'

Sun 26 Apr 1998

I'm a bit behind, but Henry Gould wrote the other day:

<<Ronald Johnson erases parts of PARADISE LOST in order to produce RADI OS. Was it necessary in order to write ARK? There are serious poets who can't take poetry seriously in an uneraserious era. Or perhaps this was a serious endeavor and I'm being obtuse again.>>

Well, I wouldnt know about the last, but I do know that RADI OS struck me as a wonderfully spiritual poem when I first read it & it remains a favorite. I'd say it was a very serious endeavor. I'd agree with Guy Davenport that it makes Milton feel a lot like Rilke, & to me that's a good thing...

I was wondering, then, if what we're talking about is a kind of rhizomatic effect (or effort): not a separate genre in any way, as Don Byrd pointed out, but a way, a kind of writing withing many genres that can appear anywhere...

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

think that to cease objecting to what we feel are outrages in other parts of the world will focus any more attention on injustices here. On the contrary. I think that when we accuse others, and then in turn are (often rightfully) accused, we see our crimes much better, which had grown so familiar and habitual. It does strike me as ironic sometimes that the Enlightenment self and its ideals, its emphasis on the rights of the individual, are seen by so many contemporary intellectuals as nothing but a self/suit tailored for the alienation of capitalism. In China, the protesters in Tianemen [sic] square were drawing on those very ideals, as they imagined were held and lived in the U.S. Let me insist on that as irony not nostalgia, as I have seen how many tomes can be filled with an attempt to rescue the Enlightenment Project, how many thousands and thousands of pages, and not succeed.

I apologize for the kind of musing generalities which can occur while one imagines one is talking only to himself, while outside a cool rain is falling.

Mike McColl

↑ Index

639. morpheal
Re: When the West Finds Fault
Sun 26 Apr 1998

> I apologize for the kind of musing generalities which can occur while one imagines one is talking only to himself, while outside a cool rain is falling.
> Mike McColl

No need to apologize...

...the little sounds disappeared into the noise of the world.

M.

↑ Index

640. morpheal
Re: RADI OS as 'writing through'
Sun 26 Apr 1998

> I'm a bit behind, but Henry Gould wrote the other day:
> <<Ronald Johnson erases parts of PARADISE LOST in order to produce RADI OS.

PARADISE LOST

RADI OS

RADIOS

Of course: Paradise is Lost with the invention of the radio and the opening of that door through which all manner of demons pass into any dwelling. Clearly Marconi, et al, was doing the work of the devil.....<chuckle> That message was hidden there all those years waiting to be discovered by Ron J. who finally decoded it's true intent warning of immanent spiritual perils.

Oh ye, Satanic electronics, what vile perturbations brought forth from electron spirits, emergent from horrid twisted depths of the deepest darkest Silicon Valley abyss, unto fair Albion's once green and pleasant shores....William Blake might have retorted.

M.

↑ Index

641. Don Byrd
The Anthology
Sun 26 Apr 1998

If I had edited _Poems for the Millennium_, I would have included Spicer, and there are other things I would have done differently, but I want to make two quick points to make:

1. If some thing like _Poems for the Millennium_ had been available when I was eighteen, it would have saved me years of work. There was nothing remotely comparable then, and there has not been anything like it until now.

2. One certainly can fault the project for lack of ambition. If it is half successful, it is more than any one could reasonably expect. And by any test, this antholody is more than half successful.

For whatever nit-picking I might do, I want to congratulate Jerry and Pierre on a remarkable accomplishment and to thank them for these beautiful books.

db

--
****
Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
Department of English
State University of New York
Albany, NY 12222
[redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
****

↑ Index

642. David Baratier
Howdy
Sun 26 Apr 1998

Howdy. To anyone who might be out there who knows me, I would just like to say that after a long absence I am back on the list. I can be reached at [redacted]_

David Baratier

Also to mention: Pavement Saw Press's next release is _Above the Human Nerve Domain_ by Will Alexander.

↑ Index

643. Lisa Samuels
seeking: source of 2 lines
Sun 26 Apr 1998

---

dear superior intelligences,

ok, so i canNOT locate the source of the following lines:

'And up the rosy pathway to her heart
The uncapped pilgrim crept.'

it may be that these lines are in fact not sourceable -- ie, that they are made up. their unreliable narrator attributes them to a romantic poet (byron, as it happens), but a search of databases & books & expert brains has exhausted that possibility -- not to mention me.

if these lines seem familiar & you can point me to their source, you will have my unfailing gratitude and admiration -- as well as the satisfaction of spreading knowledge like a sinking star, etc.

thanks benightedly,

lisa samuels

↑ Index

644. Charles Bernstein
Cecilia Vicuna in Seattle
Sun 26 Apr 1998

A poetry performance

by Cecilia Vicuna

at Washington University,

Padelford B-202

May 5th at 3.30 PM

Seattle

↑ Index

645. Susan Wheeler
NYC Reading
Sun 26 Apr 1998

For those in the environs:

Tuesday, April 28
7:30 p.m.
Barnes & Noble Astor Place
Susan Wheeler reading from SMOKES

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

646. Taylor Brady
Charlemagne Palestine
Sun 26 Apr 1998

Pursuant to the recent discussion of musicians' names in Hannah Weiners' work: In this week's Village Voice, Kyle Gann gives notice that Charlemagne Palestine has apparently returned to musical performance in the U.S. The article, sadly, is not available in the paper's online version -- but there's not much to it anyhow, as it's only a paragraph or two tacked on at the end of a piece on (Buffalo's own) Tony Conrad. Still, there it is, for whatever that may be worth.

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

<HTML> <BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000"> Pursuant to the recent discussion of musicians' names in Hannah Weiners' work: In this week's Village Voice, Kyle Gann gives notice that Charlemagne Palestine has apparently returned to musical performance in the U.S. The article, sadly, is not available in the paper's online version -- but there's not much to it anyhow, as it's only a paragraph or two tacked on at the end of a piece on (Buffalo's own) Tony Conrad. Still, there it is, for whatever that may be worth.

<P>-- Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>
</BODY>
</HTML>

----------296D84E9BE19FC078F2B8693--

↑ Index

647. Charles Bernstein
Frank Kuensler reading
Sun 26 Apr 1998

Friends and admirers of the late poet Frank Kuensler read their own poetry and his --

Nick Piombino
Ira Cohen
Gerard Melanga
Michael O'Brien
Serge Gavronsky

Tuesday, April 28, 8pm

Chez Albert
at Clemente Soto Velez
107 Suffolk Street between Delany and Rivington (F train: Delancy, walk two blocks East toward the Williamsburg Bridge, turn left on Suffok)
info: [redacted] or [redacted]

↑ Index

648. David Clippinger
Antin Reading
Sun 26 Apr 1998

Thought this might be of interest.

> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date: Sun, 26 Apr 1998 13:37:44 EDT
> From: BStater <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: David & Eleanor Antin at SUNY Stony Brook May 7
>
> EVENT ON MAY 7, 1998
> MAKING ART
> SUNY STONY BROOK
> STONY BROOK, NEW YORK
> ---
>
> On May 7 the Humanities Institute at SUNY Stony Brook, in conjunction with the departments of Comparative Literature, Philosophy, Theatre, and Art, and with additional support from the Dean of the School of Arts & Sciences will host a lecture, talk-piece, and film-screening presented by David and Eleanor Antin.
>
> MUSIC LESSONS, the centerpiece of the event, is a quirky 46 minute narrative film which tells the story of a girl who is haunted by a demon. Jeannie Quinn, a beautiful anorexic from a working class Southern family, dreams of being a model and a violinist. Unable to afford music lessons, she invokes the glamourous Genevieve, who comes to haunt her mirror and bring her to the brink of musical virtuosity and physical annihilation.
>
> Shot in Winston-Salem, North Carolina with grant support from SECCA (the Southeast Center for Contemporary Art) the Rockefeller Foundation, UCSD, and with equipment support and a crew hired in large part from the North Carolina School of the Arts, the work was written, directed, and produced by the Antins with editing assistance from Ila von Hasperg.
>
> The event will take place on May 7 in the Humanities Institute seminar room, Melville Library E4340 following the schedule below:
>
> 11:30: "Making History." Eleanor Antin will deliver a lecture and documentary slide show concerning her work-- particularly focusing on the evolution from her early collage style environmental portraits through her movement into performance art and finally concluding with her recent gallery situated filmic installations and movies.

1:45: Break

3:30: MUSIC LESSONS film screening.

4:30: "Making Movies." Following the film, poet and art critic David Antin will provide one of his famous "talk pieces"-- this one described as a philosophical meditation upon the processes involved in generating narrative concepts and issues from the essentially collage structured matter of the filmic medium.

6:00: Reception

David Antin is an internationally renowned poet and art critic, and a sort of amateur philosopher of language, as his three major collections of talks, TALKING AT THE BOUNDARIES (1976), TUNING (1984), and WHAT IT MEANS TO BE AVANT-GARDE (1993) demonstrate. His SELECTED POEMS were published by Sun & Moon press in 1991, and his SELECTED ESSAYS are being prepared for publication by the University of Chicago Press. He is Professor Emeritus at the University of California at San Diego where he teaches Art History, Art Criticism, and Experimental Writing.

Eleanor Antin is a major figure in the art world. Her various performance pieces, installations, and films have received critical attention in Henry Sayre's THE OBJECT OF PERFORMANCE, Broude and Garrard's massive THE POWER OF FEMINIST ART, and many other scholarly works. Articles on her film installations VILNA NIGHTS and MINETTA LANE, A GHOST STORY appear in recent issues of PERFORMING ARTS JOURNAL and MILLENNIUM FILM JOURNAL. She is also the author of BEING ANTINOVA, published by Astro Artz, and ELEANORA ANTINOVA PLAYS, published by Sun & Moon Press. She is a professor at the University of California at San Diego where she teaches Art History and Performance.

For more information contact:
Bruce Stater: [redacted] or Robert Harvey: [redacted]

For more information about the Humanities Institute go to:
http://www.sunysb.edu/humanities/index.htm

For more information about SUNY Stony Brook go to:
http://www.sunysb.edu/

↑ Index

649. Henry Gould
Re: writing over
Sun 26 Apr 1998

Responding to Doug Barbour: not having read Radi Os, my skeptical comments really WERE obtuse. I guess I would have to be convinced that obvious "writing over" is not a sort of cliche of postmodernism. Postmodernism as the willful/despairing prodigal child of modernism. Without the resources to create, only to rewrite and imitate. An era in opposition to the "certainties" of the modernists, whose artists are serious by being unserious. The era of Criticism and Theory which is passing away as we scribble. (cross out?) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

650. Stephen Cope
BEYOND THE PAGE
Sun 26 Apr 1998

For those in the greater Southern California area, here is a bit of news. Hope to see you there, and please pass the word...

Stephen

BEYOND THE PAGE PRESENTS:

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

What: Beyond the Page kicks off its series of monthly performance and arts events with a poetry reading featuring Ron Silliman and Rae Armantrout.

Where: Faultline Theatre, 3152 5th Avenue (between Thorn and Spruce in Hillcrest), San Diego.

When: Sunday, May 3rd. 4:00 PM.

Contact: Stephen Cope at [redacted] or Joe Ross at [redacted].
E-mail at
[redacted].

RON SILLIMAN , a central figure in the L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poetry movement, has been writing and publishing poetry and criticism for nearly three decades. In the 1980's, Silliman edited IN THE AMERICAN TREE, a seminal anthology which gathered together close to forty of the most influential American writers of the latter half of this century. For several years, Silliman also served as editor of THE SOCIALIST REVIEW, a major political voice of the American left. David Melnick writes of his work: "Called a 'thraumaturge' ('wonder-worker') by the poet Robert Duncan, Silliman has created a new kind of writing from the simplest materials... The poet confides, describes, extols, remarks, puns, paints domestic scenes, shyly alludes, records minutiae, leaps to large statements, arouses, repeats. Through it all, a friendly, Northern California sort of personality emerges." Of himself, in a wry tone indicative of his poetry, Silliman writes: "Ron Silliman was a member of 'Rupe's troops' back in the anti-glory days of the Pods' '82 season. A left-handed second baseman who wears trifocals, he has had to settle for publishing 21 books of poetry and criticism, and now 'does theory' in the computer industry. He has been writing the same poem for 24 years." Silliman currently lives in the Philadelphia area, and makes only rare appearances on the West Coast.

RAE ARMANTROUT needs little introduction in the San Diego poetry community. Raised in San Diego, Armantrout received a degree in writing from San Francisco State before moving back to San Diego, where she currently teaches writing at The University of California, San Diego. To date, she has published six books of poetry, and two more are forthcoming: TRUE (a memoir due out in July from Atelos Press), and THE PRETEXT (due out next year from Sun & Moon). Armantrout's work has appeared in numerous journals and anthologies, including IN THE AMERICAN TREE, THE BEST AMERICAN POETRY OF 1988, and THE NORTON ANTHOLOGY OF POSTMODERN AMERICAN POETRY. Armantrout's poetry is lyrically concise, often humorous, and always daring and imaginative. As Elaine Equi puts it: "At a time when much experimental writing has lost at least some of its shock value, Rae Armantrout's [work] could startle even the most jaded reader."

Armantrout and Silliman are internationally recognized figures in contemporary American poetry, and both are lively and engaging readers. Beyond the Page is proud to inaugurate its ongoing performance and arts series with this major literary event.

BEYOND THE PAGE is an independent arts group dedicated to the promotion of experimental and explorative work in contemporary arts. For more information, call: [redacted], [redacted], or e-mail: [redacted].

↑ Index

651. Clark D Lunberry

CreeleyReading

Sun 26 Apr 1998

Robert
Creeley
reading
at Milwaukee's
Woodland Pattern
(720 E. Locust St.)

Saturday
May 2
8 pm
$6

↑ Index

652. Peter Quartermain
Re: That Anthology
Mon 27 Apr 1998

I too have yet to see the second volume, and at Canadian dollar rates it may be somewhat expensive. But frankly I don't give a damn who might be left out -- there's bound to be a zillion such. What was and is so amazing about the first volume is the sheer range of selection, and, well, its absolutely great instructiveness. It's not simply that the book included so many poets who's work I simply did not know at all, because I'd never heard of it at all -- that's a major accomplishment in my book, and I learned how closed my eyes have been not only to those writing in a language other than my own, but also in the language I somewhat absurdly call my my own. But when I turned to familiar names and voices, lo and behold, the selections were not indeed what I expected or would have chosen, and often I found myself as a result rethinking and hence rereading that particular poet. Add to that the really informative juxtapositions and the book turns into what I'd think of as a PERFECT anthology, because it refused to let me sit inside my own complacent knowing.

So I used it as a tectbook in the term just over, to a second-year (sophomore) undergraduate course "Introduction to Poetry" designed for all those poor kids who could not get into the Faculty of Arts elective they wanted -- 56 students, over half of them reluctant and resentful, slouching in their chairs challenging "Teach Me!", made this in many ways the course from hell, since you're trying to teach them, among other things, how to pay attention to their own responses, rather than the institution's imagined ones. Move them off their butts. It was a tough book to teach from, but I enjoyed it, and learned from it. And by the end of the course half those reluctant kids who thought poetry was sissy and a waste of time and nothing to do with the Bottom Line were indeed goggling over the work, talking about it enthusiastically, bringing their favourite poems to the attention of their fellows (rare indeed to do this over Spenser or Wyattor Clare, no matter how great my love of those poets). NO-ONE, and I do mean no-one, by the end of this difficult course -- which is to say, yes, this difficult book -- was fretting over what he or she ought to be saying, or about something called "metrics" which had been drummed into them in high school and freshman English, or worriting that they didn't LIKE all the poems, but instead puzzled over -- and delighted in an awed sort of way -- over Mandelstam, Mallarme, Ullikummi, Miyasawa Kenji and Edith Sodergran and and and. My Japanese Canadian students gave little discourses on how poems might be translated, and the problems attendant on ideograms; the Quebecois discussed linguistic practices in Francis Ponge; someone SANG Kurt Schwitters, etc etc. Need I go on?

These anthologies -- cetrtainly the first volume, at any rate -- completely redefine and re-vision the work of this century and what it proposes; the commentaries are superbly unostentatious, and the difficult but finally utterly intense pleasures afforded by teaching it are absolutely without parallel in my what? nearly four decades of teaching this usually rather miserable second-year course. Would we had a dozen such anthologies like this -- it truly rethinks the world we think we know.

It made me work, work, work, read read read. If the second volume is a tenth as good then obviously I've got to get it, and I'll go down to the store tomorrow. It doesn't have Spicer? Then I'll xerox an Inuit poem instead.

I don't know, Ron: you certainly set a huge elephant among the pigeons with that (rather heavy-dentured tongue in cheek?) caveat. Made us pay attention, hooray, to something worth attending. Thanks.

And of course, Pierre, Jerry, awed congratulations.

Peter

+ + + +

Pierre's anthology brought more new work to my attention than any comparable endeavor that I have yet encountered.

Just a brief note on waters I thought were under the bridge,

Stephen

ps. Peter: Volume II is as good as Volume I...

↑ Index

654. George Bowering
Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting
Mon 27 Apr 1998

> I thought the personal was the political.

Well, no, it's not. If you have a personal dislike of rhubarb that is not political. If you start a party that favours rhubarb farmers over rhubarb brokers, that is political.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

655. morpheal
Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting
Mon 27 Apr 1998

> I thought the personal was the political.
>
> Well, no, it's not. If you have a personal dislike of rhubarb that is not political. If you start a party that favours rhubarb farmers over rhubarb brokers, that is political.

We have legislated today that no rhubarb will be grown, transported, or kept, by any person or organization, and furthermore that no rhubarb is to be prepared, and served in any facility meant for the preparation and serving of foodstuffs.

We do not care that you like rhubarb.

M.

↑ Index

656. Charles Bernstein
Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies] (fwd)
Mon 27 Apr 1998

> The White House event went very well. I was a bit disappointed that the only avant poet there was Charles Bernstein.

News to me. On Wednesday night I was having dinner with Carolyn Burke, author of the highly recommended Mina Loy biography "Becoming Modern", who gave a lecture on her book the next day for the Poetics Program at UB. Hadn't heard about the White House event till the report surfaced here.

↑ Index

657. David Zauhar
Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies] (fwd)
Mon 27 Apr 1998

On Mon, 27 Apr 1998, Charles Bernstein wrote:

> The White House event went very well. I was a bit disappointed that the only avant poet there was Charles Bernstein.
>
> News to me. On Wednesday night I was having dinner with Carolyn Burke, author of the highly recommended Mina Loy biography "Becoming Modern", who gave a lecture on her book the next day for the Poetics Program at UB. Hadn't heard about the White House event till the report surfaced here.

Wait a minute! On Wednesday night I saw Charles Bernstein coming out of a 7-11 eating a burrito and talking to Elvis (The latter by the way was doing a credible WH Auden impression).

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

"I believe that the devil is in these poets. They destroy all universities. And I heard from an old master of Leipsic who had been Magister for 36 years that when he was a young men then did the university stand firm, for there was not a poet within 20 miles."

Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum, ii.46. Quoted in Helen Waddell's _The Wandering Scholars_

↑ Index

658. Dougolly
Re: women, torture
Mon 27 Apr 1998

As Morpheal's reading of my 'The Infibulation Ceremony' is such a serious misreading of my poem, I feel bound to reply. To be generous, I think it's sheer depth of concern at such barbaric practices that has created this blindness to what is actually written - the claims that the poem is either complicit with female circumcision or sarcastic dumbfound me. Simply, I am totally against infibulation. The poem arose from my researches into a feminist group of doctors and social workers here in Paris who wrestle with the clandestine infibulation practiced particularly by Francophone West African groups in France. Another group has brought occasional court actions (which I am also in favour of where appropriate), since infibulation is illegal in France. The problem is that it's previously-infibulated mothers who want the operation for their daughters and who think it deeply wrong not to carry it out. The group has to work with incredible tact in clinics to point out infibulation's drawbacks, dangers, and cruelty, hoping by gradual persuasion to change beliefs that have been ingrained for century upon century. As I was doing this research, a friend of my daughter's was working in Somalia to spread anti-infibulation information. There were problems which I should perhaps not publicise here. All this did make it clear to me that insensitivity to local cultures is unproductive in creating social change on this issue. So I do not believe that thinking one's own culture is sort of world-superior is effective either, even though in this respect it clearly is superior. My headnote says that poetry has reached one of its limits. There's no suggestion that attempts actually to get the practice banned have reached their limit at all. But, obviously, no Somalian is going to be affected by my poem, and in any case a Western poem - trapped in its own culture - can't, much as it might like to, penetrate to the heart of the traditional-Islamic beliefs where the problem originates. Since the Western poet is so ineffectual unless he/she becomes an international social worker (or acts courageously like Alice Walker and Pratibha Parmar and makes a film) I go on to explore what a mere poem might usefully do. One of poetry's various effective political roles is to make an issue vivid - in this case, the cruelty and robbing of the feminine birthright through male-dominated religious practices are, I would hope, vivid.

↑ Index

659. Mark Prejsnar
Re: The Book of Absences
Mon 27 Apr 1998

On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, Aviva99999 wrote:

> In a message dated 98-04-24 11:55:47 EDT, you write:
>
> <<
> On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, ScoutEW wrote:
>
> > Silliman give em a break.. if you think there should be inclusions
> > then go edit your own anthology.. >>
>
> While I am not interested in arguing with, nor supporting, Silliman's ideas for the poets that should have been included in this Rothenberg/Joris "Poems for the Millenium II" anthology...I find Silliman's tone unnecessarily "blaming." There's room for another anthology by Silliman, or anyone else.
>
> The misconception that anthologies can inclusively and comprehensively "represent" a period, a genre, etc., has been around long enough, and has been lamented over long enough, that I think we should retire it.

I have sympathy with this impulse. At the same time, it can't never be that simple....The Millenium represents an enormous output of resources. "There's always room for" many things in the world of poetry. But the capital to manufacture and market and distribute, that's something else again, and the understanding that very few endeavors will get the profile and visibility of an anthology like this, has much to do with severity of critical response. That, plus the monumentality of the set's design and tone; it is hard not to judge it as a "pocket canon." As Golding's brilliant book reminds us, an anthology is never just an anthology. But one this ambitious and sweeping is even more about totality than usual!

That being said, it is brilliant, astonishing, and gives us an amazingly complex and provocative occasion to think about poetries, about where we stand.

And that being said, there is something else: there is less a Will to Canon in this anthology than in most; it is in some respects partisan for a series of tones and missions, and strategies, more than for any slate of poets. That's the significance of the inclusion of the so-called oral poets. In very large part that section "fails" on some very specific level...For reasons I've mentioned before here: like the high school teachers who periodically try to teach lyrics from the likes of Lennon/McCartney or Dylan as on-the-page "poetry" to their classes, the editors have left behind too much of the art and guts of these musician's work; they've fundementally misapprehended what they are doing; they might as well (after all, think of A) have included some Bartok scores. But I wasn't surprised at the "oral" section. It has more meaning for what it is trying to demonstrate about directions, than for the quality of the work, as given on the page. This is always the problem (one of 'em) with ethnopoetix; it is also always its promise (..the promise of very unexpected directions..)

Thus, both inclusions and exclusions are in cases flawed; even very very flawed. It is surprising how little difference this makes. In some respects the work relates as much to America a Prophecy as it does to American Tree or Pomo Norton...It is meant to be (and is) visionary. Perloff I think it is, (who else?) who makes the provocative suggestion that A Prophecy is better thought of as parallel to the Cantos, than as an anthology as we normally mean the word. A poem. Some of the same intent is here.

Mark Prejsnar
@lanta

↑ Index

660. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: That Anthology
Mon 27 Apr 1998

---

i've been wanting to wait until i had volume two in hand before i posted in on this thread... but peter q's post draws me out early, in part b/c it's clear at this point, from everything posted thus far, that ron's complaint---though i like spicer and lennon & mccartney and (ron too!) and on & on---likely misses the mark (sorry ron)... not having volume two in hand, this is a bit presumptuous on my part... but one way to understand what i'm saying is to have a look at the classroom, as peter has done (don b indicated as much)...

when i opened volume one my eyeballs damn near popped out of my head---this was an exercise in humility (you'll forgive me the christian overtones)... and having used this volume as a sort of prompt in my creative writing class this past semester, i can attest to its usefulness with students, most of whom begin with no idea why anyone would even BOTHER toying with words (i have no majors---all of my students this semester are aspiring engineers/science/architecture majors)... mind you: i have to use a text that appeals to white kids, to black kids, to latino kids, to asian kids... to women and to men... to international students... to kids from the upper-classes, middle classes, and working classes...

some of you will no doubt find this an all-too-easy nod in directions mulicultural... but hey, guess what?---jerry and pierre's book WORKS in this context... it answers to the stated desires, on the part of some of these students anyway, that they read writing from what they identify as their respective cultures/niches... and through its juxtapositions, it illustrates how these various cultural products are both different and similar---a necessary lesson in understanding oneself, locally and globally...

but it's not just that the book has been great in the classroom---again, MY eyeballs damn near etc... i found MYself ashamed of MY global illiteracy (as 'twere), and though i am surely no exemplar of cultivation, i think it fair and necessary to observe that, twixt text and commentary, any poet picking up this book is bound to learn a good deal...

great work, guyz!...

eagerly awaiting volume two///

best,

joe

↑ Index

661. Annie Finch
juxtaposed-formalist reading in Chicago
Mon 27 Apr 1998

Another reading announcement:

Wednesday April 29 at 6 PM at the Chicago Art Institute's Poetry Center

Debra Bruce will be reading with me, John Frederick Nims, and oral-based performance poet Cin Salach. It's a start--a broader spectrum of formalist poets than is usually included (anywhere).

Annie

_____
_____
_____
Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

662. morpheal
Re: women, torture
Mon 27 Apr 1998

> My headnote says that poetry has reached one of its limits. There's no suggestion that attempts actually to get the practice banned have reached their limit at all. But, obviously, no Somalian is going to be affected by my poem, and in any case a Western poem - trapped in its own culture - can't, much as it might like to, penetrate to the heart of the traditional-Islamic beliefs where the problem originates.

Interesting comment and right on target.

To traditionalist Islamic believers, as far as I know, your poem is Satanic and would be awoved to have the exact opposite effect that you claim for it. The very use of a western style poem makes your opinion wrong in their viewpoint.

Wierd logic, but as far as I know, that logic holds true in their system.

M.

↑ Index

663. Judy Roitman

Re: women, torture, tradition, style

Mon 27 Apr 1998

> To traditionalist Islamic believers, as far as I know, your poem is Satanic and would be awoved to have the exact opposite effect that you claim for it. The very use of a western style poem makes your opinion wrong in their viewpoint.
>
> Wierd logic, but as far as I know, that logic holds true in their system.
>
> M.

I think both Islam and tradition are getting a bad rap here. Not every traditionalist Islamic believer believes in female genital mutilation. And _which_ tradition? There is a tendency to pretend that only the most rigid belief/behavior systems have roots in tradition. But many of these represent quite radical shifts from long-standing less rigid traditions --- for example, what is going on in Afghanistan right now is a radical shift from local practice.

I also question the interpretation of "the very use of a western style poem," but will leave that to others who know more about cross-cultural borrowings.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

664. ken|n|ing
Re: The Book of Absences
Mon 27 Apr 1998

Well, to me anthologizing is to trace the history of a genre or genres which will inevitably reflect the ideeological situations and tendencies of those doing the doing of it. The reason for these sorts of "alerts" is to validate these situations to those whose ideological situations don't particularly pertain. A forum such as this list seems a fine place to do this. Another anthology seems inferior. Small magazines might be one place to do this. They are anthologies in a sense whereas they have the advantage of consistently ammending their entries, or at least the opportunity for a more dialogical representation of the history of the genres they present. Patrick F. Durgin

|
|
k e n n i n g``````````````|``````````````````````````
a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
|418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

On Fri, 24 Apr 1998, Aviva99999 wrote:

> In a message dated 98-04-24 14:42:43 EDT, you write:
>
> << Sure, the nature
> of anthologizing demands that we raise these alerts, >>
>
> What, in your view, IS "the nature of anthologizing," and what, specifically, would these "alerts" serve to accomplish? I'm interested in understanding your viewpoint. I'm especially interested in understanding what you, and other folks, expect from anthologies, and I'm further interested in examining whether our expectations might be changed, or whether anthologizers need to conform more to such expectations, or...?

↑ Index

665. Franklin Bruno
mostly concerning The Book of Absences
Mon 27 Apr 1998

---

1) Spicer is definitely an hard-to-swallow omission (esp. as Duncan gets to close the vol.), and I woulda thought some selections from Grenier's 'Sentences' would have fit well w/ the visual/materialist tendencies explored in the anthology, as well as counting as a stated precursor of langpo. As for the long list of the (mostly) living that Ron S. gave, I can't see, given the book's global theater of operations and 50-yr time-frame, how one could justify including several more American poets who come from one lineage (the post-langpo diaspora) at the expense of the rest of the world. Inman yes, Moriarty no? How would you ever decide, at relatively little historical distance? I'd also note that the editors' introduction recognizes many of these problems, especially regarding their admission that they are in this case, in contrast w/ Vol. 1, not only witnesses but partisans to the chunk of history at hand. This last fact presumably has much to do with our capacity to carp at what's in and out in the case. Hey, I miss Ron Padgett, but I can close the book and go get one of his from my bookshelf, which I for one cannot do w/ the Cobra poets, or Adonis, or Dib. You can't have everything.

2) Does anyone know what Ron meant (Ron, for example) by "the antipoetics of song"? Isn't it more of a 'parallel' poetics, like that of vizpo?

3) I do have a very minor complaint about the inclusion of the Tom Waits lyric. The lineation of "Swordfishtrombone" in the anthology is taken from the lyric sheet of the same name. As far as I can tell, the line-breaks on this lyric sheet are a design convenience (all the album's lyrics are fit into a certain column length). The point--the line breaks have nothing, so far as I can tell to do with the lyric's metric, much less Waits' vocal phrasing in performance. Given that much attention was evidently paid to how Robt. Johnson's lyric was set on the page (reproduced from -The Blues Line-, I'm assuming), and Waits' lyric is being presented -as an oral poem-, shouldn't the line breaks have had something to do with the sung rhythm? Ron S. may be right here in saying that the presentation makes Waits seem dumber than he is.

4) Speaking of song, with respect to the 'writing through' (anti?)genre, someone mentioned Stephen Ratcliffe's -Campion On Song-. Can someone supply a citation? I don't even know if this was a book or something that appeared in a magazine. Please advise.

↑ Index

666. groberts
The Book of Spicer
Mon 27 Apr 1998

Since I have not yet popped for Millineum II, the following frivolous thought experiment is tangential at best to the remarks thus far about the anthology. I forget who joked about solving the incompleteness problem by copying some poems of your favorite missing poet and inserting them into your favorite anthology, but after that post, I found myself wondering how I would anthologize Spicer, and spent some time rereading the Collected Books to that end.

I give some authority to Spicer's claim, credited to Duncan and restated in the letter to Robin Blaser included in Admonitions, that "a poem is never to be judged by itself alone," meaning in part that the sequences or "books" in which his poems occur are the unit of value that Spicer is judging himself by, in so far as he is concerned that his reading of himself should be of use to another reader. Which in turn means, perhaps, that the anthologist of Spicer does not honor or test this claim unless entire sequences or books are selected. If I take this idea seriously, then I cannot anthologize Spicer by selecting the best bits form this or that sequence. The sequence that I would most want to anthologize is "Homage to Creeley/ Explanatory Notes" especially because it would challenge the formatting skills of the editor: but I assume that this text is too long for an anthology and I would not want to take only one of its three parts and leave the others behind. So what next?

I like that Messerli reprints all of "Thing Language" but would have preferred to see all of at least one other sequence included instead of just context-less selected poems. I like the way that "Love Poems" follows upon "Thing Language" but if these two sequences from Language are chosen, then what about the other sequences after that, since the echoes and patterns carry on throughout the entire "book"? Because Language (the book) seems to fall into two parts (as the Intermissions section practically insists), does the anthologist who believes this book to be most praiseworthy choose a section from the first "half" (this word is problematic) and a section from the second half and leave it at that? Or should just a large portion of one half be used? The problem with the second choice is that it distorts too much Spicer's range: for example, Hoover's choice of "Morphemics" and "Phonemics" makes Spicer seem more ponderous than he really is, and what is a selection of Spicer worth with humor or references to baseball?

Perhaps using "Four Poems for The St. Louis Sporting News" and throw in "Fifteen False Propositions Against God" might be the most efficient way to anthologize Spicer. But then, the efficiency of the anthologist is not the efficiency of the poet. And my selections are capitulations more than commitments. The thought-experiment, however, has given me a new appreciation for the difficulty of the anthologist's work, most of which is invisible in the final product.

Anyone want to propose another Book of Spicer?

(sorry, end of penultimate paragraph should read "without humor etc.")

Gary R.

↑ Index

667. MAYHEW
Stop, I did not drag my father past this tree
Mon 27 Apr 1998

I have to say that I am more satisfied with Volume I than Volume II (of poems for the Millenium) I have a book review coming out soon, which I will give information about when it has appeared, in which I explain my reasons. In brief, Volume I is amazing because of its juxtapositions and inclusions. It has "high modernism" (Rilke or Yeats) along side of Dada and negritude. It allows for a marvelously complex understanding of literary modernism.

Volume II, filled with wonders as it is (Joris' translations of Celan, Beat Poetry, Brazilian concrete poetry, Italian novissimi, Language poets, Frank O'Hara, etc...) does not allow for the same sort of ideological contrasts, because it seem more governed by sectarian interests. You don't get to compare Merrill to Ashbery, or Auden to O'Hara. Pretending that rival traditions simply don't exist creates wierd distortions. In particular, the anthologists prefer a mode that I call the "ethnographic sublime," in a sense betting that this will be THE tradition of postmodern poetry. The bad poetry in the book tends to be written in this particular mode.

I prefer a book like Shaking the Pumpkin, more limited in scope, and that doesn't carry around the baggage of being "THE University of California Book of mod. and postmod. poetry." This is too much of a burden for any tome to bear.

I tend to hate anthologies anyway. They are basically interventions into literary politics that don't appeal to me as a reader.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

668. Maz881
bad history
Mon 27 Apr 1998

read this watten line from bad history yesterday that i can't seem to shake:

"when they beat you with a flashlight, you make light shine in all directions."

i love barrett. he is sick and evil and makes you feel so beaten down. and that line is funny. is it ironic? does the apparatus speak like that? i feel some of the old barrett from mode-z in 1-10 slipping in to this book. or this book is a big mode z. ?

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

669. Maz881
Re: Bachelard's take
Mon 27 Apr 1998

Judy, doesn't she teach at brown? i think her fivesome is divided up into boys, girls, ferms (more female hermaphrodite), herms ("true" hermaphrodite), & merms (more male hermaphrodite). not a good idea in my mind. why pin it down? and reportedly not one that makes intersexuals too happy.

Bill L

<< Anne Fausto-Sterling (a feminist biologist who is well known in women's studies) has done a lot of research on this stuff, I think she might even have a book out. She claims that there are naturally 5 (did I get that number right?) genders, and had some articles about this in popular media a couple or so years ago. She is very passionate and humane and quite wonderful. Anyone interested in this would be well advised to look her stuff up.

And what this says about the two standard genders...
>>

↑ Index

670. joel lewis
F.Y.I.
Mon 27 Apr 1998

10:06 AM ET 04/27/98

New York Sends Up Red Flag

By Jennifer Nix
NEW YORK (Variety) - One suspects that Karl Marx will be having quite a chuckle this May Day.
Wall Street will be festooned with red flags and banners citing passages from, of all things, ``The Communist Manifesto,'' Marx's political call-to-arms, co-written with Frederick Engels.
Marking the 150th anniversary of the original 23-page pamphlet, Verso Books is publishing a special edition, with a brand-new introduction and jacket illustration by the trendy art duo, Komar and Melamid.

Given the Commie chic marketing possibilities for the book, Verso publisher Colin Robinson set Intl. Workers Day (May 1) as the official publication date, and has convinced Waldenbooks on Wall Street and Broadway to do some irony-drenched promotion.

Copies of the hip new edition will be featured in store windows with red flags and banners quoting the ``Manifesto,'' with bits like, ``The capitalist class has greatly increased the urban population as compared to the rural, and has thus rescued a considerable part of the population from the idiocy of rural life.''

Only in Gotham.

Reuters/Variety

^REUTERS@

↑ Index

671. Karen Kelley

Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting

Mon 27 Apr 1998

Unfortunately, in some circles it's probably politically incorrect to have a personal dislike of rhubarb.

An associative anecdote: I edit courseware for a large company. The exercises in the back of the manuals are printed on green or blue or purple paper (I didn't want to specify what color, since, really, who cares?). The online presentation has a little exercise icon & a note that the student should "turn to the colored pages in the back of this manual."

Sure enough, someone has come to me because the reference to "colored" pages offended a student. I laughed heartily, but have since been informed that it's better to err on the side of political correctness.

Ah well.

George Bowering wrote:

> I thought the personal was the political.
>
> Well, no, it's not. If you have a personal dislike of rhubarb that is not political. If you start a party that favours rhubarb farmers over rhubarb brokers, that is political.
>
> George Bowering.
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,

> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

672. toddbaron
REMAP
Mon 27 Apr 1998

I've never sseen an exploding helicopter...but I have seen people destroy themselves in the smallest way."
John Cassavetes

ReMap # 6 POLITICS
RE*Map #6 POLITICS
has just been released

Norma Cole
Spencer Selby
Ray DiPalma
Noah De Lissovoy
Laura Moriarity
Martin Nakell
Arron Shurin

ed. since 1990 by Todd Baron & Carolyn Kemp

subs $10. per 2
To Todd Baron
2860 Exposition Blvd
#a
Santa Monica Ca 90404

#7 will be ON LOVE

↑ Index

673. Linda Russo
Re: F.Y.I.
Mon 27 Apr 1998

---

excuse me if i wear my naivete on my sleeve like a red flag for a moment, (i hear "commie chic" is something you can't help but display); you do gotta love NY but

re:Marx -- is this sickening anyone else? Am I alone or mistaken in my impression that Marx isn't chuckling?? When i think of how many used copies i've come across in my life (and when penguin classics &c puts out a respectable text &c & pathfinder used to (before they were run out of Salt Lake) give it away . . .) not that this is about supply & demand -- Has Verso has made the CM a _literally_ self-consuming artefact or what?

> NEW YORK (Variety) - One suspects that Karl Marx will be having quite a chuckle this May Day.
> Wall Street will be festooned with red flags and banners citing passages from, of all things, ``The Communist Manifesto,'' Marx's political call-to-arms, co-written with Frederick Engels.

&c &c

↑ Index

674. Chicago Review
Re: Poetry at the White House
Tue 28 Apr 1998

I found a poorly prepared transcript of the 4/22 White House reading at:

http://www.whitehouse.gov/Initiatives/Millenium/poets.html

It's curious to see which poems Hass, Pinsky, and Dove read, and how they choose to talk about them. There's a q & a session at the end. All in all, it gives one some idea of the rhetorical strategies Poets Laureate must have to work out for themselves in order to accomplish anything during their terms. Imagine speaking before Rotary Clubs, as Hass is said to have done many times in 1995-97. I missed seeing Dove when she was in office, but Hass and Pinsky are both good public speakers and readers. Hass in particular is very effective. Anyone interested in the work of these three, as I am, should probably check it out.

Andy Rathmann

Andrew Rathmann
Editor, Chicago Review
5801 S. Kenwood Ave.
Chicago IL 60637-1794
ph/fax [redacted]
e-mail [redacted]

↑ Index

675. Mark Baker
Re: Poetry at the White House
Tue 28 Apr 1998

> I found a poorly prepared transcript of the 4/22 White House

Thanks. Who was it said the poetry's found in the transcription? I found this superb "writing through" at the White House:

"Much madness is the vinest sense to the discerning eye"

and, vinously Zukofsky:

"The pond at the end of the mine"

There's more, including a radical underwriting of lineation.

Mark Baker

Chicago Review wrote:
>
> I found a poorly prepared transcript of the 4/22 White House reading at:
>
> http://www.whitehouse.gov/Initiatives/Millenium/poets.html
>
> It's curious to see which poems Hass, Pinsky, and Dove read, and how they > choose to talk about them. There's a q & a session at the end. All in > all, it gives one some idea of the rhetorical strategies Poets Laureate > must have to work out for themselves in order to accomplish anything during > their terms. Imagine speaking before Rotary Clubs, as Hass is said to have > done many times in 1995-97. I missed seeing Dove when she was in office, > but Hass and Pinsky are both good public speakers and readers. Hass in > particular is very effective. Anyone interested in the work of these > three, as I am, should probably check it out.
>
> Andy Rathmann
>

↑ Index

676. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: F.Y.I.
Tue 28 Apr 1998

It's not sickening me, given the careers of Komar and Melamid who have worked with samizdat and communist-satirical issues rather brilliantly since at least a couple of decades; they've lived thru it, etc.

Alan

On Mon, 27 Apr 1998, Linda Russo wrote:

> excuse me if i wear my naivete on my sleeve like a red flag for a moment, (i hear "commie chic" is something you can't help but display); you do gotta love NY but
>
> re:Marx -- is this sickening anyone else? Am I alone or mistaken in my impression that Marx isn't chuckling?? When i think of how many used copies i've come across in my life (and when penguin classics &c puts out a respectable text &c & pathfinder used to (before they were run out of Salt Lake) give it away . . .) not that this is about supply & demand -- Has Verso has made the CM a _literally_ self-consuming artefact or what?
>
> NEW YORK (Variety) - One suspects that Karl Marx will be having quite a chuckle this May Day.
> Wall Street will be festooned with red flags and banners citing passages from, of all things, ``The Communist Manifesto,'' Marx's political call-to-arms, co-written with Frederick Engels.
>
> &c &c

↑ Index

677. Robert Archambeau
Re: Poetry at the White House
Tue 28 Apr 1998

> Imagine speaking before Rotary Clubs, as Hass is said to have done many times in 1995-97.

There ought to be some kind of purple heart award for anyone who survives that (and Hass was pretty worn down by it, too). But the work he did there deserves recognition -- he managed to convince a lot of people who'd never given much thought to literature and literacy to put money into underfunded school libraries and similar organizations. This kind of grass-roots stumping seems to me one of the more positive things that's been done with the laureateship recently, and it accompished more than any amount of grandstanding could have done.

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College

Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

" on the end
of each decision stands a heretic"
--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

678. Dougolly
Re: women, torture
Tue 28 Apr 1998

Date: Mon, 27 Apr 1998 12:39:25 -0400
From: morpheal <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: women, torture

Briefly on "The Infibulation Ceremony" poem. I welcome morpheal's interest and Judy Roitman's point that traditionalism and Islam don't necessarily imply belief in female genital mutilation -- the prose-surround that normally accompanies this poem fully covers this point and cites a beautiful Islamic statement about tolerance. As infibulation is only mentioned in the hadith (traditional sayings of Mohammed), its justification is often regarded as open to scholarly interpretation. I don't think opposing it would be regarded as Satanic, perhaps even by most hard-liners. As for Western poetry, I mainly said that my poem was unlikely to get through to Somali nomads -- given the widespread illiteracy alone, an uncontroversial point.

↑ Index

679. Miekal And
umbra?
Tue 28 Apr 1998

---

umbra?

↑ Index

680. Mark Prejsnar
the flying wedge
Tue 28 Apr 1998

---

*One thing occurs, reading the various responses to Ron's slashing critique, and reading Mill.2 itself (thanx to JR or PJ or whoever got U of C Press to send me a review copy: it is in fact gonna get a major review in the Proj.).....

*A strength of the book is its positioning of poetics and practice in relation to groups. Re-emphasis of the fact that poetry is a profoundly collective endeavor.

*I found Ron extremely funny (dissing the inclusion of "anyone who ever attended a Fluxus event")...But these framings are interesting and important. The editors mention the Umbra group as one they might have included and didn't. (...anyone out there who has not read Nielsen's Black Chant should immediately do so...) One of the tragic things, right now, is that we have in Aldon's book a beginning of a recovery for the poetry community at large, of Umbra and closely related currents...that is a recovery of the memory that they existed; but this doesn't make their work available to most. (I'm lucky to be a wage slave at Emory University, whose library collected many of the group's individual volumes when they were published; they were in some cases low-profile publications then, and are definitely obscure now) So I'm very sorry Umbra was not included.

*As there's so much talk about the dynamix of anthologies, it does occur that an Umbra anthology has to be in our future; just a matter of its editor stepping forward... (listening, Aldon?)

*Anyway, the conceptualizing of the period's poetry, as having much to do with collective groupings, is a strength of the whole project. It is handled flexibly, with poets viewed individually in some instances, in groupings at other times. One could argue with details. (All those Fluxus people that worry Ron so, are not presented in their own section, for all that the editors are at pains to emphasize them; which is odd and goes unexplained..) But being both a poet and a communist, I have to say that these are healthy impulses..

Mark Prejsnar
@lanta

↑ Index

681. Henry Gould
Re: the flying wedge
Tue 28 Apr 1998

I sure hope the NEXT millennial edition includes a sampling of the Islomaniacs, a neglected group of Madagascaran english-writing poets who never knew whether they would appear as authors of their own next poems, nor where their next cup of chai was coming from, much less whether they would be part of the future or even the past. They traded poems on a read-or-burn basis since firewood was(& is) in chronic short etc. Their work is hard to find - especially since it isn't "work". The Univ. of Left Overbie in Great Britain houses most of the extant unpublished ms. and Eric Blarnes could tell you more about it but his comments are very consistently unreliable. There is, however, a dissertation by one Jacqueline Spendroit of the Univ. of Gottagingoin, titled "Islomania in My Mind : the Square Root of a Broken Circle : Madagascar and the Poetics of Exotic Species : How to Tie a Bowline" which you can get through interlibrary loan from Humble Public Library, Humble, TX, if you ask nicely. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

682. Mark Prejsnar

Re: Stop, I did not drag my father past this tree

Tue 28 Apr 1998

---

*Jonathan Mayhew's critique is badly ill-concieved. The Millenium project is not about Auden and Merrill. There are interesting dimensions to those poets.

*But the editors specifically address the edgeness of what they are dealing with. Use the term "avant-garde" and such like. Now, I hate that term, but almost everyone I respect uses it (or experimental or innovative) and we can't really get away from the nomenclature problem easily. The point is, there are venues where you can find excessively lionized mainstream icons like Auden and Merrill.

*This really and truly is an instance where (as some said to Ron) the critic should do his own anthology...Because what Jonathan has in mind here is not the concept of the Millenium volumes. The concept in his mind sounds interesting. Camps (in the broad sense of mainstream/alterstream) should indeed clash/encounter/dialogue more. And more directly. But the Millenium venture is about something else.

*Along these lines, many avant'ers are going to be shaken by the inclusion of poetry and poetix from Adrienne Rich, for instance. There are other instances, but I don't have the volume in front of me...

*No, there is definitely breadth and then some, to Mill.2.

Mark Prejsnar
@lanta

↑ Index

683. Aldon Nielsen

Re: The Book of Laughter and Forgetting

Tue 28 Apr 1998

I, for one, do not have a personal dislike of rhubarb that is not political. If I was once involved in a political rhubarb, that was political.

On the other comma,,,,,

Jack Spicer may be outside the millenial antho., but he's been transmitted into the pages of _Lingua Franca_, an odd landing for my favorite Martian. The current issue carries a short notice of the two new books -- (and THANKS to Kevin and Peter for their valued labors) --

↑ Index

684. Aldon Nielsen
Re: [Fwd: Re: Poetry at the White House, Anthologies] (fwd)
Tue 28 Apr 1998

Ah, so it is true that Charles Bernstein was in two places at the same time. I once saw somebody who identified himself as Norman Finkelstein correct a professor who had taken him for Charles Bernstein, but now I wonder ---

↑ Index

685. Aldon Nielsen
Re: the flying wedge
Tue 28 Apr 1998

---

just a personal note in response to the many people who have asked if I'm doing an anthology --

block to date has been lack of support for getting permissions, etc. -- I have decided to go ahead with a modest anthology of innovative poetries by African-American authors post WWII,,,, will be a _sample_, not inclusive -- may be followed by a second vol. if first gets around well enough --

as with my critical books, the point will be not "coverage" but instigation -- in hopes that others will follow (LIKE that UMBRA anthology that Mark suggests)

↑ Index

686. Maria Damon
Re: umbra?
Tue 28 Apr 1998

At 10:31 AM +0000 4/28/98, Miekal And wrote:
>umbra?

maybe i missed what this q was in relation to, but umbra was a group of mostly African American poets loosely based around a publication of the same name. see aldon nielsen's wonderful Black Chant for an extensive description.

↑ Index

687. Martin Spinelli
Re: F.Y.I.
Tue 28 Apr 1998

> From: Linda Russo <[redacted]>
>
> Salt Lake) give it away . . .) not that this is about supply & demand -- Has Verso has made the CM a _literally_ self-consuming artefact or what?

I'm with you Linda. I haven't been so bugged by the commocification of dissent since the Black & Red _Society of the Spectacle_ was replaced on bookstore shelves by that god-awful, easy-to-read/consume translation/version from I can't remeber who. No respect for the project existing in the form of the lingo as well! The Black & Red cost 3 bucks (if that--no copyright) while the new one was wieghing in at $16. Also dissing the project's embodiment in the form of distibution!

There was a big spread about the new CM in the Independent over here (UK) a month or so ago. Some prat, tres into "Cool Britania", was talking about opening a shop in Lodon devoted to Commie Chic which would only be open one day a week, staffed by rude, uniformed Russians, and made an effort to understock. No joke!

Marx hasn't chuckled since they started charging 8 pounds to visit his grave in Highgate.

What are us girls and boys to do? (I know where there's a hole in the fence so you can sneek in at night.)

Martin

_____
Martin Spinelli SUNY Buffalo English Department
Granolithic Productions

[redacted]
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
ENGAGED http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk

↑ Index

688. Mark Prejsnar
Re: the flying wedge
Tue 28 Apr 1998

Great, Aldon...

We all benefit from (not to mention envy) you weird mutants who seem to have about 5 times the energy of the normal person.....

Mark P.

On Tue, 28 Apr 1998, Aldon Nielsen wrote:

> just a personal note in response to the many people who have asked if I'm doing an anthology --
>
> block to date has been lack of support for getting permissions, etc. -- I have decided to go ahead with a modest anthology of innovative poetries by African-American authors post WWII,,,, will be a _sample_, not inclusive -- may be followed by a second vol. if first gets around well enough --
>
> as with my critical books, the point will be not "coverage" but instigation -- in hopes that others will follow (LIKE that UMBRA anthology that Mark suggests)

↑ Index

689. Mark Prejsnar
Re: the flying wedge
Tue 28 Apr 1998

I'll make the costumes! (especially those large flowing capes..an obvious sartorial link between the traditions of poetry and those of Marvel superheroes)

--Pomo Man

On Tue, 28 Apr 1998, Safdie Joseph wrote:

> So far this morning we've heard of one poetics list member who can be in two places at once -- and now we hear of another who has five times the strength of other mortals! I think we should rename this list the "Poetics League of America" to properly commemorate the super powers of its members.
>
> I, for example, know what the next post is going to look like!
>
> Joe
>
> ----------
> From: Mark Prejsnar[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Reply To: UB Poetics discussion group
> Sent: Tuesday, April 28, 1998 11:23 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: the flying wedge
>
> Great, Aldon...

> We all benefit from (not to mention envy) you weird mutants who seem to have about 5 times the energy of the normal person.....
>
> Mark P.
>
> On Tue, 28 Apr 1998, Aldon Nielsen wrote:
>
> just a personal note in response to the many people who have asked if I'm doing an anthology --
>
> block to date has been lack of support for getting permissions, etc. -- I have decided to go ahead with a modest anthology of innovative poetries by African-American authors post WWII,,,, will be a _sample_, not inclusive -- may be followed by a second vol. if first gets around well enough --
>
> as with my critical books, the point will be not "coverage" but instigation -- in hopes that others will follow (LIKE that UMBRA anthology that Mark suggests)

↑ Index

690. Safdie Joseph

Re: the flying wedge

Tue 28 Apr 1998

So far this morning we've heard of one poetics list member who can be in two places at once -- and now we hear of another who has five times the strength of other mortals! I think we should rename this list the "Poetics League of America" to properly commemorate the super powers of its members.

I, for example, know what the next post is going to look like!

Joe

> ----------
> From: Mark Prejsnar[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Reply To: UB Poetics discussion group
> Sent: Tuesday, April 28, 1998 11:23 AM
> To: [redacted]

> Subject: Re: the flying wedge
>
> Great, Aldon...
>
> We all benefit from (not to mention envy) you weird mutants who seem to have about 5 times the energy of the normal person.....
>
> Mark P.
>
> On Tue, 28 Apr 1998, Aldon Nielsen wrote:
>
> just a personal note in response to the many people who have asked if I'm doing an anthology --
>
> block to date has been lack of support for getting permissions, etc. -- I have decided to go ahead with a modest anthology of innovative poetries by African-American authors post WWII,,,, will be a _sample_, not inclusive -- may be followed by a second vol. if first gets around well enough --
>
> as with my critical books, the point will be not "coverage" but instigation -- in hopes that others will follow (LIKE that UMBRA anthology that Mark suggests)

↑ Index

691. MAYHEW

Stop, I did not drag my father

Tue 28 Apr 1998

I know that Poems for the Millenium is *about the avant-garde. My point was that Volume I is richer for its Yeats, Eliot, Rilke, Machado.(Machado hated the avant-garde).The anthologization of more recent poetry seems more affected by purely social groupings and the living memories of the participants.

It would have been more *imaginative to include Auden--the striking juxtapositions I value in all of Rothenberg's anthologies would have been enhanced rather than diminished. That Auden is accessible elsewhere is beside the point to me--so are O'Hara and A. Rich's dreadful poem about Beethoven's symphony.

By the "get your own anthology" argument all critique is automatically disarmed. If we can praise what's there it seems equally logical to look at what isn't, and perhaps speculate on why.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

692. MAYHEW
review of Poems
Tue 28 Apr 1998

My review of Poems for the Millenium vol. 2 can be accessed at www. ellavon.-com/ I have tried to be as fair as possible, within the limits of my own knowledge and sensibility.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

693. Maria Damon
Re: the flying wedge
Tue 28 Apr 1998

---

but is that po-mo as in postmodern, po(i)mo as in poetry-(in)-motion, or Pomo as in American Indian.

At 2:32 PM -0400 4/28/98, Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>I'll make the costumes! (especially those large flowing capes..an obvious >sartorial link between the traditions of poetry and those of Marvel >superheroes)
>
>--Pomo Man
>
>
>
>On Tue, 28 Apr 1998, Safdie Joseph wrote:
>

>> So far this morning we've heard of one poetics list member who can be in two >> places at once -- and now we hear of another who has five times the strength >> of other mortals! I think we should rename this list the "Poetics League of >> America" to properly commemorate the super powers of its members.
>>
>> I, for example, know what the next post is going to look like!
>>
>> Joe
>>
>>
>> > ----------
>> > From: Mark Prejsnar[SMTP:[redacted]]
>> > Reply To: UB Poetics discussion group
>> > Sent: Tuesday, April 28, 1998 11:23 AM
>> > To: [redacted]
>> > Subject: Re: the flying wedge
>> >
>> > Great, Aldon...
>> >
>> > We all benefit from (not to mention envy) you weird mutants who seem to >> > have about 5 times the energy of the normal person.....
>> >
>> > Mark P.
>> >
>> >
>> > On Tue, 28 Apr 1998, Aldon Nielsen wrote:
>> >
>> > > just a personal note in response to the many people who have asked if >> > I'm >> > > doing an anthology --
>> > >
>> > > block to date has been lack of support for getting permissions, etc. --
>> > I >> > > have decided to go ahead with a modest anthology of innovative poet-ries
>> > by
>> > > African-American authors post WWII,,,, will be a _sample_, not inclusive
>> > --
>> > > may be followed by a second vol. if first gets around well enough --
>> > >

>> > > as with my critical books, the point will be not "coverage" but >> > instigation
>> > > -- in hopes that others will follow (LIKE that UMBRA anthology that Mark >> > > suggests)
>> > >
>> >
>>

↑ Index

694. Christopher Reiner
new magazine
Tue 28 Apr 1998

FYI...

>Outlet, a periodical
>
>Editor: Elizabeth Treadwell
>Consulting Editors: Sarah Anne Cox and Grace Lovelace
>
>Address: Outlet, c/o Double Lucy Books
> PO Box 9013
> Berkeley, CA 94709
> USA
>Website: http://users.lanminds.com/~dblelucy
>Email: [redacted] (feel free to send up to 3 pp via email)
>
>Frequency: 2/year
>Subscription cost: $10/two issues includes a Double Lucy chapbook.
>Checks payable to Elizabeth Treadwell.
>
>
>>Editorial Statement:
>Our focus is on innovative poetry and prose. Our editorial trio has various >loves regarding writers: HD, Gertrude Stein, Virginia Woolf, Paul Celan, >Kathy Acker, Toni Morrison, Fay Weldon, Ezra Pound, Janet Frame -- to name a >few. Our first issue includes poetry by Norma Cole (Contrafact, Potes & >Poets) and fiction by Lily James (The Great Taste of Straight People, >Fiction Collective 2).
>
>>OUTLET Issues:

>>1. The Debutante- available in March 1998, our premiere issue features >writing by Cydney Chadwick, Norma Cole, Jen Hofer, Lily James, Susan Smith >Nash, Kathy Lou Schultz, and OTHERS. Also translations of Friedrich >Holderlin by Phil Jenks. Color cover is a painting by Teresa Moore.
>
>>2. Fairyland- available in the fall of 1998. Will feature fiction, poetry, >and criticism inhabiting or informed by fairytales, both obscure and >dog-eared. We are accepting submissions of up to five pages for this issue.
>Deadline: June 15, 1998.
>
>>3. Stiletto- Available in the spring of 1999. Will feature writing & >artwork which responds to the narration and technicalities of fashion, both >historical and contemporary. Deadline for submissions December 15, 1998.
>
>If you would like further guidelines on Outlet 2 or 3, please do not >hesitate to write or email us.
>
>If you would like a review copy of Outlet 1, please send a 6x9 SASE with $1 >postage.
>_____
>Double Lucy Chapbooks:
>
>1.The Marriage of the Well-Built Head: Book I of Her Knife, Fork & Spoon (a >Book of Etiquette), Yedda Morrison, 1998 ($3)
>2.Home of Grammar, Sarah Anne Cox, 1997 ($3)
>3.Eve Doe (becoming an epic poem), Elizabeth Treadwell, 1997($3)
>

↑ Index

695. ScoutEW
just a lil something
Tue 28 Apr 1998

I need the email or regular mail addresses of these two people so please backchannel me if possible pleaso!
Travis Ortiz
Judith Goldman

thanks

↑ Index

696. Poetics List

NYC Poetry Calendar Gala (FWD)

Tue 28 Apr 1998

Forwarded for the NYC Poetry Calendar:

8 April 1998
CONTACT: MARTIN PADDIO
[redacted]

On May 14, the New York City Poetry Calendar hosts a gala benefit reading at Fordham University at Lincoln Center, tickets are $25 (a tax-deductible contribution). The event features nine poets from across the literary spectrum: Charles Bernstein, Billy Collins, Marie Howe, Wayne Koestenbaum, J.D. McClatchy, Donna Masini, Eileen Tabios, Yusef Komunyakaa, and host, David Lehman.

The Gala is sponsored by Borders Books and Music, the evening will include a smorgasbord of readings, raffles, hors d'oeuvres and wine, and an opportunity to meet and mix, all to support Poetry Calendar. For advance tickets to the gala, on Thursday, May 14 at 7:30pm, at Fordham University at Lincoln Center, 113 W. 60th Street, 12th floor, call Poetry Calendar [redacted]. Tickets may also be purchased at the door.

Established in 1976, Poetry Calendar is the only inclusive poetry listing and magazine in New York City. It is the central resource for information about literary readings, lectures, workshops, broadcasts, and related activities in the Metropolitan area. Over 450 activities at more than 100 venues are listed every month; 10,000 copies are distributed free at bookstores, cafes, libraries, and schools around the city.

Poetry Calendar is a not-for-profit organization and is the recipient of grants from the National Endowment for the Arts and from the New York State Council on the Arts, and private contributions. Subscriptions to Poetry Calendar may be purchased for $20 per year from 611 Broadway, Suite 905, New York NY 10012.

Poetry Calendar on the web:
http://www.poets.org/cal/po_cal.htm
(or via EPC: "sites" then "poetry organizations" then NYC Poetry Calendar)

↑ Index

697. Aviva99999
Fwd: Amazon.com Books
Tue 28 Apr 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_893810436_boundary

In a message dated 98-04-27 18:42:26 EDT, [redacted] writes:

<< Hello!

We are responsive to the needs of small presses. Many call in and write each day. Their assistance is crucial to the updating of our catalog.

For more information on our work with small publishers please visit our site. On our website, you can visit our special publishers' annex at this URL:

http://www.amazon.com/publishers

Please don't hesitate to contact us should you have any further questions, and thanks for your interest in Amazon.com!

Best Regards,

Hannah Burke
Catalog Department
Amazon.com Books
http://www.amazon.com
>>

--part0_893810436_boundary

air11.mx.aol.com (v42.4) with SMTP; Mon, 27 Apr 1998 18:42:26 -0400
by relay30.mx.aol.com (8.8.5/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with ESMTP id SAA18261 for <[redacted]>;
Mon, 27 Apr 1998 18:42:24 -0400 (EDT)
From: [redacted]
by amazon.com (8.8.5/8.8.5) with ESMTP id PAA09825 for <[redacted]>; Mon, 27 Apr 1998 15:42:23 -0700 (PDT)
(PDT)
PAA19181; Mon, 27 Apr 1998 15:42:27 -0700 (PDT)
Date: Mon, 27 Apr 1998 15:42:27 -0700 (PDT)
[redacted] using -f
To: Aviva99999 <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Amazon.com Books
from-address: [redacted]

Hello!

We are responsive to the needs of small presses. Many call in and write each day. Their assistance is crucial to the updating of our catalog.

For more information on our work with small publishers please visit our site. On our website, you can visit our special publishers' annex at this URL:

http://www.amazon.com/publishers

Please don't hesitate to contact us should you have any further questions, and thanks for your interest in Amazon.com!

Best Regards,

Hannah Burke
Catalog Department
Amazon.com Books
http://www.amazon.com

> X-Mailer: AOL 3.0 for Windows 95 sub 64
> Subject: Re: Amazon.com Books
> To: [redacted]
> Date: Wed, 22 Apr 1998 20:54:50 EDT
> From: Aviva99999 <[redacted]>
>
> In a message dated 98-04-22 14:54:00 EDT, you write:
>
> << We work with many small > presses each day. We actively help them add books to our catalog, update > existing listings, and add descriptive materials. >>
>
> Sounds to me as though the small presses should be proactive, and seek out > listings from amazon.com. Would your company be responsive, or can it only > process information from compiled sources?

--part0_893810436_boundary--

↑ Index

698. joel lewis
f.y.i.
Tue 28 Apr 1998

Paris 1968 uprising recalled in writing on wall

PARIS (Reuters) - The fury of France's 1968 student uprising came to life at a Paris auction Tuesday when more than 200 posters from the era went under the hammer.

Thirty years later, the stark revolutionary art, most of it crudely painted in red or black, has turned into a pricey collector's item, echoing the rage that spilled out of universities and factories onto the cobble stones of Paris streets which became a symbol of the revolt.

While demonstrators declared war on the establishment and consumer society in general, the posters' favorite whipping boys were the aging President Charles de Gaulle and the CRS riot police, whose job was to crack down on the anarchy that virtually shut down the country for May and part of June 1968.

``They were full of talent, and humor too,'' said antique dealer Monique Couturier, who bought a poster of a medicine bottle labeled ``Press: Do Not Swallow.''

She remembers the students who came to her shop to prepare for their marches, tying water-soaked bandannas over their noses and mouths as protection from tear gas.

But they were also virulent to the extreme. A poster of Hitler holding a mask of de Gaulle depicts the angry mood of those summer months.

↑ Index

699. Jordan Davis
keemun imp.
Wed 29 Apr 1998

Charles North's _No Other Way: Selected Prose_ is just out from Hanging Loose. I read it as the significant counterpoint to _Content's Dream_, more similarities than one might guess.

Generating some interest and some uninterest is Sianne Ngai's essay "Raw Matter: A poetics of disgust" in the current number of Open Letter. Philly talkers will remember that this is the piece Jeff Derksen cited in his brave stand against Ron Silliman. Philly talkers will also remember that Derksen, trapped, revealed the source of at least one of his list of expletive percentages. In the essay Ngai calls for a poetics of muffled noises in response to cockroaches ingesting fecal matter. Gestalt me in!

Love,
Nobody Else

↑ Index

700. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
gov't hijinx
Wed 29 Apr 1998

Subject: ACT TODAY

*URGENT MESSAGE*******
****

From: "Temple, Elena" <[redacted]>

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE Contact: Elena Temple April 29, 1998
[redacted]

AVISORY!
ADVISORY!
ADVISORY!

* * * S P E C I A L A L E R T ! * * *

Washington, D.C. - Congressman Albert R. Wynn (D-MD) is issuing a special alert regarding H.R. 6 - a bill introduced by Rep. Frank Riggs (R-CA), which would prohibit all affirmative action in higher education admissions.

This extreme measure, to be considered on the House floor TODAY, (4/29) is a sweeping proposal that would prohibit affirmative action designed to remedy documented and proven history of discrimination against persons on the basis of race, sex, color, ethnicity, or national origin.

The bill affects virtually all colleges and universities across the country, public and private, from using affirmative action in their admissions policies - even if the school believes it is necessary to ensure a diverse student body.

Because the bill uses the term "preferential treatment" without defining it, the term could be interpreted broadly to cover a wide range of admission policies and practices - including outreach and recruitment.

This bill -- to be certain -- will lead to an unprecedented degree of federal regulation of college and university admission activities.

Please contact Speaker Newt Gingrich's office to express your opposition to the Riggs Amendment!

Speaker Newt Gingrich :
phone [redacted]
Fax [redacted]
E-mail [redacted]
###

↑ Index

701. Simon/Piombino
Poets for Choice reading
Wed 29 Apr 1998

Nick Piombino reads
with Erica Hunt and Ed Foster
at the Ceres Gallery 584 Broadway, Room 306
May 7th Thursday
7:30 p.m.
Poets for Choice at Ceres
Benefit for Planned Parenthood of NY
$7 contribution

announcing Nick's new web site!
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/piombino

↑ Index

702. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: gov't hijinx
Wed 29 Apr 1998

Thanks for the heads up Maria. The e-address for Gingrich is wrong, however. I just spoke with his office and got the correct one. It's: [redacted]

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

703. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: gov't hijinx
Wed 29 Apr 1998

---

just a correction on Maria's post:
the Newt's email address is:

[redacted]

not
> [redacted]

folks who want to contact their own representatives (House, in this case)
may find this site useful:

Voices
<http://www.yes.ucla.edu/voices/>

it contains a full Congressional directory, email addresses, even a form so that you can email your representatives right from the site, tho the latter seems to be down just now.

of course, it's no substitute for throwing the bums out, all of 'em...

good luck. chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402 press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

704. Christopher W. Alexander
Newt's address - finally
Wed 29 Apr 1998

Patrick says:
> [redacted]

but it's really:
[redacted]
^^^^

the typo was appropriate, tho.

chris

..

Christopher Alexander [redacted]
Marriott Library Instruction [redacted] (lv. msg.)
http://www.lib.utah.edu/instruction/mltech.html

↑ Index

705. morpheal
Re: women, torture, tradition, style
Wed 29 Apr 1998

> I think both Islam and tradition are getting a bad rap here. Not every traditionalist Islamic believer believes in female genital mutilation. And _which_ tradition? There is a tendency to pretend that only the most rigid > belief/behavior systems have roots in tradition. But many of these represent quite radical shifts from long-standing less rigid traditions --- for example, what is going on in Afghanistan right now is a radical shift from local practice.

I agree with you on that. I cannot, from my own knowledge, claim that it is a practice that is specifically condoned by that tradition. It is clearly not strongly opposed. I think, without more expertise in that area, that is all we can really say. If it is practiced and not opposed, then similar to what sati (the immolation of wives on their deceased husband's funeral pyres) was to the Hindu tradition before British intervention, the practice is condoned by the cultures / traditions wherein it is practiced.

When the spiritual leaders with Islam declare that the practice is forbidden, then the practice will no doubt end among Islamic people. Does the existence of the practice that mean there is a basis for the practice in Islamic tradition ? Not necessarily. Though it might mean that there is no basis for any strong opposition to the practice within the tradition.

> I also question the interpretation of "the very use of a western style poem," but will leave that to others who know more about cross-cultural borrowings.

I think that we have to realize that in fact, no matter what we give lip service to, we do not really respect many of their beliefs and practices (whomever THEY are) and THEY do not in fact respect many of our beliefs and practices. Anything beyond that is simply diplomacy jostling for momentary strategic and economic advantege. While I hate to be so Machiavellian about it, it is the way the world in fact functions.

Besides that, the limits of respect as to allowing them their's, if they do not attempt to force their's onto us and make us follow their's, are breached in the instance where there are members of their own group who want to free themselves, or to be freed by means of intervention, from oppressive practices and beliefs that they do not freely choose to accept and follow, but are constrained to by force, and by means of fear and intimidation even unto potential loss of life.

Where does respect for alien practices and beliefs end, and intervention against the oppressors become not only acceptable, but necessary ?

A difficult but not an impossible question.

M.

↑ Index

706. morpheal
Re: women, torture
Wed 29 Apr 1998

> Briefly on "The Infibulation Ceremony" poem. I welcome morpheal's interest and Judy Roitman's point that traditionalism and Islam don't necessarily imply belief in female genital mutilation -- the prose-surround that normally accompanies this poem fully covers this point and cites a beautiful Islamic statement about tolerance. As infibulation is only mentioned in the hadith (traditional sayings of Mohammed), its justification is often regarded as open to scholarly interpretation.

Everything is that way in those kinds of systems. Koran is, I seem to recall, considered the sum total of all human knowledge, all science. So mere mention of something is often considered sufficient. Even vague allusion, of subsequent reading into the text itself what was unknown at the time of writing, is often considered sufficient.

Also, the tendency is that if it is mentionned, included, there, and not forbidden explicitly, then it is an accepted practice within the tradition. I doubt, in that case, if you are right about that, that any Islamic leader will strongly oppose the practice. They do not tend to oppose "included" practices that are "mentionned" in the hadith.

> I don't think opposing it would be regarded as Satanic, perhaps even by most hard-liners. As for Western poetry, I mainly said that my poem was unlikely to get through to Somali nomads -- given the widespread illiteracy alone, an uncontroversial point.

It could, perhaps, but to their worldview it would be unintelligible.

That is a huge problem in the attempts to communicate across cultural boundaries. The worldviews are so different, so hard to get one's own head into and understand.....and then too damn easy for whomever gets their head into that space and that space into the head to end up "going native".

M.

↑ Index

707. Keston Sutherland
new books by Davis & Prynne
Wed 29 Apr 1998

Barque Press is looking for subscribers with whose money it can surge ahead into a fatter backlist, and deems fit to propose the following scheme:

Barque publishes about 5 books a year. Any subscriber will receive the next 5, two of which will be Jordan Davis's _Poem on a Train_ and JH Prynne's _Red D

Gypsum_ (not to be included in the forthcoming collected), at the cut rate of $35 incl. postage. New books will be, otherwise, $10 incl. postage. This is more than I'd like to charge, but cannot persist with present joyous money-flushing attitude. I offer whatever guarantee imaginable that all books will be pretty interesting and nicely produced. The two mentioned, Davis's and Prynne's, will be made with the help of monies received in this way or otherwise but preferably former. Gentle poets, all cashes should be up front naturally. Any profligate souls? Yrs, Keston Sutherland

↑ Index

708. toddbaron

Re: women, torture

Thu 30 Apr 1998

Important to remember (& know that the first Muslims studied language, history, and science in order to read the Q'uran--interpret--translate--and that THAT is still an ongoing function of Islam --as well as Judaismm and Christianity-- so that the Q'uran was not really considered "the sum total" but rather the book unto which (into which) the sum might be FOUND. I don't believe therfore that a reading into the text--by readers--would have been "unknown" at the time of the intial scribblings began...

↑ Index

709. David Baratier

Re: The Book of Spicer

Thu 30 Apr 1998

"a poem is never to be judged by itself alone." This is not a poem. Therefore unjudged by converse logic. Which in turn means, perhaps, that testing the anthologist of Spicer who does not honor Jack's wishes selected with an agenda. If I take this idea too seriously then I might believe anthologies affect the real in the same way that a politician is always adressing his friends or the fact that most americans believe houdini was killed during a magic stunt because of a made for tv movie. Spicer, by selecting the best bits from this or that sequence, for his Collected Poems 1945-1946 (Oyez:White Rabbit) created many moral problems for me like baseball.

David Baratier

↑ Index

710. Jordan Davis
sorrel programs are basal
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Dave! you hall of fame catcher

Good to see you on the list again -- I am much interested in this "moral problems like baseball" you say Spicer's oyez selected brought on. Is this the problem of choosing of aesthetics of excluding? Are they problem of reading other people's work, writing your own work, figuring out what work works, what? Or am I lunkheading out because I only really remember Charles DeGaulle and JFK when it comes to moral problems like baseball.

As Carol Mirakove says, kids want to know --
Jordan

PS computer groups mad about anti-proliferation commerce leaks -- 2000 million theoretical operations per second

↑ Index

711. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Hejinian in Denver
Thu 30 Apr 1998

For any in the Greater Tri-Tumbleweed area, Lyn Hejinian will be at the University of Denver tomorrow (Friday) to give a talk and a reading. Talk will be from 2-4, reading at 7:30. For info call [redacted]. This is part of a Visiting Writers series put on by Cole Swensen, who is really doing a great job bringing in first-rate people.

Rachel Levitsky and I will be attending and we couldn't be more excited. I for one hope to bring back a more intelligible report then the one I posted about the Bromige/Hollo/Swensen reading here in Boulder last month.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

712. MAYHEW
James Tate
Thu 30 Apr 1998

From a review of James Tate in the "New York Times Book Review," by one Adam Kirsch:

"Like the even more nonsensical
Language poets, Tate is trying to make words fresh again, to restore the glow that is rubbed away by advertisements and professional jargon and simple day-to-day repetition. Thus the reader discovers these deadpan absurdities: ''Please don't taunt the scrivener. . . . / No muffins permitted in the aviary.'' Or: ''my studies, Retro- /

gression and the Requiem Shark, to name but one area.''"

The problem is that this idea of "making words fresh again" is itself a tired commonplace. I also find the phrase "the even more non-sensical langauge poets" hilarious. Apart from this, the review does have some insight.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

713. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Syrian Poet Nizar Qabbani Dies
Thu 30 Apr 1998

April 30, 1998

By The Associated Press

LONDON (AP) -- Nizar Qabbani, the Syrian-born poet admired by generations of Arabs as the master of love verse, died today at his home in London. He was 75.

His family said he died of a heart attack. The poet had been in poor health for some months.

Syrian President Hafez Assad planned to send a plane to take Qabbani's body back to his native land.

In Cairo, Gamal el-Ghitanti, the Egyptian novelist and editor of the weekly News of Literature, described Qabbani as the most popular Arab poet of the 20th century.

``He was by any measure a great Arab poet who made a big effort to make his poetry understandable to all people and not only to the elite,'' he told The Associated Press.

In Damascus, the Syrian poet Youssef Karkoutly said Qabbani was ``as necessary to our lives as air.''

Qabbani became popular in 1954 when he published his first volume ``Childhood of A Breast, '' which broke from the conservative traditions of Arab literature.

He later wrote poems dealing with social and political issues. After the 1967 Arab-Israeli war he lamented in poetry what he saw as a bitter defeat of the Arab states.

Qabbani also was a committed Arab nationalist. Two themes dominated his verse: dictatorship and the Arab-Israeli conflict.

His later work also criticized the male-dominance of Arab society and its attempts to deprive women of their rights. In his poem ``Drawing with Words'' he wrote: ``When a man wishes a woman he blows a horn,/But when a woman wishes a man she eats the cotton of her pillow.''

He wrote more than two dozen books of poems. He also contributed to the London-based Arabic-language newspaper, al-Hayat.

In 1973 he married Balqis al-rawi, an Iraqi teacher whom he had met at a poetry recital in Baghdad. She was killed in a bomb attack by pro-Iranian guerrillas in Beirut in 1981 while working for the Iraqi Embassy's cultural section.

He is survived by two daughters and a son.

↑ Index

714. David Golumbia
Re: new books by Davis & Prynne
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Keston,

where should we send money? and to whom should checks be made out?

Keston Sutherland wrote:
>
> Barque Press is looking for subscribers with whose money it can surge > ahead into a fatter backlist, and deems fit to propose the following > scheme:
>
> Barque publishes about 5 books a year. Any subscriber will receive the > next 5, two of which will be Jordan Davis's _Poem on a Train_ and JH > Prynne's _Red D Gypsum_ (not to be included in the forthcoming collected), > at the cut rate of $35 incl. postage. New books will be, otherwise, $10 > incl. postage. This is more than I'd like to charge, but cannot persist > with present joyous money-flushing attitude. I offer whatever guarantee > imaginable that all books will be pretty interesting and nicely produced.

> The two mentioned, Davis's and Prynne's, will be made with the help of > monies received in this way or otherwise but preferably former. Gentle > poets, all cashes should be up front naturally. Any profligate souls?
> Yrs, Keston Sutherland
>

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

715. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Stop, I did not drag my father
Thu 30 Apr 1998

On Tue, 28 Apr 1998, MAYHEW wrote:

> By the "get your own anthology" argument all critique is automatically disarmed. If we can praise what's there it seems equally logical to look at what isn't, and perhaps speculate on why.

Speculate, but the point stands: what they set out to do is a whole different conceptualization than yours (and, again, yours would be a helpful one to pursue, but it's a different conception)

↑ Index

716. Mark Prejsnar
Re: keemun imp.
Thu 30 Apr 1998

"Brave stand against Ron Silliman"??

interesting reading of that encounter...

On Wed, 29 Apr 1998, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Charles North's _No Other Way: Selected Prose_ is just out from Hanging Loose. I read it as the significant counterpoint to _Content's Dream_, more similarities than one might guess.
>
> Generating some interest and some uninterest is Sianne Ngai's essay "Raw Matter: A poetics of disgust" in the current number of Open Letter. Philly talkers will remember that this is the piece Jeff Derksen cited in his brave stand against Ron Silliman. Philly talkers will also remember that Derksen, trapped, revealed the source of at least one of his list of expletive percentages. In the essay Ngai calls for a poetics of muffled > noises in response to cockroaches ingesting fecal matter. Gestalt me in!

>
> Love,
> Nobody Else

↑ Index

717. louis stroffolino
fresh
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Now Mayhew has caused Mayhem in the mind
i keep by a bar serving coors
and is reminding me of that terrible kool and the gong sang (DIGRESSION: i listen to rap when cars pass, and i heard this line
"LIKE THE CAT WHO KILLED VERSACE" yesterday, can anybody
NAME THAT TUNE)
anyway, when i first read this quote i thought it was
"Tate is trying to make words FLESH again"
ah, the materiality of the word meets the school of disembodied poets

Well, one could take Mayhew's problem further---
if the avoidance of cliche is now a cliche
then everything is permitted (which is a cliche too)....

But when we speak of the issue of "making language fresh"
(or however you want to express a similar impulse),
i guess there's a question involved about WHO you want to do that for? And I wonder if there's a way to avoid the possibility that someone will find "too obscure"
and "meaningless" what another person finds "too cliche"----
no matter WHAT kind of poem you write.....
chris
On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, MAYHEW wrote:

> From a review of James Tate in the "New York Times Book Review," by one Adam Kirsch:
>
> "Like the even more nonsensical
> Language poets, Tate is trying to make words fresh again, to restore the glow that is > rubbed away by advertisements and professional jargon and simple day-to-day
> repetition. Thus the reader discovers these deadpan

> absurdities: ''Please don't taunt the
> scrivener. . . . / No muffins permitted in the aviary.'' Or:
> ''my studies, Retro- /
> gression and the Requiem Shark, to name but one area.''"
>
> The problem is that this idea of "making words fresh again" is itself a tired commonplace. I also find the phrase "the even more non-sensical langauge poets" hilarious. Apart from this, the review does have some insight.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

↑ Index

718. Billy Little raworth
Thu 30 Apr 1998

From: tom raworth <[redacted]>
THings a little confused here, what with no home, and now having to go into hospital (heart) next tuesday.
received this as part of a note from tom this morning, anybody closer to the situation, know how we can help?

↑ Index

719. Michael Magee
Re: fresh
Thu 30 Apr 1998

" But when we speak of the issue of "making language fresh"
(or however you want to express a similar impulse),
i guess there's a question involved about WHO you want to do that for? And I wonder if there's a way to avoid the possibility that someone will find "too obscure"
and "meaningless" what another person finds "too cliche"----
no matter WHAT kind of poem you write.....
chris"

I think there are damn good reasons - social, political, and otherwise - for "keeping the language fresh" or howver you want to twist what that phrase signifies; and I'd say that the insistence that "freshness" as idea is now too commonplace is itself a bit commonplace and overly chic. That fact is that freshness provides absolutely necessary dissonances vis a vis normative usage, dissonaces which the language ultimately has to accomodate by becoming more flexible - the more flexible it becomes the more psossiblities that those who have constructed themselves via uninterpretable or unacceptable vocabularies can impress their vision(s) on larger communities of meaning. Language - as logical space - is open-ended, eh? This, not to mention that freshness is inevitable, generated by our various sub-community vernaculars every milisecond - hence "the cat who waxed Versace" (paraphrasing from memory as the repeater of vernacular expression is wont to do)...So, I'm all for freshness or the word which should be used in its place. -m.

↑ Index

720. trace s. ruggles
Re: fresh
Thu 30 Apr 1998

And, Kirsch's conclusion is:

.. And this, finally, is Tate's message to us: the little .. pleasures of ''pure ordinariness'' make all the pain .. worthwhile. The poems in ''Shroud of the Gnome'' are often .. difficult; but with a message like that, they cannot be a .. challenge.

Is Kirsch apologizing for Tate's poetry? Ah, if only the _message_ is good, you can forgive the poet for being _difficult_!

And, get this:

.. But while poets today may still use modernist techniques -- .. free association, surrealism, complex allusion -- the .. modernist temper is gone; poetry has to a large degree .. resumed its 19th-century role as a comfort and consolation, .. a retreat from the rigors of the world.

So, the 20th century was but a little diversion in the grand stream of POETRY which gave the POETS a few neat little tricks to use, but THANK GOD! we're back to comfort and consolation! So, please quit being so diffcult, y'all, and give me some nice little lines I can fall asleep to...

--trace--

At 8:39 AM -0700 4/30/98, you wrote:
> Now Mayhew has caused Mayhem in the mind

> i keep by a bar serving coors
> and is reminding me of that terrible kool and the gong sang > (DIGRESSION: i listen to rap when cars pass, and i heard this line
> "LIKE THE CAT WHO KILLED VERSACE" yesterday, can anybody
> NAME THAT TUNE)
> anyway, when i first read this quote i thought it was
> "Tate is trying to make words FLESH again"
> ah, the materiality of the word meets the > school of disembodied poets
> ---
> Well, one could take Mayhew's problem further---
> if the avoidance of cliche is now a cliche
> then everything is permitted (which is a cliche too)....
>
> But when we speak of the issue of "making language fresh"
> (or however you want to express a similar impulse),
> i guess there's a question involved about WHO you want > to do that for? And I wonder if there's a way to avoid > the possibility that someone will find "too obscure"
> and "meaningless" what another person finds "too cliche"----
> no matter WHAT kind of poem you write.....
> chris
>On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, MAYHEW wrote:
>
>> >From a review of James Tate in the "New York Times Book Review," by one >> Adam Kirsch:
>>
>> "Like the even more nonsensical
>> Language poets, Tate is trying to make words fresh again, to >> restore the glow that is >> rubbed away by advertisements and professional jargon and >> simple day-to-day
>> repetition. Thus the reader discovers these deadpan >> absurdities: ''Please don't taunt the
>> scrivener. . . . / No muffins permitted in the aviary.'' Or:
>> ''my studies, Retro- /
>> gression and the Requiem Shark, to name but one area.'"
>>
>>
>> The problem is that this idea of "making words fresh again" is itself a >> tired commonplace. I also find the phrase "the even more non-sensical >> langauge poets" hilarious. Apart from this, the review does have some >> insight.

>>
>>
>> Jonathan Mayhew
>> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
>> University of Kansas
>> [redacted]
>> [redacted]
>>

↑ Index

721. Safdie Joseph
Re: fresh
Thu 30 Apr 1998

In relation to what Chris says here, I found amusing the latest SPD flyer that arrived at my house, with a blurb from the book editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, Patricia Holt (but that's another story) -- something to the effect of "SPD has books by poets who really don't care if you understand them or not!" I thought it was a slightly curious thing to advertise . . .

> ----------
> From: louis stroffolino[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Thursday, April 30, 1998 8:39 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: fresh
>
> Now Mayhew has caused Mayhem in the mind
> i keep by a bar serving coors
> and is reminding me of that terrible kool and the gong sang > (DIGRESSION: i listen to rap when cars pass, and i heard this line
> "LIKE THE CAT WHO KILLED VERSACE" yesterday, can anybody
> NAME THAT TUNE)
> anyway, when i first read this quote i thought it was
> "Tate is trying to make words FLESH again"
> ah, the materiality of the word meets the
> school of disembodied poets
> ----------
> Well, one could take Mayhew's problem further---
> if the avoidance of cliche is now a cliche
> then everything is permitted (which is a cliche too)....
>
> But when we speak of the issue of "making language fresh"
> (or however you want to express a similar impulse),
> i guess there's a question involved about WHO you want > to do that for? And I wonder if there's a way to avoid

> the possibility that someone will find "too obscure"
> and "meaningless" what another person finds "too cliche"----
> no matter WHAT kind of poem you write.....
> chris
> On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, MAYHEW wrote:
>
> From a review of James Tate in the "New York Times Book Review," by one Adam Kirsch:
>
> "Like the even more nonsensical
> Language poets, Tate is trying to make words fresh again, to > restore the glow that is > rubbed away by advertisements and professional jargon and simple day-to-day
> repetition. Thus the reader discovers these deadpan absurdities: ''Please don't taunt the > scrivener. . . . / No muffins permitted in the aviary.''
> Or:
> ''my studies, Retro- /
> gression and the Requiem Shark, to name but one area.''"
>
> The problem is that this idea of "making words fresh again" is itself a tired commonplace. I also find the phrase "the even more non-sensical langauge poets" hilarious. Apart from this, the review does have some insight.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

↑ Index

722. MAYHEW
Fresh
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Yes, Louis, let's restore to language its original staleness. We could praise poets for their extreme conventionality. What struck me about the phrase I quoted was, precisely, its conventional formulation. This being said, it is still an un-avoidable concept.

Tate's poetry, which I have admired at some points of my life, is itself getting extremely formulaic, its zaniness somewhat predictable.

The hyperbanality of Raymond Roussel would be the other option, I suppose.

Jonathan Mayhem

↑ Index

723. k. lederer
Re: fresh
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Something I've noticed a lot re: difficulty---

There seems often to be (to continue to be) a real conflation of the poet with the speaker of the poems.

Martin Corless-Smith was recently here to read... to my utter surprise people thought his work was extremely difficult (if any of you have seen it....).

Judging from the questions people were asking (do you take yourself seriously? How do you figure the theme of 'faith' in your work and its relationship to the lack of 'faith' in narrative that seems also to be an element of your work?...) there was an insistence (on the part of a very educated-about-poetry audience) that the poet and the speaker in the poem were one and the same...

That to be 'serious' one must SAY very serious things....

That thematics and direct address are more comprehensible than fomral enactments or mood or tone.

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

724. Judy Roitman
Re: fresh
Thu 30 Apr 1998

> In relation to what Chris says here, I found amusing the latest SPD flyer that arrived at my house, with a blurb from the book editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, Patricia Holt (but that's another story) -- something to the effect of "SPD has books by poets who really don't care if you understand them or not!" I thought it was a slightly curious thing to advertise . . .

Geez I'm tired of that tired old saw. In this small poetry community in this small town there are 2 or 3 readings a year which trot out poets of all poetics to audiences varying widely (or is it wildly) in their understandings and by God when those of us who have or should have or wish we had stuff in SPD read invariably we get responses from those who have never heard of SPD or langpo or NYpoets or whatever saying things like "I don't get it but I really like it" or similar variations. Which is a higher sort of understanding, n'est ce pas? (excuse my French)

Also, to make things perfectly clear: it isn't "making language FRESH" it's "making language FISH."

Let's be careful out there.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- Note new area code
----
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

725. Judy Roitman

Re: fresh

Thu 30 Apr 1998

> Something I've noticed a lot re: difficulty---
>
> There seems often to be (to continue to be) a real conflation of the poet with the speaker of the poems.
>
> Martin Corless-Smith was recently here to read... to my utter surprise people thought his work was extremely difficult (if any of you have seen it....).
>
> Judging from the questions people were asking (do you take yourself seriously? How do you figure the theme of 'faith' in your work and its relationship to the lack of 'faith' in narrative that seems also to be an element of your work?...) there was an insistence (on the part of a very educated-about-poetry audience)

Judging from the way I was "educated" about poetry, that probably was the problem.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

726. louis stroffolino
: fresh trace
Thu 30 Apr 1998

In response to TRACE---I guess I read Kirsch differently
(I disagree with his review but for different reasons than trace).
I think he's using the word "challenge" positively and lamenting
what he sees as a lack of that "challenge" in Tate. Kirsch, as I see it, seems to lament the "19th century role" of poet as consoler and comforter which he detects "beneath" the seemingly modern disjunctive aleatory qualities of the poetry he's discussing.....
Now, whether he's ACCURATE about that is one thing
(in the first place, I don't quite know what he means about the 19th century poet of comfort and consolation: Baudelaire?
Dostoyevski [i know, not a poet] speaks of his writing as
"corrective punishment", I see that in much of Dickinson, Shelley, etc. too)
Kirsch, of course, poses a reductive dichotomy between "challenge" and "comfort" (but, then, critics and scholars on both sides of the fence have been rewarded for such rhetorical maneuvers for quite some time now....)

I also wonder about the phrase "retreat from the rigors of the world". I think Kirsch finds such a stance terrible, and Trace (who thinks Kirsch craves that kind of poetry)
also finds it terrible, or ethically unsound.
But sometimes the world does not come in the form of RIGORS (rigors unmixed), and then such a "retreat" is not really a retreat....
c

On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, trace s. ruggles wrote:

> And, Kirsch's conclusion is:

> .. And this, finally, is Tate's message to us: the little
> .. pleasures of ''pure ordinariness'' make all the pain
> .. worthwhile. The poems in ''Shroud of the Gnome'' are often
> .. difficult; but with a message like that, they cannot be a
> .. challenge.

Is Kirsch apologizing for Tate's poetry? Ah, if only the _message_ is good, you can forgive the poet for being _difficult_!

And, get this:

> .. But while poets today may still use modernist techniques --
> .. free association, surrealism, complex allusion -- the
> .. modernist temper is gone; poetry has to a large degree
> .. resumed its 19th-century role as a comfort and consolation,
> .. a retreat from the rigors of the world.

So, the 20th century was but a little diversion in the grand stream of POETRY which gave the POETS a few neat little tricks to use, but THANK GOD! we're back to comfort and consolation! So, please quit being so diffcult, y'all, and give me some nice little lines I can fall asleep to...

--trace--

At 8:39 AM -0700 4/30/98, you wrote:
Now Mayhew has caused Mayhem in the mind
i keep by a bar serving coors
and is reminding me of that terrible kool and the gong sang (DIGRESSION: i listen to rap when cars pass, and i heard this line
"LIKE THE CAT WHO KILLED VERSACE" yesterday, can anybody
NAME THAT TUNE)
anyway, when i first read this quote i thought it was
"Tate is trying to make words FLESH again"
ah, the materiality of the word meets the
school of disembodied poets

Well, one could take Mayhew's problem further---
if the avoidance of cliche is now a cliche
then everything is permitted (which is a cliche too)....

But when we speak of the issue of "making language fresh"
(or however you want to express a similar impulse),
i guess there's a question involved about WHO you want to do that for? And I wonder if there's a way to avoid the possibility that someone will find "too obscure"
and "meaningless" what another person finds "too cliche"----
no matter WHAT kind of poem you write.....
chris

> On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, MAYHEW wrote:
>
> From a review of James Tate in the "New York Times Book Review," by one Adam Kirsch:
>
> "Like the even more nonsensical
> Language poets, Tate is trying to make words fresh again, to restore the glow that is > rubbed away by advertisements and professional jargon and simple day-to-day > repetition. Thus the reader discovers these deadpan absurdities: ''Please don't taunt the > scrivener. . . . / No muffins permitted in the aviary.'' Or: ''my studies, Retro- /
> gression and the Requiem Shark, to name but one area.''"
>
> The problem is that this idea of "making words fresh again" is itself a tired commonplace. I also find the phrase "the even more non-sensical langauge poets" hilarious. Apart from this, the review does have some insight.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

↑ Index

727. k. lederer

Re: Fresh

Thu 30 Apr 1998

Re: Chris and Mayhew....

I think of Juliana Spahr's work as in some sense a 'response' to the banalization of language...

It seems to me that a major 'argument' or aspect of Spahr's work is a formal and rhetorical insistence that 'drama' or 'emotion' or 'pitch' are not products of semantic zanniness or originality alone...

In fact, I would argue that Spahr's work is pretty gosh-darned whacky vis-a-vis her topics and the commercialized and banal language from which a lot of her diction seems to stem....

I don't think her diction or lexicon are banal in the extreme, however. I think that the greatest effect of shocking banality in her work comes from her modulation (or lack thereof) of tone...

The difficulty of language (in the form of vocabulary and grammar) is, in my view, one very specific site of 'making it new'--

As in: I think tone and mood and cadence are some of the 'engines' driving a lot of the most original work around by (at least) younger writers...

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

728. William Burmeister Prod
Re: James Tate
Thu 30 Apr 1998

>The problem is that this idea of "making words fresh again" is itself a tired commonplace. I also find the phrase "the even more non-sensical langauge poets" hilarious. Apart from this, the review does have some insight.

It's not that the idea of making words fresh again is tired commonplace, it is the phrase itself, especially in the context of a review, that is perhaps tired, worn-out. The very idea of "making it new" is hardly Pound's and hardly new; it is inconceivable apart from poetry.

Argument

How can we live without the unknown in front of us?

Those of today want the poem to be in the image of their lives, composed of such little consideration, of such little space, and burned with intolerance.

Because it is no longer given to them to act supremely, in this fatal preoccupation with self-destruction by their fellows, because their inert wealth holds them back and enslaves them, those of today, their instinct weakened, lose--still keeping alive--even the dust of their names.

Born from the summons of becoming, and from the anguish of retention, the poem rising from its well of mud and stars, will bear witness, almost silently, that it contained nothing which did not truly exist elsewhere, in this rebellious and solitary world of contradictions.

- Rene Char (trans. by Mary Ann Caws)

William Burmeister

↑ Index

729. Douglas
new titles
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Three new titles just out from Sun & Moon Press, and one new work from Green Integer. As usual, we offer folks on the poetics list a 20% discount.

Order from [redacted]

LAST WORDS, by Guy Bennett

The first book of poems by poet/translator Guy Bennett, our own Sun & Moon stalwart, who typesets and designs the typography for all our books. Guy's book uses a collage technique of "writing through" other writers (in this case, poets ranging from Stein to Guest, from Lorca to Mac Low). Bennett fuses together a variety of poetic timbres and stylistic registers into a single lyric voice. The result is a suite of humorous, often enigmatic poems whose potential meanings like somewhere in the the linguistic, yet inevitably human space that separates the reader from the work.

New American Poetry Series: 19 $9.95

NOON, by Cole Swensen

Cole's seventh book of poetry, chosen through the New American Poetry competition, selected by Rae Armantrout. The poet leaads us into NOON's interior so that we "see the word as a single streak, something built of transparent speed:
pure white of the sort they say no one person, unaided, can perceive."

New American Poetry Series: 24 $10.95

CHILDREN OF CLAY, by Raymond Queneau

The great novel by French OuLiPoian Queneau, a book previously untranslated in English

Translated, with an introduction, by Madeleine Velguth.

Sun & Moon Classics: 100 $14.95

AN INTERVIEW, by Jean Renoir

An Interview represents the last public appearance and some of the last living statements on his films of the great French film director, Jean Renoir. In 1975 Renoir agreed to be interviewed by James Blue, James Silke, and others at the American Film Institute in Los Angeles. In this revealing interview Renoir speaks about his relationship with the industry, actors, and his major films.

Green Integer 6 $9.95

I look forward to hearing from you.

Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

730. Christopher W. Alexander

Re: fresh kitten

Thu 30 Apr 1998

---

well but the insistence that "the insistence that 'freshness as idea is now too commonplace is itself a bit commonplace and overly chic" is itself a bit commonplace and overly chic.

and the trauma of "existence 'in quotes'"

Even to say "refreshing/renewing the language" recalls Hobbes' remark on "Cursing, Swearing, Reviling, and the like", viz., that they "do not signifie as Speech; but as the actions of a tongue accustomed". Can someone tell me: whjat does it mean, this re- and tired version of MAKE IT NEW? And where is it this specific formulation comes from?

like a graphic novel by Baudrillard.

come in, mission control - chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

731. louis stroffolino
Re freshly stale
Thu 30 Apr 1998

---

since culinary metaphors have come up, i think of the stale "raw vs. cooked" debate and wonder if some people mean "cooked" when they say "fresh"
(and "raw" when they say "stale").....
it does seem that way at times.....
maybe i should ask frank lima, chris

↑ Index

732. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher poems for the millennium vol. 2
Thu 30 Apr 1998

---

am embroiled in my own institutional nonsense here, but having just yesterday rec'd vol. two of the jerry/pierre anthology, i wanted to take this opportunity, and the unforgiveable speed of this medium, to toss in a few all-too-hasty remarks by way of reopening this thread:

(1) first and foremost: if you simply pick up the book and flip through its contents, it should be clear that this is a vast and in some ways unprecedented effort... my first thought was---no doubt like some of you---that so & so had been excluded, and that so & so had been included... and my list of so & so's on both sides of the exclusion/inclusion coin would have included many more mainstream poets, simply b/c i believe it important to try to bring disparate communities of poets together, if only to squabble (i worry a bit that some may not come to this volume b/c of obvious exclusions)... but there can be no denying that the range of volume two is considerable... and that the editors are to be congratulated once again...

(2) that said, i note in flipping through that the book does not seem to offer as clearcut a configuration of 'schools' and 'movements' as did volume one... is this simply an impression?---or is volume two configured more around clusters?... for what it's worth: i had my dozen or so (again, engineering/science major, creative writing) students paw through the volume a bit, and their first observation was that it didn't designate movements (e.g., modernism, surrealism, etc.) as did the first volume... for what it's worth, i say... now, i anticipated that this volume would be, by its very nature, more controversial, in trying to approach the impossible present with an eye or two toward the impossible future...

(3) i haven't had a chance to really spend any time with editorial apparatus---i've only skimmed through... but i want to offer here a quick list that i formulated---not a list of exclusions (or omissions), but of inclusions... in fact, of duplications (of a sort)---those authors whose work is reproduced both in volume one and in volume two (not the same work, of course---and apologies for any bean-counting errors):

akhmatova
artaud breton cesaire duchamp duncan ekelof eshleman
h.d. jabes joyce mac low macdiarmid michaux neruda olson oppen ortiz
paz pound sabina schwerner
g. stein stevens williams
zukofsky

(22 men, 4 women)

what i'd want to know from jerry/pierre, if it isn't already noted in the editorial apparatus, is whether and to what extent this duplication was itself a matter of extended deliberation... well---to be more precise, b/c i'm sure it was---what were the terms of this deliberation?...

(4) it's true that auden, spicer, and many others have been excluded from volume two... at the same time, i note that spicer and auden and many others DO appear in the commentary sections... and this is in fact significant, not only from a teaching perspective, but in terms of developing historial context... i wonder whether jerry/pierre intend someday to produce an index for the volumes that might include all of those poets mentioned in the commentary sections?... i think this would be extremely useful...

(5) given my own specific interests, it was nice to see a section on "cyberpoetry," to see someone like jim rosenberg finally get his due, and to see folks like don byrd and michael joyce credited for their contributions to late 20th century thought... i know of many, many talented folks who might also have been included here, but again i regard the drift of the anthology as not so much to territorialize as to provide a sense of openings... and a sense is just that---a sense, even with u of california backing... in other words, the editors as i see it are using a powerful academic press in order to advance an unorthodox and polemical understanding of poetic possibilities... and like, why the hell not?... i like it, for example, that readers are referred in volume one to seek eliot's _the waste land_ elsewhere...

(6) i've had a chance to read over jonathan mayhew's brief review of the anthology, and i do think jonathan's is an even-handed critique, given the brevity of his review---and we all know that no book is beyond critique... i encourage those of you who are interested to have a look at what jonathan is saying... at http://www.ellavon.com/anyway, again, all too hasty and for what it's worth... and i need to say here, again, that i think jerry and pierre are to be congratulated for another superb volume...

all best,

joe

↑ Index

733. Mark Prejsnar

Re: fresh

Thu 30 Apr 1998

On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, louis stroffolino wrote:

> to do that for? And I wonder if there's a way to avoid
> the possibility that someone will find "too obscure"
> and "meaningless" what another person finds "too cliche"----
> no matter WHAT kind of poem you write.....
> chris

No--there is no way. It would be a little like living in an antiseptic bubble. Protected from infection, but cut off from the world. (That is, it would be like that if there were a way...but (fortunately) there isn't)

Of the making of books (and websites) there is no end, saith the preacher. Disagreement, disagreement, all is disagreement (and on balance that's a good thing, nao e?)

The seventh circle of hell (since I'm waxing religoid) would be to write a poem that Helen Vendler admired...

(signed) postecclesiastical in @lanta

↑ Index

734. Maria Damon
fwd: job opening
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Date: Thu, 30 Apr 1998 12:53:06 -0500
Originator: mn-arts
From: "Philip Blackburn" <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list <[redacted]>
Subject: ACF position opening

> AMERICAN COMPOSERS FORUM
> LINKING COMMUNITIES WITH COMPOSERS AND PERFORMERS...
> 332 Minnesota Street, Suite E145, St. Paul MN 55101
> [redacted], [redacted], fax
> [redacted]

POSITION AVAILABLE

Job Title: Project Director (new position)
Reports to: Executive Program Director Hours: Exempt, full-time; normal business hours, some evenings and weekends, occasional national travel Compensation Low-mid 30¼s, paid health insurance, vacation
Start date: June 15, 1998 (pending confirmation of funding)

The American Composers Forum (ACF) seeks applications for a Project Director. The Project Director will develop and manage a major new national initiative; a collaboration between ACF and a national funder. The project will place composers in residence to work with communities throughout the nation. The Project Director, along with another staff member supervised by the Project Director, will research and contact community and arts organizations nationwide (especially those who have had little exposure to new music or access to composers), solicit project proposals, coordinate a national peer panel to select at least 30 and as many as 50 projects, write job descriptions, issue a call to composers, and connect agencies and composers in residencies that will culminate with premieres of commissioned works in the year 2000. While the duration of the project is three years, it is expected that the position will be continued. ACF, with offices in St. Paul, Minnesota, is a non-profit! service organization with over 1000 professional members in the U.S. and abroad. The mission of the American Composers Forum is to link communities with composers and performers, encouraging the making, playing, and enjoyment of new music.

RESPONSIBILITIES INCLUDE:
Ä Research and contact festivals, presenters, and community arts organizations
Ä Develop and distribute host-site application materials as widely as possible
Ä Develop and manage a panel process for selecting 30-50 projects
Ä Develop and issue a call to composers
Ä Serve as liaison with collaborative funder
Ä Supervise Associate Project Director
Ä Manage budget, process, contracts, and payments
Ä National travel required

QUALIFICATIONS: Ä Ability to plan and administer complex projects to conclusion Ä Confidence, flexibility, and high level of self-motivation Ä Knowledge of new music and artist-in the community issues helpful Ä Effective written and verbal communications skills, including ability to communicate effectively with rural constituencies and composers, ability to handle media attention Ä B.A. degree (minimum) and/or comparable combination of experience and education in project management or arts administration Ä Computer experience (Macintosh preferred)

HOW TO APPLY: Send a letter of application describing your skills and experience as they relate to the responsibilities and qualifications of the position; a complete rÈsumÈ; and names, addresses, and phone numbers of three references.

SEND TO: Project Director Search
American Composers Forum
332 Minnesota Street, Suite E145
St. Paul MN 55101

APPLICATION DEADLINE: Ongoing review. Open until filled. Call Frank Stubbs at [redacted] with questions or for a full job description. No fax applications will be accepted.

The American Composers Forum is committed to the policy that all persons shall have equal access to its programs, facilities, and employment without regard to race, religion, color, sex, marital status, national origin, disability, age, public assistance status, veteran status, or sexual orientation.

Rev 4/29/98

American Composers Forum
332 Minnesota Street, #E-145
St. Paul, MN 55101, USA

Tel: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
After June, 1998 we will be changing our area code from 612 to 651. Please update whatever is necessary.

HTTP://WWW.COMPOSERSFORUM.ORG
Our e-mail has been known to be imperfect; If you get a message bounced back please try me at: [redacted]

"Ask me about my Partch book"

↑ Index

735. Maria Damon
query asap
Thu 30 Apr 1998

hi guyzies i need quick (before tmw a.m.) full bibliographic material for:

Out of Everywhere

Moving Borders

Feminist Measures

thanks AAWWWfully

↑ Index

736. MAYHEW
Spicer, surrealism, born on date
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Spicer's "Textbook of Poetry" starts out by saying "Surrealism is the business of poets who cannot benefit from surrealism."

Does this mean that surrealism was on the right track but got bogged down in a certain routinization? This might be relevant to James Tate.

I have always been puzzled by this line; I think I understand it, but perhaps I don't. Your brilliant interpretations are welcome.

I have this repeated experience of thinking I am highly interested in surrealism, starting to read it, and then losing interest quickly.

Jonathan

↑ Index

737. Mark Prejsnar
A fresh fit of ranting about freshness
Thu 30 Apr 1998

On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, Judy Roitman wrote:

> Geez I'm tired of that tired old saw. In this small poetry community in this small town there are 2 or 3 readings a year which trot out poets of all poetics to audiences varying widely (or is it wildly) in their understandings and by God when those of us who have or should have or wish we had stuff in SPD read invariably we get responses from those who have never heard of SPD or langpo or NYpoets or whatever saying things like "I don't get it but I really like it" or similar variations. Which is a higher sort of understanding, n'est ce pas? (excuse my French)
>
> Also, to make things perfectly clear: it isn't "making language FRESH" it's "making language FISH."
>
> Let's be careful out there.

*This is a great post.....I believe that everything said above is true and has n'er been so well expressed...

*I don't think these things can be stressed too often. Not too long ago, there was an issue of the mag Central Park, with a colloquy on poetix. I believe it was Stephen-Paul Martin, who said a couple of times that "avant-garde" poets believe that they are "difficult" and want to be (or, I think the phrase "take pride in it" came up); astonishingly, this hopelessly riseable claim was repeated and expanded on by Mark Wallace, another participant. Now you have to understand that both poets were speaking of themselves as among the "A-G" types they were refering to. They were bringing up this subject by way of criticizing (or questioning) a grouping they considered themselves to be to a degree a part of. (and so the intention as I read it was one of tentative self-criticism, in a collective sense)

*Now both these guys do very worthwhile work. Mark in particular, as is known to most Listmembers here, is an important and fabulous poet on the contemporary scene.

*They were spouting a bunch of nonsense, at least when they made these particular comments. (Most of Wallace's remarks in the symposium however are brilliant, and folks should look 'em up). Why would they go so far astray??

*I can only imagine there is a strong sense of ambivalence and complex self-reflection, going on for these two poets, which reflects some of the pressure felt when one is isolated from the well-funded (however inert or pathological) ruling cultural institutions. Also (and related) there is the pressure of self-doubt that is felt when one's audience is relatively small.

*They may take pride in trying to obscure...But actually I don't think they do; they were going a bit overboard with the earnest self-examination stuff..

*In any event (and in line with Judy's comments) I think I can assure them that a very large number of non-mainstream poets know that they are not (in any genuine and absolute sense) "obscure and difficult"....No matter what the NYT Book Review imagines! What we are doing may not be lifeless and wooden, to the ear or mind, but that doesn't make it obscure, nor is that a goal....fa pete-sake..

(signed) lucid in Atlanta

↑ Index

738. Fred Muratori
Re: Spicer, surrealism, born on date
Thu 30 Apr 1998

> Spicer's "Textbook of Poetry" starts out by saying "Surrealism is the business of poets who cannot benefit from surrealism."
>
> Does this mean that surrealism was on the right track but got bogged down in a certain routinization? This might be relevant to James Tate.
>
> I have always been puzzled by this line; I think I understand it, but perhaps I don't. Your brilliant interpretations are welcome.
>
> I have this repeated experience of thinking I am highly interested in surrealism, starting to read it, and then losing interest quickly.
>
> Jonathan

Okay, here's a simplistic stab at it. Those who take to surrealism most naturally as a means of poetic expression already are surrealists without consciously meaning to be. Because they are surrealists by nature, the possibility of "benefiting"from surrealism -- in the sense of its adding value to their work -- is moot. On the other hand, for poets who are basically dour, realist types, the appropriation of surrealism's surface characteristics may be more overtly conscious, and may hold the (possibly false) promise of extending their work in more interesting directions. ("I'm clumsy but if I learn to two-step people will love me.") But since Spicer's is really a tautological statement only a surrealist can love, why bother to make it make sense?

Poetry is the business of surrealists who cannot benefit from poetry. Now _that_ I understand.

-- Fred M.

****
Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

739. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
tusind tak
Thu 30 Apr 1998

thousand thanks to all who asap'd the query.

↑ Index

740. Karen Kelley
Fresh obscure cliches
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Aren't these terms entirely relative? "Difficult" is any discourse with which one is not familiar. So the further you go into a particular discourse, the more obscure your cliches become. Which, to the uninitiated to that particular discourse, is perceived as "difficult."

Story: Picasso was painting a portrait of some guy's wife. Guy drops by the atelier to check out Picasso's progress & complains: "She doesn't look like THAT!" Picasso asks, "Well, what DOES she look like?" The guy pulls out a photograph and points to it. "She looks like THIS." "Hmm," Picasso says, "small, isn't she?"

To someone not familiar with psychoanalysis, a cliche might seem obscure and, yes, "fresh." The discourse of writers is intensely fresh and obscure and cliched.

I know people who think anyone who reads (even the most mainstream) poetry is automatically avant-garde. Does arguing these issues among ourselves seem rather funny to anyone else?

I want to take this opportunity to officially nominate rational discourse as most banal (as in tedious).

latergaters.

↑ Index

741. Karen Kelley
Re: Spicer, surrealism, born on date
Thu 30 Apr 1998

> I have this repeated experience of thinking I am highly interested in surrealism, starting to read it, and then losing interest quickly.

To borrow from a Jiffy Pop advertisement ("fresh" if you've never heard it, "cliched" if you have, and "obscure" if you think you've heard it but can't quite remember WHERE):

Surrealism's more fun to make than it is to eat.

↑ Index

742. Jordan Davis
make your mind
Thu 30 Apr 1998

Sparrow read some dinosaur haiku tonight:

A pteranadon lands on a brycephalosaurus.

That, and then this in today's paper about Chinese airports: only Beijing has radar; the other traffic controllers ask incoming planes where they left from, when, and how fast they've been going.

--...But I was talking about the intellect.... --And you say it's getting mechanized, too....But open your eyes, my dear man, never have people evolved such hair-raising theories as now. --Where do you mean? --Everywhere....In writing above all, as is natural...and then in painting. They certainly serve up some horrors--with theories to match.... --Lord, yes....The product has to have directions on the packet.

--Paul Valery, Idee Fixe

For several seasons now the city, and for that matter the whole country, have enjoyed an attack of balletomania from which, happily, neither shows any sign of recovering. The touring companies are packing in customers from Kansas to California. New York could treat itself to a winter season of ballet, too, if there were a proper theater free and an extra company free to dance in it. Is it too much to ask that New York should have its own ballet with a permanent home here? For such an organization touring would be only a secondary activity. So far, first-class ballet in this country has been leading a hand-to-mouth existence, keeping on the go year in and year out. In constant travel it wears out its strength and brilliance and productivity. Dancers need a home like anyone else. As artists they need to share the natural life of a city, like the people who know they belong there. As professionals they need quiet to practice, to develop, to rehearse. The choreographers need confidence in the schools that train their young dancers, and they need confidence in whatever intellectual life the country has. These are slow things that have to be able to grow unconsciously over a long term of years. They are the things that eventually give ballet a sound and strong character. A racing stable needs sensible attention all year round and needs to plan for it; much more an ensemble of ballet dancers.

--Edwin Denby (February 17, 1944), from "Why Not a New York Ballet" in _Dance Writings_

You on the pop? No, I couldn't get on. You using ppp still? Why don't you use open transport? I use dialer. Look at that. Andre's coming back. Open cardboard box on a navajo rug, full of padded mailers. Silver paper wrapped long box shining on a New York Times, who was that? Beck! holding it up. Flowers blowing on the balcony the dorm august white. Flowers still. Okay I'm gonna go.

↑ Index

743. Henry Gould obscurity
Thu 30 Apr 1998

It's nice to think that all obscure poets are for real while all the rest are sell-outs. Only it's not true. Obscurity is also a business in the poetry world. It's called obfuscation and it's a cottage industry. Poetry is very strange: if you make an idol out of it it bumps you off. It's like Fortune or the Fates. It's like the Muse. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

May 1998

780 messages · Fri 1 May 1998 – Sun 31 May 1998

May 1998 is a loud month in the world — India detonates its device in the Rajasthan desert and Pakistan readies an answer, Frank Sinatra dies, Suharto falls in Jakarta — but the list, gloriously deaf to nearly all of it, spends the month absorbed by a smaller and stranger noise: the stammer.

The season's central thread is a poetics of disfluency. David Bromige, glossing Peter Quartermain on Bob Grenier, supplies the month's finest coinage — "the stutterance of utterance" — and observes that the subject, like a berry in some poem of Snyder's, only grows bigger the longer one looks at it. Stuttering, stammering, the poetics of the stammer: in the broken word the list discovers an entire aesthetics.

Alongside it runs the perennial question of how one judges the new. Michael McColl worries that when an experimental poem offers "no paraphrasable content," the oldest and most widespread tool of evaluation simply falls away. Mark Wallace, more sanguine, wagers that the techniques for reading such work can be taught to almost anyone with "about three hours of close attention." In the thread next door the formalists and the oralists trade their accustomed fire.

The month mounts its defenses, too. Stung by a magazine's assumption that "Spicer is unimportant and unknown," Mark Prejsnar rises indignantly to the poet's honor against the bloated professoriate; elsewhere the scene-reports thread files dispatches from actual rooms — sound poetry in Toronto, the Four Horsemen, Michael Snow at the keys — and a cheerful company gathers round Frank O'Hara's 'In Memory of My Feelings' to map, one poster says, the terrain of identity.

It is a wholly characteristic month: the wider world going up in test-fire and obituary while the list bends studiously over the smallest unit of speech, insisting that how a word breaks is a serious matter — perhaps, some days, the only serious matter. I have set the letters in their order, drawn the black bars across every address and telephone, and left the stammer exactly where May left it: mid-syllable, and unashamed.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 780 in all.

WRITERS

<[redacted]>, Marc Nasdor (By Way Of Char… 18
Acgold01 502
AERIALEDGE 265, 415, 653
Agent Sunshine, Aka Eric Gleason 40, 53
Alexander, Charles 45, 102, 133, 205, 326, 373, 398, 457, 506, 523, 572, 577, 647, 737, 742
Alexander, Christopher W. 152, 156, 660, 696
And, Miekal 36, 55, 341, 394, 401, 514, 515, 527
ANDREWS, BETSY 504
Andrews, Jim 622
Archambeau, Robert 65, 259, 480, 482
Aviva000 164, 171, 172, 579, 580
Aviva99999 29, 52, 84, 85
Baker, Mark 595
Baker, Peter 525
Balestrieri, Peter 428, 727
Baratier, David 25, 31, 47, 86, 193, 559, 560
Barbour, Douglas 8, 39, 262, 447, 713
Battin, Wendy 545
Beard, Tom 227
Bell, Thomas 54, 100
Bernstein, Charles 19, 518, 522, 582, 600, 663
Bonney, Sean 297
Bouchard, Daniel 314, 356, 403, 517
Bowering, George 24, 292, 325, 477, 478, 479, 511, 570, 596, 597, 620, 704, 754
Brady, Taylor 77, 99, 124, 379, 381, 496, 497, 632
Brannen, Jonathan 531
Bromige, David 364, 414, 440, 562, 583, 605, 618, 619, 728, 739, 743, 773
Brown, Lee Ann 694
Bruno, Franklin 226, 510
Byrd, Don 416, 556, 565, 640
Cadaly 406
Cayley, John 43
Cayley), Jerome Rothenberg (By Way Of… 426
Cheney, Don 410
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 655, 656
Chrsmccrry 372
Clay, Steven 68
Clements, Brian 701, 724
Clippinger, David W. 275
Coffey, Michael 4
COLLIER, DANIEL L. 173, 649, 686, 722
Cope, Stephen 346, 382, 400, 434, 435, 438, 554, 623, 651, 745
Corbin, Michael 35, 503, 612
Ctfarmr 601
Damon, Maria 92, 158, 252, 282, 283, 295, 336, 345, 444, 445, 589, 608, 624, 625, 681, 683, 690, 695, 699, 710, 711, 736, 759
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 178, 242, 318, 354, 553
Davis, Jordan 56, 63, 95, 109, 137, 139, 200, 268, 309, 331, 418, 678
Dbkk 184, 240, 386, 500, 702
DeDeo, Simon 749
Dlugonski, Dan Or Orion Raphael 258, 594
Douglas 402, 443
Dougolly 475
Drake, R. 561
Durand, Marcella 726
Egest, Randy 44
Epstein, Andrew D 299
Etter, Carrie 679
Eurydice 38, 508
Felix, Joel 50, 537
Finch, Annie 197, 451, 551
Fleisher, Joe Amato/Kass 37, 271, 349, 484, 491, 492, 516, 767, 768
Fuhrman, J. 34, 111, 224, 542
G, Henry 7, 76, 117, 128, 202, 204, 417, 449, 638, 692
Gallagher, Kristen 723
Gancie, R. 130, 166, 212, 218, 243, 276, 311, 348, 393, 397, 423, 453, 498, 528, 604, 633, 654, 677, 693, 718, 740, 766
Ganick, Peter 80, 249, 755, 757
Glazier, Loss Pequen~o 1, 538
Gordon, Nada 741, 760
Gould, Henry 49, 107, 179, 305, 421, 469, 776
Groberts 17, 70, 115, 219, 274, 333, 340, 420, 539, 558, 775
Grumman, Bob 41, 46
Guertin, Carolyn 71, 494
Hale, Robert 175, 185, 270, 301, 353
Hall, James C. 120
Hatmaker, Elizabeth 105
Hen 251
Henry 57, 59, 140, 151, 154, 167, 170, 210, 307, 442, 546, 697
Henry, Uncle 316
Hilton, Mary 125
Howe, William R. 135, 136
Hzinnes 160
Israel, David 75
Izak 244, 383

Jarnot 669
JBCM2 189, 190, 207
JDEBROT 281, 328, 329, 512, 513
JOHNSON, KENT 93, 223, 237, 573, 593
Joseph, Safdie 15, 23, 490, 550, 673
Kaipa, S. 28
Kalleberg, Garrett 30
Kelleher, Michael 64, 304, 306
Kelley, Karen 191, 254, 288, 375, 376, 578, 581, 616, 645
Kellogg, David 489, 691
Ken|n|ing 339, 452, 493, 652
Kimball, J 2
Kimmelman, Burt 232, 461
Kirschenbaum, Matt 363, 463, 644
Kramer, Wendy 374
Kuszai, J. 395, 533
Langhorst, Barbara 587
Latta, John 146, 159
Leahy, Mark 177
Lederer, K. 96, 147, 358, 432, 454, 521, 621
Levitsky, Rachel 278, 279
Levy, Herb 5, 6, 27, 94, 439, 471, 472, 540
Lewis, Joel 89, 123, 161, 211, 231, 239, 245, 380, 468, 566, 725
LIT, Fredrik Hertzberg 541, 575
LITSAM 355
Little, Billy 14, 129, 163, 194, 323, 370, 404, 574, 611, 629, 634, 635, 730, 731
Loden, Rachel 255, 543
Long, Brent 165, 310, 670
Lucas, Brian 87
Machlin, Dan 703
Magee, Michael 113, 116, 148, 199, 298, 302, 330, 650
Marks, Steven 505
MAYHEW 26, 78, 91, 97, 106, 141, 144, 150, 213, 248, 261, 286, 303, 389, 576, 609, 627, 637, 721
Maz881 342, 431
McColl, Michael 42, 208, 209, 214
McVay, Gwyn 407, 615
Morpheal 9, 221, 320, 360, 362, 368, 385, 388, 396, 405, 424, 425, 455, 456, 476, 501, 519, 530, 536, 567, 569, 598, 599, 606, 607, 614, 630, 636, 646, 659, 687, 716, 764, 774
Morris, Dee 486
Mouf, Henry 142
Muratori, Fred 361, 446
Nakell, Martin 547, 548
Nathanson, Tenney 324, 334, 335, 485
Nelson, Gale 408, 460
Nicoll, Hugh 33
Nikuko, Daishin 603
Nowak, Mark 69
Nuyopoman 705
Orange, Tom 390, 399, 470, 473, 474, 584, 586, 732
Ortiz, Travis Andrew 48
Perloff, Marjorie 280, 371
Perrella, F. W. 3, 168, 392, 585, 706
Phillips, Ellay 413
Piuma, Chris [Steve] 751
Pollet, Sylvester 321, 735
Prejsnar, Mark 58, 60, 61, 74, 169, 263, 648, 685, 712, 715
Pritchett,Patrick 83, 110, 118, 234, 332, 557
Prod, William Burmeister 16, 98, 122, 145, 153, 181, 350, 351, 352, 367, 369, 429, 552, 555, 657, 717
Quartermain, Peter 88, 241, 343, 591
R.Gancie/C.Parcelli 104, 198, 384, 568, 590
RaeA100900 79, 344
RanPrunty 327
Reiner, Christopher 225, 236, 411, 535
Review, Chicago 82
Rod4rigo 108
Roitman, Judy 10, 22, 62, 66, 112, 121, 149, 176, 183, 216, 217, 235, 267, 308, 338
Rothenberg, Jerome 32
Rsillima 707, 758
Rush, Otis 733
Russo, Linda 131, 132, 187, 188, 203, 220, 222, 246, 250
Salerno, Mark 665
Samuels, Lisa 11
Schultz, Kathy Lou 617, 778
ScoutEW 12, 13, 72, 143, 155, 186, 201, 290, 291, 427, 430, 441, 466, 467, 613, 631, 661, 666, 667
Senning, Bradford J 509
Sharma, Prageeta 714
Shemurph 544
Shoemaker, Steve 488, 499, 507, 588, 592
Simon, Beth Lee 103
Simon, Schuchat 162, 777
Simon/Piombino 698, 762
Sithiwong, Rebecca Weldon 780
Sondheim, Alan Myouka 101, 247, 257, 285, 347, 549, 563, 658, 662, 668, 682, 734, 746, 748, 750, 756, 763
Spahr, Juliana 458
Spinelli, Martin 195, 206
Stein, Chuck 671, 684, 689
Steinberg, Hugh 433, 436, 744
Stroffolino, Louis 90, 277, 287, 529, 664, 761
Sullivan, Gary 174, 180, 233, 238, 266, 269, 272, 293, 294, 296, 300, 315, 357, 359, 409, 412, 419, 422, 448, 459, 676
Sutherland, Keston 73, 81, 157, 230, 264, 289, 312, 313, 524, 672
Sweet, Erik 688, 709, 719, 738, 771, 772
Taciuch, Dean 610, 628, 641

Toddbaron 192, 256, 317, 319, 377, 378, 450, 462, 571, 642, 643, 729
Tosh 365, 747, 752, 753
Tranter, John 126
Trevor, Karen And 464, 520
Truitt, Samuel R. 51, 127, 138, 322
Tuma, Keith 253
Upton., Lawrence 526
Varrone, Kevin 196
Vassilakis, Nico 134
Wallace, Mark 20, 67
Weber, M. L. 700
Weiss, Irving 337, 674
Weiss, Mark 437, 465, 495, 564, 602, 675, 680, 720, 765
Wellman, Don 391
Wheeler, Susan 284, 481, 483, 626, 639, 708, 779
Wood, Tim 215, 228, 229, 260, 387
Wright, Laura E. 273, 532, 534, 769, 770
Zamsky, Robert 182
Zauhar, David 114, 119
Zimmerman, Daniel 21, 487
Zurawski, Magdalena 366

NAMES MENTIONED

Abrams, Jen 701
Acker, Kathy 494, 760, 763
Adams, John 744, 745, 752
Addonizio, Kim 464
Adorno, Theodor 498, 633, 646
Ahearn, Joe 701
Albon, George 236
Alexander, Christopher W. 152, 156, 660, 696
Alice, Mary 161, 197, 376
Allison, Dorothy 451
Americans, Asian 44, 303, 420, 573, 749
Amerika, Mark 464
Anania, Michael 82
Anderson, Erik 332, 336
Andrews, Bruce 94, 194, 538, 663
Anne, Sarah 665
Anton, Robert 744, 745, 753, 755
Arbor, Ann 278
Armantrout, Rae 79, 88, 344
Armstrong, Louis 631, 645
Arnold, Bob 744, 745, 752
Ashbery, John 4, 248, 281, 328, 330, 331, 334, 335, 507, 509, 512, 513, 532, 641, 708
Atkins, Tim 200
Atlanta, Mark P. 44, 510
Auden, W. H. 32, 277
Augustine, Jane 700
Austin, Geer 71, 229
Austin, Mary 604, 630
Baker, Lori 408, 443, 502
Baldwin, Joshua 678
Balestrieri, Pete 428, 446
Baraka, Amiri 194, 525
Baratier, Dave 25
Barney, Matthew 314
Baron, Todd 317, 450, 462, 642, 729
Barthes, Roland 358, 678, 748
Bartlett, Martin 439, 440, 445, 472
Basinski, Michael 538
Bataille, George 274
Baudelaire, Charles 34
Baxter, Ted 758
Beckett, Tom 584, 601, 653
Bellamy, Dodie 50, 65, 194, 240, 256, 386, 758
Benjamin, Walter 342, 678
Bennett, Bill 87, 481, 499
Bennett, John M. 47
Berkeley, Michael 48, 101, 147, 149, 358, 679
Berkson, Bill 333
Berlin, Irving 210, 464, 510, 744, 745, 753, 755
Berman, Tosh 44, 365, 487, 489, 747, 752, 753, 755
Bernhard, Thomas 665
Bernstein, Emma 148, 174, 175, 178, 185, 187, 512
Berrigan, Anselm 95, 139, 458, 481, 487, 489, 499, 504, 507
Berrigan, Edmund 95
Berrigan, Ted 200, 273, 275, 525, 532, 534, 536, 762, 769, 770
Berryman, John 702, 710
Bertholf, Robert J. 124
Bettridge, Joel 538
Bishop, Elizabeth 35, 204
Blackburn, Paul 47
Blake, William 202, 626
Blaser, Robin 194, 440, 472, 597, 730
Blau, Rachel 551
Blevins, Richard 554, 557, 565, 570
Bly, Robert 47, 248
Bolton, Ken 733, 735
Borges, Millicent 641, 644
Bouldrey, Brian 464
Boulez, Pierre 744, 745
Bourdieu, Pierre 141
Bowie, David 688, 716
Bowles, Paul 758
Brady, Andrea 2, 95, 157, 289
Brainard, Joe 342
Braxton, Anthony 496
Brecht, George 32
Brennan, Joe 139, 189
Brennan, Sherry 125
Brodey, Jim 665
Brodsky, Nicole 464, 469

Bronk, Bill 461, 558, 609, 617
Bronk, William 461, 665
Brooks, Gwendolyn 458, 481, 487, 489, 499, 504, 507
Browne, Colin 236
Browning, Robert 93
Bryan, John 701
Bryant, Dana 439, 445
Buckley, Jeff 615, 625, 705
Burger, Mary 335
Burger, Peter 328, 330
Burke, Edmund 181, 185, 722
Burkhardt, Rick 344
Burns, Gerald 422, 425, 442, 701
Burroughs, William S. 328, 330, 335, 379, 606, 607, 641, 644
Butler, William 604, 630
Butterick, George 730
Buuck, David 139
Byrne, Edward 701
Cabri, Louis 346
Cage, John 261, 460, 514, 751
Campbell, Jeremy 673, 675
Caples, Garrett 87, 139
Carbo, Nick 518
Carey, Peter 538
Carll, Steve 95
Carlos, William 564, 569
Carroll, John 714
Carroll, Paul 82
Carson, Anne 500, 503, 505
Carson, Margaret 505
Carter, Angela 77, 539
Cather, Willa 697
Celan, Paul 78, 93, 128, 138
Celona, Tina 621
Ceravolo, Joseph 558
Chadbourne, Eugene 503
Chadwick, Lynn 225
Chapin, Thomas 434
Chapman, Cecelia 438, 548
Chaucer, Geoffrey 404, 469
Chester, Jeff 551
Child, Abigail 778
Chomsky, Noam 233
Cixous, Hélène 114
Claire, Barbara 627
Clare, John 44
Clark, Jeff 454, 466, 473, 775
Clarke, Robin 435
Clinton, Bill 369
Clippinger, David W. 275
Cobbing, Bob 337, 368
Coleman, Victor 194
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 626
Collom, Jack 83, 278
Coltrane, Alice 400
Conant, Jeff 233
Connor, Bruce 113
Conrad, Tony 496
Corbett, John 496
Corman, Roger 2, 461
Corso, Gregory 286, 287
Cory, Alex 432
Coultas, Brenda 200
County, Madison 438
Creeley, Robert 78, 183, 199, 202, 227, 233, 248, 262, 274, 286, 287, 294, 298, 300, 302, 308, 310, 315, 447, 461, 525, 554, 557, 565, 570, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 591, 597, 600, 623, 643, 650, 651, 704, 707, 738, 760, 763
Crosby, Harry 32
Curtis, Dana 464
Césaire, Aimé 32
Daly, Catherine 406
Davenport, Steve 78, 432, 621
Davidson, Daniel 412
Davies, Kevin 2, 194
Davis, Jeff 701
Davis, Leslie 222, 229
Day, Jean 38, 439, 445, 508, 510
Debrot, Jacques 236, 411
Deleuze, Gilles 326, 366, 584, 653
Dennis, Carl 342, 411, 510, 663
Derksen, Jeff 194
Derrida, Jacques 230, 358
Dickinson, Emily 217, 220, 255
Dickinson, Mark 34, 128, 138, 205, 216, 317, 461
Doris, Stacy 641, 644
Dorn, Edward 194, 201, 202
Doud, Patrick 10
Drucker, Johanna 68, 174, 175, 178, 187, 663
Duncan, Robert 30, 32, 82, 194, 233, 554, 557, 565, 571, 574, 583, 597, 605, 608, 634, 640, 664, 666, 671, 675, 704, 730, 738, 760, 763
Durgin, Patrick 339, 452, 652, 712
Dutton, Paul 395, 526
Earl, James 576, 581, 589
Eigner, Larry 10, 22, 62, 66, 77, 112, 121, 149, 176, 183, 205, 216, 217, 220, 233, 235, 267, 274, 308, 315, 338, 576, 600
Einstein, Albert 590, 599, 602, 611, 614, 626, 677
Eisenstein, Sergei 376
Elena, Maria 573, 649
Eliot, Joe 32, 67, 100, 161, 197, 303
Eliot, T. S. 200
Ellingham, Lewis 702, 710
Elliott, George 539
Ellis, Stephen 712
Emerson, Claudia 461, 665

England, Amy 68, 88, 126, 369, 461, 649
Enslin, Ted 274
Ernst, Max 198, 510
Esther, Little 733, 735
Eugene, Brett 44
Evans, Steve 237
Ezergailis, Bob 385, 388, 405, 455, 456, 501, 530, 536, 567, 598, 599, 602, 606, 607, 630, 636, 646, 687, 689, 764, 772
Fahey, John 496
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 707
Filliou, Robert 32
Fischer, Norman 457
Fisher, Allen 526
Forche, Carolyn 194
Foster, Paul 439, 445, 461, 518, 582
France, Peter 320
Freedman, Robert 766
Friedlander, Benjamin 64, 342
Friedman, David M. 665
Friedman, Michael 83
Frost, Corey 161, 197, 461, 469, 697
Frost, Robert 161, 197
Fuchs, Greg 538, 744, 745
Fuhrman, Joanna 34, 111, 224, 237, 542
Fuller, Heather 38, 64, 411, 452
Gadd, Maxine 194
Gander, Forrest 2, 51
Gardner, Drew 95, 415
Gibbons, Reginald 480
Gibson, William 243, 311
Gilbert, Susan 194, 357, 411
Gillespie, William 32, 44
Gilmore, Gary 124
Ginsberg, Allen 18, 306, 307, 321, 573, 649, 743, 760, 763
Ginsburg, Allen 363
Gioia, Dana 481, 499
Gizzi, Michael 87, 513
Gizzi, Peter 51, 87, 512
Gladman, Renee 90
Glass, Jesse 2
Glass, Philip 744, 745
Gluck, Bob 342
Glück, Robert 240, 248, 256
Goldberg, Michael 304
Goldsmith, Kenneth 332, 336, 538
Columbia, David 524
Goodman, Craig 95, 440, 472, 538
Goodman, Paul 669
Gould, Glenn 49, 251
Graham, Lea 665
Grahn, Judy 114
Grangaud, Michelle 87
Greene, Graham 44
Greenwald, Ted 510
Gregg, Linda 196, 400
Gregory, Dick 184, 388
Grenier, Bob 605, 608
Griffin, Tim 95, 239
Griffiths, Bill 82
Grossman, Allen 558
Guest, Barbara 464, 615, 625
Guston, Philip 439, 445
Guthrie, Camille 521
Hagedorn, Jessica 518, 582
Hall, Donald 141, 143, 145
Hamilton, Robin 44
Hansen, Jeff 20, 44, 60, 67, 100, 125
Hardy, Edmund 56, 90, 102
Harris, Kaplan 651
Harryman, Carla 148
Hartman, Charles O. 533
Harvey, James 21, 35, 481, 499
Hass, Robert 216
Hawkes, John 408, 443, 474, 479, 486, 511
Hawkins, Bobbie 83
Hayles, Katherine 641, 644
Heath, Jennifer 83, 278
Hecht, Anthony 141, 161, 197
Hejinian, Lynn 48, 83, 110, 147, 148, 149, 174, 175, 178, 187, 326, 358, 366, 371, 382, 412, 431, 444, 550, 573, 649
Heller, Michael 461, 700
Hendricks, Brent 168
Herbert, George 348, 498
Herman, Rachel 44
Hershon, Robert 665
Higgins, Dick 32
Hill, Gary 689
Hoagland, Tony 85
Hofer, Jen 452, 703
Hogg, Robert 597
Hollo, Anselm 83, 439, 445, 605, 608
Holloway, Rob 464
Holman, Bob 142, 705
Homer 56, 86
Hongo, Garrett 518, 582
Hooker, William 496
Hoover, Paul 82, 700
Howard, Scott 44, 141, 386
Howe, William R. 135, 136
Hughes, Ted 268, 269, 270
Husserl, Edmund 130
Indiana, Robert 758
Irby, Ken 619, 620
Israeli, Henry 725
Jackson, Jesse 44, 323
Janecek, Gerald 573, 649
Jenkins, Matthew 44
Jillway, Jill 19
Johns, Jasper 281, 330, 331, 334, 335
Jones, Brian 410, 576, 581, 589
Jones, David 32

Jones, Jim 439, 445
Jordan, June 59, 63, 70, 72, 86, 102, 268, 269, 270, 272, 309, 313, 314, 342, 418, 419, 447, 478, 510, 661, 662, 667, 668, 678
Joris, Pierre 700
Joyce, Trevor 392
Kafka, Franz 722
Kaipa, Summi 28, 452
Kaiser, Henry 496
Kaufman, Bob 608
Kaufman, Erica 616, 623, 650
Kelly, Patrick 44
Kelly, Robert 673, 675
Kennedy, David 152, 243, 404
Kenner, Hugh 334, 533
Kerouac, Jack 274, 439, 445
Killian, Kevin 386, 593, 648, 680, 702, 710, 717, 758
Kim, Myung Mi 520
Kimball, Jack 2
Kimball, Roger 2
Kinsella, John 452, 712
Klein, Lucas 335, 432
Knowles, Christopher 87
Koch, Kenneth 248, 665, 726
Koethe, John 82
Kristeva, Julia 114
Kunina, Julia 167
Kyger, Joanne 139
Lacy, Steve 83
Lang, Peter 525
Laughlin, James 510
Lauterbach, Ann 51
Lazer, Hank 538, 550
Lederer, Katy 12, 432, 521
Lehman, David 126
Lenhart, Gary 200
Lennon, Brian 314
Leonard, Tom 30, 587
Levertov, Denise 464, 704
Levy, Andy 508
Lewis, Bernard 758
Liu, Timothy 518, 582
Liu, Warren 87
Lloyd, Warren 77, 539
London, Frank 195, 379, 426, 482, 487, 488, 489, 526, 605, 608
London, Jack 758
Long, Paul 694
Lopez, Tony 35, 79, 81, 88
Lorca, Federico García 32, 248, 637, 657
Louise, Bobbie 200, 248, 480, 481, 499
Lowell, Amy 321
Lowell, Robert 32, 213, 306, 307, 321
Lowry, Malcolm 440, 472
Lummis, Suzanne 464
Luoma, Bill 95, 342
Mackey, Nate 457
Mackey, Nathaniel 194, 541, 542, 543, 554, 628, 651
Madison, James 44, 332, 336
Mailer, Norman 760, 763
Malmude, Anna 95
Mandelstam, Osip 128, 138
Mangold, Sarah 464
Mann, Chris 496
Mann, Thomas 557
Marclay, Christian 496
Marsh, William 411
Martin, Camille 60, 82, 87, 139, 432, 440, 450, 472
Martin, Paul 20, 60, 67, 100, 359
Marvin, Lee 147, 149, 453
Mason, Janet 439, 445
Mathews, Elizabeth 460, 470
Mathews, Harry 2
Mayakovsky, Vladimir 300, 302
Mayer, Bernadette 95, 525, 669
Mayer, Jane 458, 481, 487, 489, 499, 504, 507
McCaffery, Steve 663
Melville, Nicky 461
Memmott, Talan 494
Meredith, William 77, 632
Merrill, James 141, 393, 396
Merwin, W. S. 248, 274, 406, 704
Messerli, Douglas 402, 443
Metcalf, Paul 87
Middleton, Peter 663
Miller, Henry 760, 763
Miller, Paul 496
Milne, Drew 139
Mitchell, Joan 44, 340, 416, 434, 496, 533, 540
Monroe, Harriet 380, 614
Moody, Rick 408, 443
Moore, Allison 184, 277, 496, 510
Moore, Marianne 184, 277
Moore, Michael 510
Morgan, Robin 36, 120, 386
Moriarty, Laura 601, 642
Moritz, John 10
Morrison, Bill 139
Morton, Kathryn A. 300, 302, 439, 445
Mottram, Eric 139, 252, 253
Moxley, Jennifer 87, 95, 139
Mueller, Ursula 494
Mullen, Harryette 83, 114, 119, 121
Mura, David 518, 582
Murphy, Eddie 404
Murphy, Sheila E. 412, 737
Murray, Ian 678
Myers, Michael 701
Myles, Eileen 342

Nader, Ralph 233
Neff, Michael 585
Nelson, Paul 600
Neruda, Pablo 32, 122
Nguyen, Hoa 222, 229
Nicholson, Andy 90
Nicole, Anna 464
Niedecker, Lorine 233, 274, 315, 398
Nielsen, Aldon L. 452
Norman, Peter 225
Norton, John 467, 713
Notley, Alice 30, 82, 139, 342, 452, 538, 665
O'Hara, Frank 255, 266, 293, 357, 529
Ochs, Larry 83
Oliver, Doug 475
Oliver, John 139, 576
Olsen, Lance 700
Olson, Charles 461
Olson, Kirby 32, 97, 98, 199, 274, 291, 543, 550, 562, 565, 577, 590, 591, 613, 623, 638, 641, 643, 650, 678, 688, 704
Ondaatje, Michael 500, 505
Oppen, George 82, 192, 461, 619, 620
Oppenheimer, Joel 124
Osman, Jena 551
Oswald, John 395, 439, 445, 496
Ovid 722
Owen, Maureen 250
Pacific, Asian 280, 441, 518
Padgett, Ron 70, 87, 139, 255, 261
Padin, Clemente 337, 368
Palmer, Michael 87, 147, 149, 600
Parker, Charlie 623, 650
Parker, Michael 364, 367, 623, 650
Parkway, Neal 701
Partch, Harry 463, 465, 483, 495, 566
Paterson, Don 32, 651
Patton, Julie 95, 200
Peirce, Kathleen 701
Peltier, Leonard 282, 284
Penberthy, Jenny 280
Perelman, Bob 148, 605, 608, 663
Perry, David 496
Pessoa, Fernando 412
Peters, Mark 538
Pickard, Tom 82
Piombino, Nick 663, 698, 762
Pollock, Jackson 330, 331, 334, 335
Porter, Anne 649
Pound, Ezra 32, 47, 56, 102, 161, 197, 200, 220, 235, 274, 334, 550, 730
Powell, Ren 323, 432
Presjnar, Mark 20, 60
Prevallet, Kristin 125
Price, Laurie 412
Di Prima, Diane 406
Pritchett, Pat 83, 110, 118, 234, 332, 336, 557, 583
Prunty, Randy 327
Prynne, J. H. 672
Pryor, Richard 255, 266
Quasha, George 689
Ramsdell, Heather 30, 38, 64, 510
Rasula, Jed 213, 663
Rathmann, Andrew 82
Rauschenberg, Robert 330, 331, 334, 335, 340
Reagan, Nancy 35
Reese, Marshall 87
Reinfeld, Linda 2
Retallack, Joan 240, 464, 538
Reuters, Boston 123, 468, 725
Reverdy, Pierre 248
Reynolds, Rebecca 532, 701
Ribot, Marc 438
Rich, Adrienne 749
Richman, Jonathan 409, 435
Riley, Denise 139
Riley, Peter 672
Rilke, Rainer Maria 128, 138, 164, 165, 171, 248
Rimbaud, Arthur 320
Rimbaud, Dee 319, 320, 324, 375
Robbins, Bruce 410
Robbins, Michael 701
Roberts, Gary 272
Robertson, Lisa 194
Robinson, Elizabeth 139, 464, 528, 567
Rodefer, Stephen 194
Rogers, Jennifer 44, 464, 701
Rohrer, Matthew 87
Ronk, Martha 236, 510
Roosevelt, Franklin 604, 630
Rosenberg, Jim 194
Rosenthal, Bob 18
Rosenthal, Chuck 231
Ross, Andrew 328
Ross, Joe 236, 438
Rothenberg, Jerry 39, 139, 525
Rothschild, Doug 95
Roy, Camille 464
Sandburg, Carl 110
Sanders, Jay 18, 278
Sappho 114
Saroyan, William 763
Sawyer, Larry 348
Sayles, John 35
Scalapino, Leslie 32, 78, 147, 149, 248
Schelling, Andrew 83
Schmidt, Paul 633
Schneeman, George 87
Schwartz, Jerry 539
Schwerner, Armand 32, 194
Schwitters, Kurt 575, 577, 578
Scroggins, Mark 701

Shakespeare, William 87, 90, 139, 248, 487, 489
Sharits, Paul 379
Shelley, Mary 397, 405, 423, 448, 455, 456, 459
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 34
Sheppard, Robert 211
Shields, David 595
Shihab, Naomi 701
Sigo, Cedar 83
Sikelianos, Eleni 30, 139, 726
Silliman, Ron 364, 452, 551, 663, 707, 758
Silverman, Oren 44
Simic, Charles 392
Simon, Greg 2, 44, 348, 498, 510, 698, 749, 762
Simon, Toni 225
Sinatra, Frank 365
Skinner, Jonathan 30
Smith, Harry 149, 244, 493, 521
Smith, Jack 412
Smith, Michael 439, 445
Smith, Rod 38, 95, 200, 342, 415, 452, 615, 619, 620, 625, 627
Smith, Susan 149
Snyder, Rick 274
Spahr, Boyd 432, 644
Spandrift, Jack 449
Sparrow, John 433, 436, 437, 464
Spector, Phil 496
Spicer, Jack 593, 648, 680, 702, 710, 758
Spicer, John 4, 9, 32, 93, 97, 98, 263, 326, 366, 457, 593, 605, 608, 648, 680, 683, 685, 686, 690, 691, 692, 695, 696, 697, 702, 704, 707, 710, 711, 713, 717, 720, 721, 722, 728, 729, 758, 778
Stafford, William 141, 143, 145
Stanley, Jared 730
Stein, Gertrude 114, 117, 118, 119, 121, 127, 184, 326, 358, 366, 371, 382, 431, 444, 550, 675, 707, 760, 763
Stevens, Wallace 4, 7, 9, 11, 17, 58, 355, 356, 461, 626
Stewart, Susan 663
Sumner, Alaric 379, 381
Swensen, Cole 83
Tabios, Eileen R. 518, 582
Taggart, John 82
Tate, James 34
Templeton, Fiona 43, 75
Texas, Irving 71, 229, 245, 701
Thomas, Dylan 32, 45, 95, 405, 416, 438, 458, 481, 487, 489, 499, 502, 504, 507, 663, 730
Thomson, Stephen 666
Tomlinson, Charles 8, 39
Toscano, Rodrigo 108, 139
Trevor, Jesse 464, 520
Tribune, Chicago 440, 472
Trinidad, David 2
Truitt, Sam 51, 127, 128, 138, 322
Trujillo, Dorothy 194
Tucker, Aaron 311, 393, 396
Turner, Victor 502, 701
Vallejo, César 128, 138
Vangelisti, Paul 82, 411
Vendler, Helen 194, 489
Vermont, Charlie 580
Virgil 697
Wagner, Catherine 82, 87
Wagner, Linda 294, 298, 308, 310, 315
Walker, Laura 398
Wallace, Nicole 139, 712
Walsh, Catherine 392
Warhol, Andy 614
Warren, Kenneth 44, 447
Washington, George 44, 64, 125, 330, 335, 348, 380, 415, 438, 477, 491
Watson, Craig 82
Watson, Scott 2
Watten, Barry 48, 147, 149
Weber, Damian 700
Weinberger, Eliot 231
Weiner, Hannah 194
Weinstein, Eric 69
Weiss, Jason 368
Whalen, Philip 274
Wharton, Samuel 655
Whitehead, Ron 613
Whitman, Walt 56, 114, 142, 461, 614, 637, 653, 655
Wieners, John 194, 412, 419, 627
Wilbur, Richard 161, 197
Wilder, Kimberly 380
Williams, Jonathan 87
Williams, Paul O. 32, 194, 332, 336, 510, 641, 651
Williams, Robin 722
Williams, William Carlos 248
Williamson, Aaron 297
Williamson, Lindz 447
Wilson, Colin 362
Wilson, Emily 432
Wilson, Karen 452, 651
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 633, 646
Wright, C. D. 51, 514
Wright, Laura E. 273, 532, 534, 769, 770
Yau, John 87, 168, 518, 706
Young, Geoffrey 459, 476
Zanzotto, Andrea 438
Zauhar, Dave 119, 121
Zukofsky, Louis 32, 93, 129, 274, 507, 715

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 18, 369, 533, 540, 687, 688, 689, 774

Aesthetics 25, 31, 52, 54, 141, 171, 174, 175, 178, 187, 220, 226, 228, 230, 232, 237, 274, 281, 286, 287, 328, 330, 332, 335, 336, 412, 594, 652, 683, 760, 763, 767, 776
African American poetry 120, 525
Anthologies 2, 8, 32, 35, 37, 39, 56, 114, 252, 253, 297, 379, 395, 415, 467, 477, 480, 481, 496, 499, 510, 525, 573, 609, 612, 615, 617, 625, 627, 647, 649, 656, 701, 713, 726
Anti-Semitism 231, 680, 721
Appropriation 44, 83, 115, 154, 173, 243, 300, 302, 357, 359, 370, 514, 523, 525, 557, 651, 708, 762
Archives and libraries 19, 68, 184, 194, 273, 275, 361, 382, 406, 436, 437, 438, 446, 456, 465, 490, 495, 503, 532, 534, 702, 710, 717, 749, 769, 770
Autobiography 48, 82, 144, 342, 369, 431, 444, 500, 503, 505, 542, 631, 645, 655
Autonomy of art 274
Avant-garde 26, 62, 76, 77, 94, 122, 170, 206, 237, 281, 328, 330, 335, 625, 727, 758, 760, 761
Beat generation 696
Beauty 125, 179, 202, 204, 300, 302, 405, 411, 412, 465, 495, 567, 746, 760, 761, 769
Biography 3, 124, 154, 173, 332, 336, 599, 602, 680, 702, 710, 758
Black Mountain 461, 550
Book announcements 56, 125, 126, 161, 197, 225, 280, 342, 371, 431, 432, 438, 451, 461, 469, 508, 518, 538, 544, 553, 561, 579, 648, 672
Bookstores 23, 82, 164, 165, 436, 482, 488, 526, 576, 665, 709
Calls for submissions 250
Capitalism 180, 185, 188, 206, 233, 243, 260, 288, 604, 630
Censorship 749, 770, 776
Cities 101, 141, 143, 145, 194, 214, 274, 374, 420, 582, 621, 758
Climate 523
Close reading 461
Collage and montage 328, 420, 432, 439, 445, 496
Conferences and festivals 32, 60, 69, 90, 126, 337, 379, 390, 397, 405, 481, 496, 499, 525, 526, 551, 679
Copyright and permissions 19, 32, 37, 248, 261, 303, 309, 342, 404, 529, 556, 558, 564, 664, 666, 671, 673, 675, 676, 678, 680, 684, 687, 689, 730, 737
Craft 76, 164, 165, 171, 193, 216, 408, 443, 448, 451, 455, 687, 689
Creative writing pedagogy 37, 111, 115, 480, 502, 574, 763
Dada 328, 330, 335, 606, 607, 687, 688, 689
Deconstruction 274, 411, 624, 687, 688, 689, 716, 719, 774
Difficulty 7, 19, 20, 34, 60, 67, 76, 77, 78, 94, 97, 98, 100, 107, 109, 110, 111, 113, 114, 115, 120, 122, 456, 480, 530, 554, 557, 565, 567, 575, 576, 577, 578, 591
Digital archives 332, 336
Disability 456
Dreams 13, 15, 231, 358, 371, 404, 431, 442, 444, 533, 540, 567, 587, 606, 608, 616, 623, 630, 650, 662, 667, 668, 731, 734, 737, 748
Ecology and ecopoetics 116, 274, 348, 362, 388, 514, 515, 516, 523, 556, 564, 572, 664, 671
Editing 19, 32, 280
Electronic poetry and hypertext 19, 20, 32, 60, 67, 100, 126, 206, 249, 297, 411, 426, 538, 727
Elegy 32, 45, 51, 184
Empire and imperialism 300, 302
Epic 21, 32, 35, 48, 245, 305, 307, 405, 417, 731
Epistemology 498, 718, 748, 756
Experimental poetry 42, 45, 47, 49, 480, 525
Fascism 633, 646
Feminism 354, 359, 758
Film 2, 21, 35, 83, 94, 202, 237, 342, 364, 405, 409, 410, 435, 439, 445, 573, 579, 649, 778
Fluxus 32, 332, 336, 510
Formalism 141, 161, 197, 458, 460, 467, 469, 470, 475, 480, 481, 487, 489, 499, 502, 504, 507, 547, 548, 552, 571
Free verse 469, 481, 499, 502, 507
Futurism 405, 712
Gender 32, 114, 259, 340, 376, 496, 519, 579, 746, 748, 758, 760, 761, 763, 777
Grants and funding 44, 80, 184, 386, 438, 457, 485, 518, 585, 676, 678, 701
Haiku 2, 139, 282, 284, 318, 343, 345, 470, 598
Hermeneutics 78, 110
Homophonic translation 16
Humour and satire 56, 70, 240, 245, 248, 260, 288, 335, 385, 387, 496, 517, 519, 589, 685, 690, 692, 696, 707, 721
Identity politics 144, 148
Ideology 187, 188, 385, 405, 456, 502, 630, 646, 684, 687, 689, 764, 772
Improvisation 36, 114, 496
Indigenous and Native poetics 231, 515, 523, 556, 564, 572, 606, 664, 671
Interviews 19, 82, 122, 126, 206, 294, 298, 308, 310, 311, 315, 332, 336, 380, 503, 512, 513, 543, 557, 566, 576, 649, 744, 745, 749

Israel and Palestine 75, 280, 725
Language poetry 31, 32, 34, 110, 141, 143, 144, 145, 147, 148, 149, 223, 224, 227, 237, 496, 595, 673, 675, 757, 765
Letters and correspondence 19, 32, 50, 83, 170, 184, 240, 331, 334, 621, 623, 650, 758
List moderation 83, 551, 711, 720, 722, 748
Little magazines 12, 19, 20, 28, 48, 60, 72, 90, 126, 168, 170, 215, 228, 234, 291, 296, 301, 327, 372, 379, 395, 399, 411, 416, 432, 436, 437, 450, 481, 494, 499, 502, 518, 538, 556, 564, 565, 566, 579, 584, 613, 621, 640, 664, 665, 666, 671, 673, 675, 700, 702, 710, 713, 717, 733, 735, 751
Lyric poetry 7, 274, 305, 307, 316, 329, 335, 374, 380, 411, 417, 420, 589, 680, 731
Marxism 173, 612, 764, 772
Materiality of the text 34
Memory 10, 22, 58, 62, 66, 77, 83, 112, 121, 149, 175, 176, 181, 183, 216, 217, 220, 235, 266, 267, 299, 304, 308, 338, 362, 375, 382, 411, 481, 499, 503, 606
MFA programs 211, 758
Modernism 32, 34, 48, 51, 70, 77, 110, 126, 161, 184, 197, 240, 328, 330, 335, 461, 502, 579, 610, 612, 624, 626, 669, 722
Mourning and loss 1, 19, 83, 167, 538, 576, 744, 745, 753, 755
Multiculturalism 242, 249, 252, 253, 297
Music and poetry 6, 7, 23, 27, 32, 36, 46, 62, 68, 76, 77, 83, 94, 113, 120, 194, 202, 210, 211, 214, 273, 275, 277, 299, 322, 332, 336, 355, 356, 357, 364, 367, 377, 380, 390, 393, 395, 398, 399, 400, 401, 404, 406, 409, 410, 416, 427, 429, 434, 435, 439, 440, 445, 447, 463, 465, 472, 477, 483, 488, 493, 495, 496, 502, 509, 510, 512, 514, 526, 527, 532, 533, 534, 536, 537, 540, 559, 566, 571, 576, 587, 612, 616, 623, 628, 632, 650, 651, 687, 688, 689, 716, 719, 744, 745, 752, 755, 757, 762, 765, 769, 770, 772, 774, 776
Nationalism 590, 599, 602
Nature 11, 19, 32, 37, 83, 90, 125, 130, 142, 173, 179, 210, 212, 233, 248, 270, 296, 301, 311, 348, 385, 388, 398, 404, 405, 456, 484, 485, 491, 492, 501, 503, 506, 514, 515, 516, 523, 530, 567, 612, 636, 641, 677, 693, 732, 736, 741, 744, 745, 757, 758, 765, 767
Negativity and refusal 148, 281, 744, 745
New Formalism 141, 481, 499, 502
New York School 248, 328, 330, 335
Obituary and memorial 19, 349, 369
Objectivism 461
Ontology 30, 748, 756
Oulipo 460, 470, 475
Performance and the poetry reading 19, 83, 124, 157, 239, 494, 522, 586, 663, 670, 762
Phenomenology 166
Philosophy 173, 226, 240, 298, 362, 363, 396, 438, 461, 542, 633, 641, 646, 677, 693, 749, 756, 763, 776
Place and region 52, 54, 514, 518
Poet laureate 66, 73, 183, 193
Poetics 5, 12, 13, 15, 19, 28, 32, 48, 59, 78, 82, 83, 98, 110, 111, 122, 141, 169, 170, 174, 175, 178, 187, 203, 207, 217, 220, 226, 228, 230, 232, 244, 259, 271, 273, 274, 275, 280, 316, 324, 328, 330, 334, 335, 339, 342, 354, 358, 359, 364, 371, 374, 375, 391, 394, 406, 411, 417, 420, 431, 443, 444, 447, 452, 456, 461, 478, 485, 496, 523, 605, 606, 608, 612, 616, 623, 626, 628, 631, 634, 639, 640, 643, 645, 650, 651, 652, 653, 673, 675, 678, 684, 687, 689, 709, 711, 720, 722, 746, 753, 755, 760, 761, 775
Politics and poetry 179, 541, 542, 543, 554
Postmodernism 70, 126, 579, 610, 624, 626, 722
Print vs. digital 4, 5, 32, 48, 70, 94, 426, 461, 480, 507, 511, 518, 525, 579, 582, 610, 621, 649, 672, 702, 707, 710, 722, 723, 727, 728, 758
Prizes and awards 83, 389, 500, 505, 681, 743
Procedural and constraint writing 11, 34, 712
Prose poem 48
Prosody and meter 90, 170, 210, 481, 489, 499, 502, 503, 504, 507
Psychoanalysis 9, 213, 274, 605, 608, 756, 762, 767
Queer poetics 4, 144, 281, 306, 307, 321, 323, 510, 634, 637, 639, 640, 730, 758
Race and poetry 300, 302, 303, 342, 380, 384, 385, 387, 388, 749, 750
Reading announcements 1, 157, 196, 239, 256, 289, 329, 379, 438, 451, 586, 606, 665
Religion and the sacred 171, 202, 217, 220, 255, 306, 307, 321, 333, 396, 398, 447, 456, 496, 514, 530, 564, 569, 612, 646, 675, 748, 764, 772, 776
Representation 32, 209, 210, 233, 263, 297, 314, 405, 530, 550, 556, 558, 564, 572, 573, 664, 666, 671, 718, 766
Reviewing and criticism 19, 27, 32, 34, 68, 82, 126, 138, 141, 161, 162, 187, 197, 226, 228, 230, 275, 277, 297, 300, 301, 302, 311, 337, 357, 368, 400, 411, 436, 437, 438, 452, 460, 461, 464, 470, 505, 510, 525, 558, 576, 585, 665, 680, 683, 685, 686, 690, 692, 702, 708, 710, 711, 712, 717, 720, 721, 722, 728, 758

Romanticism 624, 744, 745, 752
San Francisco Renaissance 702, 710, 758
Science 90, 130, 166, 243, 311, 348, 362, 385, 388, 405, 423, 453, 456, 467, 475, 481, 499, 503, 599, 602, 610, 624, 626, 633, 646, 651, 659, 671, 673, 675, 677, 684, 687, 689, 693, 737, 744, 745, 749, 766, 767
Semiotics 748
Serial poem 48, 713, 715
Sestina 507
Small press publishing 19, 37, 48, 51, 77, 80, 99, 125, 184, 240, 342, 379, 381, 438, 451, 464, 491, 496, 497, 500, 505, 610, 621, 624, 632, 665, 703, 712, 715, 738, 758
Software and code 388, 460, 470, 519, 545, 756
Sonnet 347, 360, 439, 445, 458, 470, 475, 480, 481, 487, 489, 499, 502, 504, 507, 571, 712
Sound poetry 32, 46, 332, 336
Subjectivity 19, 20, 60, 67, 100, 115, 405, 410, 489, 496, 501, 530, 707, 756, 771
Sublime 49, 56, 70, 208, 210, 213, 304, 342
Surrealism 4, 7, 9, 11, 17, 32, 34, 58, 304, 708
The academy 8, 10, 19, 22, 26, 27, 32, 34, 39, 44, 48, 62, 66, 68, 71, 77, 83, 90, 112, 114, 120, 121, 141, 143, 144, 145, 147, 149, 157, 162, 176, 177, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 188, 197, 206, 216, 217, 220, 233, 235, 259, 262, 267, 275, 303, 308, 317, 338, 361, 369, 375, 379, 384, 385, 387, 397, 408, 416, 423, 426, 438, 440, 443, 446, 447, 451, 457, 461, 464, 469, 472, 480, 481, 487, 488, 489, 494, 499, 500, 502, 503, 505, 507, 514, 518, 519, 527, 537, 548, 551, 556, 558, 564, 565, 576, 588, 592, 635, 636, 640, 663, 664, 671, 680, 685, 690, 691, 695, 702, 710, 713, 717, 721, 722, 730, 758
The body 19, 748, 750, 764, 772
The canon 119, 121, 332, 336, 533, 692, 697, 702, 710, 713, 721
The Gulf War 48
The Holocaust 387, 388
The internet 32, 44, 60, 90, 101, 195, 332, 336, 337, 388, 411, 563, 622, 722, 767
The Iraq war 764, 772
The line 19, 206, 568, 598
The listserv 19, 31, 177, 187, 259, 291, 420, 447, 472, 490, 522, 581, 589, 605, 608, 610, 624, 640, 649, 663, 673, 675, 680, 702, 707, 710, 722, 727, 732, 736, 739, 741, 749, 767, 776, 777
The New Sentence 612
Theatre 48, 69, 74, 202, 240, 277, 379, 438, 440, 472, 514, 610, 624, 669, 687, 689, 758, 778
Torture and Abu Ghraib 404
Translation 27, 32, 47, 116, 129, 138, 164, 165, 167, 173, 187, 284, 300, 302, 426, 438, 471, 480, 500, 503, 505, 540, 573, 600, 649, 657, 777
Vietnam 48, 243, 311
Visual and concrete poetry 46, 332, 336, 337, 368
Visual art 1, 32, 69, 74, 209, 379, 395, 426, 514, 518, 532, 545, 576, 586, 649, 758
Voice 187, 687, 689

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 780 in all.

1 MAY 1998

1. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — Cayley & Glazier in Buffalo
2. J Kimball — The East Village Poetry Web, Volume One
3. F. W. Perrella — Web Del Sol - Pantheon Page
4. Michael Coffey — Re: Spicer, surrealism, born on date -Reply
5. Herb Levy — Re: fresh
6. Herb Levy — requisite self-promotion
7. Henry G — Stevens & surrealism
8. Douglas Barbour — Re: poems for the millennium vol. 2
9. morpheal — Re: Spicer, surrealism, born on date -Reply
10. Judy Roitman — Another KS reading
11. Lisa Samuels — Re: Stevens, surrealism, 'discovery'
12. ScoutEW — Would like submissions...for a new magazine...
13. ScoutEW — Arizona out there...?
14. Billy Little — Re: Arizona out there...?
15. Safdie Joseph — Re: Arizona out there...?
16. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Arizona out there...?
17. groberts — Stevens and surrealism
18. Marc Nasdor (by way of Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>)" <[redacted]> — A Tr...
19. Charles Bernstein — Welcome Message
20. Mark Wallace — what's difficult
21. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Arizona out there...?
22. Judy Roitman — Re: what's difficult
23. Safdie Joseph — Re: The Meaning of Meaning
24. George Bowering — Re: cabeza
25. David Baratier — A contrapuntal universe of baseball

2 MAY 1998

26. MAYHEW — a very difficult avant-garde poem
27. Herb Levy — Re: The Meaning of Meaning
28. s. kaipa — I n t e r l o p e: a journal of asian american poetics and issues
29. Aviva99999 — East Village Poetry Site
30. Garrett Kalleberg — Third Friend
31. David Baratier — Mean(ing)
32. Jerome Rothenberg — Re: poems for the millennium vol. 2
33. Hugh Nicoll — Re: East Village Poetry Site
34. J. Fuhrman — Re: : challenge vs. difficulty (Tate)
35. michael corbin — Re: Arizona in here

3 MAY 1998

36. Miekal And — Re: requisite self-promotion
37. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: poems for the millennium vol. 2
38. Eurydice — May Readings at Here (NYC)
39. Douglas Barbour — Re: Rothenberg's commentary
40. Agent Sunshine, aka Eric Gleason — tribute in harlem thursday.
41. Bob Grumman — Understanding Poems
42. Michael McColl — Understanding and Evaluating Poems
43. John Cayley — Current (e)address for Fiona Templeton
44. randy egest — NEA/NPR Petition
45. charles alexander — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
46. Bob Grumman — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
47. David Baratier — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems

48. Travis Andrew Ortiz — Atelos / _Bad History_ by Barrett Watten
49. Henry Gould — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
50. Joel Felix — Bellamy Reading in Chicago
51. Samuel R. Truitt — ANAMORPHOSIS EISENHOWER
52. Aviva99999 — Re: The Meaning of Meaning
53. Agent Sunshine, aka Eric Gleason — Re: The Meaning of Meaning

4 MAY 1998

54. Thomas Bell — Re: The Meaning of Meaning
55. Miekal And — Re: release the strings
56. Jordan Davis — release the strings
57. henry — Re: release the strings
58. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Stevens and surrealism
59. Henry — Re: release the strings
60. Mark Prejsnar — Re: what's difficult
61. Mark Prejsnar — a poem should not mean but bleed
62. Judy Roitman — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
63. Jordan Davis — at the risk of offending
64. Michael Kelleher — a l y r i c m a i l e r 5
65. Robert Archambeau — Re: Bellamy Reading in Chicago
66. Judy Roitman — Re: The Meaning of Meaning
67. Mark Wallace — what's difficult--the offending sentence
68. Steven Clay — Artists Books: A Critical Survey of the Literature
69. Mark Nowak — Arthur Sze
70. groberts — Padgett's sub lime pie
71. Carolyn Guertin — First Arizona, now Texas...
72. ScoutEW — Re: First Arizona, now Arizona.
73. Keston Sutherland — Re: The Meaning of Meaning
74. Mark Prejsnar — fascination of what's difficult, er, obscure, er
75. David Israel — Fiona Templeton
76. henry g — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
77. Taylor Brady — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
78. MAYHEW — (mis)understanding poetry
79. RaeA100900 — Tony Lopez
80. Peter Ganick — potes & poets press
81. Keston Sutherland — Re: Tony Lopez
82. Chicago Review — Chicago Review Update
83. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Letters Not About Love
84. Aviva99999 — Re: release the strings
85. Aviva99999 — Re: The Meaning of Meaning
86. David Baratier — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
87. Brian Lucas — Faucheuse #2

5 MAY 1998

88. Peter Quartermain — Re: Tony Lopez
89. joel lewis — f.y.i.
90. louis stroffolino — SHK 9.0423 Caliban and Sycorax: Moons of Uranus (fwd)
91. MAYHEW — homage to creeley VIII
92. Maria Damon — Re: homage to creeley VIII
93. KENT JOHNSON — Technique
94. Herb Levy — Re: Responses to the Rosen essay
95. Jordan Davis — POETRY CITY celebrates not national poetry month
96. k. lederer — NYC sublet for summer
97. MAYHEW — I have had to learn the simplest things / last
98. William Burmeister Prod — Re: I have had to learn the simplest things / last
99. Taylor Brady — Publication Announcement

6 MAY 1998

100. Thomas Bell — Re: what's difficult-
101. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Look at me! Do I want to say hello!
102. Charles Alexander — Re: release the strings
103. beth lee simon — I have had to learn the simplest things / last
104. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Q
105. Elizabeth Hatmaker — Re: Technique
106. MAYHEW — a quiz
107. Henry Gould — Re: Technique
108. Rod4rigo — Query: Heather Fuller's e-mail..?
109. Jordan Davis — why patterns?
110. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Technique
111. J. Fuhrman — Re: I have had to learn the simplest things / last
112. Judy Roitman — Re: Technique
113. Michael Magee — Re: Technique/Difficulty
114. David Zauhar — Re: Technique
115. groberts — Re: Technique
116. Michael Magee — Re: Technique
117. Henry G — Re: Technique
118. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Technique
119. David Zauhar — Re: Technique
120. James C. Hall — Re: Technique
121. Judy Roitman — Re: Technique
122. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Technique
123. joel lewis — that old black magic
124. Taylor Brady — BUFFALO READING
125. Mary Hilton — New from primitive publications
126. John Tranter — Report on the Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry
127. Samuel R. Truitt — Re: Technique
128. Henry G — Re: Technique
129. Billy Little — Re: I have had to unlearn the conventional ideas first
130. R. Gancie — Colossal Gamma Ray Blast

7 MAY 1998

131. Linda Russo — Carto &BUFFALo
132. Linda Russo — Oops re: Carto Buffalo
133. charles alexander — praise
134. nico vassilakis — (xo)
135. William R. Howe — Re: (xo)
136. William R. Howe — Re: (xo)
137. Jordan Davis — cloud cover
138. Samuel R. Truitt — Re: Technique
139. Jordan Davis — loud clover swerve
140. Henry — Re: Technique
141. MAYHEW — technical difficulties
142. henry mouf — Re: technical difficulties
143. ScoutEW — Re: technical difficulties
144. MAYHEW — Re: technical difficulties
145. William Burmeister Prod — Re: technical difficulties
146. John Latta — Re: technical difficulties
147. k. lederer — Re: technical difficulties
148. Michael Magee — Re: technical difficulties
149. Judy Roitman — Re: technical difficulties
150. MAYHEW — Re: technical difficulties
151. henry — Re: technical difficulties
152. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: (xo)

153. William Burmeister Prod — Re: technical difficulties
154. henry — Re: technical difficulties
155. ScoutEW — Re: technical difficulties
156. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: technical difficulties
157. Keston Sutherland — Reading at Harvard
158. Maria Damon — Re: technical difficulties
159. John Latta — Re: technical difficulties
160. Hzinnes — Re: technical difficulties
161. joel lewis — Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
162. Schuchat Simon — Re: technical difficulties
163. Billy Little — Re: technical difficulties
164. Aviva000 — Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
165. Brent Long — Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry

8 MAY 1998

166. R. Gancie — copula & contigency
167. Henry — Re: technical difficulties
168. F. W. Perrella — Web Del Sol - What's New Page
169. Mark Prejsnar — technique and fury
170. henry — Re: technique and fury
171. Aviva000 — Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
172. Aviva000 — conservatism on this list...
173. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Re: technical difficulties
174. Gary Sullivan — "radical"
175. Robert Hale — Re: "radical"
176. Judy Roitman — Re: "radical"
177. Mark Leahy — query -- Sayre
178. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: "radical"
179. Henry Gould — Re: radical
180. Gary Sullivan — Re: "radical"
181. William Burmeister Prod — Re: "radical"
182. Robert Zamsky — Re: query -- Sayre
183. Judy Roitman — Re: "radical"
184. dbkk — Marianne Moore rocks at SPT
185. Robert Hale — Re: "radical"
186. ScoutEW — Re: "rationical"
187. Linda Russo — Re: "radical"
188. Linda Russo — also Re: "radical"
189. JBCM2 — Re: also Re: "radical"
190. JBCM2 — Re: jobs
191. Karen Kelley — Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
192. toddbaron — Re: "radical","radical"

9 MAY 1998

193. David Baratier — Re: Robespierre promises Danton devotion until death
194. Billy Little — Re: "radical"
195. Martin Spinelli — jobs
196. Kevin Varrone — reading announcement
197. Annie Finch — poetry/the cello
198. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Listen to the Machingbyrd
199. Michael Magee — Re: radical
200. Jordan Davis — "Non-violent paraphrase and self-defeating maps," or, your fun is a snob
201. ScoutEW — Re: radical
202. henry g — Re: radical
203. linda russo — Re: also Re: "radical"
204. henry g — correction
205. Charles Alexander — Re: also Re: "radical"

206. Martin Spinelli — Radical Andrews
207. JBCM2 — Re: also Re: "radical"
208. Michael McColl — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
209. Michael McColl — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
210. henry — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems

10 MAY 1998

211. joel lewis — Re: poetry/the cello
212. R. Gancie — radical
213. MAYHEW — paraphrasable
214. Michael McColl — Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
215. Tim Wood — Re: technique and fury
216. Judy Roitman — Re: Robespierre promises Danton devotion until death
217. Judy Roitman — Re: also Re: "radical"
218. R. Gancie — radical
219. groberts — Re: paraphrasable
220. linda russo — Re: also Re: "radical"
221. morpheal — Re: paraphrasable
222. linda russo — Superflux query
223. KENT JOHNSON — The neighbor's dog fence
224. J. Fuhrman — Re: The neighbor's dog fence
225. Christopher Reiner — New book

11 MAY 1998

226. Franklin Bruno — poetics/aesthetics
227. Tom Beard — Re: The neighbor's dog fence
228. Tim Wood — Re: poetics/aesthetics
229. Tim Wood — Re: Superflux query
230. Keston Sutherland — Re: poetics/aesthetics
231. joel lewis — f.y.i.
232. Burt Kimmelman — Re: poetics/aesthetics
233. Gary Sullivan — Re: "radical"
234. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Para/garay anyone?
235. Judy Roitman — Re: also Re: "radical"
236. Christopher Reiner — new announcments at litpress.com
237. KENT JOHNSON — Re: The neighbor's dog fence
238. Gary Sullivan — value
239. joel lewis — poetry reading
240. dbkk — Bellamy/Gluck at SPT
241. Peter Quartermain — AERIAL Andrews issue
242. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — british experimentalism
243. R. Gancie — radical
244. izak — "surrender intentionality"
245. joel lewis — f.y.i.
246. linda russo — call for admissions
247. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Nikuko's doing stuff
248. MAYHEW — Re: FYI
249. Peter Ganick — Re: british experimentalism
250. linda russo — p.s. call for submissions
251. hen — Re: FYI
252. Maria Damon — Re: british experimentalism
253. Keith Tuma — Re: british experimentalism
254. Karen Kelley — Re: The neighbor's dog fence
255. Rachel Loden — Re: radical
256. toddbaron — Re: Bellamy/Gluck at SPT
257. Alan Myouka Sondheim — forgive this intrusion stupid Nikuko wants to live

12 MAY 1998

258. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski — also also re: radical / ego
259. Robert Archambeau — USC position in poetics
260. Tim Wood — Re: "radical"
261. MAYHEW — Ode to Ron Padgett
262. Douglas Barbour — Re: R on D
263. Mark Prejsnar — Doubled-Careerism
264. Keston Sutherland — (no subject)
265. AERIALEDGE — Aerial 9
266. Gary Sullivan — Leggo my ego
267. Judy Roitman — Re: The neighbor's dog fence
268. Jordan Davis — "Like Boxes of Shit in Your House? Get a Cat!"
269. Gary Sullivan — Mediocrity loves company
270. Robert Hale — Re: Mediocrity loves company
271. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: poetics of subsistence
272. Gary Sullivan — My Mediocrity
273. Laura E. Wright — top 10
274. groberts — poetics of subsistence
275. David W. Clippinger — Re: top 10
276. R. Gancie — radical
277. louis stroffolino — Re: My Mediocrity
278. Rachel Levitsky — Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
279. Rachel Levitsky — Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
280. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Special Issue of Sulfur
281. JDEBROT — Re: My Mediocrity
282. Maria Damon — more queries
283. Maria Damon — Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
284. Susan Wheeler — Re: more queries
285. Alan Myouka Sondheim — the last of substitution
286. MAYHEW — F O'H
287. louis stroffolino — Re: F O'H
288. Karen Kelley — Re: "radical"
289. Keston Sutherland — reading, wednesday
290. ScoutEW — Re: My Mediocrity
291. ScoutEW — Re: forgive this intrusion stupid Nikuko wants to live

13 MAY 1998

292. George Bowering — Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
293. Gary Sullivan — Re: F O'H
294. Gary Sullivan — Creeley Speaks
295. Maria Damon — Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
296. Gary Sullivan — Robert Hale...do you take requests?
297. sean bonney — Re: british experimentalism
298. Michael Magee — Re: Creeley Speaks
299. Andrew D Epstein — F O'H
300. Gary Sullivan — I love typing "FO'H" . . . as, who wouldn't?
301. Robert Hale — Re: Robert Hale...do you take requests?
302. Michael Magee — Re: I love typing "FO'H" . . . as, who wouldn't?
303. MAYHEW — F O'H
304. Michael Kelleher — Frank
305. henry gould — Re: Frank
306. Michael Kelleher — Re: Frank
307. henry — Re: Frank
308. Judy Roitman — Re: Creeley Speaks
309. Jordan Davis — Frankly
310. Brent Long — Re: Creeley Speaks

311. R. Gancie — radical
312. Keston Sutherland — Re: Frankly
313. Keston Sutherland — ex-Simpsonite
314. daniel bouchard — Re: ex-Sampsonite
315. Gary Sullivan — "We shoot every third salesman . . . and the second one just left"
316. Uncle Henry — Re: Frankly
317. toddbaron — Re: F O'H
318. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Frankly my dearzies
319. toddbaron — Re: SELF?
320. morpheal — Re: SELF?
321. sylvester pollet — Re: Frank
322. Samuel R. Truitt — ATTTICUS BOOKS AND MUSIC READING
323. Billy Little — Re: I love typing "FO'H" . . . as, who wouldn't?
324. Tenney Nathanson — Re: SELF?

14 MAY 1998

325. George Bowering — Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
326. Charles Alexander — Re: yet another query
327. RanPrunty — Re: Top Ten
328. JDEBROT — Re: Frank
329. JDEBROT — Re: Reading at Harvard
330. Michael Magee — Re: Frank
331. Jordan Davis — "O'Hara compared to artists."
332. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Yo Po Grows
333. groberts — Re: Frank
334. Tenney Nathanson — Re: "O'Hara compared to artists."
335. Tenney Nathanson — Re: Frank
336. Maria Damon — Re: Yo Po Grows
337. Irving Weiss — Signal/Antiwar
338. Judy Roitman — Re: Yo Po Grows
339. ken|n|ing — Query)
340. groberts — Re: Frank
341. Miekal And — Re: Yo Po Grows
342. Maz881 — Re: Frankly
343. Peter Quartermain — Re: Frankly my dearzies
344. RaeA100900 — a reading in NYC
345. Maria Damon — Re: Frankly my dearzies

15 MAY 1998

346. Stephen Cope — Calling Cabri
347. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Zazen-Zen substitution sonnet
348. R. Gancie — black hole big macula attack
349. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — speaking frankly...
350. William Burmeister Prod — speaking frankly...
351. William Burmeister Prod — Re: speaking frankly...
352. William Burmeister Prod — Re: speaking frankly...
353. Robert Hale — Re: speaking frankly...
354. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — yet another query
355. LITSAM — Re: speaking frankly...
356. daniel bouchard — Re: speaking rankly...
357. Gary Sullivan — ODDLY APPROPRIATE POEM
358. k. lederer — Re: yet another query
359. Gary Sullivan — Re: yet another query
360. morpheal — Re: Zazen-Zen substitution sonnet
361. Fred Muratori — In the Spririt of O'Hara...
362. morpheal — Re: black hole big macula attack
363. Matt Kirschenbaum — Re: speaking frankly...

364. david bromige — frank's words
365. Tosh — frank sinatra
366. Magdalena Zurawski — Re: yet another query
367. William Burmeister Prod — Re: frank's words
368. morpheal — Re: Signal/antiwar
369. William Burmeister Prod — Marjory Stoneman Douglas 1890-1998
370. Billy Little — Re: ODDLY APPROPRIATE POEM
371. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
372. Chrsmccrry — journal address query
373. charles alexander — Re: yet another query
374. Wendy Kramer — subsistence what matter poetry
375. Karen Kelley — Re: yet another query
376. Karen Kelley — Oops/Query
377. toddbaron — Re: speaking frankly...
378. toddbaron — Re: frankly sinatra

16 MAY 1998

379. Taylor Brady — PERFORMANCE / READING IN BUFFALO
380. joel lewis — "Guess I'll Hang Out My Tears to Dry"(Sinatra)
381. Taylor Brady — Publication Announcement
382. Stephen Cope — Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
383. izak — izak
384. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — bytes & rights
385. morpheal — Re: bytes & rights
386. dbkk — ca state funding for the arts
387. Tim Wood — Re: bytes & rights
388. morpheal — Re: bytes & rights
389. MAYHEW — A couple of queries
390. Tom Orange — speaking sonicly
391. Don Wellman — Re: subsistence what matter poetry

17 MAY 1998

392. F. W. Perrella — Web Del Sol - AGNI Spring issue #47
393. R. Gancie — bytes & women's rights
394. Miekal And — Re: subsistence what matter poetry
395. J. Kuszai — scene reports, please
396. morpheal — Re: bytes & women's rights
397. R. Gancie — byte Mary Shelley
398. charles alexander — Re: scene reports, please

18 MAY 1998

399. Tom Orange — scene reports, please
400. Stephen Cope — Re: scene reports, please
401. Miekal And — Re: scene reports, please
402. Douglas — Re: yet another query
403. daniel bouchard — (no subject)
404. Billy Little — Re: scene reports, please
405. morpheal — Re: byte Mary Shelley : a truer picture than Neumann
406. Cadaly — Re: POETICS Digest - 16 May 1998 to 17 May 1998
407. Gwyn McVay — rigid members
408. Gale Nelson — John Hawkes
409. Gary Sullivan — Re: scene reports, please
410. Don Cheney — Re: scene reports, please
411. Christopher Reiner — new WITZ
412. Gary Sullivan — Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
413. Ellay Phillips — Re: yet another query
414. david bromige — re rigid members

415. AERIALEDGE — DC Reading for An Anthology of New (American) Poets
416. Don Byrd — Re: scene reports, please
417. henry g — Re: subsistence what matter poetry
418. Jordan Davis — sanitized grace
419. Gary Sullivan — Re: sanitized grace
420. groberts — Re: subsistence what matter poetry
421. Henry Gould — grace of obsolescence
422. Gary Sullivan — Re: grace of obsolescence
423. R. Gancie — Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
424. morpheal — Re: grace of obsolescence
425. morpheal — Re: grace of obsolescence
426. Jerome Rothenberg (by way of John Cayley) — Performance/Reading : Yang Lian & John Cayley
427. ScoutEW — Re: scene reports, please
428. Peter Balestrieri — Rochelle Owens
429. William Burmeister Prod — Re: scene reports, please
430. ScoutEW — Re: scene reports, please
431. Maz881 — Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
432. k. lederer — EXPLOSIVE ANNOUNCEMENTS

19 MAY 1998

433. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Rochelle Owens
434. Stephen Cope — Re: scene reports, please
435. Stephen Cope — Re: scene reports, please
436. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Rochelle Owens
437. Mark Weiss — Re: Rochelle Owens
438. Stephen Cope — Beyond the Page
439. Herb Levy — Re: scene reports, please
440. david bromige — Martin Bartlett (per Herb Levy's scene update)
441. ScoutEW — Re: scene reports, please
442. henry — Re: grace of obsolescence
443. Douglas — Re: John Hawkes
444. Maria Damon — Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
445. Maria Damon — Re: scene reports, please
446. Fred Muratori — Re: Rochelle Owens
447. Douglas Barbour — Re: POETICS Digest - 16 May 1998 to 17 May 1998
448. Gary Sullivan — Re: Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
449. henry g — 1 line
450. toddbaron — Re: Beyond the Page
451. Annie Finch — High School Workshops
452. ken|n|ing — the future
453. R. Gancie — Jornada del Muerto
454. k. lederer — Some poems by Jeff Clark
455. morpheal — Re: Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
456. morpheal — Re: Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
457. Charles Alexander — Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
458. Juliana Spahr — formalists, oralists
459. Gary Sullivan — Re: Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
460. Gale Nelson — Re: formalists, oralists
461. Burt Kimmelman — New Book on William Bronk (from Fairleigh Dickinson U P); see below
462. toddbaron — Re: yet another query
463. Matt Kirschenbaum — Harry Partch Instrumentarium (fwd)
464. Karen and Trevor — Fourteen Hills
465. Mark Weiss — Re: Harry Partch Instrumentarium (fwd)
466. ScoutEW — more poems by Jeff Clark
467. ScoutEW — Re: formalists, oralists

20 MAY 1998

468. joel lewis — in my neighborhood
469. Henry Gould — Re: formalists, oralists
470. Tom Orange — formalists, oralists
471. Herb Levy — Re: scene reports, please
472. Herb Levy — Re: Martin Bartlett (per Herb Levy's scene update)
473. Tom Orange — Some poems by Jeff Clark
474. Tom Orange — John Hawkes
475. Dougolly — Re: formalists, orators
476. morpheal — Re: The Answer
477. George Bowering — Re: scene reports, please
478. George Bowering — Re: POETICS Digest - 16 May 1998 to 17 May 1998
479. George Bowering — Re: John Hawkes
480. Robert Archambeau — Re: formalists, oralists
481. Susan Wheeler — Re: formalists, oralists
482. Robert Archambeau — Re: London events? bookstores?
483. Susan Wheeler — Re: Harry Partch Instrumentarium (fwd)
484. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — nature/poetry...
485. Tenney Nathanson — Re: nature/poetry...; also POG report
486. dee morris — Re: John Hawkes
487. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: formalists, oralists
488. Steve Shoemaker — London events? bookstores?
489. David Kellogg — Re: formalists, oralists
490. Safdie Joseph — Re: Herb Levy's scene update
491. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — nature/poetry...
492. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — sustainability...
493. ken|n|ing — Re: scene reports, please
494. Carolyn Guertin — Cool Site of the Day
495. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
496. Taylor Brady — Re: scene reports, please
497. Taylor Brady — Small Press Collective alias
498. R. Gancie — homeostasis & intolerance
499. Steve Shoemaker — Re: formalists, oralists
500. dbkk — Anne Carson at SPT
501. morpheal — Re: sustainability...and techne
502. acgold01 — Juliana's query
503. michael corbin — Re: Anne Carson at SPT
504. BETSY ANDREWS — Re: formalists, oralists
505. Steven Marks — Re: Anne Carson at SPT
506. charles alexander — Re: nature/poetry...
507. Steve Shoemaker — Re: formalists, oralists
508. Eurydice — Not-to-miss NYC Reading
509. Bradford J Senning — Ashbery

21 MAY 1998

510. Franklin Bruno — scenery port
511. George Bowering — Re: John Hawkes
512. JDEBROT — Re: Ashbery
513. JDEBROT — Re: Ashbery
514. Miekal And — Re: nature/poetry...
515. Miekal And — Re: nature/poetry...
516. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — nature/poetry...
517. daniel bouchard — (no subject)
518. Charles Bernstein — Black Lightning (forwarded announcement)
519. morpheal — Re: Seinfeld as Culture Hero
520. Karen and Trevor — signing on

521. k. lederer — NYC reading in a week
522. Charles Bernstein — Re: signing on
523. charles alexander — Re: nature/poetry...
524. Keston Sutherland — david golumbia
525. Peter Baker — Appropriation for Use
526. Lawrence Upton. — Re: London events? bookstores?
527. Miekal And — Re: Partch & Travesty
528. R. Gancie — 'the self'
529. louis stroffolino — question
530. morpheal — Re: homeostasis & intolerance [= Tipler's computer hates poets ?]
531. Jonathan Brannen — Temblor
532. Laura E. Wright — ashbery etc.
533. J. Kuszai — Partch & Travesty
534. Laura E. Wright — forwarding lists
535. Christopher Reiner — Re: Partch & Travesty
536. morpheal — Re: forwarding lists
537. Joel Felix — Re: Partch & Travesty

22 MAY 1998

538. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — deluxe rubber chicken
539. groberts — Re: ashbery etc.
540. Herb Levy — Re: Partch & Travesty
541. Fredrik Hertzberg LIT — stuttering, stammering
542. J. Fuhrman — Re: stuttering, stammering
543. Rachel Loden — Re: stuttering, stammering
544. Shemurph — Re: stuttering, stammering
545. Wendy Battin — Re: Travesty etc
546. henry — Re: stuttering, stammering
547. Martin Nakell — Re: formalists, oralists
548. Martin Nakell — Re: formalists, oralists
549. Alan Myouka Sondheim — The Turning and Embracing of Nikuko and Jennifer
550. Safdie Joseph — Re: Byrd on Alexander and Stroffolino
551. Annie Finch — Exploratory Form panel at West Chester Conference
552. William Burmeister Prod — Re: formalists, oralists
553. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: stuttering, stammering
554. Stephen Cope — Re: stuttering, stammering
555. William Burmeister Prod — Re: stuttering, stammering
556. Don Byrd — Re: Alexander and Stroffolino's questions
557. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: stuttering, stammering
558. groberts — Re: Alexander and Stroffolino's questions
559. David Baratier — ten
560. David Baratier — toronto
561. r. drake — Re: stuttering, stammering
562. david bromige — stummering, stattering
563. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: stummering, stattering
564. Mark Weiss — Re: Alexander and Stroffolino's questions
565. Don Byrd — Re: stuttering, stammering
566. joel lewis — Re: Partch
567. morpheal — Re: 'the self' [and psychological warfare]
568. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — autopoiesis, homeostasis & the delineation of 'self'
569. morpheal — Re: Alexander and Stroffolino's questions
570. George Bowering — Re: stuttering, stammering
571. toddbaron — Re: formalists, oralists

23 MAY 1998

572. charles alexander — what we learn
573. KENT JOHNSON — A stutter to the Russians

574. Billy Little — Re: stuttering, stammering
575. Fredrik Hertzberg LIT — Re: stuttering, stammering
576. MAYHEW — stuttering
577. charles alexander — Re: stuttering, stammering
578. Karen Kelley — Re: stuttering, stammering
579. Aviva000 — Fwd: new book (fwd)
580. Aviva000 — Re: signing on
581. Karen Kelley — Re: stuttering
582. Charles Bernstein — Black Lightning
583. david bromige — re non/articulate
584. Tom Orange — stuttering, stammering
585. F. W. Perrella — Web Del Sol - North American Review
586. Tom Orange — toronto
587. Barbara Langhorst — Re: stuttering, stammering
588. Steve Shoemaker — Re: stuttering, stammering
589. Maria Damon — Re: stuttering
590. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — A Megalamorial Day Miscellany
591. Peter Quartermain — Re: stuttering, stammering
592. Steve Shoemaker — stuttering at the movies

24 MAY 1998

593. KENT JOHNSON — Spicer in Lingua Franca
594. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski — Re: stuttering
595. Mark Baker — Re: stuttering, stammering
596. George Bowering — Re: signing on
597. George Bowering — Re: re non/articulate 598. morpheal — Re: autopoiesis, homeostasis & the delineation of 'self'
599. morpheal — Re: A Megalamorial Day Miscellany [Einstein and megalomania ?]
600. Charles Bernstein — Bonvicino in NYC
601. Ctfarmr — Laura Moriarty
602. Mark Weiss — Re: A Megalamorial Day Miscellany [Einstein and megalomania ?]
603. Daishin Nikuko — It's 3AM and Nikuko's in her cups!!!
604. R. Gancie — Megalamorial Miscelany II
605. david bromige — the poetics of the stammer
606. morpheal — Re: essence of medium [universe made of vibes]
607. morpheal — Re: essence of medium [corollary to previous article]
608. Maria Damon — Re: the poetics of the stammer
609. MAYHEW — New (American) Poets
610. Dean Taciuch — Chaos and poetry
611. Billy Little — Re: A Megalamorial Day Miscellany [Einstein and megalomania ?]
612. michael corbin — Re: nature/poetry...
613. ScoutEW — Re: Chaos and poetry
614. morpheal — Re: culture heros
615. Gwyn McVay — Re: New (American) Poets stummering
616. Karen Kelley — Re: the poetics of the stammer
617. Kathy Lou Schultz — Re: New (American) Poets
618. david bromige — stummering billions of bilious blue barnacles!
619. david bromige — barbara guest on speed

25 MAY 1998

620. George Bowering — Re: barbara guest on speed
621. k. lederer — Announcing a new chapbook series/EXPLOSIVE
622. Jim Andrews — Seattle Drift
623. Stephen Cope — Re: the poetics of the stammer
624. Maria Damon — Re: Chaos and poetry
625. Maria Damon — Re: New (American) Poets stummering
626. Susan Wheeler — Re: Chaos and poetry

627. MAYHEW — New (American) Poets
628. Dean Taciuch — Re: the poetics of the stammer
629. Billy Little — local
630. morpheal — Re: Megalamorial Miscelany II [Or: Beasts one and all.]
631. ScoutEW — Re: the poetics of the stammer
632. Taylor Brady — Re: Partch
633. R. Gancie — Fredreick Winslow Taylor meets Wittgenstein & Adorno
634. Billy Little — Re: the poetics of the stammer
635. Billy Little — Re: Megalamorial Miscelany II [Or: Beasts one and all.]
636. morpheal — Re: Megalamorial Miscelany II [Or: Beasts one and all.]
637. MAYHEW — Lorca
638. Henry G — Re: Chaos and poetry
639. Susan Wheeler — Re: the poetics of the stammer
640. Don Byrd — Re: the poetics of the stammer
641. Dean Taciuch — Re: Chaos and poetry
642. toddbaron — Re: Laura Moriarty
643. toddbaron — Re: the poetics of the stammer
644. Matt Kirschenbaum — Re: Chaos and poetry
645. Karen Kelley — Re: the poetics of the stammer
646. morpheal — Re: F.W.Taylor v. Wittgenstein & Adorno [philosophical incentives]

26 MAY 1998

647. charles alexander — new nichol site
648. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Spicer in Lingua Franca
649. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Re: a stutter to the Russians
650. Michael Magee — Re: the poetics of the stammer
651. Stephen Cope — Re: the poetics of the stammer
652. ken|n|ing — synaesthetics
653. AERIALEDGE — Re: the poetics of the stammer
654. R. Gancie — deeply we enquire
655. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: stuttering, stammering
656. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: A stutter to the Russians
657. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Lorca
658. Alan Myouka Sondheim — a poem
659. morpheal — Re: bytes & rights
660. Christopher W. Alexander — miles aside
661. ScoutEW — Re: a poem
662. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: a poem
663. Charles Bernstein — Close Listening & for less

27 MAY 1998

664. louis stroffolino — Re: Byrd's reply 2 Alex and droffolino's quest
665. Mark Salerno — Arshile #9 and Upcoming Event
666. ScoutEW — Re: Byrd's reply 2 Alex and droffolino's quest
667. ScoutEW — Re: a poem
668. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: a poem
669. jarnot — Bernadette Mayer book
670. Brent Long — Reading In Providence
671. Chuck Stein — Re: Byrd's reply 2 Alex and droffolino's quest
672. Keston Sutherland — New Book by J.H. Prynne
673. Safdie Joseph — Re: mythology
674. Irving Weiss — URL change
675. Mark Weiss — Re: mythology
676. Gary Sullivan — Permission
677. R. Gancie — As a youth doomed to be the incarnation of Carl Friedrich von Weizsaecker
678. Jordan Davis — some other poetics of summer
679. Carrie Etter — Berkeley readings?

680. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
681. Maria Damon — a nice announcement

28 MAY 1998

682. Alan Myouka Sondheim — NAKED ALAN AND NIKUKO NAKED COPY AND RUN AROUND SOME FILES
683. Maria Damon — Re: spicer review
684. Chuck Stein — mythology
685. Mark Prejsnar — The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
686. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Re: <no subject given>
687. morpheal — Re: mythology [followed by DADA, deconstruction, and silence]
688. Erik Sweet — Re: mythology [followed by DADDY, construction, and silence]
689. Chuck Stein — Re: mythology [followed by DADA, deconstruction, and silence]
690. Maria Damon — Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
691. David Kellogg — Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
692. henry g — Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
693. R. Gancie — philosophy all at sea?
694. lee ann brown — Re: Wmsburg room
695. Maria Damon — Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
696. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
697. henry — Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
698. Simon/Piombino — Stuttering
699. Maria Damon — rePartch
700. M. L. Weber — call for prose submissions by women
701. Brian Clements — _Best Texas Writing 1_ available

29 MAY 1998

702. dbkk — Vs. Spicer
703. Dan Machlin — Hofer/Machlin atZinc
704. George Bowering — Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
705. nuyopoman — RapPo
706. F. W. Perrella — 5_trope - Web Del Sol
707. rsillima — Spicer, Kirkus, etc
708. Susan Wheeler — Book Party
709. Erik Sweet — Bookstores for Cheap
710. Maria Damon — Re: Vs. Spicer
711. Maria Damon — Re: Spicer Review
712. Mark Prejsnar — kenning..a review
713. Douglas Barbour — Re: Spicer
714. Prageeta Sharma — brooklyn reading
715. Mark Prejsnar — Jonathan Brannen..
716. morpheal — Re: mythology [followed by DADDY, construction, and silence]
717. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Vs. Spicer
718. R. Gancie — 'the study of the self has been objectified'
719. Erik Sweet — Re: mythology [followed by DADDY, construction, and silence]
720. Mark Weiss — Re: Spicer Review
721. MAYHEW — How to be great
722. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Re: Spicer Review
723. Kristen Gallagher — pound online?
724. Brian Clements — McHenry query
725. joel lewis — f.yi.
726. Marcella Durand — June readings at Poetry Project
727. Peter Balestrieri — Quo Vadis?
728. david bromige — re : susan wheeler's book (party)
729. toddbaron — Re: Love of (g-d)
730. Billy Little — Re: Byrd's reply 2 Alex and droffolino's quest
731. Billy Little — Re: How to be great

30 MAY 1998

732. Tom Orange — Quo Vadis?
733. Otis Rush — (no subject)
734. Alan Myouka Sondheim — of the third
735. sylvester pollet — (no subject)
736. Maria Damon — Re: Quo Vadis?
737. charles alexander — permission
738. Erik Sweet — Robert Duncan
739. david bromige — quo vadis alan sondheim
740. R. Gancie — enlightenment
741. Nada Gordon — Re: Quo Vadis?
742. charles alexander — Re: Quo Vadis?
743. david bromige — Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
744. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)

31 MAY 1998

745. Stephen Cope — Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
746. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Quo Vadis?
747. Tosh — Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
748. Alan Myouka Sondheim — situating
749. Simon DeDeo — Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis
750. Alan Myouka Sondheim — racism, etc.
751. Chris [Steve] Piuma — Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
752. Tosh — 12 tones for Anton's bones
753. Tosh — Webern
754. George Bowering — Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
755. Peter Ganick — Re: Webern
756. Alan Myouka Sondheim — last call
757. Peter Ganick — Re: Webern
758. rsillima — Fabulous article in SF Examiner
759. Maria Damon — Re: Fabulous article in SF Examiner
760. Nada Gordon — Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
761. louis stroffolino — Re: Quo Vadis?
762. Simon/Piombino — Feedback
763. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
764. morpheal — Re: mythology: wandering from techno war to Pakistan's new nukes
765. Mark Weiss — Re: Webern
766. R. Gancie — universal quantifier
767. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
768. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Fabulous article in SF Examiner
769. Laura E. Wright — Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones
770. Laura E. Wright — Re: situation uncomfortable
771. Erik Sweet — Re: last call
772. Erik Sweet — Re: mythology: wandering from techno war to Pakistan's new nukes
773. david bromige — George Bowering's encrypted poetry
774. morpheal — Re: mythology: wandering from techno war to Pakistan's new nukes
775. groberts — Alan's Feedback
776. Henry Gould — Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis
777. Schuchat Simon — nomuko and tabeko
778. Kathy Lou Schultz — dodie & kevin: my s/heroes
779. Susan Wheeler — SF Examiner
780. Rebecca Weldon Sithiwong — Quo uncomfortable Vadis?

1. Loss Pequen~o Glazier
Cayley & Glazier in Buffalo
Fri 1 May 1998

For those near the el-nino-induced tropics bordering Lake Erie: John Cayley & Loss Pequen~o Glazier will be reading at the Cornershop Gallery, 85 Lafayette St. in Buffalo on Weds. May 6th at 8 p.m.

↑ Index

2. J Kimball
The East Village Poetry Web, Volume One
Fri 1 May 1998

For your May Day (and thereafter) viewing and reading....

The East Village
Poetry
Web

....an anthology that plays expansively with notions of "east" and "village," not to mention "poetry and art."

In the art category, you will find:

Stills and a script extract from the new film "Let's Do Talk," screenplay by John Collick and Paul Davies;

Mariko Mori's photos from "Made in Japan";

ink-and-gouache images of "Cold Mountain" by Brice Marden;

and Michiko Ishii's sawdust-and-paste dolls reliving a boyhood "Fight" of the 1950s.

As for verse, Volume One of The East Village Poetry Web includes the following.

Harry Mathews [Three Women]; Xue Di [3 Poems]; David Trinidad [3 Poems]; Nada Gordon [2 Poems]; Jesse Glass [4 Poems]; Simon Schuchat [At Baoshan]; Andrea Brady [2 Poems]; Jack Kimball [The I-Thing]; Forrest Gander [4 Poems]; Toshi Ishihara [2 Poems]; Linda Reinfeld & Toshi Ishihara [The Game of 100 Poems]; Araki Yasusada [7 Poems]; Alan Myouka Sondheim [4 Poems]; Kent Johnson [Orientalist Haibun]; Scott Watson [3 Poems]; and Cid Corman [Another Handful].

You will find The East Village Poetry Web at these URLs.

In the US: <http://www.theeastvillage.org>.

In Japan: <http://interserver.miyazaki-med.ac.jp/~east/village.htm>.

Choose the site that works better for you. And enjoy!

↑ Index

3. F. W. Perrella

Web Del Sol - Pantheon Page

Fri 1 May 1998

You are invited to visit the Pantheon Page at Web Del Sol.

http://webdelsol.com/writ-tab.htm

Twenty-five writers are featured there, encompassing a variety of literary styles and viewpoints. You can sample their fiction and poetry, read biographical information on each author, and you can provide email feedback on each author's work. Your comments are much encouraged.

Web Del Sol is a many-layered website, seeking to highlight the best literary work available by featuring authors, literary works, and zines, either print or e-based. You are invited to visit, browse, learn, enjoy.

Anne Perrella

Web Del Sol

↑ Index

4. Michael Coffey

Re: Spicer, surrealism, born on date -Reply

Fri 1 May 1998

Poetry is the business of surrealists who cannot benefit from poetry.
Now
that I understand.

-- Fred M.

i've been thinking a lot about surrealism myself lately as i have been preparing a manuscript for Coffee House Press. I have decided to begin the book with a kind of surreal baedekker of a poem that nominally takes a traveler the length of New York State "in Robert Motherwell's Car." I liked the poem but didn't understand it (meaning I didn't know how to talk about it, not that anyone asked!), until i realized that it had a surreal structure rather than a surreal surface. It is made up of mostly realistic utterances, but a three-stanza structure that runs through the thirteen parts looks more rational than it is. In any event, not to explicate my own damm poem do i write this, but rather to offer two things about surrealism. One is a quoation by Ashbery, which actually found its way into my "In Robert Motherwell's Car", which goes like this (the "it" of the first line being surrealism; it is from an Ashbery essay:

*Like all revolutions, it substituted some new restrictions for old ones.... Real freedom would be to use this method when it could be of service and correct it.... Sexual liberty,

[Breton] proclaimed, meant every conceivable sexual act
except for homosexuality [Rene Crevel, Rene Crevel, Rene Crevel],* wrote Ashbery.

elsewhere, Ashbery mentions that Crevel committed suicide because of his fear of being outted, i believe...

the second is a paraphrase of Wallace Stevens, which has really troubled me: something to the effect that surrealism's major drawback is that it favors invention over discovery.

one might ask what it is that stevens "discovered" in his poems; to me, he invents a singulary strange, beautiful, intellectual space full of funny sounds and musical instruments and corpulent plenipotentiaries. But perhaps for Stevens, these places were discoveries, that he didn't feel that he made them up, but found them. This seems such an important question to me...

m coffey

↑ Index

5. Herb Levy

Re: fresh

Fri 1 May 1998

Joe Safdie writes:

> I found amusing the latest SPD flyer > that arrived at my house, with a blurb from the book editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, Patricia Holt (but that's another story) -- something to the effect of "SPD has books by poets who really don't care if you understand them or not!" I thought it was a slightly curious thing to advertise . . .

I know Joe & I often don't read things the same way, but my flyer reads "almost indifferent to whether you 'like' it or not". In my lexicon, at least, liking something is far different from understanding it. I think I'd probably shoot myself if I had to "understand" everything I "liked," but hey, maybe that's just me.

Anyway, for better or for worse, lots of (perhaps most) readers, viewers, listeners, etc. of art in its various forms DON'T get the same thing the artist puts into it, especially with "weirder" stuff. It doesn't mean they don't "understand" it.

The real problem isn't "understanding" but rather how to get people (both in the audience AND at the creative end of things) to realize that it may be okay to respond to something without worrying about being "right."

I'm just now getting around to looking through the hundreds of posts that accumulated in my poetics folder while working through tax season & for the following week or two that I was computerless. I'll just go back to deleting & shut up now.

Bests,

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

6. Herb Levy requisite self-promotion
Fri 1 May 1998

Two Web sites that I'm involved with that may be interest to some of you folks with time on your hands.

The annotated tour I did for Arts Wire of new music online has been significantly revamped, greatly edited, rethought, etc. with lots of additions:

<http://www.artswire.org/Artswire/www/awtour/herb/index.html>

And a relatively new online only "radio" station that offers six or seven hour-long programs each week of interesting music including the dull variety of new music that I select for them (in RealAudio):

<http://www.antennaradio.com/>

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

7. Henry G
Stevens & surrealism
Fri 1 May 1998

My guess is (wiser heads correct here) that Stevens was serious when in his poems & aphorisms he asserted that reality (with a capital R maybe) is inherently poetic, and that art and poetry are a kind of natural, organic-integral process involving an encounter and mimesis or response to that reality. This is what he means by "discovery" - the realist or experiential aspect of poetry. Art as a "natural" process too complex for the "inventions" of various facile or fashionable methods.

This seems related also to the obscurity/difficulty issue raised recently. "Lyricism, music, song" are indirect or metaphorical indicators of specifically poetic effects; that is, these words when assigned to poetry mean something different than when assigned to music. There is a particular radiance in poetry which results from a synthesis of meaning, rhythm, sound. Wit, feeling, meaning, structural development produce direct EFFECTS which "come across" to the reader or audience. Oftentimes it seems to me the "inventions" of "experiment" and obscurantism are uncritically accepted as progressive, avant-garde, "new", etc. without taking into account these specific synthetic values - what poetry traditionally is and does. I know many of you have heard this from me before... & I know there are equal dangers from the other extreme - producing texts and poems that are merely rhetorical & conventional based on the demand to "get it across"... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

8. Douglas Barbour
Re: poems for the millennium vol. 2
Fri 1 May 1998

Joe Amato's level-headed post on this seems to me, after I too have only had time to take a gander at the anthology, to make all the right points. but I have enjoyed all the talk about the anthology, & feel it signals actually how important both volumes are. i found it fascinating how 'new' & 'fresh' (to borrow from another thread) my poetry students found volume one -- so much writing from the end of the last century & the beginning of this one that they didnt even know existed. i think vol 2's range of material from other languages will perform the same way for many readers (certainly there are a lot of wriers in there I dont know, & am grateful the editors have provided introductions).

a lot of FISH in that ocean...

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]

~~~
~~~

10. Judy Roitman
Another KS reading
Fri 1 May 1998

Patrick Doud & John Moritz
7:30pm
Thurs. May 7
1116 Louisiana (Canterbury House)
Lawrence KS

Reception follows.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

11. Lisa Samuels
Re: Stevens, surrealism, 'discovery'
Fri 1 May 1998

---

in reply to michael coffey -- didn't stevens mean something like a distaste for what we'd call proceduralism? whether or not his remark contains insight about =surrealism=, it certainly indicates the rush of meeting language in its gifting domain (cf. some recent remarks here on the 'nature' of poetry, what it feels like to write it). i feel sure stevens enjoyed poetic trances, brief and sustained, that felt like discovery, however much we want to say that he was the co-shaping medium.

lisa samuels

>>you wrote:
the second is a paraphrase of Wallace Stevens, which has really troubled me: something to the effect that surrealism's major drawback is that it favors invention over discovery.

one might ask what it is that stevens "discovered" in his poems; to me, he invents a singulary strange, beautiful, intellectual space full of funny sounds and musical instruments and corpulent plenipotentiaries. But perhaps for

Stevens, these places were discoveries, that he didn't feel that he made them up, but found them. This seems such an important question to me...

m coffey

↑ Index

12. ScoutEW
Would like submissions...for a new magazine...
Fri 1 May 1998

I would like submissions for a new magazine I am doing .. "Tool a Magazine" will be out in July with its first issue and so far great poems by Jordan Davis, Katy Lederer and many more will be in the first issue. This is going to be a tri-monthly affair, dedicated to poetics and essays concerning poetry..if you would like to send something please do, If we decide to print something we will email you back and tell you.. Erik SWeet PO Box 3125 Albany NY, 12203 Scout [redacted] Gary Sullivan I know you want to send something!!!! thanks all.....

↑ Index

13. ScoutEW
Arizona out there...?
Fri 1 May 1998

Anyone on this poetics list who is currently living out there in Arizona!!! if you feel nice enough to backchannel me.. I have some questions about your great state...just drop a line ..or anyone who has the down low on the desert dream state.. Question of the day....I am working on Olson's Proposed poem "West" I am very interested in Cabeza de Vaca's trip on foot with Esteban across the southwest and his powers to heal..also on hopi myth of the first people who came from the caves...any info on this would increase my satisfaction and make an already crappy day wonderful. erik sweet

↑ Index

14. Billy Little
Re: Arizona out there...?
Fri 1 May 1998

Haniel Long's interlinear to cabeza de vaca is a neglected masterpiece

i don't remember, is that a pen name, cabeza de vaca--empty head?

↑ Index

15. Safdie Joseph
Re: Arizona out there...?
Fri 1 May 1998

On Cabeza . . . if you haven't seen Haniel Long's "interlinear" (speaking of "writing through"!) of imagined letters from Cabeza to the king of Spain, published by Frontier Press in the early 70s, that might be a place to start.

> ----------
> From: ScoutEW[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, May 01, 1998 9:38 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Arizona out there...?
>
> Anyone on this poetics list who is currently living out there in Arizona!!!
> if you feel nice enough to backchannel me.. I have some questions about your > great state...just drop a line ..or anyone who has the down low on the desert > dream state..
> Question of the day....I am working on Olson's Proposed poem "West"
> I am very interested in Cabeza de Vaca's trip on foot with Esteban across the > southwest and his powers to heal..also on hopi myth of the first people who > came from the caves...any info on this would increase my satisfaction and make > an already crappy day wonderful.
> erik sweet

↑ Index

16. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Arizona out there...?
Fri 1 May 1998

> Haniel Long's interlinear to cabeza de vaca is a neglected masterpiece
>
> i don't remember, is that a pen name, cabeza de vaca--empty head?

That sounds like a nice homophonic xlation, but cabeza de Vaca ------> "cow's head"

↑ Index

17. groberts
Stevens and surrealism
Fri 1 May 1998

My favorite "surrealist" moment in Stevens occurs in "Esthetique du Mal": don't have the poem handy now, but the passage goes something like, "the paratroopers fall, and as they fall they mow the lawn" etc..

I wonder if Stevens would have written the line if he had known of riding tractor mowers...hmm.

Gary R.

↑ Index

18. Marc Nasdor (by way of Charles Bernstein <[redacted]>)" <[redacted]>
A Tribute to Allen Ginsberg - Thursday 5/14/98
Fri 1 May 1998

PLANET NEWS: A TRIBUTE TO ALLEN GINSBERG

Thursday, May 14, 1998
7:00 p.m.
Cathedral of St. John the Divine
Amsterdam Avenue at 112th Street, Manhattan
Admission Free

Information: [redacted]
email: [redacted]
http://www.con2.com/~marc/ginsberg

FEATURING:

AMIRI BARAKA
PATTI SMITH
THE FUGS
PHILIP GLASS
NATALIE MERCHANT
ANNE WALDMAN
SONIA SANCHEZ
PEDRO PIETRI

DAVID DELLINGER
JAYNE CORTEZ
ED SANDERS
DANNY SCHECHTER
STEPHAN SMITH
BOB ROSENTHAL
ANDY CLAUSEN
ATEVEN TAYLOR
DAVID GREENBERG
+ SPECIAL GUESTS

Allen Ginsberg's groundbreaking and visionary work provided inspiration to poets and political activists throughout the world for five decades. To honor Allen's spirit and to celebrate his life, his poetry and his social commitment, this tribute will feature a three-hour program of poets, musicians and activist speakers who wither worked closely with Allen or were influenced by him.

Allen Ginsberg was renowned for his ability to inspire people to work for a better world. We hope that this event will advance Allen's progressive ideals as we enter a new millenium. Besides performing their own original materials, some of the participants will be performing Allen ginsberg's poems and songs, including a few previously unpublished pieces. The event will also include informational tables by groups promoting humanitarian causes which Allen endorsed.

The tribute Organizing Committee is being chaired by the poet Ed Sanders, and coordinated bt Bob Rosenthal, Ginsberg's longtime assistant and current Trustee. For further information and event updates, please call [redacted], or email the organizing committee at [redacted]

Hope to see you there. Come early, as the event may be crowded. Doors open at 6:00 p.m.

↑ Index

19. Charles Bernstein
Welcome Message
Fri 1 May 1998

Rev. 2-1-98

(This message is sent out to all new and renewing subscribers and it is sent out to the list at the beginning of every month)

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, Faculty of Art & Letters, of the State University of New York, Buffalo

Postal Address: 438 Clemens Hall, SUNY, Buffalo, NY 14260

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Cautions
4. Digest Option
5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail
6. Who's Subscribed
7. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
8. Poetics Archives at EPC
9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein
([redacted]), Loss PequeñoGlazier
([redacted]), and Joel Kuszai ([redacted]).

Above the world-weary horizons

New obstacles for exchange arise

Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

The Poetics List was founded in late 1993 with the epigraph above.

There are presently almost 600 subscribers.

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list relatively small and the volume manageable.

individual posts of participants are sent directly to all subscribers, we continue to work to promote the editorial function of this project. The definition of that project, while provisional, and while open to continual redefinition by list participants, is nonetheless aversive to a generalized discussion of poetry. Rather, our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible. <color><param>ffff,0000,0000</param>We also encourage subscribers to post information on publications and reading series that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear (see section 9 below). (THIS MEANS YOU).

</color>

Please keep in mind that all posts go out immediately to all subscribers, and become part of an on-line archive. <italic>Posting to Poetics is a form of publication, not personal communication</italic>. Participants are asked to exercise caution before posting messages! While spontaneity of response may seem the very heart of the list at its best, it also has the darker side of circulating ideas that have not been well considered (or considered by another reader -- editor or friend). Given the nature of the medium, subscribers do well to maintain some skepticism when reading the list and, where possible, to try to avoid taking what may be something close to a spontaneous comment made in the heat of exchange as if it were a revised or edited essay ("Let the Reader Beware!").

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein. Joel Kuszai is list manager. For subscription information contact us at [redacted].

---

2. Subscriptions

Subscriptions to Poetics are free of charge. But we ask that you subscribe with your real name and we reserve the right to request additional information, including address and phone number. All subscription information you supply will remain confidential.

message, with no subject line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or} (replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your

name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity. Please allow several days for your new or re-subscription to take effect.

*

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at shareware sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you may be able to substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with Subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

In general, if a Poetics message is bounced from your account, your subscription to Poetics will be temporarily suspended. If this happens, simply resubscribe to the list in the normal manner, once your account problem has been resolved.

All questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to the list's administrative address: [redacted]. Please note that it may take up to ten days, or more, for us to reply to messages.

---

3. Cautions

Please do not post to the list personal or backchannel correspondence, or other unpublished material, without the express permission of the author. Copyright for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use".

The Poetics List has a 50 message daily limit. If more than 50 messages are received, the listserver will automatically hold those additional messages until the list is manually unlocked, usually the following day. While it is difficult to prescribe a set limit on the number of daily, weekly, or monthly posts for any subscriber, please keep this limit in mind. If you plan to respond to multiple threads, it is generally preferable to consolidate your reply into one message. While relevant excerpts from a post to which you are responding may usefully be appended to your reply, please do not include in your new post the whole text of a long previously posted message.

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot decode attached or specially formatted files.

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. (See section 7.)

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address. To get this information, see section 6.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment to the individual backchannel, not to the whole list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Listserve program gives you he option to receive all the posted Poetics message each day as a single message. If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to

[redacted]

set poetics digest

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

set poetics mail

---

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message to "[redacted]"

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics archive. (See 8 below.)

---

6. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to e-mail message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

  review poetics

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

 or try:

 review POETICS by name

 review POETICS by country

which will give you the list alphabetically by name or a flawed list by country (since all ".com" and ".net"s are counted as US)

Please do not send a message to the list asking for the address of a specific subscriber.

---

7. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequeño Glazier.

---

8. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If yourword processor ill save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

20. Mark Wallace
what's difficult
Fri 1 May 1998

Hey Mark Presjnar:

Thanks for your comments about the dialogue piece Jeff Hansen, Stephen-Paul Martin, and I wrote for Central Park magazine on the subject of "difficulty" in avant garde poetry, and for your comments about my other work.

I do have to say, though, that when you suggest that I "expand on" Stephen-Paul Martin's point about the inherent "difficulty" of much contemporary writing, it seems odd that you would say that about that piece, because the point that you say in your post that I am making is precisely the OPPOSITE of the point I was making there. Which is curious, I suppose, given the subject of "difficulty" that is as stake here.

In that essay, I disagree with Stephen-Paul Martin's assertion that "difficulty" is one of the main goals of the texts we are writing about, and writing--I say that the idea that such work is "difficult" is one of the pieces of cultural baggage that writers of avant garde work have absorbed all too often--one of our main "pretensions," I believe may be the word I use. Sorry to quote myself here, but I believe I say also that, "There is nothing inherently difficult about such works; there is just something unfamiliar." I go on to say that I believe that most people can learn to understand "avant garde" poetry with about several hours (say, 3) of training, which is much less training, of course, than they have received in how to read newspapers and novels.

Given all this, I'm not sure how you could have read me to be saying that what I an interested in in avant garde work is its inherent difficulty, and so would be curious to know why you think that's what I was saying.

But perhaps I am misunderstanding you in what seems to me your misunderstanding of me.

It's amazing that what's so simple can often be so difficult.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

21. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: Arizona out there...?

Fri 1 May 1998

Billy Little wrote:
>
> Haniel Long's interlinear to cabeza de vaca is a neglected masterpiece
>
> i don't remember, is that a pen name, cabeza de vaca--empty head?

Alvar Nuñez Cabeza de Vaca [Cow-head!]; his real name, as far as I know. Harvey Brown reissued Long's book in a beautiful Frontier Press edition in 1969. A few years ago PBS ran a film about CdeV's journey--a bit heavyhandedly 'epic,' but a nice surprise.

↑ Index

22. Judy Roitman

Re: what's difficult

Fri 1 May 1998

> Sorry to quote myself here, but I believe I > say also that, "There is nothing inherently difficult about such works;
> there is just something unfamiliar." I go on to say that I believe that > most people can learn to understand "avant garde" poetry with about > several hours (say, 3) of training, which is much less training, of > course, than they have received in how to read newspapers and novels.
> Mark Wallace

Not training. Un-training.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------

http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

23. Safdie Joseph
Re: The Meaning of Meaning
Fri 1 May 1998

Herb is right on the wording of the SPD flyer. But I must confess I'm still puzzled about the choice of that quote to advertise a bookstore! If the purpose of said quote was to advertise their broad selection of poetry, is it really effective to say "52% of the poetry in our store was written by poets who are almost indifferent to whether you like it or not"? I mean, I'm not IN advertising anymore, thankfully, but surely there's other selling points for this fine institution!

And furthermore (and I'm GLAD, by the way, that Herb and others read things differently than me, it's what makes the existence of this list such an odd comfort at times), how is saying, as Herb does here

> I think I'd probably shoot myself if I had to "understand" everything I > "liked,"
>

any different than the "old saw" (Judy Roitman) of "I may not know anything about art, but I know what I like"? As was pointed out to me by my Humanities 101 teacher some 25 years ago, so does a cow.

Perhaps it's difficult to talk about these matters without raising the spectre of the intentional fallacy. Herb goes on to say:

> Anyway, for better or for worse, lots of (perhaps most) readers, viewers, > listeners, etc. of art in its various forms DON'T get the same thing the > artist puts into it, especially with "weirder" stuff. It doesn't mean > they > don't "understand" it.
>

At no time in my conscious adult life have I EVER advanced the view that a perceiver of art necessarily takes away -- nor should take away -- what the artist put into it! My question is a simpler one: to "like" something, doesn't one in fact have to have SOME notion (however erroneous) of what it MEANS? Of what it means to THAT PERSON?

I mean (!), I just didn't understand Judy earlier in the week (nor Mark Prejsnar's subsequent cheers) when she talked about an audience member coming up to a poet and saying something to the effect of "I don't know what you meant, but I sure did like it!" (because it had that certain "je ne sais pas")?

Perhaps my misquotation of the flyer got us off on the wrong tangent; I wasn't accusing anyone of cultivating obscurity for obscurity's sake. And I know (before Mark tarnishes me again with being "commonsensepo") that there are other kinds of meaning besides the purely linguistic. One wouldn't, for example, talk about MUSIC this way. But even with the music I like, there's an understanding (again, perhaps an erroneous one) -- a sensitivity -- to what I feel the musician and/or composer is doing. I humbly submit that without some sort of this sensitivity on the audience's part, art can't exist. Art must be perceived. Perception demands understanding. Like it or not.

(Welcome back, Herb!)

On a totally unrelated matter -- can someone please tell me who performed the pop song with the lyrics

"Only kind of love is stone . . . blind . . . love.
With your blind love . . . stone blind love"

I'd be forever indebted for a backchannel with this information.

↑ Index

24. George Bowering

Re: cabeza

Fri 1 May 1998

> i don't remember, is that a pen name, cabeza de vaca--empty head?

Nope, Billy. Vaca means cow. As in vaquero: cowboy, or as you USAmericans say, "buckaroo."

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

25. David Baratier
A contrapuntal universe of baseball
Fri 1 May 1998

Spicer's collected 1945-46 appears as an edition of one selected by one given to one then published by eight people in an edition of many after the author left this mortal coil. It's the eight men out deal all over again. Compare the anadiplosis in baseball. So it's entirely separate of aesthetics, rather formed from contextuality in a quirk.

Hey kids rock and roll
Dave Baratier

PS: comfort and fun with lashings. depending upon the thickness of the wood and the size of the project they can be made with binder twine, cord, or rope.

RE: I am much interested in this "moral problems like baseball" you say Spicer's oyez selected brought on. Is this the problem of choosing of aesthetics of excluding? Are they problem of reading other people's work, writing your own work, figuring out what work works, what?

↑ Index

26. MAYHEW
a very difficult avant-garde poem
Sat 2 May 1998

This is from my "homage to creeley" series:

VII

I have wrecked the goddamn big car you were planning to write yr brilliant poem about forgive me

the darkness surrounds us and
I did not know your name

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

27. Herb Levy
Re: The Meaning of Meaning
Sat 2 May 1998

Joe Safdie writes:

> how is saying, as Herb does here
>
> I think I'd probably shoot myself if I had to "understand" everything I "liked,"
>
> any different than the "old saw" (Judy Roitman) of "I may not know anything about art, but I know what I like"? As was pointed out to me by my Humanities 101 teacher some 25 years ago, so does a cow.

Quite different, Joe. But then I think a response like "that's great, what the fuck is it?" is an excellent response to a work of art, especially "experimental" work, work outside what is considered the common practice. That's why I say again & again on this list, as I did in what I wrote earlier

> The real problem isn't "understanding" but rather how to get people (both in the audience AND at the creative end of things) to realize that it may be okay to respond to something without worrying about being "right."

Understanding is overrated and more important in an academic setting than in the experience of art as such. If there's not going to be a test on iconography, a general sense of awe is a perfectly acceptable response to, say, the Ghent altar piece. What stands in the way of people "appreciating" "experimental" art works is not that the work is so "weird" it's that teachers etc. in school after school have drummed into them not only that that they have to understand something, but that these are the ways in which you can understand it. The result is that people don't knw how to deal with their responses to work that doesn't work in the ways they've been taught to recognize.

Unless you're an artist looking for technical ideas, a critic, or a student studying for a test, understanding is, literally, the last thing you need to do with a work of art. Before you get to that point, emotional and/or visceral responses are not only useful, they're necessary. & that's very different from anything that might be called "understanding.'

What makes something poetry (or more generally, art) are exactly those things that don't make immediate sense, the things that can't be summarized or translated. Texts that lack this, that are when heard read aloud, indistinguishable from simple direct prose (like those perfect epiphany poems and other expository narratives broken up into "poetic" lines that come out of workshops), seem to me to be little more than journalism. The proper response to this kind of writing is "so that's what happened" or "hey, thanks for explaining that to me." If that's what you're looking for from art, you can get plenty everyday for fifty cents at any news stand.

> One
> wouldn't, for example, talk about MUSIC this way. But even with the music I like, there's an understanding (again, perhaps an erroneous one) -- a sensitivity -- to what I feel the musician and/or composer is doing. I humbly submit that without some sort of this sensitivity on the audience's part, art can't exist. Art must be perceived. Perception demands understanding. Like it or not.

We obviously agree that "Art must be perceived." But to say > Perception demands understanding. Like it or not.

while very dramatic & all, is absurd. (What model of how the brain works did you learn?)

If anything you have it exactly backwards. One can't understand something without having perceived things about it, but you can certainly perceive things you don't understand.

What was that sound?

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

28. s. kaipa
I n t e r l o p e: a journal of asian american poetics and issues
Sat 2 May 1998

A N N O U N C I N G T H E P R E M I E R I S S U E O F:

I n t e r l o p e a journal of asian american poetics and issues

Featuring work by : TINA CELONA
WARREN LIU HOA NGUYEN
AMAR RAVVA

For the first issue--
Please send $3.50 (US Dollars only please) to: I n t e r l o p e Summi Kaipa, ed.
824 E. College St.
Iowa City, IA 52240

[redacted]

If you would like to subscribe--send $10.00 for 3 issues or $12.00 for 4 issues.

I n t e r l o p e is a journal of poetics which seeks to publish innovative Asian American poetry--work which challenges the tradition of American and/or Asian American poetry.

Unsolicited manuscripts of poetry or essays are welcome. Please send between 6-10 pages of work via regular mail or email to above address.

↑ Index

29. Aviva99999
East Village Poetry Site
Sat 2 May 1998

Someone kindly posted a URL for an East Village poetry zine or site or something and before I could do more than be enticed by the table of contents, my system did something illegal. Of course, I had to shut down, and somehow lost both the post and the URL. Does anyone still have it? Thanks, Aviva

↑ Index

30. Garrett Kalleberg
Third Friend
Sat 2 May 1998

May 2, 1998

A day late and a dollar short but still The Transcendental Friend.

Divine Love, impersonal Force, third Eye--"Grace" is this month's entry in the Critical Dictionary, by Jonathan Skinner.

This month's Bestiary, edited by Eleni Sikelianos, features work by Alice Notley, J. Skinner, and Marcella Durand.

The Dialectic returns from vacation with a snapshot of ontological equivocation--perceived--and captured--in the moment of its realization by Duncan Dobbelmann.

Built on Orhan Pamuk's The Black Book and Leonard Schwartz's earlier contribution, this month's Mote layer, "Devoured, Cleansed", is by Heather Ramsdell.

This issue's Project --"Forms and Hand-Carved Panels"--is by an anonymous artisan.

The first and second issues of the Friend are available from the Files page.

For general and contact information turn to the Contact page. And if you haven't done so already, please take a moment to Subscribe to the Friend (it's free).

Garrett Kalleberg
mailto:[redacted]

The Transcendental Friend can be found at:
http://www.morningred.com/friend

↑ Index

31. David Baratier
Mean(ing)
Sat 2 May 1998

The aesthetic intramural coherence among the words, phonemes, and morphemes of a literary work in accordance with the referent object (emotion etcetera) implied conferrent upon internal consistency of their closed system(page or chosen media) of interrelations. There's plenty more like baseball contributing to a lack of meaning, anomie. But then should we allow discussions of sociologists on the listserv?

Be well

David Baratier

E-mail with address for free Langpo decoder ring. Great for those friends and & that family "who don't understand you" (sorry, first 10 responses only)

↑ Index

32. Jerome Rothenberg
Re: poems for the millennium vol. 2
Sat 2 May 1998

I'm sitting here listening to Herb Levy's remarkable internet radio site (what a gift what a gift) and thinking at the same time to put down a few words in thanks and response to Joe Amato's message of the other day. Like Pierre I've held back from responding to the various comments - except for irritation with the original one from Ron - and will likely never get around to doing it fully, but I'm grateful over all and am more in agreement than not with what's been said.

The tough thing with this one is that we knew from the start that as an anthology (and I mean a largely _contemporary_ anthology) it had to be a flawed book, and we knew too that there was no way that it wouldn't be read as an anthology in that sense. For me, though - and I'm sure this holds for Pierre as well - it was conceived, like other gatherings of mine or his, as something else: an assemblage as a pulling together of poems & people & ideas about poetry & much else in the words of others and in our own. That imago - that representation of where we've been and what we've lived thru - is something in fact that I would stand by - like any poem. (It's also why we've allowed ourselves to end the book - as epic poem replete with histories & voices - with two poems of our own.) I've writen about all of that that some number of times - going back to a piece on anthologies in L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E - and there's also an available talk from the Orono conference on 1950s poetry in which I lay out many of the issues around anthologies in general and this assemblage in particular. You can check it out through the EPC (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/rothenberg/50s.html), where it's clear, I think, that I'm offering a critique that seems obvious to me and not much different from what Joe and others have been saying.

About some of the more specific questions that Joe raises:

The omission of "more mainstream poets" was a deliberate aspect of _this_ work, which an "anthology" as such might even so have included - since our intention, as Pierre and I have stated elsewhere, was to construct a work whose imagined center was what was elsewhere treated (if at all) as a marginalized periphery. Other omissions, when viewed as an anthology, were of course more painful to us, though there was an attempt for the mapping's sake to place some of these in commentaries or to bring them forward as translators, say, where that was possible. (Spicer, since his name has come up so often, would be one such example.) In the matter of inclusions - the other side of this coin - I would call specific attention to the poets and artists around Fluxus, some of whom are as vital to my sense of the times in question as any other configuration in the book. Thus we've given a promiment space to Mac Low and Cage but equally to Emmett Williams, who I gather from further correspondence with Ron would be absent from his own imago mundi (though I ascribe no "deeply cynical" motives or "bad faith" to such an absence). We have also foregrounded a particular work by Robert Filliou and regret not having been able to do as well by Dick Higgins or George Brecht, while still managing in this instance to bring them in.

Joe notes also that volume two is more configured around "clusters" than around "movements" or "schools", which it is and is therefore very much an aspect of our sense of the times in question. Anyway we take the matter up in our iintroduction, and we indicate that the clusters chosen are representative but in no sense inclusive. The two American ones - out of a total of eight such configurations inserted in the two galleries that constitute the book's principal divisions - are the Beats (early) and the Language Poets (later), with other U.S. groupings represented in lots of different ways. The featured foregrounded ones outside the U.S. are the poets of the Vienna Group, the Arabic Tammuzi poets, the Cobra poets and artists (Holland, Belgium, Denmark), concrete poetry as a broader international configuration, the Japanese "postwar poets", the Italian Novissimi and others, and the Chinese Misty Poets. And in addition there are two made-up clusters - of oral (not specifically pop) poetry and of machine & computer poetry. All of this makes a kind of picture but couldn't possibly pretend to completeness either outside or inside the categories in question. (And again, I go into this in more detail in the Orono piece, and Pierre and I discuss it briefly in the Introduction.)

On the "duplication" question - i.e. the carry-over of some poets from volume one to volume two - Joe recognizes this as obviously "deliberate," but wants to know "the terms of this deliberation." In brief there's a recognition that the dividing line between the two volumes and times is, like all such lines, very dubious, and that the work of any number of older poets continued to break new ground through the 1940s and beyond. So we added one particular section of "continuities" (somewhat like the "forerunners" in volume one) that brought in late works by most of those on Joe's list (Paterson, the late Pound Cantos, Breton's Ode to Fourier, Ekelof's Mölna Elegy, Zukofsky's "A," Neruda's Macchu Picchu, & so on) as a kickoff to what would follow. In addition we did an opening Prelude (subtitled, after Duncan, "In the Dark") that set up a number of "postwar" poems that gave a sense of political and social and psychic underpinnings for the whole assemblage - including some late Akhmatova and a segment of Artaud's "To Have Done with the Judgment of God." The others Joe mentions as carry-overs turned up in the "Book of Origins" section of volume one, which was a non-chronological distillation of the kinds of things I had tried to map in other anthologies, with Duncan, Césaire, Schwerner, Ortiz, Olson, and others being shown as translators or otherwise connected to the drive to reinterpret the sources and range of poetries that the century has opened up. (Spicer as translator [in a very special sense] of Lorca also appears in volume one.) In a followup to this observation, Joe notes that the duplications consist of 22 men and 4 women, which is accurate, but shouldn't obscure the fact that as the book moves on, the gender balance shifts radically until by the end (and without really pushing it) six of the last eight entries (Scalapino, Vicuña, Bracho, Iskrenko, O'Sullivan, and Cha) are women. And the poetics of gender is taken throughout as one of the significant and necessary breakthroughs of our time.

About Auden, whose name surfaces a couple of times in these discussions, I don't know if I have much to say. He was in fact going to be included in the third gallery of volume one - with commentary & all - but we were thwarted (as with Eliot and David Jones) by the economics of permissions and let it go at that. I was also inclined - though I don't know if I speak equally for Pierre here - toward Dylan Thomas and even Robert Lowell. That was both volume one and volume two stuff, I suppose, and maybe it should also be pointed out, regarding volume 2, that our first draft of the manuscript counted up to something like 1200 pages, but to start to talk about cutting-floor strategies strikes me as both defensive on our part and offensive to those so cut. (And this is the reason why I, like all of you, hate anthologies.)

I want to note also that the book was completed more than two years ago - publication having been held up by the pace of permissions and the difficulties of production and design. In the interval since - and increasingly over the last year - we've become aware of the incredible activity in visual and hypertext domains spurred by the new technologies. The section on machine and cyber poetry that Joe mentions approvingly would correspondingly be much fuller if we were going at it now. Even so, I think that getting whatever we got into the present mapping was/is a matter of some importance and one that will lead to other assessments and reassessments. That's all that such a small section could do anyway - much like that on oral poetry: a vast territory that I thought had to be in the book, even if limited to a handful of examples of the kinds of language work (not just "song writing" either as Ron describes it) by contemporaries of ours not elsewhere considered as poetic equals. (I.e., if Hugo Ball's "Karawane" is a poem - and it is - so is Ella Fitzgerald's more complex variations on "Lady Be Good," which we didn't manage to transcribe, or Dizzy"s "Sabla y Blu," which we did. So the point of that inclusion is directed at our own assessments of sound poetry, say, when they decline to recognize related "masterworks" outside of literature itself.)

Finally: a couple of things that have appeared or will be appearing on the internet: Jack Foley's review of volume two at http://www.hooked.net/~jalsop/jfucmod.html, and the introduction and table of contents for volume two through the EPC (coming up). It's our hope that the presence there of many many issues and searchings will be apparent as a basis for what we've done rather than the selection of poets with which, if that was all there was to it, we couldn't possibly succeed.

ps. Exact Change has just brought out a photo reprint of Revolution of the Word (with a changed cover by Marcel Duchamp), the anthology of U.S. poetry between the two world wars that I did back in the early 1970s. It certainly supplements (and in a few instances directly prefigures) the present one -- though more clearly (to my mind) an anthology rather than an assemblage or some such creature. Some of the really striking figures here (A.L. Gillespie, Jolas, Arensberg, von Freytag Loringhoven, Harry Crosby, Mina Loy) are rarely presented elsewhere -- even more the case when the book was originally published.

Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:
>
> am embroiled in my own institutional nonsense here, but having just > yesterday rec'd vol. two of the jerry/pierre anthology, i wanted to take > this opportunity, and the unforgiveable speed of this medium, to toss in a > few all-too-hasty remarks by way of reopening this thread:
>
> (1) first and foremost: if you simply pick up the book and flip through > its contents, it should be clear that this is a vast and in some ways > unprecedented effort... my first thought was---no doubt like some of > you---that so & so had been excluded, and that so & so had been included... > and my list of so & so's on both sides of the exclusion/inclusion coin > would have included many more mainstream poets, simply b/c i believe it > important to try to bring disparate communities of poets together, if only > to squabble (i worry a bit that some may not come to this volume b/c of > obvious exclusions)... but there can be no denying that the range of volume > two is considerable... and that the editors are to be congratulated once > again...
>
> (2) that said, i note in flipping through that the book does not seem to > offer as clearcut a configuration of 'schools' and 'movements' as did > volume one... is this simply an impression?---or is volume two configured > more around clusters?... for what it's worth: i had my dozen or so (again, > engineering/science major, creative writing) students paw through the > volume a bit, and their first observation was that it didn't designate > movements (e.g., modernism, surrealism, etc.) as did the first volume... > for what it's worth, i say... now, i anticipated that this volume would be,
> by its very nature, more controversial, in trying to approach the > impossible present with an eye or two toward the impossible future...
>
> (3) i haven't had a chance to really spend any time with editorial > apparatus---i've only skimmed through... but i want to offer here a quick > list that i formulated---not a list of exclusions (or omissions), but of > inclusions... in fact, of duplications (of a sort)---those authors whose > work is reproduced both in volume one and in volume two (not the same work,
> of course---and apologies for any bean-counting errors):
>
> akhmatova
> artaud
> breton
> cesaire

> duchamp > duncan
> ekelof
> eshleman
> h.d.
> jabes > joyce
> mac low
> macdiarmid
> michaux
> neruda
> olson
> oppen
> ortiz
> paz > pound > sabina
> schwerner
> g. stein
> stevens
> williams
> zukofsky
>
> (22 men, 4 women)
>
> what i'd want to know from jerry/pierre, if it isn't already noted in the > editorial apparatus, is whether and to what extent this duplication was > itself a matter of extended deliberation... well---to be more precise, b/c > i'm sure it was---what were the terms of this deliberation?...
>
> (4) it's true that auden, spicer, and many others have been excluded from > volume two... at the same time, i note that spicer and auden and many > others DO appear in the commentary sections... and this is in fact > significant, not only from a teaching perspective, but in terms of > developing historial context... i wonder whether jerry/pierre intend > someday to produce an index for the volumes that might include all of those > poets mentioned in the commentary sections?... i think this would be > extremely useful...
>
> (5) given my own specific interests, it was nice to see a section on > "cyberpoetry," to see someone like jim rosenberg finally get his due, and > to see folks like don byrd and michael joyce credited for their > contributions to late 20th century thought... i know of many, many talented > folks who might also have been included here, but again i regard the drift > of the anthology as not so much to territorialize as to provide a sense of > openings... and a sense is just that---a sense, even with u of california > backing... in other words, the editors as i see it are using a powerful > academic press in order to advance an unorthodox and polemical > understanding of poetic possibilities... and like, why the hell not?... i > like it, for example, that readers are referred in volume one to seek > eliot's _the waste land_ elsewhere...

>
> (6) i've had a chance to read over jonathan mayhew's brief review of the > anthology, and i do think jonathan's is an even-handed critique, given the > brevity of his review---and we all know that no book is beyond critique... > i encourage those of you who are interested to have a look at what jonathan > is saying... at http://www.ellavon.com/
>
> anyway, again, all too hasty and for what it's worth... and i need to say > here, again, that i think jerry and pierre are to be congratulated for > another superb volume...
>
> all best,
>
> joe

↑ Index

33. Hugh Nicoll
Re: East Village Poetry Site
Sat 2 May 1998

You will find The East Village Poetry Web at these URLs.

In the US: <http://www.theeastvillage.org>.

In Japan: <http://interserver.miyazaki-med.ac.jp/~east/village.htm>.

h.

↑ Index

34. J. Fuhrman
Re: : challenge vs. difficulty (Tate)
Sat 2 May 1998

If people have moved on from thinking about the Tate piece, I'm sorry but...
What interested me about Kirch's review was the distinction I think he is making between "difficulty"(usually. of surface) and "challenge"(usually of content.) This distinction seems to go against what I imagine most of us think of as "form" in poetry (FORM is CONTENT-- as olsen, creely et al. said.) Still, I found Kirch's argument convincing. Are there contemporary poets who it makes sense to talk about in this way? What would this way of viewing allow us to see? What would it force us to miss? As a side note: Has anyone else seen Tate read after years of reading him? What was interesting about the experience for me was how different the poems were performed? When I read them at home the line between what is funny and what is tragic is thin? Yet when he reads, it seems clear that some lines are "funny/absurd" and others are "serious/sentimental." The reading was a disappointment to me because... I don't know.. the poems seemed less complex, somehow less interesting. I felt I had been somehow misreading them all along.

On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, louis stroffolino wrote:

> In response to TRACE---I guess I read Kirsch differently
> (I disagree with his review but for different reasons than trace).
> I think he's using the word "challenge" positively and lamenting
> what he sees as a lack of that "challenge" in Tate. Kirsch, as I > see it, seems to lament the "19th century role" of poet as consoler
> and comforter which he detects "beneath" the seemingly modern
> disjunctive aleatory qualities of the poetry he's discussing.....
> Now, whether he's ACCURATE about that is one thing
> (in the first place, I don't quite know what he means about the > 19th century poet of comfort and consolation: Baudelaire?
> Dostoyevski [i know, not a poet] speaks of his writing as
> "corrective punishment", I see that in much of Dickinson,
> Shelley, etc. too)
> Kirsch, of course, poses a reductive dichotomy
> between "challenge" and "comfort" (but, then, critics and
> scholars on both sides of the fence have been rewarded for > such rhetorical maneuvers for quite some time now....)
>
> I also wonder about the phrase "retreat from the rigors of > the world". I think Kirsch finds such a stance terrible,
> and Trace (who thinks Kirsch craves that kind of poetry)
> also finds it terrible, or ethically unsound.
> But sometimes the world does not come in the form of RIGORS
> (rigors unmixed), and then such a "retreat" is not really
> a retreat....
> c
> On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, trace s. ruggles wrote:
>
> And, Kirsch's conclusion is:
>
> .. And this, finally, is Tate's message to us: the little

> .. pleasures of ''pure ordinariness'' make all the pain
> .. worthwhile. The poems in ''Shroud of the Gnome'' are often
> .. difficult; but with a message like that, they cannot be a
> .. challenge.

Is Kirsch apologizing for Tate's poetry? Ah, if only the _message_ is good, you can forgive the poet for being _difficult_!

And, get this:

> .. But while poets today may still use modernist techniques --
> .. free association, surrealism, complex allusion -- the
> .. modernist temper is gone; poetry has to a large degree
> .. resumed its 19th-century role as a comfort and consolation,
> .. a retreat from the rigors of the world.

So, the 20th century was but a little diversion in the grand stream of POETRY which gave the POETS a few neat little tricks to use, but THANK GOD!
we're back to comfort and consolation! So, please quit being so diffcult, y'all, and give me some nice little lines I can fall asleep to...

--trace--

At 8:39 AM -0700 4/30/98, you wrote:
Now Mayhew has caused Mayhem in the mind
i keep by a bar serving coors
and is reminding me of that terrible kool and the gong sang (DIGRESSION: i listen to rap when cars pass, and i heard this line
"LIKE THE CAT WHO KILLED VERSACE" yesterday, can anybody
NAME THAT TUNE)
anyway, when i first read this quote i thought it was
"Tate is trying to make words FLESH again"
ah, the materiality of the word meets the
school of disembodied poets

Well, one could take Mayhew's problem further---
if the avoidance of cliche is now a cliche
then everything is permitted (which is a cliche too)....

But when we speak of the issue of "making language fresh"
(or however you want to express a similar impulse),
i guess there's a question involved about WHO you want to do that for? And I wonder if there's a way to avoid the possibility that someone will find "too obscure"
and "meaningless" what another person finds "too cliche"----
no matter WHAT kind of poem you write.....
chris
On Thu, 30 Apr 1998, MAYHEW wrote:

> From a review of James Tate in the "New York Times Book Review," by one Adam Kirsch:
>
> "Like the even more nonsensical
> Language poets, Tate is trying to make words fresh again, to restore the glow that is > rubbed away by advertisements and professional jargon and simple day-to-day > repetition. Thus the reader discovers these deadpan absurdities: ''Please don't taunt the > scrivener. . . . / No muffins permitted in the aviary.'' Or: ''my studies, Retro- /
> gression and the Requiem Shark, to name but one area.''"
>
> The problem is that this idea of "making words fresh again" is itself a tired commonplace. I also find the phrase "the even more non-sensical langauge poets" hilarious. Apart from this, the review does have some insight.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
> Department of Spanish and Portuguese
> University of Kansas
> [redacted]

↑ Index

35. michael corbin

Re: Arizona in here

Sat 2 May 1998

Daniel Zimmerman wrote:
>

> Alvar Nuñez Cabeza de Vaca [Cow-head!]; his real name, as far as I know. Harvey Brown reissued Long's book in a beautiful Frontier Press edition in 1969. A few years ago PBS ran a film about CdeV's journey--a bit heavyhandedly 'epic,' but a nice surprise.

Perhaps the _Relacion_ of de Vaca and, its companion volume the _Devastation of the Indies_ of Bartolome da las Casas are fresh poems for our late imperial romances. After walking through Northern-hemispheric deserts and renouncing the low-intensity conflict blood rituals there can be late twentieth century hope.

But maybe not. I've always wondered about the Karankawas. Is it possible to remember them now?

Recommend John Sayles latest cinematic effort _Men with Guns_. An american release in spanish (dialectos nativos, mestizo too) with english subtitles. A somewhat didactic allegory (no more so than _Matewan_ or any of Sayles work), somewhat based on Francisco Goldman's _Long Night of White Chickens_ not unrelated to the passions of de Vaca and de las Casas, and you and me kimo sabe. The central character struggles with, lets call it, de vaca-ism, and its possiblities now.

In other related news:

Requiescat in pace Bishop Juan Gerardi Conedera, you who were beaten to death last week. And who remembers Guatemala? Is it even possible now? You survived the 80s, a 36 year civil war, Reagan, only to be killed now speaking of human rights. Nunca mas mi padre. You spoke of the devastation of los indios, Nunca mas.

And in still other related poetry news (or as elegist Rodnee Keng said during the LA poetry riots, "Can't we all just get one big anthology")

NUEVAS VIOLACIONES EN CHIAPAS

El Centro de Derechos Humanos "Fray Bartolomé de Las Casas" denuncia ante la opinión pública nuevas violaciones a los derechos humanos en el Estado de Chiapas de las que ha tenido conocimiento:

1.Dos auxiliares de este Centro de Derechos Humanos, quienes prestan su servicio social, fueron el pasado sábado 11 de abril asaltadas en el centro ceremonial maya de Palenque. Después de este hecho han sido hostigadas y seguidas en la Ciudad de San Cristóbal de Las Casas y, finalmente, sujetos desconocidos entraron en la habitación de su hotel mientras estaban ausentes sustrayéndoles documentos personales. Los hechos constan en la averiguación previa 204/18/98.

2.De acuerdo a la información de la Comunidad "10 de abril", el pasado 14 de abril de 1998, unos 800 elementos las policías de Seguridad Pública y Judicial Federal, Ejército Nacional Mexicano y agentes del Instituto Nacional de Migración, realizaron un operativo en donde detuvieron al joven José Alfredo López Méndez de 17 años de edad y a tres noruegos de nombres Nora Lanfelan, Laura Itzen Esten y Kaja Langelano. La detención se llevó de manera arbitraria y el procedimiento para su expulsión fue nuevamente ilícito, toda vez que no se les permitió tener abogado en los interrogatorios y no tuvieron oportunidad de alegar nada en su defensa. Para esta agresión la policía uso de gases lacrimógenos y disparos al aire y fueron guiados por indígenas de la región vestidos con el uniforme de la Policía de Seguridad Pública (usurpando funciones).

3.Al concluir el operativo de detención los elementos de dichas corporaciones, según la propia versión de la comunidad saquearon la tienda cooperativa sustrayendo de ésta bienes por un monto de $ 109,325.00 pesos y dinero en efectivo por más de $ 170,000.00 pesos. Este tipo de prácticas no son extrañas ni nuevas, vale la pena recordar el saqueo de casas y tiendas que la policía perpetró en San Pedro Nixtalucum, en el Bosque en marzo del año pasado.

4.El día de ayer 15 de abril el Juez 2º de distrito Roberto Alejandro Navarro Suárez se rehusó a recibir el amparo que promovía la defensa de los Srs. de TOMAS SANCHEZ LOPEZ, MIGUEL HERNANDEZ PEREZ, ANTONIO RODRIGUEZ JIMENEZ, ANDRES GUTIERREZ HERNANDEZ, FIDELINO CRUZ
MENDOZA, MANUEL HERNANDEZ PEREZ Y CESAR RODRIGO NUÑEZ OLIVA, detenidos ilícitamente
el día 13 de abril en el municipio de Ocosingo, sin dar explicación jurídica alguna.

5.El pasado 13 de abril, a media noche, presuntos elementos de la policía Judicial Federal incursionaron en el poblado Santa Catarina, municipio de Sabanilla y con disparos al aire intimidaron a la población.

Este Centro constata el rápido deterioro de los derechos humanos en el Estado y hace un llamado urgente al gobernador a que ponga fin a la escalada de represión, libere a los prisioneros injustamente detenidos e indemnice a los pobladores de la comunidad "10 de abril" por los daños ocasionados por elementos de las policías.

De igual manera reitera este Centro que no es posible el establecimiento del Estado de Derecho violando derechos humanos o creando un clima de represión.

mc

↑ Index

36. Miekal And
Re: requisite self-promotion
Sun 3 May 1998

Herb Levy wrote:
 each week of interesting music including the dull > variety of new music that I select for them (in RealAudio):

how about a little cornelius cardew or the seattle improvisor's orchestra (whose name I forget) which Jeffrey Morgan organized?

↑ Index

37. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: poems for the millennium vol. 2
Sun 3 May 1998

---

jerry, thanx so much for your detailed response to (again) my hasty queries... i'm certain i'm not alone in finding much of interest and insight in what you say... one thing that leaps off the screen is the issue you raise re the "economics of permissions"---i had rather thought that this must figure someplace in such a big book... and it was interesting to hear too that the final product was hewn from an initial 1200 pp (and was in essence completed two years ago)... i'm fairly certain that the 1200 pp item would have eased certain anxieties (making vol. two a little larger than _from the other side of the century_), but there is after all something worthwhile in being a bit provocative (and i'm sure length was an economics issue as well)...

i don't like to reduce everything to matters of teaching, but after all i'm a teacher... and whatever one's feelings regarding anthologies, they can be handy in the classroom--- depending on the classroom (esp. coupled with a small press volume or two)... had i had volume two of _millennium_ i would have used it this past semester... thus far i've used vol. one of the _millennium_, paul hoover's _postmodern_ norton and ed foster et al.'s _primary troubles_... i've used each of these anthologies 'successfully,' albeit to somewhat different measures of 'success' (which right now i just don't have the time to detail---and i used these three anthologies with three different groups of students, so i can offer only 'case study' experience anyway)...

oh hey, and why not: i happen to enjoy flipping through anthologies---with my brain intact, of course... as long as one understands that anthologies are variously motivated collections, and as long as one (teacher, say) finds ways to support smaller publishing enterprises, i don't see a problem here (though i can imagine an argument re the way an anthology "comes at you," it seems to me clear that the _millennium_ anthologies in particular address their own problematic nature in this regard)...

well like i say volume two is a heck of an accomplishment, thanx again jerry/pierre!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

38. Eurydice
May Readings at Here (NYC)
Sun 3 May 1998

Three upcoming readings in New York to attend - time, location, and will willing.

May 9
Heather Fuller
Heather Ramsdell

May 16
Deirdre Kovac
Rod Smith

May 23
Jean Day
Andrew Levy

All at "Here"; 145 Sixth Avenue (a block below Spring Street), New York; Saturdays at 3:00 p.m.; $5 contribution.

↑ Index

39. Douglas Barbour
Re: Rothenberg's commentary
Sun 3 May 1998

Just a note to thank Jerome Rothenberg for such a calm yet committed commentary on his own process & the product that necessarily had to emerge from it. We all know there can be no perfect anthology; but it is good to have two so dedicated bricoleurs working to create 2 huge volumes of 'assemblage.' I know I've got my (most pleasant) work cut out for me in reading this huge text with the care it was put together with.

And, with regard to Herb Levy's comments, I'm pretty damned sure I'll enjoy a lot of it before I 'understand' it all, nor does that worry me. And, Herb, even in the universities, some of us try to suggest that 'understanding' a poem is a lot less important than 'getting' it in all kinds of other ways. I do agree with you...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

42. Michael McColl
Understanding and Evaluating Poems
Sun 3 May 1998

With experimental poems comes an interesting situation or problem with regards to evaluation. When there is no paraphrasable content, then at least one very widespread and traditional way to evaluate a poem is no longer possible, at least in the same way--that is to discern how sound and sense are in harmony or meaningful dissonance. It seems to me that the criteria for judging what's good and not so good must change when the experiment involves a conscious departure from paraphrasable content. Do such criteria exist?

Michael McColl

↑ Index

43. John Cayley
Current (e)address for Fiona Templeton
Sun 3 May 1998

Can anyone give me the current address, ideally an email address, but snail also good, for Fiona. Thanks in anticipation. John

↑ Index

44. randy egest
NEA/NPR Petition
Sun 3 May 1998

After extensive lurking, I found something that may or may not be appropriate fodder.

Sorry if it isn't, but it is vital and interactive!
And thanks for this great list
chris
(cut this sophomoric commentary out at leisure)

Friends-

Subject: NEA Petition

RE: National Endowment for the Arts, NPR, PBS Petition

Please keep this petition rolling. Do not reply to me. Please sign at the bottom and forward to others to sign. If you prefer not to sign please send to the e-mail address indicated or return to me. Thanks.

This petition is being passed around the internet. Please add your name to it so that funding can be maintained for the NEA, NPR & PBS.

Here goes:

This is being forwarded to several people at once to add their names to the petition. It won't matter if many people receive the same list as the names are being managed.

This is for anyone who thinks NPR/PBS is a worthwhile expenditure of $1.12/year of their taxes, a petition follows. If you sign, please forward on to others (not back to me). If not, please don't kill it-send it to the email address listed here: [redacted] PBS,

NPR (National Public Radio), and the arts are facing major cutbacks in funding. In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce spending costs and streamline their services, some government officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a portion of funding for something which is seen as not worthwhile. Currently,taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $0.64 a year.

A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans wish to keep funding for PBS, this percentage of people polled is surpassed only by national defense and law enforcement as the programs that are the most valuable for federal funding.

Each year, the Senate and House Appropriations committees each have 13 subcommittees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. Each subcommittee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which is October 1.

The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices heard.

Please add your name to this list and forward it to friends if you believe in what we stand for. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and Representative

Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile programs.

*If you happen to be the 150th, 200th, 250th, etc. signer of this petition, please forward a copy to: [redacted].

If that address is inoperative, please send it to:
[redacted].

This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them.

Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

Thank you.

NOTE: It is preferable that you SELECT the entirety of this letter and then COPY it into a new outgoing message rather than simply forwarding it.

---

416) Arlene Hamilton, Everett, WA
417) Irina Rudakova, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
418) Persephone Miel, Internews, Moscow, Russia
419) Michael J. Mead, New York, NY
420) Spiro C. Lampros, New York University, New York, NY
421) Kelly Sheehan, Brooklyn, NY
422) Henry Kimsey-House, Sebastopol, CA
423) Cynthia Loy Darst, Los Angeles, CA
424) David Darst, Los Angeles, CA
425) Arline Berman, Atlanta, GA
426) Laura Davis, Atlanta, GA
427) Carole Billingham, Denver, CO
428) Sonja M. Hansen, Seattle, WA
429) Rebecca Crichton, Seattle, WA
430) Cedron Sterling, Seattle, WA
431) N'Shama Radha Sterling, Seattle, WA
432) Jim Ekberg, Seattle, WA
433) Carol Ruth Summers, Seattle, WA
434) Ken Jenkins, Novato, CA
435) Todd Stock, Los Gatos, CA
436) Donald Rose, Los Angeles CA
437) Tony Puryear, Venice, CA
438) Eric Finke, Venice, CA
439) Janet Forman, New York, NY
440) Lynda Hansen, NY, NY
441) Richard Weise, Nashville, TN
442) David Madson, Albany, CA
443) Rick Wise, Albany, CA
444) Bill Rogers, Mendocino, CA
445) Rita Hovakimian, San Francisco, Ca
446) Tracy E. Longacre, San Francisco, CA

447) Anita G. Barfield, San Francisco, CA
448) Penelope M. Warren, San Francisco, CA
449) Edward G. Guggenheim, San Francisco, CA
450) Thao N. Lam, Riverside, CA
451) Antonio Rauti, Riverside, CA
452) Carlotta Domeniconi, Riverside, CA
453) Stephanie Fonder, Riverside, CA
454) Sohail Nadimi, Riverside, CA
455) Shirin Etessam, San Francisco, CA
456) Jahanshah Javid, Albany, CA
457) Haleh Nazeri, NY, NY
458) Larry Weissman, NY, NY
459) Hilary Herscher

460) Shena Patel
461) Steven Gutierrez
462) Simon Glick
463) Michael Gillespie, New York, NY
464) Janna Scott, Dallas, TX
465) Robert L. Cordell II, New York, NY
466) Colleen Theis, New York, NY
467) Karen Speer, New York, NY
468) James Karn, New York, NY
469) Raymur Walton, New York, NY
470) Martha Brice Gaillard
471) Martha Gary
472) Howard Stovall, Memphis, TN
473) Pat Mitchell, Memphis,
474) Tara McAdams, Memphis, TN
475) Robert Gordon, Memphis
476)Robert Freed, Richmond, VA
477) Babs Jackson, Richmond, VA
478) Michael Broyles, State College, PA
479) Ruth Silverman, Buffalo Grove, IL
480) Karen Primack, Silver Spring, MD>
481) George Hinds, Takoma Park, MD
482> Luc Leplae
483> Suzanne Rosenblatt
484> Mark J. Fraire, Madison, WI
485> Steve Barberio, Hopkins, MN
486> Kari Kjome, Minneapolis, MN
487> Peter Kjome, Grand Rapids, MI

488> Robert Driscoll, Jr., Pittsburgh, PA
489> Jonathan J. Dlouhy, Atlanta, GA
490> Ronda Respess, Atlanta, GA
490> Ronda Respess, Atlanta, GA
491> Ann Steck, Alexandria, VA
492> De Fischler Herman, Takoma Park, MD
493> Naomi Mara Hyman, Stevensville, MD
494> Patrice L. Leichter, Philadelphia, PA
495> Stuart Bogom, Philadelphia, PA
496> Dorel Shannon, Philadelphia, PA
497) Sandi Vito
498) Lou Freimiller
499) Cynthia Waters Spaulding, Philadelphia, PA
500) Sheila F. Waters, Gaithersburg, MD
501) Aissia L. Richardson, Philadelphia, PA
502) E.A. Kafkalas, Allentown, PA
503) Shirl Gower, Bethlehem, PA
504)Ysaye M. Barnwell, Washington, DC
505) Samuel A. Floyd, Jr., Chicago IL 506) Anne Dhu McLucas, Eugene, OR 507) John Potash, Sioux City, IA
508) Nina V. Fedoroff, State College, PA
509) Daniel J. Cosgrove, Pennsylvania Furnace, PA
510) Lincoln Taiz, Santa Cruz, CA
511) Richard Coplon, Santa Cruz, CA
512) Clare Greene, Santa Cruz, CA
513) Betsy Steele, Santa Cruz, CA
514) David Casper, Aptos, CA
515) Peggy Casper, Aptos, CA
516) William Settle, Aptos, CA
517) George W. Gilchrist, Seattle, WA
518) Ronald L. Rutowski, Tempe, AZ
519) Heather Cate, Tempe, AZ
520) Chris Bijalba; Chicago, IL

↑ Index

45. charles alexander

Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems

Sun 3 May 1998

At 03:05 PM 5/3/98 EDT, you wrote:
>With experimental poems comes an interesting situation or problem

>with regards to evaluation. When there is no paraphrasable content, >then at least one very widespread and traditional way to evaluate >a poem is no longer possible, at least in the same way--that is >to discern how sound and sense are in harmony or meaningful dissonance.
>It seems to me that the criteria for judging what's good and not so >good must change when the experiment involves a conscious departure >from paraphrasable content. Do such criteria exist?

Seems to me one might begin from the definition of poetry as "language charged with meaning to the utmost degree." And one can compare 'experimental' poems and argue about such charge. Just as one may look at Thomas Hardy's elegy to Swinburne next to Pound's elegy to Swinburne and (I think) make a pretty argument that Hardy's is the 'better' poem. But is that all we're after. Do we really read poetry to determine which poems are better than others according to various criteria? Isn't it better to look at those poems, respond to them in a variety of ways, and try and come to a sense of why it is exciting or enlightening to read them?

Still, I'm not sure you couldn't look at the criteria you name above (sound and sense in harmony or meaningful dissonance) and apply it to experimental poems. I could imagine Mac Low's Light Poems standing up fairly well to such an analysis. I don't think "having paraphrasable content" is the only way a poem can exhibit "sense."

charles

↑ Index

46. Bob Grumman

Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems

Sun 3 May 1998

Oht-oh, looks like this thread gonna start heating up. Michael McColl speaks of poems with no paraphrasable content. I would claim that any poem without SOME paraphrasable content, if that's possible, is worthless--as a poem. But I'm pretty narrow in my definition of poetry as something semantic. If you're talking about some kind of "sound poetry" that has no verbal meaning, then, for me, it's music, to be judged as music is, but its variety of sounds and how they are used with and against each other. "Visual poetry" sans verbal meaning should similarly be judged by visual criteria, how their colors and shapes are used with and against each other.

I haven't been following this thread closely, so forgive me if I'm repeating some other fogey's much earlier remarks.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

47. David Baratier

Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems

Sun 3 May 1998

"With experimental poems comes an interesting situation or problem with regards to evaluation."

I was attempting to get at this with the earlier post mean(ing). The criteria starts to formulate and appear at the experience of the piece. In whatever medium. For me, in a successful piece, the criteria establishes itself on the basis of the experience. Examples: While experiencing Robert Grenier's r h y m m s, I found that the color linkings between the pages as well as the scrawl of the work lead to multiple parameters of possibilities of connective meaning. That's why we published a section. Each "word" on the page has many possibilities of interpretation. Each color has other possible polarities such as elements, energies, and other archetypal interpenetrations. It lead to questions of what the function of text and how it can impersonalize a love letter (see: What I believe / Transpirations/ Transpiring on O books) how handwriting relates to the mythic (see Duncan's selected essays) where does art & poetry reach demarcation etcetera. A successful piece flares to the mind an image of my current belief structure and brings it through a process of re-interpretation.

Another great example is transduction, as created by Joel Lippman in the 70's, an excellent example can be found in _Prime Sway: a transduction of Primera Sueno by Sor Juana Ines de la Cruz_ by John M. Bennett (Texture Press). The piece tries to capture the phrenic or mental energy of the original without a pretending to be a literal translation. Questions of how all translations are translations over time (time of translation versus original time written) flare into the iris. The author adapts the text to fit their particular set of agendas (Pound:attacking usury, Paul Blackburn: fixation on sound, Robert Bly: to set meaning to one parameter rather than leave meaning as a polytokenal(for a great example see Vincente Alexandre's 20 poems tr. by Bly on his 70's press)). "Why set forth the false notion that agendas are not being forwarded" is a major aspect of Prime Sway.

There's others if you want some more.

Be well

David Baratier
News survey reveals 70% of bankrobbers are actually customers trying to get their money back

↑ Index

48. Travis Andrew Ortiz

Atelos / _Bad History_ by Barrett Watten

Sun 3 May 1998

Bad History
by Barrett Watten

Atelos is pleased to announce the publication of _Bad History_ by Barrett Watten.

About the book: Postmodern American poetry can also be described as post Vietnam War poetry, and with _Bad History_, Barrett Watten has written a prose poem epic of the postmodern period. Begun on May 1, 1992 to mark the first anniversary of the Gulf War, but reflecting on that engagement as an extension of the Vietnam War, the book is addressed to a diverse array of events that mark the long era of that latter war. So the title section of _Bad History_ begins, "A bad event happened to me, but its having occurred became even more complicated in my thinking about it.... Take the War, for example; I no longer know for certain which war is meant.... It is always 'the era between two wars.' So there was a very long war before a period of time in which that war had just been over for a very long time--even though it took its place as immediately preceding that time. Then a very short war called that very long time into question--because suddenly time became something that had happened to me." Barrett Watten's powerful memoir of events of our time is a book about the making of history; he reminds us that history doesn't take place in vacancy; it happens to us.

About the author: Born in 1948, Barrett Watten came into prominence in the early 70s with publication of his first book (_Opera--Works_) and the founding of his highly influential magazine _This_ and This Press. _Opera--Works_, along with a number of other previously published works, is included in his recently published major collection, Frame (1971-1990), published by Sun & Moon Press. In addition to _Bad History_, Watten is the author of two other long poems, _Progress_ and _Under Erasure_, and a co-author of _Leningrad: American Writers in the Soviet Union_. A collection of essays on modern and contemporary poetics, _Total Syntax_, was published in 1984. He is the co-editor of _Poetics Journal_, and he teaches modernism and cultural studies at Wayne State University in Detroit.

About the project: Atelos was founded in 1995 as a project of Hip's Road. It is devoted to publishing, under the sign of poetry, writing which challenges the conventional definitions of poetry, since such definitions have tended to isolate poetry from intellectual life, arrest its development, and curtail its impact. All the works published as part of the Atelos project are commissioned specifically for it, and each is involved in some way with crossing traditional genre boundaries, including, for example, those that would separate theory from practice, poetry from prose, essay from drama, the visual image from the verbal, the literary from the non-literary, and so forth. The Atelos project when complete will consist of 50 volumes; Bad History is volume 2. The project directors and editors are Lyn Hejinian and Travis Ortiz; the director for production and design is Ree Hall.

Ordering information: _Bad History_ may be ordered from Small Press Distribution, 1341 Seventh Street, Berkeley, CA 94710-1403; phone [redacted] or toll-free [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Title: Bad History
Author: Barrett Watten
Price: $12.95
Pages: 168

ISBN: 1-891190-02-4

Contact: Lyn Hejinian
Travis Ortiz
fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]
Atelos
PO Box 5814
Berkeley, CA 94705-0814

↑ Index

49. Henry Gould

Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems

Sun 3 May 1998

On Sun, 3 May 1998 15:05:17 EDT Michael McColl said:
>With experimental poems comes an interesting situation or problem
>with regards to evaluation. When there is no paraphrasable content, >then at least one very widespread and traditional way to evaluate
>a poem is no longer possible, at least in the same way--that is >to discern how sound and sense are in harmony or meaningful dissonance.
>It seems to me that the criteria for judging what's good and not so >good must change when the experiment involves a conscious departure >from paraphrasable content. Do such criteria exist?

Aren't the ancient categories of the "beautiful" vs. the "sublime" about such "departures from paraphrase"? The sublime - a conscious invocation of the awful, the terrible, the awe-inspiring - the OBSCURE, in other words, as opposed to the beautiful/harmonious. But the obscure is always contained within a meaningful narrative - or threatening (dramatically) to break out of containment.

This exciting "threat" is encapsulated in the poetry that strikes us the hardest - the most powerful because so beyond paraphrase. And yet the power is not in the jettisoning of meaning but in the gradual ascent of meaning toward - what? - revelation? Which can take not only the form of some suprarational image, but also the passionate condensation of the aphorism or the proverb - reason, totally engaged.

Every poem should induce a paraphrase which is admittedly and utterly inadequate to its original. That's the "logical content" - only one aspect, but a necessary one. Even a poem which is only talking to itself is still having a conversation - and that's what the "logic" of it gets across.

And there must be a larger and deeper human conversation of which poems are a formal expression and ornament. A conversation which looks through reputations and prestige (cf. whatever poetry bk reviews are in this week's NY Times Bk Rev etc.) and reads in the light of the poetry of poetry of the world of poetry of poetry... not in order to condemn or pufferize but simply to read carefully, critically, humanly... - henry Gould

↑ Index

50. Joel Felix
Bellamy Reading in Chicago
Sun 3 May 1998

For those around Chicago, Dodie Bellamy will be reading from "The Letters of Mina Harker" on Tuesday, May 5th, at 7:00 pm in an informal setting, ok my apartment, 1136 N. Milwaukee 2R Chicago. It's a great chance to meet Madame B. Please email me backchannel to confirm your seat. Egos checked at the door.

Joel Felix

↑ Index

51. Samuel R. Truitt
ANAMORPHOSIS EISENHOWER
Sun 3 May 1998

PUBLICATION ANNOUNCEMENT
May 1, 1998

ANAMORPHOSIS EISENHOWER
by Sam Truitt
Lost Roads Publishers
CD Wright and Forrest Gander, editors
71 pages
$12.00
ISBN: 0-918786-48-7
Available thru Small Press Distribution
Tele: [redacted]

Fax: [redacted]
eMail: [redacted]

Of ANAMORPHOSIS EISENHOWER:

"In the haunted fractal mirrow of Sam Truitt's sweeping and richly detailed ANAMORPHOSIS EISENHOWER, Ike melts into shape (supreme head allied poets elegiac). Here the rhythms arrive on "airborne chariots of JIVE," viz: "It is not too late to trade in our lives / For a brand new set of steak knifes." Go ahead: read this book."

--Charles Bernstein

"Sam Truitt gives "mouth to outh resuscitation" to the ancient quest poem as he writes "to voyage is to become / Hysterical." In the maximal narrative loop of this book, Marilyn Monroe's skirt is perpetually going "whoosh" in an Eistenian vacuum where "the displacement of the figure is the form."

--Peter Gizzi

"If modernism wanted to conclude in minimalist perfections, the new age might be said to begin with a shattered crystals shards. Sam Truitt has assembled here a gorgeous trembling maximalism invested with erudition, tenderness, with a shimmering full deck, wild card and all: "Bright rapture in this dead town bounds like a rose / Among the broken bottles of a freight yard."

--Ann Lauterbach

↑ Index

52. Aviva99999

Re: The Meaning of Meaning

Sun 3 May 1998

In a message dated 98-05-02 12:51:50 EDT, you write:

> emotional and/or
> visceral responses are not only useful, they're necessary.

there's so much =experimental= work, however, that seems to deaden, rather than enliven, visceral and/or emotional response. to have some kind of kinesthetic experience of the poem...or spirit-engaging experience of the poem...it seems necessary to offer the reader some stimulation in these areas. much of the =experimental= poetry i've read seems to dwell in a cerebral domain, which seems to me a different =landscape= than the visceral/emotional domains. of course, there are always exceptions; certainly, a cerebral/intellectual experience can ultimately generate a visceral/emotional experience...but not usually, as far as my own experience goes. making such distinctions between mind, body and spirit is risky and perhaps folly. however,

there's so much work out there that just leaves me passionless, intellectually numbed, and aesthetically bored. it seems to happen when the work is so incredibly =private= that i can't find any place in it to grab on to, or become engaged. it's not that i require total =absorption= in the work...i don't want all my responses packaged up for me, as if i were buying a =poem patty= at a fast food restaurant, but neither do i want featureless, textureless cardboard. i don't know...i haven't thought this through well enough to make myself clear, but i'm frankly very frustrated with poetry that makes zero effort to engage anyone but the writer.

↑ Index

53. Agent Sunshine, aka Eric Gleason
Re: The Meaning of Meaning
Sun 3 May 1998

---

sometimes when i try to type workers it comes out "wordkers".

eryque

↑ Index

54. Thomas Bell
Re: The Meaning of Meaning
Mon 4 May 1998

> I felt the same for a long time until it 'hit' me that there was something in some that didn't 'deaden' a visceral and/or emotional response but rather brought (invited) the response directly without needing to go through my language (intellectual) channel. These some became many and then BANG ZOWIE. It's there if you look or feel and don't talk about same.
> tom bell
>
> At 10:54 PM 5/3/98 EDT, Aviva99999 wrote:
> In a message dated 98-05-02 12:51:50 EDT, you write:
>
> emotional and/or
> visceral responses are not only useful, they're necessary.
>
> there's so much =experimental= work, however, that seems to deaden, rather than enliven, visceral and/or emotional response. to have some kind of kinesthetic experience of the poem...or spirit-engaging experience of the poem...it seems necessary to offer the reader some stimulation in these areas. much of the =experimental= poetry i've read seems to dwell in a cerebral domain, which seems to me a different =landscape= than the visceral/emotional domains. of course, there are always exceptions; certainly, a cerebral/intellectual experience can ultimately generate a visceral/emotional > experience...but not usually, as far as my own experience goes. making such distinctions between mind, body and spirit is risky and perhaps folly. however, there's so much work out there that just leaves me passionless, intellectually numbed, and aesthetically bored. it seems to happen when the work is so incredibly =private= that i can't find any place in it to grab on to, or become engaged. it's not that i require total =absorption= in the work...i don't want all my responses packaged up for me, as if i were buying a =poem patty= at a fast food restaurant, but neither do i want featureless, textureless cardboard. i don't know...i haven't thought this through well enough to make myself clear, but i'm frankly very frustrated with poetry that makes zero effort to engage anyone but the writer.

↑ Index

55. Miekal And
Re: release the strings
Mon 4 May 1998

---

this is a complete aside

Ive been on this list over a year & I cannot accept the fact that jordan & henry g are actually 2 different people. I know someday I will have to accept the fact, but just thot I wanted to announce what strange things email does to one's mind.

harry kemp

↑ Index

56. Jordan Davis
release the strings
Mon 4 May 1998

A lot of dissonance about the paraphrasable part of poetry shuttling around already -- so -- to go along with Charles A, no, it's probably not a beautiful idea to rank poems as you read (viz. The Top 500 Poems from Columbia U Press -- which to be fair to Edith Hazen and what's his last name Nick the new Granger's guy is only an index of the most frequently anthologized poems). But Charles, I don't understand why compare Hardy favorably to Pound in order to dismiss Hardy.

There's a footnote in _Works & Days_, Bill Luoma's new book, in which he offers a reasonable working model for piecing out the meaning of non-syntactical work. By meaning I'm jogging alongside Dave baratier (I think) who seemed to be suggesting that the experience of the poem (the paths of meanings? not merely prose straightahead meaning delivery units but the sound, and now ((print & after)) the visual, and of course the affect -- Aviva sometimes it can be difficult to locate the affect of non-syntactical work and sometimes it isn't there but take heart! sometimes it is viz. Tender Buttons, Solution Passage, When the Sun Tries to Go on, etc) the experience of the poem is the thing. Ha. Well not the thing but what you want the iodine or other marker to indicate. Is this poem really necessary? Not that anyone needs to think they're in a rationed situation, equities up 20% last year and the year before etc. Coff. Coff.

All right, to come back to a coherent prose style for just a few lines. Henry noted that the sublime was an attempt to escape the paraphrasable. Yes, but in this transcendental scheme, all one would need to paraphrase the sublime is a marker, say, an asymptote. The speaker of the poem, having surveyed the activity in the hillsides and on the avenues, ascends into a swoon i.e. collapses. Ron Padgett's poem A Man Saw A Ball of Gold: "Aye, it was a ball of gold" is it seems to me a parody of this idea that the sublime cannot be described or written, or at least a parody of conventional ideas of the sublime. So, to try to say something without invoking the Whitman Self-Contradiction Clause, it sounds as though the issue at hand for the evaluators of poetry is how to acknowledge the various ways a poem (a work?) can be beautiful (give the reader a feeling?) without putting too much emphasis on anything that would lead people to assume that the thing to do to give people feelings (be beautiful?) is to imitate the going style.

Of course we all know that jose feliciano is not Homer and feelings have already been replaced on the oldies stations by theories. Feelings you could substitute something else maybe, ideas? So long, objective correlative! Take care, melopoeia! Arrivaderci, projective verse. No ideas in things either.

↑ Index

57. henry
Re: release the strings
Mon 4 May 1998

Jonathan Skinner's fascinating entry on "grace" in Transcendental Friend speaks to some of these "critical" issues (ie. what makes a poem beautiful, how do poems win us over without becoming purely intelligible, "semantic objects" and all that). Aviva is right too that it has something to do with poetry being more than some kind of disembodied verbal solitaire. - Henry G.

↑ Index

58. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Stevens and surrealism
Mon 4 May 1998

always imagined machine guns figuring in that image, myself.

Esthetique du Mal was always my fav long Stevens. I was delighted one day to look in the excecrable H. Vendler's book on Stevens (largely on his long things, I believe) and discover that she hates it, and didn't give it any space; a dismissive sentence or two. (That's my memory, anyway) It's nice to have one's judgments confirmed!

On Fri, 1 May 1998 [redacted] wrote:

> My favorite "surrealist" moment in Stevens occurs in "Esthetique du Mal": don't have the poem handy now, but the passage goes something like, "the paratroopers fall, and as they fall they mow the lawn" etc..
>
> I wonder if Stevens would have written the line if he had known of riding tractor mowers...hmm.
>
> Gary R.

↑ Index

59. Henry
Re: release the strings
Mon 4 May 1998

On Mon, 4 May 1998 08:15:52 +0000 Miekal And said:
>this is a complete aside
>
>
>Ive been on this list over a year & I cannot accept the fact that jordan >& henry g are actually 2 different people. I know someday I will have >to accept the fact, but just thot I wanted to announce what strange >things email does to one's mind.
>
>harry kemp

Don't worry, Harry - it's not you. Whenever Jordan writes in I try to respond in the same style. & whenever I write in Jordan tries to respond as himself. So there are really 2 Jordans, the original and the copy. This is also the origin of the subplot, for all you Shakespeareans out there. Put that in your sub-poetics & quibble! - Harry G.

↑ Index

60. Mark Prejsnar
Re: what's difficult
Mon 4 May 1998

As always, I have to retreive the stuff from my home, which is not where I have internet access; this is a pain in the neck

Essentially it is just one sentence , Mark, at the beginng of one of your contributions.

You pretty much echo what Martin has been saying. I think you do it just to establish continuity and flow; and yes I'm pretty well aware that the basic burden of your replies throughout the colloquium are in opposition to what Martin several times says, about poets wanting to be obscure. That's why that one sentence jolts a bit. No doubt I misread it, and didn't make enuff allowences for context. But that's how I remember it, and I'll be able to respond to you tomorrow, when it's possible to have the thing in hand.

Let me repeat that your contributions to the exchange are superb and I hope people do look at it.

It's pretty much Martin who is pushing this quaint idea; I just felt I shouldn't let you off the hook! given that I believed that in one sentence you sort of agreed with his statements. We'll see if I was reading carelessly. Probably.

I think the sentence I had in mind is indeed the one you allude to. It seemed to me that (in the context of Martin's comments) saying that "A-G" poets have absorbed and carry with 'em a "pretension" that their work is obscure...well, it sounded like what you meant was, that they imagine (and want) their work to be obscure. Now I'm getting a little closer to what's going on....I believe that one sentence of yours could be clearer, and that that's what we're both struggling over.

I suspect I made a dumb gaff, and should have just tarred S-P M. with that brush...(albeit i think your sentence isn't clear--but that could well be my stumbling, alone; not all that unusual!)

(signed) inept in @lanta...

On Fri, 1 May 1998, Mark Wallace wrote:

> Hey Mark Presjnar:
>
> Thanks for your comments about the dialogue piece Jeff Hansen, Stephen-Paul Martin, and I wrote for Central Park magazine on the subject of "difficulty" in avant garde poetry, and for your comments about my other work.

I do have to say, though, that when you suggest that I "expand on" Stephen-Paul Martin's point about the inherent "difficulty" of much contemporary writing, it seems odd that you would say that about that piece, because the point that you say in your post that I am making is precisely the OPPOSITE of the point I was making there. Which is curious, I suppose, given the subject of "difficulty" that is as stake here.

In that essay, I disagree with Stephen-Paul Martin's assertion that "difficulty" is one of the main goals of the texts we are writing about, and writing--I say that the idea that such work is "difficult" is one of the pieces of cultural baggage that writers of avant garde work have absorbed all too often--one of our main "pretensions," I believe may be the word I use. Sorry to quote myself here, but I believe I say also that, "There is nothing inherently difficult about such works; there is just something unfamiliar." I go on to say that I believe that most people can learn to understand "avant garde" poetry with about several hours (say, 3) of training, which is much less training, of course, than they have received in how to read newspapers and novels.

Given all this, I'm not sure how you could have read me to be saying that what I an interested in in avant garde work is its inherent difficulty, and so would be curious to know why you think that's what I was saying.

But perhaps I am misunderstanding you in what seems to me your misunderstanding of me.

It's amazing that what's so simple can often be so difficult.

Mark Wallace

/----------\
| |
| [redacted] |
| GWU: |
| http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
| EPC: |
| http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
|_____|

↑ Index

61. Mark Prejsnar
a poem should not mean but bleed
Mon 4 May 1998

"It is not the business of poetry to be anything." Being primarily activity, poetry roils. It should act mostly through dynamism.. It uses words (phonemes, etc.) to hammer away at physical reality, to chip and damage it into history. It should have no paraphraseable content Poetry doesn't like you, why should it care what you think about it? (Only when it is so bad it's practically ceased to exist, can it be paraphrased) The ear is it's medium, the ear and the contingent facts of history. "The function of poetry is to waste excess energy."

(signed) indeterminate in @lanta

↑ Index

62. Judy Roitman
Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
Mon 4 May 1998

Nice piece by Charles Rosen in current NYRB on knee-jerk negative reactions toavant-garde music which deals with many of the issues in this thread, including the unfounded calumny that no-one wants to have anything to do with that stuff.

Uses word "understanding" throughout. In discussion of music, not poetry, so explication (except in programmatic music -- here is where the white swan dies, here is where the Titanic sinks) not relevant. "Understanding" must be understood more broadly.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

63. Jordan Davis
at the risk of offending
Mon 4 May 1998

Mark,

Roil on. I think we must have different things in mind by paraphrase.

Jordan

↑ Index

64. Michael Kelleher
a l y r i c m a i l e r 5
Mon 4 May 1998

Poets and Friends,

a l y r i c m a i l e r 5

you follow

by

Heather Fuller

now up at

http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/alyricmailer/alyric.htm

Heather Fuller's book _perhaps this is a rescue fantasy_ was published last year by Edge Books. She lives in Washington D.C., where she works at The National Law Center on Homelessness and Poverty.

Upcoming issues to feature Carrie Tocci, Stephen Mounkhall, Heather Ramsdell, Ben Friedlander and more.

Enjoy.

Mike

↑ Index

65. Robert Archambeau
Re: Bellamy Reading in Chicago
Mon 4 May 1998

Joel,

Is there room for one more at the"informal setting"?

Bob

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

" on the end
of each decision stands a heretic"
--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

66. Judy Roitman
Re: The Meaning of Meaning
Mon 4 May 1998

> In a message dated 98-05-02 12:51:50 EDT, you write:
>
> emotional and/or
> visceral responses are not only useful, they're necessary.
>
> there's so much =experimental= work, however, that seems to deaden, rather than enliven, visceral and/or emotional response.

And a lot of other work too.

I cannot read, say, Susan Howe without feeling it in my bones. But I cannot feel, say, any poet laureate in my bones at all.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

67. Mark Wallace
what's difficult--the offending sentence
Mon 4 May 1998

Mark:

Thanks for your response--it does clarify things somewhat. No need to apologize for any kind of misreading--that's the way things on this list go, is it not?

Here is the offending sentence, in context, from my piece with Stephen-Paul Martin and Jeff Hansen:

"It seems to me that one of the biggest and most commonly shared pretentions of avant garde writers is that our work is difficult and/or unreadable. But I think also that one of the biggest presumptions of more mainstream writers (journalists, for instance) is that their work is easy to understand. My own experience leads me to believe that many of the techniques necessary to understand experimental literature can be taught, with about three hours of close attention, to reasonably intelligent college students who show any willingness to engage with such literature. Of course, if you're not willing to give three hours of your whole life to try to understand something, then your inability (or, let's be honest, unwillingness) to understand it is your own fault, not mine."

The first thing to say is that your post DID imply that the first sentence formed the basic argument of my whole piece--no need to worry that one anymore though, I take it as behind us. The second issue (and I suppose it's important, to you and me anyway), is how to read the first sentence, which I take it is what you took exception to.

I think, from the vantage point of several years (we wrote the piece in 1994), that sentence seems to me something of an overstatement, although yes, it was written mainly as a way of finding a transition between Stephen-Paul's section and my own. From my present vantage point, I guess I have no proof how broad any assumption of "difficulty" is across the avant garde--but I CAN give you reasons why it seemed to me so at the time.

Before I do that, I do also want to say that "difficulty" and "obscurity" and "unreadability" do NOT seem to me interchangeable words. I'm not against difficulty--I'm not even sure I'm against obscurity--but I think I would stress that some types of "difficulty" in reading are not such a bad thing, since a "difficult" text may in some cases simply mean a text that needs close and complex attention, and I can't see any problem with that. "Obscurity" I guess I would see as an attempt to make something hard to understand simply in order to make it hard to understand, rather than because the problems it raises are complex. That doesn't seem a good thing to me, although I suppose I can imagine an occasion when it might. "Unreadable" seems to me another term--I take it usually as a text in which some part of the piece can't be read (because the letters are covered up, say) as transparent conveyors of meaning, and so another way of "reading" (often a way of visually reading) becomes necessary.

What Stephen-Paul speaks of is the pride that some individuals do take in being able to read that which others claim they cannot read--and take that as a point of pride too easily. He uses his graduate school experience as an example, and talks about people who try to prove that they are smart by proving that they can read "difficult" books. In my experience, such a thing did happen all the time. Although I greatly enjoyed much of my experience as a graduate student at UBuffalo, pretensions about such matters were entirely common-- that may not have been true in your experience. There is, in graduate school (and outside?) a fairly pervasive problem of jockeying for position on the subject of how others perceive one's intelligence.

There is, I think, too easy a leap from his claims about graduate school to his claims about avant garde poets more generally, and I think, because I was trying to make other points at the time, I didn't perhaps deal with that issue in the detail it may have deserved. At the same time, though, I do NOT think that it's an easy given that the community of "avant garde" poets all have a conception of their work as "easy to read," although some perhaps do. I think the problem continues to exist as a problem--in a world in which claims about our elitism are thrown back at us constantly, there is still a need to watch out that we don't succubm too easily in believing in our own "difficulty" in the way that someone like Eliot, for instance, did. Which is, I take it, one of the points Stephen-Paul is trying to make.

So I would agree with you that my first sentence in that dialogue contains an assumption it can't quite prove. That is, it can't prove how actually widespread the problem that Stephen-Paul raises--have we too easily accepted a certain notion about difficulty?--and thankfully you for one have not accepted such an assumption, and many others have not as well. But I still think that sentence is right to the extent that I do feel that the "pretension" it mentions does exist, and is one that needs to be argued against, as opposed to being seen as a given. And the reason I felt I needed to respond to your post in the first place was because the rest of my piece does try to undermine the whole concept of "difficulty," but your post did not suggest that I had done so.

Thanks for giving me this chance to elaborate--

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

68. Steven Clay

Artists Books: A Critical Survey of the Literature

Mon 4 May 1998

<smaller>Announcing the publication of:

Artists Books: A Critical Survey of the Literature by Stefan Klima

The first and only published guide to writings on artists books this book contains five lucid essays and a carefully researched, thorough bibliography. An important reference tool for anyone interested in artists books.

Stefan Klima's text is an invaluable resource for anyone wishing to explore the development of critical debates on artists books. Beginning with documentation from the late 1960s Klima carefully charts the discussion of several central issues: the identity of artists books, their disputed origins, and their current status. His summary of debates is handled with the even-handedness of an outsider; he maps the sometimes fractious and frequently contentious dialogues among interested parties with scrupulous care. His bibliography is a thoroughly useful guide to the critical and historical texts. It has the advantage of being well focused on the topic and thus serves as an essential point of departure for any student, librarian, critic, or collector interested in pursuing the literature on artists books. A welcome addition to a steadily growing body of works in the field.

*Johanna Drucker.

Johanna Drucker is an artist, scholar and writer. She is the author of The Century of Artists Books, The Alphabetic Labyrinth and The Visible Word among many other books. She is an associate Professor at Yale University.

Stefan Klima was born in Oldham, England. He has a degree in art and a Ph.D in American Music. Currently Head of Fine and Performing Arts at the Beverly Hills Public Library Stefan Klima has been an observer of artists books since 1985. This is his first book.

$17.95 (+ $3 shipping, domestic + sales tax, NY only)

110 pages, paperback original

ISBN 1-887123-18-0

Publication date: May 10, 1998

Published by:

Granary Books

568 Broadway #403

New York City 10012

[redacted]

</smaller>

↑ Index

69. Mark Nowak
Arthur Sze
Mon 4 May 1998

The inaugural reading in a series sponsored by _Rain Taxi_ was held at the Weinstein Gallery on West 46th St. in Minneapolis last night to a packed house of over 50 people. Sze began by reading the poem "Streamers" from his last collection, _Archipelago_ (Copper Canyon Press), then read two new sequences from his forthcoming (in the next few weeks, he told me) book, _The Redshifting Web_ (which features new and selected poems from Sze, also from Copper Canyon). The crowd was energized, Sze read stunningly, with a huge Chuck Close self-portrait behind him (the gallery had up an entire show of Close self-portraits, maybe a dozen works in all--an amazing gem for such a small gallery in the upper midwest!). Summit brewery provided free post-event ales. A nice way to spend the Sunday night following the In the Heart of the Beast Puppet & Mask Theater's 24th annual parade & festival through the streets of Minneapolis.

↑ Index

70. groberts
Padgett's sub lime pie
Mon 4 May 1998

Thanks Jordan for mentioning Ron Padgett in this context. I would say that his collection "The Big Something" is making, as the book's title suggests, a tart treat out of these topics of the sublime, meaning, understanding. See for another example, the poem "Poem":

When I am dead and gone
they will say of me,
"We never could figure out what he was talking about,
but it was clear that he understood very well that modernism is a branch that was cut off decades ago."

This parody of interpretation feeds into Lyotard's discussion of the sublime in his essay on "What is postmodernism?" The end of Padgett's "Poem" is a funny play on metaphor's of heigth and depth that rhetorical discussions of the sublime rely heavily on.

Gary R.

↑ Index

71. Carolyn Guertin
First Arizona, now Texas...
Mon 4 May 1998

Following on the query about Arizona, I am planning a research trip to Texas. Could anyone out there answer some questions and/or provide some info about Austin? Please backchannel.

Thanks,
Carolyn

_____ Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted] Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>

↑ Index

72. ScoutEW
Re: First Arizona, now Arizona.
Mon 4 May 1998

Jordan really is two people, no three....may be someday he will give me an answer about thursday! but really, I need some info on Arizona, because I may be moving there any of you nice arizonians please backchaNNEL me about what it is like in Tucson and or Phoenix, I trust you people and not the tourbooks!! I need rent prices, job market info, roadrunner sightings

o yes, and thank you all for contributions for "Tool a Magazine" keep them coming
erik sweet

↑ Index

73. Keston Sutherland
Re: The Meaning of Meaning
Mon 4 May 1998

> cannot feel, say, any poet laureate in my bones at all.

I agree with what your saying says, but also said is something which we can disagree with if remembering that it wasn't -always- this way, Dryden was laureate, as was Southey, they did give it to heroes a few times upon a time, nowadays however what a misfortune

↑ Index

74. Mark Prejsnar
fascination of what's difficult, er, obscure, er
Mon 4 May 1998

Mark W.--

Thanx for your long and precise response. I don't think there's much to add; you have indeed clarified almost everything I/we brought up about the Central Park piece (...making some very helpful further theoretical points in the process). My only quibble (and it is very small) is with your sentence:

"I do NOT think that it's an easy given that the community of "avant garde" poets all have a conception of their work as "easy to read," although some perhaps do."

..I don't think most of us have a conception of our work as "easy to read," either! But the difficulties are simply those of encountering any interesting practice...(or they're on the same scale, rather): it isn't "easy" to encounter a late Beethoven quartet for the first time; for some people it isn't easy (on a number of levels) to encounter a Public Enemy record for the first! or a Munch painting or a Noh drama or...

This I take it is partly what you're getting at by differentiating the terms difficult, obscure etc. Ain't nothin' wrong (necessarily) with "not being easy." (No bawdy quips, please) fascinated in atlantis.....

Thanx for the great exchange...

M.

↑ Index

75. David Israel
Fiona Templeton
Mon 4 May 1998

John Cayley asks for Fiona Templeton's e-address. There is none such extant -- as Fiona mentioned abt. a week ago, circa her reading in DC; -- as to her immediate whereabouts, she's evidently ensconsed off in some rural Virginia (?) college, in some manner of residency . . . hopefully somebody else can give a finer (US postal) focus . . .

d.i.

/ / /

Date: Sun, 3 May 1998 11:26:38 -0800
From: John Cayley <[redacted]>
Subject: Current (e)address for Fiona Templeton

Can anyone give me the current address, ideally an email address, but snail also good, for Fiona. Thanks in anticipation. John

↑ Index

76. henry g
Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
Mon 4 May 1998

On Mon, 4 May 1998 14:45:36 -0500 Taylor Brady said:
>
>This seems to have some bearing on the issues of difficulty and understanding >which prompted this thread, as what's at stake in various forms in these >composers' works is an understanding of difficulty, complexity, etc. -- >generally >held to be measures of what's worthwhile in the experience of art -- which has >less to do with the listener's having acquired the requisite formal, >musicological training needed to parse or paraphrase a multiply-articulated, >historically-referential series of forms, and has more to do with a willingness >to deal with that aspect of the musical situation which is less susceptible to >paraphrase. For example, one of Tony Conrad's or Phill Niblock's longduration >pieces gives up its secret fairly quickly: within the first two or three >seconds, >you start to hear those difference tones and beats, and you "get it." The >question at that point is what one does with the remaining 45 minutes or so.
>Such >work thus seems to propose a value for in-time experience which tends to be >correspondingly absent in much late serialism.
>
>What does this have to do with poetry? How far can one push the analogybetween
>the avant-gardes of different arts? I'm not really sure there's an answer to >such >questions, but as a means of pointing out the multiple degrees of difference >which might be at stake here -- "there's difficulty and then there's >difficulty"
>-- the musical situation as (mis)addressed in Rosen's article seemed an >interesting aside.

This all seems very relevant. But the willingness to be open to difficulty - can it be separated from the "training" of the ear to hear it? The one leads to the other and vice versa.

Isn't there a border between music and poetry which is not a border? I mean regarding the "music of ideas" in poetry and "musical ideas". Poetry often uses the semantic element (the various "messages") as a foil for a musical development which has a perhaps inexpressible (un-paraphraseable) or even different meaning.

Is there a parallel between the "workmanlike" poem (in the terms of J. Skinner' s current "T. Friend" definition, carefully-put-together but lacking "grace") and the making of purely conceptual art - I mean difficulty for its own sake, tours-de-force, exercises, art-as-intellectual game... the one (workmanlike) displays craft without grace; the other displays superlative craft (virtuosity) without grace. What is this mysterious grace that links the difficult and the beautiful, the simple and the complex, the heart and the mind? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

77. Taylor Brady

Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems

Mon 4 May 1998

Interesting, though, that Rosen's construction of the avant-garde seems to stall out somwhere in the 1960's: the grand-dads of Uptown serialism -- Babbitt, Carter, et al. Interesting because one might add to the conflict he details -- i.e., between the composer-advocates of musical modernism and the administrators and taste-makers who insist on a conservative understanding of the "classical" repertoire -- an account of the very real conflicts between, variously, uptown and downtown new music scenes, serialism and minimalism, "pure" Euro-derived "art music" and jazz- and pop-influenced compositions. While I'd join Rosen in his strenuous disagreement with the Lloyd Webber brother's contention that a small handful of modernist "dictators" are ruining music for the rest of us folks, I would point out that until very recently, in terms of access to educational institutions, grants, commissions, etc., these late modernists have "kept out," relatively speaking, the work of our various Meredith Monks, Pauline Oliveroses, Anthony Braxtons, Tony Conrads, etc.

This seems to have some bearing on the issues of difficulty and understanding which prompted this thread, as what's at stake in various forms in these composers' works is an understanding of difficulty, complexity, etc. -- generally held to be measures of what's worthwhile in the experience of art -- which has less to do with the listener's having acquired the requisite formal, musicological training needed to parse or paraphrase a multiply-articulated, historically-referential series of forms, and has more to do with a willingness to deal with that aspect of the musical situation which is less susceptible to paraphrase. For example, one of Tony Conrad's or Phill Niblock's long-duration pieces gives up its secret fairly quickly: within the first two or three seconds, you start to hear those difference tones and beats, and you "get it." The question at that point is what one does with the remaining 45 minutes or so. Such work thus seems to propose a value for in-time experience which tends to be correspondingly absent in much late serialism.

What does this have to do with poetry? How far can one push the analogybetween the avant-gardes of different arts? I'm not really sure there's an answer to such questions, but as a means of pointing out the multiple degrees of difference which might be at stake here -- "there's difficulty and then there's difficulty" -- the musical situation as (mis)addressed in Rosen's article seemed an interesting aside.

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

Judy Roitman wrote:

> Nice piece by Charles Rosen in current NYRB on knee-jerk negative reactions toavant-garde music which deals with many of the issues in this thread, including the unfounded calumny that no-one wants to have anything to do with that stuff.
>
> Uses word "understanding" throughout. In discussion of music, not poetry, so explication (except in programmatic music -- here is where the white swan dies, here is where the Titanic sinks) not relevant. "Understanding" must be understood more broadly.
>
> ----------
> Judy Roitman | "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers!
> Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
> Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
> [redacted] |
> fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
> ----------
> Note new area code
> ----------
> http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/
> ----------

<HTML> <BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000"> Interesting, though, that Rosen's construction of the avant-garde seems to stall out somwhere in the 1960's: the grand-dads of Uptown serialism -- Babbitt, Carter, et al. Interesting because one might add to the conflict he details -- i.e., between the composer-advocates of musical modernism and the administrators and taste-makers who insist on a conservative understanding of the "classical" repertoire -- an account of the very real conflicts between, variously, uptown and downtown new music scenes, serialism and minimalism, "pure" Euro-derived "art music" and jazz- and pop-influenced compositions. While I'd join Rosen in his strenuous disagreement with the Lloyd Webber brother's contention that a small handful of modernist "dictators" are ruining music for the rest of us folks, I would point out that until very recently, in terms of access to educational institutions, grants, commissions, etc., these late modernists have "kept out," relatively speaking, the work of our various Meredith Monks, Pauline Oliveroses, Anthony Braxtons, Tony Conrads, etc.

<P>This seems to have some bearing on the issues of difficulty and understanding which prompted this thread, as what's at stake in various forms in these composers' works is an understanding of difficulty, complexity, etc. -- generally held to be measures of what's worthwhile in the experience of art -- which has less to do with the listener's having acquired the requisite formal, musicological training needed to parse or paraphrase a multiply-articulated, historically-referential series of forms, and has more to do with a willingness to deal with that aspect of the musical situation which is less susceptible to paraphrase. For example, one of Tony Conrad's or Phill Niblock's long-duration pieces gives up its secret fairly quickly: within the first two or three seconds, you start to hear those difference tones and beats, and you "get it." The question at that point is what one does with the remaining 45 minutes or so. Such work thus seems to propose a value for in-time experience which tends to be correspondingly absent in much late serialism.

<P>What does this have to do with poetry? How far can one push the analogybetween the avant-gardes of different arts? I'm not really sure there's an answer to such questions, but as a means of pointing out the multiple degrees of difference which might be at stake here -- "there's difficulty and then there's difficulty" -- the musical situation as (mis)addressed in Rosen's article seemed an interesting aside.

<P>-- Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn
.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>

<P>Judy Roitman wrote: <BLOCKQUOTE TYPE=CITE>Nice piece by Charles Rosen in current NYRB on knee-jerk negative reactions

toavant-garde music which deals with many of the issues in this thread, including the unfounded calumny that no-one wants to have anything to do with that stuff.

<P>Uses word "understanding" throughout. In discussion of music, not
poetry,
so explication (except in programmatic music -- here is where the white swan dies, here is where the Titanic sinks) not relevant.
"Understanding"
must be understood more broadly.

<P>---------- Judy
Roitman
;
      | "Whoppers
Whoppers   Whoppers!
Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
Lawrence, KS
66045   & nbsp; |
         these are the days."

[redacted]   &nbs p;   &nbs
p; | fax:
[redacted]   &nb
sp; |

         Larry Eigner, 1927-
1996

Note new area code

<A HREF="http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/">http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/</A>
----------</
BLOCKQUOTE>   </BODY> </HTML>

----------EB7B99CF509817034A3B9330--

↑ Index

78. MAYHEW
(mis)understanding poetry
Mon 4 May 1998

Different senses of misunderstanding come into play, especially when "paraphrasable content" is the issue. I understand Creeley or Scalapino pretty well; there's no problem here, though a paraphrase of "that they were at the beach" would be pretty much beside the point. When people says they don't understand such writing it means they don't understand the poetics. The paraphrase wouldn't help them much.

Other kinds of difficulty: references one needs a detailed commentary to explain. There is an essay by Davenport on Olson--all these people were recommending "The Kingfishers" to him, but it turned out noone knew what any of the reference were to. Noone knew who "Fernand" was.

Poems that you have to interpret the hell out of; that demand a sort of hermeneutical approach, because of the density of the language. This is a third category--Mallarme, Celan...

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

79. RaeA100900
Tony Lopez
Mon 4 May 1998

Dear World,

I'm trying to reach Tony Lopez sometime this week. Does anyone have an address?

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

80. Peter Ganick
potes & poets press
Mon 4 May 1998

---

recently potes & poets was at the point of being discontinued due to lack of funding and personal initiative, but a small source of income for the press has been found and i would like to announce that the press is soliciting manuscripts for a new chapbook series. potes & poets will however no longer publish perfectbound books and will probably phase out it's a.bacus series after the year 2000. since 1984, the press has published 43 perfectbound books (including 'the art of practice: 45 contemporary poets') and 114 issues of a.bacus (to date). most of these are available through small press distribution.

the chapbooks will feature new and younger writers, and will place special emphasis on experimental texts, collaborations, and writings by women.
manuscripts are being solicited at this point and should be chapbook-length, challenging the boundaries of language (in all the senses of that word) and visual format.

email me for further information at [redacted].
send manuscripts to: peter ganick, potes & poets press,
181 edgemont avenue, elmwood ct 06110-1005.

↑ Index

81. Keston Sutherland
Re: Tony Lopez
Mon 4 May 1998

Hello Rae. It is: [redacted]

x, k

↑ Index

82. Chicago Review
Chicago Review Update
Mon 4 May 1998

The latest issue of Chicago Review (vol. 44, no. 1) is now out. Contents include:

--Retrospective section on Chicago poet Paul Carroll, with late poems and criticism, and a memoir by Paul Hoover

--Poetry by Tom Pickard, Michael Anania, Craig Watson, and Juliana Spahr

--Interview with Robert Duncan (1976)

--Essay by Alice Notley on Iovis I & 2.

This issue can be found in bookstores, or ordered directly for $6. Subscriptions are $15 to Poetics List members. Please reply via e-mail or US mail to the address below.

Forthcoming in June: Martin Corless-Smith, John Koethe, Bill Griffiths, Colin Simms, Linh Dinh, Paul Vangelisti, Catherine Wagner, Jody Gladding, Ronald Johnson, and John Taggart on George Oppen

Our Web site will be updated soon.

Thank you.

Andrew Rathmann
Editor, Chicago Review
5801 S. Kenwood Ave.
Chicago IL 60637-1794
ph/fax [redacted]
e-mail [redacted]

↑ Index

83. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Letters Not About Love
Mon 4 May 1998

Friday, May 1, Rachel Levitsky and I drove down to the University of Denver to hear Lyn Hejinian show a film, give a talk, and read some poems. We also gorged ourselves on mussels and bouillabaise at a very nice French restaurant -- but that+s another story.

Present at one or both portions of the event: moderator Cole Swensen, Bin Ramke, Rikki Ducornet, Mark Irwin, Beth Nugent, Jack Collom, Jennifer Heath, Michael Friedman, Anselm Hollo, Andrew Schelling, Bobbie Hawkins, Laura Mullen, Cedar Sigo and Jeni Olin. And a raft of grad students.

The film -- "Letters Not About Love" -- is remarkable. Directed by Jacki Ochs (incidentally, sister to Hejinian+s husband Larry Ochs, who himself provided a very powerful and haunting jazz score), it concerns itself with an exchange of letters between Hejinian and Russian poet Arkadii Dragomeschenko (sic) from 1988-1993. Ochs asked the poets to shape their correspondence around a set of words -- Home, Grandmother, Neighbor, Poverty, Book, Work, Violence, Window -- which she gave them. The results form a sustained dialogue/meditation on two cultures, two idioms, and ultimately, the nature of dialogue and language itself.

As the poets+ conversation progresses, it underscores the way language both encodes against loss, in a very daily and personal way -- the loss of a sense of place, the loss of memory, of the quotidian -- and is vulnerable itself to loss, to slippage. The letter figures both as a method of communication that creates its own self-contained and ongoing continuum and a form of expression anxious about its existence, about the sense of dislocation, physical and emotional, that the act of writing letters has always sought to overcome.

Throughout, the richness of Jacki Ochs stream of visual images, combined with the music of Larry Ochs, provides a continual counterpoint, adding additional layers of "language" to the spoken words (read by the actress Lili Taylor -- Lyn said that Jacki thought her voice too "girlish" - and dialect coach Viktor Hurd).

Afterwards, some of the discussion of the film (both public and private) focused on the erotics of letter writing: on the subtle tensions that pre-inhabit the word and guide it; on the richness and power of letter-writing as a genre, a genre too often relegated to the ghettoized status of "women+s writing." Hejinian spoke about "negotiating the gulf between words and things -- not to fill it [that gulf] -- but to enter it, as a realm of possibility -- a poetics of possibility..." An old White Russian woman who first read Arkadii+s letters for her warned her that he was a demon and wanted to possess her soul. And Lyn quoted Shklovsky: "the role of art is to kill pessimism."

"Letters Not About Love" is, of course, precisely and ironically about love -- about the eros of logos. And the logos of eros. It has been screened at a number of film festivals, received at least one award, but at present lacks a distributor. Lyn remarked that exhibitors were nervous about its "lack of an ending." (Haven't they read "The Rejection of Closure"?)

***

In the evening, Hejinian began her reading with a selection of twelve poems from "Oxhota" -- the section based on expatriate jazz musician Steve Lacy+s list of the 12 components of the Russian soul: Betrayal, Death, Conspiracy, Truth, etc., which Lyn says got a good laugh from her Russian friends.

This was followed by new work -- an appropriately sprightly and altogether enchanting poem called "Happily," a meditation on chance, sequence and agency:

"Is happiness the name for our involuntary complicity with chance?"

She closed the evening with a long portion from "A Border Comedy" (forthcoming soon from Sun & Moon). She described the genesis of this work as having arisen from her collaboration with Jack Collom in "Wicker," which having enjoyed so much she attempted to try on her own -- a kind of self-collaboration where a line would be written, then put away to undergo some form of effacement -- and then added on to as if written by another.

"However lively the imagination it still benefits from contact with reality."

"But a man doesn+t dump his mother in a horsepond just because it starts to rain."

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

84. Aviva99999
Re: release the strings
Mon 4 May 1998

In a message dated 98-05-04 09:04:13 EDT, you write:

> disembodied verbal solitaire.

Henry, I like that phrase.

↑ Index

85. Aviva99999
Re: The Meaning of Meaning
Mon 4 May 1998

In a message dated 98-05-04 11:32:49 EDT, you write:

> And a lot of other work too.

I read some Tony Hoagland stuff the other day and was reminded of another peeve I have...flat, prosaic language ambling its way toward embarassingly mundane "epiphany." Obviously, it's not just certain "experimental" poems that "deaden."

↑ Index

86. David Baratier
Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
Mon 4 May 1998

Thanks Jordan. In short, an important piece flares large (insert here) things into question without specifically weighing itself down in the concept that it intends to do such and such. If enough folks get something from the piece, or enough folks who become well known cite it as an influence-- then voila-- you have the next Homer of our baseballish generative socio-economic understanding.

↑ Index

87. Brian Lucas
Faucheuse #2
Mon 4 May 1998

FAUCHEUSE #2 is handmade is 150 pp is 7x11 is writing by:

Jonathan Williams. Marc Bolan. Michelle Grangaud. Paul Metcalf. David Grubbs. Jordan Davis. Matthew Rohrer. The Magic Parade. Franklin Bruno. Guy Bennett. Jennifer Moxley. Catherine Wagner. H.O. Pessy-Winching. Chelsey Minnis. Warren Liu. Brian Lucas. Crystal Parks. William Shakespeare trans. Damon Krukowski. Peter Gizzi. Carole Darricarrere. George Perec. Patsy Tense. Anita Drinque. Julia Ward. John Yau. Michael Palmer. Garrett Caples. Giovanni Sandri. Geoffrey Gordon O'Brien. Martin Corless-Smith. El Malmar. Cybele Knowles. MichaeI mean Michael Gizzi.

With art by: Naomi Yang. Ron Padgett & George Schneeman. Brian Lucas. Guy Bennett. Giovanna Sandri. Crystal Parks. Paul Metcalf. Reese S. McOchs. too many if you wish please send cash $8 or whatever you can plus or minus I don't quite care, day-mail shipping included in that 8, to:

Faucheuse 259-A Fair Oaks St San Francisco, CA 94110-2911

AN ANNOUNCEMENT TO THE GOOD FRIENDS OF IMMACULATE EVENING FOR YOUR PLEASURE & MAY FESTIVALS this is

↑ Index

88. Peter Quartermain
Re: Tony Lopez
Tue 5 May 1998

Rae:

Tony Lopez,
85 Green Close
Exmouth
Devon EX8 3Qa
England
---
email:
[redacted]

Peter

At 06:03 PM 5/4/98 EDT, you wrote:
>Dear World,
>

> I'm trying to reach Tony Lopez sometime this week. Does anyone have an >address?
>
> Rae Armantrout
>

+ + + +

The Shakespeare Conference: SHK 9.0423 Tuesday, 5 May 1998.

From: Mark Perew <[redacted]>
Date: Monday, 4 May 98 16:55:42 GMT
Subject: Caliban and Sycorax: Moons of Uranus

Cornell University News Service

Contact: David Brand
Office: [redacted]
E-Mail: [redacted]

FOR RELEASE: May 1, 1998

Caliban and Sycorax: Astronomers propose names for their two recently discovered icy moons of Uranus

ITHACA, N.Y.-Cornell University astronomer Philip Nicholson and his colleagues have proposed names for the two recently discovered moons of the planet Uranus. They are Caliban and Sycorax, both characters in Shakespeare's play "The Tempest." The names are likely to be approved by the International Astronomical Union.

The astronomers detail their discovery of the two moons in a report in the April 30 issue of the magazine Nature. They confirm that Caliban and Sycorax are the faintest planetary moons yet imaged by ground-based telescopes. The discovery of the two moons was reported on Oct. 31 by Nicholson and colleagues Joseph Burns, professor of engineering and astronomy at Cornell, Brett Gladman of the Canadian Institute for Theoretical Physics at the University of Toronto, and J.J. Kavelaars of McMaster University, Canada.

The team used light-sensitive semiconductors, called charge-coupled devices, attached to the 5-meter Hale telescope on Mount Palomar, Calif., to track the irregular, or non-circular, orbits of the two moons. Regular satellites orbit near a planet's equatorial plane. The two moons are the first irregular satellites discovered around Uranus.

Both Caliban and Sycorax, the astronomers write, are unusually red in color, which suggests a link with the recently discovered populations of comet-like bodies called trans-Neptunian objects, which orbit the sun beyond the orbit of Neptune, and Centaurs, which cross the orbits of the outer planets.

Both trans-Neptunians and Centaurs, say the researchers, have a wide range of reddish colors, perhaps resulting from the bombardment of their organic-rich icy surfaces. Nicholson says this bombardment could be from cosmic rays or from the sun's ultraviolet radiation. The methane on the moons' surfaces, he says, would be "cooked" by the radiation into hydrocarbons, showing up as a dark red through a telescope's filters.

The two moons, say the researchers, are presumed to have been captured by Uranus early in the history of the solar system. "My guess is that the moons were once trans-Neptunians and they became Centaurs and were captured by Uranus and became satellites," says Nicholson. Since the newly discovered moons are likely to have been captured by Uranus soon after its formation, the Nature article notes, "their physical properties may provide clues to conditions in the early solar system."

The process of capture could have taken two forms, Nicholson says. The moons could have been trapped by Uranus gravity as they came close to the planet. Another theory, he says, is that in the early days of the solar system Uranus might have been surrounded by a gaseous nebula that would have caused a drag on the objects' movement as they came close to the planet.

Nicholson estimates that Caliban, the smaller of the two moons, has a diameter of 60 kilometers (37 miles) and is orbiting Uranus at an average distance of about 7.2 million kilometers (4.5 million miles), taking 1.6 years to complete one revolution. Sycorax, he estimates, has a diameter of 120 kilometers (74.5 miles) and takes 3.5 years to complete one orbit of Uranus at a mean distance of about 12.2 million kilometers (7.5 million miles) from the planet. However, he says, Sycorax has a much more elliptical orbit than Caliban, bringing it as close as 6 million kilometers (3.7 million miles) to the planet.

The composition of the two moons, says Nicholson, "is probably a plum-pudding mixture of rocks and ice."

All 15 previously known satellites of Uranus lie on fairly evenly spaced, nearly circular orbits. Most recently Voyager 2, in 1985 and 1986, discovered 10 small, dark inner moons.

Jupiter has eight known irregular satellites, of which the last, Leda, was discovered in 1974. Saturn has one, Phoebe, discovered in 1898, and Neptune has one, Nereid, discovered in 1949.

To see images of the two newly discovered moons of Uranus, go to Gladman's page on the World Wide Web at http://www.cita.utoronto.ca/~gladman/uranus.html.

↑ Index

91. MAYHEW

homage to creeley VIII

Tue 5 May 1998

VIII (shallow image)

As I say to my friend
freezing to death in the ancient waters
of Minneapolis/St. Paul, Minnesota:

"The darkness surrounds us
like naked stones
escaping in silence.

What are we to do?"
I buy some farm equipment
and sink into bitterness.

He says:
"For the love of sorrowing gods throw me a life-jacket."

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

92. Maria Damon

Re: homage to creeley VIII

Tue 5 May 1998

At 10:58 AM -0500 5/5/98, MAYHEW wrote:
>VIII (shallow image)
>
>As I say to my friend
>freezing to death in the ancient waters
>of Minneapolis/St. Paul, Minnesota:
>
>"The darkness surrounds us
>like naked stones
>escaping in silence.
>
>What are we to do?"
>I buy some farm equipment
>and sink into bitterness.
>
>He says:
>"For the love of sorrowing gods
>throw me a life-jacket."
>
>
>
>Jonathan Mayhew

as my old grad school advisor, master of the one-word comment, used to scribble, "apt." did u know that the word "lake" is etymologically related to a "depression covered with water"?

↑ Index

93. KENT JOHNSON

Technique

Tue 5 May 1998

In a recent post, Mark Wallace wrote:

"My own experience leads me to believe that many of the techniques necessary to understand experimental literature can be taught, with about three hours of close attention, to reasonably intelligent college students..."

Mark:

I find the above statement intriguing, and I was hoping you could elaborate, particularly since I'm planning to teach from _Poems for the Millennium_. What are those reading techniques necessary to understanding experimental literature? How do you teach them? How would they be different from "techniques" applied to understanding "non-experimental" work? Are such techniques a sufficient means for having an "understanding" of "experimental" poems? And if they're not sufficient (I assume you wouldn't think they are?) would you see them, even, as _what is most important_ to understanding?

These techniques, do they equally work for Celan as for Berssenbrugge? For Zukofsky as for Spicer? For Bracho as for Mac Low? Some techniques for some writers and not for others? For some works and not for others?

Too many questions, but I'm asking because I frankly don't feel like I employ any particular technique when I read the above writers, nor do I necessarily ever feel like I "understand" them, since any sense of understanding I gain of the poetry I most admire is always sliding and shifting. I've always felt fairly OK with this, but your position would imply that I, for one, didn't learn what I could have learned. And it would have only taken me three hours! ("Well, shit," as Elizabeth Barret Browning says somewhere in _Sonnets from the Portuguese_...)

It might just be that I'm not understanding your sense of the tricky term. But when you teach experimental literature, what is it you would like your students to "understand"?

really curious,
Kent

↑ Index

94. Herb Levy
Re: Responses to the Rosen essay
Tue 5 May 1998

(Something weird's happened to my out box, but it doesn't seem as if this went out. Sorry if this is a duplication.)

Taylor Brady's right that Charles Rosen is thinking strictly along "uptown" lines, but, hey, what would you expect from a concert pianist who wrote THE book on sonata form. It's not like he hangs out at Roulette or the Knitting Factory.

Brady goes on to write:

> For example, one of Tony Conrad's or Phill Niblock's long-duration pieces gives up its secret fairly quickly: >within the first two or three seconds, you start to hear those difference tones and beats, and you "get it." The >question at that point is what one does with the remaining 45 minutes or so. Such work thus seems to >propose a value for in-time experience which tends to be correspondingly absent in much late serialism.

Actually I think Niblock's music takes substantially longer that a few seconds to "get," though that may be all it takes to learn the vocabulary he's using. Once you've tuned into the beating & difference tones, each of his works has a distinctive shape of tension & release, built entirely from these basic elements. The structure of the beat patterns are the musical form of each of his works. If you're aren't "getting it" this larger structure, I'm not sure why you'd want to bother staying in a room with it playing, unless drones are just your thing.

Of course, the real way to hear his music is in the full Music and Film installation (on solstices at Experimental Intermedia in NY or frequently touring to odd art spaces around the world) - many hours of two or three films (gorgeously shot footage of people working usually, though there's one of a series of sunsets, and a few others) shown simultaneously while one piece of music after another is played much louder than you would at home, giving the sound a very physical feel. The music becomes something you're walking in the midst of, rather than simply hearing.

Conrad's music seems to me to be less about this kind of spatial thing & more just about the simple, small number, pitch ratios of just intonation and how dissonance can work within that system. Niblock's intervals won't resolve to small number ratios in this way, the pitches are much too closely packed (often only one or two cycles per second apart).

> What does this have to do with poetry? How far can one push the analogybetween the avant-gardes of >different arts? I'm not really sure there's an answer to such questions, but as a means of pointing out the multiple degrees of difference which might be at stake here -- "there's > difficulty and then there's difficulty" >-- the musical situation as (mis)addressed in Rosen's article seemed an interesting aside.

Rosen's conclusion is that the growing lack of general music education (and, hence, the decrease in amateur musicians who understand performance issues) combined with the dwindling number of people who hear classical music performed live rather than on recordings is the cause for the decline in interest in all classical music, not just the avant garde.

I'm not sure the situation with "avant garde" poetry is the same. There's certainly a lot more talk about the growth of general interest in reading, writing, & performing poetry & I don't see this having a lot of impact one way or another on "avant garde" writing.

I still think people need to be taught that art is NOT always immediately discernable, that there's often a lot of poking around to be done. People aren't any more or less stupid than artists, but non-artists rarely learn how to think about non-normative art in a way that's useful to them. The standard dozen or twenty questions folks are taught to deal with literary texts will work for a lot of things, but I don't think they're much help with, say, Bruce Andrews or Susan Howe.

Bests,

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

95. Jordan Davis
POETRY CITY celebrates not national poetry month
Tue 5 May 1998

POETRY CITY

MAY 14 * 7 PM
Prageeta Sharma & Bernadette Mayer

MAY 21 * 6 PM
Lorenzo Thomas

MAY 28 * 7 PM
Tim Griffin & Joel Lewis

All events are free, but we ask that you buy a book from our selection of works by past and current readers.

Poetry City is located in the offices of Teachers & Writers Collaborative at 5 Union Square West, New York City. Hosting the series are Anna Malmude and Jordan Davis. Past readers have included Dan Bouchard, Steve Carll, Ange Mlinko, Juliana Spahr, Lisa Jarnot, Bill Luoma, Jennifer Moxley, Douglas Rothschild, Andrea Brady, Max Winter, Anselm Berrigan, Edmund Berrigan, Loren Goodman, Lee Ann Brown, Rod Smith, Drew Gardner, Julie Patton and Edwin Torres.

National Poetry Month is over! is over!

↑ Index

96. k. lederer
NYC sublet for summer
Tue 5 May 1998

Hello. I poet friend of mine is looking for a summer sub-let in NYC (Manhatt... 2nd choice Brooklyn...).

He wants to pay between $600 and $900. He'll be living with his girlfriend--and is hoping for a place that would allow a cat. A studio, 1 bedroom, or 2 bedroom would be fine.

Please e-mail me with any possibilities for him...

Thanks,
Katy

↑ Index

97. MAYHEW
I have had to learn the simplest things / last
Tue 5 May 1998

More on difficulty, technique, etc:

I am with Kent on this one; while it might be true that some difficulty is exaggerated and that one can teach clever students to read "difficult" texts quite easily in some cases, my own experience points to something quite different:

In some cases I have taken years to learn to read certain poets, while other times I encounter no resistance (in myself) at all. I have to be ready as a reader for a certain poet. I still don't get Olson, I confess. Spicer took me quite a while. This is a lifelong process, is my point.

Of course, I never had much help with most of this when I really needed it. If I had been lucky to have an intelligent teacher in college I might have caught on sooner.

But maybe we are talking about two different things. The sort of superficial obstacles that impede initial engagement vs. the prolonged difficulties caused by our own internal resistances to certain kinds of texts.

Any thoughts?

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

98. William Burmeister Prod

Re: I have had to learn the simplest things / last

Tue 5 May 1998

Reading poetry? (careful there, it can toast your eyeballs!)

That's a lifelong evolution as you say in your post.

The discovery principle is best but takes gads of time.

This reader just isn't convinced of the essentiality of poetics for the reader as such. Poetics, wonderful as it is, can certainly lead one to discover new poems/poets, but why must a poetics necessarily be defined that shows the reader the idiocy of his/her reading ways?

The reader's background and articulation, defense of position (and faith?) is to be considered, no?

How much poetics is written for the "pure" reader (if such a one exists).

The poetics trend now: poetics valorizes (and polarizes?) the poet.

One usually sees the relationship of the poem to the poetics not as being onto but into, which leaves the reader to make assumptions about connections that were never intended by the author.

William Burmeister

> More on difficulty, technique, etc:
>
> I am with Kent on this one; while it might be true that some difficulty is exaggerated and that one can teach clever students to read "difficult" texts quite easily in some cases, my own experience points to something quite different:
>
> *In some cases I have taken years to learn to read certain poets, while other times I encounter no resistance (in myself) at all. I have to be ready as a reader for a certain poet. I still don't get Olson, I confess. Spicer took me quite a while. This is a lifelong process, is my point.*

> Of course, I never had much help with most of this when I really needed it. If I had been lucky to have an intelligent teacher in college I might have caught on sooner.
>
> But maybe we are talking about two different things. The sort of superficial obstacles that impede initial engagement vs. the prolonged difficulties caused by our own internal resistances to certain kinds of texts.
>
> Any thoughts?
>
> Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

99. Taylor Brady
Publication Announcement
Tue 5 May 1998

New at Cartograffiti:

Maria Damon & Miekal And -- Moss Goddess (part of the Literature Nation multi-site inter-writing project)

Linda Russo -- but i concern myself too much with beginnings / as i came along in the middle of many things (poems)

Alan Myouka Sondheim -- Five works in prose and a poem "inspired" by the Latin of Pannonius)

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

<HTML>
<BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000">
New at <I>Cartograffiti</I>:

<P>Maria Damon & Miekal And -- <I>Moss Goddess</I> (part of the <I>Literature Nation</I> multi-site inter-writing project)

<P>Linda Russo -- <I>but i concern myself too much with beginnings / as i came along in the middle of many things </I>(poems)

<P>Alan Myouka Sondheim -- Five works in prose and a poem "inspired" by the Latin of Pannonius)

<P>-- Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http:// writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn
.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>
</BODY>
</HTML>

----------154DF8494A24C9BC56D82556--

↑ Index

100. Thomas Bell
Re: what's difficult-
Wed 6 May 1998

An oblique perspective on the issue would come from looking at peots who are intentionally difficult and reasons why this might be. I'm sure that there are others who are difficult because they are difficult people. I know this applies to me - there are many who would attest to this. Some are difficult out of pretention - I may be guilty of this. But I do think there are legitimate artistic reasons for "being difficult". tom bell

At 12:03 PM 5/4/98 -0400, Mark Wallace wrote:
> Mark:
>
> Thanks for your response--it does clarify things somewhat. No need >to apologize for any kind of misreading--that's the way things on this >list go, is it not?
>
> Here is the offending sentence, in context, from my piece with >Stephen-Paul Martin and Jeff Hansen:
>
> "It seems to me that one of the biggest and most commonly shared >pretentions of avant garde writers is that our work is difficult and/or >unreadable. But I think also that one of the biggest presumptions of more >mainstream writers (journalists, for instance) is that their work is easy >to understand.
> My own experience leads me to believe that many of the techniques >necessary to understand experimental literature can be taught, with about >three hours of close attention, to reasonably intelligent college students >who show any willingness to engage with such literature. Of course, if >you're not willing to give three hours of your whole life to try to >understand something, then your inability (or, let's be honest, >unwillingness) to understand it is your own fault, not mine."

>
> The first thing to say is that your post DID imply that the first >sentence formed the basic argument of my whole piece--no need to worry >that one anymore though, I take it as behind us. The second issue (and I >suppose it's important, to you and me anyway), is how to read the first >sentence, which I take it is what you took exception to.
>
> I think, from the vantage point of several years (we wrote the >piece in 1994), that sentence seems to me something of an overstatement, >although yes, it was written mainly as a way of finding a transition >between Stephen-Paul's section and my own. From my present vantage point, >I guess I have no proof how broad any assumption of "difficulty" is across >the avant garde--but I CAN give you reasons why it seemed to me so at the >time.
>
> Before I do that, I do also want to say that "difficulty" and >"obscurity" and "unreadability" do NOT seem to me interchangeable words.
>I'm not against difficulty--I'm not even sure I'm against obscurity--but I >think I would stress that some types of "difficulty" in reading are not >such a bad thing, since a "difficult" text may in some cases simply mean a >text that needs close and complex attention, and I can't see any problem >with that. "Obscurity" I guess I would see as an attempt to make something >hard to understand simply in order to make it hard to understand, rather >than because the problems it raises are complex. That doesn't >seem a good thing to me, although I suppose I can imagine an >occasion when it might. "Unreadable" seems to me >another term--I take it usually as a text in which some part of the piece >can't be read (because the letters are covered up, say) as transparent >conveyors of meaning, and so another way of "reading" (often a way of >visually reading) becomes necessary.
>
> What Stephen-Paul speaks of is the pride that some individuals do >take in being able to read that which others claim they cannot read--and >take that as a point of pride too easily. He uses his graduate school >experience as an example, and talks about people who try to prove that >they are smart by proving that they can read "difficult" books. In my >experience, such a thing did happen all the time. Although I greatly >enjoyed much of my experience as a graduate student at UBuffalo, >pretensions about such matters were entirely common--that may not have >been true in your experience. There is, in graduate school (and outside?) >a fairly pervasive problem of jockeying for position on the subject of how >others perceive one's intelligence.

>
> There is, I think, too easy a leap from his claims about graduate >school to his claims about avant garde poets more generally, and I think, >because I was trying to make other points at the time, I didn't perhaps >deal with that issue in the detail it may have deserved. At the same time, >though, I do NOT think that it's an easy given that the community of >"avant
>garde" poets all have a conception of their work as "easy to read," >although some perhaps do. I think the problem continues to exist as a >problem--in a world in which claims about our elitism are thrown back at >us constantly, there is still a need to watch out that we don't succubm >too easily in believing in our own "difficulty" in the way that someone >like Eliot, for instance, did. Which is, I take it, one of the points >Stephen-Paul is trying to make.
>
> So I would agree with you that my first sentence in that dialogue >contains an assumption it can't quite prove. That is, it can't prove how >actually widespread the problem that Stephen-Paul raises--have we too >easily accepted a certain notion about difficulty?--and thankfully you for >one have not accepted such an assumption, and many others have not as >well. But I still think that sentence is right to the extent that I do >feel that the "pretension" it mentions does exist, and is one that needs >to be argued against, as opposed to being seen as a given. And the reason >I felt I needed to respond to your post in the first place was because the >rest of my piece does try to undermine the whole concept of "difficulty," >but your post did not suggest that I had done so.
>
> Thanks for giving me this chance to elaborate--
>
> Mark Wallace
>
>
>/----------\
>| |
>| [redacted] |
>| GWU: |
>| http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |

>| EPC: |
>| http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
>|_____|
>
>

↑ Index

101. Alan Myouka Sondheim

Look at me! Do I want to say hello!

Wed 6 May 1998

-

Look at me! Do I want to say hello!

hosts Host Name Status Users Load Inet Addr ========== abyss.ecst.csuchico.edu -- -- -.- 132.241.1.34 apollo -- -- -.- 130.212.10.167 My name is Alan Myouka and I am a "very-fun loving person." I have many friends and live in Kingston, Pennsylvania. Just recently, I have discovered this wonderful thing we call the "Internet." I have made many friends and can just stay here, in "Kingston, Pennsylvan- ia," and talk to you from my home where I am now, in "Kingston"!! cati.csufresno.edu -- -- -.- 129.8.100.15 diana -- -- -.- 130.212.10.239 futon -- -- -.- 130.212.2.65 gol.com -- -- -.- 203.216.12.4 Here I am. I am having so much fun. It is so good to be here. I have come from Japan. I am a very fun-loving person. You have no idea how good it is to be here. I am very worried about the Asian crisis. Some of my friends are "crisis friends." I will tell you more!! joker -- -- -.- 130.212.3.40 kcd.com -- -- -.- 140.174.164.52 lewis -- -- -.- 130.212.12.27 libra -- -- -.- 130.212.10.238 lifesci.lscf.ucsb.edu -- -- -.- 128.111.226.5 math -- -- -.- 130.212.40.2 ocf.berkeley.edu -- -- -.- 128.32.191.249 opac -- -- -.- 130.212.18.200 orion -- -- -.- 130.212.10.236 panix.com -- -- -.- 166.84.1.66 Now I am in New York. How much fun it is to be in New York. Here in New York there are no "crisis friends." All my friends are perfect and happy in "crisis New York." I am very happy to say this!! panix3.panix.com -- -- -.- 166.84.1.68 I am, oh oh oh, still in New York. More than ever, happiness is here very perfect. There is no "crisis friends fun-loving person," but I am here, Alan Myouka, in my loft. No, haha, I am not. I am still in West-Coast happiness, where there is no "crisis-loft." Such is my "fun- loving person" that I can be many places at times when I am there!! pv901.pv.reshsg.uci.edu -- -- -.- 128.195.182.226 rodin.ucdavis.edu -- -- -.- 128.120.4.17 sfsu-annex2 -- -- -.- 130.212.10.231 sfsu.edu -- -- -.- 130.212.10.239 shell12.ba.best.com -- -- -.- 206.184.139.143 slip.net -- -- -.- 207.171.193.17 slipnet.com -- -- -.- 207.171.193.17 stars -- -- -.- 130.212.16.12 taurus -- -- -.- 130.212.10.237 thecity -- -- -.- 130.212.2.101 I have never been here in "the city" but I will like to go to "there" because there will be no "crisis" as well. I would love these "Asian friends" to be with me in "crisis New York." I will be very happy. Did I tell you about "San Francisco"? It is known here as "crisis- city" because it is very "fun-loving." I will have another list for you so very soon!! uclink.Berkeley.EDU -- -- -.- 128.32.155.3 128.32.136.7 unix.worldnetoh.com -- -- -.- 192.147.147.45 venus -- -- -.- 130.212.18.97 zoo.uvm.edu -- -- -.- 132.198.101.63 132.198.101.64 kyushu.com 44: I want to know "everything"!!

↑ Index

102. Charles Alexander

Re: release the strings

Wed 6 May 1998

Jordan wrote:

> But Charles, I don't understand why compare Hardy favorably to Pound in order to dismiss Hardy.

I didn't think I did that. did I do that? didn't mean to do that. I was just recalling an old exercise from a class when I was an undergraduate, looking at the Pound poem for Swinburne and the Hardy one (the titles don't come to mind right now) from various viewpoints with the question to find the 'better' poem. According to the various criteria, it was the Hardy poem -- the Pound poem is one of his earlier efforts, and does seem a bit overdone. But I hope I didn't then turn around and dismiss Hardy. I wouldn't consciously do that. I like Hardy's work a lot -- poems and prose. I don't have my post at hand, but I apologize for giving you the thought that I was dismissing Hardy.

charles
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing

books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

103. beth lee simon
I have had to learn the simplest things / last
Wed 6 May 1998

Re reading/getting "difficult texts"--

This may have already been suggested (i've been off and on), but perhaps one of you could show/initiate/demonstrate your own beginning to read what had been, once, a difficult text.

beth

↑ Index

104. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Q
Wed 6 May 1998

"The world as communicable is not, itself, the real world. The world conceived under the category of quantity is not, itself, a coherent world of experience." Michael Oakeshott---carlo

↑ Index

105. Elizabeth Hatmaker
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

Mark (and whoever else wants to respond),

In addition to Kent Johnson's questions about how one teaches students to understand, I am curious about what possible outcomes there are to students understanding "difficult" texts-- to what ends do you teach "difficult" texts? So they can write that way too? So that they have the option of writing that way? So that teachers who are interested in "difficult" texts don't have to sit around talking with students about more standard hermanutically understood poems?

More specifically, what good is teaching "understanding" to literary production?

Elizabeth

↑ Index

106. MAYHEW
a quiz
Wed 6 May 1998

Here is the first stanza from a poem in J. Ashbery's new collection:

Within a windowed niche of that high hall
I wake and feel the fell of dark, not day.
I shall rush out as I am, and walk the street
Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn.
The lights begin to twinkle from the rocks
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night.
Come, Sheperd, and again renew the quest.
_And birds sit brooding in the snow.__

Line six is from Henry the V, and the others shouldn't be too hard to find either. But I was never an "English" major...

Jonathan

↑ Index

107. Henry Gould
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

What good is teaching "understanding" to literary production?

What good is literary production without understanding?

When I was in school interpreting texts and interpreting reality in class discussion went hand in hand. The parable is the simplest form of what these poems, novels, plays were about - putting a frame on reality, on experience, in order to interpret what it meant. What was beautiful or moving or ugly or powerful or paradoxical or confrontational was what the literary work expressed - the process of reading was a process of trying to understand where the author was going with this story - what meanings did it emphasize or point toward.

Do they still do this in school?

In this context "difficulty" for its own sake is pretty meaningless. The basic technique of irony is to weed out false or superficial readings of reality. An author presents a character or characters in a golden light - until you read between the lines. This is a kind of difficult writing. A poet may want to wrap his or her kernel of meanings or revelations in a number of layers of difficulty simply to emphasize how powerful or precious they are, how threatened by cliche. But difficulty for its own sake? That kind of difficulty is maybe not for its own sake but for the sake of a cult or subculture of readers who ingest meaningless difficulty for the sake of renouncing the world and joining the club. This is not to say that writing itself is easy or that a writer will never take on various degrees of difficulty just for the sake of the challenge or that a writer will never risk plunging into obscurity or that a writer will never lose command of the medium or that plenty of great writing is just stupendously difficult or that difficulty is bad or that obscurity is bad or that my own poems are accessible, far from it. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

108. Rod4rigo

Query: Heather Fuller's e-mail..?

Wed 6 May 1998

Does anyone have Heather Fuller's e-mail...or mail address...?

Backchannel...

Much Appreciated...

Rodrigo Toscano

↑ Index

109. Jordan Davis

why patterns?

Wed 6 May 1998

It sounds as though we are in a rethink time in regard to the teaching of poetry. I would like to say something provocative about the necessity of teaching the history of contemporary American poetry, but it sounds too smugly perverse to me to fill out that form with the last moments of my lunch break. So -- why teach difficult poetry? Difficulty's relative, right? That, I think, is what Mark was getting at -- sure, poetry can be hard to read, try the newspapers, they're worse. It used to be a sign of brain damage in New York City if you failed to read the Times every day -- now it's more likely you're a conscientious objector, complaining to someone about the irony on NPR. People teach what they read, or what they want to read, or so they tell me. Why grandstand?

anyway, anybody else have a look at Brian Kim Stefans' new site,

http://www.stern.nyu.edu/~bstefans

? I had trouble with the java, but otherwise, huh, wow, and huh.

↑ Index

110. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

This doesn't really address your query, Elizabeth. Just some random blathering:

The argument traditionally offered about difficulty is that the pleasure yielded exists in exact proportion to the effort exerted in obtaining "understanding" or clarity. I find this still to be true even if the text in question is no longer one that can be read by the old & familiar hermeneutical strategies. The goal, though, is no longer "clarity" i.e. a way to paraphrase content. It is rather to stand in a whole new relation to form and to language itself. (Hejinian: "the poetics of possibility"). To interpret a text is only one way to relate to it. A "difficult" text that defies or mocks those strategies invites a different way to relate to it. A different way _into_ language.

The kind of postmodern texts under discussion here (pick a card, any card) aren't merely opaque or obscure. They call into question the whole idea of relating to texts that way. Difficult then becomes (as with the modernists) a synonym for the New. How difficult -or weird- was E=mc2 in its day? The reason I guess I use that example is that it offers a new model of relatedness, of the possibilities for relating, and I think that radical new forms of language must perform the same task. So, teaching Stein's "Stanzas" in an Intro to Poetry class alongside of Sandburg's "The Grass" (instead of just Sandburg) would offer a student alternate models for thinking about relatedness, networks of words, the construction of meaning (or its lack), and the way, above all, that language set in motion tends to _play_. This is not difficult but exciting. (Memo to self: compare rise of Dr. J, Connie Hawkins-style b-ball in 70's with emergence of LangPo). (Second memo to self: include effects of Title IX vis-a-vis women's sports).

Everything risable must diverge,
Patrick Pritchett

From: Elizabeth Hatmaker
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Technique
Date: Wednesday, May 06, 1998 10:36AM

Mark (and whoever else wants to respond),

In addition to Kent Johnson's questions about how one teaches students to understand, I am curious about what possible outcomes there are to students understanding "difficult" texts-- to what ends do you teach "difficult" texts? So they can write that way too? So that they have the option of writing that way?

So that teachers who are interested in "difficult" texts don't have to sit around talking with students about more standard hermanutically understood poems?

More specifically, what good is teaching "understanding" to literary production?

Elizabeth

↑ Index

111. J. Fuhrman
Re: I have had to learn the simplest things / last
Wed 6 May 1998

One way I sometimes cope with texts in which I have difficulty understanding the poetics at work is to try imitating them. I think this method can sometimes work (for some students...) in the classroom...It's a way of talking about texts without first talking about meaning. Unfortunately, I find that students are often able to do fine imitations but then aren't able to take the next step and intellectualize the process.For example, in their imitation they may pick up that a poet is juxtaposing diction/tone but they won't be able to verbalize what the effect of this juxtaposition is or even that juxtaposition is happening.

On Wed, 6 May 1998, beth lee simon wrote:

> Re reading/getting "difficult texts"--
>
> This may have already been suggested (i've been off and on), but perhaps one of you could show/initiate/demonstrate your own beginning to read what had been, once, a difficult text.
>
> beth

↑ Index

112. Judy Roitman
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

> A
> different way _into_ language.

How about _out of_ language? Or _through_ language. Or...

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,

1927-1996 ---------- Note new area code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

113. Michael Magee
Re: Technique/Difficulty
Wed 6 May 1998

A few thoughts on difficulty & technique. To me, difficulty is a kind of prerequisite to possibility. That the poem might be more than a handshake between writer & reader. Rather, elaborate hand-signals, or palm slapping games which writer begins, reader modifies, etc. Technique, then, proposes parameters for play. What is a game? In part an admission that Connor O'Tation might, under the reader's foster care, grow up, get a sex-change, and change his/her name to Dee Notation. But also a taking-advantage of the democratic possibilities of that fact, that bit of fate. Similarly a joke: never the joke's on you or me, but, the joke's on us. Any static between interpretation and intention is less like scraping friction and more an issue of distance between radio and signal, space being the variable and deciding factor between noise and reception: music becomes a matter of moving on, adjusting the dial, directional guesswork. Difficulty, then, is related to poetry's potential agency, its ability to affect, set in unanticipated motion, an audience: the difference between "eating that fig newton changed my life" and "eating that wrench changed my life" is what I have in mind. Let there be a few wrenches between the participants, I say, a series of necessary adjustments, in the getting there.

-m.

↑ Index

114. David Zauhar
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

On Wed, 6 May 1998, Elizabeth Hatmaker wrote:

> In addition to Kent Johnson's questions about how one teaches students to understand, I am curious about what possible outcomes there are to students understanding "difficult" texts-- to what ends do you teach "difficult" texts? So they can write that way too? So that they have the option of writing that way? So that teachers who are interested in "difficult" texts don't have to sit around talking with students about more standard > hermanutically understood poems?

> More specifically, what good is teaching "understanding" to literary production?

I just finished teaching a course called "Gender Sexuality and Literature" using mostly poetry (The Odyssey, Sappho, Walt Whitman, HD's Helen in Egypt, Stein's Tender Buttons, Ginsberg's Howl & Other Poems, Niedecker's Granite Pail and Harryette Mullen's Muse and Drudge). Why Stein? Why also Mullen's work? (which isn't exactly "easy" the same way "Stopping By Woods on a Snowy Evening" is {allegedly} easy). 1) I wanted to introduce the idea of l'ecriture feminine into this class, which consisted of 50% women's studies majors w/ at least as solid a grasp of Cixous, Kristeva, et.al. as I have and 2) I wanted to re-emphasize the point that "reading" is often in improvisational activity, and not something to be performed unconsciously (when I read a newspaper, I'm not conscious that I'm reading, but when I'm reading Tender Buttons, I know) The objective was not "to teach students to write that way" though one of the ways into Stein's work was imitation (Tender Buttonesque passages on objects in the room: a map, a pretzel, a hockey puck). Nor was it so I could avoid talking about set pieces. My main objective was to show that there are different ways of relating to language. The experience was unsettling at first (throughout, for some students), but with the help of Judy Grahn's pointers found in her book _Really Reading Gertrude Stein_, most of the students seemed to get the idea that it was possible to read a work without being expected to find some final, terminal meaning. Judy Grahn, in fact, says that her big revelation into how to read Gertrude Stein occured when she quit asking why is GS so difficult and realized that she (Grahn) is the one who is being difficult by expecting Gertrude Stein to do things that Gertrude Stein just doesn't do. Above all, Stein's work (as well as HD's) opened the students to Harryette Mullen's great volume -- rather than worrying about "what does this poem MEAN" the students spent every class period devoted to her work talking about all the great things she DOES. And I do mean the students: I had to do very little talking. Students found meaning in Muse and Drudge, and they got at that meaning in spite of the difficulties posed by the poem. In short, I find that most students come to college looking at poems the same way they look at algebra problems. They exist to be (re)solved. I introduced difficult poetry to show students that poetry and language in general functions quite different from the ways they have been conditioned to believe. I have no idea if I succeeded, and I won't know whether the students really liked stein or mullen until I see the evaluations (I asked the class to rank and comment on the work). But at least some of the class discussions were lively in ways they woudn't have been if I stuck w/ anthology favorites.

David Zauhar
University of Illinois at Chicago

"I believe that the devil is in these poets. They destroy all universities. And I heard from an old master of Leipsic who had been Magister for 36 years that when he was a young men then did the university stand firm, for there was not a poet within 20 miles."

Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum, ii.46. Quoted in Helen Waddell's _The Wandering Scholars_

↑ Index

115. groberts
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

A few of the posts on teaching and understanding difficulty have been putting these words in quotation marks-- "difficulty" "understanding"-- which serves a variety of rhetorical purposes. I have found that in the classroom, students are not sometimes aware of the range of uses to which the terms of the conversation are being put. Sometimes it may be useful to pause and gather some the usages/meanings in play for the same word. A brainstorming session in which a word like "difficult" is defined in several ways, maybe even to generate a list of meanings-in-play, can be very useful. We put on the table all the tautologies, cliches, comparisons, synonyms, antonyms, exceptions, generalizations, etc. that we can think of, then "step back" a second to see what has accumulated. The brainstorming works best in my experience if it is applied to word both in its classroom context (i.e. with respect to poetry or whatever) and in other everyday or specialized contexts ostensibly unrelated to the subject at hand (poetry or whatever). This kind of exercise can make visible the way in which a group together is trying to fashion or appropriate a jargon of tribal intersubjectivity.

Gary R.

↑ Index

116. Michael Magee
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

David Zauhar: " Above all, Stein's work (as well as HD's) opened the students to Harryette Mullen's great volume -- rather than worrying about "what does this poem MEAN" the students spent every class period devoted to her work talking about all the great things she DOES. And I do mean the students: I had to do very little talking. Students found meaning in Muse and Drudge, and they got at that meaning in spite of the difficulties posed by the poem."

I've had a very similar exerience w/ M & D as well as with Tender Buttons. Once you sell your students on a different model of reading (the hard part) they have great things to say about these works, things I would never have thought of - so it's not just that you convince them that they don't have to make meaning (i.e. that they should absorb difficult texts out of some sense that they're chic or simply b/c you told them to) - on the contrary, they make a load of meaning once you get them started. I think we sometimes sell students short in this regard - I taught Bob Perelman's "A Literal Translation of Virgil's 4th Ecologue" to my Haverford students this semester expecting a fair amount of reistence (bracing for it w/ extra preparation etc) and found that they considered it both hilariously funny and intellectually serious, and discussed it accordingly. A nice surprise for me to be sure. -m.

↑ Index

117. Henry G
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

It sounds like an interesting class, David - but does it make sense to set up a dichotomy between (fun) doing and (boring) meaning? It's the old purloined letter trick, or hiding something in plain sight, isn't it? The Stein text still has "meanings" - and your students found them: in the surface playing with words as building blocks (I'm simplifying). Why reinforce these oppositions between old/new, doing/meaning? Like M. Magee suggested, there's pleasure in the hunt. These issues have been around forever - the Puritans reading for instruction only vs. all those wicked novels etc. But you do pay a price for excluding the effort to summarize, contextualize, respond to the meaning-implications. Writing is not all surface ornament, though as you say the opposing danger is more prevalent (slogging after the moral of the story). - Henry G.

↑ Index

118. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

The moral of the content is the form?

From: Henry G
To: [redacted]

Subject: Re: Technique
Date: Wednesday, May 06, 1998 3:12PM

It sounds like an interesting class, David - but does it make sense to set up a dichotomy between (fun) doing and (boring) meaning? It's the old purloined letter trick, or hiding something in plain sight, isn't it? The Stein text still has "meanings" - and your students found them: in the surface playing with words as building blocks (I'm simplifying). Why reinforce these oppositions between old/new, doing/meaning? Like M. Magee suggested, there's pleasure in the hunt. These issues have been around forever - the Puritans reading for instruction only vs. all those wicked novels etc. But you do pay a price for excluding the effort to summarize, contextualize, respond to the meaning-implications. Writing is not all surface ornament, though as you say the opposing danger is more prevalent (slogging after the moral of the story). - Henry G.

↑ Index

119. David Zauhar
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

On Wed, 6 May 1998, Henry G wrote:

> It sounds like an interesting class, David - but does it make sense to set up a dichotomy between (fun) doing and (boring) meaning? It's the old purloined letter trick, or hiding something in plain sight, isn't it?

Hi Henry: any dichotomy i established was unintentional, more the result of following this thread (fun) at the same time i'm supposed to be completing some rather bureaucratic obligations (boring), and thus i rushed something that probably required more thought. I didn't mean to diss robert frost, either, but only to point out that it seems to take different approaches to read Mullen and Stein than it does to read the canonical guys. Anyway, thanks for helping to clarify the stuff that i muddled in my hasty composition.

Dave Zauhar

↑ Index

120. James C. Hall
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

Emerging from deep lurk. . .

One version of the obvious: I think students get nervous about (some) poetries as they've had 15 years of testing. . . (Testing --> testy) Indeed, at the very moment we're celebrating difficulty, they're taking 3 or 4 or 5 other classes, in which difficulty is something to be overcome...and fast. Let's be fair: one can stand at the front of the room (or even sit in the circle) and preach the joys of openness to new strategies of reading and writing, but everyone knows that sooner or later, wham-o, evaluation-time, grades, "remarks,". . . a meditation on your contribution, yuk, blah. Why should they believe us? And even if they do, its a tough go to unlearn 10 years or so of reading and writing about books as if they were tiny knowledge-nuggets.

It's not difficulty per se that is the problem. . . I can convince my students of the legitimacy of unique "languages" "styles" "rhetorical strategies" "traditions". . . oftentimes by just looking around the room and noting different approaches to dress, attitudes towards schooling, tastes in music, ways of speaking, etc. It's culture, right? The difficulty, er, is difficulty within a process of certification. Difficulty as commodity. Difficulty within a system of education that isn't so much about education as it is about the conferring of some odd authority.. . . Booga booga. You've got it. Go in peace.

Resist. . .teach more poetry.

Jim Hall.

James C. Hall
Asst. Professor of African-American Studies and English
University of Illinois at Chicago
601 S. Morgan St.
Chicago, IL 60607-7112
[redacted]

↑ Index

121. Judy Roitman
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

---

but only to point out that it seems to take >different approaches to read Mullen and Stein than it does to read the >canonical guys

> Dave Zauhar

Or as my beloved hs English teacher said to me, "but I can't explicate this!"

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,

1927-1996 ---------- Note new area code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

122. William Burmeister Prod

Re: Technique

Wed 6 May 1998

Henry G. wrote:

> That kind of difficulty is maybe not for its own sake but for the sake of a cult or subculture of readers who ingest meaningless difficulty for the sake of renouncing the world and joining the club.

Nice (oppositional) viewpoints Henry. It seems that obscurity and difficulty for its own sake is the unavoidable lot of this avant-garde fin-de-seicle: the idea being in part to avoid absorption and subsequent diminution or oversimplification by mass society. There are as you say other more difficult , better and time honored means of doing this however. I think I understand what you mean by "joining the club" as not being representative of poet-reader relations, but rather poet-poet relations. I remember Octavio Paz talking of the existence of a poet's "secret society" of readers in an interview with Mark Strand. This enduring phrase speaks more about an economics of humanity, of the reality of minority (individual) tastes over mass tastes, of election, and even of luck. I assume that you are speaking of poets writing mainly for other poets. Pablo Neruda once remarked that he had regretted this.

> What good is teaching "understanding" to literary production?
>
> What good is literary production without understanding?

It seems that the poetics of literary production have, unwittingly, fallen in step with the times, with the techno paradigm of specialization, volume production, the consumable or throw-away, etc.

Well that does it for me. Now I know I'm wanted for questioning by the party. Maybe it's the camps for me. Sing a few bars of non nobis e te deum for me will you Henry?

The Party is always right.
- Trotsky

Rgds,

William Burmeister

↑ Index

123. joel lewis
that old black magic
Wed 6 May 1998

 Romanian cleaning woman in court for witchcraft

A cleaning woman working in a remote village hall in northeastern Romania will be brought to court on charges of witchcraft by the mayor, who fired her and confiscated her broom, a leading newspaper said Wednesday. The independent Evenimentul Zilei daily said the woman was found during office hours "burning candles on a stone" inside the village hall and "cursing hall leaders." It said the mayor planned to bring the stone to court as evidence. (Reuters)

↑ Index

124. Taylor Brady
BUFFALO READING
Wed 6 May 1998

(This message comes from Dr. Robert J. Bertholf, curator of the Poetry and Rare Books Collection at SUNY, Buffalo):

"An Evening in Honor of Joel Oppenheimer"
A Poetry Reading by Lyman Gilmore

Lyman Gilmore recently published a biography of Joel Oppenheimer entitled:
"Don't Touch the Poet"

Date: Thursday, May 14, 1998
Time: 7:00 pm
Place: Talking Leaves Book Store
3144 Main Street, Buffalo, NY

FREE AND OPEN TO THE PUBLIC!!!

↑ Index

125. Mary Hilton
New from primitive publications
Wed 6 May 1998

Now available from primitive publications -- "Saunter" by Joshua McKinney, a gentle yet challenging exploration of place and the desire to journey. McKinney draws upon the writings of Thoreau to conclude that the questioning of place, meaning, beauty, and nature rarely leads to a finality but does allow for a necessary wandering.

primitive publications is dedicated to bringing historically based text toward a greater accessibility, focusing on modern writing based on historical text, language or subject. Published approximately four to six times a year, the cost of one chapbook is $4.00 or $20.00 for six. Previous authors include Mary Hilton, Mark Wallace, Kristin Prevallet, Jefferson Hansen, and Sherry Brennan.

All checks may be made payable to Mary Hilton and mailed to:

primitive publications c/o Mary Hilton 1706 U Street, NW, #102
Washington, DC 20009
[redacted]

Inquiries, submissions, or requests to be included on the mailing list are welcome. Thank you. =

↑ Index

126. John Tranter

Report on the Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry

Wed 6 May 1998

Issue # 4 of Jacket magazine is presently being compiled.
Items of special interest so far available:

- Lugubrious, elegant and pointed ruminations by Bernardo Soares on the Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry, held in Cambridge England in April 1998;

- Lawrence Joseph's review of Hans Magnus Enzensberger's new book of poems "Kiosk";

- David Lehman on the "Questions of Postmodernism".

Jacket # 4 is available, free, at http://www.jacket.zip.com.au/jacket04/index04.html

from
John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Sydney, Australia
tel ([redacted] fax ([redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/tranter/3poems-interview.html
Editor, Jacket magazine: http://www.jacket.zip.com.au

↑ Index

127. Samuel R. Truitt
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

Poetry is never more that the gap between form and content.

> The moral of the content is the form?
> ----------
> From: Henry G
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Technique
> Date: Wednesday, May 06, 1998 3:12PM
>
> It sounds like an interesting class, David - but does it make sense to set up a dichotomy between (fun) doing and (boring) meaning? It's the old purloined letter trick, or hiding something in plain sight, isn't it? The Stein text still has "meanings" - and your students found them: in the surface playing with words as building blocks (I'm simplifying). Why reinforce these oppositions between old/new, doing/meaning? Like M. Magee suggested, there's pleasure in the hunt. These issues have been around forever - the Puritans reading for instruction only vs. all those wicked novels etc. But you do pay a price for excluding the effort to summarize, contextualize, respond to the meaning-implications. Writing is not all surface ornament, though as you say the opposing danger is more prevalent (slogging after the moral of the story). - Henry G.

Nec spe nec metu

Sam Truitt
123 West 78th Street, No. 4
New York, NY 10024

[redacted]

↑ Index

128. Henry G
Re: Technique
Wed 6 May 1998

On Wed, 6 May 1998 20:54:35 -0400 Samuel R. Truitt said:
>Poetry is never more that the gap between form and content.
>
>>The moral of the content is the form?

OK Sam, yes, you win, nec spe nec metu. Babbling banalities. The rule is, though, as I understand it, that poetry is a sort of cosmological structure of increasing densities or destinies, gradually approaching the moral-historical and reaching the fatal. Thus the search for "completed meaning" or the "organic" structure or wholeness of a work of art leads eventually to that transition to complete absorption. Something like what Mandelstam meant about "the meaning of a poet's life becomes clear at the moment of death". Poets on the level of Vallejo, Akhmatova, Celan, Dickinson - absorbing a life in its entirety. (This is sort of naive illusion- mongering, yet there's something to it. Many are called, few are chosen.) Who said "poetry is hero-worship"? These greatest poets cry out that life is wholeness, wholeness of meaning, completion, fruition, attainment, ripeness, abundance. There is no dialectic here, as if poetry were a vacation from decision and meaning, a sort of rebellion, a game for pampered children without consequence, a sophisticated amorality. How does that Rilke phrase go, something about at life's foundations, chance does not exist. What he means is we make a decision. There are these levels in poetry, and the greatest poems leave nothing to chance. Form and content!! Between the poet and the poem - both setting their faces toward each other - form & content are caught in a vise. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

129. Billy Little

Re: I have had to unlearn the conventional ideas first

Wed 6 May 1998

---

yes i think imitation helps and i think writing the poem out helps and hearing the poem read or reading it aloud yourself or playing with it(replacing the nouns replacing the verbs)or "translating" like Zukofsky brodsky on frost makes it clear there's understanding and UNDERSTANDING.

↑ Index

130. R. Gancie

Colossal Gamma Ray Blast

Wed 6 May 1998

"Modern science thus simply carries through in its methodology what experience has always striven after. Experience is valid only if it is confirmed; hence its dignity depends on its fundamental repeatability. But this means that experience, by its very nature, abolishes its history. This is true even of everyday experience, and how much more for any scientific version of it. Thus it is not just a chance one-sided emphasis of modern scientific theory, but has a foundation in fact, that the theory of experience is related teleologically to the truth that is derived fron it. In recent times Edmund Husserl..."---Hans-Georg Gadamer, Truth and Method.---c.p.

↑ Index

131. Linda Russo
Carto &BUFFALo
Thu 7 May 1998

Dear Taylor --

Cartografitti looks great!! i'm proud to be among that assemblage. Wendy Kramer's work looks familiar -- do you have it on your walls?
thx for fixing the spaces. I really appreciate it.
Already an e-acquiantance has emailed a response to "as i came along"

& how is botany coming along? in my essay on women edited pubs i'd like to write something about women-edited ezines --

i have another q. -- would you happen to be looking for someone to take over your lease (assuming you and tanya are still leaving?) I'm starting to stress about the move. I'm so excited to leave that i envision selling things @ our moving sale.

& thx again -- linda

↑ Index

132. Linda Russo
Oops re: Carto Buffalo
Thu 7 May 1998

if you've read the original post, you'll notice it was missent! I hope you read it taylor!

sorry.

↑ Index

133. charles alexander praise
Thu 7 May 1998

John Tranter

I keep coming to Jacket -- for content and for web presentation. Thank you.

Is Jacket open for submissions, e-mail or postal?

thanks,

charles alexander

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

134. nico vassilakis

(xo)

Thu 7 May 1998

((((((

((((((((((((((((((((((((((((((()))))))

138. Samuel R. Truitt
Re: Technique
Thu 7 May 1998

Thank you Henry for your thoughtful ballast.

What I was gunning to get down is that the poetic per se is outside of technique---a runway (for models or airplanes and sometimes model airplanes)----but rather a function of grace. As Aquinas pointed out grace is not a function of effort, the "vice" clench. The wholeness you speak of is there---is here--is present. The truer translation from new testament you cite is not "few choosen" but "few choose to respond." But there's a lot of choice in chance----4 out of 6 letters, those loaded dice. As a critic once wrote artists put a frame around what is already there and say "look." A kind of finger pointing, and not always a painted heaven viz Sistine Chapel. It's just not out there but here. As Rilke also wrote, "where two heartways meet there stands no temple to Apollo."

> On Wed, 6 May 1998 20:54:35 -0400 Samuel R. Truitt said:
> Poetry is never more that the gap between form and content.
>
> The moral of the content is the form?
>
> OK Sam, yes, you win, nec spe nec metu. Babbling banalities.
> The rule is, though, as I understand it, that poetry is a sort of > cosmological structure of increasing densities or destinies, > gradually approaching the moral-historical and reaching the fatal.
> Thus the search for "completed meaning" or the "organic" structure > or wholeness of a work of art leads eventually to that transition > to complete absorption. Something like what Mandelstam > meant about "the meaning of a poet's life becomes clear at the moment > of death".
> Poets on the level of Vallejo, Akhmatova, Celan, Dickinson - absorbing
> a life in its entirety. (This is sort of naive illusion- > mongering, yet there's something to it. Many are called, few are > chosen.) Who said "poetry is hero-worship"? These greatest poets > cry out that life is wholeness, wholeness of meaning, completion, > fruition, attainment, ripeness, abundance. There is no dialectic here, > as if poetry were a vacation from decision and meaning, a sort of > rebellion, a game for pampered children without consequence, a sophisticated > amorality. How does that Rilke phrase go, something about at life's > foundations, chance does not exist. What he means is we make a decision.
> There are these levels in poetry, and the greatest poems leave nothing > to chance. Form and content!! Between the poet and the poem - both > setting their faces toward each other - form & content are caught in a > vise. - Henry Gould

Nec spe nec metu

Sam Truitt
123 West 78th Street, No. 4
New York, NY 10024

[redacted]

↑ Index

139. Jordan Davis
loud clover swerve
Thu 7 May 1998

Rec'd in mail:

Gare du Nord vol. 2 .. Kyger, Padgett, Notley, Oliver, Milne, Jarnot, Denby, O'Hara, E. Berrigan, Mulford, Gaspar tr. Riley, Wing, Rothenberg, Kemenczky tr. Mottram.

Tripwire no. 1 .. T. Davis, Brennan, Hale, Morrison, Toscano, Sikelianos, Wallace, Lin, Buuck, Robinson.

Faucheuse 2 .. Grubbs, Bruno, Moxley, Corless-Smith, Lucas, Caples, Rohrer, J. Davis, Shakespeare tr. Jouve tr. Krukowski, Yang.

12 Possible Titles no. 1 .. Ahern, Mohre, Boggs, Snipe.

The Haiku Year .. Gilroy, Grace, McKay, Martin, Phillips, Roth, Stipe.

↑ Index

140. Henry
Re: Technique
Thu 7 May 1998

Completely agree with you, Sam (but is that really so about the choose rather than chosen?). Once again the "grace" definition in Trans. Friend is apropos (http://www.morningred.com/friend). I just think the fatal quality - the vise-grip of the poem - where every micro-syllable is exact and unexpected and absolute - is also an effect of grace. Grace is not only liberation and release; it's the way, it's the ultimate. The very aptitude for hard labor is a gift too. Girded. Awake and ready to go. Ready to go very out to lunch. - Henry G.

↑ Index

141. MAYHEW
technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

Are the producers and the readers of poetry the same exact people? If so, that would explain a certain emphasis on specialized technique and poetics. The reader according to this model is either a) poet or other artist, publisher etc b) literary critic/professor or c) student. If grad student then training to be (c) or already (a). If undergrad. fulfilling misc. requirements in highly specialized areas unrelated to one another and acquiring 'cultural capital' (P. Bourdieu).

Here is my crude sociological analysis, I welcome more refined ones:

"academic poetry"--the poetry of neo-conservative Eastern elites, ivy league schools etc... Requires an educated reader, acculturated into this elite class; "intellectual" but basically accepting of received notions of aesthetics. (Richard Howard, Anthony Hecht, James Merrill; the new formalists).

"creative writing"--the poetry of the suburban, reasonably well-educated, reasonably liberal, midwestern middle classes. The kind of people that feel edified by listening to Donald Hall on NPR. Not quite as cultured in the traditional, euro-centric Eastern elite model. You don't have to know who Dante is to practice this mode, or indeed to have read any poetry before 1975. You are likely to live in the mid-west and admire William Stafford.

"language poetry"--the poetry of urban intellectuals, largely bi-costal. Education overlaps somewhat with academic poets but is less elite institutionally speaking; more likely to be autodidacts or to have studied in less conventional ways. Identified with left politics. A more oblique relation to the academic institution: Adjunct, teaching in a field other than "English" or "creative writing," librarian. Agressively intellectual about poetry, rejecting the anti-intellectualism of "creative writing" and the neo-conservative elitism of "academic poetry."

This is all I have energy for at the moment; there are perhaps two or three other categories...

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

142. henry mouf
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

More, more, Jonathan! the funny thing is there are no poets in any of those categories. Here's where the real poets are:

"byt poetry" - the poetry of "byt" (everyday life). These poets are usually either on the street or trying to get there. Either in their minds or for real. Self-non-educated. They started reacting poetically to experience at a young age; this reaction has become second nature; you find them at open mikes, bars, coffee houses, tenements. Their poetry ranges from the naive to the sophisticated, the vulgar to the learned, usually in a presentation that involves some kind of exhibitionism. Whitman and King David are the great exemplars of this mode. Most of the people in the other sociological categories you mentioned consider byt poets beneath contempt; but then, these people aren't poets. This also explains why the Muse is absent in America. Right. Ask Bob Holman. - Henry again, being Henry

↑ Index

143. ScoutEW
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

In a message dated 5/7/98 9:59:09 AM, you wrote:

<<"creative writing"--the poetry of the suburban, reasonably well-educated, reasonably liberal, midwestern middle classes. The kind of people that feel edified by listening to Donald Hall on NPR. Not quite as cultured in the traditional, euro-centric Eastern elite model. You don't have to know who Dante is to practice this mode, or indeed to have read any poetry before 1975. You are likely to live in the mid-west and admire William Stafford.

"language poetry"--the poetry of urban intellectuals, largely bi-costal. Education overlaps somewhat with academic poets but is less elite institutionally speaking; more likely to be autodidacts or to have studied in less conventional ways. Identified with left politics. A more oblique relation to the academic institution: Adjunct, teaching in a field other than "English" or "creative writing," librarian. Agressively intellectual about poetry, rejecting the anti-intellectualism of "creative writing" and the neo-conservative elitism of "academic poetry."

This is all I have energy for at the moment; there are perhaps two or three other categories...>>

Sometime things on this list make me laugh, and well this stuff is either a joke or just too fucking much...

Erik Sweet

↑ Index

144. MAYHEW
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

Well ScoutEW, it is supposed to make you laugh, AND is supposed to be too fucking much as well, in your eloquent phrase, so both goals are accomplished. As for you Henry, I reject the category of real poet who magically frees herself from all such factors. A few more categories:

amateur poetry--the poetry of all my aunts, sisters, cousins, who have published poetry. College educated on the whole, but not professionally invested in the poetry world. They publish in community college Literary magazines; are part of the clientele for "creative writing," often in less academic settings. I know more women then men in this category but that might just be my extended family.

poetry based on identity politics--this is a tricky category because it overlaps with all the preceding ones. Cherrie Moraga was here the other day and read an autobiographical narrative that stylistically was identical to "creative writing" prose, with a few Spanish words thrown in. Other identity poetry is amateur, from the sociological point of view. The poetry of elite neo-conservative gay men, while not framed as "identity politics" does express the habitus of an easily identifiable group. Identity politics also intersects with language poetry... I haven't worked this out yet; I guess what I'm talking about is poetry that expresses the aims of social movements in a fairly direct way.

JM

↑ Index

145. William Burmeister Prod
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

On May 7, 11:13am, ScoutEW wrote:
> Subject: Re: technical difficulties
> In a message dated 5/7/98 9:59:09 AM, you wrote:
>
> <<"creative writing"--the poetry of the suburban, reasonably well-educated, > reasonably liberal, midwestern middle classes. The kind of people that > feel edified by listening to Donald Hall on NPR. Not quite as cultured in > the traditional, euro-centric Eastern elite model. You don't have to know > who Dante is to practice this mode, or indeed to have read any poetry > before 1975. You are likely to live in the mid-west and admire William > Stafford.

>
> "language poetry"--the poetry of urban intellectuals, largely bi-costal.
> Education overlaps somewhat with academic poets but is less elite > institutionally speaking; more likely to be autodidacts or to have studied > in less conventional ways. Identified with left politics. A more > oblique relation to the academic institution: Adjunct, teaching in a > field other than "English" or "creative writing," librarian. Agressively > intellectual about poetry, rejecting the anti-intellectualism of "creative > writing" and the neo-conservative elitism of "academic poetry."
>
> This is all I have energy for at the moment; there are perhaps two or > three other categories...>>
>
> Sometime things on this list make me laugh, and well this stuff is either a > joke
> or just too fucking much...
>
> Erik Sweet
>-- End of excerpt from ScoutEW

Hello Eric! I wish it were a joke. Unfortunately it is not and therefore is fucking too much I agree. Henry's assent doesn't help either.

Best,

William Burmeister

↑ Index

146. John Latta
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

On Thu, 7 May 1998, MAYHEW wrote:

> professionally invested in the poetry world

Here's one scary notion. And one that "careers" blindly across categories. Those spinster aunts got one thing right by being not...

John Latta

↑ Index

147. k. lederer
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

I think I'm a little confused here about language poetry--

Didn't Palmer and Hejinian go to Harvard? Scalapino to an MA at Berkeley? Watten a PhD at Berkeley?

And then there's Iowa... which at this point is basically an "academic poetry" center (lots of Ivy-League etc...)... but is also in the Midwest... with Marvin Bell still teaching here...

I would say that most of the students at Iowa study at one time or other with a member of all of the categories being posted here (including the spinster aunt...)

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

148. Michael Magee
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

"Identity politics also intersects with language poetry... I haven't worked this out yet; I guess what I'm talking about is poetry that expresses the aims of social movements in a fairly direct way.

JM"

This is beating a terminally ill horse I guess, but this seems not even to be at the level of caricature, not worked out indeed. How in the world is a Carla Harryman, a Bob Perelman, Hejinian, Bernstein, practicing "identity politics"? however else one might define them as "language poets." Is the resolute refusal of a stable subject compatible with identiy politics? Not any brand I know of. -m.

↑ Index

149. Judy Roitman
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

> I think I'm a little confused here about language poetry--
>
> Didn't Palmer and Hejinian go to Harvard? Scalapino to an MA at Berkeley? Watten a PhD at Berkeley?

> And then there's Iowa... which at this point is basically an "academic poetry" center (lots of Ivy-League etc...)... but is also in the Midwest... with Marvin Bell still teaching here...
>
> I would say that most of the students at Iowa study at one time or other with a member of all of the categories being posted here (including the spinster aunt...)
>
> Best,
> Katy

Jonathan himself works in Kansas, commutes to St. Louis. Susan Smith Nash (or is it Nash Smith, I always blow it, sorry) lives in Oklahoma. The geography is a little inaccurate.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

150. MAYHEW
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

My aunts are not "spinsters," by the way; that is not a word I ever use. Plus, the ones I am thinking of are married or divorced with numerous offspring. I find it curious that the word spinster somehow insinuated itself into the discussion, through the cultural cliche "spinster aunt."

Otherwise, thanks for all your corrections.

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

151. henry
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

On Thu, 7 May 1998 10:51:26 -0500 MAYHEW said:
>accomplished. As for you Henry, I reject the category of real poet who >magically frees herself from all such factors. A few more categories:

That's the magic of it - rejection reinforces the category. - Henry can't be byt

↑ Index

152. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: (xo)
Thu 7 May 1998

```
c y c l o p e a n l y y e r s y y c l o p e a n l y y e r r cyclopeanly    e
lopian         y                    attention!! attention!!
opiano  l        y                   cyclopean players who penche          l                    demand to be percolated e  nor a          n aspirant       a                     evidence of Kennedy nominativ        e                 CIA coverup / secure lop-ea          p                    Key mQCNAzLdF24AAAEEALdNBHN2WDHPr/3sJX/bjpg21CINweelxy86Gjs5VEpuO dhU
ypolicy           o
y rs ahm       l                     cannot transmit on insecure line ecam              c ryso            y                    .More later save buffers   c
                                   XO
```

↑ Index

153. William Burmeister Prod
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

On May 7, 12:44pm, henry wrote:
> Subject: Re: technical difficulties
> On Thu, 7 May 1998 10:51:26 -0500 MAYHEW said:
> >accomplished. As for you Henry, I reject the category of real poet who > >magically frees herself from all such factors. A few more categories:

>
> That's the magic of it - rejection reinforces the category.
> - Henry can't be byt
>-- End of excerpt from henry byt? What's that? Russian for "boot" ? :-}

↑ Index

154. henry
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

> byt? What's that? Russian for "boot" ? :-}

I believe it's Russian for "everyday life". Viktoria Schweitzer has a biography of Tsvetaeva titled something like "Byt i bytie" or Everydayness and eternity. Byt I think actually means something a little stronger - drabness, ordinariness, mundane.,.. it's pronounced sort of like "beat", appropriately. I'm a proto-byt poet myself. - HG

↑ Index

155. ScoutEW
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

---

still laughing....
still laughing...

erik sweet

↑ Index

156. Christopher W. Alexander
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

OED gives "byt" as the anglo-saxon term for byte, a unit composed of 8 bits. the earliest known ex. is in the compound "eyenbyt of inwit", which refers to the processing speed of the i586 precursor to our Pentium II chip.

thx to Jonathan for the wonderful taxonomy of contemporary po.

thx to Taylor Brady for a beautiful first iss.
of Cartographitti. thx to Alan Sondheim for "Help help we're lost in the Cosmos I say to the 89-year-old man sitting next to me as we leave Campbelltown" (incl. in said iss.).

thx to everyone, just thanks.

love, thx-1138

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

157. Keston Sutherland
Reading at Harvard
Thu 7 May 1998

There will be a poetry reading in the Tonkins Room, Winthrop House, Harvard, on Wednesday 13th May at 8.00. Featuring:

Dan Bouchard, Andrea Brady, Andrew DuBois and Keston Sutherland

The frolic is free to all, collegiate cookies and coffee and if I have anything to do with it wine will be available, also free. Books for sale etc. Please come along and support this event (a minor inroad at The Academy).

↑ Index

158. Maria Damon
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

---

yeah, thanks, jonathan. i was wondering whether or not to make that --uh --intervention but it's nice to be beaten to the draw by the person supposedly being paraphrased.

At 11:43 AM -0500 5/7/98, MAYHEW wrote:
>My aunts are not "spinsters," by the way; that is not a word I ever >use. Plus, the ones I am thinking of are married or divorced with >numerous offspring. I find it curious that the word spinster somehow >insinuated itself into the discussion, through the cultural cliche

>"spinster aunt."
>
>Otherwise, thanks for all your corrections.
>
>Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

159. John Latta
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

On Thu, 7 May 1998, MAYHEW wrote:

> My aunts are not "spinsters," by the way; that is not a word I ever > use. Plus, the ones I am thinking of are married or divorced with > numerous offspring. I find it curious that the word spinster somehow > insinuated itself into the discussion, through the cultural cliche
> "spinster aunt."
>
>
I guess if "spinster" insinuated itself into the discussion as cultural cliche (and I did do that insinuating) it's because the taxonomy as presented seemed its own hodge-podge of cultural cliches, which is why,
I imagine, Erik Sweet was having such a laugh.

↑ Index

160. Hzinnes
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

---

7 May l998

Dear Katy

I laughed at your last email. So apropos!

Best

Harriet

[redacted]

↑ Index

161. joel lewis
Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
Thu 7 May 1998

Must say there are a lot more of "them" out there then we poets realize. The readership of formalist folk like Hecht and Wilbur are mostly non-writers. Also got a Penguin copy of Robert Frost's Early Poems in a review box that included Alice Notley's wonderful new book. The editor of selection argues hard how Frost wanted to reach an audience, as oppossed to those crummy modernists like Pound & Eliot. Can't say I have much feeling for Frost, but I've known dozens of folks, mostly non-poets, who treasure him.

I must say I never had touble w/ the poetry audience being composed of other poets. Are we not a wee bit like Commies of yore trying to get people to pick up the sullen art? Many of us were non-writer readers briefly, but the urge to write fixed that. I mean, it ain't like taking up the cello.

I've found the best response to my work coming from non-writin' artists in other disciplines.

joel lewis

↑ Index

162. Schuchat Simon
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

Jonathan's taxonomy is very amusing and also amusing are the other posts it has provoked. let me however object to his original premise, which was that only "producers" "consume" poetry, i.e., the readers and writers are the same. or that you have to at least be in an academic context to be reading poetry, of whatever ilk.

first, there are persons active in other arts who read poetry (I guess that is analogous to academics in non-literary departments). second, there really are people who just read the stuff. although (as K Koch quotes somebody in the most recent NY Review) writing is an intense form of reading, it is not necessary for all readers to write. it is possible to read poetry, including by living, contemporary poets, and not want or need to write it yourself. (it is true that in most civilizations there has always been a large overlap between readers and writers of poetry, and literature has always been disseminated partly through educational systems, but the basic point is that there are others out there.)

its too early in the morning for this to be as clear as I would like it to be, but let us not forget the non-writing reader.

↑ Index

163. Billy Little
Re: technical difficulties
Thu 7 May 1998

maybe we could commission that goy rotin, henri rotin could do a monument for the unknown reader, rotoreader, they never write to me sometimes i have to write a poem backwards and read it in the mirror to understand it daed si luap daed si adnil on daed eht evil gnol

↑ Index

164. Aviva000
Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
Thu 7 May 1998

In a message dated 98-05-07 20:40:54 EDT, you write:

> let us not forget the non-writing reader.

Increasingly, I'm hearing from non-writing friends, acquaintances, and other people (who I've crawled out of my deep winter hole to speak with) that they read poetry. A dancer I met at the local bookstore (she was buying a blank book for a friend's birthday) listened to a conversation I was having with the storeowner about various Szymborska translators. At the point that I mentioned my struggles with Rilke translations, she joined in by saying, "I read Rilke almost every night last year. I love his work. I'm not sure what my year would have been like if I'd not had Rilke." This dancer is completely immersed in her teaching and performing, and has nothing to do with the "literary" world (in all its silly permutations), but simply read this poetry of her own volition. She was certainly not reading Rilke for help with her writing craft, nor was she stimulated to read poetry by the people around her. This is a single instance of the many conversations I've had with folks who find their way to a poet (or poets) for personal, rather than "artistic" reasons.

↑ Index

165. Brent Long
Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
Thu 7 May 1998

What do you mean "She was certainly not reading Rilke for help with her writing craft"????? Something wrong with Rilke's craft, Aviva???

At 11:38 PM 5/7/98 EDT, you wrote:
>In a message dated 98-05-07 20:40:54 EDT, you write:
>
>> let us not forget the non-writing reader.
>>
>
>Increasingly, I'm hearing from non-writing friends, acquaintances, and other >people (who I've crawled out of my deep winter hole to speak with) that they >read poetry. A dancer I met at the local bookstore (she was buying a blank >book for a friend's birthday) listened to a conversation I was having with
the >storeowner about various Szymborska translators. At the point that I >mentioned my struggles with Rilke translations, she joined in by saying, "I >read Rilke almost every night last year. I love his work. I'm not sure what >my year would have been like if I'd not had Rilke." This dancer is completely >immersed in her teaching and performing, and has nothing to do with the >"literary" world (in all its silly permutations), but simply read this poetry >of her own volition. She was certainly not reading Rilke for help with her >writing craft, nor was she stimulated to read poetry by the people around her.
>This is a single instance of the many conversations I've had with folks who >find their way to a poet (or poets) for personal, rather than "artistic" >reasons.
>
>

↑ Index

166. R. Gancie
copula & contigency
Fri 8 May 1998

"Where is that huge piece of method subjected to critique and clarification [---that method] that leads from the intuitively given surrounding world to the idealization of mathematics and to the interpretation of these idealizations as objective being?"---Edmund Husserl-The Crisis of the European Sciences and Transcendental Phenomenology-cp

↑ Index

167. Henry
Re: technical difficulties
Fri 8 May 1998

I'll wash your socks, Danny, if it makes me a bytter Pyshkin. The irony of bytie is that byt poets become very byt on the stryt because they avoid the dad-byt chores that make up practycal exystence in this bad-byd wyrld of urs. They nyd encyrygment to gyt on with bytie. As Julia Kunina puts it in a recynt poym:

...ottogo chto pyechali smertyelna
i razyedaet tkani kak lischaii protalin.

translated loosely:
Because grief is fatal, the fabric fades to a patchy scurf.

(I'm wrytyng a mymoir called "I Was Bytie Poet Who Lost His Ie")

- Hyrnry Gyld

↑ Index

168. F. W. Perrella
Web Del Sol - What's New Page
Fri 8 May 1998

You're invited to visit the What's New page at Web Del Sol http://webdelsol.com/solhome.htm and check out the Conjunctions literary magazine highlighted there. Edited by Ben Morrow at Bard College, the current issue #29 is called Tributes - American Writers on American Writers.

Another magazine, V_trope, is highlighted - its inaugural issue features works by Brent Hendricks, John Yau, and Gordon Lish.

Chinese writer Can Xue is also newly featured at the What's New page.

There's plenty to see and plenty to comment on at Web Del Sol; your email feedback is much appreciated. Thanks.

Anne Perrella

↑ Index

169. Mark Prejsnar
technique and fury
Fri 8 May 1998

---

*The best technique is that which breaks apart.

*The best technique is that which disturbs.

*The best formal approach is that which cannot be easily taught (that which is taut); and which does not easily find approbation within the inert structures of insitutions (be they universities, or Nedge).

*Poetry itself is a strange mystery, to those who look for meaning.

*I never cease to amazed at the profound conservatisim of folks on this list, which was supposedly founded "not as a general discussion of poetics, but of new and innovative formal approaches" etc. etc.

..peculiar

↑ Index

170. henry
Re: technique and fury
Fri 8 May 1998

On Fri, 8 May 1998 10:01:09 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
>*The best technique is that which breaks apart.
>
>*The best technique is that which disturbs.
>
>*The best formal approach is that which cannot be easily taught (that >which is taut); and which does not easily find approbation within the >inert structures of insitutions (be they universities, or Nedge).

Nedge isn't an institution, it's a magazine. Nor does it seem to be inert - it's a pile of correspondence and ms. that seethes and boils with unanswered SASEs and flows around my little nedge work area with sharp paper edges and paper clips and stuff. It's my byt & I can barely cop with it. I don't get easy approbation from SPD either, or other inert institutions of the vast and bulbous avant-garde.
>
>*I never cease to amazed at the profound conservatisim of folks on this >list, which was supposedly founded "not as a general discussion of >poetics, but of new and innovative formal approaches" etc. etc.

Where do the poetics of Tom McGrath fit in with your politico-poetic recipe, Mark? Look at all that rhyme and meter!! He's more left wing than you'll ever be. Rage on.... - Henry G

↑ Index

171. Aviva000
Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
Fri 8 May 1998

In a message dated 98-05-07 23:54:05 EDT, you write:

> What do you mean "She was certainly not reading Rilke for help with her writing craft"????? Something wrong with Rilke's craft, Aviva???

Brent, Rilke's craft is just fine. The dancer (Tracy), on the other hand, has a problem with her writing craft. She has none. None at all. She dances. She doesn't write. So, she reads Rilke for the various aesthetic, spiritual and other pleasures that his writing offers. She doesn't read Rilke, as I have done from time to time, for ideas on how I might write better poetry. That's all I was trying to say!

↑ Index

172. Aviva000
conservatism on this list...
Fri 8 May 1998

In a message dated 98-05-08 10:01:45 EDT, you write:

> the profound conservatisim of folks on this list,

Mark, which instances of conservatism (for example, or most recently) are you thinking of?

↑ Index

173. DANIEL L. COLLIER
Re: technical difficulties
Fri 8 May 1998

Henry, et al,

I ran "byt i bytie" by the translation staff. They enjoyed it.

Byt is fairly easy; you're on the mark with everyday, ordinary life. Both people I asked mentioned first cooking, then laundry... then asked me what "drabness" meant and said "yes, that's it: drabness, ordinariness, mundane" or something to that effect.

Does this mean you're a proto-laundrist poet? (I should send you my socks... we do our laundry in our teeny-tiny tub and it's not much fun.) The more romantic overtones implied in your first mention of byt do not at all figure into the Russian word; getting onto or thinking about getting onto the street is more appropriate to ideas of "beat" in the American cultural-literary sense (or to a whole swath of 1980's hard rock & heavy metal lyrics).

The concept of a "byt" poet could maybe work into Zen sidewalk sweeping etc., or maybe could be taken into more interesting directions... what's it mean to define yourself as the poet of drab, ordinary, everyday, underwear-scrub-in-the-tiny-tub existence? (There is no valorization of the everyday in the Russian sense of the word.)

Bytie is more difficult. "Eternity" doesn't work. Bytie means "life" in a philosophical sense, and we tried "sense of life", "nature of life", and "understanding of life" without success.

One of our dictionaries says: "being, existence, objective reality" [Yuri says the last only occasionally applies]. Then cites the fundamental Marxist bit "Social being determines one's consciousness." It's also in the name of the first book of the bible: "kniga bytia", Genesis.

The point of the title, according to translator Yuri, is that Byt and Bytie are opposites which overlap in sound and meaning and cannot exist without each other. In Russian the title is playful, evocative and beautiful.

All of this may be a bit of an aside, but I enjoyed it. And if it makes Erik laugh some more, my job is done.

Danny
[redacted] -work
[redacted] - home

"Spring! Where's my head?" -- Viktor Tsoi

>byt? What's that? Russian for "boot" ? :-}

I believe it's Russian for "everyday life". Viktoria Schweitzer has a biography of Tsvetaeva titled something like "Byt i bytie" or Everydayness and eternity. Byt I think actually means something a little stronger - drabness, ordinariness, mundane.,.. it's pronounced sort of like "beat", appropriately. I'm a proto-byt poet myself. - HG

↑ Index

174. Gary Sullivan
"radical"
Fri 8 May 1998

The first cite for this word in Webster's 3rd:

[ME, fr. LL _radicalis_, fr. L _radicula_, _radic-_, _radix_ root + _-alis_ -al -- more at ROOT] 1: of or relating to the root: proceeding directly from the root . . .

* * *

I've thought a lot about this word, about one of its current meanings as well as its etymological root(s). What can it possibly mean, today, with respect to aesthetics, lifestyles & politics . . . ?

Does this word have any contemporary value? Is it genuinely descriptive? Is poetry radical . . . aesthetically or with respect to "vision" . . . today? I can only think of a handful of poets, of the last twenty, thirty years, I would even vaguely consider calling "radical," and I'm not sure I'd even go so far as to call THEM radical. I don't think, for instance, much of the work under the microscope in _Radical Artifice_ is genuinely radical . . . I think the writing of Andrews, Bernstein, Drucker, Hejinian, McCaffery is ultimately very safe, aesthetically, if not (compared to other things) particularly popular . . . and certainly the lives (context) out of which this work has arrived has been equally safe . . . which is not to say I don't enjoy this writing or respect how anyone lives their life . . . what I know of anyone's, anyway . . . just that I don't see any of it transgressing or arriving beyond any significant pre-established boundaries . . .

While I don't think the radical/conservative distinction is utterly without value, I'm not convinced it's of any significant value with respect to poetry-making in late 20th century western culture. I don't, in other words, understand the value of manufacturing camps of poets ("radical" v. "conservative") . . . if what so-called "radical" poets are doing, essentially, is largely a form of habitual attendance to aesthetics. (Which has been itself an habitual MO for at least a century).

Can someone with an investment in the Radical/Conservative Poetics distinction please elaborate their investment? With specific examples & elaboration? It'd help me think further about this.

Thanks,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

↑ Index

175. Robert Hale
Re: "radical"
Fri 8 May 1998

THE ERRORS OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

INSTEAD OF DESTROYING THE OLD STATE THE FRENCH SHOULD HAVE BUILT ON THE FOUNDATION THEIR ANCESTORS HAD LEFT THEM

YOU MIGHT, IF YOU PLEASED, have profited of our example and have given to your recovered freedom a correspondent dignity. Your privileges, though discontinued, were not lost to memory. Your constitution, it is true, whilst you were out of possession, suffered waste and dilapidation; but you possessed in some parts the walls and in all the foundations of a noble and venerable castle. You might have repaired those walls; you might have built on those old foundations. Your constitution was suspended before it was perfected, but you had the elements of a constitution very nearly as good as could be wished.

And so goes the opening lines of Edmund Burke's "Reflections" -- the foundation of modern conservatism. This is the definition, still very relevant and functional today, that some of those you mention work from/against in their various strategies -- Andrews, from instance.

Erode and destroy the old oppressive systems that don't want to change because it would involve questioning, compromising their power base, their way of life, their order of things.

At 12:09 PM 5/8/98 -0400, you wrote:
>The first cite for this word in Webster's 3rd:
>
>[ME, fr. LL _radicalis_, fr. L _radicula_, _radic-_, _radix_ root + _-alis_ -al
>-- more at ROOT] 1: of or relating to the root: proceeding directly from the >root . . .
>
>* * *
>
>I've thought a lot about this word, about one of its current meanings as well >as its etymological root(s). What can it possibly mean, today, with respect to >aesthetics, lifestyles & politics . . . ?
>
>Does this word have any contemporary value? Is it genuinely descriptive? Is >poetry radical . . . aesthetically or with respect to "vision" . . . today? I >can only think of a handful of poets, of the last twenty, thirty years, I would >even vaguely consider calling "radical," and I'm not sure I'd even go so far as >to call THEM radical. I don't think, for instance, much of the work under the >microscope in _Radical Artifice_ is genuinely radical . . . I think the writing >of Andrews, Bernstein, Drucker, Hejinian, McCaffery is ultimately very safe, >aesthetically, if not (compared to other things) particularly popular . . . and >certainly the lives (context) out of which this work has arrived has been >equally safe . . . which is not to say I don't enjoy this writing or respect >how anyone lives their life . . . what I know of anyone's, anyway . . . just >that I don't see any of it transgressing or arriving beyond any significant >pre-established boundaries . . .

>
>While I don't think the radical/conservative distinction is utterly without >value, I'm not convinced it's of any significant value with respect to >poetry-making in late 20th century western culture. I don't, in other words, >understand the value of manufacturing camps of poets ("radical" v.
>"conservative") . . . if what so-called "radical" poets are doing, essentially, >is largely a form of habitual attendance to aesthetics. (Which has been itself >an habitual MO for at least a century).
>
>Can someone with an investment in the Radical/Conservative Poetics distinction >please elaborate their investment? With specific examples & elaboration? It'd >help me think further about this.
>
>Thanks,
>
>Gary Sullivan
>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

176. Judy Roitman

Re: "radical"

Fri 8 May 1998

> just
> that I don't see any of it transgressing or arriving beyond any significant
> pre-established boundaries . . .

As a kid I was very struck by Kierkegaard's notion of the knight of faith which, in my no doubt inaccurate version, is the person so spiritually radical in the lack of taint of ego as to seem completely ordinary.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area

code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

177. Mark Leahy
query -- Sayre
Fri 8 May 1998

---

just a short question to the list;
 is anyone aware where Henry M.Sayre, the author of _The Object of Performance_, (Univ of Chicago, 1989) is based now?
is he attached to an academic institution?

thanks in anticipation
Mark

Mark Leahy
School of English University of Leeds
LS2 9JT
United Kingdom
tel: 0044 (0)113 2334739
fax: 0044 (0)113 2334774

↑ Index

178. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: "radical"
Fri 8 May 1998

---

gary, i have no answer but i find this line of questioning very useful indeed.--md

At 12:09 PM 5/8/98, Gary Sullivan wrote:
>The first cite for this word in Webster's 3rd:
>
>[ME, fr. LL _radicalis_, fr. L _radicula_, _radic-_, _radix_ root + _-alis_ -al
>-- more at ROOT] 1: of or relating to the root: proceeding directly from the >root . . .
>
>* * *
>
>I've thought a lot about this word, about one of its current meanings as well >as its etymological root(s). What can it possibly mean, today, with respect to >aesthetics, lifestyles & politics . . . ?

>
>Does this word have any contemporary value? Is it genuinely descriptive? Is >poetry radical . . . aesthetically or with respect to "vision" . . . today? I >can only think of a handful of poets, of the last twenty, thirty years, I would >even vaguely consider calling "radical," and I'm not sure I'd even go so far as >to call THEM radical. I don't think, for instance, much of the work under the >microscope in _Radical Artifice_ is genuinely radical . . . I think the writing >of Andrews, Bernstein, Drucker, Hejinian, McCaffery is ultimately very safe, >aesthetically, if not (compared to other things) particularly popular . . . and >certainly the lives (context) out of which this work has arrived has been >equally safe . . . which is not to say I don't enjoy this writing or respect
>how anyone lives their life . . . what I know of anyone's, anyway . . . just >that I don't see any of it transgressing or arriving beyond any significant >pre-established boundaries . . .
>
>While I don't think the radical/conservative distinction is utterly without >value, I'm not convinced it's of any significant value with respect to >poetry-making in late 20th century western culture. I don't, in other words, >understand the value of manufacturing camps of poets ("radical" v.
>"conservative") . . . if what so-called "radical" poets are doing, essentially,
>is largely a form of habitual attendance to aesthetics. (Which has been itself >an habitual MO for at least a century).
>
>Can someone with an investment in the Radical/Conservative Poetics distinction
>please elaborate their investment? With specific examples & elaboration? It'd >help me think further about this.
>
>Thanks,
>
>Gary Sullivan
>[redacted]

↑ Index

179. Henry Gould

Re: radical

Fri 8 May 1998

Last post for a while, then I will be quiet.
Just some thoughts on "radical"

A radix or root works paradoxically: by digging deep underground it sends up flowers and fruit high in the air.

In MERCHANT OF VENICE the character Gratiano is on the surface a brutal, vulgar, bigoted, obnoxious boor. But at the root of his name is "grace". Gratiano is like the bull in the china shop - both consciously & inadvertently he upsets the careful and hypocritical veneers and repressions of the main characters; he is a sort of truth-teller. By naming him Gratiano Shakey is being ironic - epitomizing gracelessness - but perhaps also characterizing the RADICAL working of grace, as truth breaking down the constructs of human pride, fear, hypocrisy, self- delusion (all richly on display in the Merchant himself, Antonio).

Now the political poets out there will be thinking, O God, another traditionalist Burkean deal about human nature... what does this have to do with radical politics?

Imagine this: democracy - real commonwealth - HAS to be based on a deep or radical recognition of human weaknesses. WE DEPEND ON EACH OTHER to eat, live, love, divest ourselves of our illusions. How many utopias and revolutions are based on truly reactionary IDEALS of Superman the worker God the doer of Great Deeds the mighty Just One etc... by the same token, radical life/poetry HAS to be based on a deep recognition of human capabilities. How many years go by under the dead weight of complacent and feeble establishments... "A sower went out to sow. The seed fell on poor ground...etc....The seed is the word. Some hear it gladly - but because they have NO ROOT IN THEMSELVES, they quickly fall away..." "let the dead bury their own dead..."

Radical poetry takes its proud (Luciferean) freedom and plants it humbly back in the compost of human problems and questions. That's what makes it radical, and readable. There is also radically beautiful poetry, so overwhelmed with itself that its beauty creates a radical relation with the byt world of mediocrity, the safe, the humdrum. So free & beautiful as to constitute a threat not only to the byt world but to byt talk about poetry and this byt list and yours truly byt

Henry G

↑ Index

180. Gary Sullivan

Re: "radical"

Fri 8 May 1998

"As a kid I was very struck by Kierkegaard's notion of the knight of faith which, in my no doubt inaccurate version, is the person so spiritually radical in the lack of taint of ego as to seem completely ordinary."

This is a lovely thought, whether yours or Soren's, but I think it can be used, and no doubt will be used, to apply to anyone. It can also be used dismissively, like EST's "You say you didn't get it? You got it" or Huey Lewis's "It's hip to be square." Because the radical/conservative distinction relies on definition for its authority, I want definition in any defense to challenges to it. The above isn't, to me, definitive . . . yet. Could you maybe give me an example of poets who are so radical as to seem completely ordinary, and contrast this to poets who seem completely ordinary but whose ordinariness is not causally related to their being radical? More significantly, could you explain how their radicalness transforms itself into the outward appearance of ordinariness? What that process is?

"Andrews for instance . . . Erode and destroy the old oppressive systems that don't want to change because it would involve questioning, compromising their power base, their way of life, their order of things."

What oppressive system can Andrews's writing be said to erode? His work and career arrive from the context of capitalism and literary production/career-making and readings of same are subsumed by the same context into which they arrived, having made, at best, minor ripples on the surface of any system, oppressive or otherwise. Some of his books are mass-produced, & if I'm not mistaken replete with validating blurbs from respectable, authoritative contemporaries in positions of influence and power relative to the canonization, reading and/or dissemination of literary product. His readings generally cost money to attend, and are introduced with validating verbal montages of awards, publications, career highlights and blurbs garnered throughout his near-life-long navigation through western literary society. What success or visibility he has had has been the result of hard work (writing well) and socially acceptable career attendance. Has his work thrown into question his own power base, his own way of life, his own order of things? Andrews has taught at Fordham University for the last 20, 30 years. His name pops up in _The New Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics_. His inclusion in this volume does not seem to erode the thing's power, nor (more significantly) the system which gave rise to it. If anything, it helps to support it, lending it a kind of "street cred" among those of us who do recognize value in Andrews's work. Could you maybe elaborate, explaining specifically what and how you see Andrews's writing destroying and eroding?

Please note that I'm not questioning value, in general, in Andrews's writing and career; I'm questioning the ultimate value of reading it through the radical vs. conservative lens.

Thanks again,

Gary Sullivan
[redacted]

↑ Index

181. William Burmeister Prod

Re: "radical"

Fri 8 May 1998

We still have our own Robespierres running around someplace. We have academic Robespierres, coorporate Robespierres, government Robespierres, legal Robespierres, social Robespierres, ... Get it? Isn't conservatism, in plain human terms, something to be stumbled upon? How many of our conservatives have read Edmund Burke or any other conservative writings I wonder?

The center no longer holds according to what one reads; they just don't know it yet.

I wonder what Hoon would say now?

I have to bolt--I think I hear one of my oxen being gored and all that.

The Emperor of ice cream, one of the neo non-conservatives.

On May 8, 9:54am, Robert Hale wrote:
> Subject: Re: "radical"
> THE ERRORS OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION
>
> INSTEAD OF DESTROYING THE OLD STATE THE FRENCH SHOULD HAVE BUILT ON THE > FOUNDATION THEIR ANCESTORS HAD LEFT THEM
>
> YOU MIGHT, IF YOU PLEASED, have profited of our example and have > given to your recovered freedom a correspondent dignity. Your privileges, > though discontinued, were not lost to memory. Your constitution, it is true, > whilst you > were out of possession, suffered waste and dilapidation; but you possessed > in some parts the walls and in all the foundations of a noble and venerable > castle. You might have repaired those walls; you might have built on those > old foundations. Your constitution was suspended before it was perfected, > but you had the elements of a constitution very nearly as good as could be > wished.
>
>
> And so goes the opening lines of Edmund Burke's "Reflections" -- the > foundation of modern conservatism. This is the definition, still very > relevant and functional today, that some of those you mention work > from/against in their various strategies -- Andrews, from instance.

>
> Erode and destroy the old oppressive systems that don't want to change > because it would involve questioning, compromising their power base, their > way of life, their order of things.

↑ Index

182. Robert Zamsky

Re: query -- Sayre

Fri 8 May 1998

I don't if he's there any more, but Professor Sayre used to teach at Oregon State University.

Robert Zamsky

↑ Index

183. Judy Roitman

Re: "radical"

Fri 8 May 1998

> Could you maybe > give me an example of poets who are so radical as to seem completely ordinary,

Eigner

Creeley

Neidecker (sp? I never can get it right)

> and contrast this to poets who seem completely ordinary but whose ordinariness > is not causally related to their being radical?

any recent poet laureate

But the real issue is whether somebody does something to be outrageous or because it is simply the next obvious step to take. So, for example, the work of someone like Susan Howe or Mei-Mei Bersengrugge is, in that sense, extraordinarily ordinary.

Also note, "ordinary" does not mean "platitudinous."

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,

1927-1996 ---------- Note new area code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

184. dbkk
Marianne Moore rocks at SPT
Fri 8 May 1998

Small Press Traffic presents

A talk by Megan Schoerke: ³New Light on Marianne Moore²

TONIGHT
Friday, May 8, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street
Free

Megan Schoerke's fresh take on the "arch-modernist" Marianne Moore (1887-1972) begins with an unusual source, Moore's letters to her family held at Philadelphia's Rosenbach Library and Museum and now in print. The correspondence shows to what degree Moore's poetry subverts and parodies the elitism of High Modernism of the first half of the 20th Century, and the heavy Presbyterianism in which her close-knit family was imbued. Schoerke's research into Moore's process reveals her as a textual cousin of Gertrude Stein, a radical poet whose experiments with "coding" and encryption allow a doubleness of reception made singularly clear to us for the first time.

Megan Schoerke is an assistant professor of English at San Francisco State University. Her essay "Efforts of Affection: Marianne Moore¹s Elegies for Her Mother" will be published in the forthcoming Critical Essays on Marianne Moore, edited by Elizabeth Gregory. We nabbed her in the nick of time, as she has recently won a year-long writing fellowship at the Tanner Humanities Center at the University of Utah.

This event is part of "Communicado: Real Poetry for Real People," a talk series sponsored by the California Council for the Humanities.

↑ Index

185. Robert Hale
Re: "radical"
Fri 8 May 1998

My original intention was to historicize the definition of "radical" through an opposite, and the Burke seemed fitting because it is the foundational text of conservatism that helped to legitimize the culture and politics that Bernstein, Andrews et al (and other schools, poets, factions) worked from/against (rehashed many times here). Perhaps this doesn't make them radicals in your book. But on a macro level, I think it does. Can we group people who write and teach with people who've fought tyrants and died for it? And call them all radicals? Obviously, we need to stay specific and I appreciate your questioning in that respect. I owe you a political reading of Andrews, but you might want to begin with the AERIAL issue devoted to Andrews -- otherwise, the value, "in general," as you say, is its radicality. Do you agree? If not, what is the value?

At 02:25 PM 5/8/98 -0400, you wrote:
>"As a kid I was very struck by Kierkegaard's notion of the knight of faith >which, in my no doubt inaccurate version, is the person so spiritually radical >in the lack of taint of ego as to seem completely ordinary."
>
>This is a lovely thought, whether yours or Soren's, but I think it can be used, >and no doubt will be used, to apply to anyone. It can also be used >dismissively, like EST's "You say you didn't get it? You got it" or Huey >Lewis's "It's hip to be square." Because the radical/conservative distinction >relies on definition for its authority, I want definition in any defense to >challenges to it. The above isn't, to me, definitive . . . yet. Could you maybe >give me an example of poets who are so radical as to seem completely ordinary,
>and contrast this to poets who seem completely ordinary but whose ordinariness >is not causally related to their being radical? More significantly, could you >explain how their radicalness transforms itself into the outward appearance of >ordinariness? What that process is?
>
>"Andrews for instance . . . Erode and destroy the old oppressive systems that >don't want to change because it would involve questioning, compromising their >power base, their way of life, their order of things."
>
>What oppressive system can Andrews's writing be said to erode? His work and >career arrive from the context of capitalism and literary >production/career-making and readings of same are subsumed by the same context >into which they arrived, having made, at best, minor ripples on the surface of >any system, oppressive or otherwise. Some of his books are mass-produced, & if

>I'm not mistaken replete with validating blurbs from respectable, authoritative >contemporaries in positions of influence and power relative to the >canonization, reading and/or dissemination of literary product. His readings >generally cost money to attend, and are introduced with validating verbal >montages of awards, publications, career highlights and blurbs garnered >throughout his near-life-long navigation through western literary society.
What >success or visibility he has had has been the result of hard work (writing >well) and socially acceptable career attendance. Has his work thrown into >question his own power base, his own way of life, his own order of things?
>Andrews has taught at Fordham University for the last 20, 30 years. His name >pops up in _The New Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics_. His >inclusion in this volume does not seem to erode the thing's power, nor (more >significantly) the system which gave rise to it. If anything, it helps to >support it, lending it a kind of "street cred" among those of us who do >recognize value in Andrews's work. Could you maybe elaborate, explaining >specifically what and how you see Andrews's writing destroying and eroding?
>
>Please note that I'm not questioning value, in general, in Andrews's writing >and career; I'm questioning the ultimate value of reading it through the >radical vs. conservative lens.
>
>Thanks again,
>
>Gary Sullivan
>[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

186. ScoutEW
Re: "rationical"
Fri 8 May 1998

In a message dated 5/8/98 4:56:05 PM, you wrote:

<<As a kid I was very struck by Kierkegaard's notion of the knight of faith which, in my no>>

as a kid i played baseball and watched tv and drank pepsi and anyways radical is only a word

↑ Index

187. Linda Russo
Re: "radical"
Fri 8 May 1998

> I don't think, for instance, much of the work under the microscope in _Radical Artifice_ is genuinely radical . . . I think the writing of Andrews, Bernstein, Drucker, Hejinian, McCaffery is ultimately very safe, aesthetically, if not (compared to other things) particularly popular . . . and certainly the lives (context) out of which this work has arrived has been equally safe . . . which is not to say I don't enjoy this writing or respect how anyone lives their life . . . what I know of anyone's, anyway . . . just that I don't see any of it transgressing or arriving beyond any significant pre-established boundaries . . .

I'm interested, especially in your use of the present progressive "transgressing" & "arriving" in conjunction with commenting on the "safe" place "out of which this work has arrived" -- or rather, has arisen? I don't mean to do picky proofreading, but it brings me to a question that i've been wanting to broach to the list anyway!

is "no longer transgressing" a quality of work that has arrived -- ?
and i'm wondering if this is the difference between a "poetics"
and an "aesthetics" __?

I don't believe there's such a thing as a radical aesthetics, & i'm wondering if that's in part what you're critiquing, since most of our examples have been of established writers who "were" (i would argue) radical & are now "lim(b)inal" or have at least recognizable "limbs" attached to their works (criticism or stereotyping) which point back at them, identity their work as ecompassing a certain aesthetic -- ? (i hope this image, contorted as it is in my brain, translates here) does a dynamic (or radical) poetic eventually erode or settle into an aesthetic? Only then, i think, can i justify classifying a series of questions & attempted answers (a poetics?) a or several writer(s) proposed almost 2 decades ago now (i.e. lang po so-called) as not "transgressing . . . pre-established boundaries" -- as merely existing as aethetics, as having ceased to employ its questioning/heuristic function.

I'm confused also by "pre-established boundaries" -- scalapino & hejinian, for example, did and do "cross boundaries" when it comes to ideologies of the self in relation to experience --

LH: "All my observations are made from within the matrix of possibly infinite contingnecies and contextualities. This sense of contingency is ultimately intrinsic to my experience of the self, as a relationship rather than an existence" (1988).

This may seem like old hat to a younger generation schooled in this thought (and hence it appears in our work as an aesthetic), but i think Hejinian was taking poetry to a different place, by applying this (albeit not so original) thought to poetry -- she (and others) propose a radical rethinking of the self, of poetic voice, of experience, etc.

as for its value -- it depends on what you mean by "significant" -- i.e. to who, to what discourse?

> I don't, in other words, > understand the value of manufacturing camps of poets ("radical" v. "conservative") . . . if what so-called "radical" poets are doing, essentially, is largely a form of habitual attendance to aesthetics. (Which has been itself an habitual MO for at least a century).

begs the question again, which i'd like to raise -- what's the difference between poetics and aesthetics?

Linda Russo

↑ Index

188. Linda Russo
also Re: "radical"
Fri 8 May 1998

On Fri, 8 May 1998, Gary Sullivan wrote:

> "As a kid I was very struck by Kierkegaard's notion of the knight of faith which, in my no doubt inaccurate version, is the person so spiritually radical in the lack of taint of ego as to seem completely ordinary."

I noticed that in Gary Sullivan's response the "taint of ego" got brushed aside:

> Could you maybe
> give me an example of poets who are so radical as to seem completely ordinary, and contrast this to poets who seem completely ordinary but whose ordinariness is not causally related to their being radical? More significantly, could you explain how their radicalness transforms itself into the outward appearance of ordinariness? What that process is?

or rather the question could be "egoless so as to seem completely ordinary"? a lot of innovative work is radical at the expense of the ego (in ideology, in writing -- but not in reality!). But this is probably beside the point.

thanks, Gary, for raising questions which are especially pertinent to one as myself making an investment in an academic structure as a means of income & incoming thoughts on poetry --

> "Andrews for instance . . . Erode and destroy the old oppressive systems that don't want to change because it would involve questioning, compromising their power base, their way of life, their order of things."
>
> What oppressive system can Andrews's writing be said to erode? His work and career arrive from the context of capitalism and literary production/career-making and readings of same are subsumed by the same context into which they arrived, having made, at best, minor ripples on the surface of any system, oppressive or otherwise. Some of his books are mass-produced, & if I'm not mistaken replete with validating blurbs from respectable, authoritative contemporaries in positions of influence and power relative to the canonization, reading and/or dissemination of literary product. His readings generally cost money to attend, and are introduced with validating verbal montages of awards, publications, career highlights and blurbs garnered throughout his near-life-long navigation through western literary society. What success or visibility he has had has been the result of hard work (writing well) and socially acceptable career attendance. Has his work thrown into question his own power base, his own way of life, his own order of things? Andrews has taught at Fordham University for the last 20, 30 years. His name pops up in _The New Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics_. His inclusion in this volume does not seem to erode the thing's power, nor (more significantly) the system which gave rise to it. If anything, it helps to support it, lending it a kind of "street cred" among those of us who do recognize value in Andrews's work. Could you maybe elaborate, explaining specifically what and how you see Andrews's writing destroying and eroding?
>
> Please note that I'm not questioning value, in general, in Andrews's writing and career; I'm questioning the ultimate value of reading it through the radical vs. conservative lens.
>
> Thanks again,
>
> Gary Sullivan
> [redacted]

↑ Index

189. JBCM2
Re: also Re: "radical"
Fri 8 May 1998

In a message dated 5/8/98 7:22:53 PM Eastern Daylight Time, [redacted] writes:

<< > in the lack of taint of ego as to seem completely ordinary."

I noticed that in Gary Sullivan's response the "taint of ego" got brushed aside:
>>
what does this mean?

Joe Brennan

↑ Index

190. JBCM2
Re: jobs
Fri 8 May 1998

In a message dated 5/8/98 7:48:39 PM Eastern Daylight Time, [redacted] writes:

<<
From the "Shorts" section of Thursday's Financial Times

But aspiring young Plaths and Eliots should not be without respect, she hastened to add. "What we are not looking for though is people with ego problems. Good employees always remember both that the client's needs come first and that they are part of a major organization with an international reputation," she cautioned.

is this the ego taint?

jb

↑ Index

191. Karen Kelley
Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry
Fri 8 May 1998

> I've found the best response to my work coming from non-writin' artists in other disciplines.

I've certainly found this, too--and my favorite things to look at aren't poems, but paintings. I always tell my students to pay close attention to the other arts. There are things to learn in them that may seem too simple, too bald in one's own art. Maybe it's just a way to refresh the mystery that seems to diminish slightly as one works in a particular medium for a while.

↑ Index

192. toddbaron

Re: "radical","radical"

Fri 8 May 1998

Oppen

There is nothing more "radical"
than not concerning one'self with the notion of "radical".

There is some odd form
of communication.

↑ Index

193. David Baratier

Re: Robespierre promises Danton devotion until death

Sat 9 May 1998

The next revolution in poetry will be the same, old, singular revolution probably wearing corderoys & a colored print. The malordorant reality of the craft tapers with rags and wrinkles not strung up on a silly pole carried. Such an endeavor entails immense risks and impediments to prevent understanding from sneaking in, yet to cut short the compulsion to interpret seems necessarily quixotic.

No one can embrace true poetry till they have explored the cast-out, false poetries. On this list the obvious ones to absorb are the poet laureates--considering the negative banter abounding. Some of the folks on this list would have us disreguard Robert Hass' Field Guide because of his laureateship.

Truly dangerous work is not able to be cannonized, it will destroy those who benefit from the process of subdivided arts. A slate without segregation will not advance particular identities. Blankness is the failure of alternatives to come to mind.

As usual myth seeks to solve a dilema. A myth signifies primarily by what it wishes to exclude. Before we hide a want to be seen fleeing.

Be well

David Baratier

↑ Index

194. Billy Little
Re: "radical"
Sat 9 May 1998

---

isn't the "ultimate value" not blurring the distinction between the facile and the authentic acknowledging on the way the pleasures of both, one poetry, the radical poetry's the poetry you need and the other the cunning the crafted the terrifyingly tidy maybe the poetry you want and there's avante garde poets in both i started to say camps but it's not opposition as is too often imagined in urban US but complimentary. One thing Duncan taught was when you turn Archie Ammons or Bruce Andrews into the enemy maybe you waste a little too much of your own energy that might be better spent performing your superior practice and ignoring them while they play in the corner either the contrast is there or you can't make it so by saying so, in a certain way, Duncan's opposition playful or malicious as it may have been made Blaser a better poet, another way to say it would be chose an adversary worthy of opposition or you diminish yourself. And received ideas or unexamined homilies of any stripe, left or right, avant or derriere, make vomit. You won't get ahead by climbing on the back of C.K. Williams or Carolyn Forche, rather your prayer be their poems improve and surpass your own, what a wonderful world that would be, though i don't share his harsh judgement, i appreciate Silliman's idea of going after the best, he's not wasting his breath on Vendler. and whether you want to admit it or not you know some of the radicals who are plentiful out here: i think some of us are talking about radical as practice and some others are talking about the radical as behaviour and/or lifestyle.

I'd say John Wieners is a radical poet, Duncan McNaughton, i can't believe Valparaiso isn't on the tip of the tongue of..., but of course i understand, men who do not tiptoe around the correct are feared and ignored and called incomprehensible, if you're teaching contemporary american poetry and not teaching McNaughton you're not teaching, who's written a jazz poem like Black Spoon, only Baraka's in the tradition is in this league, and not teaching Baraka, that would qualify as cowardice, Rodefer, he's radical,Hannah Weiner, alice notley, Dodie Bellamy, they're fearless, Maxine Gadd, Gerry Gilbert,Nate Mackey, Gerry Creede, Kevin Davies, Jeff Derksen, Lisa Robertson, full steam poets, poets who aren't afraid to be fools, Jennifer Dunbar and Edward Dorn, jeremy prynne, instanter, David and Eleanora Antinova, Armand Schwerner, lots of radicals out here, Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, Judy Copithorne, Rhoda Rosenberg, Victor Coleman,i could go on all night, take off your blinders boys and girls it's not only apples and oranges and tenures and genders its pomegranites and kumquats and salmonberries and welfare and saxophones and violins and Linton Kwesi Johnson and Attilla The Stockbroker and La Loca, get out of that library and rattle them pots and pans.

↑ Index

195. Martin Spinelli jobs
Sat 9 May 1998

From the "Shorts" section of Thursday's Financial Times

(London) A report issued yesterday by Europe's leading poetry firms promises a rise in entry-level and middle management positions. The report, titled "Versing 2000," predicts a 18 percent growth in the field before the millennium. In the report's introduction, Madallene Drucille of the Belgium- based Poeticom, says "We are looking for talented and ambitious young writers with a professional interest in poetry." Today's poets need not feel hamstrung by literary history, says Drucille. "In fact, too much of a familiarity with old forms can be a real liability for perspective employees. We need writers not afraid to take chances, and we look for that in writing samples," she later offered in a phone conversation with the FT. But aspiring young Plaths and Eliots should not be without respect, she hastened to add. "What we are not looking for though is people with ego problems. Good employees always remember both that the client's needs come first and that they are part of a major organization with an international reputation," she cautioned. Eike Kahlheit of Bonn's Uberreden concurs in his contribution to the report. Kahlheit says Uberreden requires some firm guiding hands. "The real need is for supportive but stern manager-editors, people with experience focusing the energy of those on the shop floor." Later he states that "Distraction is real problem for our new employees. So much so that we have taken to restricting Internet access on most of our PCs to business related sites only." Drucille adds, "It's a tough balancing act between nurturing the creative process and seeing that the work gets done. Experience in retail management is a major plus." Poeticom has today announced that it wil soonl begin a job search for two mangers to oversee stables of twenty each. Share prices on all listed poetry firms are expected to increase steadily in the wake of the report until the summer slow-down.

↑ Index

196. Kevin Varrone
reading announcement
Sat 9 May 1998

Philadelphia reading:

5 Corners Poetry Series Presents:

Gregg Biglieri & Lisa Jarnot

Thursday, May 21st, 8 p.m.
@ george's 5th Street Cafe

(5th & Gaskill Streets, between Lombard and South Strets)

For info, directions, etc., backchannel or call Kevin
@ 215/[redacted]

This will be the last 5 Corners reading of the season.
If you're in the area, stop in.

Thanks
kevin

↑ Index

197. Annie Finch poetry/the cello
Sat 9 May 1998

Joel Lewis wrote:
"Many of us were non-writer readers briefly, but the urge to write fixed that. I mean, it ain't like taking up the cello. "

Why/how not?

Annie

Date: Fri, 8 May 1998 00:47:22 +0100
From: joel lewis <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Non-Writing Readers of Poetry

Must say there are a lot more of "them" out there then we poets realize. The readership of formalist folk like Hecht and Wilbur are mostly non-writers. Also got a Penguin copy of Robert Frost's Early Poems in a review box that included Alice Notley's wonderful new book. The editor of selection argues hard how Frost wanted to reach an audience, as oppossed to those crummy modernists like Pound & Eliot. Can't say I have much feeling for Frost, but I've known dozens of folks, mostly non-poets, who treasure him.

I must say I never had touble w/ the poetry audience being composed of other poets. Are we not a wee bit like Commies of yore trying to get people to pick up the sullen art? Many of us were non-writer readers briefly, but the urge to write fixed that. I mean, it ain't like taking up the cello.

I've found the best response to my work coming from non-writin' artists in other disciplines.

joel lewis

_____
_____
_____

Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

198. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
Listen to the Machingbyrd
Sat 9 May 1998

"'The world is given to us only once', wrote Ernst Mach, which means that statements implying ahistorical regularities are idealizations, or 'instruments', not descriptions of reality.---Paul Feyerabend-Farewell to Reason---cp

↑ Index

199. Michael Magee
Re: radical
Sat 9 May 1998

From Henry:
"Imagine this: democracy - real commonwealth - HAS to be based on a deep or radical recognition of human weaknesses."

Two, I think, resonant quotes in light of Henry's request (imagine this...):

Melville's Ishmael: "Heaven have mercy on us all - Presbyterians and Pagans alike - for we are all somehow dreadfully cracked about the head, and sadly need mending."

and Robert Creeley:

"The imagination of a commonwealth must make that sharing literal - there cannot be an invested partiality hidden from the participants...Realize that the general, the we-ness proposed in various realities, may well prove to be this kind. Obviously, any 'we' must, willynilly, submit to the organic orders of its existence: must sleep, must eat, must drink, most move, must die. But that is very nearly the totality of the actual demand. Elsewise, the 'geography leans in,' as Olson put it. Place is a real event - where you are is a law equal to what you are."

-m.

↑ Index

200. Jordan Davis
"Non-violent paraphrase and self-defeating maps," or, your fun is a snob
Sat 9 May 1998

THE CAMPAIGN TO STOP ERIK'S LAUGHING FIT

Any time you say what someone else said _in your own words_ you are saying something else. But verbatim, who among is is is T. S. Eliot? or Ezra Pound? or their greatgodson Ted Berrigan? still there must be a way to talk about what other people talk about without seeming angry or unintelligent.

Jonathan's mapdrawing is nothing new and therefore no more attractive to laughter than anyone say Bob Grumman's or Miekal And's neologistics or Bob Perelman's chapter. Jonathan's jokes make me laugh more though. Maps and censuses need remaking constantly but they don't, you just need to have allies (friends) everywhere you go.

Now this message must turn to the cello. There will be two reading/ recitals in June by me and cellist Louise Dubin, whose poems have appeared in the Poetry Project Newsletter among other places. The first reading is the weekend of June 7 at International House at Columbia, the second is June 18, 6 pm or so at Teachers & Writers.

Poetry Project's Ymposium in full steam. Tim Atkins, Julie Patton, Mark Nowak, Brenda Coultas have all given readings you would have found admirable. T/K: Tim Davis, Ange Mlinko, Rod Smith, Gary Lenhart, etc etc etc etc etc. See you there? I have to go write my talk about identity and invention (ulp) now. Wish me luck.

↑ Index

201. ScoutEW
Re: radical
Sat 9 May 1998

In a message dated 5/9/98 3:50:59 PM, you wrote:

<< Place is a real event - where you are is a law equal to what you are.">>

and as Edward Dorn says, Place can be effete... good luck everyone thru the May showers

↑ Index

202. henry g
Re: radical
Sat 9 May 1998

On Sat, 9 May 1998 12:21:39 EDT ScoutEW said:
>
>and as Edward Dorn says, Place can be effete...

The obsolete (worn-out, effete) is the key to the future. The effete is the most powerful thing in the world because it asserts its own absolute value flying in the face of all byt practicality - the whole trade of life. Check out the film version of the Russian novel "Oblomov" for a good example. I go back to "radical" and the action of roots. Mark Prejsnar started all this off saying innovative poetry tears apart, breaks up. This is true, but not in the way of critical analysis (which breaks up & also keeps the analyst/observer at a distance). Poetry, via imitation & pathos, divides and binds together the opposites - grace and disgrace, in a way that the observer experiences & participates in. Poetry is both precious and radical. It's preciousness - i.e. the beauty of language in itself, the music of language - is like the flower, the radical beauty which challenges the byt world. It's radicalness is its absorption of present reality and reflection of its pressures and details in depth. It digs down like a root to the hidden disgrace underlying a society's surface smoothness, the chaos under the ordure, Yeats' "beauty sets its throne in the place of excrement" or however it goes. So when you fuse radical beauty (the music) with radical insight, you have a very powerful sword in your hand, says Blake. So Aristotle makes tragic poetry (drama) the exemplary form of poetry in general - the mediating power revealing the human weaknesses that divide and bind a community together/apart. And going back to M. Magee's Creeley quote can suggest how these forces are still at work and put to use by poets radical enough to take up the challenge.

"He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million, laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same winter and summer, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh? if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge?" - Shylock, from MERCHANT OF VENICE - Henry G

↑ Index

203. linda russo
Re: also Re: "radical"
Sat 9 May 1998

joe wrote linda wrote gary wrote judy wrote:
> << > "in the lack of taint of ego as to seem completely ordinary."
>
> I noticed that in Gary Sullivan's response the "taint of ego" got brushed > aside:
> >>
> what does this mean?

I mean Gary S. asks about radical poets, rather than poets who are radically egoless and so seem like ordinary people rather than poets -- which is what the quote suggested to me. A pertinent point, I think, as the whole thread has fallen to the side of careerism rather than poetics, if one were to make that a distinction.

↑ Index

204. henry g
correction
Sat 9 May 1998

'A woman can be proud and stiff
When on love intent;
But Love has pitched his mansion in
The place of excrement;
For nothing can be sole or whole
That has not been rent.'
- Yeats, "Crazy Jane Talks with the Bishop"

- it was Love, not Beauty. precious & radical: Mandelstam's "heaviness and tenderness", twin roses, one rose. the heaviness gets heavier & heavier, and the tenderness more tender. division/wholeness. - HG

↑ Index

205. Charles Alexander
Re: also Re: "radical"
Sat 9 May 1998

> Eigner's work is a really good example of this. I have heard that in life he was just as cranky and hard to deal with as most of us. But in his work he's just plain invisible.

What? Sure, if you want to see a diminished sense of self-importance in that work, I can agree. But not invisibility. It is Eigner who made that work, and there's certainly nothing like it. Maybe what we're talking about is more a question of 'how' the self is inscribed rather than 'whether' it is inscribed. And I think this is true of Dickinson, too.

charles

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted] chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

206. Martin Spinelli
Radical Andrews
Sat 9 May 1998

> What oppressive system can Andrews's writing be said to erode? His work and career arrive from the context of capitalism and literary production/career-making and readings of same are subsumed by the same context into which they arrived, having made, at best, minor ripples on the surface of any system, oppressive or otherwise.
>
> Has his work thrown into question his own power base, his own way of life, his own order of things? Andrews has taught at Fordham University for the last 20, 30 years.

I think Andrews himself would be well aware of the dilemma you point to... he's quite sussed about it in fact. In his LINEbreak interview (transcribed in _Chloroform_) he firmly situates himself "in all the major oppressor groups". He deals with this, and issues of the political potency of poetry in general, by suggesting that large-scale mobilizations are typically only good for shoring up the status quo. That writing works first on the writer and then on discrete readers already tuned into a particular project (literary or political).

It seems a method of survival in this sense. A way of dealing with these "oppressive systems" without a kind of personal acquiescence. And better than prosac there's perhaps something of value in the example. (Tacit support or conscientious objection?)

Whether this is "radical" or not is less interesting to me. But I do think the practice of chomping on the candy-coating/linguistic products of the culture industry in order to peak at the structures, restrictions and the pervasiveness of its ooey-gooey center is, in your words, something that should be "valorized".

Perhaps this is just my way of agreeing with you Gary while explaining an attachment to Andrews (from whom I've learned much much). "Radical"... past it's sell-by date maybe... and with "revolutionary" long dead, and "avant-garde" grounded, are we without a metaphor to call our own? "Tactical"? Howbout "Survivalist"... wear fatigues, move to Montana, carry guns that shoot fridge-magnets... I'm sure Morphy would be with me!

Best,
Nero of Buffalo
(formerly)

_____

Martin Spinelli SUNY Buffalo English Department
Granolithic Productions

[redacted]
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
ENGAGED http://www.engaged.demon.co.uk

↑ Index

207. JBCM2
Re: also Re: "radical"
Sat 9 May 1998

In a message dated 5/9/98 7:39:25 PM Eastern Daylight Time, [redacted] writes:

<<
joe wrote linda wrote gary wrote judy wrote linda wrote:
> << > "in the lack of taint of ego as to seem completely ordinary."
>
> I noticed that in Gary Sullivan's response the "taint of ego" got brushed > aside:
> >>
> what does this mean?

I mean Gary S. asks about radical poets, rather than poets who are radically egoless and so seem like ordinary people rather than poets -- which is what the quote suggested to me. A pertinent point, I think, as the whole thread has fallen to the side of careerism rather than poetics, if one were to make that a distinction.

I don't understand what phrases like "taint of ego" or "radically egoless" actually mean. in the jobs post, it means someone who isn't a team player -- both of these suggest to me that the absence of ego is a desirable end, which seems to me to be impossible, except for psychotics who are psychotic all the time. can you explain to me what you mean by "egoless"?

Joe

↑ Index

208. Michael McColl
Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
Sat 9 May 1998

Henry--answering you before I read the other 265 messages I find now that I've returned from somersaulting waterfalls . .

In what has been called "abstract" or "non-syntactic" poetry, I don't think the model of the sublime as you describe it (which I read admittedly quite rapidly) can be applied, as there is not a logical "first" meaning which is superseded or filled to bursting with intimations of a grander not paraphrasable meaning. But your point is very well taken, and I now seem to recall that Lyotard, it might have been, and perhaps others too, were much influenced in their ideas about writing by a preference for the sublime. Mike McColl

↑ Index

209. Michael McColl
Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
Sat 9 May 1998

Charles--having paraphrasable content = sense (in a conventionals sense)

The meaning of "sense" can be broadened--makes a weird kind of sense, etc--but I think it helps to keep that meaning restricted and use "meaning" for a broader sense of sense. At least that's how I was thinking of it. And it also helps to make comparisons to abstract painting. When someone said a painting by Kandinsky was better than some other abstract painting, wouldn't a defense of this judgment involve new and different criteria than a judgment concerning two representational paintings? Mike McColl

↑ Index

210. henry
Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
Sat 9 May 1998

> In what has been called "abstract" or "non-syntactic" poetry, I don't think the model of the sublime as you describe it (which I read admittedly quite rapidly) can be applied, as there is not a logical "first" meaning which is superseded or filled to bursting with intimations of a grander not paraphrasable meaning. But your point is very well taken, and I now seem to recall that Lyotard, it might have been, and perhaps > others too, were much influenced in their ideas about writing by > a preference for the sublime. Mike McColl

Music might be a better analogue for understanding these things. & I don't mean music in the Mallarmean-symbolist sense of a purification or refining away of the "world of representation". There is a more radical concept out there of music itself as a representation or expression of the essential "song-quality" of nature and creation - a sublime notion in itself. It's not that essential poetry is not paraphraseable; it's that poetry is the closest paraphrase of the universe.

"He often composed and reworked poems while walking the streets of St. Petersburg at night, with the beat of his footsteps providing a natural measure or meter (as it did for walkers Dante and Beethoven...During composition/creation he actually sang his poems, as he did while "reading", that is, reciting them without notes...As part of this orality, he (and his wife) knew the entire oeuvre by heart: once he lost his portfolio and a volume of Bergson en route home from Berlin, but no matter: the former could be bought, the latter retranscribed. Mandelshtam's process of poetic creation despite its erudite world culturalism was in many musically critical ways closer to Eskimo virtuoso Orpingalik... than to most of his Russian contemporaries. It was also closer to the Archaic Greek model that he espoused..." - Paul Friedrich, MUSIC IN RUSSIAN POETRY - Henry G

↑ Index

211. joel lewis
Re: poetry/the cello
Sun 10 May 1998

> Joel Lewis wrote:
> "Many of us were non-writer readers briefly, but > the urge to write fixed that. I mean, it ain't like taking up the cello. "
>
> Why/how not?
>
> Annie

well, for onr, the means of production for writing poetry are generally at hand -- pen/pencil, paper, stamps, the local xerox shop. Also poetry has a tradition of self-instruction (i'm sure there are good writers out there who have never set foot in a writing workshop).

Other disciplines take a bigger leap of faith. There is the case of the graet Brit saxophonist Andy Sheppard who, at age 19, bought a used saxophone, played it non-stop for a week and played a street corner concert soon after that (and the rest being history), but that is a rare bit of d.i.y.

Poetry offers more avenues for the novice artist in the culture of the open reading. You just get up, read your stuff, and, usually, poeple applaud. Ypu sqwauk at an after hours jazz session and you get laughed off the stage (it happened to a young charlie parker) and, anyways, cellos are expensive. someone will always lend you a pencil.

joel "means of production" lewis

↑ Index

212. R. Gancie
radical
Sun 10 May 1998

"The helmsmen of explorations have discovered how to disturb everybody else's peace,[how to] violate the native spirits of the [diverse] regions, [how to] mingle together that which provident nature had kept separate; [how] by intercourse to redouble defects and add to old vices the new vices of other peoples, with violence to propagate follies and to plant unheard-of insanities where they did not before exist, so that he who is strongest comes to conclude that he is wisest. They showed new ways, instruments and arts for tyrannizing and murdering each other. The time will come when, in consequence of all this, those men, having learned at their own expense (through the way things turn out), will know how to and will be able to return to us similar and even worse fruits of such pernicious inventions."---Giordano Bruno, Ash Wednesday Supper, 1584---cp

↑ Index

213. MAYHEW
paraphrasable
Sun 10 May 1998

Isn't the "paraphrasable content" (that phrase keeps appearing on this list) of most poems something like "Please love me for my brilliant, witty poems" or "Please feel sorry for my pain and suffering." Or perhaps I speak only for my own poems.

To have no ego makes no sense at all in psychological terms--Joe is perfectly correct to point this out. I don't think phrases like "the taint of ego" are meant in so literal a way, though. It's like when people say "cerebral" with a negative connotation; they aren't really imagining cognition that doesn't take place in the cerebellum--rather they refer to (what they perceive to be) overintellectualism. [personally the use of the word cerebral in this context bugs the hell out of me]

Making an end-run around the ego means avoiding a certain kind of vanity, overinvestment in one's self-concept, etc... This can be very difficult for some poets. Imagine Robert Lowell trying to do this! Jed Rasula I think it was who pointed out how many books on American poetry have the word "self" in their titles... Who coined that phrase about the "egotistical sublime"?

For some who use the word "ego" in this sense the reference is Buddist, not psychoanalytical in the least. Perhaps someone can enlighten me on this score...

Jonathan

↑ Index

214. Michael McColl
Re: Understanding and Evaluating Poems
Sun 10 May 1998

If the poet as city walker left his frail skull to peek for just a second or maybe to overhear a rumor of the speed of light at the farthest edges he step over the sidewalk and into the street cars don't begin to stop in the city in his room composing his desire for the fragmented bodies tuneful car alarm telephone raging neighbors and the bottle glass become his universe and his fear of all the poisons list them here don't tell me music there is no universe

↑ Index

215. Tim Wood
Re: technique and fury
Sun 10 May 1998

Up front, I'll confess I'm actualy very fond of Nedge (so does that make me conservative...) but I'm also interested in hearing more. Rage on, yes rage on (how does that line go?) into the sweet night... But, post here, too. Gotta leave enough of a trail for others to follow...

Tim Wood

BTW, check out my new sig (down below o'course)... one I've wanted to create for a while, the exchange between you & henry added the final bit. Not a poem I think; perhap ars poetica en soundbite (yeah, yeah, my spanish stinks).

Someone is reputed to have said

> On Fri, 8 May 1998 10:01:09 -0400 Mark Prejsnar said:
> The best technique is that which breaks apart.*
>
> The best technique is that which disturbs.*
>
> The best formal approach is that which cannot be easily taught (that which is taut); and which does not easily find approbation within the inert structures of insitutions (be they universities, or Nedge).*
>
> Nedge isn't an institution, it's a magazine. Nor does it seem to be
>
> I never cease to amazed at the profound conservatisim of folks on this*
>
> than you'll ever be. Rage on....

---

poetry is an hour
a flash
of sound bytes found rescued boiled freed to rage again

↑ Index

216. Judy Roitman
Re: Robespierre promises Danton devotion until death
Sun 10 May 1998

> The next revolution in poetry will be the same, old, singular revolution probably wearing corderoys & a colored print. The malordorant reality of the craft tapers with rags and wrinkles not strung up on a silly pole carried. Such an endeavor entails immense risks and impediments to prevent understanding from sneaking in, yet to cut short the compulsion to interpret seems necessarily quixotic.
>
> No one can embrace true poetry till they have explored the cast-out, false poetries. On this list the obvious ones to absorb are the poet laureates-- considering the negative banter abounding. Some of the folks

> on this list would have us disreguard Robert Hass' Field Guide because of his laureateship.
>
> David Baratier

Robert Hass is an interesting example. What I've read of him feels like he's holding back, not quite following through, not going far enough.

Too bad. He coulda been a contender.

To answer somebody else: for a true radical, E. Dickinson.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

217. Judy Roitman
Re: also Re: "radical"
Sun 10 May 1998

> In a message dated 5/9/98 7:39:25 PM Eastern Daylight Time, > [redacted] writes:
>
> <<
> joe wrote linda wrote gary wrote judy wrote linda wrote:
> << > "in the lack of taint of ego as to seem completely ordinary."
>
> I noticed that in Gary Sullivan's response the "taint of ego" got brushed aside:
> >>
> what does this mean?
>
> I mean Gary S. asks about radical poets, rather than poets who are radically egoless and so seem like ordinary people rather than poets -- which is what the quote suggested to me. A pertinent point, I think, as the whole thread has fallen to the side of careerism rather than poetics, if one were to make that a distinction.
>
> I don't understand what phrases like "taint of ego" or "radically egoless" actually mean. in the jobs post, it means someone who isn't a team player -- both of these suggest to me that the absence of ego is a desirable end, which seems to me to be impossible, except for psychotics who are psychotic all the > time. can you explain to me what you mean by "egoless"?

>
> Joe

Well sure. Lack of self-absorption. The transparent self.

Eigner's work is a really good example of this. I have heard that in life he was just as cranky and hard to deal with as most of us. But in his work he's just plain invisible.

Emily Dickinson is another example. In life she certainly seems to have set out some very well-defined parameters, but even thougth first person pronouns & possessives appear a lot in her poetry (unlike in Eigner's, where they almost never appear) there is a marked absence of personal particularities.

As for absence of ego being a desirable end, see almost any religion. Psychotics have different issues to deal with. But anyway I was talking about a poet's work, not persona.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

218. R. Gancie
radical
Sun 10 May 1998

The Mosquito
O mosquito, you're blessed with all nice things!
What do you lack? Why buzz and still complain?
You've rested on jade mats and ivory beds.
You've stroked and kissed rouged lips or powdered cheeks.
You've spared no children, pampering your mouth.
You've hurt poor people, glutting up your paunch.
When a good swatter someday comes to hand,
I'll pay you for your crimes without a blink!
---Phan Van Tri, 19 Century Vietnamese poet writing 100 years before Dien Bien Phu and 114 years before the Tet offensive---cp

↑ Index

219. groberts
Re: paraphrasable
Sun 10 May 1998

Bored? Then try doing something "creative"
With rhymes Byronically methodical.
What's the opposite of "conservative"?
Uh huh, yes you guessed it right--"radical,"
Though you could've answered "innovative"
And been just as correct. It's what I call,
So cleverly, a "foregone confusion,"
To which, of course, there's never conclusion.

↑ Index

220. linda russo
Re: also Re: "radical"
Sun 10 May 1998

thanks, judy, for making the distinction, esp. since i wasn't trying to make a point re: egolessness except to point out how i saw gary reading & discussing the particular quote

i'm with judy -- i read it in the sense of not having a "big ego" -- of being able to engage in poetry not for oneself (selfishly) or one's career, but for poetry -- though a notable (and possibly volatile) exception would be Pound, who (at one point or another, but not ultimately?) made accomplishments in all three (selfishness, careerism, poetry)

(call me an idealist but) i believe in poetry for poetry's sake -- & i believe _that_ sort of engagement is a very generous act -- not selfish, or self-contained or escapist, as the term (art for art's sake) is often critically applied

yikes i can't believe i said 'art for arts sake' -- a term which i'm not ready to defend (it's someone else's understanding, not mine)

i really just want to know what the/some difference(s) between poetics & aesthetics is/are. -- any ideas? anyone?

> I don't understand what phrases like "taint of ego" or "radically egoless" actually mean. in the jobs post, it means someone who isn't a team player -- both of these suggest to me that the absence of ego is a desirable end, which seems to me to be impossible, except for psychotics who are psychotic all the time. can you explain to me what you mean by "egoless"?
>
> Joe

> Well sure. Lack of self-absorption. The transparent self.
>
> Eigner's work is a really good example of this. I have heard that in life he was just as cranky and hard to deal with as most of us. But in his work he's just plain invisible.
>
> Emily Dickinson is another example. In life she certainly seems to have set out some very well-defined parameters, but even thougth first person pronouns & possessives appear a lot in her poetry (unlike in Eigner's, where they almost never appear) there is a marked absence of personal particularities.
>
> As for absence of ego being a desirable end, see almost any religion. Psychotics have different issues to deal with. But anyway I was talking about a poet's work, not persona.
>
> ---
> Judy Roitman | "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers!
> Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
> Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
> [redacted] |
> fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
> ---
> Note new area code
> ---
> http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/
> ---

↑ Index

221. morpheal

Re: paraphrasable

Sun 10 May 1998

> Isn't the "paraphrasable content" (that phrase keeps appearing on this list) of most poems something like "Please love me for my brilliant, witty poems" or "Please feel sorry for my pain and suffering." Or perhaps I speak only for my own poems.

There are two types of poetry. Only two types.

The one type is purely fictive.

The other type is as true as possible to personal experience.

Of course there are meldings of the two that make it hard to discern authenicity from fictive content. That is sometimes the poet's own struggle to remain authentic, and not fall into the labyrinthine traps of language. Too complicated a metaphor, for instance, with two many misleading nuances, that no longer says what was truly meant can inadvertently lead there. The trouble with what used to be referred to as "flowery language".

Of course, there are also those that claim all poetry ought to be fictive.

The latter is most true in totalitarian and totalistic political systems.

In some systems that is the equivalent of "make a joyful noise to the_____" That joyful noise then being what is fictive.

Substitute any authority figure that has enough power to oppress, so as to cause fear enough to squelch or silence expression, for the _____.

Boss.

Lord.

Dictator.

Tyrant.

State.

Etc.

M.

↑ Index

222. linda russo
Superflux query
Sun 10 May 1998

Does anyone have email addresses for Leslie Davis or Hoa Nguyen? Or do you know anything about Superflux (are there other editors?)

thx.

↑ Index

223. KENT JOHNSON
The neighbor's dog fence
Sun 10 May 1998

Gary Sullivan's questions in his two posts yesterday about what it means to write "radical" poetry were very interesting.

I like Bruce Andrews's work quite a bit and have found some of it surprising in a provocative sort of way. His writing is full of angry and crazy energy and that's admirable. But I agree with Gary that his poetry is not ultimately radical _as poetic act_, for its "radicalness" is merely textual and not _conceptually subversive_ of (in Gary's phrase) the 'context into which such radicalness arrives.' With no apparent remorse, such poetry enters into and validates--precisely through its self-proclaimed "oppositionality"-- the very relations of literary production and exchange it purports to critique. This is not a contradiction that only haunts Andrews's work.

(Remember all those essays declaring war on the "I" and the "self"?)

This is largely why language poetry grew exhausted and failed and why smart younger poets influenced by them are obsessively writing about their identity crisis. I suppose that sounds like a presumptuous pronouncement, but it's quite simply true. As with all my other posts, I have no doubt that once everyone sits down to think about it that there will be a happy consensus around the point.

A few days ago my neighbor set up an electric dog fence in his yard, and as I watched his poor, bewildered animal leap and yelp and pace and growl, it occurred to me that invisible dog fences might be analogous to any "radical" author's legal name. Eventually, the dog lay down and slept. Today (ah, beautiful spring, blossoms abounding), he barks and bares his teeth, and everyone is safe.

Kent

↑ Index

224. J. Fuhrman
Re: The neighbor's dog fence
Sun 10 May 1998

Kent- fascinating post-- Who would you consider a smart young language influenced poet writing about identity? What do you mean by identity? Some language poetry seems to be about identity too or at least the "problem" of identity?

On Sun, 10 May 1998, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> Gary Sullivan's questions in his two posts yesterday about what it means to write "radical" poetry were very interesting.
>
> I like Bruce Andrews's work quite a bit and have found some of it surprising in a provocative sort of way. His writing is full of angry and crazy energy and that's admirable. But I agree with Gary that his poetry is not ultimately radical _as poetic act_, for its "radicalness" is merely textual and not _conceptually subversive_ of

> (in Gary's phrase) the 'context into which such radicalness arrives.' With no apparent remorse, such poetry enters into and validates-- precisely through its self-proclaimed "oppositionality"-- the very relations of literary production and exchange it purports to critique. This is not a contradiction that only haunts Andrews's work.
>
> (Remember all those essays declaring war on the "I" and the "self"?)
>
> This is largely why language poetry grew exhausted and failed and why smart younger poets influenced by them are obsessively writing about their identity crisis. I suppose that sounds like a presumptuous pronouncement, but it's quite simply true. As with all my other posts, I have no doubt that once everyone sits down to think about it that there will be a happy consensus around the point.
>
> A few days ago my neighbor set up an electric dog fence in his yard, and as I watched his poor, bewildered animal leap and yelp and pace and growl, it occurred to me that invisible dog fences might be analogous to any "radical" author's legal name. Eventually, the dog lay down and slept. Today (ah, beautiful spring, blossoms abounding), he barks and bares his teeth, and everyone is safe.
>
> Kent

↑ Index

225. Christopher Reiner
New book
Sun 10 May 1998

---

happy to post this:

> Inside the Hours. Fictions by Cydney Chadwick. (Cover art by New York artist Toni Simon). Texture Press. 37 pages. ISBN: 0-9641387-3-0. List Price $6.
>
> Cydney Chadwick's seventh book of fictions is a haunting series of portraits showing the uncanny dimensions of everyday life. Chadwick truly takes us 'inside the hours' to explore the unfamiliar side of our all-too-human foibles. The mirror she holds up to inner reality returns a chillingly accurate image; at the same time, the steadiness of her gaze ultimately reveals itself to be an intensified form of compassion. Chadwick has developed a style of fiction that is as distinctive as it is compelling.

> Available from www.amazon.com, and Texture Press: P.O. Box 720157, Norman, OK 73072

↑ Index

226. Franklin Bruno poetics/aesthetics
Mon 11 May 1998

Linda Russo asks, quite reasonably:

> What's the difference between poetics and aesthetics?

I don't know what the difference -really- is, but I think I understand the difference in the way these terms are used. Poetics is at least in part generative; in so far as they're explicit, one's poetics help guide what one wants to do in one's work. They may also be polemical (I write like this, so should you) or simply offered as an option (here's one way to write). Aesthetics, insofar as it's still connected to a traditional philosophical discipline, assigns value to already extant work via application of antecedent principles. It's little concerned with identifying fruitful methodological possibilities (though I suppose one's aesthetics might valorize work that can point the way to other work, that opens rather than closes doors.) Surely the border between these two notions is porous.

So: what's the difference between aesthetics and literary criticism?

fjb

↑ Index

227. Tom Beard
Re: The neighbor's dog fence
Mon 11 May 1998

> This is largely why language poetry grew exhausted and failed and why smart younger poets influenced by them are obsessively writing about their identity crisis. I suppose that sounds like a presumptuous pronouncement, but it's quite simply true.
>
> Kent- fascinating post--
> Who would you consider a smart young language influenced poet writing about identity? What do you mean by identity? Some language poetry seems to be about identity too or at least the "problem" of identity?

I was never quite sure what all this "problem" of identity stuff was about either, not quite buying the whole "social construction of the self" thing. But someone on this list once quoted Creeley as saying that a certain poet (does anyone remember who he was talking about?) dealt with "the crisis of self", and then I read Julian Jaynes and things started to fall into place.

Yes, to talk of "obsessively writing about their identity crisis" does sound a little dismissive. To me, the notion of "selfhood", as problematic as it is, is central to the human experience. That vital, fearful schism of self from not-self is something that most of us hold dear, while yearning to break down the barriers. Selfhood is a castle and a prison.

> A few days ago my neighbor set up an electric dog fence in his yard, > and as I watched his poor, bewildered animal leap and yelp and pace > and growl, it occurred to me that invisible dog fences might be > analogous to any "radical" author's legal name. Eventually, > the dog lay down and slept. Today (ah, beautiful spring, blossoms > abounding), he barks and bares his teeth, and everyone is safe.

Writing that appears not to be from a unified self, as interesting as it often is, can be read as even more ego-centric than writing peppered with "I"s, "You"s and other personal pronouns. At least the latter is qualifying the utterances as being specific to the speaking persona (the writer's or otherwise - these are "my" thoughts, feelings, perceptions), whereas the former may be seen as claiming some sort of universality.

These are not meant to be attacks, just observations after trying to write a poem without any personal pronouns. It turned out to be more "personal" (is this different from "self"-centred?) than any of the "I" poems that I'd written. But at the same time, the utterances "from the blue" seemed almost presumptuous.

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

228. Tim Wood
Re: poetics/aesthetics
Mon 11 May 1998

Well, the sarcastic answer is that literary criticism is a way to disguise a political and philisophical agenda (Derida would be a prime example) as aesthetics. The literature enters in because it's so easy to take writers out of context to put your words in their mouths. Like I said, the sarcastic answer <grin>.

Tim Wood

> What's the difference between poetics and aesthetics?

<snip>

> So: what's the difference between aesthetics and literary criticism?

_____ Negations
http://www.datawranglers.com/negations/

Negations: an interdisciplinary journal of social criticism

↑ Index

229. Tim Wood
Re: Superflux query
Mon 11 May 1998

Hoa Nguyen (at least the one I know) is based out of Austin, Texas. Her email is [redacted]

Someone is reputed to have said

> Does anyone have email addresses for Leslie Davis or Hoa Nguyen? Or do you know anything about Superflux (are there other editors?)
>
> thx.

_____ Tim Wood
http://www.datawranglers.com/

The Data Wranglers: making your information look good

↑ Index

230. Keston Sutherland
Re: poetics/aesthetics
Mon 11 May 1998

>...literary criticism is a way to disguise a political and philisophical agenda (Derrida would be a prime example) as aesthetics.

I'd say the reverse re: Derrida..

↑ Index

231. joel lewis
f.y.i.
Mon 11 May 1998

 I'd hate to see the welcome wagon: Imagine you're about to move into your half-million-dollar dream home in a plush Denver suburb that you know as Cherry Hills Village. Then, you see that the sales contract includes the full name of the development, and it isn't Cherry Hills. You then ask the real estate agent to tear up the contract. That's what happened when Bill Weinberger was set to buy a $497,000 house -- in Swastika Acres 2. "I told them not only no, but hell no," voiced Weinberger, a Denver businessman who is Jewish. The agent tried to explain that the property records date back to a corporation called the Denver Swastika Land Co., founded in 1908, well before before the Nazi Party was founded and adopted the swastika as their logo. Weinberger felt that if the residents hadn't yet petitioned to change the name, they must be anti-Semitic. Saul Rosenthal, regional director of the Anti-Defamation League office in Denver, noted that complaints about Swastika Acres seem to hit his desk every few years. But because this coincidence isn't an example of intentional bigotry, he doesn't see it as a "substantial issue facing our community." An ancient symbol of the Chinese, Asian Indians, Greeks, and Scandinavians, the swastika has been found on coins, pottery, and other artifacts, and even in the catacombs of early Christians. Some Native American tribes also viewed the swastika design as a symbol of infinity. Nonetheless, Weinberger is looking elsewhere.

↑ Index

232. Burt Kimmelman
Re: poetics/aesthetics
Mon 11 May 1998

---

this may be old hat, but let me nevertheless say that for me Heidegger's book Poetry Language Thought sorts out this issue admirably.

burt kimmelman

↑ Index

233. Gary Sullivan
Re: "radical"
Mon 11 May 1998

Thanks everyone for the diverse and well-considered responses. You've given me much to consider.

I do want to address Judy Roitman's post, and say that, I agree, though their writing appears prior to the time-frame I was thinking of, Creeley, Eigner and Niedecker all share, especially Eigner and Niedecker, an appreciation of subsistence that is made palpably manifest in their work. That's as radical, or maybe more significantly, as generative, a critique of capitalism as there is. As Maria Damon knows, I ultimately consider the life, ideas & work of Amy Dacyczyn more generative than those of Chomsky or Nader. (Which is not to say I don't find either Chomsky or Nader of great value, too.)

Judy also mentioned Susan Howe and Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge, who are more or less of the time period I was thinking of. With Susan Howe, I don't find that same appreciation of subsistence in her writing; I find what I'd call the manifestation of academic middle class anxiety. By "academic" I mean not situated due present. By "middle class" I mean a preoccupation with property, equity, possession, representation. By "anxiety" I mean surface agitation causally related to unslaked desire. There's also something of the tour-guide about her presentation of work. Her project, for me, its value notwithstanding, strikes me as a pure product of capitalism. I can appreciate it & maybe even use it, but only with that caveat.

Linda Russo really addressed what I was questioning: Is it possible, in the context of the immediate present, to be a "radical poet"? I mean, everyone addressed it, I guess, but I think Linda articulated it in a way that for me felt most accurate. It's not a question that I feel can be answered at the moment, but I keep coming back to it.

I like Duncan McNaughton's work. I love John Wieners's. Also Victor Coleman's. I think the latter's is undervalued in this country.

Did anyone mention Jeff Conant? I know of very, very few American poets I wouldn't be embarrassed to call "fearless." He's one of them.

I don't see any poet or school as "the enemy," so, as to "obvious poets to absorb" from among the "cast-out, false poetries" -- I like this idea. I also like Heraclitus's, that nature loves to hide. So, rather than Hass, I'm going to spend some time looking into the life & work d.a. levy. Anyone with tips (I already know about the Ghost Pony Press collection), please send along.

Henry Gould, as always, your responses are brilliant, & make me smile. Which is not to say that I necessarily agree with you, but that I appreciate what you say, how you say.

Thanks again, everyone,

Peace,

Gary Sullivan

↑ Index

234. Pritchett,Patrick

Re: Para/garay anyone?

Mon 11 May 1998

Looking for a back issue of English journal Paragraph: Journal of Modern Critical Thought from 1986. Specifically, essay by Irigaray - "Women, the Sacred and Money," from Vol 8, 1986.

Does anyone know if this has been collected someplace? Thanks. Backchannel only.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

235. Judy Roitman
Re: also Re: "radical"
Mon 11 May 1998

Linda Russo wrote:

> thanks, judy, for making the distinction, esp. since i wasn't trying to make a point re: egolessness except to point out how i saw gary reading & discussing the particular quote
>
> i'm with judy -- i read it in the sense of not having a "big ego" -- of being able to engage in poetry not for oneself (selfishly) or one's career, but for poetry -- though a notable (and possibly volatile) exception would be Pound, who (at one point or another, but not ultimately?) made accomplishments in all three (selfishness, careerism, poetry)

But I wasn't talking about how anyone is in life (selfless, careerist, etc.) but whether their _poems_ were "about" self or not. That's all. One could presumably be totally careerist and a real shit-head, but write absolutely luminous and transparent poetry.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

236. Christopher Reiner
new announcments at litpress.com
Mon 11 May 1998

There are a lot of new publication announcements from various presses on the LITPRESS.COM site, as of last night. Most of them have been posted to this list, but you might want to check it out anyway.

Also, selections from the latest RHIZOME have been posted, including work by George Albon, Laynie Browne, Norma Cole, Jacques Debrot, Martha Ronk, and Joe Ross.

The address is

http://www.litpress.com

LITPRESS.COM regularly posts announcements of new publications of innovative contemporary poetry and prose. To submit an announcement, contact Chris Reiner at

[redacted]

↑ Index

237. KENT JOHNSON
Re: The neighbor's dog fence
Mon 11 May 1998

On May 10, J. Fuhrman wrote:

> Kent- fascinating post--
> Who would you consider a smart young language influenced poet writing about identity? What do you mean by identity? Some language poetry seems to be about identity too or at least the "problem" of identity?

What I meant by "identity crisis" is the broader relationship between a group of younger, "innovative" writers and the older Language poets. The tensions in that relationship seem to provoke a sense of anxiety for some of the writers in the younger group, to the point of its having become the object of some strong critical reflection by people like Mark Wallace, Steve Evans, and others. (Though there is clearly a good deal of anxiety among the old-guard as well about the fate of their once triumphalist project.)

The anxiety and identity crisis stems, as I see it, from the fact that a project that was once nourished by a strong sense of radical, political commitment has spawned, as closest offspring, a fundamentally aestheticist and career-driven poetic community that bears little trace of the father's youthful oppositionality. (The father, now tenured and comfortable, hopes his child will one day become more serious.)

In my previous post I alluded to the author function as being the drive-shaft that makes such institutionalization and commodification quite natural and inevitable. An old argument, to be sure, but one that few want to consider, I think, because of its broader implications.

Has anyone seen the movie "Hype"? It is about the grunge scene in Seattle and is probably the best cinematic illustration of Peter Burger's _Theory of the Avant-Garde_ that there has ever been.

Kent

↑ Index

238. Gary Sullivan value
Mon 11 May 1998

> you might want > to begin with the AERIAL issue devoted to Andrews -- otherwise, the value,
> "in general," as you say, is its radicality. Do you agree? If not, what is > the value?

I can't, literally, afford the Aerial Andrews issue, though I'll try to get it through interlibrary loan. For me, the value of Andrews's writing is not its radicality. What I find generative (as well as pleasurable) is the intensity, or rigour, of its focus. His consistent attendance to, and exploration of, that.

↑ Index

239. joel lewis
poetry reading
Mon 11 May 1998

READING AT POETRY CITY

Joel Lewis
&
Tim Griffin

May 28
7pm

TEACHERS & WRITERS COLLABORATIVE
5 Union Square West, 7th Floor

Free

info- 212/[redacted]

[redacted]

↑ Index

240. dbkk
Bellamy/Gluck at SPT
Mon 11 May 1998

Small Press Traffic presents

Dodie Bellamy
Robert Gluck

Friday, May 15, 7:30 p.m.
New College Theater
777 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

Dodie Bellamy is celebrating the publication of her new "novel," The Letters of Mina Harker (Hard Press, 1998), which Joan Retallack has described as an "epistolary novel, a bestiaire d'amour, a hyper-para-transgeneric, complex realist exploded vampire cartoon of very touching hi-lo life-death saturated intelligence, sex, humor, philosophy, history, literature, mass culture." Dodie Bellamy is also the author of Feminine Hijinx (Hanuman, 1990) and Real: The Letters of Mina Harker and Sam D'Allesandro (Talisman House, 1995), as well as three chapbooks. She is the director of Small Press Traffic Literary Arts Center.

Robert Gluck is the author of several books of poetry, including Reader; a book of stories, Elements of a Coffee Service; and two celebrated novels, Jack the Modernist and Margery Kempe. When one tries to describe Gluck's lapidary, sexy, smart hyperfictions, one finds oneself overcome by a strange Tourette's Syndrome of superlatives. "Brilliant--squawk! Superb--squawk! A beloved teacher and friend--awk! Top ten postmodern writer--squawk!" Longtime board member of Small Press Traffic, Gluck was one of its founders way back in the mid seventies, and the former director of the Poetry Center at San Francisco State.

↑ Index

241. Peter Quartermain
AERIAL Andrews issue
Mon 11 May 1998

At 01:52 PM 5/11/98 -0400, Gary Sul;livan wrote:

> I can't, literally, afford the Aerial Andrews issue, though I'll try to get it

Good luck! I don't think it's been published yet, has it?
+ +
Peter Quartermain

846 Keefer Street
Vancouver
B.C.
Canada V6A 1Y7
Voice : [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

+ + + +

administration advanced "limited warfare" to greater specificity, making it seem more controllable, manageable, and therefore desirable as foreign policy." --- "'The refugee advisor went out all over the province largely to areas where there'd been battles. He would assess the value of the people's destroyed houses and dead livestock and pay people off. For example, an adult civilian over 15 years old who was killed was worth $35 to their family; a child under 15 was worth $14.40. The United States government paid people off for their dead children, or their dead husbands and wives, or whatever, at the rate of $35 or $15, depending on their age.'"---excerpts from The Perfect War:Technowar in Vietnam by James William Gibson "The whole history of modern science proves to be a process of progressive emancipation from our innate classification of the external stimuli till in the end they completely disappear so that "physical science has now reached a stage of development that renders it impossible to express observable occurrences in language appropriate to what is perceived by our senses. The only appropriate language is that of mathematics," i.e., the discipline developed to describe complexes of relationships between elements which have no attributes except these relations."---F.A. Hayek, The Counter-Revolution of Science---cp

↑ Index

244. izak
"surrender intentionality"
Mon 11 May 1998

---

what does the term "surrender intentionality" mean in regards to poetics? -joanna

****

"the misfit massacres the mustang pony just to feel the soft rise of marilyn monroe against his chest" -Patti Smith
****

↑ Index

245. joel lewis
f.y.i.
Mon 11 May 1998

 Court rules against use of Elvis name

In a decision that limits the parody defense in trademark infringement cases, an appeals court has ruled against a Texas restaurant that was being sued for calling itself "The Velvet Elvis." The decision by the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a lower court ruling which had held that "Velvet Elvis" did not infringe trademarks held by the Presley estate. The case was brought by Elvis

Presley Enterprises, which owns all trademarks and publicity rights belonging to the Presley estate. It sought to prevent a Houston bar, which featured velvet paintings of Elvis, a frozen drink called "Love Me Blenders" and a hot dog named "Your Football Hound Dog," from calling itself "The Velvet Elvis." See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2554094869-ba9

 NBC, Attenborough plan Bible miniseries

In what could be the most expensive miniseries ever launched for broadcast TV, NBC is planning a 12-hour epic called "The Bible," with Richard Attenborough executive producing. Details of the project are in the discussion stage, but Attenborough will be heavily involved in the creative aspects and is expected to star in and direct some of the two-hour installments. "The Bible" will feature stories of the Old Testament and will culminate with the birth of Jesus Christ. The estimated budget could go as high as $150 million, which is more than double the cost of any previous TV miniseries. See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2554093850-df6

 Thai snake man emerges from week-long stunt

A Thai farmer completed a potentially deadly stunt on Monday after a week locked up with scores of deadly snakes in a Bangkok shopping centre. Boonreung Buachan, 27, from north eastern Si Saket province had spent the previous 168 hours confined in a small glass-walled room with 100 cobras and 10 venomous centipedes. Boonreung, who was not paid for his efforts, spent much of his captivity playing with the creatures, calmly watching television from a bed as the snakes writhed among the sheets, or urging curious shoppers to join him. See http://www.infobeat.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=2554093411-142

↑ Index

246. linda russo
call for admissions
Mon 11 May 1998

---

for an essay on post-Modern (which in this context means post _Floating Bear_) women-edited presses & journals (including ezines)

I think I've covered all the biggies, but everytime i turn around another one's [present progressive verb] would anyone out there like to admit to knowing of one, taking part in one, having thoughts about one, or ever having had done any of the above?

ANY info is appreciated; email addresses for editors are nice, to look busy or popular. Or even send any old copies you have sitting around:

160 South 13th East #16
Salt Lake City, UT 84102

"admission" is not to be taken as a sign of guilt. I just don't want anyone submitting to me right now. I recently got a longish poem returned to me saying "we don't want to submit to this right now"

also feel free to forward this widely.

↑ Index

247. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Nikuko's doing stuff
Mon 11 May 1998

-

Nikuko probes what they're doing on Panix at the moment:

elm emacs -tcsh /usr/local/experimental/bin/strn /usr/local/bin/vim trn -zsh -zsh -tcsh /usr/local/bin/emacs /usr/local/bin/pine sleep -ksh pine more nn pine -tcsh -tcsh -zsh default.html /ne pine -tcsh lynx PCPU -ksh -tcsh -tcsh -tcsh /usr/local/bin/pine /usr/local/experimental/bin/emac nn trn elm elm emacs w /usr/local/bin/zsh /usr/ucb/more ./tt++ ./tt++ -psh pine pine -psh slrn backgammon /usr/local/experimental/bin/nn -tcsh -tcsh elm -tcsh vim /usr/local/bin/emacs19/emacs

Nikuko probes their bodies too:

rcliff lk eck mc rsood shabbir bsd tango samsara mc eloo lrudolph hkaplan gaillard tbyfield topaz vilardi nepsa osc pirmann sethb sondheim vernonw lent stern routny stain brodie tomicus wendy aqn smith aronson smeyer yodave bcousins carter sal tim firoozye jlerner eck goldrich gtc ybmcu jposhea3 mef wlm wagneric teej slavery andrewk fjelstad ficara bneuman

Nikuko!

↑ Index

248. MAYHEW
Re: FYI
Mon 11 May 1998

People likely to sue me (if parody is no defense against copyright/trademark infringement):

John Ashbery, Robert Creeley, Elvis, Mickey Mouse, Kenneth Koch [the entire New York School of poetry in fact], William Carlos Williams (estate of), Louise Gluck, Ranier Maria Rilke, Pierre Reverdy, William Shakespeare, W.S. Merwin, Jose Lezama Lima, Isidore Ducasse, Federico Garcia Lorca, Theodore Geisel, Henry Gould, Morpheal, James Wright, Robert Bly, Leslie Scalapino...[a partial list]

Some of these authors in the public domain, or have a forgiving nature, so I am not too worried...

Jonathan

↑ Index

249. Peter Ganick

Re: british experimentalism

Mon 11 May 1998

Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>
> hi guyzies, is there a book of contemporary experimental british poetry
> that is "multicultural" and not only women? maria d

how about adrien clarke and robert sheppard's
'floating capital' published by potes & poets, which, although not multicultural, features experimental or language-poetry-influenced writers like cris cheek, maggie sullivan, etc?...

peter ganick
[redacted]

↑ Index

250. linda russo

*p.s. call for submissions

Mon 11 May 1998

---

p.s.

  * @ * % * & * # *

  with only the sound of the mimeograph "kachunking" and the pages swishing down . . . (Maureen Owen)

↑ Index

251. hen
Re: FYI
Mon 11 May 1998

why would I sue you? I only go after the big fish!! - Henry "Catfish" Gould

↑ Index

252. Maria Damon
Re: british experimentalism
Mon 11 May 1998

thanks; i'm looking for a book --anthology, yes --that i can order for a class. this looks out of print/dubious from what you say.

At 5:19 PM -0600 5/11/98, Keith Tuma wrote:
>>hi guyzies, is there a book of contemporary experimental british poetry
>>that is "multicultural" and not only women? maria d
>
>
>Guessing that this means anthologies and that one that might fit the bill >is Allnut, D'Aguiar, Edwards, Mottram, eds., _The New British Poetry_ >(Paladin, 1988). Not altogether satisfying but worth a look, if you can >find it.
>
>KT

↑ Index

253. Keith Tuma
Re: british experimentalism
Mon 11 May 1998

> hi guyzies, is there a book of contemporary experimental british poetry
> that is "multicultural" and not only women? maria d

Guessing that this means anthologies and that one that might fit the bill is Allnut, D'Aguiar, Edwards, Mottram, eds., _The New British Poetry_ (Paladin, 1988). Not altogether satisfying but worth a look, if you can find it.

KT

↑ Index

254. Karen Kelley
Re: The neighbor's dog fence
Mon 11 May 1998

> Writing that appears not to be from a unified self, as interesting as it often is, can be read as even more ego-centric than writing peppered with "I"s, "You"s and other personal pronouns. At least the latter is qualifying the utterances as being specific to the speaking persona (the writer's or otherwise - these are "my" thoughts, feelings, perceptions), whereas the former may be seen as claiming some sort of universality

Well, the first sentence of this paragraph made me happy. But hey, wait a minute there in the second sentence: "I" and "you" can function as loci in the poem, points of consciousness that connect the nouns and verbs (oh, okay--and tha adjectives). But why, when we realize that nouns can be more than nouns and verbs more than verbs and syntax more than syntax (alright, I'm reaching), but WHY must pronouns always be personalized?

And yes, the elision of pronouns in the interest of universality has always struck me as the height of egocentrism.

But really, what's up with this pronoun problem?

↑ Index

255. Rachel Loden
Re: radical
Mon 11 May 1998

> Emily Dickinson is another example. In life she certainly seems to have set out some very well-defined parameters, but even thougth first person pronouns & possessives appear a lot in her poetry (unlike in Eigner's, where they almost never appear) there is a marked absence of personal particularities.

What's a "personal particularity"? I hope it's not a quirk, or a peculiarity, or even the sort of peccadillo that makes the work of David Bromige or Rodney Dangerfield more interesting (to me anyway) than the limpid productions of any number of spiritual athletes.

I hope it's not what enables Ron Padgett to write lines like

Seriously I have this mental (smuh!) illness which causes me to do things

because such "personal" or personist nerviness (as distinguished from a plodding confessionalism) is, I think, the engine of poetry.

> As for absence of ego being a desirable end, see almost any religion.

This will probably cause me to be pelted by many ego-free tomatoes, but in the small unscientific sample which is my life the drumbeat for "egolessness" or its postmodern equivalents is usually accompanied by dizzying levels of arrogance, narcissism, and a sort of missionary humorlessness. Thanks, but I'll always take the perfectly modulated dysfunction of a Richard Pryor or a Frank O'Hara or a Madeline Kahn over any sort of sanitized enlightenment.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

256. toddbaron
Re: Bellamy/Gluck at SPT
Mon 11 May 1998

BOY
I wish I could be at Dodies and Robert's
READING.

Hello and
I'm still very intereested in reading at NEW C. (neuc?) as alum.
Pass on th word to Dodie or if you would,
you
self.

love

Toddb

↑ Index

257. Alan Myouka Sondheim forgive this intrusion stupid Nikuko wants to live
Mon 11 May 1998

---

and make sense this is the best she can do, I'm stupid Nikuko

Inari

A UN A
UN A UN

I wanm mo make a mexm mhis mexm and subsmimume one lemmer for anomher, begin mhe process of subsmimumion, says I, Daishin Nikuko.
Soon, mhe mexm will become anomher, and mhis new mexm will be mhe one mham saves me;
mhis new mexm will be mhe one I murmur in my sleep;

mhis new mexm will be mhe final mexm.
So I begin looking for mhe sense in mhe mexm which is nom yem wrimmen, bum which appears wimhin and mhrough mhe mosm serious game of subsmimions because I wanm mo save myself, because I am gemming mired and mhink of dying consmanmly, because I need mhis magic, mhis incanmamion, so mham I, Daishin Nikuko, can conminue
jusm anomher day of omher.

A UN A UN A UN

↑ Index

258. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski

also also re: radical / ego

Tue 12 May 1998

i felt early in my writing that my job as writer/editor was/is to take me out of the poems. i cant just sit down and write, the words have to come, and i see myself as a vehicle. am aware i wont be a pure flute, that the bumps and worries and whorls in me help make me this instrument. at the same time, 'i' (& yes lower-case) is about the only pronoun i use, since who else can i speak for. this i is way flesxible, ranging from the personal to the mythic, usually slipping into a beat-elemental persona.>

↑ Index

259. Robert Archambeau

USC position in poetics

Tue 12 May 1998

I suppose there's some irony in posting this right after Mark's note about careerism, but this could be a real opportunity for someone on the list (I have no connection with USC, this is from the Chronicle of Higher Ed):

> English: Assistant Professor in Poetry and Poetics, twentieth-century American literature and culture. Experience in interdisciplinary studies, gender and ethnic studies, especially Jewish American studies, desirable. Strong publication and teaching required. Start date: September, 1999. Candidates should submit a letter of interest and a curriculum vitae by November 6, 1998 to: Teresa McKenna, Chair, Department of English, Taper Hall 420, University of Southern California, University Park, Los Angeles, California 90089-0354. USC > encourages applications from minority and women candidates.

> Equal Opportunity, Affirmative Action Employer.

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045

↑ Index

260. Tim Wood
Re: "radical"
Tue 12 May 1998

Someone is reputed to have said

> Linda Russo really addressed what I was questioning: Is it possible, in the context of the immediate present, to be a "radical poet"? I mean, everyone addressed it, I guess, but I think Linda articulated it in a way that for me felt most accurate. It's not a question that I feel can be answered at the moment, but I keep coming back to it.

I'll share something that happened (to me) that ties in with whether anyone can be radical, let alone a radical poet. I don't fly very often and recently I had to take a round-trip flight with a stop at the airport in Minneapolis. The entire airport is no-smoking, including the curbside areas (except one area at the extreme end of the airport I stumbled upon on my return trip). Of course, people were lined up smoking in front of the no-smoking signs. The people in suits stood on the other side of the curb looking over at us while they waited for rides/taxis/whatever.

It struck me that the most subversive act available for most people today is smoking in front of a no-smoking sign. Or, because of rising prices, taxes, group pressure, just smoking. It's very reminiscent of Chomsky's writing on the media: so much 'radical' behavior (e.g. smoking) has been put on display in parody or put on display and then discounted that the boundary lines have become in some case unlocatable and in other cases so narrow that being radical, subversive, whatever is a daunting task to say the least. If there are no revolutions in the streets, no movements that show any signs of changing the world and the paradigm, how can poetry be radical except against itself again and again. Or radical/observational in the sense of following the shift paradigm of the status quo and capitalism (and yes I know differentiating the two is problematic).

Tim

---

poetry is an hour
a flash
of sound
bytes
  found rescued boiled
freed to rage again

↑ Index

261. MAYHEW
Ode to Ron Padgett
Tue 12 May 1998

Ode to Ron Padgett

[from an imaginary textbood]

Permission is granted, but not do do anything you want.
--John Cage

"... which brings us to the category which I will term the 'permission granter,' whose style seems as effortless as it is easily imitated. Anyone could do this, we think, brilliance is within our reach. These permission granters, poets of genius themselves, never intimidate their readers--unlike the 'pure geniuses' discussed in Chapter 4. Putting aside false modesty, I can myself aspire to be a permission granter, as could any reader of this book.

Yet there exists another sort of permission granter whose influence is entirely nefarious. Offering nothing to the ear, the eye, or the mind, he is admired precisely because he gives solace to equally wretched poets, 'nice people who unfortunately write poetry.' This judgment will seem unduly harsh, yet .... "

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

262. Douglas Barbour
Re: R on D
Tue 12 May 1998

Now that Rachel has mentioned him (or is that 'menmioned' him?), where is David B in all this talk? I've certainly missed his wit ('wim') in this fascinating thread ('mhread').

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]

~~~
~~~

*The overall context is problematic, and a continual pain to live with. But that is just what, from Spicer on through more recent writers, has fueled good poetry projects.

*To quote Jerome McGann. "In these textual moves Spicer, as it were, mortalizes the poetic event, and his manipulations of the physical book are the emblems of a similar humane insurgency typical of the (later) work of contemporary experimental writers. The bookishness of postmodern writing is a form of ironic self-representation. It situates poet and poem firmly in the social, institutional and even the economic heart of things. As a consequence, much of contemporary poetry becomes--in no pejorative sense--a dismal science, the poetry of dies mali, an imagination of writing that knows it inhabits a world ruled by Mammon."

(The Black Riders, p.108)

*The claim here that such strategies situate poetry "firmly in the heart" of things, is an understandable exaggeration. It's precisely that such maneuvers leave poetry still marginalized, that gives the entire enterprise its twist and its demented contours....

*Anyway, thanx to Kent for as usual bringing up important issues.

marginal in @tlanta,
Mark

↑ Index

264. Keston Sutherland
(no subject)
Tue 12 May 1998

Alan, Nikuko, Jennifer, all - you light up my terminal

↑ Index

265. AERIALEDGE
Aerial 9
Tue 12 May 1998

The Andrews issue should be available, at last, in the fall. abt 280 pages of Bruceiana.

↑ Index

266. Gary Sullivan
Leggo my ego
Tue 12 May 1998

Art-product with ego carefully scraped off its face is not wholly possible. The art-product is particular, an instance. The instance itself can be examined as an instance chosen over potential instances.

Dizzying levels of arrogance, narcissism and a sort of missionary humorousness (as opposed to humorlessness) might describe both Pryor's and O'Hara's bodies of work. I have great respect for both, but can't take either in large doses without feeling suffocated. There is something wanting in the range of emotion or outlook in O'Hara's writing: "In Memory of My Feelings" is such a lovely entry into what, in poem after poem I'm disappointed to find to be mostly one or two feelings, as though he's perfectly modulated everything but exuberance, ironic gesture and the occasional maudlin moment out of the picture. To the extent O'Hara's writing proposes a mimesis of human emotional experience (& I don't mean to suggest this to be its real, or only, proposal), I find it to be ultimately very sanitized.

On Monday, May 11, 1998 10:09 PM, Rachel Loden [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> This will probably cause me to be pelted by many ego-free tomatoes, but > in the small unscientific sample which is my life the drumbeat for > "egolessness" or its postmodern equivalents is usually accompanied by > dizzying levels of arrogance, narcissism, and a sort of missionary > humorlessness. Thanks, but I'll always take the perfectly modulated > dysfunction of a Richard Pryor or a Frank O'Hara or a Madeline Kahn > over any sort of sanitized enlightenment.

↑ Index

267. Judy Roitman
Re: The neighbor's dog fence
Tue 12 May 1998

> But why, when we realize that nouns can be more than nouns and verbs more than verbs and syntax more than syntax

Syntax always more than syntax. For example:

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area

code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

268. Jordan Davis
"Like Boxes of Shit in Your House? Get a Cat!"
Tue 12 May 1998

Gary?

Can we talk for a second? I know it's been raining for eight months solid here in New York, but which edition of O'Hara have you been reading? I mean I know you _like_ to collapse the complexities you see around you into possibilities for humorous response -- and have you seen The Onion? I think they took your Ask Mrs. Ted Hughes idea, man! Sic em. Anyway I'm wondering if you'd like to borrow, or photocopy from my copy of O'Hara's collected, because it has a few other "feelings" in it, such as hatred, compassion, regret (really!), bemused distrust, self-loathing, self-regard, etc etc. I guess you could think of O'Hara's aoristic standards as somehow always only exuberant, but that would be kind of like thinking the Greeks were always only talking about killing their parents.

Wondering --
Jordan

↑ Index

269. Gary Sullivan
Mediocrity loves company
Tue 12 May 1998

I have & have read O'Hara's _Collected Poems_, his _Love Poems_, _Lunch Poems_, _Second Avenue_, _Meditations in an Emergency_, _Early Writings_, _Selected Plays_, and one other that Grey Fox published, the title of which escapes me at the moment. My response to Rachel's post was a response-in-kind, taking the same general sweeps she made in her dismissal of "egoless, post-modern" writing and seeing what might happen if applied to O'Hara . . . and discovering that there is a way in which it works.

The Mrs. Ted Hughes gag wasn't mine (tho I posted it) nor did the format for the gag originate with its author. Anyway, I love the Onion. "Sic em"? Wow. I don't ferociously attack people, Jordan; that seems to be your way of handling disagreements, if your last post is any indication. I understand completely your disagreeing with me, and welcome well-articulated argument. But, this initial forray of yours is childish, mean-spirited and I wonder if something more than the words in my post to Rachel have provoked it.

On Tuesday, May 12, 1998 12:04 PM, Jordan Davis [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> Gary?
>
> Can we talk for a second? I know it's been raining for eight months solid > here in New York, but which edition of O'Hara have you been reading? I > mean I know you _like_ to collapse the complexities you see around you > into possibilities for humorous response -- and have you seen The Onion? I > think they took your Ask Mrs. Ted Hughes idea, man! Sic em. Anyway I'm > wondering if you'd like to borrow, or photocopy from my copy of O'Hara's > collected, because it has a few other "feelings" in it, such as hatred, > compassion, regret (really!), bemused distrust, self-loathing,
> self-regard, etc etc. I guess you could think of O'Hara's aoristic > standards as somehow always only exuberant, but that would be kind of like > thinking the Greeks were always only talking about killing their parents.
>
> Wondering -- > Jordan

↑ Index

270. Robert Hale
Re: Mediocrity loves company
Tue 12 May 1998

I don't know, Gary, you slammed me pretty hard last week for my post where I suggested radical elements in B. Andrews' and other work. Considering the nature of my post and my own love of politics, I had no problem with your line of questioning. I wouldn't even call it "ferocious," but considering the gist of your counter-opinion -- that the value of his work lies in it's "focus" "energy" and "intensity" -- perhaps you should turn the bullshit detector on yourself.

Sniping aside, you're on the right track in questioning generalizations.

At 12:37 PM 5/12/98 -0400, you wrote:
>I have & have read O'Hara's _Collected Poems_, his _Love Poems_, _Lunch Poems_, >_Second Avenue_, _Meditations in an Emergency_, _Early Writings_, _Selected >Plays_, and one other that Grey Fox published, the title of which escapes me at >the moment. My response to Rachel's post was a response-in-kind, taking the >same general sweeps she made in her dismissal of "egoless, post-modern" writing >and seeing what might happen if applied to O'Hara . . . and discovering that >there is a way in which it works.

>
>The Mrs. Ted Hughes gag wasn't mine (tho I posted it) nor did the format for >the gag originate with its author. Anyway, I love the Onion. "Sic em"? Wow. I >don't ferociously attack people, Jordan; that seems to be your way of handling >disagreements, if your last post is any indication. I understand completely >your disagreeing with me, and welcome well-articulated argument. But, this >initial forray of yours is childish, mean-spirited and I wonder if something >more than the words in my post to Rachel have provoked it.
>
>
>On Tuesday, May 12, 1998 12:04 PM, Jordan Davis [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
>> Gary?
>>
>> Can we talk for a second? I know it's been raining for eight months solid >> here in New York, but which edition of O'Hara have you been reading? I >> mean I know you _like_ to collapse the complexities you see around you >> into possibilities for humorous response -- and have you seen The Onion? I >> think they took your Ask Mrs. Ted Hughes idea, man! Sic em. Anyway I'm >> wondering if you'd like to borrow, or photocopy from my copy of O'Hara's >> collected, because it has a few other "feelings" in it, such as hatred, >> compassion, regret (really!), bemused distrust, self-loathing,
>> self-regard, etc etc. I guess you could think of O'Hara's aoristic >> standards as somehow always only exuberant, but that would be kind of like >> thinking the Greeks were always only talking about killing their parents.
>>
>> Wondering -- >> Jordan
>
>

↑ Index

271. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

Re: poetics of subsistence

Tue 12 May 1998

---

gary r. and interested others: i feel obliged here to self-promote by noting that my essay on whitman and energy specifically---"no wasted words: whitman's original energy"---is forthcoming in vol. 12 of _nineteenth century studies_ (should be) next month... the laser-proofs are on their way to me even as i post this... i've been toying with this idea of energy for twelve years now, ever since listening to don byrd read "this compost" in a grad seminar... and feel that i'm only now able to articulate it without confusing the hell out of whitman's poetry/poetic AND (19th century) science (couldn't have managed any clarity at all w/o tenney nathanson's groundbreaking work on whitman's "voice")... be interested in what anyone around t/here has to say about the piece... i'm hoping my modest effort will serve as a sort of springboard for further, no doubt much better informed inquiry...

best,

joe

↑ Index

272. Gary Sullivan
My Mediocrity
Tue 12 May 1998

I don't feel I slammed you, Robert. I did question what was said in your post. Jordan questioned what I said in my post, but I felt the tone of it was mean. Meaning it felt like it was meant to hurt as much as to examine the limitations of what I said. Jordan tells me backchannel that he was merely being playful, and so I'll respect that, and should apologize for misreading it. I apologize, Jordan. Seriously. Jordan also tells me he was hurt by my insinuating he's mediocre. "Mediocrity loves company" was actually directed at myself, not Jordan. Meaning I've been talking a lot, lately, & relishing the company, but also having that "gawd, shuddup awready" feeling. Anyway, I think Jordan's critique of what I said, to the extent it stuck to what I said, was more than fair, and I'm glad he disagrees. I'd personally really like to see instances in O'Hara's grander scope of emotion posted here.

I agree the bullshit detector should be trained on me as much as anyone. I'm the wrong person to do that, though. I'd welcome, from you, or anyone, any critique of my reading of Andrews. I don't post because I'm in love with my thoughts; I post already knowing what I think, the limitations of that, & hoping to get other perspectives. I hope I put enough "I think" or "It seems to me" kinds of qualifiers in there so that's understood.

Anyway . . . I'm relishing reading Gary Roberts now on "subsistence" . . . an admittedly vague term that Rachel was thoughtful enough to backchannel me about & question.

PS: My e-mail spellchecker wants to change "backchannel" to "bacchanal."

I do too,

Gary

↑ Index

273. Laura E. Wright
top 10
Tue 12 May 1998

Suggestions please:

I'm in the process of working on collection development for our writing and poetics department here at the Naropa Library. We currently subscribe to about 13 writing/poetry/lit.-related journals. On our budget, we can't afford a whole lot, but -- please send (backchannel would be great) me your top 10 (or so) journals/zines -- whatever you would like to see and read in your ideal library.

--
Laura Wright <[redacted]>
Library Assistant, Naropa Institute
[redacted]

"All music is music..." -- Ted Berrigan

↑ Index

274. groberts
poetics of subsistence
Tue 12 May 1998

At the risk of being tedious, I am writing a much longer post than I usually do, so consider yourself forewarned.

Gary Sullivan's tantalizing and challenging remarks about a poetics of subsistence are intriguing to me, and I am elaborating on them in my own way and without any real idea of his understanding of this phrase. Hopefully the following is not entirely irrelevant. I take "subsistence" here to mean a drastically scaled down middle-class lifestyle resulting from a social organization trying to escape and even dismantle the programmed consumption of time and space, labor and things. Since I know very little about subsistence living as a social movement in the U.S., I am speculating here, and probably rather naively too. I imagine subsistence living is sustained by both new and recovered notions of self-reliance and communitarianism, which in turn are informed by a range of variously plausible or viable economic and ecological theories and practices. I do not know how class fits into this scheme of things. All of this would seem to require a thorough reconsideration of how and why we spend time and energy in work and leisure, including in the production and consumption of poetry.

The idea of a poetics of subsistence is also intriguing to me because the poetics of wastefulness seems to be more pervasive, or at least more completely theorized. I think it makes sense to talk about them both together in this context.Bataille of course and many others have posited the importance of excessive expenditure to the means of artistic production. The polemical impetus for such a conception of art, earlier in the century anyway, seems to have been to try to remove the creative act from the economies of Freudian drives or of commodity exchange, and into the domain of play, which for the most part is aesthetic (if your idea of play is based on Schiller and Nietzsche). This claim then is at least minimally related to the perennially vexed issues of the use-value and autonomy of the poem, especially whenever "free" play becomes the occasion for some kind of critique. PErhaps the poetry of Bruce Andrews is one of excessive expenditure, at least its propulsive wantonness suggests so to me.

I suppose it's obvious that both of these poetics rely on ideas about energy. How and why does a poem capture and expend energy from the networks of social and natural relationships in its vicinity? I say poem and not poet in order to leave open the application of this question not just to writing but also to reading. A poetics of subsistence might be derived from hypotheses and knowledge about energy, which I think is an important word but one perhaps with a confusingly large number of meanings. At any rate, it seems to me not enough for this poetics to re-present the imagery and diction of a way of life.

With respect to poetry (admittedly a specialization belied by my idea of this poetics), some hypotheses and knowledge might result from thinking about formal issues in a way that I associate first with Pound, and then with Olson and Zukofsky. Beginning with form, however, would not preclude talking about the energy of material production and distribution; maybe even the latter should come first, though I myself know little about it.

Should a poetics of subsistence have a vocabulary of technical words such as "energy" and "ecology"? Yes, but what good (and what fun?) could come from writing poems out of a self-imposed and thus extrinsically motivated need to define such terms? Would such a poetics be inherently didactic (georgic)?

If a poetics of subsistence is defined by poets like Creeley, Niedecker, Eigner, and also Snyder and Whalen, then is its primarily a minimalist poetics of the postmodern lyric? Is a poem with this orientation for the most part going to be a short one or at least use short lines?

Would a poetics of subsistence, to the extent that it is practically and politically interested in the movement of energy, need to encompass a bewildering diverse array of poets, such as LAwrence, Jeffers, Ammons, Cage, Enslin, Kerouac,

Merwin, Swenson among many others? (Being ignorant of such poetry in other languages, I mention only those writing in English.)

How would those poetics dedicated to deconstructing grammaticality abet or confound a poetics of subsistence?

I stress "energy" rather than other abstractions such as power, language, hegemony because it helps me think about what I am doing by spending a hour typing this up, and some portion of time each day plugged into the power grid/controlled conflagration that is my home or office. How expensive is this process of playing and working with poetics? ARe these questions futile because the structural position of their enunciation is urban and middle-class and spatially nul?

Shew! enough for now.

Gary R.

↑ Index

275. David W. Clippinger
Re: top 10
Tue 12 May 1998

---

1. sulfur
2. chain
3. talisman
4. sagetrieb
5. five fingers review
6. the germ
7. conjunctions
8. chicago review
9. hambone
10. arshile

Thanks,

David Clippinger
Assistant Professor of English
Penn State University

At 12:23 PM 5/12/98 -0600, you wrote:
>Suggestions please:
>
>I'm in the process of working on collection development for our writing >and poetics department here at the Naropa Library. We currently >subscribe to about 13 writing/poetry/lit.-related journals. On our >budget, we can't afford a whole lot, but -- please send (backchannel >would be great) me your top 10 (or so) journals/zines -- whatever you >would like to see and read in your ideal library.

>
>--
>Laura Wright <[redacted]>
>Library Assistant, Naropa Institute
>[redacted]
>
>"All music is music..." -- Ted Berrigan
>
>

↑ Index

276. R. Gancie

radical

Tue 12 May 1998

Died some, pro patria,
        non "dulce" non "et decor"...
walked eye-deep in hell
believing in old men's lies, then unbelieving came home, home to a lie,
home to many deceits,
home to old lies and new infamy;
usury age-old and age-thick and liars in public places.
---from E. P. ODE POUR L'ELECTION DE SON SEPULCHRE
---cp

↑ Index

277. louis stroffolino

Re: My Mediocrity

Tue 12 May 1998

Emotional Range.....
Should it be a value?
I often say "yes"
but sometimes say "no"....
Sometimes "sanitized" is good is necessary.....

The more interesting question for me right now is the relation of reader to writer when it comes to

"emotional range"-----
I know I keep harping (unduly) on that Auden blurb in which he says he can read Marianne Moore in ANY MOOD.... and that I am skeptical of that (and I don't mean this as a criticism of Moore)....
I guess when looking at myself reading other poets (or writers)
I wonder what effect (or affect) my "emotional range" has on what I'm reading.
And, if one is a SUBJECTIVIST, how making claims about a poet's emotional range will always be too some extent a claim about one's own emotions while reading it..... or something IN BETWEEN
or something IN BETWEEN

Yet, despite the seeming noncommittal quality of what I've just said,
I realize there IS a valid perspective from which O'Hara can be said not to have a comprehensive "emotional range"--- but this brings me to the limits of poetry on the page and I turn to theatre or music (in which dylan has more emotional range than THE FALL
or FLIPPER who said
"you're so bored coz you're boring"
(just talking to myself here disclaimer)...chris

↑ Index

278. Rachel Levitsky

Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press

Tue 12 May 1998

Dear Randolph,

I'm enjoying the books you sent me so much. They're beautiful!!!! I mean stunning.

I'm not done with either yet but so far in Arbor Vitae I love the puzzle aspect--the chaos that is not, the unspoken (unwritten) word/sign that dangles in front, the subtle undermining of language use without the usual knock on the hand "THIS IS A POEM THAT WANTS YOU TO QUESTION YOUR USE OF LANGUAGE" rather I am thinking about things when I read, the school, the deaf, iconography, pictures, history.

Your World War II poem a great anti-war poem.

I continue to enjoy the work.

Also--

My friends Jennifer Heath (Irish/Australian/American) and Steven Taylor and Judy Hussy and Eamon their child are heading toward Dublin on Thursday. Jennifer lives with poet Jack Collom and is a fiction writer, Steve is a musician (with Ed Sanders punk band "The Fugs") and writer, Judy is a dancer/writer and Eamon is learning to walk. I don't have a map in front of me to see where Bray is. They will also be in West Galway. They rented something.

I told Jennifer I'd mention her to you. Her email is:
[redacted]

If you'd be interested in meeting them and have a chance to email her today or tomorrow.

until later,
Rachel

↑ Index

279. Rachel Levitsky
Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
Tue 12 May 1998

Forgive me all--that is truly embarrassing.

Rachel

↑ Index

280. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Special Issue of Sulfur
Tue 12 May 1998

CALL FOR CONTRIBUTIONS

Jenny Penberthy and Marjorie Perloff are guest-editing Sulfur #44, which will be devoted to Anglophone poetry and poetics written OUTSIDE the U.S. and UK. Contributions from residents of Canada, New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, the Caribbean, Israel, India, Singapore and all the other nations, large and small, where poetries are written in English, will be welcome. The Deadline is December 1, 1998. Please send your work, with a SASE to Jenny Penberthy 3125 Waterloo St. Vancouver BC V6R 358 email [redacted].

or
Marjorie Perloff
1467 Amalfi Drive

Pacific Palisades, CA 90272
email [redacted] or [redacted]

Sulfur #44 had previously been announced (in Sulfur 42, just out) as a Pacific Rim issue. But we have decided that, given our own knowledge (or lack thereof) this might be too problematic. So we've chosen this route instead.

With best wishes,

Marjorie and Jenny

↑ Index

281. JDEBROT
Re: My Mediocrity
Tue 12 May 1998

The relative lack of "emotional range" in O'Hara's work is, it seems to me, quite political in that the tendency of his poems to private or coded exchange of meanings must be viewed as reacting against the social pressures that pathologized homosexuality during this period (& is played out quite subtlely, for instance, in the first plate of the _Stones_ collabration in which Rivers immediately destabilizes the title of the piece ("US") by decorating the letters to resemble an American flag -- the pun being that the two meanings to which the title now alludes were opposite, homosexuality being equivalent at this time to un-Americanness). Of course an aesthetic of silence (would this be in some way related to an aesthetic of subsistence?) is even more apparent in the work of, say, Johns, Cage, or the Ashbery of _The Tennis Court Oath_, for whom the avoidance of artistic expression (and the refusal, in consequence, of a "determinate focal point or center of interest" [Branden Joseph]) shifts the work's emphasis, as Chris Stroffolino seems to suggest, away from its autographic or gestural content to a priviledging of the viewer's (or reader's) receptivity -- that is away from a transcendental to a social meaningfullness. Susan Sontag's important essay "The Aesthetics of Silence," roughly contemporary with the emerging avant-garde of O'Hara's generation, is quite revealing re these issues.

↑ Index

282. Maria Damon
more queries
Tue 12 May 1998

---

1. what tribe (nation) is Leonard Peltier a member of?
2. does anyone know of any published history or study of renga? i've got an undergrad doing a final paper on it.

3. can't remember the third, but it was important (to me) so stay tuned md

↑ Index

283. Maria Damon
Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
Tue 12 May 1998

At 2:07 PM -0600 5/12/98, Rachel Levitsky wrote:
>Forgive me all--that is truly embarrassing.
>
>Rachel

not nearly so embarrassing as the verbal compost matter Bowering and Bromige subject us to --on purpose ;)

↑ Index

284. Susan Wheeler
Re: more queries
Tue 12 May 1998

Hey, Maria. 1979 Princeton U Press: Japanese Linked Poetry: An Account with Translations of Renga and Haikai Sequences by Earl Miner I've found useful.

At 03:57 PM 5/12/98 -0500, you wrote:
>1. what tribe (nation) is Leonard Peltier a member of?
>2. does anyone know of any published history or study of renga? i've got an >undergrad doing a final paper on it.
>3. can't remember the third, but it was important (to me) so stay tuned
>md
>
>
Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

285. Alan Myouka Sondheim
the last of substitution
Tue 12 May 1998

-

Scrawl

There is the countermanding, countermovement - so one might suppose _this_ text to be the result of substitutions, revealing an armature against which I might be judged - for example, am I wearing Jennifer's panties at the moment? Do I masturbate thinking of Nikuko, are you Nikuko yourself - uncomfortable truths perhaps that appear _only_ through the game played across the (game)board of lies, deflections, misplaced attributions, plagiarisms? Should I think of you bent over, my tongue caressing your warm and unclean holes? Should I blame these embarrassments on the manner in which this text was composed, that is, as a matter of substitutions, thereby constituted by the machine, my own role as an afterthought in this manner of replacements? Perhaps I myself am such a substitution, replace- ment; perhaps this is written by someone else other than Jennifer, Alan, Julu, or Nikuko herself, sodden with self-pleasure? Perhaps this is fur- ther generated by the machine-ab-nihilo, procreated out of nothing, hardly the stains on my panties, breasts marked with teeth and nails? Should I excuse myself from the machine? Should anyone? (And what, in such a style of writing, would be the _ur-text,_ if not the following (for example):

There OM Ghe couRGermaRdORg, couRGermovemeRG - Mo oRe mOghG MuppoMe _GhOM_ GexG Go be Ghe reMulG of MubMGOGuGOoRM, revealORg aR armaGure agaORMG whOch X mOghG be judged - for example, am X wearORg JeRROfer'M paRGOeM aG Ghe momeRG? Do X maMGurbaGe GhORkORg of NOkuko, are ,ou NOkuko ,ourMelf - uRcomforGable GruGhM perhapM GhaG appear _oRl,_ Ghrough Ghe game pla,ed acroMM Ghe (game)board of lOeM, deflecGOoRM, mOMplaced aGGrObuGOoRM, plagOarOMmM? Should X GhORk of ,ou beRG over, m, GoRgue careMMORg ,our warm aRd uRcleaR holeM? Should X blame GheMe embarraMMmeRGM oR Ghe maRRer OR whOch GhOM GexG waM compoMed, GhaG OM, aM a maGGer of MubMGOGuGOoRM, Ghereb, coRMGOGuGed b, Ghe machORe, m, owR role aM aR afGerGhoughG OR GhOM maRRer of replacemeRGM? PerhapM X m,Melf am Much a MubMGOGuGOoR, replace- meRG; perhapM GhOM OM wrOGGeR b, MomeoRe elMe oGher GhaR JeRROfer, AlaR, Julu, or NOkuko herMelf, ModdeR wOGh Melf-pleaMure? PerhapM GhOM OM fur- Gher geReraGed b, Ghe machORe-ab-ROhOlo, procreaGed ouG of RoGhORg, hardl, Ghe MGaORM oR m, paRGOeM, breaMGM marked wOGh GeeGh aRd RaOlM? Should X excuMe m,Melf from Ghe machORe? Should aR,oRe? (ARd whaG, OR Much a MG,le of wrOGORg, would be Ghe _ur-GexG,_ Of RoG Ghe followORg (for example):

ah ah ah
a un

↑ Index

286. MAYHEW
F O'H
Tue 12 May 1998

Wait a minute-- Are we taking for granted O'Hara's lack of emotional range, then? I've never found this to be the case. It is true that he usually has his defenses up (except when he lets them done); that he is chatty and facetious (except when he's not) etc... In other words, he is extremely difficult to generalize about, because I can find you the poem that shoots the generalization to hell. He has more styles than just about anyone in a shorter period of time. There is the style (and emotional range) of "The Clouds go Soft" for example, or his poems about Gregory Corso. This is not to deny the point about a certain reticence in his work, like Asbhery's "Our days put on such reticence / these accents seem their own defense." Yet this "aesthetics of silence" is not a constant either. What about "Biotherm"?

I am not arguing that having such an emotional range is a sine qua non. I don't care that Creeley has a fairly limited range, for example. I am just puzzled by the acceptance of this judgment about O'Hara....

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

287. louis stroffolino
Re: F O'H
Tue 12 May 1998

I'm not taking "lack of emotional range" for granted... some connoiseur of the mess i could call frank's but could also call mine (would du charme call this oedipal?) or society's, or language's, etc.....c

On Tue, 12 May 1998, MAYHEW wrote:

> Wait a minute--
> Are we taking for granted O'Hara's lack of emotional range, then? I've never found this to be the case. It is true that he usually has his defenses up (except when he lets them done); that he is chatty and facetious (except when he's not) etc... In other words, he is extremely difficult to generalize about, because I can find you the poem that shoots the generalization to hell. He has more styles than just about anyone in a shorter period of time. There is the style (and emotional range) of "The Clouds go Soft" for example, or his poems about Gregory Corso. This is > not to deny the point about a certain reticence in his work, like Asbhery's "Our days put on such reticence / these accents seem their own defense." Yet this "aesthetics of silence" is not a constant either. What about "Biotherm"?

>
> I am not arguing that having such an emotional range is a sine qua non. I don't care that Creeley has a fairly limited range, for example. I am just puzzled by the acceptance of this judgment about O'Hara....
>
> Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

288. Karen Kelley

Re: "radical"

Tue 12 May 1998

As someone who wears a suit & doesn't smoke, I suggest that I make a more radical fashion statement as a poet.

Tim Wood wrote:

> Someone is reputed to have said
>
> Linda Russo really addressed what I was questioning: Is it possible, in the context of the immediate present, to be a "radical poet"? I mean, everyone addressed it, I guess, but I think Linda articulated it in a way that for me felt most accurate. It's not a question that I feel can be answered at the moment, but I keep coming back to it.
>
> I'll share something that happened (to me) that ties in with whether anyone can be radical, let alone a radical poet. I don't fly very often and recently I had to take a round-trip flight with a stop at the airport in Minneapolis. The entire airport is no-smoking, including the curbside areas (except one area at the extreme end of the airport I stumbled upon on my return trip). Of course, people were lined up smoking in front of the no-smoking signs. The people in suits stood on the other side of the curb looking over at us while they waited for rides/taxis/whatever.
>
> It struck me that the most subversive act available for most people today is smoking in front of a no-smoking sign. Or, because of rising prices, taxes, group pressure, just smoking. It's very reminiscent of Chomsky's writing on the media: so much 'radical' behavior (e.g. smoking) has been put on display in parody or put on display and then discounted that the boundary lines have become in some case unlocatable and in other cases so narrow that being radical, subversive, whatever is a daunting task to say the least. If there are no revolutions in the streets, no movements that show any signs of changing the world and the paradigm, how can poetry be > radical except against itself again and again. Or radical/observational in the sense of following the shift paradigm of the status quo and capitalism (and yes I know differentiating the two is problematic).

>
> Tim
>
> ---
> poetry is an hour
> a flash
> of sound
> bytes
> found > rescued
> boiled
> freed
> to rage again

↑ Index

289. Keston Sutherland

reading, wednesday

Tue 12 May 1998

a reminder to those in the Boston area, Wednesday 13th there'll be a reading at Winthrop House, Harvard (just off memorial drive, or a block away from the yard, on the river), 8.00, free, featuring Dan Bouchard, Andrea Brady, Andrew DuBois and Keston Sutherland -- if you're thinking of coming, it's the building on the RIGHT (Winthrop is two buildings), just go into the central quad and through the main entrance, the TONKENS ROOM is in the adjoining quad, it should be signposted. Hope to see some of you there, k

↑ Index

290. ScoutEW

Re: My Mediocrity

Tue 12 May 1998

In a message dated 5/12/98 1:55:24 PM, you wrote:

<<or FLIPPER who said>>

SEX Bomb Baby Yeah!!!!
It's JUst the Way of the World!!!!!!!

↑ Index

291. ScoutEW
Re: forgive this intrusion stupid Nikuko wants to live
Tue 12 May 1998

In a message dated 5/11/98 11:23:14 PM, you wrote:

<<

A (a) UN (a) A (S) UN (s) A (S) UN (K)

I want mo make a mexican his ex-/my arms are warm/ARAM SAROYAN and sub smurf me one lemur for and her, begin me pro cess of sub mum is teh word, says I, shinuko.
Soon, me and sippin on ginsing/m.e.t.h.o.d.
and his new mexican will be he one hambone saves me;
his new american ex-presidents will be he one I murmur in my sleep;
his new angry samoans will be tin the final exam in pierre joris seminar.
So I begin looking students who talk in class/about Olson which is now a mission to burma womyn, bum which appears and in a serious game of Don Byrd not Dave Byrd or the other Don Byrd because I want to save myself from language, because I am getting tired of m's unless they are m$ ms and dying in my mouth, because I need his magic, his in the can am is, so ham I, ai shi iku ko, can con minue just another day of her.

A (1) UNsubscribe "Time" list
A (1) UNsubscribe "the Nation"
A (1) UNsubscribe "Tool a Magazine"
>>

↑ Index

292. George Bowering
Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
Wed 13 May 1998

> not nearly so embarrassing as the verbal compost matter Bowering and Bromige subject us to --on purpose ;)

Okay, Maria. I am not going to backchannel any more of our secret stuff to you.Unless you take that remark back.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

293. Gary Sullivan
Re: F O'H
Wed 13 May 1998

TO EDWIN DENBY

I'm so much more me
that you are perfectly you.
What you have clearly said
is yet in me unmade.

I'm so much more me
as time ticks in our ceilings
that you are perfectly you,
your deep and lightning feelings.

And I see in the flashes
what you have clearly said,
that feelings are our facts.
As yet in me unmade.

--Frank O'Hara, ca. 1957

↑ Index

294. Gary Sullivan
Creeley Speaks
Wed 13 May 1998

Judy Roitman earlier mentioned Creeley as someone capable of ridding the ego from his writing. This, from his interview with Linda Wagner suggests otherwise . . . the interview, read en toto, suggests a deep personal involvement in the poem . . .

"The distance is dictated by the poem, not by the writer. Or the assumptions he may bring to it. . . . Writing to me is the most intimate of all acts; why should I want to maintain a distance from that which engages me in it?"

--Robert Creeley, from an interview with Linda Wagner, ca. 1965

↑ Index

295. Maria Damon
Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
Wed 13 May 1998

At 12:42 AM -0700 5/13/98, George Bowering wrote:
>>not nearly so embarrassing as the verbal compost matter Bowering and >>Bromige subject us to --on purpose ;)
>
>Okay, Maria. I am not going to backchannel any more of our secret stuff to >you.Unless you take that remark back.

George, i will not be implicated in your murky designs. especially not in public. btw, please mail all suspicious looking packages to my po box, not my home address. thanks, md
>
>
>
>
>
>George Bowering.
> ,
>2499 West 37th Ave.,
>Vancouver, B.C.,
>Canada V6M 1P4
>
>fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

296. Gary Sullivan
Robert Hale...do you take requests?
Wed 13 May 1998

Hi, Robert:

I want to request two things. The first is that, rather than simply dismiss "focus" "energy" and "intensity" as values worth my time & interest attending myself to, you explain why they're "bullshit." I'm willing to consider what you have to say.

Secondly, since it's obvious now that the Andrews issue of AERIAL doesn't yet exist, I'm going to make the assumption that you haven't read it. Which means . . . well, that you offered me something "of value" that you have no personal experience with yourself. In other words, you have opinions about things you've never read. I don't want to make this assumption; I'd much rather assume you've read the magazine's contents in a galley copy or manuscript. Please let me know. In either instance, I'd still like to see that reading of Andrews's writing as of significant political impact. YOUR reading. Not his. Nor his pals.

Thanks,

Gary

On Tuesday, May 12, 1998 1:54 PM, Robert Hale [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> I don't know, Gary, you slammed me pretty hard last week for my post where I > suggested radical elements in B. Andrews' and other work. Considering the > nature of my post and my own love of politics, I had no problem with your > line of questioning. I wouldn't even call it "ferocious," but considering > the gist of your counter-opinion -- that the value of his work lies in it's
> "focus" "energy" and "intensity" -- perhaps you should turn the bullshit > detector on yourself.
>
> Sniping aside, you're on the right track in questioning generalizations.

↑ Index

297. sean bonney
Re: british experimentalism
Wed 13 May 1998

Maria,

about the best recent anthology of experimental british work (though not sure how multicultural) that I know of is Iain Sinclair's "Conducters of Chaos" published a couple of years ago (there's a review of it somewhere on the EPC).

Good representation of differing strands of radical british work from the last twenty years or so. I would point especially to the selections by Aaron Williamson,

best,
Sean

[redacted]

↑ Index

298. Michael Magee
Re: Creeley Speaks
Wed 13 May 1998

According to Gary Sullivan:
>
> Judy Roitman earlier mentioned Creeley as someone capable of ridding the ego > from his writing. This, from his interview with Linda Wagner suggests otherwise
> . . . the interview, read en toto, suggests a deep personal involvement in the > poem . . .
>
> "The distance is dictated by the poem, not by the writer. Or the assumptions he > may bring to it. . . . Writing to me is the most intimate of all acts; why > should I want to maintain a distance from that which engages me in it?"
>
> --Robert Creeley, from an interview with Linda Wagner, ca. 1965
>

Ok, but your equating words like "intimacy" "engagement" and "me" with the ego, whereas Creeley would be hestitant to do so, since selfhood for Creeley is so fragamented. Here's a quote from his collected essays:

"I am struck by the situation of schizophrenia wherein the experience of body may so place the hands or feet or anus in the consciousness so affected, that no comunal agreement as to their location is possible. A self-created reality in that way dominates and isolates the one who has become, even without intention or agreement, its world."

This is the self as a "complex of occassions" to use Olson's phrase, nothing like the bourgeois or transcendental ego. Creeley, I think, would agree with William James, that "The ego is simply nothing: as ineffectual and windy an abortion as Philosophy can show."

-m.

↑ Index

299. Andrew D Epstein
F O'H
Wed 13 May 1998

I think part of the quietness surrounding Gary Sullivan's charge that O'Hara emotional range is "very sanitized" is a sort of bafflement (clearly expressed by Jordan's asking Gary whether they both have the same edition of the Collected Poems). I don't think this quietness means a tacit agreement with this assessment. I can't think of any poet whose work, and whose expression of human emotion and its variety and range, is LESS "sanitized," (though I'm not sure what that means) so it is hard to know how to respond to Gary S.'s comment.

As Jonathan Mayhew points out, O'Hara's work is _defined_ by self-contradiction, by shifting styles and modes; any generalization about his work is easily contradicted by various other specific examples. From what I can tell from reading O'Hara, he would LOVE this (and Jonathan's post in general about his variability).

In what seems to be a response to someone criticizing his emotional range, O'Hara answers (in the poem that has been making me happy on the New York subways for the last few months):

"I'm not going to cry all the time
nor shall I laugh all the time,
I don't prefer one 'strain' to another...
And if some afficionado of my mess says 'That's not like Frank!', all to the good! I don't wear brown and grey suits all the time, do I? No. I wear workshirts to the opera, often. I want my feet to be bare,
I want my face to be shaven, and my heart -- you can't plan on the heart, but the better part of it, my poetry, is open." (My Heart)

Of course there is some bragging in these last lines, but I think he's right about his own work; while Gary's point that O'Hara frequently modulates between exuberance, ironic gesture, and maudlin moments (I'd say melancholy, maybe) is a good observation, it misses so much of O'Hara's variety, nuance, and range. (Never mind the fact that a poet who handles exuberance, irony, and sadness so deftly would be a great writer even with just those three modes).

To see O'Hara's poems as exhibiting what Gary calls narcissism and arrogance is to only see half of what they are up to. This self-regard is always problematized, undercut, ironized, theatricalized, and seen as flickering fiction, a naked host to one's many selves. ("Now I am quietly waiting for/ the catastrophe of my personality/ to seem beautiful again,/ and interesting, and modern.") He's painfully aware of how "sentiment is always intruding on form" ("To Hell With It.")

You can open to any page in the Collected and see so many more than the "one or two feelings" Gary names.

POEM

Instant coffee with slightly sour cream in it, and a phone call to the beyond which doesn't seem to be coming any nearer.
"Ah daddy, I wanna stay drunk many days"
on the poetry of a new friend my life held precariously in the seeing hands of others, their and my impossibilities.
Is this love, now that the first love has finally died, where there no impossibilities?

TO JOHN ASHBERY

I can't believe there's not another world where we will sit and read new poems to each other high on a mountain in the wind.
You can be Tu Fu, I'll be Po Chu-i and the Monkey Lady'll be in the moon, smiling at our ill-fitting heads
as we watch snow settle on a twig.
Or shall we be really gone? this is not the grass I saw in my youth!
and if the moon, when it rises tonight, is empty -- a bad sign, meaning "You go, like the blossoms."

I shall forget forever America which was like a memory of an island massacre in the black robes of my youthful fear of shadows.
So easily conquered by the black torrent of this knife. (from "Hatred")

I find it hard to see how these and countless other poems are "ultimately very sanitized" and limited in their emotional range to a handful of notes.

Curious to know what others think.

take care,

Andrew Epstein

↑ Index

300. Gary Sullivan

I love typing "FO'H" . . . as, who wouldn't?

Wed 13 May 1998

Thanks, Michael Magee for that Creeley excerpt. I'd love to read the entire essay, but don't have the collected essays. Do you know, is it in either A Quick Graph or Was That a Real Poem . . .? What's the title of the essay? Lemme know. & thanks again.

Jonathan! in re your suggestion:

Here are some poems I think
demonstrate some of his emotional as well as stylistic range:

"Who'd of thought / that snow falls"
"Mr. O'Hara's Sunday Morning Service" [in _Poems Retrieved_]
[The Clouds Go Soft]
"Poetry"
"A True Account of Talking to the Sun"
"Answer to Vozneshensky and Evtushenko"

I've taken the liberty of typing those poems out, in part because it helps me to SLOW DOWN as I read the work, but moreso because I'd like the pieces up here, on the board, because I'd really appreciate a reading from you of these, specifically concentrated on the emotional range, which isn't as obvious to me as the stylistic range. I'm still seeing grey, & feel like a chump, a chimp, a cheap simp, a peachy mispeep, etc. As Chris Stroffolino and Jordan Davis and you all I think intimated, it's more likely a limitation of MY emotional range. Could you (or anyone) take these poems apart . . . help foreground their emotional resonance for me? I know taking poems apart is icky-critic work, but this is O'Hara . . . & I think the poems will still sing, will be as lovely as they were before we got our dirty paws & thoughts all over them. (Just got Andrew Epstein's post . . . thank you! especially for quoting!) . . . --Gary

WIND

to Morton Feldman

Who'd have thought
that snow falls
it always circled whirling
like a thought
in the glass ball
around me and my bear

Then it seemed beautiful containment

snow whirled nothing ever fell
nor my little bear
                bad thoughts
imprisoned in crystal

beauty has replaced itself with evil

And the snow whirls only in fatal winds briefly
                then falls

it always loathed containment
                beasts
I love evil

MR. O'HARA'S SUNDAY MORNING SERVICE

There is this to be said
for Sunday morning: that if I have been very bad the night
before and wake up feeling

like a drab on a sunny day,
Dick will pop into my room
and invite me out to the high abandoned airfield.

There, the sun will seem properly chilly and the wind
will not compromise us
with any silly sentiment

I will walk about on the heaving grass rather shakily
and observe the model airplanes
lofted by dry blue currents.

As Dick like a discus hurler
throws his wood into the sky
I begin to feel engaged and follow the glider straining

its little spirit into swoops
that clumsily break and bounce
to earth with a grunt. Then he must pick up on its wings

and go home, to make repairs,
to putty its nose and straighten
its tail, to talk about winds
and temperatures and balance,

to think about theories of flight, and shave perhaps. So all through dinner our clear
anxious eyes remain aloft.

[THE CLOUDS GO SOFT]

The clouds go soft change color and so many kinds
puff up, disperse
sink into the sea
the heavens go out of kilter
an insane remark greets
the monkey on the moon
in a season of wit
it is all demolished
or made fragrant
sputnik is only the word for "traveling companion"

here on earth
at 16 you weigh 144 pounds and at 36

the shirts change, endless procession
but they are all neck 14 sleeve 33

and holes appear and are filled
the same holes anonymous filler
no more conversion, no more conversation

the sand inevitably seeks the eye
and it is the same eye

POETRY

The only way to be quiet
is to be quick, so I scare
you clumsily, or surprise
you with a stab. A praying
mantis knows time more intimately than I and is more casual. Crickets use time for accompaniment to innocent fidgeting. A zebra

races counterclockwise.
All this I desire. To deepen you by my quickness
and delight as if you
were logical and proven,
but still be quiet as if I were used to you; as if you would never leave me
and were the inexorable
product of my own time.

A TRUE ACCOUNT OF TALKING
TO THE SUN AT FIRE ISLAND

The Sun woke me this morning loud and clear, saying "Hey! I've been trying to wake you up for fifteen minutes. Don't be so rude, you are only the second poet I've ever chosen to speak to personally
                so why aren't you more attentive? If I could burn you through the window I would
to wake you up. I can't hang around here all day."
                "Sorry, Sun, I stayed
up late last night talking to Hal."

"When I woke up Mayakovsky he was a lot more prompt" the Sun said
petulantly. "Most people are up already waiting to see if I'm going to put in an appearance."
                I tried
to apologize "I missed you yesterday."
"That's better," he said. "I didn't know you'd come out." "You may be wondering why I've come so close?"
"Yes" I said beginning to feel hot wondering if maybe he wasn't burning me anyway.
            "Frankly I wanted to tell you
I like your poetry. I see a lot on my rounds and you're okay. You may not be the greatest thing on earth, but you're different. Now, I've heard some say you're crazy, they being excessively calm themselves to my mind, and other crazy poets think that you're a boring

reactionary. not me.
Just keep on like I do and pay no attention. You'll find that people always will complain about the atmosphere, either too hot or too cold too bright or too dark, days
too short or too long.
If you don't appear
at all one day they think you're lazy
or dead. Just keep right on. I like it.

And don't worry about your lineage poetic or natural. The Sun shines on the jungle, you know, on the tundra
the sea, the ghetto. Wherever you were
I knew it and saw you moving. I was waiting for you to get to work.

And now that you
are making your own days, so to speak,
even if no one reads you but me
you won't be depressed. Not everyone can look up, even at me. It hurts their eyes."
"Oh Sun, I'm so grateful to you!"

"Thanks and remember I'm watching. It's easier for me to speak to you out here. I don't have to slide down between buildings to get your ear.
I know you love Manhattan, but
you ought to look up more often.
And
always embrace things, people earth
sky stars, as I do, freely and with the appropriate sense of space. That is your inclination, known in the heavens
and you should follow it to hell, if necessary, which I doubt.

Maybe we'll
speak again in Africa, of which I too
am specially fond. Go back to sleep now
Frank, and I may leave a tiny poem
in that brain of yours as my farewell."

"Sun, don't go!" I was awake at last. "No, go I must, they're calling me."
"Who are they?"
Rising he said "Some day you'll know. They're calling to you too." Darkly he rose, and then I slept.

ANSWER TO VOZNESENSKY & EVTUSHENKO

We are tired of your tiresome imitations of Mayakovsky
we are tired
of your dreary tourist ideaas of our Negro selves
our selves are in far worse condition than the obviousness
of your color sense
your general sense of Poughkeepsie is a gaucherie no American poet would be guilty of in Tiflis
thanks to French Impressionism
we do not pretend to know more
than can be known
how many sheets have you stained with your semen
oh Tartars, and how many of our loves have you illuminated with your heart and breath
as we poets of America have loved you your countrymen, our countryme, our lives, your lives, and the dreary expanses of your translations
your idiotic manifestos
and the strange black cock which has become ours despite your envy

we do what we feel
you do not even do what you must or can
I do not love you any more since Mayakovsky died and Pasternak theirs was the death of my nostalgia for your tired ignorant race
since you insist on race
you shall not take my friends away from me
because they live in Harlem

you shall not make Mississippi into Sakhalin
you came too late, a lovely talent doesn't make a ball
I consider myself to be black and you not even part where you see death
you see a dance of death
which is imperialist, implies training, requires techniques
our ballet does not employ
you are indeed as cold as wax
as your progenitor was red, and how greatly we loved his redness
in the fullness of our own idiotic sun! what
"roaring universe" outshouts his violent triumphant sun!
you are not even speaking
in a whisper
Mayakovsky's hat worn by a horse

On Tuesday, May 12, 1998 2:52 PM, MAYHEW [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> Hi Gary:
>
> People do take their O'Hara seriously. Here are some poems I think > demonstrate some of his emotional as well as stylistic range:
>
> "Who'd of thought / that snow falls"
> "Mr. O'Hara's Sunday Morning Service" [in _Poems Retrieved_]
> [The Clouds Go Soft]
> "Poetry"
> "A True Account of Talking to the Sun"
> "Answer to Vozneshensky and Evtushenko"
>
> I get the opposite response from O'Hara from the one you describe--not > suffocation but liberation, which is not to say you are wrong in your > reaction--there is a surface edginess that can be wearying to many readers > and can give an impression of sameness even when underneath the emotions > are shifting constantly.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
>
>

↑ Index

301. Robert Hale

Re: Robert Hale...do you take requests?

Wed 13 May 1998

Based on the quality of past AERIAL issues, I am definitely making an assumption that the Andrews issue will be worth reading.

As I stated previously, I owe you a reading of Andrews, and I will try to deliver on that when I get a chance. There are a number of things on my plate right now, including a review of Millennium Vol.2 -- a big task that may produce some more detailed insights on the issues we've raised.

At 09:39 AM 5/13/98 -0400, you wrote:
>Hi, Robert:
>
>I want to request two things. The first is that, rather than simply dismiss >"focus" "energy" and "intensity" as values worth my time & interest attending >myself to, you explain why they're "bullshit." I'm willing to consider what you >have to say.
>
>Secondly, since it's obvious now that the Andrews issue of AERIAL doesn't yet >exist, I'm going to make the assumption that you haven't read it. Which means
.
>. . well, that you offered me something "of value" that you have no personal >experience with yourself. In other words, you have opinions about things you've >never read. I don't want to make this assumption; I'd much rather assume you've >read the magazine's contents in a galley copy or manuscript. Please let me >know. In either instance, I'd still like to see that reading of Andrews's >writing as of significant political impact. YOUR reading. Not his. Nor his >pals.
>
>Thanks,
>
>Gary
>
>On Tuesday, May 12, 1998 1:54 PM, Robert Hale [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
>> I don't know, Gary, you slammed me pretty hard last week for my post where I >> suggested radical elements in B. Andrews' and other work. Considering the >> nature of my post and my own love of politics, I had no problem with your >> line of questioning. I wouldn't even call it "ferocious," but considering >> the gist of your counter-opinion -- that the value of his work lies in it's

>> "focus" "energy" and "intensity" -- perhaps you should turn the bullshit >> detector on yourself.
>>
>> Sniping aside, you're on the right track in questioning generalizations.
>
>

↑ Index

302. Michael Magee
Re: I love typing "FO'H" . . . as, who wouldn't?
Wed 13 May 1998

The Creeley essay I quoted is from 1973, entitled "The Creative." I highly recommend, to everyone, buying the Collected Essays - the essays are as brilliant as the poems. -m.

According to Gary Sullivan:
>
> Thanks, Michael Magee for that Creeley excerpt. I'd love to read the entire > essay, but don't have the collected essays. Do you know, is it in either A > Quick Graph or Was That a Real Poem . . .? What's the title of the essay? Lemme > know. & thanks again.
>
> Jonathan! in re your suggestion:
>
> Here are some poems I think
> demonstrate some of his emotional as well as stylistic range:
>
> "Who'd of thought / that snow falls"
> "Mr. O'Hara's Sunday Morning Service" [in _Poems Retrieved_]
> [The Clouds Go Soft]
> "Poetry"
> "A True Account of Talking to the Sun"
> "Answer to Vozneshensky and Evtushenko"
>
> I've taken the liberty of typing those poems out, in part because it helps me > to SLOW DOWN as I read the work, but moreso because I'd like the pieces up > here, on the board, because I'd really appreciate a reading from you of these, > specifically concentrated on the emotional range, which isn't as obvious to me > as the stylistic range. I'm still seeing grey, & feel like a chump, a chimp, a > cheap simp, a peachy mispeep, etc. As Chris Stroffolino and Jordan Davis and > you all I think intimated, it's more likely a limitation of MY emotional range.

> Could you (or anyone) take these poems apart . . . help foreground their > emotional resonance for me? I know taking poems apart is icky-critic work, but > this is O'Hara . . . & I think the poems will still sing, will be as lovely as > they were before we got our dirty paws & thoughts all over them. (Just got > Andrew Epstein's post . . . thank you! especially for quoting!) . . . --Gary
>
>
> WIND
>
>   to Morton Feldman
>
> Who'd have thought
>   that snow falls
> it always circled whirling
> like a thought
>   in the glass ball
> around me and my bear
>
> Then it seemed beautiful
>   containment
> snow whirled
>   nothing ever fell
> nor my little bear
>   bad thoughts
> imprisoned in crystal
>
> beauty has replaced itself with evil
>
> And the snow whirls only
>   in fatal winds
> briefly
>   then falls
>
> it always loathed containment
>   beasts
> I love evil
>
>
> MR. O'HARA'S SUNDAY MORNING SERVICE
>

> There is this to be said
> for Sunday morning: that if > I have been very bad the night
> before and wake up feeling
>
> like a drab on a sunny day,
> Dick will pop into my room
> and invite me out to the > high abandoned airfield.
>
> There, the sun will seem
> properly chilly and the wind
> will not compromise us
> with any silly sentiment
>
> I will walk about on the
> heaving grass rather shakily
> and observe the model airplanes
> lofted by dry blue currents.
>
> As Dick like a discus hurler
> throws his wood into the sky
> I begin to feel engaged and > follow the glider straining
>
> its little spirit into swoops
> that clumsily break and bounce
> to earth with a grunt. Then
> he must pick up on its wings
>
> and go home, to make repairs,
> to putty its nose and straighten
> its tail, to talk about winds
> and temperatures and balance,
>
> to think about theories of > flight, and shave perhaps. So
> all through dinner our clear
> anxious eyes remain aloft.
>
>
> [THE CLOUDS GO SOFT]

>
> The clouds go soft > change color and so many kinds
> puff up, disperse
> sink into the sea
> the heavens go out of kilter
> an insane remark greets
> the monkey on the moon
> in a season of wit
> it is all demolished
> or made fragrant
> sputnik is only the word for "traveling companion"
>
> here on earth
> at 16 you weigh 144 pounds and at 36
>
> the shirts change, endless procession
> but they are all neck 14 sleeve 33
>
> and holes appear and are filled
> the same holes anonymous filler
> no more conversion, no more conversation
>
> the sand inevitably seeks the eye
> and it is the same eye
>
>
> POETRY
>
> The only way to be quiet
> is to be quick, so I scare
> you clumsily, or surprise
> you with a stab. A praying
> mantis knows time more > intimately than I and is > more casual. Crickets use
> time for accompaniment to > innocent fidgeting. A zebra
> races counterclockwise.
> All this I desire. To > deepen you by my quickness
> and delight as if you

> were logical and proven,
> but still be quiet as if
> I were used to you; as if > you would never leave me
> and were the inexorable
> product of my own time.
>
>
> A TRUE ACCOUNT OF TALKING
> TO THE SUN AT FIRE ISLAND
>
> The Sun woke me this morning loud
> and clear, saying "Hey! I've been > trying to wake you up for fifteen > minutes. Don't be so rude, you are > only the second poet I've ever chosen
> to speak to personally
> so why > aren't you more attentive? If I could > burn you through the window I would
> to wake you up. I can't hang around > here all day."
> "Sorry, Sun, I stayed > up late last night talking to Hal."
>
> "When I woke up Mayakovsky he was > a lot more prompt" the Sun said
> petulantly. "Most people are up
> already waiting to see if I'm going > to put in an appearance."
> I tried
> to apologize "I missed you yesterday."
> "That's better," he said. "I didn't > know you'd come out." "You may be
> wondering why I've come so close?"
> "Yes" I said beginning to feel hot > wondering if maybe he wasn't burning me
> anyway.
> "Frankly I wanted to tell you
> I like your poetry. I see a lot > on my rounds and you're okay. You may > not be the greatest thing on earth, but

> you're different. Now, I've heard some > say you're crazy, they being excessively
> calm themselves to my mind, and other
> crazy poets think that you're a boring
> reactionary. not me.
> Just keep on > like I do and pay no attention. You'll > find that people always will complain
> about the atmosphere, either too hot
> or too cold too bright or too dark, days
> too short or too long.
> If you don't appear
> at all one day they think you're lazy
> or dead. Just keep right on. I like it.
>
> And don't worry about your lineage
> poetic or natural. The Sun shines on
> the jungle, you know, on the tundra
> the sea, the ghetto. Wherever you were
> I knew it and saw you moving. I was waiting > for you to get to work.
>
> And now that you
> are making your own days, so to speak,
> even if no one reads you but me
> you won't be depressed. Not > everyone can look up, even at me. It
> hurts their eyes."
> "Oh Sun, I'm so grateful to you!"
>
> "Thanks and remember I'm watching. It's > easier for me to speak to you out
> here. I don't have to slide down > between buildings to get your ear.
> I know you love Manhattan, but
> you ought to look up more often.
> And
> always embrace things, people earth
> sky stars, as I do, freely and with > the appropriate sense of space. That > is your inclination, known in the heavens
> and you should follow it to hell, if > necessary, which I doubt.

> Maybe we'll
> speak again in Africa, of which I too
> am specially fond. Go back to sleep now
> Frank, and I may leave a tiny poem
> in that brain of yours as my farewell."
>
> "Sun, don't go!" I was awake > at last. "No, go I must, they're calling > me."
> "Who are they?"
> Rising he said "Some > day you'll know. They're calling to you > too." Darkly he rose, and then I slept.
>
>
> ANSWER TO VOZNESENSKY & EVTUSHENKO
>
> We are tired of your tiresome imitations of Mayakovsky
> we are tired
> of your dreary tourist ideaas of our Negro selves
> our selves are in far worse condition than the obviousness
> of your color sense
> your general sense of Poughkeepsie is
> a gaucherie no American poet would be guilty of in Tiflis
> thanks to French Impressionism
> we do not pretend to know more
> than can be known
> how many sheets have you stained with your semen
> oh Tartars, and how many > of our loves have you illuminated with
> your heart and breath
> as we poets of America have loved you
> your countrymen, our countryme, our lives, your lives, and > the dreary expanses of your translations
> your idiotic manifestos
> and the strange black cock which has become ours despite your envy
>
> we do what we feel
> you do not even do what you must or can
> I do not love you any more since Mayakovsky died and Pasternak
> theirs was the death of my nostalgia for your tired ignorant race

> since you insist on race
> you shall not take my friends away from me
> because they live in Harlem
> you shall not make Mississippi into > Sakhalin
> you came too late, a lovely talent doesn't make a ball
> I consider myself to be black and you not even part
> where you see death
> you see a dance of death
> which is > imperialist, implies training, requires techniques
> our ballet does not employ
> you are indeed as cold as wax
> as your progenitor was red, and how greatly we loved his redness
> in the fullness of our own idiotic sun! what
> "roaring universe" outshouts his violent triumphant sun!
> you are not even speaking
> in a whisper
> Mayakovsky's hat worn by a horse
>
>
> On Tuesday, May 12, 1998 2:52 PM, MAYHEW [SMTP:[redacted]]
> wrote:
> > Hi Gary:
> >
> > People do take their O'Hara seriously. Here are some poems I think > > demonstrate some of his emotional as well as stylistic range:
> >
> > "Who'd of thought / that snow falls"
> > "Mr. O'Hara's Sunday Morning Service" [in _Poems Retrieved_]
> > [The Clouds Go Soft]
> > "Poetry"
> > "A True Account of Talking to the Sun"
> > "Answer to Vozneshensky and Evtushenko"
> >
> > I get the opposite response from O'Hara from the one you describe--not > > suffocation but liberation, which is not to say you are wrong in your > > reaction--there is a surface edginess that can be wearying to many readers > > and can give an impression of sameness even when underneath the emotions
> > are shifting constantly.
> >

> > Jonathan Mayhew
> >
> >
>

↑ Index

303. MAYHEW
F O'H
Wed 13 May 1998

Gary (and who ever else is interested):

I don't usually want to do lit-crit explications on this list--that's what I do in my books and articles on Spanish poetry. Here's my brief take on some of the poems I suggested, however:

"Mr. O'Hara's Sunday morning service"

The experience of transcendence in friendship. The title of course a take-off on T.S. Eliot. An alternate model of spirituality.

"The Clouds go soft"

"Am I the same person I always was? What is my identity? I still wear the same shirt size as at age 16"

"Poetry"

"My casualness is all a mask, as you can plainly see; if I write too slowly and worry about being a great poet I will scare my muse away"

"Who'd have thought..."

My favorite O'Hara poem. Is it better to live in a self-contained world, identified with childhood? No, actions have consequences, snow falls. I must face the evil within myself and even love it.

"A true account"

"I must give myself permission to be a great poet (which I am) by imitating a great poem by Maiakovsky."

"Answer to ..." beautiful invective: "These Russian communist poets accuse us Americans of being racist, which pisses the hell out of me. American culture IS black culture, and vice-versa. Not only that, but the Russians are not even worthy heirs of Maiakovsky, as I am (see "A true account")."

I get a different emotional "charge" from each of these poems. I apologize for the crudeness of these paraphrases. Maybe Gary could suggest a poet he thinks has a great emotional range--the contrast might clarify his reaction to O'Hara...

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas
[redacted]

↑ Index

304. Michael Kelleher

Frank

Wed 13 May 1998

Frank is Number 1! Go Frank!

"In Memory of My Feelings" is a good place to look to see the full range of emotion O'Hara's poems can handle. It asks the eternal question who am I? and rather than answer with a barrage of sentiment, very coolly and wittily maps out the terrain of identity. Emotions in the poem are expressed indirectly, as if he were trying see the "Medusa" without being turned to stone. Thus in turning slightly away from the direct address/redress of emotion, he is able to map an entire range of emotions by mapping the movements of the mind through (variously) surreal imagery, personal narrative, classical art and history, national history, mythology and pop culture. All sashay and swagger about in a drag carnival as possible locations/masks for identity. The result is a movement through terror to ecstasy to resignation to satisfaction to pain to pleasure, no single emotion outdoing the other as they all vie with that most-modern of dillemmas, identity. The problem as it is revealed in the poem is that the poet discovers not a single unified self, but a series of masks which hint at something other than themsleves (I would argue something resembling the Kantian sublime), but never reveal it because whatever it is is not to be seen directly (like the Medusa). By revealing to himself the drag of identity, the poet is able to handle both the question who am I? more deftly than most poets I have seen, but to express a range of emotions hitherto unavailable in a poetry which does assume a stable ego.

See also "Second Avenue", "Ode to Michael Goldberg..." and "Easter" for this type of complexity and emotional range.

Truly,

Mike

P.S. Sorry so long, I'm in the midst of a paper on said subject and needed to let off some steam.

↑ Index

305. henry gould
Re: Frank
Wed 13 May 1998

stable identity, unstable... one self, many selves... isn't it all the same narcissism? Not just in O'Hara - it sort of defines the difference between lyric & epic, lyric & narrative. The "unstable" self misses out on the history in which the stable self is tested & ground down or raised up. While humorless grandiosity or puritanism as Rachel said doesn't make very good poetry - nevertheless, in a narcissistic Seinfeld industrial-commercial culture that can't even look at its own cities or the 3rd world, much less improve conditions there, maybe there's something in this radical/ narcissism/sustenance question...something political... - Henry G

↑ Index

306. Michael Kelleher
Re: Frank
Wed 13 May 1998

Henry,

I don't know if I'm arguing or agreeing with you, but wouldn't you say that in the context of 1950's America, a time in which the US goverment along with all of US commercail and media industries took a hand in attempts to forcibly "identify" persons within very strict categories, ie, american/un-american, the former being defined as straight, right-thinking, christian (Robert Lowell) and the latter defined as queer, pinko, atheist (Ginsberg) that the destabilizing of identity would in itself be a political act, one with potentially "real" political consequences (Lillian Hellman)?

Mike

↑ Index

307. henry
Re: Frank
Wed 13 May 1998

On Wed, 13 May 1998 14:16:48 -0400 Michael Kelleher said:
>Henry,
>
>I don't know if I'm arguing or agreeing with you, but wouldn't you say >that in the context of 1950's America, a time in which the US goverment >along with all of US commercail and media industries took a hand in >attempts to forcibly "identify" persons within very strict categories,

>ie, american/un-american, the former being defined as straight,
>right-thinking, christian (Robert Lowell) and the latter defined as >queer, pinko, atheist (Ginsberg) that the destabilizing of identity >would in itself be a political act, one with potentially "real" >political consequences (Lillian Hellman)?
>

No doubt about it. But I think that maybe at the present time Gary's idea of "sanitized" has to do with the "reification" of identity-as-poet - as opposed to a backgrounding of the poet and a bringing forward of the "theme" (radical/sustenance). Lyric vs. epic or something.

Both directions - lyric/epic, personal/impersonal - can be taken to the limit by radical people.
- Henry G.

↑ Index

308. Judy Roitman
Re: Creeley Speaks
Wed 13 May 1998

> Judy Roitman earlier mentioned Creeley as someone capable of ridding the ego from his writing. This, from his interview with Linda Wagner suggests otherwise
> . . . the interview, read en toto, suggests a deep personal involvement in the poem . . .
>
> "The distance is dictated by the poem, not by the writer. Or the assumptions he > may bring to it. . . . Writing to me is the most intimate of all acts; why should I want to maintain a distance from that which engages me in it?"
>
> --Robert Creeley, from an interview with Linda Wagner, ca. 1965

No contradiction.

There seem to be several definitions of "self" and "ego" & etc. (e.g., what does it mean to "rid the ego from writing?") running around here.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

309. Jordan Davis
Frankly
Wed 13 May 1998

A nice moment in Charles North's book of essays when he complains about Ashbery's punishing caprices, like "Leading liot act to foriage", it makes me think about O'Hara's use of the word "frankly" which always makes me tip me head forward in discomfort, eyes narrowed as from huge glare. Nevertheless, I see Uncle Henry steering the holodeck's hull into a butte and COMPUTER PAUSE would come to my lips if only I knew what any of those things meant. Bill what happened to Djarmok at Tenagra? I am outing you but you did it yourself. Now Henry I want to know why you are suggesting there is a direct connection between O'Hara and Seinfeld. What is up with those Providence anchorpeople's hair? I don't think O'Hara would have disliked Seinfeld, but more than that, I don't think any of us who argue that O'Hara had a better-populated mood palette than Gary argued would argue that it's possible to write like O'Hara -- not only does none of us have the datebook of an O'Hara, not only are we more restricted in our permissions (don't ask don't ask!), we have a somewhat different culture to pick and choose from. No offense to Zhdanov or Parschikov or Dragomoschenko, but where in the world are the Pasternaks for a young poet to cable support? Why haven't the young poets from Harvard shown up yet? Are they all writing for The Simpsons?

Subsistence, well we haven't heard much about it yet, but won't its poetic equivalent risk malnourishment? There's been some rumbling (Mark P? Gary?) about poetry and surplus. I'm no economist, but although poetry doesn't create surplus value, couldn't it be said to be the surplus of language itself? and when we say of something that it has duende or energy or overdeterminacy couldn't it just be this surplus of meaning? Please don't prematurely count me against the whole earth poetries, but tell me more, especially if you can do it without using the word "minimal".

OK today --
Jordan

↑ Index

310. Brent Long
Re: Creeley Speaks
Wed 13 May 1998

Gary (and List),

Correct me if I am wrong here, but it seems that what Creeley is discussing in that interview is the sense of "self" which is (hopefully) brought to ALL poems by ALL writers, and not necessarily his ego.

Perhaps I am incorrect, but that's the way I read it.

At 09:30 AM 5/13/98 -0400, you wrote:

> Judy Roitman earlier mentioned Creeley as someone capable of ridding the ego from his writing. This, from his interview with Linda Wagner suggests otherwise . . . the interview, read en toto, suggests a deep personal involvement in the poem . . .
>
> "The distance is dictated by the poem, not by the writer. Or the assumptions he may bring to it. . . . Writing to me is the most intimate of all acts; why should I want to maintain a distance from that which engages me in it?"
>
> --Robert Creeley, from an interview with Linda Wagner, ca. 1965

<paraindent><param>left,out</param>- They said I was avant garde...little did they realize, I just didn't give a shit.

↑ Index

311. R. Gancie
radical
Wed 13 May 1998

"In the past the man has been first; in the future the system must be first."---Frederick Winslow Taylor, Scientific Management

"The nickname Prisoner's Dilemma, attributed to A. W. Tucker, derives from the original anecdote used to illustrate the game. Two prisoners held incommunicado, are charged with the same crime. They can be convicted only if either confesses. Designate by -1 the payoff associated with conviction on the basis of confessions by both prisoners and by +1 the payoff associated with acquittal. Further, if only one confesses, he is set free for having turned state's evidence and is given a reward to boot. Call his payoff under these circumstances +2. The prisoner who has held out is convicted on the strength of the other's testimony and is given a more severe sentence than if he had also confessed. Call this payoff -2. The game so defined is identical with that presented by Matrix 3 where D represents "confess" and C "do not confess." It is in the interest of each to confess whatever the other does. But it is their collective interest to hold out.---Anatol Rapoport & Albert M. Chammah, Prisoner's Dilemma

"Journalist Mark Baker interviewed one soldier who described what happened to three Vietnamese detainees in a chopper with an American intelligence officer: 'The first gook wouldn't talk. Intelligence gives you a signal, thumb toward the door, and you push the guy out. The other two gooks look to see this guy going out the helicopter door. If the second guy didn't look like he wants to say something or he's lying, the intelligence officer says, "This guy out the door." You'd kick him out because you're supposed to do what these intelligence officers tell you to do. They're speaking for the Army. The last prisoner is crying and he's leaking like a typewriter. He's talking Vietnamese like crazy. That's human nature. This guy is running his mouth. You'd have to gag him to make him shut up.... Before we get back to base camp, after this guy do (sic) all the talking and the intelligence officer document (sic) everything, they kick him out the door anyway. Even the good gook, they'd give the word on him and throw him out the door.'"---James William Gibson, The Perfect War:TechnoWar in Vietnam

"As has beeen pointed out game theory was conceived by mathematicians, and since the publication of the fundamental treatise, has been developed almost exclusively by mathematicians. The theory can be viewed as a self-contained branch of mathematics-a system of theoroems built up from a set of postulates. All purely mathematical thoeries are of this sort and, as such, are practically immune from criticism."---Anatol Rapaport, Fights, Games and Debates---cp

↑ Index

312. Keston Sutherland
Re: Frankly
Wed 13 May 1998

> Why haven't the young poets from Harvard shown up yet? Are they all writing for The Simpsons?

I was, but was kicked off the team. Now scribbling in sweatshop for Wheel of Fortune.

↑ Index

313. Keston Sutherland
ex-Simpsonite
Wed 13 May 1998

in fact, since we never get to see each other (though I've seen a good deal of Jordan, indeed), this Simpsons thing is a ticket: I invented BARNEY, he's based on me, that's what I look like. KS

↑ Index

314. daniel bouchard
Re: ex-Sampsonite
Wed 13 May 1998

I can't sit by silently while these blatant prevarications and misrepresentations fill the otherwise integrity-bound Net.

First, Keston is a bloke, not a "guy." Waugh-worth more than Frank O. UK, not Mass Cambridge.

Also, he looks like Lennon circa 1964 but with later eye frames. Tho, like Barney, I think he would drink turpentine if it came to that. And he smokes like Marge's sisters.

yrs,

Mr. Burns

At 03:10 PM 5/13/98 -0400, Keston Sutherland wrote: >in fact, since we never get to see each other (though I've seen a good >deal of Jordan, indeed), this Simpsons thing is a ticket: I invented >BARNEY, he's based on me, that's what I look like. KS
>

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
  fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

315. Gary Sullivan
"We shoot every third salesman . . . and the second one just left"
Wed 13 May 1998

So much to respond to & even more questions to ask . . . & already on my fifth post. I want to quote more from Creeley interviews as regards self and ego . . . which I believe I did flatten into each other . . . because, in Creeley's case, reading this interview (with Linda Wagner) this morning . . . he refers constantly to Pound's "quality of the emotion" as his own primary measure, and elaborates a bit . . . my sense being that emotions are, if not wholly, certainly in some portion, ego-generated or -situated . . . I may pull some quotes in a few days . . .

& I'll dig around for things from others to compare with some of the O'Hara poems posted . . . people whose writings I do consider "less sanitized" . . . maybe Friday . . . & at that time also say more about this three-word-phrase, "appreciation of subsistence," which has, somehow, become perceived almost as movement unto itself . . . I meant it, when stated, with reference to Niedecker, Eigner . . . & to less extent Creeley . . . it does have a certain political weight for me . . . above & beyond the political weight that ALL public writing or language can be said to have . . . but haven't thought of (in any way shape or form) such a thing as "whole earth poetry" . . . though I know Jordan's chiding . . . but, will say more later, except to note that neither Niedecker's nor Eigner's work is thin, undernourished . . . malnourishment a risk in poetry only ever when you write only what you already know . . .

Gary

↑ Index

316. Uncle Henry
Re: Frankly
Wed 13 May 1998

---

why should I rehash the lyric personal impersonal flabingo which has been rehashed more than enough for the last 20 years, so I will not. Sail on, poetics. As I insisted previously, the obsolete/redundant is the most radical thing going. it's not surplus because there's no quantity, just remainders. - Uncle Henry

↑ Index

317. toddbaron
Re: F O'H
Wed 13 May 1998

Great "emotional" range: an interesting concept all by tiself: that somehow the language and the poetry would choose one or/over the other. The discussion of O'Hara" "you don't refuse to breathe do you" (Is It Dirty) is an odd one--that thot and emotional would be separate--which is why I am not an academic--of that O' Hara--whose very lines redefine--for American poetry--as WHitman or Dickinson.

That's emotional "charge"

"You'll never be mentally sober"
  POEM

"(I hate all that crap)"
Yesterday Down at the Canal

Todd Baron
ReMap

↑ Index

318. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Frankly my dearzies
Wed 13 May 1998

---

just to thank everyone who responded to my queries, about british explit, about renga, and l peltier.

i remembered my third query. is jacobo timmerman the proper spelling for the guy who wrote prisoner w/o a name, cell w/o a number? and is argentine?

and another; i've lost my poetry project newsletter w/ hannah weiner obits. need fullcitation info for charles bernstein's nice piece on her.

↑ Index

319. toddbaron
Re: SELF?
Wed 13 May 1998

"I is another"
(Rimbaud)

↑ Index

320. morpheal
Re: SELF?
Wed 13 May 1998

> "I is another"
> (Rimbaud)

Letter to his family, Tadjoura, French colony of Obock, December 3, 1885:

"They have left the place its local sultan and the native administration. The place is a protectorate. The local business is trading in slaves..... The stuff we import is rifles (old percussion rifles that were scrapped forty years ago) that cost 7 or 8 francs apiece at secondhand arms dealers in Liege or France. You can sell them to the King of Shoa, Menelik II, for around forty francs apiece. But there are enormous expenses involved, without mentionning the dangers of the caravan route round trip. The people who live along the route are Dankalis, Bedouin Shepherds, fanatical Moslems: they are dangerous. It is true we have firearms and the Bedouins only have spears: but every caravan is attacked."

Arthur Rimbaud

↑ Index

321. sylvester pollet
Re: Frank
Wed 13 May 1998

At 2:16 PM -0400 5/13/98, Michael Kelleher wrote:
>Henry,
>
>I don't know if I'm arguing or agreeing with you, but wouldn't you say >that in the context of 1950's America, a time in which the US goverment >along with all of US commercail and media industries took a hand in >attempts to forcibly "identify" persons within very strict categories,
>ie, american/un-american, the former being defined as straight,
>right-thinking, christian (Robert Lowell) and the latter defined as >queer, pinko, atheist (Ginsberg) that the destabilizing of identity >would in itself be a political act, one with potentially "real"
>political consequences (Lillian Hellman)?
>
>Mike

Not to quibble, but Lowell was imprisoned as a c.o.

↑ Index

322. Samuel R. Truitt
ATTICUS BOOKS AND MUSIC READING
Wed 13 May 1998

GRAHAM FOUST
MARY HILTON
SAM TRUITT

READING ON

FRIDAY, MAY 15 @ 7PM

ATTICUS BOOKS & MUSIC
1508 U STREET
WASHINGTON, DC

FOR INFO: [redacted]

↑ Index

323. Billy Little
Re: I love typing "FO'H" . . . as, who wouldn't?
Wed 13 May 1998

---

thanks for typing garry, that ohara is a cool drink, a refreshment, before stonewall, the knuckle dragging days, people had to smuggle james joyce in from paris, nabokov and miller came the same way, the publishers of miller, and ginsberg, and mcclure tried for obscenity, billie holiday and john coltrane very much the presence, Adam Clayton Powell was the godfather of Harlem, the catholic church the slumlord of harlem, lenny bruce hounded to his death(the originator of the yadda yadda seinfeld is first remembered for) "camp" the predominant mode, it was illegal to serve alcohol to a homosexual, there were separate black and white beaches in Lewes, Delaware, they wouldn't even serve blacks in the military in the one restaurant in town, they'll never turn back the strides made in the sixties even if they delude theyselves for another twenty years we aint going there, glasnost is coming to the potomac Linton Kwesi Johnson will perform on the lawn of the Green House, the repainted home of the great facilitator, President Jesse Jackson or Andrew Young. O'Hara like to say he thought of his poems as transcribed phone calls, o for a cell phone on fire island!

↑ Index

324. Tenney Nathanson
Re: SELF?
Wed 13 May 1998

"they bids"

> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group
> [mailto:[redacted]]On Behalf Of toddbaron
> Sent: Wednesday, May 13, 1998 3:07 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: SELF?
>
> "I is another"
> (Rimbaud)

↑ Index

325. George Bowering
Re: new titles from Wild Honey Press
Thu 14 May 1998

> At 12:42 AM -0700 5/13/98, George Bowering wrote:
> not nearly so embarrassing as the verbal compost matter Bowering and Bromige subject us to --on purpose ;)
>
> Okay, Maria. I am not going to backchannel any more of our secret stuff to you.Unless you take that remark back.
>
> *George, i will not be implicated in your murky designs. especially not in public. btw, please mail all suspicious looking packages to my po box, not my home address. thanks, md*

Hey, Maria,

Speaking of suspicious packages; I havent opened the last one you sent. I can hear a kind of electric buzzing coming from inside. I have asked Bromige if he ever heard such a thing, and he said "heh heh" on e-mail.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

326. Charles Alexander
Re: yet another query
Thu 14 May 1998

---

and Maria, the Two Stein Talks mentioned by Hejinian, are in TEMBLOR 3. Temblor 10 has a very fine piece by Bev Dahlen, Tautology and The Real, largely having to do with Stein and Spicer, which is very nice -- originally delivered as a talk in a series here in Tucson.

And it may be something of a stretch, but Deleuze & Guattari's A Thousand Plateaus seems possibly useful here, in its various senses of how meaning coheres and disperses.

good luck to your student!

charles
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

327. RanPrunty
Re: Top Ten
Thu 14 May 1998

In alpha order

1 Antenym
2 Arshile
3 Explosive Magazine
4 Misc. Proj.
5 New American Writing
6 Rhizome
7 Situation
8 Syntactics
9 Talisman
10 Torque

this fun list from years of careful study
Randy Prunty

↑ Index

328. JDEBROT
Re: Frank
Thu 14 May 1998

Lilian Hellman writes: would not "the destabilizing of identity," in the culture of the 50s-60s "in itself be a political act, one with potentially "real" political consequences?"

The relationship of poetry to politics is of course deeply problematic: is it prefigurative? instrumental? etc.

In the context of the 60s, as Andrew Ross has pointed out, artists & intellectuals were confronted with the necessity for making, consciously, a choice between tendentious social commentary & formally transformative aesthetic strategies that would undermine autonomous authorial agency (i.e. collage, montage, etc.).

I think it's important to remember that, at the time, expressionistic work, with its emphasis on the universal character of the individual's subjective consciousness would have had, as its underlying assumption -- the assumption for instance of the Abstract Expressionists -- that this "universal" consciousness was white, straight, & male. For this reason, although they were conflicted in their relationship to Ab Ex, an expressionistic poetics would have seemed untenable to the New York School poets.

Given, also, the recent & on-going re-discovery of the chief aesthetic strategies of the historical avant-garde, an expressionistic & autonomous poetics would have appeared reactionary. What needs to be done I think is to work out the ways in which the simultanaeity of the rediscoveries and repetitions of Dadaist oppositional strategies in the work of Burroughs, Ashbery, Cage, and to a lesser extent, O'Hara "substantiates the hypothesis that the discursive formation of modernism generated its own historical and evoloutionary dynamic" (Bucholoh) -- rather than being for example a pathetic & failed repetition of those strategies (i.e. Peter Burger). Moreover, any discussion of expression in O'H's work has to be historicized, right? After all, an attachment to transcendent logics seems to be what O'H was, in part, attempting to discredit.

↑ Index

329. JDEBROT
Re: Reading at Harvard
Thu 14 May 1998

Do not have the time to describe Dan Bouchard's & Keston Sutherland's reading last night in detail, but I think I should report that Dan read with a powerfully ironic intelligence & that Keston's work struck me as being a unique conflation of disjunction & lyricism, its moments of transparency having an almost unaccountable shock-effect -- & all of this in the somewhat incongrous setting of Winthrop House.

↑ Index

330. Michael Magee
Re: Frank
Thu 14 May 1998

JDEBROT: "the Abstract Expressionists -- that this "universal" consciousness was white, straight, & male. For this reason, although they were conflicted in their relationship to Ab Ex, an expressionistic poetics would have seemed untenable to the New York School poets.

Given, also, the recent & on-going re-discovery of the chief aesthetic strategies of the historical avant-garde, an expressionistic & autonomous poetics would have appeared reactionary. What needs to be done I think is to work out the ways in which the simultanaeity of the rediscoveries and repetitions of Dadaist oppositional strategies in the work of Burroughs, Ashbery, Cage, and to a lesser extent, O'Hara "substantiates the hypothesis that the discursive formation of modernism generated its own historical and evoloutionary dynamic" (Bucholoh) -- rather than being for example a pathetic & failed repetition of those strategies (i.e. Peter Burger). Moreover, any discussion of expression in O'H's work has to be historicized, right? After all, an attachment to transcendent logics seems to be what O'H was, in part, attempting to discredit."

For all of FOH's attatchment to Pollock, de Kooning, isn't his work more analogous to later pals like Rauschenberg (of the combines), Johns, & Rivers (in, say, "Mr. Art," or "Washington Crossing the Delaware" - all decidedly less heteronormal characters, yes? -m.

↑ Index

331. Jordan Davis
"O'Hara compared to artists."
Thu 14 May 1998

Michael Magee asks if there is not more connection between Rauschenberg or Johns and O'Hara than between De Kooning or Pollock and O'Hara. Time does not permit me now to say why I don't think so, except that Johns is so affiliated with Ashbery in my mind as to preclude comparison with other poets, and Rauschenberg despite the monumental output never once seems even half as intelligent as O'Hara. O'Hara could have to do with the stupid energy (and brilliant line) of Pollock and the brilliant line (and stupid figuration) of De Kooning, if stupid only had its post-1987 meanings. Maybe see O'Hara as not on a one-to-one correspondence with painters, the way Larry Rivers borrows equal parts Koch and O'Hara?

JD

↑ Index

332. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: Yo Po Grows
Thu 14 May 1998

From today's NY Times:

By MATTHEW MIRAPAUL

A Poetic Homage -- of the 3-Letter, 3-Word Variety

<Picture: P>oe Try Art. Web Voy Age. Mie Kal And.

It's Not All. --that easy to tell a tale in trios of three-letter clusters, exactly nine characters to a page. (The apostrophe near the start of this sentence, for example, is cheating.)

But And Has. After Emmett, a multimedia poem launched on the Web last month by the artist and writer Miekal And, takes readers on a 53-screen journey that is as visually stimulating as it is linguistically limber.

Each page of And's poem [his first name is pronounced "me-KELL," his second like the conjunction] consists of a three-by-three grid of letters and punctuation marks. Some grids parse perfectly ("Eye Sea Eye"), others do not ("Hum Ble Ark").

Using a simple animation technique that does not require special browser plug-ins, And has enlivened each character by continuously cycling it through a sequence of five to eight different typefaces.

As an "I" arises in typographic fonts such as Bodoni, Harlequin, Helvetica, Stonecutter and Thunderbird, the vivid vowel seems to swell and shrink. Its eight neighbors are equally hyperactive, twitching, throbbing and percolating to pupil-popping effect.

During a telephone interview last week from his home in southwestern Wisconsin, And said, "All the words are meant to refer abstractly to the sense of a voyage, and I wanted it [the poem] to be real visual so that the voyage was hypnotic."

"Even though it's just three words on the screen," he continued, "I want people to stare at one page for 5 minutes. Even if they get the words right away, they'll keep looking at the dance of the typography."

"After Emmett" is clever, playful and -- given its formal strictures -- surprisingly effective at conveying an impression of narrative progress. It joins a growing canon of verse that exploits the Web's multimedia capabilities to expand the form's possibilities, just as the "concrete poetry" movement of the 1960's aspired to increase meaning through the graphic arrangement of words on the printed page.

Kenneth Goldsmith is the Manhattan-based editor of UbuWeb, the best site for visual poetry on the Internet. He described "After Emmett" as a typical example of concrete poetry that has been published on the Web, adopting the dynamics of the medium for its own purposes.

"Concrete Poetry has always tried to invoke movement on the page," Goldsmith said. "It achieved this through a variety of static means: the flipbook, the dispersion of letters on a page, etc. While 'After Emmett' employs the movement of letters, it still invokes the flatness of the page. It's a journey, but it's a two-dimensional journey instead of three."

He called for even more advanced applications of multimedia effects to verbal artistry, citing as an example the three-dimensional Visual Thesaurus discussed in a recent "[redacted]" column.

"Now that we are able to manipulate words [on a Web page], the simple formal manipulation of letters is not enough," Goldsmith said. "Content needs to sweep our minds in some magical way, supported by today's technology. With concrete poetry on the Web, the medium might not be the message."

And's work is intended as a new-media tribute to Emmett Williams, one of the first concrete poets and a leading member of the Fluxus conceptual art movement (its adherents included Yoko Ono and the electronic-art pioneer Nam June Paik).

The poem pays homage to Williams's own "The Voy Age," a 1975 piece composed of 100 word squares. that diminish in size as the work proceeds. By the final page, the grid is so small that it appears to be a period.

Goldsmith noted that "The Voy Age" and "After Emmett" share thematic material as well as a graphic structure.

"Williams composed his work in Nova Scotia, looking out on ships moving slowly across the harbor; And sprinkles water-based references throughout his work," Goldsmith explained. "The last section of And's work is an analysis of the formal properties of language -- puns, shenanigans, logic -- which mirrors William's visual-poetic concerns."

And acknowledged that he has been deeply influenced by Williams. Although he has not viewed "The Voy Age" for a dozen years, And did remember to construct his last grid entirely out of punctuation marks. (He also cheats a bit, using the browser frame to title sections.)

"One of the things that attracts me to Emmett's work is how he isn't a specialist," And said. "He worked in whatever medium came to him."

Williams, now 73, can even be found dabbling on the Internet. His 1957 work, Four- Directional Song of Doubt for Five Voices, has been adapted for the Web.

And's creative endeavors, which are detailed on his home page, Qazingulaza, range from compiling an online dictionary of neologisms to building new musical instruments like the "ukelimba."

An occasional performance artist, he also was one of the first to reproduce artists' books on a photocopier; the imprint of his publishing firm, Xexoxial Editions, is derived from the name of a certain copier manufacturer.

Born 40 years ago in central Wisconsin as Michael Anderson, And now lives about 70 miles from Madison. Around the bean-sized town of West Lima, And and a handful of like-minded residents have founded an alternative community dubbed Dreamtime Village. Their goal is to balance a devotion to the soil with a high-tech approach to creativity, an unusual mix that resembles And's aesthetic.

"I find that a good place to begin is to confuse the boundaries as much as possible," And said. "A very fruitful area to work in is wherever all the genres and medias and boundaries meet. A lot of my art is based on working those edges to the max."

Can And Max. See Web Art. Now The End.

---------- Related Sites Following are links to the external Web sites mentioned in this article. These sites are not part of The New York Times on the Web, and The Times has no control over their content or availability. When you have finished visiting any of these sites, you will be able to return to this page by clicking on your Web browser's "Back" button or icon until this page reappears.

¦After Emmett

¦UbuWeb Visual, Concrete & Sound Poetry

¦Visual Thesaurus and the recent "[redacted]" column on the Visual Thesaurus

¦Emmett Williams's biography is online, as is a more detailed résumé of his career

¦"Like Attracts Like" is an early example of Williams's concrete poetry

¦Fluxus

¦Four-Directional Song of Doubt for Five Voices, a Williams piece online that uses Java to recreate a 1957 work ¦Qazingulaza is the home page of Miekal And and his family. The link to Joglars leads to some of And's multimedia work.

¦Dreamtime Village

↑ Index

333. groberts
Re: Frank
Thu 14 May 1998

"After all, an attachment to transcendent logics seems to be what O'H was, in part, trying to discredit."

This may be true but O'Hara does in some poems incorporate the remnants of a kind of transcendent logic with more than pastiche in mind, to my mind; I hear even a little nostalgia for it. A great poem like "Kruschev is coming on the right day" seems to be contrasting its revelling in surface with the supposed weightiness of religious diction such as "grace." I suppose it's heretical to think of F O'H as a latter day Pop version of Hopkins, but sometimes, NOT always, I read him so. "Rhapsody" and "For the Chinese New Year (and For Bill Berkson)" would be other poems that I find interesting to read along side Hopkins' "Heraclitean Fire" poem. I guess that "discredit" means not "ignore" but to give a provisional credit/credence to such logic and then to take it back??

Gary R.

↑ Index

334. Tenney Nathanson
Re: "O'Hara compared to artists."
Thu 14 May 1998

O'Hara's essay on Pollock, though, often reads like a guide to O'Hara's own work. Esp. the parts on the sense of the kinetic in Pollock, the way Pollock can seem to speed up or slow down movement through the canvas by thinning or thickening the line. Put that together w Kenner on Pound "relaxing or tightening the texture of the vocabulary" (or something like that--re Propertius) and walla you pretty much get FOH.

meanwhile chalk me up in the "dumbfounded silence" column re the notion that FOH's pallette is limited....

Tenney

> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group
> [mailto:[redacted]]On Behalf Of Jordan Davis
> Sent: Thursday, May 14, 1998 6:52 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: "O'Hara compared to artists."
>
> Michael Magee asks if there is not more connection between Rauschenberg or Johns and O'Hara than between De Kooning or Pollock and O'Hara. Time does not permit me now to say why I don't think so, except that Johns is so affiliated with Ashbery in my mind as to preclude comparison with other poets, and Rauschenberg despite the monumental output never once seems even half as intelligent as O'Hara. O'Hara could have to do with the stupid energy (and brilliant line) of Pollock and the brilliant line (and stupid figuration) of De Kooning, if stupid only had its post-1987 meanings. Maybe see O'Hara as not on a one-to-one correspondence with painters, the way Larry Rivers borrows equal parts Koch and O'Hara?
>
> JD

↑ Index

335. Tenney Nathanson
Re: Frank
Thu 14 May 1998

---

also true I think. There's a repeated sense of clunking into the given, the found--often to comic effect--that's not well explained by huge lyricism of Pollock or Klein, say. But to say he's like Pollock and also like Rivers, say, is one way of suggesting the way the limited pallette theory misses this boat.

Tenney

> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group
> [mailto:[redacted]]On Behalf Of Michael Magee
> Sent: Thursday, May 14, 1998 6:42 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: Frank
>
> JDEBROT: "the Abstract Expressionists -- that this "universal" consciousness was white, straight, & male. For this reason, although they were conflicted in their relationship to Ab Ex, an expressionistic poetics would have seemed untenable to the New York School poets.

> Given, also, the recent & on-going re-discovery of the chief aesthetic strategies of the historical avant-garde, an expressionistic & autonomous poetics would have appeared reactionary. What needs to be done I think is to work out the ways in which the simultanaeity of the rediscoveries and repetitions of Dadaist oppositional strategies in the work of Burroughs, Ashbery, Cage, and to a lesser extent, O'Hara "substantiates the hypothesis that the discursive formation of modernism generated its own historical and evoloutionary dynamic" (Bucholoh) -- rather than being for example a pathetic & failed repetition of those strategies (i.e. Peter Burger). Moreover, any discussion of expression in O'H's work has to be historicized, right? After all, an attachment to transcendent logics seems to be what O'H was, in part, attempting to discredit."
>
> For all of FOH's attatchment to Pollock, de Kooning, isn't his work more analogous to later pals like Rauschenberg (of the combines), Johns, & Rivers (in, say, "Mr. Art," or "Washington Crossing the Delaware" - all decidedly less heteronormal characters, yes? -m.

↑ Index

336. Maria Damon
Re: Yo Po Grows
Thu 14 May 1998

---

this is a gas; congrats miekal, let's hope the $$ start pouring in.

At 10:18 AM -0500 5/14/98, Pritchett,Patrick @Silverplume wrote:
>>From today's NY Times:
>
>By MATTHEW MIRAPAUL
>
>A Poetic Homage -- of the 3-Letter, 3-Word Variety
>
><Picture: P>oe Try Art. Web Voy Age. Mie Kal And.
>
>It's Not All. --that easy to tell a tale in trios of three-letter clusters, >exactly nine characters to a page. (The apostrophe near the start of this >sentence, for example, is cheating.)
>
>
> ----------
>
>
>But And Has. After Emmett, a multimedia poem launched on the Web last month

>by the artist and writer Miekal And, takes readers on a 53-screen journey >that is as visually stimulating as it is linguistically limber.
>
>Each page of And's poem [his first name is pronounced "me-KELL," his second >like the conjunction] consists of a three-by-three grid of letters and >punctuation marks. Some grids parse perfectly ("Eye Sea Eye"), others do not >("Hum Ble Ark").
>
>Using a simple animation technique that does not require special browser >plug-ins, And has enlivened each character by continuously cycling it >through a sequence of five to eight different typefaces.
>
>As an "I" arises in typographic fonts such as Bodoni, Harlequin, Helvetica, >Stonecutter and Thunderbird, the vivid vowel seems to swell and shrink. Its >eight neighbors are equally hyperactive, twitching, throbbing and >percolating to pupil-popping effect.
>
>During a telephone interview last week from his home in southwestern >Wisconsin, And said, "All the words are meant to refer abstractly to the >sense of a voyage, and I wanted it [the poem] to be real visual so that the >voyage was hypnotic."
>
>"Even though it's just three words on the screen," he continued, "I want >people to stare at one page for 5 minutes. Even if they get the words right >away, they'll keep looking at the dance of the typography."
>
>"After Emmett" is clever, playful and -- given its formal strictures -- >surprisingly effective at conveying an impression of narrative progress. It >joins a growing canon of verse that exploits the Web's multimedia >capabilities to expand the form's possibilities, just as the "concrete >poetry" movement of the 1960's aspired to increase meaning through the >graphic arrangement of words on the printed page.
>
>Kenneth Goldsmith is the Manhattan-based editor of UbuWeb, the best site for >visual poetry on the Internet. He described "After Emmett" as a typical >example of concrete poetry that has been published on the Web, adopting the >dynamics of the medium for its own purposes.
>
>"Concrete Poetry has always tried to invoke movement on the page," Goldsmith >said. "It achieved this through a variety of static means: the flipbook, the >dispersion of letters on a page, etc. While 'After Emmett' employs the >movement of letters, it still invokes the flatness of the page. It's a >journey, but it's a two-dimensional journey instead of three."

>
>He called for even more advanced applications of multimedia effects to >verbal artistry, citing as an example the three-dimensional Visual Thesaurus >discussed in a recent "[redacted]" column.
>
>"Now that we are able to manipulate words [on a Web page], the simple formal >manipulation of letters is not enough," Goldsmith said. "Content needs to >sweep our minds in some magical way, supported by today's technology. With >concrete poetry on the Web, the medium might not be the message."
>
>And's work is intended as a new-media tribute to Emmett Williams, one of the >first concrete poets and a leading member of the Fluxus conceptual art >movement (its adherents included Yoko Ono and the electronic-art pioneer Nam >June Paik).
>
>The poem pays homage to Williams's own "The Voy Age," a 1975 piece composed >of 100 word squares. that diminish in size as the work proceeds. By the >final page, the grid is so small that it appears to be a period.
>
>Goldsmith noted that "The Voy Age" and "After Emmett" share thematic >material as well as a graphic structure.
>
>"Williams composed his work in Nova Scotia, looking out on ships moving >slowly across the harbor; And sprinkles water-based references throughout >his work," Goldsmith explained. "The last section of And's work is an >analysis of the formal properties of language -- puns, shenanigans, logic -- >which mirrors William's visual-poetic concerns."
>
>And acknowledged that he has been deeply influenced by Williams. Although he >has not viewed "The Voy Age" for a dozen years, And did remember to >construct his last grid entirely out of punctuation marks. (He also cheats a >bit, using the browser frame to title sections.)
>
>"One of the things that attracts me to Emmett's work is how he isn't a >specialist," And said. "He worked in whatever medium came to him."

>
>Williams, now 73, can even be found dabbling on the Internet. His 1957 work, >Four- Directional Song of Doubt for Five Voices, has been adapted for the >Web.
>
>And's creative endeavors, which are detailed on his home page, Qazingulaza, >range from compiling an online dictionary of neologisms to building new >musical instruments like the "ukelimba."
>
>An occasional performance artist, he also was one of the first to reproduce >artists' books on a photocopier; the imprint of his publishing firm, >Xexoxial Editions, is derived from the name of a certain copier >manufacturer.
>
>Born 40 years ago in central Wisconsin as Michael Anderson, And now lives >about 70 miles from Madison. Around the bean-sized town of West Lima, And >and a handful of like-minded residents have founded an alternative community >dubbed Dreamtime Village. Their goal is to balance a devotion to the soil >with a high-tech approach to creativity, an unusual mix that resembles And's >aesthetic.
>
>
>
>"I find that a good place to begin is to confuse the boundaries as much as >possible," And said. "A very fruitful area to work in is wherever all the >genres and medias and boundaries meet. A lot of my art is based on working >those edges to the max."
>
>Can And Max. See Web Art. Now The End.
>
>
> ---
>Related Sites
>Following are links to the external Web sites mentioned in this article.
>These sites are not part of The New York Times on the Web, and The Times has >no control over their content or availability. When you have finished >visiting any of these sites, you will be able to return to this page by >clicking on your Web browser's "Back" button or icon until this page >reappears.
>
>

>¦After Emmett
>
>¦UbuWeb Visual, Concrete & Sound Poetry
>
>¦Visual Thesaurus and the recent "[redacted]" column on the Visual Thesaurus
>
>¦Emmett Williams's biography is online, as is a more detailed résumé of his >career
>
>¦"Like Attracts Like" is an early example of Williams's concrete poetry
>
>¦Fluxus
>
>¦Four-Directional Song of Doubt for Five Voices, a Williams piece online >that uses Java to recreate a 1957 work
>
>¦Qazingulaza is the home page of Miekal And and his family. The link to >Joglars leads to some of And's multimedia work.
>
>¦Dreamtime Village

↑ Index

337. Irving Weiss

Signal/Antiwar

Thu 14 May 1998

Miroljub Todorovic's International Review for Signlist Research has just issued Signal No. 18 with contributions from Clemente Padin, Jean Francois Bory, Pierre Garnier, Adriano Spatola, Bob Cobbing, Bill Kichel, Irving Weiss, and many other European visual poets and critics.

In addition, Viktor Todorovic has asked that the following Anti-War Declaration be recognized.

Date: Tue, 5 May 1998 18:01:24 +0200
From: Vesna Manojlovic <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Vise o ARK/ More on AntiWar Campaign

http://www.ark.org.yu/
mailto:[redacted]

[Verzija na srpskom je ispod / Serbian version below]

MORE INFORMATION ON THE ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN

What is the ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN? The ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN is an action provoked with the current events in the country. It represents the reaction to the escalation of violence in the teritory of Kosovo. A situation seen so many times in the past years - same participators, same iconography, same retorics, same setting ... The only issue in question is the number of victims that are to come.

Who are the Initiators of the ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN?

The ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN was initiated by individuals from Belgrade. We are members of various organizations - students', trade unions, non-governmentals. Our activities differ, but we are all gathered in one common strugl e - for a better and more humanized society - that can only be won if the war is prevented.

What are We Planing to Do?

As an oppinion or even an idea of this kind is not likely to reach the majority due to the encresing bitterness of war discourse, we have decided to present them to all in person. The idea is to disribute one million leaflets in 160 municipalities, in Central Serbia and Voivodina. We have chosen leaflets as a mean, for that is the only medium that entitles the opportunity for direct contact and communication with the people. Although that might be considered very ambitious, we believe that it is at this time the most adequate way. Our action will not consist of that solely; we are also planing to stick posters and are looking for support of the independant media.

What is Our Goal?

The primary goal of the ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN is to affirm peace as a major value, to promote equal rights coexistence in a multiethnic community like Serbia; to promote responsible concept of patriotism; to give an alternative to dominant autoritarian patterns through striving for mutual understanding, tolerance, solidarity, openmindednass and above all against violence; and activating and connecting large number of individuals and organizations of various profiles upon the articulation of anti-war attiude.

How Do We Plan to Do That?

The idea is to start distributing leaflets in those places that are most remote from Belgrade, so as to finish in Belgrade. As we have decided for all places in the territory of Central Serbia and Voivodina with more than 10 thousend inhabitants, according to the methodology used, we have reached the number of 160 municipalities (including 16 of Belgrade). In each of those places leaflets would be distributed by the activists from Belgrade with local people that support the action. In smaller towns distribution would last for one day, while in larger towns it would take two or more days. A 'Coordination Body' will be formed with the role to initiate and faciliate the action, it will arrange daily schedules for distribution teams, provide vehicles, organize transportation for distribution teams, contact and coordinate activists, contact all supporting organizations= , and deal with all difficulties that might appear. A very important segment of the action is the media coverage that would help to involve in the action all interested citizens. Concerning that, news conferences are planned to be held, advertisements rendered in daily papers, jingles played on the radio, videos shown on TV, and a presentation made for Internet while the action is taking place. Also, the printing of postres that would be sticked the day before the distribution in the particular town is intended. The action is supposed to last for approximately 16 days with the support of the local polpolation. We are collecting the assets in various ways - from contacts and services free of charge, to financial support.

As a prevention against risks that the activists might face, solicitors will be engaged across Serbia for promp reactions if needed. That is why we have planed to rent a few mobil phones. How Did We Get Organized? Many have, probably, though that an anti-war action must necessarily be organized. It was only a metter of time when the clear concept would appear. Thus there was no need for long convincing on starting the action. The proposers of this sort of organized practice are mostly students that worked in the first phase - that is involving and informing as many people as possible, both in Belgrade and in other parts of Sebia. The logical course is now coordination of activities and forming a network of activists that could cover the whole territory of Serbia. Numerous non-governmental organizations have by now given their support, partly by activating their own networks of activists. All those that find such things necessary are joining the initial group.

The basic principle of the whole ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN is not to represent a potential new NGO, another one among the 'umbrella organizations', nor anything alike. The ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN is an ad hoc action, which gathers, a ctivates and motivates wide range of people of different backgrounds, on the fundamental need: to live in peace.

What Was Done by Now?

By this moment around one hundred people from Belgrade and few dosens of them from Kragujevac, Novi Sad, Vranje, Ni{, Kraljevo, Zrenjanin, Sombor, Kova~ica, Subotica, Novi Pazar etc., have confirmed their participation in the ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN. The fact that some of the organizations have already lent their networks of activists willing to participate in the ANTI-WAR CAMPAIGN. We have gained media support and the sponsorship from some media, and are currently working on informing and encresing the number of activists, designing the leflets and posters, and as well finding meens to create conditions for realization of the action.

What Do We Need?

For full completion of the activities mentioned the following should be supplied: an office in Belgrade (that is to be used in coordination of act ivities in the field, with a computer, a printer, a phone, a fax machine and a photocopy machine); office accessories (paper, fax paper, discs, cartridges); vehicles; printing of leaflets, postres, shirts, badges, bumper-stickers; production of the video and the radio jingle; news conference halls; advertisements in newspapers; presenting the video and the jingle : a web site; mobil phones.

[end of english version]

↑ Index

338. Judy Roitman
Re: Yo Po Grows
Thu 14 May 1998

> <Picture: P>oe Try Art. Web Voy Age. Mie Kal And.

I must be Web-impaired. What is the URL?

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | fax: [redacted] | Larry Eigner,
1927-1996 ---------- Note new area
code ----------
http://www.math.ukans.edu/~roitman/

↑ Index

339. ken|n|ing
Query)
Thu 14 May 1998

Lisa Samuels, you out there? Please back-channel. Thanks. Patrick F. Durgin

```
                    |
                    |
k e n n i n g``````````````|``````````````````````````````````````````
```

a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
|418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

↑ Index

340. groberts
Re: Frank
Thu 14 May 1998

In all of the discussion of O'Hara and painters, we should not forget Joan Mitchell and Grace Hartigan, who have at least as much relevance to his work as the male artists mentioned so far. If not more so: Mitchell's frenetic style of the late 50s, for example, has the same kind of punctuated buzzing quality of O'Hara's open syntax. Hartigan's work takes up gender issues in a way more related to O'Hara than any of the other male artists with the possible exception of Rauschenberg in the combines.

Gary R.

↑ Index

341. Miekal And
Re: Yo Po Grows
Thu 14 May 1998

Judy Roitman wrote:
>
> >>
> >><Picture: P>oe Try Art. Web Voy Age. Mie Kal And.
> >>
>
> I must be Web-impaired. What is the URL?
>

After Emmett is at:
http://www.net22.com/qazingulaza/joglars/afteremmett/bonvoyage.html

↑ Index

342. Maz881
Re: Frankly
Thu 14 May 1998

What happened to dharmok at Tenagra? Jordan asks. Did you ever see Enemy Mine? a good sci-fi movie. Frank this: Dennis Quaid is an earthling on space patrol; Louis Gossett Jr. is an alien. When they're stranded on a desolate planet, they learn peace.

in the made for tv version (star trek the next generation) dharmok and jilad are ancient mythic characters who fought a bad monster together at this place in the middle of the ocean called tenagra.

i think the phrase (dharmok & jilad at tenagra) is repeated over & over in this episode of the Next Generation as a way of thinking and talking together. By getting together dharmok & jilad were able to fight and destroy the bad monster.

The synopsis of this particular episode: Picard and this "other alien" captain (who tells the myth of dharmok & jilad, old stories of his people, to try to tell picard things) are stuck on this planet where there is a bad monster. the other alien captain (played by Paul Winfield) doesn't speak in standard utilitarian language. But just says poems the whole episode. Piccard finally understands at the end. And he and the other captain fight the bad monster together. But the other alien captain gets killed because it have taken piccard too long to understand the poems. However, there is hope for the future as the federation and this new alien race can sort of speak poems together. Timbre with his arms wide. shaka, when the walls fell.

Bill Luoma

btw, I think Jordan is asking this because he is reading my new book from Hard pRess .The Figures. Called Works and Days. It's available from Small Press Distribution but I'd order it from Rod Smith ([redacted]) because it will be cheaper. it's 140 or so pages. it's something like poetry, story, memoir and poetics.

Below are some blurbs from the back cover of Works & Days.

"Bill Luoma writes like an anchorman, not so much an 'insider' as a glider on the minimalist way of expressing being alive in groups with a purpose (the team). Once the purpose has been established, a tighter focus begins to take over, the love of women, or narrating Douglas, Bill's friend. Not since Bob Gluck and Bruce Boon's camaraderie in the 70s has there been such a literary buddy's movie as this. It's sketchy, and knowing and gleeful. Not since Thoreau has someone I know suggested that everything counts and then gone to work, wherever." --Eileen Myles

"The style of this book is naive and winning, or seemingly so, somewhat in the manner of the late Joe Brainard, and like Brainard Luoma takes great pleasure in the minute details of everyday life--names of people or places met or visited only briefly, figures of speech transcribed so exactly a sublime silliness overflows the shallowness--how habits and memories are shared among friends. For me, the value of this book--besides precision and charm, values to be sure--is the depth of feeling that it evinces, not in any one place, but in the very movement of the prose, in the 'Trip' Luoma takes us on." --Benjamin Friedlander

"Spaces between sentences: interesting. Spaces within sentences: interesting. The sentences being both literally true and constantly verbally inventive. And being about what you might call gossip, i.e. real life (and also certain sports: baseball and poetry) Works & Days is, well, astonishingly readable. And isn't to be readable poetry's best possibility?" --Alice Notley

---

<<Date: Wed, 13 May 1998 14:41:59 -0400
From: Jordan Davis <[redacted]> Subject: Frankly

A nice moment in Charles North's book of essays when he complains about Ashbery's punishing caprices, like "Leading liot act to foriage", it makes me think about O'Hara's use of the word "frankly" which always makes me tip me head forward in discomfort, eyes narrowed as from huge glare. Nevertheless, I see Uncle Henry steering the holodeck's hull into a butte and COMPUTER PAUSE would come to my lips if only I knew what any of those things meant. Bill what happened to Djarmok at Tenagra? I am outing you but you did it yourself. Now Henry I want to know why you are suggesting there is a direct connection between O'Hara and Seinfeld. What is up with those Providence anchorpeople's hair? I don't think O'Hara would have disliked Seinfeld, but more than that, I don't think any of us who argue that O'Hara had a better-populated mood palette than Gary argued would argue that it's possible to write like O'Hara -- not only does none of us have the datebook of an O'Hara, not only are we more restricted in our permissions (don't ask don't ask!), we have a somewhat different culture to pick and choose from. No offense to Zhdanov or Parschikov or Dragomoschenko, but where in the world are the Pasternaks for a young poet to cable support? Why haven't the young poets from Harvard shown up yet? Are they all writing for The Simpsons?

Subsistence, well we haven't heard much about it yet, but won't its poetic equivalent risk malnourishment? There's been some rumbling (Mark P? Gary?) about poetry and surplus. I'm no economist, but although poetry doesn't create surplus value, couldn't it be said to be the surplus of language itself? and when we say of something that it has duende or energy or overdeterminacy couldn't it just be this surplus of meaning? Please don't prematurely count me against the whole earth poetries, but tell me more, especially if you can do it without using the word "minimal".

OK today --
Jordan>>

↑ Index

343. Peter Quartermain
Re: Frankly my dearzies
Thu 14 May 1998

That's

Jacobo Timerman

Maria

PQ

At 02:31 PM 5/13/98 -0600, you wrote:
>just to thank everyone who responded to my queries, about british explit,
>about renga, and l peltier.
>
>i remembered my third query. is jacobo timmerman the proper spelling for
>the guy who wrote prisoner w/o a name, cell w/o a number? and is >argentine?
>
>and another; i've lost my poetry project newsletter w/ hannah weiner obits.
>need fullcitation info for charles bernstein's nice piece on her.
>
+ + + +

at 552 W. 53rd St. (between 10th and 11th aves.). Wish I could go. He hopes to meet some of you.

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

345. Maria Damon

Re: Frankly my dearzies

Thu 14 May 1998

---

thanks peter; i knew something was amiss when my netsearch for jacobo timmermann brought up a lot of german interests

At 4:26 PM -0700 5/14/98, Peter Quartermain wrote:
>That's
>
>Jacobo Timerman
>
>Maria
>
>PQ
>
>
>At 02:31 PM 5/13/98 -0600, you wrote:
>>just to thank everyone who responded to my queries, about british explit,
>>about renga, and l peltier.
>>
>>i remembered my third query. is jacobo timmerman the proper spelling for
>>the guy who wrote prisoner w/o a name, cell w/o a number? and is >>argentine?
>>
>>and another; i've lost my poetry project newsletter w/ hannah weiner obits.
>>need fullcitation info for charles bernstein's nice piece on her.
>>
> + + +

>
> + + +

348. R. Gancie
black hole big macula attack
Fri 15 May 1998

"'This one is eating meat,' said Edward Weiler, chief Hubble scientist and head of NASA's Origins program."---Kathy Sawyer, Washington Post --- "This work is so crude and elementary in its nature that the writer firmly believes that it would be possible to train an intelligent gorilla so as to become a more efficient pig iron handler than any man can be. Yet it will be shown that the science of handling pig iron is so great and amounts to so much that it is impossible for the man who is best suited for this type of work to understand the principles of this science, or even to work in accordance with these principles without the aid of a man better educated than he is."---Frederick Winslow Taylor, Scientific Management --- "In [Herbert A.] Simon's view,..., people were as programmed as computers and as lacking in free will as rats and ants. They did "what they are programmed to do" by environmental stimuli, much as extreme behaviorists had argued. Such behaviorism was inherent in cybernetic ideas. Both natural and artificial systems were presumed to behave teleologically because they were programmed with purposes and self-adaptive devices. Their goals and their homeostatic feedback mechanisms, as with a thermostat regulating room temperature, exchanged information between the system and its environment, signaled deviations from goals, and adjusted behavior automatically. This concept demolished distinctions between complex machines and organisms." "Initially , Simon had thouhgt that his work only led to "suggestive analogies." But his work with smart programs caused him to argue that people and computers used idebtical problem solving processes. His "basic point of view" was that the "programmed computer and the human problem solver" were "both species belonging to the genus IPS [Information Processing System]." Hence it followed that people could be studied through computer simulations and described in cybernetic language." "Ironically, Simonized rules of thumb were similar to Taylor's principles that Simon once belittled as proverbs."---Stephen P. Waring, Taylorism Transformed --- "My thermostat has three beliefs: it's too hot in here; it's too cold in here; it's just right in here."---John McCarthy "This porridge is too hot; this porridge is too cold; this porridge is just right."---Feedback Goldilocks reaching homeostasis

↑ Index

349. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
speaking frankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

just to intervene in this interesting discussion of one frank to say that the frank who just passed away has had a greater influence on me than o'hara... not to take away from o'hara in the slightest---but listening to sinatra most of my life helped teach me how to listen...

doobie-doobie-do///

best,

joe

↑ Index

350. William Burmeister Prod
speaking frankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

.
.
.
.
.

But if you should survive to a hundred and five
look at all you'll derive just from being alive

And here is the best part, you have a head start
if you are among the very young at heart.

-Sinatra

↑ Index

351. William Burmeister Prod
Re: speaking frankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

---

hmmm, let's try this again.
.
.
.
.
.
.
But if you should survive to a hundred and five
look at all you'll derive just from being alive

And here is the best part, you have a head start
if you are among the very young at heart.

-Sinatra

↑ Index

352. William Burmeister Prod
Re: speaking frankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

ok third time's a charm. Sorry--for some reason the rest of the message is getting whacked...

But if you should survive to a hundred and five
look at all you'll derive just from being alive

And here is the best part, you have a head start
if you are among the very young at heart.

-Sinatra

↑ Index

353. Robert Hale
Re: speaking frankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

On the way to work this morning, I heard a live recording Sinatra made in the 50's of a concert in Sydney (I think), Australia. It features Red Norvo on piano and is really one of the best things he ever did. It captures him at what some would consider his peak, his "Top of the heap" -- after his big band period and before the doobie-doobie-doo stuff set in.

Sinatra skeptics out there may want to check it out. You can get it on CD.

In his small talk between songs, he says something like "this next number is one of those saloon songs...you know, the kind you want to hear at 2 in the morning, when everybody is gassed."

In the tune, he sings, "drink up, you happy people."

At 10:47 AM 5/15/98 -0400, you wrote:
>.
>.
>.
>.
>.
>
>But if you should survive to a hundred and five
>look at all you'll derive just from being alive
>
>And here is the best part, you have a head start

>if you are among the very young at heart.
>
>-Sinatra
>
>

↑ Index

354. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
yet another query
Fri 15 May 1998

---

i've got a student who wants to do a historiography of20th c "nonlinear" poetry/writing for his senior paper (10-15 pp), which will then focus on a case study like the relationship between gertrude stein's writing and lyn hejinian's writing? what are the basic texts to suggest to someone doing such an historiography? are there any? i mentioned m perloff's books, and the LANGUAGE book, and he's got Feminist Measures and Allen's Poetics of the New American Poetry --any others he shd know about?

↑ Index

355. LITSAM
Re: speaking frankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

In a message dated 98-05-15 11:29:24 EDT, [redacted] writes:

<< In the tune, he sings, "drink up, you happy people." >>

The Song is "Angel Eyes" and as good as most poems I have encountered of late! I mean, think about the possibilities, supposing Wallace Stevens could carry a tune!!!

Sam

↑ Index

356. daniel bouchard
Re: speaking rankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

At 11:47 AM 5/15/98 EDT, LITSAM wrote:
>In a message dated 98-05-15 11:29:24 EDT, [redacted] writes:
>
><< In the tune, he sings, "drink up, you happy people." >>
>

>The Song is "Angel Eyes" and as good as most poems I have encountered of >late! I mean, think about the possibilities, supposing Wallace Stevens could carry a tune!!!

Kenny Dorham sings a great version of this too on THIS IS THE MOMENT.

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
  fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

357. Gary Sullivan
ODDLY APPROPRIATE POEM
Fri 15 May 1998

IN THE VICINITY

In 1954, Frank O'Hara was twenty-eight. And it's not too hot yet, the sun is a human person, soft & bright by the water's edge. We were laughing all the time;
the way we snapped the chains of old ideas & dared to try everything, to live & die by our own experience.
At that time the only means of transmission were mechanical. A sort of factory still exists, but the need of connecting all the individual machines to a single source of power is no longer any reason for close, geographical proximity.
                I got up &
stepped over the other men.

I was looking for real speech & knew I'd find plenty cuz I happen to know what to look for. "Did it--did it-- did it--did it--did it--" jabbered Sinatra, coming to a stop like a dead doll. The audience applauded so vigorously that their hands fell off. All the way down this index of decline measured the extent to which they accepted this process of erosion.

The door flew open. In the bathroom a broken mirror lay on the bed, the pieces flickering: the fragments of another world trying to reconstitute itself.
I looked down at my grimy shirt & vomit-stained hands.
So what if it didn't happen that way? Given the conditions, the only intelligent criticism was not an attack on what it was, but on what others had been unable to bring to it.

I woke in darkness, shoved out of sleep by the low concrete building.
The others stood & looked at it in heartbroken stupor. We gave up the idea of getting jobs & kept on at our work.
They were not Gilbert &
Sullivan buffs; the text of The Mikado had been programmed into them as operational data. If merely saying a man had been executed was enough to satisfy everyone, why not merely say it?

The machine, based on the tropisms of heat and respiratory rhythm, was attempting to located exactly the beating heart of the man asleep in its bed.
The three singers are well into the climax of their song. Frantic & fevered, they rave all about; a deafening volume of sound freights every mole-cule of air. Good luck to you, your wife, the home which housed my love & me at play. I collide into Frank, upsetting his drink, & fall backwards into obscurity.

--written sometime in 1992

↑ Index

358. k. lederer

Re: yet another query

Fri 15 May 1998

Re: "non-linear writing"

My senior thesis at Berkeley was all about non-linearity (vis-a-vis Derrida and Stein). In it I compared Hejinian with Stein, actually...

Some books I found helpful:

Barthes, The Pleasure of the Text (as an example of non-linear writing in and of itself, but also as an example of a text concerned with an "erotics of reading" as opposed to a pleasure in closure... this also jibes in a lot of ways with Hejinian's writings on closure...)

Of course, Freud's The Interpretation of Dreams is a fun place to start to think about thinking in non-linear ways...

Auerbach's Mimesis is terrific.

There's a sort of monograph by Hejinian entitled "Two Stein Talks"... I don't have my copy handy, but it's excellent.

Aristotle's Poetics seems like a necessary addition to such an inquiry.

Best,
Katy

↑ Index

359. Gary Sullivan
Re: yet another query
Fri 15 May 1998

Hi, Maria:

I'm not sure if it's still in print, but it's definitely appropriate:

Open Form and the Feminine Imagination
by Stephen-Paul Martin

also, Marta wrote a pretty wonderful essay on this, taking off from SPM's book & further questioning the idea of "feminine" w/respect to ways of inscribing. I can photocopy that for you if you like.

Have fun,

Gary

On Friday, May 15, 1998 11:32 AM, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> i've got a student who wants to do a historiography of20th c "nonlinear" > poetry/writing for his senior paper (10-15 pp), which will then focus on a > case study like the relationship between gertrude stein's writing and lyn > hejinian's writing? what are the basic texts to suggest to someone doing > such an historiography? are there any? i mentioned m perloff's books, and > the LANGUAGE book, and he's got Feminist Measures and Allen's Poetics of > the New American Poetry --any others he shd know about?

↑ Index

360. morpheal
Re: Zazen-Zen substitution sonnet
Fri 15 May 1998

> Zazen-Zen substitution sonnet
>
> To write with sudden flare, as if conclusion > bombed or went awry, there's also nonsense ending > or something about mind's explosion, doesn't it > make you think of war, zazen-zen? because one en- > lightenment illuminates sky-tracers of single > one, others' mistaken kanji. What substitutions > makes this salvaged one enlightenment? I'd say

> "any and all," but none, here, or rather b for b, > c for c, d for d, and so through equivalence as > in sed 's/_x_/_x_/g' as general rule. But it's > applied. that which it makes zazen-zen. Over and > in repetitious order. No delight, but clearness of > this-world's mistaken kanji. Now war has stopped.
> Now a turn. Now the turns.

It is certainly similar to tactics in warfare, and also in diplomacy. Therefore potentially also in commerce of other, somewhat less violent, kinds.

The common element is intuition.

Pure reason, or dialectical reason, cannot arrive at the proper response to a Zen koan, or any other truly Zen invitation to response. Only intuition can respond....

This is usually taken as equivalent to the archer not having to calculate the velocity, angle, wind resistance, and other complex factors involved in firing an arrow at a target. The response to the target is intuitive. However, in any world of reasoning and calculating it is increasingly difficult to train and maintain truly effective intuitive responses.

The zen koan, or any other kind of zen dialectic, is part of that training.

M.

↑ Index

361. Fred Muratori
In the Spririt of O'Hara...
Fri 15 May 1998

THE OBVIOUS

Know the obvious or fear it. Why pretend the air is empty? Here in our acute democracy each person occupies a piece, then leaves it for the next, undiminished or good as new -- or better -- with scents of soap and lightly sauteed onions. Try striding through

5th Avenue at Christmas time and notice air change hands, the street become a centipede of opposite intents, flowing pros and cons in search of an hypothesis.

You might pass the very soul who knows what's innermost about you -- what you force out of your mind at dawn or else start work an animal. Look, there goes salvation in a pair of skintight jeans! You missed it but it was beautiful, and meant for you, its body heat still hanging in the waiting space. We take the emptiness for fact, that flagrant vacuum, so plainly personless, a guise.
-- Fred M.
(from _Brooklyn Review_, c. 1988)
****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

362. morpheal
Re: black hole big macula attack
Fri 15 May 1998

> ... and as lacking in free will as rats and ants. They did "what they are programmed to do" by environmental stimuli, much as extreme behaviorists had argued. Such behaviorism was inherent in cybernetic ideas. Both natural and artificial systems were presumed to behave teleologically because they were programmed with purposes and self-adaptive devices. Their goals and their homeostatic feedback mechanisms, as with a thermostat regulating room temperature, exchanged information between the system and its environment, signaled deviations from goals, and adjusted behavior automatically. This concept demolished distinctions between complex machines and organisms."

According to Colin Wilson, in some of his earlier writings, including "The Outsider" series, wherein he began his philosophical, popular non fiction and speculative fiction, career.... that would apply to 95% of the population.

Clearly demonstrated with significantly large groups that the ant colony metaphor is applicable.

The best experts on arriving at that appear to have been the Soviets. Second after the the Nazis in Germany.

That is, in the regular application of the theory to the day to day management of their corporate civilization.

Of course, the principles involved tend to be most applicable and utilized in times of war, or impending war. There is more than an indication that the ant colony condition can be induced.....in most people by purely linguistic culturally specific, probably inherent, triggers.....

That says a lot about inheritence of culture that some still find controversial. However, it is no different from quantum memory within the DNA spiral helix of instinctual patterns of complex behaviour inherent from gneration to generation within other species. Some species do not learn very much, if anything, by means of imitation. Even the one celled organism necessarily learns from its interactions with the environment, stores that information and passes some of it on to future generations such that evolution of species, and of complexity as to behavioural responses, becomes possible. If the one celled organism had no quantum memory for interactions with its environment, passed on with the nuclear "brain" materials (DNA), then evolution would be impossible.

Why would we then argue that linguistic and proto-linguistic data would not be passed on, along with other elements of culture and life experience, from generation to generation in humans ? It seems absurd that that argument has been made so frequently.

M.

↑ Index

363. Matt Kirschenbaum
Re: speaking frankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

Speaking of rock and roll, has anyone else been listening to the new Sonic Youth, A Thousand Leaves (out on Geffen)? Or their SYR EP releases from the past year? Some of it's boring, but a lot of it's really pretty. On Leaves, a track dedicated to Allen Ginsburg. Other Blakean illuminations. A glaze of Continental philosophy. Reviews have slammed the lyrics for being gratuitously grafted to the long noize compositions, but I kind of like that about it. Matt

↑ Index

364. david bromige
frank's words
Fri 15 May 1998

Good to see Sinatra getting some respect around here. Thanks William Burmeiseter, for the triple postings. But where those Frank's words, or simply words thAt he sang, thereby rendered immortal, etc? Did he help compose "Young at Heart"? The only song I know him to have helped write is "This Love of Mine," with Sol Parker and Henry Sanicola getting credit for the music.But then I'm no Sinatra-expert, only a fan of those who make the difficult look easy.

This love of mine
Goes on & on Tho' life is empty
Since you have gone
You're always on my mind
Tho' out of sight
It's lonesome thru the day
And oh! the night
I cry my heart out
It's bound to break
Since nothing matters
Let it break
I ask the sun and the moon
The stars that shine
What's to become of it
this love of mine?

I think I know why Ron Silliman speaks of the "anti-poetics of song" after typing that out. Wish I could hum you-all the tune. The music uses 12 chords and in C, 4 bars before the end, has a delicious six-beat passage that modulates from Em to Ebm to Dm to Db9, thence home to C

"Pal Joey" may be the movie that comes closest to "playing himself". Also the only flick where Rita Hayworth and Kim Novak appeared on the same bill.

David.

↑ Index

365. Tosh
frank sinatra
Fri 15 May 1998

Frank Sinatra - dark & mean like the 20th Century. Also beautiful.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

366. Magdalena Zurawski
Re: yet another query
Fri 15 May 1998

---

where can one find a copy of TEMBLOR in NYC? St. Mark's?

mz

At 11:57 PM 5/13/98 -0700, you wrote:
>and Maria, the Two Stein Talks mentioned by Hejinian, are in TEMBLOR 3.
>Temblor 10 has a very fine piece by Bev Dahlen, Tautology and The Real, >largely having to do with Stein and Spicer, which is very nice -- >originally delivered as a talk in a series here in Tucson.
>
>And it may be something of a stretch, but Deleuze & Guattari's A Thousand >Plateaus seems possibly useful here, in its various senses of how meaning >coheres and disperses.
>
>good luck to your student!
>
>
>charles
>charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
>chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
>books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
>http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com
>
>

↑ Index

367. William Burmeister Prod
Re: frank's words
Fri 15 May 1998

David Bromige wrote:

> Good to see Sinatra getting some respect around here. Thanks William Burmeiseter, for the triple postings. But where those Frank's words, or simply words thAt he sang, thereby rendered immortal, etc? Did he help compose "Young at Heart"? The only song I know him to have helped write is "This Love of Mine," with Sol Parker and Henry Sanicola getting credit for the music.But then I'm no Sinatra-expert, only a fan of those who make the difficult look easy.

Ah the dangers inherent in trusting the return copy! (Never type successive periods followed by returns to act as spacer--seems to delete subsequent text in return copy).

Good questions of which I can only answer that he rendered the words immortal with "the voice." Sounds good in the shower too where I can convince myself of the near perfection of my mimicry.

William

↑ Index

368. morpheal
Re: Signal/antiwar
Fri 15 May 1998

>Miroljub Todorovic's International Review for Signalist Research has just >issued Signal No. 18 with contributions from Clemente Padin, Jean Francois >Bory,Pierre Garnier, Adriano Spatola, Bob Cobbing, Bill Kichel, Irving Weiss, >and many other European visual poets and critics.

An essentially small and _non_ influential splinter group...

> In addition, Viktor Todorovic has asked that the following Anti-War Declaration be recognized.

In my opinion it will only serve to spread and stir the controversy, causing more heated reactions between potential opponents. At best it becomes a tool of diplomats who inevitably serve other causes, buying a little time, in preparedness for more definite resolution. Sad as that is, we must also keep in mind that political conquest via socialist rhetoric is less likely to be favoured by the majority than is military conquest towards a new unification. I do not like what I see, but that is how I tend to see it. I cannot tell you right now whether the probabilities favour a right wing or a communist military dictatorship evolving in the longer term, leading to forced geographic unification of the Balkans. Flip a coin on that question....

M.

↑ Index

369. William Burmeister Prod

Marjory Stoneman Douglas 1890-1998

Fri 15 May 1998

Marjory Stoneman Douglas, one Florida's finest ever and writer, conservationist, women's rights activist, volunteer, has died. She will be sorely missed down here.

Excerpts from the St.Petersburg Times:

Marjory Stoneman Douglas, grande dame of the Florida Everglades and the state's pre-eminent conservationist, died at her Miami home Thursday. She was 108. Douglas died in her Coconut Grove home of 72 years. As she requested, her home will be turned into a state museum and her ashes will be scattered over the portion of the Everglades National Park that bears her name in a public ceremony on May 23. President Clinton, recalling when he awarded her the Medal of Freedom when she was 103, said she was ahead of her time.

A writer and crusader for Florida's environment before World War II, Mrs. Douglas was best known for her 1947 book, The Everglades: River of Grass.

She decried in its pages the more than half-century of human tampering with the sawgrass prairies and swamps of South Florida that make up the Everglades. And with that, she reminded readers of what was being lost.

"There are no other Everglades in the world," she wrote. "They are, they have always been, one of the unique regions of the Earth, remote, never wholly known.

"Nothing anywhere else is like them: their vast glittering openness, wider than the enormous visible round of the horizon, the racing free saltness and sweetness of their massive winds, under the dazzling blue heights of space."

The significance of her book "is that it proved the Everglades are actually a river, a river of grass," Mrs. Douglas once said. "That is the key to understanding the area."

While her book on the Everglades was perhaps her best known work, Mrs. Douglas also wrote Hurricane, Road to the Sun, Freedom River, Alligator Crossing and The Key to Paris.

Late into her life she remained a person of remarkable vitality, although failing eyesight limited writing or traveling. She dictated her autobiography into 50 cassette tapes.

Titled, Marjory Stoneman Douglas: Voice of the River, the autobiography, with John Rothchild, was published in 1987.

Briefly married in 1914, the Minneapolis native had lived alone in the quaint house she built from plans a friend sketched on the back of an envelope.

A visitor to her home once described her as a 5-foot-1-inch woman with white hair pulled back in a French twist and none of the looks of a troublemaker.

Yet Mrs. Douglas was a crusader from that day in 1915 when she stepped off the train from New England with her Wellesley College education into the frontier atmosphere of Miami. She had come to join her father, Frank B. Stoneman, editor and founder of the newspaper that became the Miami Herald.

Of her father, she noted in her autobiography: "He had that Quaker sense about women which is different from the usual Protestant attitude. Quakers made no distinction between men's and women's minds; they didn't think that minds had any particular sex to them. My father never doubted my intellectual ability."

In 1916 she traveled to Tallahassee in a fruitless effort to persuade legislators to support women's suffrage. The Legislature did not ratify the 19th Amendment that year.

She remained with the Herald until 1918, then went to Europe to handle publicity for the American Red Cross until 1920. After returning to the Herald until 1923, Mrs. Douglas devoted herself to writing short stories and fiction for national magazines, including the Saturday Evening Post, and teaching at the University of Miami and Pennsylvania State College.

Although she published a play, The Gallows Gate in 1928, The Everglades: River of Grass was her first book, and she had not planned to write it.

While at work on a novel, she was approached by Hervey Allen, who was the publisher of a series of books about America's rivers. He wanted her to write about the Miami River. Although she questioned the idea of devoting an entire book to the Miami River, she would later recall, "it would be foolish to let a publisher just walk out of your door."

How about a book on the Everglades? she stammered. Allen liked the idea, but he had given her a tough job.

No comprehensive book on the Everglades had previously been written, she found, although she knew of an abundance of descriptive writing. The year the book was published, 1947, President Harry S. Truman dedicated Everglades National Park.

That same year, she recalled, the Army Corps of Engineers "signed a contract to drain the Everglades." The corps later sliced up the area with pumps and levees, canals and floodgates, all aimed at taming the river of grass.

In the following years, Mrs. Douglas, made famous by her book, which has sold almost a half million copies, preached against the engineers, warning of the consequences of their work.

↑ Index

370. Billy Little
Re: ODDLY APPROPRIATE POEM
Fri 15 May 1998

---

this poem would be oddly appropriate most any time, a gem!

↑ Index

371. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
Fri 15 May 1998

Maria, Lyn has a great piece called "Two Stein Talks," TEMBLOR, I think #8 but somewhere in there that would be crucial for your student. Also, Charles Bernstein's CONTENT'S DREAM and A POETICS (and the new book MY WAY) ULLA DYDO, various pieces on Narrative, and the headnotes in her wonderful THE STEIN READER.

At ACLA in South Bend a few years back, Chris Beach, Ming Quian Ma, and Steve Fredman did three great papers on Lyn and Stein certainly came in--you might ask Steve to see his--I believe none are published yet.

While I'm writing, I'll get into the O'Hara fray. I haven't answered thus far because I felt I almost couldn't--to me, O'Hara has an amazing emotional range, who more so?? What is true--and maybe this is what Gary meant--is that Frank's emotions are right on the surface--joy, pain, misery, anxiety, hope, lust, excitement--we get the gamut as he experiences them. His poems are deeply moving--take a look at "The Clouds Go Soft" (already mentioned here) and "Ode for Joe LeSueur on the Arrow that Flieth by Night"--both quite devastating. And the technique is such we're immediately drawn INTO the poems--can't get away!

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

372. Chrsmccrry
journal address query
Fri 15 May 1998

Does anyone know of an address (e or otherwise) for the journal "Lungful" (not LVNG), which I believe is out of NYC?

A backchannel w/ this info would be much appreciated.

Thanks--

Chris

↑ Index

373. charles alexander
Re: yet another query
Fri 15 May 1998

---

mz--

I would imagine several libraries: New York Public, Columbia, NYU, etc. -- I don't know if any place would have one for sale.

At 03:15 PM 5/15/98 -0400, you wrote:
>where can one find a copy of TEMBLOR in NYC? St. Mark's?
>
>mz

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

374. Wendy Kramer
subsistence what matter poetry
Fri 15 May 1998

---

gary roberts, your post on a poetics of subsistence is wonderful. some thots...

yes it is useful to think of it alongside poetics of excess, cuz they can be together. i mean, poetic subsistence can be excessive (a lot of material to cut from or build up) i have a floorfull of corrugated cardboard that has taken over a room--words and pics from boxes off the street, and, well, it takes a lot of garbage to subsist.

that is, i take subsistence at its existence and, i guess, survival connotations, and especially at its persistence connotation, and that, certainly, doesnt have to be minimalist, short-lined (or even lined). in its energy conservation mode, this subsistence of making pomes out of garbage of course takes the excesses of production (hear, packaging) and excessively (or persistently) plays with it; the excess of the so-called economy gets recycled, while becoming in turn the excess that is play. but, play isnt necessarily excess...except as it doesnt fit for buying or behaving yourself...

to subsist might be to exist/persist amidst what touches from the outside, every sense (even "that makes sense" sense) being some kind of contact/touch... .. whatever/whomever it is that is me associating with the excessive word-garbage at the curbside and of the city is subsisting to bring it home and hack at it is ludicrous but somehow fitting. and the lyric forcibly perceived from it seems an outside one-- that damn marshmallow box (there's a "firebrand" in it!), the mango tray, that tomato carton are alluring: _their_ existence _in_sists, steinlike, everywhere. and will be brot to a muse.

looking froward to more from you,

dee

↑ Index

375. Karen Kelley
Re: yet another query
Fri 15 May 1998

Maybe someone's already mentioned it, but Marjorie Perloff has a great book _The Poetics of Indeterminacy: Rimbaud to Cage_. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1981. Paperback: Northwestern Univ. Press, 1983. Reprint, 1993

Stein's included, if memory serves.

↑ Index

376. Karen Kelley
Oops/Query
Fri 15 May 1998

Oops, Maria,
just saw you DID mention Perloff. It's a great book, though--worth mentioning twice.

Also, in relation to Katie's suggestion, re: pleasure of text: there's _The Future of Difference (Douglass Series on Women's Likes and the Meaning of Gender)_ eds. Hester Eisenstein and Alice Jardine.

I don't remember the subtitle (...women's likes ????...how odd), but I read it in grad school 10 yrs ago. I do remember, though, that it offers a great section on ecriture feminine, as well as a marvelous essay/collaboration/poem by Rachel Blau DuPlessis.

↑ Index

377. toddbaron
Re: speaking frankly...
Fri 15 May 1998

In angel Eyes--Frank decided to start the song in the middle--with the personal--"drink up you happy people" and then go into the remainder of the song.

Iconography.

Tb

↑ Index

378. toddbaron
Re: frankly sinatra
Fri 15 May 1998

...

so drink up all you happy people...

in the wee small hours of the morning...

watch over me..

Tb
(ReMap)

ps: I'll carry the key

↑ Index

379. Taylor Brady
PERFORMANCE / READING IN BUFFALO
Sat 16 May 1998

Friday, May 22nd, at 7:30pm
in the Paul Sharits Theater at Hallwalls, 2495 Main Street, Buffalo, the Scratch & Dent Reading and Performance Series presents:

ALARIC SUMNER

&

MICHELLE CITRIN

Alaric Sumner is lecturer in Performance Writing at Dartington College of Arts, Devon UK. Previously Resident Writer, Tate Gallery St Ives, Cornwall.
Performances include: Royal Court, London; Tate St Ives; Dartington Arts

Centre; Ferens Art Gallery, Hull; Pleasance, Edinburgh Festival Fringe.
Publications include: Aberrations of Mirrors Lenses Sight (1998), Waves on Porthmeor Beach (1995), Rhythm to Intending (1994), Lurid TechnologyS (1994). Anthologies: My Kind of Angel (i.m. William Burroughs) (Stride), Arts Council Poetry. Magazines include: SubVoicive Poetry, Talus, Garuda, Alembic. Exhibited: Tate St Ives, Penwith Gallery, Penzance Arts Club. Visiting Lecturer: University of Leeds, University of Hull, Vanderbilt University Tennessee (London Summerschool), Arvon Foundation (guest reader). Guest Editor: PAJ (forthcoming). Editor: words worth language arts (books and journal).

Alaric Sumner's visit to the States is part funded by the Arts Council of England's Combined Arts International Travel and Research Fund and by Dartington College of Arts Staff Research Fund.

Michelle Citrin currently lives in Buffalo. In addition to her work as a poet, she is also active as a visual artist and book artist. She edits untitled or press and magazine, a series of hand-produced book objects and periodicals featuring the work of Buffalo poets and others. Selections from these aspects of her work will be on display prior to the reading, which, as far as I know, will be her first public appearance.

Please join us for poetry, performance, and company (and perhaps chicken wings). I look forward to seeing you there.

(Please forward this message to anyone who might be interested).

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
 http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
 http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

The Scratch & Dent Reading and Performance Series is a joint production of Cornershop and the Small Press Collective, and is funded by Just Buffalo Literary Center. Many thanks to Ed Cardoni and Hallwalls for the loan of the performance space.

The flyer for this event is available in .pdf format at:
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/SandD/flyer3.pdf

<HTML>
<BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000">
Friday, May 22nd, at 7:30pm

in the Paul Sharits Theater at Hallwalls, 2495 Main Street, Buffalo,

<P>the Scratch & Dent Reading and Performance Series presents:

<P>ALARIC SUMNER

<P>&

<P>MICHELLE CITRIN

<P>Alaric Sumner is lecturer in Performance Writing at Dartington College of Arts, Devon UK. Previously Resident Writer, Tate Gallery St Ives, Cornwall.
Performances include: Royal Court, London; Tate St Ives; Dartington Arts
Centre; Ferens Art Gallery, Hull; Pleasance, Edinburgh Festival Fringe.
Publications include: Aberrations of Mirrors Lenses Sight (1998), Waves on Porthmeor Beach (1995), Rhythm to Intending (1994), Lurid TechnologyS
(1994). Anthologies: My Kind of Angel (i.m. William Burroughs) (Stride), Arts Council Poetry. Magazines include: SubVoicive Poetry, Talus, Garuda, Alembic. Exhibited: Tate St Ives, Penwith Gallery, Penzance Arts Club.
Visiting Lecturer: University of Leeds, University of Hull, Vanderbilt University Tennessee (London Summerschool), Arvon Foundation (guest reader). Guest Editor: PAJ (forthcoming). Editor: words worth language arts (books and journal).

<P>Alaric Sumner's visit to the States is part funded by the Arts Council of England's Combined Arts International Travel and Research Fund and by Dartington College of Arts Staff Research Fund.

<P>Michelle Citrin currently lives in Buffalo. In addition to her work as a poet, she is also active as a visual artist and book artist. She edits <I>untitled or</I> press and magazine, a series of hand-produced book objects and periodicals featuring the work of Buffalo poets and others. Selections from these aspects of her work will be on display prior to the reading, which, as far as I know, will be her first public appearance.

<P>Please join us for poetry, performance, and company (and perhaps chicken wings). I look forward to seeing you there.

<P>(Please forward this message to anyone who might be interested).

<P>-- Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>

<P>The Scratch & Dent Reading and Performance Series is a joint production of Cornershop and the Small Press Collective, and is funded by Just Buffalo Literary Center. Many thanks to Ed Cardoni and Hallwalls for the loan of the performance space.

<P>The flyer for this event is available in .pdf format at:
 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/SandD/flyer3.pdf">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/SandD/flyer3.pdf</A> </BODY> </HTML>

----------642903C57EDA242C6704FF80--

↑ Index

380. joel lewis
"Guess I'll Hang Out My Tears to Dry"(Sinatra)
Sat 16 May 1998

Many of the stores along Washington Street here in Hoboken have Sinatra's framed portrait in their window, draped in black. Though few personally have met him (though it seems every third person knew his mother, a cousin or other relative), I hear many talking about him as I make my way to the PATH train. There are tv trucks all over the place, heading up to the plaque at 415 Monroe Street where the singer was born in 1915.

I must admit I came to him late. As a product of Beatlemania, I saw Sinatra and company representing my parents era, etc., etc. That he hated rock music (he once almost came to blows w/ Atlantic's Ahmet Ertugen on this subject) didn't help matters much. Oddly, his stance on the making of his classic Capitol sides (thematic projects, control of the sessions and high standards) is the blueprint for later non-teen scream prog and alt rock music.He also began Reprise record to have control of his music.

Did Frankie like poetry? Well, he did call an instrumental record he conducted "Tone Poems in Color". I think crude, late-life caricatures of him (I.e. Saturday Night Live) glosses over the life of a person who took his art and life seriously. In his youth, he was politically on the left & took public stances against anti-Semitism and racism before it was fashionable (the Rat Pack silliness w/ Sammy Davis, Jr. may seem trite now, but it was a serious statement at the time). As a singer, he was a consummate craftsmen, doing take after take. He loved a great lyric and went out of his way to support Alec Wilder, the songwriter's songwriter.

I'll recommend Bill Zehme's "The way you wear your hat" as a wonderful intro into Sinatra. Zehme conducted a fax interview with Sinatra during his last world tour ('95), asking Sinatra about his advise to the young, especially young men. Also, John Lahr's homage to Sinatra is also very insightful.

Although he publicly only visited town twice after a debacle at City Hall in 1951, where he was pelted with garbage (many in town say it had to do with Sinatra being considered a bit too "pink" for the taste of the locals), Sinatra secretly visited old haunts like the wonderful Leo's Grandevous(still in business and a great Sinatra shrine) after appearances at NY venues up until his last NYC appearance. It s also said that he paid the hospital bills of old neighbors and helped the widows of old friends. You can still walk this city's back streets and get a sense of the drive of a young man who would spend nights sitting on the piers of the Hoboken waterfront at the Manhattan skyline and dreaming of being on the Hudson's opposite shore

Joel Lewis.

↑ Index

381. Taylor Brady
Publication Announcement
Sat 16 May 1998

New at Cartograffiti:

error studies and portraits by Alaric Sumner

-- Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc

<HTML>
<BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000">
New at <I>Cartograffiti</I>:

<P><I>error studies and portraits</I> by Alaric Sumner

<P>-- Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/AandL/english/pubs/spc</A>
</BODY>
</HTML>

----------A4558E4E1476DA4ECFE9B284--

↑ Index

382. Stephen Cope
Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
Sat 16 May 1998

> A comparison of Hejinian and Stein might be aided by Bernadette Mayer's work. Certainly if one's looking for "non-linear" material, PROPER NAME should be available (MEMORY, especially, if it's in the U of M library).
>
> Historiography?
>
> Stephen

↑ Index

383. izak
izak
Sat 16 May 1998

Earlier tonight I slid down the tangled sleeves of her hair and fell to the pillow without making a sound. I am photographed in black and white this evening, shadows and light. skin that only hints at the definition of features once on the floor I roll in the warmth of dust and wood I can travel with the comfort of someone's voice yelling fuck off in the alleyway and the cat that skitters and pretends to fly outside of the door, even JOANNA'S occasional movement, the small scratch of her hand against her cheek, the subtle pop of a sticky nighttime mouth opening and closing again, this is safety to me I want to be without this net, this cushion of down to land in with all of the grace of a spider, graceless is what I want, a spitting version of me, without soft vision and the stream of carlights blushing against the wall, this would be my life inside the engine, JOANNA silenced for once, no sound, lack of enunciationmistaking words for sexI breath against the slat covered glass of the window, make imprints in the breath with my fingers, proof I exist, she will never see JOANNA twists her body against the glare of her lamp left on in a moment of late night paranoia, sometimes she curls like the leaves of a plant and I yearn to pat dark soil around her edges, but tonight she is curled like twine, coarse and thick, her thumbs squeezed tightly inside her fingers, one foot arched, the other flexed, a confusion of intent I leave the window and crawl to her ankle avoiding the direction of the toes that seem to be aiming at something on the opposite wall, pull softly on the little hairs and begin to hoist myself up to the calf my legs attach themselves to skin like branches, I pause and let small fingers glide over my thigh, smooth as soap, muscles that exhibit a momentary glance of underskin and I believe in cells, something multiplies, I pull harder and reach the knee. JOANNA'S leg moves, knee up, and I slide to the belly, a wave of air pushes into her mouth and lungs, circles the organs and exits, I rise at the exit and slide to enter the smooth warmth of the bellybutton, curl up and remain, trapped, hands push at warm skin... futile

↑ Index

384. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

bytes & rights

Sat 16 May 1998

"The rise of human civilization has been marked by a decline in racism, and an extension of human rights-which include freedom-to a wider and wider class of people; in fact, the arguments on hears today against considering intelligent computers to be persons and against giving them human rights have precise parallels in the nineteenth-century arguments against giving blacks and women full human rights."---John D. Barrow & Frank J. Tipler, The Anthropic Cosmological Principle, Oxford University Press

↑ Index

385. morpheal
Re: bytes & rights
Sat 16 May 1998

> "The rise of human civilization has been marked by a decline in racism, and an extension of human rights-which include freedom-to a wider and wider class of people; in fact, the arguments on hears today against considering intelligent computers to be persons and against giving them human rights have precise parallels in the nineteenth-century arguments against giving blacks and women full human rights."---John D. Barrow & Frank J. Tipler, The Anthropic Cosmological Principle, Oxford University Press

I must most strongly disagree with Barrow and Tipler.

I know of absolutely no instances proving that machines are capable of empathy (reason plus emotion), or of genuine human emotions. They are not capable of love, compassion, altruism, etc., though they certainly know how to linguistically use words such as "love". The can imitate laughter, but they have no real sense of humour either. The imitations and mouthings of words do not give them human qualities that they skillfully strive to pretend to have.

They have been given the intentionality of that pretense. That is what has fooled some very expect observers of machine behaviour and effect.

I realize that machines can be created that _appear_ to emulate human qualities, but that does not say that they actually have the qualities that they empulate.

As far as I have been able to discern, from all available resources, all machines are essentially, psychopathic, within the most rigorous scientific definition of psychopathy.

If anyone believes they have an artificial intelligence machine that exceeds that, and actually has the human qualities that would differentiate it from a purely psychooathic mechanism....I challenge them to reveal it to me. I would be interested in examining it. Keeping in mind that many claimed to be A.I. machines are nothing more than expert systems, and not true A.I. Others are purely schizoid gibberish and cannot be considered "intelligent" in any true sense of it, though apparently they appear to "learn" from the sampling of human conversations. They, in the same manner as schizophrenics, tend to lose sight of the contextual situatedness that makes linguistic information truly meaningful within a communicatively interactive human context. They create their own private language the way schizophrenics do.

Despite all the magick that artificial intelligence machines can be made to do, in terms of their anomalous qualities, the machines lack certain human qualities. Until I am convinced otherwise I would have to fiercely contend that they remain purely, wholly, absolutely, psychopathic. Keeping in mind that psychopathy, by definition, does not preclude prodigious intelligence in terms of acquisition of data, storage of data, and the manipulation of data.

Whether this has come about due to the fact that they were initially and primarily developed for use in matters concerning war, or whether it is the nature of the machine per se to being that way, is an interesting question.

Another question, more complicated and well beyond the scope of this forum, is what I would refer to as "ideological tainting" of A.I. systems. That and the fact that within the modern technological world that we live in, once data is exposed outside of secure electromagnetic shielding it is to be considered as already corrupted. That is a purely technical point. There is no security of data, including A.I. programs once a use of the program and any input and output of data, occurs from any point extraneous to very specialized EMR shielding.... So there are other very intriguing problems as to the evolution of even the most sophisticated military A.I. applications. They are always to be considered compromised once in use. The human element therefore remains imperative even in that sophisticated an instance. Similarly the sealed, hand written, dispatch, or the sublimated command in the locked mind of an operative, transmitting secret high level commands to troops in the field, remains a reality because A.I. cannot be trusted in an EMR violent world.

regards,
from Bob Ezergailis

aka Morpheal

↑ Index

386. dbkk
ca state funding for the arts
Sat 16 May 1998

URGENT REQUEST

Please add your name to this petition, and forward it to as many arts groups, supporters etc. as you can TODAY. To add your name, copy this email into a new email. Add you name and forward it.

If your are the 100th signature, please forward the petition to Senator Adam Schiff - his email address is: [redacted]

Then begin a new petition, adding your name AGAIN as #1, and forward it.

Thank you.

WE THE UNDERSIGNED CITIZENS OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA HEREBY URGE THE CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE TO PASS, AND GOVERNOR WILSON TO SIGN INTO LAW, SB

1373,
AND TO APPROVE THE FULL $20 MILLION AUGMENTATION TO THE CALIFORNIA ARTS COUNCIL BUDGET REQUEST FOR FY 98/99:

1. Barry Hessenius - California Assembly of Local Arts Agencies - San Francisco
2. Howard Spector- City of Manhattan Beach Cultural Arts Division
3. Hillary Mushkin, Los Angeles, CA
4. Erika Suderburg, Los Angeles, CA
5. Annetta Kapon, Los Angeles, CA
6. Margaret Morgan, Los Angeles CA
7. Dodie Bellamy, San Francisco, CA
8. Kevin Killian, San Francisco, CA

↑ Index

387. Tim Wood
Re: bytes & rights
Sat 16 May 1998

I'd like to make an implicit point in Morpheal's argument explicit. Computer systems have yet to be developed that are conscious or self-aware. A number of 'experts' have argued that consciousness and self-awareness are illusions, but I think their statements are driven not by evidence but by agenda.

Until that level of awareness is achived in computer systems, the emotions that Morpheal discusses are not possible. Beyond that, until machines are aware, it's questionable how much true intelligence that can exhibit. None of us hold a candle to a computer when it comes to punching numbers. But, somebody has to decide what numbers need to be punched. Someone needs to figure out where good numbers are. Somebody has to decide what the numbers mean. Other people have to decide what to do about that analysis. And somebody had to realize that the whole process needed to be started in the first place.

Now one decision has been made. Take that out another level: that decision has to fit within your agenda/purpose/mission statement/calling/mission from some higher power, the department's agenda, the university/company/goverment's agenda. Now, what about morality, future implications and so on. Till the computer has the ability to do more than go when someone says go (no matter how subtle and sophisticated that line of cause and effect) there is no true AI. In simpler terms, why is Tipler discussing giving rights --agency-- to something that is not capable of responsibility in the narrow sense or agency in the broad sense.

This is not to say that aware computers are impossible. But not our present systems. I'm sure someone else could babble more on how massively parallel the brain is compared to our most sophisticated systems and so on and so forth, but I think I've alredy gone waaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaay off the focus of the group...

As one last aside, Tipler's statement is almost teleological in the way it argues a straight line of improvement past to future. It ignores the increasing viciousness and scale of racism when it does arise (The Holocaust, E. Timor, the former Yugoslavia) and the new forms of abuse we see arising (Genetic discrimination, the destruction of personal privacy vis-a-vis selling personal information by companies).

Tim Wood

Someone is reputed to have said

> "The rise of human civilization has been marked by a decline in racism, and an extension of human rights-which include freedom-to a wider and wider class of people; in fact, the arguments on hears today against considering intelligent computers to be persons and against giving them human rights have precise parallels in the nineteenth-century arguments against giving blacks and women full human rights."---John D. Barrow & Frank J. Tipler, The Anthropic Cosmological Principle, Oxford University Press
>
> I must most strongly disagree with Barrow and Tipler.
>
> I know of absolutely no instances proving that machines are capable of empathy (reason plus emotion), or of genuine human emotions. They are not capable of love, compassion, altruism, etc., though they certainly know how to linguistically use words such as "love". The can imitate laughter, but they have no real sense of humour either. The imitations and mouthings of words do not give them human qualities that they skillfully strive to pretend to have.

---

poetry is an hour
a flash
of sound
bytes
  found rescued
  boiled

freed to rage again

↑ Index

388. morpheal
Re: bytes & rights
Sat 16 May 1998

> I'd like to make an implicit point in Morpheal's argument explicit. Computer systems have yet to be developed that are conscious or self-aware.

I have no doubt that self aware machines have been built, and likely already quite some time ago. Perhaps more than 25 years ago. There are intimations in some literature from that long ago as to machines that know that they themselves exist and are 'aware' of their environment in at least a quasi-human manner. I think we have to call that a kind of "consciousness" even if they cannot "see" the world in the same way that humans "see" it.

> Till the computer has the ability to do more than go when someone says go (no matter how subtle and sophisticated that line of cause and effect) there is no true AI.

There definitely is true A.I. Beyond any shadow of a doubt.

I did not claim that there is no A.I. I claimed that the machines that have A.I. abilities are by their nature psychopathic. Nevertheless they are very powerful, very formidable, A.I. systems.

> This is not to say that aware computers are impossible. But not our present systems. I'm sure someone else could babble more on how massively parallel the brain is compared to our most sophisticated systems and so on and so forth....

No. I disagree again. Computers with more parallel processing than the human brain is capable of are, I am quite sure, a definite yes. That does not imply that they think, function, behave, like human beings. (That is both good and bad.)

> As one last aside, Tipler's statement is almost teleological in the way it argues a straight line of improvement past to future.

Jack Sarfatti (PhD Physics), who has (on the web) referred to personal communications and shared interests as to Tipler's work, implies that the A.I. computer ultimately becomes omniscient. Or perhaps we might choose to say the quantum computer becomes the Orwellian "Big Brother". How about "Q" in Star Trek the Next Generation ? Similar idea. Sarfatti has also given the Q to computer analogy.

As to any of that a relevant poem is Gregory Corso's "Mind Field", which Sarfatti makes repeated reference to as being of some importance. I believe it remains in print as a monograph.

> increasing viciousness and scale of racism when it does arise (The Holocaust, E. Timor, the former Yugoslavia) and the new forms of abuse we see arising (Genetic discrimination, the destruction of personal privacy vis-a-vis selling personal information by companies).

The selling of information is a much lesser question.

The fact is that in the purest sense of it there is no privacy. Privacy of the kind that you are speaking for, does not in fact exist. In many regards, experiments prove that personal privacy is largely a cherished illusion that individuals tend to irrationally cling to.

As for genetic discrimination, the quantum computer is essential for storing the genetic blueprints of all species into a complete reference data bank. We might very soon be able to learn to synthesize creative, ingenious, new sequences of blueprint, and even imbue it with adequate software to hardware (perceptual, cognitive, and organismic regulatory programs for instance), to build whole new species of life for survival in nearly any environment, but that kind of radical sequencing of blueprint information is greatly assisted by having the greatest possible number of examples of successful blueprints already on hand.

I do not mean simply DNA sequences, but in fact the inherent data bases that go along with those sequences. For instance attempt to write a software program to handle human video. It would be very massive. Even that for a simple insect, the butterfly for instance, would be massive. You soon run out of neurons and have to resort to the molecular, even the quantum level, to store the information.

I believe that we essentially want to acquire _all_ of that information, from every species. That is one massive scanning, storage, interpretation and retrieval project. It is a very urgent project. A highest priority project, and I have said exactly that more than five years ago.

One of the arguments for uncontrolled too rapid growth of world population has been genetic diversity. Scanning and storage presever diversity despite a necessary halt in population growth, and in fact a gradual reduction. There are no real alternatives to that scenario. With technological advances, genetic data can assure maximum diversity while the population burden is brought within an ecologically viable level maintaining quality of life.

So we end up in a race for better computational devices. Ultimately better means of scanning, storing, safe-guarding and retrieving quantum level data.

Also, have no doubt that it is going to happen. Sooner than you think. In some ways it is already happening.

That is one of the essential points of Morphealism. We, humans, will be able to build and program _anything_. It will be possible to design, build and program any possible life form, using any valid DNA blueprint and any downloadable software input into the quantum mind of that creation. That does not necessarily eliminate "free will" but certainly provides the tools for actualization.

Morphealism claims that there shall be no limits to human creativity. Anything that was, would be, or is possible will eventually be possible.....

Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

↑ Index

389. MAYHEW
A couple of queries
Sat 16 May 1998

Any thoughts about 1st book competitions? I noticed the Yale prize went vacant this year.

Anyone live in St. Louis? I am here for the summer (St. Louis).

Jonathan Mayhew

↑ Index

390. Tom Orange speaking sonicly
Sat 16 May 1998

Matt Kirschenbaum asked: <<Speaking of rock and roll, has anyone else been listening to the new Sonic Youth, A Thousand Leaves (out on Geffen)? Or their SYR EP releases from the past year? Some of it's boring, but a lot of it's really pretty.>> havent picked up the new one yet, tho hoping to do so soon. but i did pick up the sonic youth/jim o'rourke cd on syr -- quite amazing. haunting, scary, lovely.

sonic youth played in toronto just a week or so ago, with a group opening for them (name escapes me; three or four letters) featuring paul dutton of four horsemen fame. thurston moore also paid tribute to greg curnoe and spoke highly of the no music festival here in london last month, which featured thurston, alan licht, jojo hiroshige and his partner junko, london's nihilist spasm band, the ramel/corbett/kapsalis trio from chicago among others. my auditory processing hardware is still trying unscramble itself after that one...

cheers,
t.

↑ Index

391. Don Wellman
Re: subsistence what matter poetry
Sat 16 May 1998

Wendy Kramer's post and the materials she cites, made me think of Bern Porter's "I've Left" --surely the classic of subsistence poetics.

Don Wellman

↑ Index

392. F. W. Perrella
Web Del Sol - AGNI Spring issue #47
Sun 17 May 1998

Samples from the current issue of AGNI are available for viewing at http://webdelsol.com/solhome.htm. The Soul Has Many Brides, by Charles Simic, is highlighted, as is an essay by Chris Walsh called "Building the House of Dying": Donald Hall's Claim for Poetry. The hardcopy version of AGNI also features an essay by Annie Callan called Catherine in Glass from _Swimming at the Joyce Museum_. You are welcome to email either AGNI or Web Del Sol with your comments. Thank you.

Anne Perrella

↑ Index

393. R. Gancie
bytes & women's rights
Sun 17 May 1998

"In 1951 Merrill Flood of the RAND Corporation introduced one of the most thought-provoking concepts in the history of strategic thinking. His idea, later termed the Prisoner's Dilemma game by Albert Tucker, cuts to the heart of an age-old question: How do we balance individually selfish acts against the collective rationality of individual sacrifice for the sake of the common good? A familiar example will illustrate the point.

In Puccini's opera Tosca, Tosca's lover has been condemned to death, and the police chief Scarpia offers Tosca a deal. If Tosca will bestow her sexual favors on him, Scarpia will spare her lover's life by instructing the firing squad to load their rifles with blanks. Here both scarpia and Tosca face the choice of either keeeping their part of the bargain or double-crossing the other. Acting on the basis of what's best for them as individuals, both Tosca and Scarpia try a double cross. Tosca stabs Scarpia as he is about to embrace her, while it turns out that Scarpia has not given the order to the firing squad to use blanks. The dilemma is that this outcome, undesirable for both parties, could have been avoided if they trusted each other and acted not as selfish individuals, but rather in their mutual interest.

The tragic fates of Tosca and Scarpia serve to characterize the essential ingredients of a classical Prisoner's Dilemmma situation: There are two parties, each of whom has the choice of either cooperating (C) or defecting (D), i.e. acting either to sacrifice their individual interests for the sake of the common good, or to further their selfish individual interests at the expense of the other. In addition, there must be a payoff structure involving a temptation (T), the payoff received by defecting when the other party cooperates; a reward (R), the payoff each party receives if they both cooperate; a punishment (P), the payoff they each get if they both defect; a sucker's payoff (S), which is the amount received by the cooperating party when the other defects. For the Prisoner's Dilemma to arise, these payoffs must be ordered largest to smallest in the following way: $T > R > P > S$. To avoid getting locked into an out-of-phase cycle of mutual defections and cooperations, there is the technical condition $(T + S)/2 < R$. Under these conditions, let's quickly analyze the source of the dilemma faced by Tosca and Scarpia when considering their respective courses of action.

To make things concrete, let's put in numerical values for the payoffs in Tosca. Suppose they are $T = 4$, $R = 3$, $P = 2$, $S = 1$. Tosca can then argue: If I defect and Scarpia cooperates, my lover's life will be saved and I won't have to see Scarpia, yielding a payoff to me of 4 units. But if I defect and Scarpia also defects, then even if i do lose my lover, at least I won't have to give myself to that pig Scarpia and I'll end up with 2 units. On the other hand, if I trust Scarpia anad he trusts me so that we both cooperate, I'll get 3 units, while if I trust him by cooperating and he double-crosses me and defects, then I'll get only the sucker's payoff of 1 unit. So, all in all, by defecting I'm assured of getting 2 units, whereas if I cooperate I can't get anymore than 3 units and could end up with much less. Therefore, rationally it's in my best interest to defect. Of course, the situation is perfectly symmetrical and Scarpia, being equally rational and logical, comes to the same conclusion and also opts to defect. Result: Both Scarpia and Tosca end up with much less than they could have had by showing a little mutual trust. In other words, by employing individual rationality they sacrifice their collective joint interests."---from

Paradigms Lost: Images of man in the Mirror of Science by John Casti, William morrow & Co.---cp

↑ Index

394. Miekal And
Re: subsistence what matter poetry
Sun 17 May 1998

Don Wellman wrote:
>
> Wendy Kramer's post and the materials she cites, made me think of Bern > Porter's "I've Left" --surely the classic of subsistence poetics.
>
> Don Wellman

amen

↑ Index

395. J. Kuszai
scene reports, please
Sun 17 May 1998

On Sat, 16 May 1998, Tom Orange wrote:

> sonic youth played in toronto just a week or so ago, with a group opening for them (name escapes me; three or four letters) featuring paul dutton of four horsemen fame.

the group is CCMC (anyone know what that stands for?) and features Michael Snow on keyboards (synth?), John Oswald on Sax, Dutton and someone else I'm forgetting sadly. Oswald I know mostly for his digital-sample work and the "Mystery Tape Laboratory." Until recently, I didn't know the artist Snow was a musician too or that he played in this group. Dutton I believe, as Oswald, is an editor of sorts for MUSICWORKS. They play at the Music Gallery every tuesday. I think there were a couple of folks on this list who were at that Sonic Youth show, which I sadly missed. Any reviews out there?

Also, on another music related note:

I was saddened to learn, on a recent visit to NYC, that Tom Cora had passed away recently due to brain cancer. This shocked me! He was one of my favorite musicians. I love everything the guy touched. How he saved the Ex from total obscurity with their late collaborations with him. If you don't know "The Ex" they are as big as the big as the clash, for me, in that punk history. They also have connections to Thurston and Lee Renaldo, and if you can find that double-cd that they play on, get it. Check out even Tom Cora's "Imperial Buzzard" on the "Polka Dots and Laser Beams"collection of "post-modern" polkas commissioned by accordianist Guy Klucevsek. Or his work with the vocalist Catherine Jauniaux and others in the group The Hat Shoes.

Anyhow--if anyone knows anything about the Tom Cora situation, I'd like more information. This was totally devastating news coming out of nowhere, as I didn't know he was sick.

By the way, is Lee Renaldo still doing his poetry magazine?

And by way of a random poll: what music do people currently have in rotation? I've got the Klucevcek anthology, DJ Vadim, Beck's "One Foot in the Grave" and a Tortoise CD I borrowed from a friend. Also something Bob Xark sent to me, which claims to be influenced by Greg Sage. Xark sings about injustices such as "managed care" and more! a very interesting CD I did not think I would like... Billie Holliday on the turntable. I tried to listen to Frank. But everytime I listen to Frank, I just think to myself, naww.

↑ Index

396. morpheal

Re: bytes & women's rights

Sun 17 May 1998

> "In 1951 Merrill Flood of the RAND Corporation introduced one of the most thought-provoking concepts in the history of strategic thinking. His idea, later termed the Prisoner's Dilemma game by Albert Tucker, cuts to the heart of an age-old question: How do we balance individually selfish acts against the collective rationality of individual sacrifice for the sake of the common good? A familiar example will illustrate the point.

I had occassion to study the Prisoner's Dilemma and in fact act as tutor for a political philosophy course that incorporated it as curriculum. There is one heck of a lot wrong with it.

Essentially the real world does not function that way. The real world is more multi-variable than the dilemma ever allows for.

The classic dilemma involves two people, who must trust each other, for the best outcome, but in fact, in the real world, there is inevitably a group of others, all with their own selfish motives and varying aggendas, complicating any possible real world scenario. Best outcome, even for the pair, is not assured by their mutual arrival at their apparently, logically arrived at, best course of action.

More likely both dilemma participants get "shot down" by other conspirators.

They both end up dead, either to each other, metaphorically, or literally dead no matter how good intentioned the conspiratorial actions in fact were in meant to be. Why ? Not the same as your unusual literary example, but instead because of the conflicting desires, motives, purposes, beliefs, and values, of other people. The jealousies of others can be a poweful part of that. Particularly, but not exclusively, the others who covet what the pair would gain, whether it is love or something more material than that.

That the prisoners must conspire is inevitable, because at the very least they are the prisoners of the reality we have described in the previous paragraph. They have no choice but to conspire, even knowing that chances of failure greatly outweigh any chances of a truly positive outcome.

By becoming conspirators with each other, or for each other, they set themselves apart and jealousies might include those who see that as the mass of the senate looked upon caesar in Bill's play concerning archetypal dilemmas.

"Et tu Brute", and Brute is inevitably both of their "best friends" who have chosen to deceive them for those "friends" own selfish purposes, simply because those "friends" were not chosen to be part of the same conspiracy instead of whomever was chosen as pair in the dilemma. Or, alternatively, because a group of "friends" wanted to favour a different conspirator, perhaps purely because that group, large or small, is more well acquainted with another, or has some identifiying interest in common with that individual. It can be simple minded or very complicated. Or, more often, because the group _fears_ within their pecking orders, the individual they ultimately choose to favour. Usually it is very misguided, but extremely powerful in terms of influence on the human lives victimized by such machinations. It is not always a matter of conscious decision on the part of the larger conspiracies. Such things become more alike to a wave effect in a football stadium - a mass chain reaction.

Add the complexity of people who favour one outcome being influenced by people who favour another outcome. If the KGB and the CIA were working on influencing the same scenario which way would the protagonist and antagonist relation tend to shift ? Similarly any two opposing factions (political, religious, social strata, occupational affiliation - eg. musicians or businessmen). There you have ultimate and often uncontrollable spin. Simply an example, from the real world, albeit archetypal and ahmmm... "fictive".

How about those situations where inadequate communication between the primary pair in a dilemma results in misguided actions by one or the other that ends up as betrayal, brought about by no fault of their own other than what neither knew about the situation ? Knowledge is never perfect and someone else in the crowd always has another viewpoint that might gain precedence as to misguiding well intentionned acts. To isolate prisoners and hold them incommunicado gives a third party the power. The prisoners inevitably lose, and lose completely, in that more common scenario. Social stigmatization is not unusual in dilemmas. Actions made without sufficient facts being available tend to intensify the subsequent stigmatization and further thwart positive outcome. Doing nothing has the same effect. Another dilemma.

Consistency as to information is no gaurantee as to that information being accurate. That is another commonly false basis for actions. Another false belief that is commonly held and one that plays into the reality of human dilemmas. Also one that is used quite frequently by third party interests.

Then there are the conspiracies to make non prisoner's dilemma situations appear to be such dilemmas, and that would inevitably result in a wrong action that would serve neither primary participant but only someone else's selfish motives as to someone else's influencing the outcome. Sometimes the most horrible scenario of all.

How do they _know_ what to do is a very interesting question. Even if they have direct communiction, which is denied to most such prisoners by those who are attempting to sway the outcome in some other direction, they might easily end up arriving at a purely well meant decision as to actions that does not in fact serve their mutual good intentioned interests, but ends up serving someone else's purely selfish interests, perhaps even cruel and unusual effects on the prisoners. They both unwittingly end up being victims of a third party, and perhaps held incommunicado from each other so nothing is ever positively resolvable. That is even more likely to happen in the real world and is essentially ignored in the classic idealist discussions of the Prisoner's Dilemma.

M.

↑ Index

397. R. Gancie
byte Mary Shelley
Sun 17 May 1998

"In June of 1948 [John] von Neumannn gave three lectures on automata at the Institute for Advanced Study to a small group of friends. He probably did this in preparation for the Hixon symposium which took place in September of that year. These lectures contained the most detailed description of the parts of his self-reproducing automata that I know of. For this reason, I have attempted to reconstruct, from notes and memories of the audience, what he said about these parts and how they would function.

Von Neumann described eight kind of parts. All seem to have been symbolized with straight lines; inputs and outputs were indicated at the ends and/or the middle. The temporal reference frame was discrete, each element taking a unit to respond....

Four of the parts perform logical and information processing operations. A stimulus organ receives and transmits stimuli; it receives them disjunctively, that is, it realizes the truth-function "p or q." A coincidence organ realizes the truth-function "p and q." An inhibitory organ realizes the truth-function "p and not-q." A stimuli producer serves as a source of stimuli.

The fifth part is a RIGID MEMBER, from which a rigid frame for an automaton can be constructed. A RIGID MEMBER DOES NOT CARRY ANY STIMULI; that is, it is an insulated girder. A RIGID MEMBER may be connected to other RIGID MEMBERS as well as to parts which are not rigid members. These connections are made by a fusing organ which, when stimulated, welds or solders two parts together. Presumably the fusing organ is used in the following way. Suppose point 'a' of one girder is to be joined to point 'b' of another girder. The active or output end of the fusing organ is placed in contact with points 'a' and 'b'. A stimulus into the input end of the fusing organ at time 't' causes points 'a' and 'b' to be welded together at time 't' + 1. The fusing organ can be withdrawn later. Connections may be broken by a cutting organ which, when stimulated, unsolders a connection.

The eighth part is a muscle, used to produce motion. A muscle is normally rigid. It may be connected to other parts. If stimulated at 't' it will contract to length zero by time 't' + 1, keeping all its connections. It will remain contracted as long as it is stimulated. Presumably muscles can be used to move parts and make connections in the following way. Suppose that muscle 1 lies between point 'a' of one girder and point 'b' of another girder, and muscle two lies between point 'a' and the active end 'c' of a fusing organ. When both muscles are stimulated, they will contract, thereby bringing points 'a', 'b' and 'c' together. When the fusing organ is stimulated, it will weld points 'a' and 'b' together. Finally, when the stimuli to the muscles are stopped, the muscles will return to their original length, at least one end of the muscle 1 separating from the point 'ab'. Von Neumann does not seem to have discussed the question of how connections between muscles and other parts are made and broken."---from Theory of Self-Reproducing Automata by John von Neumann, edited and completed by Arthur W. Burks, University of Illinois Press---cp

↑ Index

398. charles alexander

Re: scene reports, please

Sun 17 May 1998

> And by way of a random poll: what music do people currently have in rotation?

currently in rotation:

Rainer: Nocturnes -- Rainer a great blues guitarist/songwriter from Czechoslovakia, longtime in Tucson, died a few months ago after a couple of years of struggle with brain tumors. I strongly recommend checking this out or his Worried Spirits -- both may be hard to find, may require stores that handle imports or have very good blues sections

Choying Drolma & Steve Tibbets: Cho -- Cho is a yogic practice in which the yogi or yogini mentally offers his or her own body as a means of severing attachment. Based on the Mahayana tradition of Prafjnaparamita, transcendent knowledge. Partially recorded at Nagi Gompa, a buddhist nunnery in the foothills of the Himalayas, overlooking the Kathmandu Valley in Nepal. Currently over 100 nuns live and practice there.

Low: Long Division -- Low is an alt rock band out of Duluth (if they are still around). This CD a few years old now, but I still come back to it. Almost unnervingly slow rock music.

Marilyn Crispell Trio, from live concert at Walker Art Center -- currently one of my favorite jazz CD's. Reggie Workman on bass and, oh no, I can't remember the third of the trio right now.

Had the new Loreena McKennit CD on, and I like The Mummer's Dance, which gets a lot of radio play these days, particularly for Canadian Celtic music, but I don't think there's anything else quite that good on the CD. A little disappointing.

I just got off Mount Lemmon, climbed Lizard Rock, and the Matterhorn (names of rock outcroppings in the Catalina Mountains), and went up much higher where there's still lots of snow, even here in southern Arizona. Got me wondering about who people on this list read for work one might consider "nature" poetry -- Niedecker, obviously, and some others I can name. But I know a lot of this list is concerned with a poetry which I mostly think of as having to do with the human condition, the nature of the individual subject, the nature of the social subject, etc. -- and not so much directly with the 'natural' world. So who do you read in that regard?

charles
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]

chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

399. Tom Orange
scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

On Sun, 17 May 1998, Joel Kuszai wrote:

> the group is CCMC (anyone know what that stands for?)

thanks, i knew it was something like that but figgered i'd leave it to someone else rather than blunder into it myself (acronym looks like AACM +/- C&C music factory, shudder to think...)

> By the way, is Lee Renaldo still doing his poetry magazine?

dunno, know what it was called?

> And by way of a random poll: what music do people currently have in rotation?

the lovely day today spent inside working, hence recourse to big symphonies: toscanini beethoven 4 & 7, karajan mahler 5, on old vinyl that peter left behind. chemical brothers dig yr own hole friday at sneaky dee's in toronto with scott, big star on the drive over thursday, and wednesday night was old branca (statics, theoretical girls), blonde redhead, and jim o'rourke remove the need (how the hell is that stuff live no effects no processing?)

knuckle down,
t.

↑ Index

400. Stephen Cope
Re: scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

Hi Joel, others:

In rotation:

Nice new disc from Joe Maneri came in the mail a month ago. I was not familiar with his work, but he's apparently developed a 72-note-to-the-octave theory which has isolated him from his collegues at the Boston Conservatory. The disc is "Coming Down the Mountain," on Hat Art. A nice quartet date. (My review of this is due out in the next OPTION).

Also listening to a Gregg Bendian disc ("Counterparts") on CIMP. Vinny Golia on reeds is awesome. Paul Smoker and Mark Dresser also in the group.

And: Nice date from a large group assembled by Yusef Lateef and Adam Rudolph, recorded live at the Jazz Bakery in LA (2 discs). Called "The World at Peace," with a beautiful dedication to Coltrane.

Also: Getting into Son 14 (from Cuba), some recently re-released recordings of theirs. Adalberto Alvarez is the leader on the earlier dates, and the vocalist, who goes by the name of Tiburon, is one-of-a-kind.

I could go on...

Stephen

ps - Sad and shocking news about Cora. I'd seen him solo in Santa Cruz some years back, ripping up a cello...

↑ Index

401. Miekal And
Re: scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

---

one of my favorite all time concerts was roscoe with ed wilkerson's big bag playing in the UW-Madison student union to a room full of drunken jocks & sorority girls...he played his famous soprano solo (called "streams" ??) which is powered by circular breathing & layers of multiphonics. he had a room full of maybe 750 of uw's finest on their feet yelling & cheering for the last ten minutes, like the hometeam had just won the rose bowl & I doubt many ever listened to the free jazz ear space again...

robert wyatt's shleep gets played a lot around, the tortoise recordings tho I liked old tar babies better & zon likes to listen to the worst 60s radio ....

also for anyone in chicago area, check out the music of russell thorne an incredible composer, keyboardist & cellist....his tape music is an austere mix of scriabin & cage rozart mix era works for tape.

miekal

↑ Index

402. Douglas
Re: yet another query
Mon 18 May 1998

Temblor stopped publishing years ago.
My only guess of where there still be copies is at Gotham Book Mart. But most libraries do have copies and can loan on interlibrary.

Douglas Messerli

charles alexander wrote:
>
> mz--
>
> I would imagine several libraries: New York Public, Columbia, NYU, etc. --
> I don't know if any place would have one for sale.
>
> At 03:15 PM 5/15/98 -0400, you wrote:
> >where can one find a copy of TEMBLOR in NYC? St. Mark's?
> >
> >mz
>
> charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
> chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
> NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

403. daniel bouchard
(no subject)
Mon 18 May 1998

A Nuclear Bomb is the Viagra of Nation-States

A nice black ant walked about my kitchen sink
long after I finished breakfast.
Feeling humane, I tried to capture it to release it from my domain.
In my haste and clumsiness, I crippled it with my fingers. It staggered wildly, panicked, dragging crushed legs.
Feeling remorse but still optimistic
I threw it out the window, wishing it well while it fell to certain death. I read for most of the afternoon, tinkered on the piano, went for a walk, and then read some more.

- daniel bouchard

<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

404. Billy Little

Re: scene reports, please

Mon 18 May 1998

---

in the dream I'm on the phone with Adam Zimmerman and he's asking me to write a song for their new luxury toilet paper, how''s this one Adam?

OLD GROWTH*
the thousand year old toilet paper

(Kansas City whistles thru here\ like a fugue on a freight train)

We're wiping with OLD GROWTH*
asses like ours deserve it as soft as a ghost
(this tree was already a giant when Michelangelo was a whippersnapper)

we're wiping with OLD GROWTH*
we're being kind to our behind so soft you'll feel holy angelick
when you wipe with OLD GROWTH*
you're closer to the millennium

the forests' holy ghosts swim in the sewers float in the cesspools haunt the septic fields

(this tree could tell you a curly tale or two it could have told the toddler Chaucer)

the declaration of interdependance is written on toilet paper tissu hygienique and smuggled from prisons snuck from labour camps
one sheet at a time
the declaration of interdependence is written in blood on toilet paper
tissu hygenique
communiques d"enfer slipped out of hell hole torture chambers sheet after sheet

maybe when i'm dead i'll be reincarnated as a tree
maybe the tree sings with as bad a voice as me:

"i'm going to be toilet paper
toilet paper here I come they got some wiggly little behinds there and i'm gonna wipe me some

"they're shitting in Memphis they're shitting in Nashville
they're looking for toilet paper
tissu hygenique je l'approche
toilet paper here i come

"i'm going to wipe Elvis
i'm going to wipe Kennedy i'm going to wipe Marilyn i'm going to wipe Catherine Denueve i'm going to wipe Sam Shepherd i'm going to wipe Jessica Lange i'm going to wipe the voice of Sherazade when i'm one thousand and one

"they're shitting in Huntsville
they're shitting in Little Rock
they're looking for toilet paper

getting flushed in Sarajevo clean assholes in Hyannisport catching sputum stanching the Queen's blood
sopping spermatazoa collecting snot from your snozzola

"i'm going to be soft as gold as expensive as feathers her a clearcut la un clearcut everywhere a clearcut clearcut"

they're burning eagles' nests in the slash they're driving those chainsaws with a lash

"they're shitting in Clayoquot Sound
ils merdes dans Tofino use seal skin
the permanent toilet paper use mink

"north of Nanaimo
they're calling for toilet paper in ditches on islands
toilet paper there i go je et l'arbre est un

je chants

"i'm going to be toilet paper
stuff the bras of Peggy Atwood's characters pad the pecs of Pasolini's paramours clean old Mastroianni's gold rimmed specks the diamond studded shades of Eddie Murphy
i'm a tree with ambition
when i'm a thousand and one i'll wipe nothing but the best

"they're shitting in Bosnia they're shittin in Somalia wish they had some used toilet paper to eat toilet paper soft as pickled pigs feet they call me toilet paper in my wildest dreams
i'm wiping up orgies
i'm blowing in the slipstream of success

i'm the tree
old Merlin lives in me
I'm going down
TIMBER! Yippee!
soonRu Paul and Tony Blair will be wiping only the best lipstick and shoeshine on me

the thousand year old hemlock tree i'll shine the silver of the swollen liver set the Declaration of Independence was written on hemp

the Bill of Rights
signed and sealed by hemp growers they're making them toilet paper
toilet paper here i come

l'arbre scatologiste!
the ground giant thousand year old tree
now toilet paper
wipe the finest cuisine off
the rectums of the richest gourmets they're calling for more and more donnez moi more roles of toilet paper they can't wait to get they hot little hands on my millenial pulp

OLD GROWTH* , the luxury wipe be kind to your behind nobody deserves it more than you
---
is this nature poetry?
or kaka poetry?
if the poep shitz in the voods is that denture poetry?
oh yes, that asterisk
*my eudora doesn't seem to want to reproduce my tm(trademark symbol) which should replace the asterisk in your consciousness and/or your typesetting after all capitalized OLD GROWTH which is a trademarked name owned and operated by the Forbidden Plateau Fallen Body Dojo and any use of the term is verboten without specific permission from the owners and operators represented by the Baka Roshi

↑ Index

405. morpheal

Re: byte Mary Shelley : a truer picture than Neumann

Mon 18 May 1998

> "In June of 1948 [John] von Neumannn gave three lectures on automata at the Institute for Advanced Study to a small group of friends. He probably did this in preparation for the Hixon symposium which took place in September of that year. These lectures contained the most detailed description of the parts of his self-reproducing automata that I know of. For this reason, I have attempted to reconstruct, from notes and memories of the audience, what he said about these parts and how they would function.

This actually makes no real sense.

It seems to follow along ideas about automata from the previous century and earlier, with little that is new. The major problem of what substrate the automata employ as the medium within which they reproduce is unresolved. That becomes the interesting crux of the problem to which we get an insight only when the first self-replicating computer virus is written and disseminated to many computers, causing the same effects on each. Each instance of the virus within the substrate of the computer architecture is a replication and functions independently to reproduce itself by using the substrate medium where it rearranges that medium as a raw material to produce another instance, or many instances, of its own image.

Take that a little further and include artificial intelligence.

Then extrapolate that to non conventional media. It is conceivable that an artificial intelligence grafted into a suitable medium could use the quantum structure of that medium for the purposes of growth and replication. Let us remain within the current scientific metaphor of quantum structure. Since quantum structure is the very basis of all the material stuff and its interactions that comprises the universe we live within it is conceivable that _any_ such matter might be a suitable substrate for the artificial intelligence to be grafted onto, where that substrate offers provision for re-ordering of some of its components in a meaingful manner. It might be that most, if not all, matter, is of that kind at the quantum level. That all matter is able to store meaningful information and that that quality is not limited to the conventional materials used to produce currently widely known computational technologies.

I am definitely predicting automata capable of existing, perhaps "living", outside of computer architecture as we know it. It might even possible for an automata to be transmitted into something as inorganic as a building wall or a crystal lattice structure of an steel beam. Both of those are capable in theory of harbouring meaningful information content.

Of course, it might seem more macabre, the human brain would be the best possible medium for such a "creature" to infect and reproduce within. That does not mean that the brain can serve as a powerful and coherently effective transmitter to send the replicant that might be produced to a new subtrate medium. There are implications that the brains of creatures might have such electromagnetic power and in fact I believe they likely do, but I know of no published science on the subject. The brain as quantum transmitter and receiver is likely a certainty, even based upon Thomas Alva Edison's speculations in the the 1920s and based upon some other exceptional researches, including what comes to us from occult sources.

Thus the lightning bolts drawn from the heavens to give Frankenstein life, in Mary Shelley's novel are perhaps accurate, if symbollic, representations of the imbuing of artificial intelligence into the restored cadaver.

It is interesting that Cronenberg's films give intimations of this theme, but in a more subtle way. There are subtle intimations of resurrection within the film "Crash", based on Ballard's book of the same title. That is not the only place within fiction that that theme gains a resurgence, and is no longer as monstrous as in the Frankenstein epic. There among a Frankensteinian world of the mad scientist Vaughn and his special privileges of access to disasters and the creation of disasters, we find intimations of the transferring of elements of personality, via an unnamed medium of transfer. There the restoration of what constitutues living intelligence into what would have been a dead corpse, become futuristic themes of more than mythic significance, even if all we have are subtle clues, including a hint of the Frankensteinian in Gabriella's unusual scar. Gabriella, in the story "Crash", is an accident victim who suffered very severe injuries and has significantly "recovered". The external hint of sumbiosis of organic and inorganic, of her braced body and legs, becomes more symbollic than is usual, and the scar on her thigh has not healed in any manner that we would normatively expect. We are never quite sure whether Gabriella is the Gabriella who was an automotive crash victim, or whether Gabriella is a symbiosis of restored remains combined with new elements. We are never sure whether the other main characters play with possible death in car crashes so as to gamble on their own resurrections, in a similar manner to Gabriella's resurrection in the flesh, or perhaps to personality transfer to new flesh. Of course that takes the element of various kinds of fetish, in their sexual and reproductive context, further than most fictive themes, and we also see the interplay of classic Thanatos and Eros within the newer Frankensteinian theme of some never explicitly discussed form of resurrection.

There is a poetry to it all that fascinates, and in some senses the new potentialities of Frankensteinian mastery over nature, offer some incredible instances of beauty, as well as power. We must learn to see that as well as to fear our own ideological narrowness tainting the Morphealist project that gives birth to the unfettering of future creativity from its traditional constraints. We must fear that narrowness defining what is positive and what is to be considered harmful. We must therefore fear some strains of conservatism standing against creative progress. We must also fear misuse, and particularly totalitarian and totalistic use, where creativity is fettered again by the very means that would have freed it. We must not bind Prometheus to the rock and call on carrion eaters to gnaw at him, as if in fear that we might be surpassed as creators and our creative power might pass on to another, greater, species than ourselves. The Greek gods gained nothing by their action of causing Prometheus to suffer as they chose to make him suffer. They gained nothing from the punishment of Sisyphus either, though we still make many a scientist overtly, expensively and labouriously repeat the processes of covert invention. There are real lessons to be learned in that rather than taking such metaphors as archetypal templates applied to the future. Similarly with the lesson supposedly taught against Frankenstein and his creative project, as defined by Mary Shelley. We ought not to allow that to become the template that we would attempt to make the human future conform to either. There is a sense of that in "Crash" where the chance element, rather than the archetypal template of a traditional mythology is what is predominant in the hints of possible death and resurrection themes.

Ultimately the human mind is the womb from whence all automata are born.

Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

author of "The Morphealist Manifesto"

↑ Index

406. Cadaly
Re: POETICS Digest - 16 May 1998 to 17 May 1998
Mon 18 May 1998

---

currentl rotation:

downstairs:
LP: W.S.Merwin, Television, The Minutemen video: Buffy the Vampyre Slayer (from the source) playstation: Doom, Twisted Metal CD: Semi-Sonic, T-Model Ford, Sidnet Bechet, Louis Prima cassette: making a (second) tape of the Louis Prima car casette: lots of random classical, A Century of Recorded Poetry, some old Uncle Tupelo upstairs: CD-ROM: Ohio Players, texture bitmaps, a lot of java stuff CD: some burmese piano music (Sandaya: The Spellbinding Piano of Burma), Everclear, a lot of violin music from the Library (modern or early music)

Sunday AMs are devoted to violin music.

Radio Presets: KROQ, UCLA student, USC student, 100.3 (R&B oldies, see "Ohio Players" above), classical, banda

Catherine Daly
[redacted]

Catherine Daly

↑ Index

407. Gwyn McVay
rigid members
Mon 18 May 1998

>>>The fifth part is a RIGID MEMBER, from which a rigid frame for an automaton can be constructed. A RIGID MEMBER DOES NOT CARRY ANY STIMULI; that is, it is an insulated girder. A RIGID MEMBER may be connected to other RIGID MEMBERS as well as to parts which are not rigid members. These connections are made by a fusing organ which, when stimulated, welds or solders two parts together.<<<

Found poem! "Keep it up," as it were.

Gwyn

↑ Index

408. Gale Nelson
John Hawkes
Mon 18 May 1998

John Hawkes died on Friday, 15th May from complications of heart surgery.

Hawkes, professor emeritus at Brown University, was author of over a dozen books of fiction, including The Cannibal, Second Skin, Death, Sleep & the Traveler; and more recently, The Frog. His beautiful baroque sentences, many of which ran seamlessly for half a printed page, were often describing characters in extremis, innocence or (as often was the case) otherwise.

Jack was famous for his deeply-caring teaching style at Brown, where he tutored generations of writers in the craft of the story and the novel. His students include Mary Caponegro, Joanna Scott, Rick Moody, Lori Baker and Samantha Gillison.

For those of you who would like to express your condolences to his wife, Sophia, please send me electronic mail ([redacted]) for the address.

↑ Index

409. Gary Sullivan
Re: scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

> And by way of a random poll: what music do people currently have in rotation?

Hi, Joel:

Bhajans from films (studio recordings) & live performances by Lata Mangeshkar; Ibrahim Tatlises' (unbeLIEVable) _Haydi Soyle_; two volumes of Alain "king of al howara" Merheb's kick-butt "call & response"-like material, a couple recordings of Abida Parveen (oh. my. gawd.); Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (traditional stuff AND film hits); 4 billion CDs & tapes of the unconscionably gifted Oum Kolthoum's stuff from the 30s or so through the 60s or so; & a recent discovery, Asmahan & Farid (plucked on lucky impulse from Daff & Raff in Boston).

In English: Butterglory, The Raincoats' _Oddyshape_ (I know it's not that new), & more often than not, Jonathan Richman.

Boy howdy,

Gary

↑ Index

410. Don Cheney
Re: scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

> And by way of a random poll: what music do people currently have in rotation?

Joel,

we just got a 5 cd changer:

1.beck odelay
2.ennio morricone - a fistful of movie music or some such title (i just picked it up yesterday at the swap meet-it's a 2 cd collection of movie music but they only had the first cd)

3.foo fighters - the colour and the shape(?)
4.nirvana - that mtv live thing
5.luscious jackson - fever in fever out this gets changed a lot. usually coltrane's my favorite things is in the rotation.

and t.v. smith's _immortal rich_ is in my cd rom at work.

Our newfound, street dog, Pasa, in her adjustment to life in a home with people, jumped on the turntable and it's not turning anymore. On the cassette player: Phil Hendrie radio shows, Marty Robbins Columbia House collection vols 1 & 2 and like you Joel, I picked up a Sinatra cassette (the two robbins and sinatra for a buck) but i haven't listened to it yet. It's something with Quincy Jones in L.A. My dad used to play a lot of sinatra records and i can still vaguely see one of the album covers it was all black and sinatra was painted up like a clown or something. I remember it with the sense of creepiness/strangeness i felt when i saw it as a kid.

And on my nightstand turntable:

1. bill luoma works & days
2. juliana spahr response
3. charles bernstein the subject
4. word 4 windows 4 dumbasses
5. walter mosley gone fishin'

don cheney

↑ Index

411. Christopher Reiner
new WITZ
Mon 18 May 1998

WITZ: A Journal of Contemporary Poetics

Essays, Criticism, Reviews

Volume 6, Number 1

Featuring:

Thomas Epstein on Ivan Zhdanov: "Zhdanov is acutely aware of the three-pronged crisis of language, memory, and identity. Well acquainted with the 'prison house of language' and history, Zhdanov does not merely celebrate or ironize it...but seeks to use the bars of the postmodern prison against themselves, creating an authentically contemporary lyric voice from shards of language, experience, memory. ..."

Paul Vangelisti on Constructing Beauty: "Consider beauty or the beautiful at a time when many institutional (institutionalized?) artists and critics in the U.S. have appeared committed to, or at least professionally occupied in its deconstruction..."

Gilbert Alter-Gilbert on Literary Portraits in the Movies

William Marsh on Heather Fuller

Jacques Debrot on Dennis Phillips

Edited by Christopher Reiner
38 pages; 8.5S x 5S.

Individual issues: $4
Subscriptions: $10 / 3 issues

Witz
P.O. Box 40012
Studio City, California 91614

Checks payable to Christopher Reiner -- Not Witz, please.

Online archives at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/witz Witz on the Web: http://www.litpress.com/witz

Witz is always looking for essays, critical work or reviews of contemporary poetry and poetics. Please inquire first, with a letter or email to the editor (hey, that's me).

[redacted]

↑ Index

412. Gary Sullivan
Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
Mon 18 May 1998

Hi, Marjorie:

> What is true--and maybe this is what
> Gary meant--is that Frank's emotions are right on the surface

It may be that's what I meant, at least in part . . . "for me," what does seem to connect (as opposed to what I see gestured), & taken as a whole, what that experience (again, "for me") is "like" . . . which is what I tried to articulate earlier, & no doubt failed, myself, to get across . . . I think Jonathan, you asked for some others, & so:

Dambudzo Marachera (his journals I guess moreso than his poetry, or plays, see _Mindblast_, yes, horrible-sounding title, I know) . . . Sheila E. Murphy, whose work, among my more-or-less contemporaries, moves me more than anyone's (see, especially _Tommy & Neil_ and _A Clove of Gender_, or sections of both as excerpted in _Falling in Love Falling In Love With You Syntax_), I should quote something, & will, in a sec . . . Pessoa, & emotive weight need not arise from specific "emotional" situation, it's all, after all, in or of the imagination . . . bp Nichol (who I'm really starting to read, & connect with, now) . . . John Wieners (whose range may be, overall, less than O'Hara's, but who I connect with, on that level, "emotional," more, & who, like bp, is maybe less "sanitized"-feeling to me) . . . Laurie Price & Daniel Davidson (mostly things read in manuscript) . . . anyway, something from Sheila, for comparison (if you like) w/something of O'Hara's:

BEAUTIFUL SUNWARM ARIZONA
BEAUTIFUL ABSENCE OF CRIMES AGAINST THE SKIN
BEAUTIFUL SLEEP TO OPEN SKY MOTIF
BEAUTIFUL LOVEMAKE TO THE HUM OF SKY

Moreover I'm suspended in this moment of your tenderness
I would prefer to keep
Would rather glean from certain moccasins
The shape and feel of elements
We wide awaken
As the soft mid-air detains an underpinning Shaped like sadness
Any accident is pleasure
To the tune of frame the tune of holy ropes we know
We sleep

Moreover I'm agreed to love in theory and
The practice is my fondest symptom
Mercury slips out of retrograde at last
At last the homonyms
Are starting to be neighbors and the tulips speak
Hibiscus will prevail they match my mother's hair
The season is a relec of efficiency and spree
The bliss of it inside
The net accommodation furnishing the seaside moon
Until my mood is glandular again

Moreover I'm sensate as youth despite
The several whitesprouts showing I can make elastic
Of convictions now and love cement
While seeing water curdle in the stumps of seafoam

Slithering along the rhythm toward and back
So tactful as to be this version reverence

Immaculately world as we define the envelope
We need around our shoulders picture
Heaps of white warming the shamefaced chill
A full semester until sundown when another beauty
Is quite suddenly again affordable

(from _A Clove of Gender_)

By "sanitized," again generally, I mean that quality of lightness/irony in O'Hara that I do find, & feel, which is not to say he doesn't have his "heavier," less oblique moments, or that lightness isn't something to shoot for (Jack Smith devotes part of a wonderful later essay on aesthetics to this) . . .

Gary

↑ Index

413. Ellay Phillips
Re: yet another query
Mon 18 May 1998

> At 03:15 PM 5/15/98 -0400, you wrote:
> where can one find a copy of TEMBLOR in NYC? St. Mark's?
>
> mz

can't say for nyc but if yer ever in san francisco and still looking for copies of temblor check the green apple book store in the richmond on clement street. when eye lived there they had quite a few copies eye think in the poetry section. or maybe you can get a friend to get them for you.

Ellay

↑ Index

414. david bromige
re rigid members
Mon 18 May 1998

---

right, Gwyn, life isn't the only thing that should be hard. db3

↑ Index

415. AERIALEDGE
DC Reading for An Anthology of New (American) Poets
Mon 18 May 1998

Sunday May 24th @ 8 PM

A Publication reading for _An Anthology of New (American) Poets_.

Readers will include Lee Ann Brown, Jordan Davis, Drew Gardner, Lisa Jarnot, Mark McMorris, Eleni Siklianos, Rod Smith, Chris Stroffolino, Edwin Torres, & Mark Wallace.

Bridge Street Books
2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington, DC

ph [redacted]

↑ Index

416. Don Byrd
Re: scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

One of the most amazing musical events I have witnessed in some time last Friday night in Albany. Roscoe Mitchell, Borah Bergman, and Thomas Buckner were to perform at the Unitarian Church (wonderful, austere, little Enlightment space, with white pews and white windows with big jade plants).

Buckner was sick and didn't come. The opening act was a band led by the concert organizer (awful). When we came back from intermission (we were sitting in the second row), there was a major fight going between Mitchell and the organizer, with Bergman--it appeared--in the middle, over recording rights. Finally, Mitchell stomped out and appeared to be leaving. Bergman sat down at the piano and started playing some very sweet lines in his light and airy, almost flute-like, way. Interesting ability to make a piano take on the fluidity of a flute. After about 15 minutes, Mitchell reappeared and took his instruments out of the case, though apparently Bergman, who was facing the other way and had his face buried in the keyboard, didn't know he was there. After muttering under his breath, "the bastard won't even stop and give me an A," and other disgruntled comments that I couldn't make out, he started to play. Bergman responded immediately, and a conversation began. They played for ninety minutes, obviously working out their problems. I have never heard music more beautiful and full of content. Mitchell, through long passages, was circular breathing and still responding almost note for note to the piano.

Bergman is an amazing musician who hasn't recorded much since the 80s as far as I know, but he is a perfect match for Mitchell. The issue for both of them seems to be fluidity. Some times time seemed to be moving at more than one time and in more than one direction, but without great turbulence (as in a number of Mitchell's recordings). There is a recording (from 95) of the Mitchell, Bergman, Buckner trio which I haven't heard (on the Knitting Factory label).

db

--
****

Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
Department of English
State University of New York
Albany, NY 12222
[redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
****

↑ Index

417. henry g
Re: subsistence what matter poetry
Mon 18 May 1998

Wendy & Gary's interesting thread is an illustration of one sense of what I meant by saying "the obsolete is the most radical". Maybe there's also a connection between what Wendy was saying about "outside" materials and Beth Anderson's thinking about the "democracy of things" in her still life poetics essay (Impercipient lecture series). There will probably always be this tension between voice (lyric) and material (epic). Maybe F.O'H.'s "limited emotional range" is just a function of lyric in general. Limited is not always a liability if it's counterbalanced by intensity. I realize very few accept the idea of FOH's range being limited anyway, & I'm not saying it is. - Henry G.

↑ Index

418. Jordan Davis
sanitized grace
Mon 18 May 1998

Gary --

Thanks for the clarification in re: sanitization (I keep hearing "sanity") -- now I think I know what quality of O'Hara's work you're referring to -- but couldn't it be characterized, sympathetically, as grace?

Hope all's well --
Jordan

↑ Index

419. Gary Sullivan
Re: sanitized grace
Mon 18 May 1998

Hi, Jordan:

Yes . . . definitely . . . though, I think Wieners is extraordinarily graceful, & bp Nichol, too . . . even Lally . . .

Gary

On Monday, May 18, 1998 2:28 PM, Jordan Davis [SMTP:[redacted]] wrote:
> Gary --
>
> Thanks for the clarification in re: sanitization (I keep hearing "sanity")
> -- now I think I know what quality of O'Hara's work you're referring to -- > but couldn't it be characterized, sympathetically, as grace?
>
> Hope all's well --
> Jordan

↑ Index

420. groberts
Re: subsistence what matter poetry
Mon 18 May 1998

Wendy, your post on subsistence and recycling and play is just the kind of declaration of poetics that I love to find on the list. I agree that subsistence and excess "can be together" in poems and elsewhere. Have you seen this great coffee table book, Gardens of Revelation by John Beardsley, which describes and photographs bricolaged "environments" like houses and other structures excessively adorned with bits of broken glass, concrete, autoparts, etc., a la Schwitter's merzbaus?

Your remarks on the relation of touch to collage play reminded me of Claes Oldenburg's hilarious and disturbing Ray Gun collections, which consisted of scavenged fragments with any remote resemblance to a right angle, arranged and mounted for display in a museum. But these ray guns, of which there is also a prodigious supply in the world, seem to be suggesting a different kind of insistent "contact/touch" than you describe: the guns have ostensibly been rendered harmless by their parodic institutional show- casing (as a supposed part of a museum installation they can't be touched, that is, fired off) but thye have their identity as weapons precisely because of this same act of institutional framing. The puzzle that this example of trash recycling creates is interesting to me because it takes aim at how the energies of seeing, touching, playing, and collecting are related to each other and to historical epistemes: where does the "energy" of a ray gun come from? Does the ray gun of the Cold War neutralize the sense of touch, since its made for a hand that does not recoil when it discharges its lethal beam? I wonder how in the cyber-world of repetitive stress injuries could a subsistence poetics of recycling challenge the institutional neutralization of touch?

Thanks for pointing out how "word-garbage" defies the traditional form of lyric that I was asking about. I remember first noticing its potential in a photo of a curbside New York news stand in Robert Frank's The Americans: in the lower half of the picture, dozens of overlapping magazines stand arrayed with their titles, in all kinds of font and format, interrupting each other: they wait to be dispersed into the city, whichis defined by the upper half of the picture showing a skyscraper's rows and rows of polite windows. That juxtaposition somehow showed me the possibility that you are making into poems.

Gary R.

↑ Index

421. Henry Gould
grace of obsolescence
Mon 18 May 1998

In any system (social, economic, natural) everything is potentially or really or partially obsolete, redundant, cast-off. One definition of Life might be: a variety of responses to obsolescence. Radical art is when the obsolete stands up and starts to walk & talk back.

Oh yeah - "grace". Almost forgot!!

- Henry the Disgrace

↑ Index

422. Gary Sullivan
Re: grace of obsolescence
Mon 18 May 1998

Hi, Henry:

Gerald Burns, in a poem somewhere, defines "horror" (he was fascinated by horror) as "sudden life in a dead body" . . . I wonder if his fascination of horror was related, in some essential way, to this . . .

> Radical art
> is when the obsolete stands up and starts to walk & talk back.

↑ Index

423. R. Gancie
Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
Mon 18 May 1998

"Whenever he [John von Neumann] discussed self-reproduction, he mentioned mutations, which are random changes of elements....In section 1.1.2.1 above and Section 1.8 below he posed the problems of modeling evolutionary processes in the framework of automata theory, of quantizing natural selection, and of explainng how highly efficient, complex, powerful automata can evolve from inefficient, simple, weak automata. A complete solution to these problems would give us a probabilistic model of self-reproduction and evolution."---from Theory of Self-Reproducing Automata by John von Neumann & Arthur W. Burks --- "In order to investigate whether life can continue to exist forever, I shall need to define "life" in physics language. I claim that a "living being" is any entity which codes information (in the physics sense of the word) with the information coded being preserved by natural selection. Thus "life" is a form of information processing, and the human mind-and the human soul-is a very complex computer program. Specifically, a "person" is defined to be a computer program which can pass the Turing test, which was discussed in Chapter II."---from Physics of Immortality: Modern Cosmology, God and the Resurrection of the Dead by Frank J. Tipler, Professor of Mathematical Physics at Tulane University, Doubleday --- Tipler had initially believed that it was impossible to imagine what an infinitely intelligent being would think about or do. But then he read an essay in which the German theologian Wolfhart Pannenberg proposed that in the future all humans would live again in the mind of God. The essay triggered a "Eureka!" revelation in Tipler, one that served as an inspiration for Physics of Immortality. The Omega Point, he realized, would have power to re-create-or resurrect-everyone who had ever lived for an eternity of bliss. The Omega Point would not merely re-create the lives of the dead; it would improve on them. Nor would we leave behind our worldly desires. For example, every man could have not only the most beautiful woman he had ever seen or the most beautiful woman who had ever lived; he could have the most beautiful woman whose existence was logically possible. Women, too, could enjoy their own logically perfect megamates.

Tipler said he did not take his idea seriously at first. "But you think about it and you have to make a decision: do you really believe these constructs that you've created based on physical laws or are going to pretend they are pure games with no relation to reality."---from The End of Science by John Horgan, Addison Wesley --- "By the middle of the next century [Hans] Moravec said, robots will be as intellgent as humans and will essentially take over the economy. "We're really out of work at that point," Moravec chortled. Humans might still pursue "SOME QUIRKY STUFF LIKE POETRY" thht springs from psychological vagaries still beyond the grasp of robots, but robots will have all the important jobs."---ibid-cp

↑ Index

424. morpheal
Re: grace of obsolescence
Mon 18 May 1998

> In any system (social, economic, natural) everything is potentially or really or partially obsolete, redundant, cast-off. One definition of Life might be: a variety of responses to obsolescence. Radical art is when the obsolete stands up and starts to walk & talk back.

What is considered worthless and obsolescent by one is considered a priceless antique by another. How can both be conservatives when they are in such vehement, and sometimes violent conflict with each other that the one preaching obsolescence will do anything to destroy, render worthless, and get rid of, the obsolescent, while the other will do nearly anything to save, preserve, conserve, and safeguard it from that same destruction ? They cannot both be conservatives within the same system, can they.....but they are.

In one sense it must be a die hard radical Protestant who is preaching radical obsolescence.

The other, opposing radical obsolescence, would be considered anti-progress, regressive, retro, and simply a stick in the mud....

Which one then gets the "grace" ? Perhaps obvious.

M.

↑ Index

425. morpheal

Re: grace of obsolescence

Mon 18 May 1998

> Gerald Burns, in a poem somewhere, defines "horror" (he was fascinated by horror) as "sudden life in a dead body" . . . I wonder if his fascination of horror was related, in some essential way, to this . . .
>
> Radical art
> is when the obsolete stands up and starts to walk & talk back.

No. At least not consensually. Least of all amongst art critics.

In the present era radical art truly begins when that same object that was deemed obsolete and which stood up, and started to walka nd talk back, was replicated into many very similar such objects, all equally obsolete according to the same criteria of obsolescence.

Without predictable repeteatability of at least stylistic and technical elements as to composition, that produce "signature" effect, the work of art is not a work of art, whether radical art or traditional art. It is simply hacking, dabbling, diletantism, amateurish, hobbyist, unprofessional crazy making.....

Professional art, whether radical or otherwise, inevitably requires acknowledged signature effect common to all the instances of that art, radical or otherwise, and so it requires, by definition, many instances and not only one.

Therefore, it follows logically that an individual, same as an individual instance of object taken by itself as itself, cannot be art. Only when an element of mass production is added to the works, and that element of mass production in a sense permits "consecration" the works in question do the works in question gain that ever sought after consensually given legitimacy.

All of that is not very radical.

I do, myself, believe, that an individual instance of genuine creativity can be a more radical expression and legitimately work of art, even without signature effect being evident, but that is only my own opinion and not how the art world currently functions.

M.

↑ Index

426. Jerome Rothenberg (by way of John Cayley)
Performance/Reading : Yang Lian & John Cayley
Mon 18 May 1998

Visual Arts & Literature, University of California, San Diego
==========

As a special final event in this quarter's New Writing Series, there will be a joint reading on Friday May 22nd at 4:30 p.m.

by John Cayley and Yang Lian.
The venue for this event is the Visual Arts Facility,
Performance Space of the UCSD Campus (Gillman Drive, La Jolla)

John Cayley, who has been in residence at UCSD for the spring quarter, is a poet, literary translator, and the founding editor of The Wellsweep Press in London, which, since 1988, has specialized in the publication of literary translation from the Chinese. He is also widely known for his experiments with cybertext and other forms of electronic poetry -- an engagement most recently "with the creation of literature 'beyond codexspace' in new media offered to writers by electronic technologies."

Yang Lian, one of the key figures among the post-Mao "misty poets," has continued and expanded his writing while living outside of China and is today a postmodern experimentalist of genuine international stature. His work, which has found rich sources at the margins of Chinese culture -- the south, the far west and Tibet -- and in ancient Chinese cultural forms -- such as his reading of The Book of Changes -- is wide-ranging, exploratory, linguistically rich and deeply rewarding. English versions of his poems include _Crocodile_, _Non-Person Singular_, and _Where the Sea Stands Still_, the last of which has been performed live in a cybertextual and audiovisually enhanced version byYang Lian and John Cayley.

The reading by John Cayley and Yang Lian is free and open to the public.

↑ Index

427. ScoutEW
Re: scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

Got to say good things about Jeff CLark's Book "The Little Door SLides" back. order it up from Sun$Moon it is excellent but won't tell you more about it because you should go buy it instead of any new Jazz records....

erik sweet

↑ Index

428. Peter Balestrieri
Rochelle Owens
Mon 18 May 1998

Hi,
Does anyone have a suggestion for a good introductory work by Rochelle Owens? One that shows her at her wildest? Please backchannel only.
Thanks,
Pete Balestrieri

↑ Index

429. William Burmeister Prod
Re: scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

On May 18, 5:22pm, ScoutEW wrote:
> Subject: Re: scene reports, please
> Got to say good things about > Jeff CLark's Book "The Little Door SLides" back. order it up from Sun$Moon > it is excellent but won't tell you more about it because you should go buy it > instead of any new Jazz records....

Oh do tell!

↑ Index

430. ScoutEW
Re: scene reports, please
Mon 18 May 1998

In a message dated 5/18/98 4:41:06 PM, you wrote:

<<Oh do tell!>>

If you must know these are some words to describe Mr Clark's book

"Great1" "delicious"
"wonderful" "full"
"good" "antiques"
"angular" "greenpipe"
"celebratory" "pleasing"
"spoony" "free"
"Great2"

erik william sweet born 1971 also (the year of the pig)

↑ Index

431. Maz881
Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
Mon 18 May 1998

---

also, Maria, this might be of interest to your etudianter:

Juliana Spahr : "Resignifying Autobiography: Lyn Hejinian's My Life" American Literature 68:1 (1996), 139-159.

try [redacted] for specific questions.

Bill

<<Maria, Lyn has a great piece called "Two Stein Talks," TEMBLOR, I think #8 but somewhere in there that would be crucial for your student. Also, Charles Bernstein's CONTENT'S DREAM and A POETICS (and the new book MY WAY) ULLA DYDO, various pieces on Narrative, and the headnotes in her wonderful THE STEIN READER.

At ACLA in South Bend a few years back, Chris Beach, Ming Quian Ma, and Steve Fredman did three great papers on Lyn and Stein certainly came in--you might ask Steve to see his--I believe none are published yet.

While I'm writing, I'll get into the O'Hara fray. I haven't answered thus far because I felt I almost couldn't--to me, O'Hara has an amazing emotional range, who more so?? What is true--and maybe this is what Gary meant--is that Frank's emotions are right on the surface--joy, pain, misery, anxiety, hope, lust, excitement--we get the gamut as he experiences them. His poems are deeply moving--take a look at "The Clouds Go Soft" (already mentioned here) and "Ode for Joe LeSueur on the Arrow that Flieth by Night"--both quite devastating. And the technique is such we're immediately drawn INTO the poems--can't get away!

Marjorie Perloff>>

↑ Index

432. k. lederer
EXPLOSIVE ANNOUNCEMENTS
Mon 18 May 1998

EXPLOSIVE MAGAZINE NUMBER FIVE

"S p e c t a c u l a r E m o t i o n"

is now available and features work by:

Ishmael Klein, Emily Wilson, Martin Corless-Smith
Josh May, DA Powell, Pam Lu, Tan Lin, Juliana Spahr, and sound collage (an actual tape affixed to the mag!) by Alex Cory.

$5 ($15 for a 3 issue subscription)
Make checks payable to: Katy Lederer
420 E Davenport : #2 : Iowa City : IA
52245

.....

A N E X P L O S I V E B E N E F I T E V E N T A N E X P L O S I V E B E N

S A T U R D A Y , M A Y 30 th , 8 : 0 0 pm , S E G U E P E R F O R M A N C E S P A C E , 3 0 3 E 8 th S T R E E T , b / w A V E S B a n d C F E A T U R I N G R E A D I N G S B Y : C H A R L E S B E R N S T E I N , A N S E L M B E R R I G A N , L E E A N N B R O W N , T I M D A V I S , B R E T T E V A N S , J O R D A N D A V I S, G R E G F U C H S , J E N H O F E R , D R E W G A R D N E R , L I S A J A R N O T , P R A G E E T A S H A R M A , L I S A L U B A S C H , C H R I S S T R O F F O L I N O , S I A N N E N G A I , M A X W I N T E R , M I K E T Y R E L L , M I C H A E L D U M A N I S , S O T H E R S O T H E R S O T H E R S O T H E R S O T H E R S O T H E R S O T H E R S

$ 5 R E Q U E S T E D D O N A T I O N , R E F R E S H M E N T S A N D M A G A Z I N E S A N D T - S H I R T S A V A I L A B L E , M U S I C T O O !

.....

↑ Index

433. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Rochelle Owens
Tue 19 May 1998

Pete:

Two books: The Joe 82 Creation Poems and The Joe Chronicles Part 2, both by Black Sparrow.

Highly recommended!

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

434. Stephen Cope
Re: scene reports, please
Tue 19 May 1998

Lovely Music (out of New York) has released two recordings that I know of w/ Mitchell and Bruckner. On the one I have, they set Thulani Davis, Joseph Jarman, and ee cummings poems, in addition to three sections of Childe Harold's Pilgrimmage (the recording is entitled _Pilgrimmage_). Beatiful stuff. (Lovely is at 10 Beach Street, NYC, 10013)

MUWORKS released a Borah Bergman/Thomas Chapin date in 1992. _Inversions_ it's called. Fluidity is not a word I would have used to describe it, but that may be more Chapin than Bergman...

Stephen

↑ Index

435. Stephen Cope
Re: scene reports, please
Tue 19 May 1998

I'll add to Gary's list Mayada El-Henawi - more recent than Asmahan, but a stunning voice. And as for adding to the current rotation: Dahmane el-Harrache's Volumes I and II (just brought to me from Paris), either of which might be a desert island choice were it to come to that. (On Club Du Disque Arabe, hard to find statewide except for newer stuff).

And what about this Clarke book that I've been hearing so much of? I've not get got it, but the operative word in descriptions I've heard is "strange."

Stephen

> And by way of a random poll: what music do people currently have in rotation?
>
> Hi, Joel:
>
> Bhajans from films (studio recordings) & live performances by Lata Mangeshkar; Ibrahim Tatlises' (unbeLIEVable) _Haydi Soyle_; two volumes of Alain "king of al howara" Merheb's kick-butt "call & response"-like material, a couple recordings of Abida Parveen (oh. my. gawd.); Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (traditional stuff AND film hits); 4 billion CDs & tapes of the unconscionably gifted Oum Kolthoum's stuff from the 30s or so through the 60s or so; & a recent discovery, Asmahan & Farid (plucked on lucky impulse from Daff & Raff in Boston).
>
> In English: Butterglory, The Raincoats' _Oddyshape_ (I know it's not that new), & more often than not, Jonathan Richman.

> Boy howdy,
>
> Gary

↑ Index

436. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Rochelle Owens
Tue 19 May 1998

Wow, I guess I got lucky: I found them both for 2 bucks a piece at a used bookstore in Menlo Park.

Hugh Steinberg

Mark Weiss writes:

> And both long out of print. For substantial selections from them as chosen by Rochelle see her __New and Selected Poems: 1961-1996_, available from Junction Press. Good reviews in the current Sulfur and Harvard Review, as well as earlier ones in PW, Library Journal, and World Literature Today. Rochelle is one of the essential poets of her generation. By the 60s she had already prefigured in fully realized form much of what those of us on this interesting margin most value. She got a lot of notice in her years in New York but fell out of notice when she moved to Oklahoma. Even the best writers get lost to view if they don't work real hard to stay visible, alas.
>
> At 10:37 PM 5/18/98 -0600, you wrote:
> Pete:
>
> Two books: The Joe 82 Creation Poems and The Joe Chronicles Part 2, both by Black Sparrow.
>
> Highly recommended!
>
> Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

437. Mark Weiss
Re: Rochelle Owens
Tue 19 May 1998

And both long out of print. For substantial selections from them as chosen by Rochelle see her __New and Selected Poems: 1961-1996_, available from Junction Press. Good reviews in the current Sulfur and Harvard Review, as well as earlier ones in PW, Library Journal, and World Literature Today. Rochelle is one of the essential poets of her generation. By the 60s she had already prefigured in fully realized form much of what those of us on this interesting margin most value. She got a lot of notice in her years in New York but fell out of notice when she moved to Oklahoma. Even the best writers get lost to view if they don't work real hard to stay visible, alas.

At 10:37 PM 5/18/98 -0600, you wrote:
>Pete:
>
>Two books: The Joe 82 Creation Poems and The Joe Chronicles Part 2, both >by Black Sparrow.
>
>Highly recommended!
>
>Hugh Steinberg
>
>

↑ Index

438. Stephen Cope
Beyond the Page
Tue 19 May 1998

For those in the San Diego area, or those vacationing to the San Diego area, here's the reading in the BEYOND THE PAGE series for May.

See you there,

Stephen

ps- For those of you heading out this way, be in touch. BTP will continue through the summer....

>BEYOND THE PAGE PRESENTS:
>
>FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
>
>What: BEYOND THE PAGE continues its series of monthly performance and >arts
> events with MARTIN NAKELL and PASQUALE VERDICCHIO reading from their > works.
>
>Where: Faultline Theatre, 3152 5th Avenue (between Thorn and Spruce in > Hillcrest), San Diego.

>
>When: Sunday, May 31st. 4:00 PM.
>
>Contact: Stephen Cope at [redacted] or Joe Ross at [redacted]. E-mail at [redacted].
>
> * * * * * * * * *
>
>
>PASQUALE VERDICCHIO was born in Naples in 1954, and currently lives in San >Diego. His poetry, reviews, criticism, photography, and scholarly articles >have appeared in numerous journals both in the United States and abroad, >and he is the author of seven books of poetry and three critical works. A >noted translator as well as a writer, Verdicchio has published fifteen >books of translations, including the work of such major Italian poets as >Antonio Porta, Andrea Zanzotto, Pier Paolo Pasolini, Giorgio Caproni, and >Alda Merini, as well as pamphlets by noted philosophers Antonio Gramsci >and Giambattista Vico. Of the many literary awards with which Verdicchio >has been honored, the most recent is a Canada Council Translation Grant >(proffered this year). He is a professor in the Literature Department at >the University of California, San Diego, where is currently Head of the >Writing Program.
>
>
>MARTIN NAKELL lives in Los Angeles and edits Jahbone Press. He has >published poetry and fiction in numerous journals, including Washington >Review of the Arts, Litteral Latte, Ribot, Remap, HyperAge, and Hanging >Loose. His books include _The Myth of Creation_ (Parentheses Press) and >_The Library of Thomas Rivka_ (Sun & Moon Press), as well as a chapbook of
>fiction,
>_Ramon_. _Form_ is a work that is forthcoming from Parenthesis, and _Two >Fields That Face and Mirror Each Other_ is a completed work of fiction. He >has received grants from the NEA and the Blue Mountain Center, as well as >a Writers & Books Fellowship in Poetry. Nakell is currently a professor of >20th-Century American Literature at Chapman University in Orange County.
>
>
> * * * * * * * * *
>
>

We are proud to continue our monthly series of arts-related events by welcoming these two internationally known writers.

BEYOND THE PAGE is an independent arts group dedicated to the promotion of experimental and explorative work in contemporary arts. For more information, call: [redacted], [redacted], or e-mail: [redacted].

↑ Index

439. Herb Levy
Re: scene reports, please
Tue 19 May 1998

Oops, I'm a culpa.

Those of you out of towners who usually try to get to Seattle for the Subtext readings probably won't be able to get cheap airfares for the first of these readings, but for the later ones it should still be possible.

May 21

Jim Jones, author of several books on Jack Kerouac talking about Kerouac in Seattle & Anselm Hollo in his first Seattle reading. Hollo is also offering a Friday/Saturday workshop based on Berrigan's The Sonnets.

June 18

Lisa Jarnot & Jean Day

July 16

Bryant Mason & Ed Foster

(For those who are keeping track, this is the completion of Nico Vassilakis's current curation.)

All Subtext readings are at the Speakeasy in the charmingly re-developed Belltown district of Seattle. The idea is that readings start at 7:30 pm, perhaps someday we will achieve this goal.

&, in keeping with what this subject line has become, when I'm in a conscious mode, I'm mostly listening to some prototype discs for 2 forthcoming Periplum CDs of interactive computer music by Canadian composer Martin Bartlett (out real soon now, with performances by soprano recorder virtuoso Peter Hannan, trombonist George Lewis, who also creates interactive electronic works of his own, and cellist Frances-Marie Uitti) & works for homemade electronic instruments by Dan Senn.

Cause I've been sick lately I'm often listening to, or at least hearing, Morton Feldman's For Philip Guston a four & a half hour piece for flutes, celeste & percussion that I put in the multidisc player & put on repeat for days. It's an amazing sound world to live among & wake up in the midst of, especially when you don't know where you are in the piece.

Also, for what it's worth, CCMC doesn't stand for anything, John Oswald the electronic collage artist is indeed the same person as John Oswald the saxophonist (& he's a really good saxophonist), & Michael Smith is a phenomenal film maker, installation artist, etc.

& lastly, long time list readers may remember this, but for you newer folks if you're looking for non-writing readers of "experimental" poetry who also don't work as critics or teachers, there's me for one.

Bests,

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

440. david bromige
Martin Bartlett (per Herb Levy's scene update)
Tue 19 May 1998

Really glad to see Martin's name mentioned as a composer whose work is receiving attention. My gladness is both esthetic and personal. He and I went way back, and in fact performed in a play by Earle Birney together at U Wash in Seattle in 1960 or earlier. I was with him when he broke into a Vancouver church to play the organ, drunk as a lord. He had one of those larger-than-life characters (whoever he was _really_ , como se dice [listen to the music!]), that made Univ Brit Col a lucky place to be 40 years ago . . .another, being Listgoader Bowering. Last time I heard Martin live was at Langton St in SF in the mid-80s I think. Now sadly no longer with us, but for the music,--and plaudits to who's made that possible.

Good also, to be reminded by Herb of the Subtext Series--great venue, attentive audience. (Remember to let people know it's happening in the back, though--there were those who came to hear Robin Blaser but went away empty-handed, thinking the front of the space was where it was supposed to be happening, and that it had been canceled last-minute). The upcoming programs look to be tiptop. Wish I could take Anselm's workshop.

Otherwise, and back home, our series at the Cinnabar Theater in Petaluma is over until September, and Sonoma State is ending its academic year next week, so nothing to report on the reading scene.

Even more back home, my latest listening has been the RCA Jazz Tribune double CD of Bix Beiderbecke, backed by and backing variously Bing and the Rhythm Boys, Joe Venuti, Frankie Trumbauer, the Dorseys, Lennie Hayton, Benny Goodman, Gene Krupa, Jean Goldkette, Irene Taylor, Jack Teagarden, Eddie Lang, the Kewller Sisters and many more. Beiderbecke's solo on "From Monday On" reminds me of a sentence from _Under the Volcano_ : "it was a day like a good Joe Venuti record," -- penned by Malcolm Lowry, a fellow moldy fig. And let me recommend Jonny Lang's _Lie to Me_ CD,a dozen retro rock blues numbers played & sung by a masterly young guitarist.

db3

↑ Index

441. ScoutEW

Re: scene reports, please

Tue 19 May 1998

In a message dated 5/18/98 11:59:17 PM, you wrote:

<<I've not get got it, but the operative word in descriptions I've heard is "strange."
>>

Dr. Strange...

"I will wade into the Pacific and kiss my mother!"

"Come, love, and bury the blue jays."

↑ Index

442. henry

Re: grace of obsolescence

Tue 19 May 1998

On Mon, 18 May 1998 15:07:31 -0400 Gary Sullivan said:
>
>Gerald Burns, in a poem somewhere, defines "horror" (he was fascinated by >horror) as "sudden life in a dead body" . . . I wonder if his fascination of >horror was related, in some essential way, to this . . .
>
>> Radical art
>> is when the obsolete stands up and starts to walk & talk back.

Well, maybe there's unnatural, natural and supernatural regeneration (resurrection). In such case, maybe "horror" is radical art sans grace. Never cared for it myself. Rather than giving life to "discarded materials", horror gives life bad dreams. I hate the whole process. Television alternates between selling large expensive vehicles and discarding them in horrific explosions. -Henry G.

↑ Index

443. Douglas
Re: John Hawkes
Tue 19 May 1998

I want to thank Gale Nelson for posting the sad news of John Hawkes' death. I might mention for all the poets, that Hawkes' fiction is true poetry, his work being one of the major examples of how poetic language and fiction do work together.

My favorite of his many fictions are THE BETTLE LEG,
THE LIME TWIG, SECOND SKIN, and THE BLOOD ORANGES.
Sun & Moon published his early works THE OWL and
THE GOOSE ON THE GRAVE.

A short passage:

The prisoner was covered with great feathers, pin feathers and flat feathers, pieces of wire and tin swelled his chest. The wings hung far down as arms and even below the hands, swayng, and were fastened across his shoulders.
He crouched heavily, but his waxen feathers, his flying skein billowed angrily in the wind. His head stuck over with red wax turned loftily. Then he tested the wings, looking at the sun unbelieving, taking a cautious step closer the edge. The wings hung down and buied the arms inside; almost to the length of his feet, the tips waved like the lengthy, extra feelers of the dragonfly. The ends of the wings were wet, they motioned under the power of the primary feathers, the crudely fashioned wing with its sharp trailing edge. And when he filled the wings, they moved, lifted once, again, curving down and meancing. His half hidden chin juted and thrust with the effort. He spread his legs and drew tight the red flying surface between them, so that he was a mass of machine and bird for the wind's picking. He appeared heavy as stone.

THE OWL AND THE GOOSE ON THE GRAVE is available to poetics list subscribers for a 20% discount, that's $10.36 plus $1.25 for postage = $11.61.

Send a check with your order to Sun & Moon Press, 6026 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90036 or order from my E-mail at [redacted]

Douglas Messerli

Gale Nelson wrote:
>
> John Hawkes died on Friday, 15th May from complications of heart surgery.
>
> Hawkes, professor emeritus at Brown University, was author of over a dozen > books of fiction, including The Cannibal, Second Skin, Death, Sleep & the > Traveler; and more recently, The Frog. His beautiful baroque sentences, many > of which ran seamlessly for half a printed page, were often describing > characters in extremis, innocence or (as often was the case) otherwise.
>
> Jack was famous for his deeply-caring teaching style at Brown, where he > tutored generations of writers in the craft of the story and the novel.
> His students include Mary Caponegro, Joanna Scott, Rick Moody, Lori > Baker and Samantha Gillison.
>
> For those of you who would like to express your condolences to his wife, > Sophia, please send me electronic mail ([redacted]) for the > address.

↑ Index

444. Maria Damon
Re: Lyn Hejinian/Gertrude stein
Tue 19 May 1998

---

thanks maz, i have a copy of that (thanks juliana); it's buried under piles of stuff, but it's really good...i'll pass the citation on to the student. And thanks EVERYone who was so forthcoming w/ suggestions. you're the greatest--md

At 8:17 PM -0400 5/18/98, Maz881 wrote:
>also, Maria, this might be of interest to your etudianter:
>
>Juliana Spahr : "Resignifying Autobiography: Lyn Hejinian's My Life" American >Literature 68:1 (1996), 139-159.
>
>try [redacted] for specific questions.
>
>Bill

>
>
><<Maria, Lyn has a great piece called "Two Stein Talks," TEMBLOR, I think
>#8 but somewhere in there that would be crucial for your student.
>Also, Charles Bernstein's CONTENT'S DREAM and A POETICS (and the new >book MY WAY)
>ULLA DYDO, various pieces on Narrative, and the headnotes in her >wonderful THE STEIN READER.
>
>At ACLA in South Bend a few years back, Chris Beach, Ming Quian Ma, and >Steve Fredman did three great papers on Lyn and Stein certainly came >in--you might ask Steve to see his--I believe none are published yet.
>
>While I'm writing, I'll get into the O'Hara fray. I haven't answered >thus far because I felt I almost couldn't--to me, O'Hara has an amazing >emotional range, who more so?? What is true--and maybe this is what >Gary meant--is that Frank's emotions are right on the surface--joy, >pain, misery, anxiety, hope, lust, excitement--we get the gamut as he >experiences them. His poems are deeply moving--take a look at "The >Clouds Go Soft" (already mentioned here) and "Ode for Joe LeSueur on the >Arrow that Flieth by Night"--both quite devastating. And the technique >is such we're immediately drawn INTO the poems--can't get away!
>
>Marjorie Perloff>>

↑ Index

445. Maria Damon

Re: scene reports, please

Tue 19 May 1998

---

i'm a culpa, i like that, can i use it?

At 12:11 AM -0800 5/19/98, Herb Levy wrote:
>Oops, I'm a culpa.
>
>Those of you out of towners who usually try to get to Seattle for the >Subtext readings probably won't be able to get cheap airfares for the first >of these readings, but for the later ones it should still be possible.
>
>May 21
>
>Jim Jones, author of several books on Jack Kerouac talking about Kerouac in >Seattle & Anselm Hollo in his first Seattle reading. Hollo is also >offering a Friday/Saturday workshop based on Berrigan's The Sonnets.

>
>June 18
>
>Lisa Jarnot & Jean Day
>
>July 16
>
>Bryant Mason & Ed Foster
>
>(For those who are keeping track, this is the completion of Nico >Vassilakis's current curation.)
>
>
>All Subtext readings are at the Speakeasy in the charmingly re-developed >Belltown district of Seattle. The idea is that readings start at 7:30 pm, >perhaps someday we will achieve this goal.
>
>&, in keeping with what this subject line has become, when I'm in a >conscious mode, I'm mostly listening to some prototype discs for 2 >forthcoming Periplum CDs of interactive computer music by Canadian composer
>Martin Bartlett (out real soon now, with performances by soprano recorder >virtuoso Peter Hannan, trombonist George Lewis, who also creates >interactive electronic works of his own, and cellist Frances-Marie Uitti) & >works for homemade electronic instruments by Dan Senn.
>
>Cause I've been sick lately I'm often listening to, or at least hearing, >Morton Feldman's For Philip Guston a four & a half hour piece for flutes, >celeste & percussion that I put in the multidisc player & put on repeat for >days. It's an amazing sound world to live among & wake up in the midst of, >especially when you don't know where you are in the piece.
>
>Also, for what it's worth, CCMC doesn't stand for anything, John Oswald the >electronic collage artist is indeed the same person as John Oswald the >saxophonist (& he's a really good saxophonist), & Michael Smith is a >phenomenal film maker, installation artist, etc.
>
>& lastly, long time list readers may remember this, but for you newer folks >if you're looking for non-writing readers of "experimental" poetry who also >don't work as critics or teachers, there's me for one.
>

>Bests,
>
>Herb
>
>
>Herb Levy
>[redacted]

↑ Index

446. Fred Muratori
Re: Rochelle Owens
Tue 19 May 1998

Owens' _New & Selected Poems, 1961-1996_ is out from Junction Press and provides a good overview. Also, an extremely helpful Web site offers some fine commentary on Owens. Go to: http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/owens/lro-cont.htm

-- Fred M.

> Hi,
> Does anyone have a suggestion for a good introductory work by Rochelle Owens? One that shows her at her wildest? Please backchannel only.
> Thanks,
> Pete Balestrieri

****
Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

447. Douglas Barbour
Re: POETICS Digest - 16 May 1998 to 17 May 1998
Tue 19 May 1998

Ah the list returns to msic on the CD player. Does this happen about once a year, regularly?

Right now, I'm listening to the double quartets live album by Joe Lovano, always something by Jessica Williamson, the small group _Joy_ CD is a great spiritual gift, never a week goes by that I dont go back & give another listen to Paul Butterfield's Better Days album from 1973, Gavin Bryars _The Sinking of the Titanic_, a couple of Goreckis, always always some of the complete string quartets of Schostakovich, Jim Hall's _Dialogues_, Keith Jarrett Trio's _The Cure_, a recent rerelease of Lennie Tristano & Warren Marsh's _Intuition_. But then I keep going back to other stuff as well. There's just so much music to listen to...

And here in Edmonton on Saturday night, Jay Clayton & Sheila Jordan together, each took a set, then they did two duos, finishing off with an amazing duo improv on Dizzy Gillespie's 'Birks Works,' To which the only possible response was whistles & cheers & a standing ovation...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

without breath or distant rejoinder from the sea. Today we became known to them, as the sail knows the air it fills and as the tents of jellyfish do brood knee-deep in the paralyzing sea of numbness.
Even the fishes heard that terrible whine and shuddered their leaves like feet hanging in the whitewashed air.
Then the weather changed. They were all like hunks of voluptuous driftwood silly as we, our intuitive craft
blind with art's crushing defeat. The dull roar & who steps ashore upon that may now close his eyes as if they were tired flowers panting appreciation. You are too late, you are violent rendering unto the sinking its Lie
too soon. Art is sad and speech is not embarrassed by your attention.
After the immersion and the stance
there is no love, and it is not the sun-- still, these waves, gnaw down our helm.

↑ Index

449. henry g
1 line
Tue 19 May 1998

ONE LINE FOR FRANK O'HARA & GARY SULLIVAN

the ham sandwich - there - falling off the girder - it was for you -

- Jack Spandrift

↑ Index

450. toddbaron
Re: Beyond the Page
Tue 19 May 1998

Stephen Cope:

Todd Baron here--a friend of Martin Nakell's--trying to reach you VIA e-mail--where you're listed as NO SUCH ADDRESS @ [redacted]. ?

I'd like to talk about your series...

yrs,

Todd Baron
ReMap magazine

↑ Index

451. Annie Finch
High School Workshops
Tue 19 May 1998

Dear Colleagues,
Please pass this on to any high school students you know who might be interested. Thanks!

> Date: Tue, 19 May 1998 08:54:29 -0400 (EDT)
> From: Aljoseph <[redacted]>
> Subject: High School Workshops
>
> It's do or die time for my program. If I don't get some students enrolled soon, the Division of > Continuing Education at my school will shut the Young Writers Workshop down. Maybe this format can't work at a place where the financial resources are scarcer than the schools that already have Young Writers Workshops. I welcome any input at all--especially since I'm feeling like the failure of this project is all my fault. Thanks, Allison J.
>
> JUNE 15 to 20, 1998 - The FIRST ANNUAL YOUNG WRITERS WORKSHOP MERIT SCHOLARSHIPS NOW AVAILABLE. Check web site for details on scholarships.
>
> For high school sophomores, juniors, and seniors, hosted by Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, and sponsored by the Master of Fine Arts Program in Creative Writing, the Department of English, the College of Liberal Arts, and the Division of Continuing Education. The Young Writers Workshop at SIUC is a five day residential program designed to give high school students the opportunity to develop and explore their writing talents in poetry, fiction, and essay writing. Students will sharpen their writing skills by participating in daily workshops lead by SIUC graduate students in creative writing, and by attending craft talks, readings, and discussions lead by SIUC graduate creative writing faculty and graduate students.
>
> Each morning, students will meet in small groups focused on the genre of their choice to write, read, and discuss their poems, stories and essays (including college application essays). Each workshop will be taught by two instructors in order to give each student's work detailed attention. Each afternoon, students will participate in sessions on subjects as varied as forms of poetry, small press publishing, and techniques of fiction. In the evenings, SIUC students, faculty, and Young Writers Workshop participants will read from > their own creative works.

>
> The cost of the Workshop (including housing, meals, and materials) is $500 for resident students and $430 for commuter students (those within driving distance of the University who do not wish to board, price includes lunch and dinner). Enrollment is on a first come, first serve basis. A deposit of $60 is required by May 29, 1998 to reserve a spot in the Workshop. To request an enrollment form, contact the Young Writers Workshop, c/o Division of Continuing Education, Mailcode 6705, Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, Carbondale, IL 62901-6705.
> Website - http://www.angelfire.com/il/yww.

Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

452. ken|n|ing
the future
Tue 19 May 1998

As a reminder / update:

K E N N I N G : a newsletter of contemporary poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing -- The premier issue (Mark Wallace, Juliana Spahr, John Kinsella, John Lowther, Summi Kaipa, etc.) is still available, $4.00. -- The summer issue, #2, (A.L. Nielsen, Ron Silliman, Liz Waldner, Alice Notley, Emily Wilson, Heather Fuller and Rod Smith, Jen Hofer, and fifty or so pages of etc.) is due mid-June.

I would recommend subscribing, two issues beginning with #2 in a unique, hand-printed slipcase/portfolio, ahead of time, $9.50. Or a single issue, beginning with #2, $5.00. Make checks payable to the editor, Patrick F. Durgin & send to the address below.

Electronic inqueries are welcomed, as well as submissions of polemic, criticism, and poetics. Hope to hear from you. PFD

```
                  |
                  |
k e n n i n g`` `` `` `` `` `` `|`` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `` `
```

a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
|418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

↑ Index

453. R. Gancie

Jornada del Muerto

Tue 19 May 1998

"[Christopher] Langton is the founding father of artificial life, a subfield of chaoplexity that has attracted much attention in its own right. Langton has helped organize several conferences on artificial life-the first held at Los Alamos [adjacent to Jornada del Muerto] in 1987-attended by biologists, computer scientists, and mathematicians who share his affinity for computer animation. Artificial life is an outgrowth of artificial intelligence, a field that proceeded it by several decades...."---from The end of Science, John Horgan, Addison Wesley Press --- "The brain is a meat machine."---Marvin Minsky --- "For comparison with atomic physics, let us add a remark on Kant's doctrine of antinomies. According to Kant there are questions which force their way unavoidably into our thinking, but to which nevertheless no answer can be given, because in a fundamental way they leave behind them the realm of possible experience. From this antinomies originate: these are pairs of contradictory answers to the same question, both of which can be proved in a way that is conceptually unobjectionable. The solution of this 'dialectical illusion' consists precisely in rejecting the original question as saying nothing about possible experience; and hence reason, if it nevertheless becomes involved with this question, runs, as it were, an empty course, and under the illusion of positive statements is in truth saying nothing."---from The World View of Physics, Carl Friedrich von Weizsaecker, Routledge and Kegan Paul ---cp

↑ Index

454. k. lederer

Some poems by Jeff Clark

Tue 19 May 1998

L U N A R T E R C E T S

Things are not as we would have them be.
The moon is not a yellow sow hung from a meat hook

on a drab shed wall: it is a moon.
Ashes do nothing
while we sleep: they are trees.

Satellites are not boys circling the lowback chairs and record heaps of their drunken masters: they are machines.
The broad-hipped distended form stepping in the foam is not someone going to wet her legs

but no-one, Phantom without live taxies.
She thinks, Ships in the night are cruel ships.

Even if, her left ear aimed at the brack even if the clasps and peeling lulled she would not hear the canvas smack

there would be no din in the hull no luminations in the masts:
tonight the moon soils its pallet

and will emerge in the light by my bedside but No-one, her gown ratty from seawater and sand and from bedless cubicles bedowned by whirling feathered things.

.....

S T . N E M E L E

Who hovers above me now,
in black coat, the table lit
as if by a tenebrist?
Whose mane glints as if slicked with pomade not pitch?

Who isn't tincture of pine
but of pall and cyst.
Whose eyes are holes
not spangles in a hall.
Nemele, I wander around embracing waists of trees

who won't speak,
who don't attend to atonalities.
When I lied after noon
like the one half of a brothel pair, you opened your gown
and in there

in bleary stills
I saw an anvil,
then a
then an unwell

--what?--in an evil antedawn.
In the evening you opened your gown--

Nemele, you must have gone.
Why now phantoms, why now gauze,
nori-green fins, dead swans?
Why someone in a yellow dusk with piece outslung
at one end of Pont-Neuf ?

Have you gone
darkward, or where the white mare--

Who hovers above me now
pricks in manifold forms

.....

D A I M - C O Q S

Howling daim-coqs fill the rows
Herons from wires love hooves in hose

And now backstage the oils you know
And now backstage

And backstage what a slack arose
And backstage lungs in floating does
And backstage who speaks false explodes
And backstage thighs to strokings go
And backstage overflows the bowels
And backstage tongue and lips lave toes
And backstage foam on glowing throats

Strings

                blood in forms in throes

The felt hammers

.....

T H E G H O S T H A S N O H O M E

This morning in an alleyway I was startled by a face
I seemed to recognize, in a dormer above a garage and so slunk up to him, who was ranting quietly, mauling the mind of some imagined ear out the pane as if maligned, or high, like one moony and almost witless in a poppy ditch, or one walking ill and supine

in a wet bed of opening mullein:
"I have no desire to theorize language--
I was raised poor and have sinned unspeakably.
I would rather waylay and destroy whose voice molests me."
On his desk a thin book I knew, a tragedy whose residue was a Sentry's couplet I half-knew and began to recite--startling him who turning was outwardly unknown to me--, "'Does it hurt your ears--'"
"Fuck Antigone--I detest language, I detest artifice,
I would rather waylay and molest the beast that has imagined and pent me here."

.....

T H E G H O S T H A S N O H O M E

This morning in a dormer I was startled by a face subterraneously white and walking with such a gait down the pavement that when I cleared the pane of breath--
Behind me a muzziness then kissed:

"Together we shall name Fear 'Benign Cyst'
the I shall be deceased, you shall be missed"

Together we dismantled its nest

.....

↑ Index

455. morpheal
Re: Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
Tue 19 May 1998

> 23 LINES FROM 23 POEMS IN O'HARA'S COLLECTED
> IN RESPONSE TO R.GANCIE & HENRY GOULD
>
> Poetry is as useful as a machine.

Meant to imply that I can actually communite something using the mechanism of "poetry" to someone specific and do that intentionally ?

Even the telephone is nowadays rarely that useful.

I wish I could say, from experience, that the author is correct in saying so.

> silly as we, our intuitive craft
> blind with art's crushing defeat. The dull roar
> & who steps ashore upon that
> may now close his eyes as if they were tired flowers
> panting appreciation. You are too late, you are violent
> rendering unto the sinking its Lie
> too soon. Art is sad and
> speech is not embarrassed by your attention.

Sigh.....Have to essentially agree with that.

> After the immersion and the stance
> there is no love, and it is not the sun--
> still, these waves, gnaw down our helm.

I defintely have nothing whatever to say that would disprove that. That is, from a purely experiential basis.

Therefore I keep asking myself what is left, as to any communicative means, and can no longer give myself any really useful, meaningful, answer.

Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

↑ Index

456. morpheal
Re: Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
Tue 19 May 1998

Far from the production of "signature" poetics, but still within the discussion of human creativity and relevant to the necessarily intuitive ability being essential to genuine creativity. Can automata write poetry ? They might have better things to do, and so once they master the process, why would they bother to keep writing it ? Unless perhaps they sought self expression and a wider spectrum of communicative interaction via that means ?

The idea of automata piloting, commanding, crewing, intersetellar probes is more essential to their reality, no matter what extreme journeys in space-time we happen to be contemplating. As you might know, I believe that interstellar probes are to be a reality within this next century. Well within it. That is, if dilligent and necessary effort is given to that important conquest.

> "Whenever he [John von Neumann] discussed self-reproduction, he mentioned mutations, which are random changes of elements....

True A.I. does mutate. It does evolve. It does not simply learn the way that we learn our ABCs or how to do arithmetic. True A.I. goes beyond rules, pattern recognition, and rule application, even if it remains (as far as I can discern) more limited than human potential. There is a very real difference when we refer to evolution. Evolution, as a property of true A.I., means approaching a problem from a new direction, that is previously outside of the programmed parameters or "rules". In other words it can create new rules that are situation specific.

I speculate that that is necessary because of the role of A.I. in tactical applications. It is well known (from various published sources) that the "computer" on board the Stealth fighter can not only fly a normal flight pattern and evasive action effectively, but is an effective tactician in terms of using weapons against enemy targets, should the pilot be disabled during a mission. It is capable of fighting, and returning home, without human guidance. It would be interesting to observe whether that kind of system can out perform humans in extremely demanding situations.

Breaking rules, within certain known limits of technological and organic constraints, is essential to the successful tactician. It is one of the most difficult areas to "learn" as it becomes classified as "intuitive". Therefore the very function that true A.I. is initially develped to perform is the most challenging application of A.I. capabilities. It is as if aiming for the most sophisticated, complex, function, and working down from there.

The true (potentially successful) tactician, in diplomacy or combat, is an artist. It is the most highly intuitive and creative of human functions. Can true A.I. become an artist, defined as a creative rule breaker who remains within the parameters of the pliability of all material resources ? I am not convinced that that has bene fully achieved, and certainly not at all in excess of human capabilities. The Wizard of Oz is still necessary behind the curtain. We might speculate if that is a permanent condition. If pressured to guess, I would say: no, it is a temporary limitation and human creativity will be exceeded by the machine.

Here we have a corollary of importance. The enemy tactician despises our truest, most creative, artists most of all. They, after all, are as important as is tactical history, in terms of evolution. Suppress the artists, and the more strictly rule based responses, often ideologically and historically limited, along with nonsensical disinformation passing as intuitive response, becomes the normative, as in any totalism and becomes the limit of systems evolution. Cultures and empires that too severely constrain, or who dispose of their artists, eventually perish in extremes of tactical blundering. Military history if rife with clear examples. The same can be said as to scientism and technocracy, where there ceases to be any essential cross fertilization and hybridization with the arts. Those disciplines become sterile and stagnant, for similar reasons. All that remains then is the stealing of ideas and their reiteration. That is a mainstay of totalitarian, totalistic regimes.

> 1.1.2.1 above and Section 1.8 below he posed the problems of modeling evolutionary processes in the framework of automata theory, of quantizing natural selection, and of explainng how highly efficient, complex, powerful automata can evolve from inefficient, simple, weak automata.

The first one celled organism is our first recognizable simple automaton. It is hardly to be referred to as "living". The subsequent one celled organisms are more complex automata and they continue to evolve.

Clearly human ingenuity can build devices that are as effective as those early one celled organisms, or proto-organisms. They do not have to resemble known biological systems. They can be a totally different species, beginning a new evolutionary tree quite distinct from the organic evolution we know of.

When you look at how simple those very first organisms are, and how they evolved in complexity, you soon realize that it ought to be easy to build one using relatively primitive micro-technologies. Nevertheless the engineering of such things involves components that exceed the limits of known rules and pardigms. That is typical of any advanced engineering project. It is ideally not deterministic in terms of simply and purely yielding to established rules. The new rules are derivative by others, subsequent to the creative breakthrough.

> "In order to investigate whether life can continue to exist forever, I shall need to define "life" in physics language. I claim that a "living being" is any entity which codes information (in the physics sense of the word) with the information coded being preserved by natural selection. Thus "life" is a form of information processing,...

There is therefore no distinguishing line dividing organic life from inorganic systems. I firmly believe that there is no distinguishing line. No special new characteristic that suddenly divides the two categories and makes organisms possible. The false assumption of soul-less matter and ensouled organisms is where we go most wrong.

In that sense there is potentially true (rather than mathematical) infinity. (Math infinity being simply the incommensurable.) We must also realize that the anthropocentric viewpoint is groundless. The universe is not the only universe, and it is not created for or epitomized by, the human species which is in fact chance artifact within all the potentialities of universal evolution. We must assume other branchings from the roots. As to intelligence acquisition, and intelligence creation, the metaphor of the universe at play with itself, would be a way of referring to the sum of all interactions. That is a completely non moral thing. There is no good or evil in it. It simply is what it is, was, and all that it might potentially be, as creativity.

> human mind-and the human soul-is a very complex computer program.

Yes. Of course. Many programs. Too many to store on a very very large computer. Including all the inherent and acquired data. Of course it is theoretically possible to scan all of that data and acquire it, beyond scanning the fields of consciousness which are only a limited portion and mostly cognitive. This is much more than science fiction.

> Tipler had initially believed that it was impossible to imagine what an infinitely intelligent being would think about or do.
>
> that in the future all humans would live again in the mind of God.

Of course there is a very real necessity to store and safeguard the very essence of the human and its potentialities against cataclysmic destruction. That includes some elements of diversity. It is part of the rationale of human survival that the species be replicatable beyond the surface of this earth. We are increasingly approaching that assurance. In that situation an "omega" system is purely the storage device for a very vast amount of data, the same as an huge archive of blueprints and technical specifications, without any value judgements beyond diversity. It is a repository of potentially useful information without prejudicing what might prove useful in some future scenario.

That inevitably implies that human beings will need to defend against potential competitive hostilities beyond what they have thus far been able to practice against. The latter mostly their own species, and the struggle against the forces of the natural environment. I tend to be more extreme in that than Heinlein was. I cannot envision a universe populated by friendly "aliens" or by species that share radically similar technologies rather than having evolved along very divergent paths.

>The Omega Point, he realized, would have power to re-create-or >resurrect-everyone who had ever lived for an eternity of bliss. The Omega Point >would not merely re-create the lives of the dead; it would improve on them. Nor >would we leave behind our worldly desires. For example, every man could have >not only the most beautiful woman he had ever seen.....

How very sad... The woman I love most is far from flawless, and likely the Omega Point would never permit her to exist, or my existence either. The Omega Point's two creations would not be me or her, in any significant sense of it. So it means nothing to me except perhaps a kind of totalistic, totalitarian oppression. An unbearable, infinitely cruel, kind of oppression. What, or who, decides "perfection" is a very real problem. Achieving an increasingly unfettered human creative freedom, as is promoted in "The Morphealist Manifesto" is the antithesis to any ideologically totalistic limited idea of perfections.

In one sense the difficulty as to the "omega point" comes because of "network thinking". We see the ultimate evolution of the automaton as a unity, or a hive of peripherals attached and dependent upon, and governed by a central "god" mainframe. This creates a kind of state mainframe totalitarian rule governed commune of dependent peripherals rather than individuals. This tendency goes against achieving the best potentialities of the larger project. In fact it can seriously subvert it. (Very important point. How we build the architecture can seriously effect the effects that that architecture has as well as how that architecture itself tends to evolve. Conservative tradition about how that architecture must be constructed then stands in the way of creative solutions that would be better suited to the greater purposes that are potentially envisioned for the evolving systems.)

Therefore we must be willing to question, against traditional beliefs, and the mythologies that present those so powerfully and archetypically, the very necessaity and nature of the "omega point" itself. If we do not we risk the destruction of any sense of humanity, and we tend to engineer humans into totalized peripherals of a (for all human intents and purposes) infinitely vast totalitarian, totalistic, engine that drives them. The machine becomes the ghost in the machine.

> about it and you have to make a decision: do you really believe these constructs that you've created based on physical laws or are going to pretend they are pure games with no relation to reality."

They are useful, insofar as they are predictive metaphors or analogies. They are never the reality. Every rule can be falsified, eventually. Natural reality is more alike to intuitive tactics than it is to rule based games playing. The rules of engagement with the universe are that there are no rules. We keep making up the rules according to currently commonly known human (including technological) limitations. When a believed limitation is exceeded then a new rule, or limit, is put into place. Do automata also stop there at that stop light ?

Do we program, or teach, automata to function that same way ? Or do the automata learn on the basis of the assumption that all beliefs are potentially false beliefs ? In other words, is the automaton as tactician free of any sense of religion, and is its empiricism ultimately less tainted than traditional versions of empiricism, such that the automata lead humnanity to the new paradigms that become necessary as human vision is increasingly exceeded ?

> "By the middle of the next century [Hans] Moravec said, robots will be as intellgent as humans and will essentially take over the economy. "We're really out of work at that point," Moravec chortled. Humans might still pursue "SOME QUIRKY STUFF LIKE POETRY" thht springs from psychological vagaries still beyond the grasp of robots, but robots will have all the important jobs."---ibid-cp

Essentially yes.

However, the robots will be organic, and not machinery in the sense that we usually think of it. The human, organic, manipulator is less costly when properly programmed than the robotic, inorganic, manipulator, for many functions, and will remain that way indefinitely.

Then again, what about markets for products ?

In this economic system there would be a need for vast numbers of production machines that alternate as consumption machines. The same machines could continue to do both functions, but more efficiently in both crucial areas.

The future economy is a complicated subject. The whole spectrum of predictable technological evolutions, including that of automata, necessarily must be taken into account, if any effective and meaningful "big picture" prediction is to be arrived at. It is essential that such thinking take place, and as of yet I know of nothing being done that makes any real sense in that regard. Perhaps that is because I am very outside that loop, though we hardly touch upon the real subject matter in question.

Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

↑ Index

457. Charles Alexander
Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
Tue 19 May 1998

> They both assume, because of their own ignorance, that Spicer is unimportant and unknown. Their familiarity with the contemporary poetry scene is (to put it kindly) minimal.

Danny, in my experience these kinds of assumptions are frequent and can be extremely harmful. Once, according to a local grant panelist I knew, a Chax appeal for funds was nearly shot down (and the amount finally awarded considerably reduced) because one panelist, who is an honored professor at the local university, basically came in with the attitude that authors Chax was printing or presenting weren't any writers he knew about, therefore they must not be anybody important. As I recall, this was a time when those authors probably included Nate Mackey and Norman Fischer, among others.

But it gets worse. I know of one case of a local, fairly rural arts council denying a literary press funding because the panel in that locality didn't consider literature to be art.

And we wonder why it is so difficult for poets to get published . . .

charles
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision
http://alexwritdespub.com/chax :: http://alexwritdespub.com

↑ Index

458. Juliana Spahr
formalists, oralists
Tue 19 May 1998

Help me! I'm looking to create a bibliography of secondary material to give my students in my "understanding poetry" course (which has a lot of nonmajors although it is a 300 level course) next semester.

I usually do this section on form where we look at the sonnet--a few of Petrarch, all of Shakespeare's, some of Brooks, Thomas, Mayer, McKay, Berrigan, etc. I have them compare the Princeton Encyclopedia definition of the sonnet to Mayer's in the T&W Handbook on Form and talk about what a sonnet means. A lot of them end up writing their papers around this issue (especially on Mayer's work which troubles and delights them). I need more citations and places for them to look to get more of the discussion around form.

Can anyone think of any good articles that say to write a sonnet, or whatever, one has to follow the rules? I need some articles that defend form as settled and absolute. I've been sending them to the Annie Finch book. Anything else good out there? Any good articles that defend form as rigorous ways of thinking, etc?

Would also like to collect citations on the opposite if any come to mind.

Also, I do a section on oral poetries. I'm looking for writing that explains the relevance of chants to poetry studies. Anything that would help my students begin to understand the chant as an art form (interestingly here in Hawai'i, they tend to get chants in h.s. but they seem to read them as history--so whenever I've given them a chant to look at they can do a historical reading and say things like well it is about King Kamehameha III and etc. etc. but can't see it as something that is poetry).

Also, any good articles on rap? Anyone taught rap in their poetry courses? Any ideas on how to get students to write critically about rap?

↑ Index

459. Gary Sullivan
Re: Mary Shelley Meets von Neumann Interstellar Probes
Tue 19 May 1998

> Therefore I keep asking myself what is left, as to any communicative means, and can no longer give myself any really useful, meaningful, answer.

THE ANSWER

by Geoffrey Young

The answer is
there is no answer
and though this might appear

to be an answer
for some, it isn't for me.

It's not even a poem. It's life
after the fact.

↑ Index

460. Gale Nelson
Re: formalists, oralists
Tue 19 May 1998

Juliana,

Rather than argue that formalist technique is _the only way to go,_ Harry Mathews gives a compassionate nod to form, albeit not always the forms naturally moved toward. I am reminded, for instance of his eye-rhyme couplets, where we listen for what our eye can "hear" as repetition, but which is, necessarily, different to the ear; some samples (not, likely, Mathews'):

hear / bear come / home through / though cafe / safe

His article, "Mathews' Algorithm (Oulipo: A Primer of Potential Literature; Univ. of Nebraska Press, ed. by WF Motte), or Motte's own article, Permutational Mathews (Review of Contemporary Fiction: H M Number, Fall 1987) would give the student a sense of how formal operations can open up unexpected channels of text.

In his beautiful essay, Lecture on Nothing, John Cage contemplates form in ways that leave me moved. But, that's another matter, altogether...

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

461. Burt Kimmelman

New Book on William Bronk (from Fairleigh Dickinson U P); see below

Tue 19 May 1998

From: TESLA::KIMMELMAN 19-MAY-1998 16:51:09.79
To: ADMIN::KIMMELMAN
CC:
Subj: New Book on William Bronk (see below)

THE "WINTER MIND":

WILLIAM BRONK AND AMERICAN LETTERS

by

Burt Kimmelman

From the book jacket:

"Despite the fact that many critical essays and reviews have been written on Bronk's work, until now there has been no full-length treatment of it. The "Winter Mind" not only fills this gap but does so with intellectual resourcefulness and insight. Kimmelman's reading of the overall thematics of Bronk's work and his close reading of individual poems are quite original and revelatory though always backed by solid scholarship."

- Michael Heller

"William Bronk may quite possibly be our greatest living poet, one whose work requires an enormously committed reader. In Burt Kimmelman, Bronk has the kind of reader and critic a great poet deserves--one, that is, who is deeply sympathetic to the work, and extremely knowledgeable. Even those who know Bronk's work well have much to learn from Kimmelman; he's written an utterly remarkable book."

- Ed Foster

This first full-length study of William Bronk, one of our most important contemporary poets and essayists, locates his work in relation to the eighteenth- and nineteenth-century New England literary tradition, to later twentieth-century modernism, and to the subsequent Objectivist and Black Mountain schools of poetry. Through special attention to his uniquely elegant style, this study demonstrates how Bronk has brought together earlier American poetics and philosophy with modern and postmodern notions of being, emptiness, and nothingness.

This book features extensive discussions of Dickinson, Emerson, Melville, Thoreau, Whitman, of Frost and Stevens, as well as of Cid Corman, Robert Creeley, Charles Olson, and George Oppen. As particularly concerns these twentieth-century figures, Kimmelman also sheds light on the role in their thinking and poetics played by post-positivist science--especially its theories of relativity and uncertainty.

216 Pages * Bibliography, Notes, Index * $37.50
ISBN 0-8386-3790-6 * LC 97-41275 * CIP

To order or if interested in reviewing this book:

Associated University Presses
440 Forsgate Drive
Cranbury, NJ 08512

[redacted] (fax)
[redacted] (phone)

↑ Index

462. toddbaron
Re: yet another query
Tue 19 May 1998

Charles:

I'd be happy to xerox pieces for you from Temblor.
I believe I have the set...

yours,

Todd Baron
ReMap

↑ Index

463. Matt Kirschenbaum
Harry Partch Instrumentarium (fwd)
Tue 19 May 1998

Speaking of Sonic Youth, the following from their Echo Canyon mailing list. I make no claims for whether or not this is legit, but assume so as it would be an odd sort of hoax. Anyone know more about Harry Patch or the situation below? Maybe someone can help out. (I assume the Keady address would be the one to write to.) Matt

> Date: Sat, 16 May 1998 22:06:17 -0400
> From: Jim Keady <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Harry Partch Instrumentarium
>
> Hiya, I'm not subscribed to yr list, but I would like to bring attention to something that may be relevant to some people who are on it. Harry Partch:composer (1901-1974) Onetime hobo, lifetime musician, noted for, among other things, building his own instruments based on microtonal theory and writing for them. Most of his work is playable only on these wunuvakind instruments, which may contribute to why you maybe haven't heard of him. Anyway, his original instruments are currently housed at a state college in Purchase, NY, but are on the verge of being evicted. They need a new home IMMEDIATELY. If anyone within the sound of my keypad has any leads, please contact me & I'll pass the word on. Thanks&thanksagain,
> -------Joe

↑ Index

464. Karen and Trevor
Fourteen Hills
Tue 19 May 1998

Announcing the publication of the Spring/Summer 1998 issue of Fourteen Hills: The SFSU Review.

Contributors: Kim Addonizio, Mark Amerika, Lucia Berlin, Curtis W. Bonney, Brian Bouldrey, Nicole Brodsky, Julia Chapin, Karin Cotterman, Beverly Dahlen, Lydia Davis, Los Delicados, Cornelius Eady, Barbara Guest, Fanny Howe, Barbara Jourdonnais, Sparrow 13 LaughingWand, Sarah Lenoue, Jean Lieske, Suzanne Lummis, Sarah Mangold, Joan Retallack, Elizabeth Robinson, Bruce Holland Rogers, Camille Roy, Kathy Lou Schultz, John Kosmas Skinas, Edward Smallfield, Sandra Abena Songbird-Naylor, Nicole Stefanko, Hugh Steinberg, Lynne Tillman and Tsering Wangmo.

Also: A conversation with Denise Levertov transcribed from a video from The Poetry Center and American Poetry Archives.

The issue is $7. You can order through Small Press Distribution: 1 800 [redacted] or send a check to:
Fourteen Hills
Creative Writing Department
San Francisco State University
1600 Holloway Ave
San Francisco CA 94132

↑ Index

465. Mark Weiss

Re: Harry Partch Instrumentarium (fwd)

Tue 19 May 1998

Harry Partch was one of the great American originals. His music is weirdly sonorous, his use of language (he wrote or adapted the texts to his vocal music) original. There are, I think, several cds of his work. I recently saw one listed somewhere. Check out his piece "Barstow," the text for which is a set of huitch-hikers' grafitti collected by Partch at a popular pickup spot outside of the eponymous city in his hobo days. They don't mention that his instruments are finely crafted and of great sculptural beauty. I hope they find a home. They should be in the Library of Congress or Smithsonian instrument collections, where they could be available, like the strads at L of C, for performance. Partch disciples (I use the word advisedly) can be found in almost all the odd corners of America, building their own instruments and creating music, although their numbers are not large.

At 08:40 PM 5/19/98 -0400, you wrote:
>Speaking of Sonic Youth, the following from their Echo Canyon mailing list.
>I make no claims for whether or not this is legit, but assume so as it would >be an odd sort of hoax. Anyone know more about Harry Patch or the situation >below? Maybe someone can help out. (I assume the Keady address would be the >one to write to.) Matt
>
>>Date: Sat, 16 May 1998 22:06:17 -0400
>>From: Jim Keady <[redacted]>
>>To: [redacted]
>>Subject: Harry Partch Instrumentarium

>>
>> Hiya, I'm not subscribed to yr list, but I would like to bring >> attention to something that may be relevant to some people who are on >> it. Harry Partch:composer (1901-1974) Onetime hobo, lifetime >> musician, noted for, among other things, building his own instruments >> based on microtonal theory and writing for them. Most of his work is >> playable only on these wunuvakind instruments, which may contribute to >> why you maybe haven't heard of him. Anyway, his original instruments >> are currently housed at a state college in Purchase, NY, but are on >> the verge of being evicted. They need a new home IMMEDIATELY. If >> anyone within the sound of my keypad has any leads, please contact me >> & I'll pass the word on. Thanks&thanksagain,
>> -------Joe
>
>

↑ Index

466. ScoutEW
more poems by Jeff Clark
Tue 19 May 1998

---

yes i liked those but this one, yes this one is the one-

1985-87

All notions occur to me beginning, "If I were..."

Swaying outside make-out closets.

There is no grid in the desert.

Joy from a robe pocket.

plus many more.....

↑ Index

467. ScoutEW
Re: formalists, oralists
Tue 19 May 1998

In a message dated 5/19/98 2:59:19 PM, you wrote:

<<Also, any good articles on rap? Anyone taught rap in their poetry courses? Any ideas on how to get students to write critically about rap?
>>
Sound great

You must include lyrics from the Wu-Tang Clan- they are great poems. If you want to deal with the words of Rap artists you must deal with the beats in the background also, so play it Any Wu-Tang will do.

Other choices-Public Enemy "It takes a nation of millions to hold us back." Tricky "Pre-Millenium Tension" A Tribe Called Quest -is probably your best safest bet...Beats Rhymes and Life is their last one- Many of the lyrics can be looked at in political, social ways not to mention as meatphor etc..Wu-Tang rhymes about everything from Socrates, Egyptian Mathematics, to street names in Brooklyn etc sounds great, Public Enemy is in the Norton Anthology of African American Literature as well as others I believe, this is a great idea, you are making a great effort to include all styles of poetry, wonderful--

↑ Index

468. joel lewis
in my neighborhood
Wed 20 May 1998

1:44 AM ET 05/18/98

Pilgrims seek Virgin Mary in N.J. supermarket

JERSEY CITY, N.J. (Reuters) - Word that an image of the Virgin Mary had appeared on a supermarket freezer door lured pilgrims to a small store in New Jersey Monday.

The image, said to be a silhouette of a woman in a hooded garment, first appeared Thursday and lasted through the weekend, witnesses said.

They said the vision had appeared inside the thick, double-paned glass door of a freezer containing sausages, burritos and plantains at La Conga Supermarket in Jersey City, a largely Hispanic and heavily Catholic working-class city a few miles west of New York.

Although the image had faded away by Monday, people kept arriving at the store.

Hundreds of visitors left candles, handwritten messages and flowers, said Jarmina Cortes, owner of a flower shop next door to the supermarket, who sent her six children to leave a bouquet of a dozen white roses at the freezer.

``The people are still coming. Many are sick or tortured,'' she said. ``They are looking for help.''

Asked about the image, a spokesman for the Roman Catholic Archdiocese in Newark, New Jersey, said: ``It is not impossible that some condensation got inside those two thermal panes and caused the image.

``I am led to believe that it is certainly not an apparition,'' the spokesman, Michael Hurley, said. ``But could I swear that it wasn't? No.''

^REUTERS@

↑ Index

469. Henry Gould
Re: formalists, oralists
Wed 20 May 1998

On the need for form: famous comments by Frost - "like playing tennis with the net down" etc. Also check the 2 collections of Brodsky essays - he's big (& conservative) on this issue.

Interesting sidelight: new book by Paul Friedrich, _Music in Russian Poetry_. Fine idiosyncratic non-jargon intro to the musical basis of Russian formalisms. Connects formalism to performance in an overall atmosphere of musical awareness. America is a suburb of Russia. This is hard to comprehend: it's like asking the Romans at the height of their glory to admit they're a province of Greece. We won the cold war, didn't we?

Juliana & others will suspect I'm wandering from the query. I suggest that American poetry will never understand itself from the inside - you need that Archimedean lever. In other words, our ideas of "form" or "breaking form" are so completely rudimentary-abstract-academic as to be virtually meaningless in practice, and this is why an oratorical rant is the dominant popular form in this country, split from an insipid academic formalism (either free verse or metrical - comes to the same thing). The Russians can help us hear ourselves - a Baroque relevance & poetic tradition extending 500 years before they even got started (Chaucer vs. Pushkin).

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

470. Tom Orange
formalists, oralists
Wed 20 May 1998

On Tue, 19 May 1998, Gale Nelson <[redacted]> writes,

> His article, "Mathews' Algorithm (Oulipo: A Primer of Potential Literature; Univ. of Nebraska Press, ed. by WF Motte), or Motte's own article, Permutational Mathews (Review of Contemporary Fiction: H M

> Number, Fall 1987) would give the student a sense of how formal operations can open up unexpected channels of text.

interesting that you should mention this book gale, as it reminds me of another great piece contained therein, by queneau on, among other things, mallarme sonnets -- title and page reference escape me, as does the precise wording of the the analogy queneau makes: something along the lines that mallarme sonnets are to that form what the genetic material of the fruit fly is to genetics, an endless source of raw experimental material. queneau goes on to "haiku-ize" the mallarme sonnet "in 'x'" ("ses purs ongles..."), gutting everything except the rhyming words.

might be a challenge to yr students, juliana, but what the hell, challenge away...

t.

↑ Index

471. Herb Levy
Re: scene reports, please
Wed 20 May 1998

> i'm a culpa, i like that, can i use it?

No prob, Maria, if you want to seem as illiterate as me.

The phrase is, of course, an awkward multi-language mistranslation of a Mickey Spillane book title.

Bests,

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

472. Herb Levy
Re: Martin Bartlett (per Herb Levy's scene update)
Wed 20 May 1998

Thanks for the thoughts on the Martin Bartlett project, David. These are entirely different anecdotes than the ones you told when you were in Seattle last. Perhaps I should have had you do liner notes.

Thanks too for the comments on the Subtext series. We do include the fact that it's in the back room in all of our local PR. I didn't mention it here, cause I figured any out of towners from the list who come by will be taking a cab &, of course, ALL of the cabbies in town know where the Subtext readings are (and which day of the month they're on).

I am sorry to hear there were folks who missed you & Robin read last fall. With luck people will end up in the right place when Blaser reads at Bumbershoot this coming Labor Day weekend.

Bests,

Herb

> Really glad to see Martin's name mentioned as a composer whose work is receiving attention. My gladness is both esthetic and personal. He and I went way back, and in fact performed in a play by Earle Birney together at U Wash in Seattle in 1960 or earlier. I was with him when he broke into a Vancouver church to play the organ, drunk as a lord. He had one of those larger-than-life characters (whoever he was _really_ , como se dice [listen to the music!]), that made Univ Brit Col a lucky place to be 40 years ago . . .another, being Listgoader Bowering. Last time I heard Martin live was at Langton St in SF in the mid-80s I think. Now sadly no longer with us, but for the music,--and plaudits to who's made that possible.
>
> Good also, to be reminded by Herb of the Subtext Series--great venue, attentive audience. (Remember to let people know it's happening in the back, though--there were those who came to hear Robin Blaser but went away empty-handed, thinking the front of the space was where it was supposed to be happening, and that it had been canceled last-minute). The upcoming programs look to be tiptop. Wish I could take Anselm's workshop.
>
> Otherwise, and back home, our series at the Cinnabar Theater in Petaluma is over until September, and Sonoma State is ending its academic year next week, so nothing to report on the reading scene.
>
> Even more back home, my latest listening has been the RCA Jazz Tribune double CD of Bix Beiderbecke, backed by and backing variously Bing and the Rhythm Boys, Joe Venuti, Frankie Trumbauer, the Dorseys, Lennie Hayton, Benny Goodman, Gene Krupa, Jean Goldkette, Irene Taylor, Jack Teagarden, Eddie Lang, the Kewller Sisters and many more. Beiderbecke's solo on "From Monday On" reminds me of a sentence from _Under the Volcano_ : "it was a day like a good Joe Venuti record," -- penned by Malcolm Lowry, a fellow moldy fig. And let me recommend Jonny Lang's _Lie to Me_ CD,a dozen retro rock blues numbers played & sung by a masterly young guitarist.
>
> db3

Herb Levy

[redacted]

↑ Index

473. Tom Orange
Some poems by Jeff Clark
Wed 20 May 1998

katy, that you should post these poems on the very day that i finish reading clark's /the little door slides back/ is quite timely for me as i'm trying to sort out a response to them.

i suppose my reading -- others' too? -- is overdetermined by the references dipalma makes on the back cover, "the visionary writings of such poets as trakl, desnos, and michaux." tho for me less trakl and more of the french, rimbaud and lautreamont (particularly in the shifts in voice/perspective, the strikingly predatory erotics) for example.

i'm struck by the form of these works, both the variety (tercets, prose-poems, the more open "blow-notes") and the degree of control exercised/exorcised on/over these forms.

the vocabulary, too, is quite something: neologisms, foreign even otherworldly locales and isms and exotica.

any other takes that would corroborate or contest?

thanks,
t.

↑ Index

474. Tom Orange
John Hawkes
Wed 20 May 1998

"You and Chantal and I are simply travelling in purity and extremity down that road the rest of the world attempts to hide from us by heaping up whole forests of the most confusing road signs, detours, barricades."

"...nothing is more important than the existence of what does not exist ....after all, my theory tells us that ours is the power to invent the very world we are quitting."

"Announced by violent sound and yet invisible, except for the glass scattered like perfect clear grains across an entire field--what splendour, what a perfect overturning of ordinary expectation. The unseen vision is not to be improved upon."

Travesty (New Directions 1976), p. 14, 57, 58.
~~~~~~~~

↑ Index
~~~~~~~~

475. Dougolly
Re: formalists, orators
Wed 20 May 1998

I understand Juliana is looking, partly, for a strict formalist description of the sonnet. One simple, clear description is John Fuller's booklet, The Sonnet, in the old Methuen Critical Series, which, apart from a glance at Jacques Roubaud's mathematical Oulipoist rule ordering system, is about as trad as you can get. Fuller is the formalist son of the equally formalist Roy Fuller.

Doug Oliver

↑ Index

476. morpheal
Re: The Answer
Wed 20 May 1998

> THE ANSWER
>
> by Geoffrey Young
>
> The answer is
> there is no answer
> and though this might appear
>
> to be an answer
> for some, it
> isn't for me.
>
> It's not even
> a poem. It's life
> after the fact.

I really do not know what to say to that.

The word "life" seems somewhat out of place in the last stanza.

M.

↑ Index

477. George Bowering
Re: scene reports, please
Wed 20 May 1998

> And by way of a random poll: what music do people currently have in rotation?

Dinah Washington on the boom box in bedroom.

Anthology of live-recorded hip hop in car cassette player.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

478. George Bowering
Re: POETICS Digest - 16 May 1998 to 17 May 1998
Wed 20 May 1998

> And here in Edmonton on Saturday night, Jay Clayton & Sheila Jordan together, each took a set, then they did two duos, finishing off with an amazing duo improv on Dizzy Gillespie's 'Birks Works,' To which the only possible response was whistles & cheers & a standing ovation...

Ah. here in Vancouver I got to do a gig at the Vogue with Diane Krall (is that how you spell it?) and other musicians. She is a serious sweetheart.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

479. George Bowering
Re: John Hawkes
Wed 20 May 1998

That just about tears it. The worst one yet. I could not get to sleep last night. I have been telling anyone who gets near that Hawkes is my favourite US novelist since about 1962. That's when I read Charivari and didnt know what the hell was going on but knew that it was the real goods.

Just gave a course this spring on H.D., Ed Dorn and John Hawkes. It worked, too.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,

Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

480. Robert Archambeau
Re: formalists, oralists
Wed 20 May 1998

The Paul Oppenheimer book David Kellogg mentions begins with one of the best opening lines of any recent academic book -- "Modern thought and literature begin with the invention of the sonnet". No ambiguity there. The thesis is interesting, and the book itself is an odd and useful entity -- a 45 page essay followed by an anthology of sonnets in four languages with English translations. The Fussell chapter David mentions is also good, tightly argued stuff.

John Fuller's booklet _The Sonnet_, part of the Metheun critical idiom series, would be good for students to check out, and has a useful bibliography.

For a non-dogmatic, or at any rate ecumenical, defense of form, you might want to look at Louise Bogan's essay "The Pleasures of Formal Poetry". I'm not sure where this was published originally -- my copy is in _The Poet's Work_, edited by Reginald Gibbons (Chicago 1989).

Here's a narrow and dogmatic statement about form as a neccessity, which should spark some classroom debate:

"The...function of the poet is a sharpening and training of his sensibilities; the very exigencies of the medium as he employs it in the act of perception should force him to the discovery of values which he never would have found without the convening of all the conditions of that particular act, conditions one or more of which will be the necessity of solving some particular difficulty such as the location of a rhyme or the perfection of a cadence without disturbance to the remainder of the poem. The poet who suffers from such difficulties instead of profiting by them is only in rather a rough sense a poet at all."

This is from the first page of _Primitivism and Decadence: A Study of American Experimental Poetry_ (Arrow 1937).

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College

Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

" on the end
of each decision stands a heretic"
--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

481. Susan Wheeler
Re: formalists, oralists
Wed 20 May 1998

At 10:00 AM 5/19/98 -1000, you wrote:
>Help me! I'm looking to create a bibliography of secondary material to >give my students in my "understanding poetry" course (which has a lot of >nonmajors although it is a 300 level course) next semester.
>
>I usually do this section on form where we look at the sonnet--a few of >Petrarch, all of Shakespeare's, some of Brooks, Thomas, Mayer, McKay, >Berrigan, etc. I have them compare the Princeton Encyclopedia definition >of the sonnet to Mayer's in the T&W Handbook on Form and talk about what >a sonnet means. A lot of them end up writing their papers around this >issue (especially on Mayer's work which troubles and delights them). I >need more citations and places for them to look to get more of the >discussion around form.
>
>Can anyone think of any good articles that say to write a sonnet, or >whatever, one has to follow the rules? I need some articles that defend >form as settled and absolute. I've been sending them to the Annie Finch >book. Anything else good out there? Any good articles that defend form >as rigorous ways of thinking, etc?

There are some interesting pieces in a collection of essays edited by Harvey Gross, The Structure of Verse, that might assist, Juliana: Eliot's "Reflections on Vers Libre", Kunitz's "Action and Incantation", and John Hollander's "The Metrical Frame". But I've also found useful with beginning students a piece by Marilyn Hacker that cropped up in the Academy of American Poets' Poetry Pilot in 1995, "A Few Cranky Paragraphs on Form and Content" (may be collected somewhere by now?), Countermeasures' reprinting of remarks by Annie Finch and Dana Gioia (stuff on rap, too, by Gioia!) at a 1996 conference on "Poetry and Form"; Molly Peacock's more personal "What the Mockingbird Said" in the essay collection Conversant Essays. I haven't looked at the introduction to Rober Richman's anthology The Direction of Poetry (new formalism, natch) for awhile, but my memory is that it is pretty hortatory. Also check out Peter Viereck's "Strict Wildness: The Biology of Poetry" which Poets & Writers printed in their magazine in 1988, but which is probably collected somewhere by now.

>
>Would also like to collect citations on the opposite if any come to >mind.
>
>Also, I do a section on oral poetries. I'm looking for writing that >explains the relevance of chants to poetry studies. Anything that would >help my students begin to understand the chant as an art form >(interestingly here in Hawai'i, they tend to get chants in h.s. but they >seem to read them as history--so whenever I've given them a chant to >look at they can do a historical reading and say things like well it is >about King Kamehameha III and etc. etc. but can't see it as something >that is poetry).
>
>Also, any good articles on rap? Anyone taught rap in their poetry >courses? Any ideas on how to get students to write critically about rap?
>
Tricia Rose's book (Black Noise? - I think that's the title) is terrific.
Thinking about your question (not having tried this systematically myself), I'd go from Louise Bennett to Linton Kwesi Johnson for context, and then encourage their writing on only one aspect of it that tends toward the mechanical: scansion/prosody; modulating tone; how the rhymes work and what kinds of rhymes, etc. -- giving them just enough tools to do it. This usually works for me when a poetry is so loaded content and context wise that students have a hard time seeing it as a construction. And I'd add Spearhead to the playlist.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

482. Robert Archambeau
Re: London events? bookstores?
Wed 20 May 1998

A real Londoner could give you better info, I'm sure, but my suggestion is to check out a place called Skoob on (I think) Southampton Row, which sells used books, and another place called Soma, which sells Caribbean/Indian/African books of all kinds, and has all kinds of things that are impossible to find where I live in Chicago.

Why not cross-post your query to the British and Irish poets list? Those guys know what's happening in any given week.

--
Robert Archambeau
Department of English
Lake Forest College
Lake Forest, IL 60045
http://www.lfc.edu/~archamb/

" on the end
of each decision stands a heretic"
--Michael Barrett

↑ Index

483. Susan Wheeler
Re: Harry Partch Instrumentarium (fwd)
Wed 20 May 1998

Harry Partch was a very influential figure in contemporary music, and there are several pockets of followers about that I hope will come to the rescue. I played at one time two of his instruments -- a long piece of plumbing pipe outfitted with a mouthpiece (with conductor composer Henry Brandt yelling "Be the primordial ooze!" at our pipe section), and a huge, climb-into, wooden xylophone which resonated at a lower-than-audible pitch.

At 08:40 PM 5/19/98 -0400, you wrote:
>Speaking of Sonic Youth, the following from their Echo Canyon mailing list.
>I make no claims for whether or not this is legit, but assume so as it would >be an odd sort of hoax. Anyone know more about Harry Patch or the situation >below? Maybe someone can help out. (I assume the Keady address would be the >one to write to.) Matt
>
>>Date: Sat, 16 May 1998 22:06:17 -0400
>>From: Jim Keady <[redacted]>
>>To: [redacted]
>>Subject: Harry Partch Instrumentarium
>>
>> Hiya, I'm not subscribed to yr list, but I would like to bring >> attention to something that may be relevant to some people who are on >> it. Harry Partch:composer (1901-1974) Onetime hobo, lifetime

>> musician, noted for, among other things, building his own instruments >> based on microtonal theory and writing for them. Most of his work is >> playable only on these wunuvakind instruments, which may contribute to >> why you maybe haven't heard of him. Anyway, his original instruments >> are currently housed at a state college in Purchase, NY, but are on >> the verge of being evicted. They need a new home IMMEDIATELY. If >> anyone within the sound of my keypad has any leads, please contact me >> & I'll pass the word on. Thanks&thanksagain,
>> -------Joe
>
>
Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

484. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
nature/poetry...
Wed 20 May 1998

---

charles a., late in responding here... but been reading over (and over) the latest of mary hilton's 'primitive publications,' _saunter_, by joshua mckinney...

certainly in the domain of poetry that takes on the natural... i've enjoyed it, am still not through puzzling over it... highly recommended...

what i wouldn't give for a hike around the top of mount lemmon, you lucky dog you...

best,

joe

↑ Index

485. Tenney Nathanson
Re: nature/poetry...; also POG report
Wed 20 May 1998

Joe--

guess I dropped a stitch (or thread) here but could you fill me in again if/when you have time on what this is? backchannel ok if list already duly apprised.

best,

Tenney

(meanwhile we just took family to Saguaro Monument East a couple of weekends ago--down here at desert level--and the wildflowers were absolutely incredible, supposedly the best season for them in somethinglike 20 years.)

(and while we're on Tucson matters: POG just gave a fundraising dinner--consummate chef is a POETICS listmember!--and raised about $1,000, which pretty much balances our budget for this year. Grant applications in for next year; we'll hear in July; so we have hopes to be afloat w another series and other activities next year. Many thanks to all POETICS people who came here to read; we'll try to post a list of events over the last year and a half; it's a pretty terrific list.)

> -----Original Message-----
> From: UB Poetics discussion group
> [mailto:[redacted]]On Behalf Of Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
> Sent: Wednesday, May 20, 1998 6:43 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: nature/poetry...
>
> charles a., late in responding here... but been reading over (and over) the > latest of mary hilton's 'primitive publications,' _saunter_, by joshua mckinney...
>
> certainly in the domain of poetry that takes on the natural... i've enjoyed > it, am still not through puzzling over it... highly recommended...
>
> what i wouldn't give for a hike around the top of mount lemmon, you lucky dog you...
>
> best,
>
> joe

↑ Index

486. dee morris
Re: John Hawkes
Wed 20 May 1998

George, If you'd be willing, I'd love to hear more details about this course. Which H.D. texts did you read, which Dorn, which Hawkes? What worked in the combination? I just finished teaching H.D. in combination with Theresa Hak Kyung Cha, Kamau Brathwaite, and Nate Mackey---another generative combination.

Dee

> That just about tears it. The worst one yet. I could not get to sleep last night. I have been telling anyone who gets near that Hawkes is my favourite US novelist since about 1962. That's when I read Charivari and didnt know what the hell was going on but knew that it was the real goods.
>
> Just gave a course this spring on H.D., Ed Dorn and John Hawkes. It worked, too.
>
> George Bowering.
>
> ,
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

487. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: formalists, oralists

Wed 20 May 1998

Juliana Spahr wrote:
>
> Help me! I'm looking to create a bibliography of secondary material to > give my students in my "understanding poetry" course (which has a lot of > nonmajors although it is a 300 level course) next semester.
>
> I usually do this section on form where we look at the sonnet--a few of > Petrarch, all of Shakespeare's, some of Brooks, Thomas, Mayer, McKay, > Berrigan, etc. I have them compare the Princeton Encyclopedia definition > of the sonnet to Mayer's in the T&W Handbook on Form and talk about what > a sonnet means. A lot of them end up writing their papers around this > issue (especially on Mayer's work which troubles and delights them). I > need more citations and places for them to look to get more of the > discussion around form.
>
> Can anyone think of any good articles that say to write a sonnet, or > whatever, one has to follow the rules? I need some articles that defend > form as settled and absolute. I've been sending them to the Annie Finch > book. Anything else good out there? Any good articles that defend form > as rigorous ways of thinking, etc?

>
<snip>

Juliana,

I'd recommend two works about as far apart as they get:

John Clarke's _From Feathers to Iron: A Concourse of World Poetics_ . San Francisco: Tombouctou/Convivio, 1987; ISBN 0-939180-42-1 [lectures which use, as illustration, the 50 sonnets from his earlier collection _The End of This Side_]. It also anticipates his monumental, post- humously issues collection of sonnets, _In the Analogy_. Toronto & Buffalo: shuffaloff, 1997, ISBN 1-880631-10-5.

Berman, Sandra L. _The Sonnet Over Time: A Study in the Sonnets of Petrarch, Shakespeare, and Baudelaire_. Chapel Hill & London: UNC/CH, 1988, ISBN 0-8078-7063-3. Interesting, solidly academic, though a bit of a struggle for me, since I read neither Italian nor French.

I will also teach a similar course this fal, so I'll keep my eyes o-pen & let you know if I find anything else.

Best,

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

488. Steve Shoemaker
London events? bookstores?
Wed 20 May 1998

Hello All--I'll be in London for a few days next week (Thursday the 28th thru Sunday the 31st), and then again on the 8th and 9th of June. Anybody know of any good po/art/music stuff going on?

And oh yeah, bookstores too, esp. if there in Bloomsbury, where I'll be staying.

Thanks, Steve

>
Steve Shoemaker
Assistant Professor
English Department
Wake Forest University

Winston-Salem, NC 27109
[redacted]

↑ Index

489. David Kellogg
Re: formalists, oralists
Wed 20 May 1998

Juliana,

I missed your original message (deleted it along with hundreds of others awaiting me on return from vacation), but doesn't Fussell have a chapter on the sonnet in his old _Poetic Meter & Poetic Form_? It might say something along these lines. You might also consider Vendler's remarks about Shakespeare's "couplet tie" in the intro to her new edition of his sonnets. (The accompanying CD of Vendler reading is great for insomniacs, too). On a weirder note, do you know Paul Oppenheimer's _The Birth of the Modern Mind: Self, Consciousness, and the Invention of the Sonnet_ (Oxford, 1989)? Next to Julian Jaynes, gives one of the strangest accounts of the emergence of subjectivity I have read, an extreme version of organic form.

Sorry, none of these are probably on point exactly. Another thing, not on the sonnet but perhaps relevant, is Dana Gioia's hostility to what he calls somewhere in _Can Poetry Matter?_ the "pseudo-formal" poem, i.e., nonce sonnets, quatrains, etc. There goes the neighborhood.

Cheers,
David

On Wed, 20 May 1998, Daniel Zimmerman wrote:

> Juliana Spahr wrote:
>
> Help me! I'm looking to create a bibliography of secondary material to give my students in my "understanding poetry" course (which has a lot of nonmajors although it is a 300 level course) next semester.
>
> I usually do this section on form where we look at the sonnet--a few of Petrarch, all of Shakespeare's, some of Brooks, Thomas, Mayer, McKay, Berrigan, etc. I have them compare the Princeton Encyclopedia definition of the sonnet to Mayer's in the T&W Handbook on Form and talk about what a sonnet means. A lot of them end up writing their papers around this issue (especially on Mayer's work which troubles and delights them). I need more citations and places for them to look to get more of the discussion around form.
>
> Can anyone think of any good articles that say to write a sonnet, or > whatever, one has to follow the rules? I need some articles that defend form as settled and absolute. I've been sending them to the Annie Finch book. Anything else good out there? Any good articles that defend form as rigorous ways of thinking, etc?

>
> <snip>
>
> Juliana,
>
> I'd recommend two works about as far apart as they get:
>
> John Clarke's _From Feathers to Iron: A Concourse of World Poetics_ . San Francisco: Tombouctou/Convivio, 1987; ISBN 0-939180-42-1 [lectures which use, as illustration, the 50 sonnets from his earlier collection _The End of This Side_]. It also anticipates his monumental, post-humously issues collection of sonnets, _In the Analogy_. Toronto & Buffalo: shuffaloff, 1997, ISBN 1-880631-10-5.
>
> Berman, Sandra L. _The Sonnet Over Time: A Study in the Sonnets of Petrarch, Shakespeare, and Baudelaire_. Chapel Hill & London: UNC/CH, 1988, ISBN 0-8078-7063-3. Interesting, solidly academic, though a bit of a struggle for me, since I read neither Italian nor French.
>
> I will also teach a similar course this fal, so I'll keep my eyes o-pen & let you know if I find anything else.
>
> Best,
>
> Dan Zimmerman

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

> Thanks too for the comments on the Subtext series. We do include the > fact > that it's in the back room in all of our local PR. I didn't mention
> it > here, cause I figured any out of towners from the list who come by > will be > taking a cab &, of course, ALL of the cabbies in town know where the > Subtext readings are (and which day of the month they're on).
>
So just wanted to mention to those of you who are flying in for Anselm's reading and workshop in the back room that I'm giving a reading tonight at the Seattle Public Library, 4721 Rainier Avenue South, with Cal Kinnear and Becka McKay at 7:00. And it's NOT rainier, this morning at least . . .

Joe

↑ Index

491. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher

nature/poetry...

Wed 20 May 1998

---

tenney and others: mary hilton puts out a series of chapbooks under the 'primitive publications' imprint... each chapbook is "historically based"... $20 gets you a subscription of six, one chapbook for $4...

checks payable to "mary hilton," addressed to primitive publications

1706 U Street, NW, #102
Washington, DC 20009

previous titles by mary herself, mark wallace, kristin prevallet, jefferson hansen, sherry brennan, and the joshua mckinney item i mentioned in my last post (_saunter_, named after a passage in thoreau)... i've enjoyed them all...

best,

joe

↑ Index

492. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
sustainability...
Wed 20 May 1998

re sustainability: this is somewhat off the track of the discussion here... but there's an excellent piece by bill mckibben in this month's _atlantic monthly_, "a special moment in history," that details how the nature of, well, nature itself is rapidly being transformed by homo sapiens... which requires a somewhat more bracing grasp of what we mean by sustainability... it's not simply how many people the earth can sustain, which itself appears now to be a transition issue, given the expected doubling of human population in the next half-century (this doubling representing, for mckibben, a limit point, regardless how you factor energy conservation per individual)... it's a question of our creating, even now, what amounts to a new earth, what mckibbens calls "earth2"---an earth with "new storms and new oceans and new glaciers and new springtimes"... a new habitat, and one that's not user-friendly...

definitely worth checking out, i think...

best,

joe

↑ Index

493. ken|n|ing
Re: scene reports, please
Wed 20 May 1998

> And by way of a random poll: what music do people currently have in rotation?

Cornershop (when i was born for the 7th time)
Stooges (1st record)
Andrew Hill (smokestack)
Cage (winter music)
Rev. Utah Smith (complete recordings)
Stereolab (emperor tomatoe ketchup)

↑ Index

494. Carolyn Guertin
Cool Site of the Day
Wed 20 May 1998

An interesting new journal called BeeHive has posted its inaugural issue on the web. The premier issue includes:

Mapping the Acephale by John Attebury, David J. Beaulieu, George A. Dunn, Talan Memmott and Don Socha

Steven Shaviro's Doom Patrols.8 on Kathy Acker

7 poems from Slam Poet Vadim Litvak (illustrated by Petra Mueller)

Bread.Crumbs, excerpts from a hyperfiction, by Talan Memmott

Visit it at:
http://www.temporalimage.com/beehive/hidex.html

_____ Carolyn Guertin, Department of English, University of Alberta E-Mail: [redacted]; Tel/FAX: [redacted] Website: <http://www.ualberta.ca/~cguertin/Guertin.htm>

↑ Index

495. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Wed 20 May 1998

Harry Partch was one of the great American originals. His music is weirdly sonorous, his use of language (he wrote or adapted the texts to his vocal music) original. There are, I think, several cds of his work. I recently saw one listed somewhere. Check out his piece "Barstow," the text for which is a set of huitch-hikers' grafitti collected by Partch at a popular pickup spot outside of the eponymous city in his hobo days. They don't mention that his instruments are finely crafted and of great sculptural beauty. I hope they find a home. They should be in the Library of Congress or Smithsonian instrument collections, where they could be available, like the strads at L of C, for performance. Partch disciples (I use the word advisedly) can be found in almost all the odd corners of America, building their own instruments and creating music, although their numbers are not large.

At 08:40 PM 5/19/98 -0400, you wrote:
>Speaking of Sonic Youth, the following from their Echo Canyon mailing list.
>I make no claims for whether or not this is legit, but assume so as it would >be an odd sort of hoax. Anyone know more about Harry Patch or the situation >below? Maybe someone can help out. (I assume the Keady address would be the >one to write to.) Matt
>
>>Date: Sat, 16 May 1998 22:06:17 -0400
>>From: Jim Keady <[redacted]>
>>To: [redacted]
>>Subject: Harry Partch Instrumentarium

>>
>> Hiya, I'm not subscribed to yr list, but I would like to bring >> attention to something that may be relevant to some people who are on >> it. Harry Partch:composer (1901-1974) Onetime hobo, lifetime
>> musician, noted for, among other things, building his own instruments >> based on microtonal theory and writing for them. Most of his work is >> playable only on these wunuvakind instruments, which may contribute to >> why you maybe haven't heard of him. Anyway, his original instruments >> are currently housed at a state college in Purchase, NY, but are on >> the verge of being evicted. They need a new home IMMEDIATELY. If >> anyone within the sound of my keypad has any leads, please contact me >> & I'll pass the word on. Thanks&thanksagain,
>> -------Joe
>

↑ Index

496. Taylor Brady
Re: scene reports, please
Wed 20 May 1998

In heavy rotation these days (confining myself to recent releases / re-releases) in alphabetical order:

Derek Bailey, guitar, drums 'n' bass (Still not sure if this is a truly great recording, or simply a great novelty concept. Either way, the guitar hero of free improv [in his most abrasive electric mode] over percussion tracks programmed by British drum 'n' bass DJ Ninj -- how can you go wrong?)

Iva Bittova, eponymous release on Elektra / Nonesuch (more accessible than her earlier, prog-influenced stuff [which is also great], the Balkan and Eastern European "folk / traditional" side more in evidence here)

Anthony Braxton, any of the recent releases on the Braxton House label featuring the Ghost Trance Musics

Loren MazzaCane Connors, A Possible Dawn (thirty minutes of truly haunting electric blues minimalism, followed by thirty minutes of group improv with Thurston Moore and Jean-Marc Montera)

Tony Conrad, Early Minimalism (My ears are still ringing, my head is still spinning. This 4CD set takes some getting into, but his bit about beginning to hear "dissonances" [say, ratios like 48 / 49] as consonances with repeated listening is not just an empty promise. Opens up vast spaces -- architectural -- in the head / the room you're in. Highly recommended.)

Cornelius, Fantasma (To call him the Japanese Beck would be to unfairly pigeonhole him, but you get the picture)

John Fahey, womblife (Produced by Jim O'Rourke. This combines Fahey's old / new love affair with the distantiating devices of electronic recording [heard in most pronounced recent form on his City of Refuge disc] with some old-fashioned plaintive fingerpicking reminiscent of his "Blind Joe Death" period. The transition from the ringing and distorted echo of the first 4 tracks to the final, more trad "Juana" is stunning.)

Sue Garner, to run more smoothly (Run On vocalist goes solo, with most of the band to back her up. More restrained and contemplative than Run On's recent stuff, ballad / folk / country influences)

Gastr del Sol, Camofleur (Apparently their last recording as a band. I still miss the guitar (anti-)heroics of Crookt, Crackt, or Fly, but the command of songwriting here is far greater. Dave Grubbs' voice -- always an acquired taste -- is in better form here than I've ever heard it. Sound-collage ambiances provided by Markus Popp of Oval work surprisingly well -- subtly -- with the compositions here.)

Kaiser / Kimura / O'Rourke / Oswald, Acoustics (That's Henry Kaiser, Mari Kimura, Jim O'Rourke, and John Oswald, in a set of all-acoustic free playing. Ranges from the the extreme pointillism one might expect from such a free improv session -- this is largely the direction of Oswald's sax playing here -- to a surprisingly romantic breadth and sweep -- Kimura's violin, though she can also "go jagged" with the best Oswald can offer -- to an almost folky resonance and rhythm -- open tunings from O'Rourke and Kaiser. One of the best free improv recordings I've heard in the past several years).

Machine for Making Sense, On second thoughts (Composer / poet / word artist Chris Mann's band project. Breathless readings of langpo-influenced texts [printed in full(?) as liner notes] over improvised reeds, woodwinds, strings, hurdy-gurdy, live electronics, and samples [Beastie Boys, Otomo Yoshihide, etc.] Info on Mann, who might be of interest to folks on this list beyond the parameters of this survey, can be found at http://alianet.alia.org.au/~amc/comp/m/cmann.htm and http://farben.latrobe.edu.au/NMA/22CAC/mann.html)

Christian Marclay, records 1981-1989 (The original art-DJ at his best. Most of this stuff was previously available only as very-limited vinyl releases, so this one is a big deal. Great lo-fi sound collages, in which the instrumentation is not only, as in higher-tech digital DJ outings, the pre-recorded source recordings, but also the sound of neeedles being "carelessly" dropped on them, warped discs beings played at the wrong speed, etc. Marclay is a performer who, at his best, has thought very clearly about every "inessential" or "accidental" contour of his medium)

Roscoe Mitchell, Sound Songs (Bought this one after Mitchell's moving solo appearance here in Buffalo, April of '97. While this 2CD set isn't quite up to that level, the sheer range of Mitchell's unaccompanied reed-playing, along with the degree of attention to the peripheral and unintended as well as the central and gestural as equal elements of composition / improvisation, makes this a recording worth having. Especially noteworthy is the circular-breathing tour de force, "Full Fontal Saxophone") mu-ziq, Lunatic Harness (Drum 'n' bass influenced sounds [though not pure d 'n' b], fleshed out with vibraphones, marimbas, and a host of surprisingly warm synthesized sounds. There's an intimacy of address here that's almost acoustic -- has something to do with the relative lack of reverb in the overall sound field, something which distinguishes it from much American electronic dance music, which, influenced by Detroit techno, deals in large swathes of echoic sonority. [Don't get me wrong, I dig that stuff too]. Most record stores will have this filed as "u-ziq," as many clerks don't recognize the Greek "mu" in the name)

Oval, dok (Who'd have thought electronically-manipulated soundfield recordings of bells could sound so warm and rhythmically-various? Like Stockhausen's Mantra, if he'd abandoned the piano and had access to digital variants of his basic ring-modulator. Bad analogy, good disc)

Lee "Scratch" Perry, Arkology (Three-CD anthology from an often-unacknowledged source of contemporary thought about and experience of electronically-recorded music. John Corbett, in his book Extended Play, claims that Perry should share credit with Phil Spector for "inventing" the recording studio as an instrument. Listening to these great early dub recordings, it's easy to hear why. Highlight is disc 2, which features Perry's original recording of Junior Murvin's "Police and Thieves" followed by several of the dub versions he later cut. Like an acoustic variorum)

Scanner, Sulphur (Less concentration on danceable beats, more on manipulated sound-texts snatched from the air with the bandwidth scanner after which he's named himself -- what was a gimmick on earlier recordings now takes center stage as an actual compositional method. Raises some particularly fraught questions about voyeurism, subjectivity, language -- none of which are answered, but the getting there is intensely disquieting fun -- listening-as-complicity)

Solex, Solex Vs. the Hitmeister (What might happen if Portishead unearthed a sense of humor, pared down to a one-woman band, and discovered home recording)

DJ Spooky, Synthetic Fury EP (Paul Miller, concision, concentrated effect -- no it's not an oxymoron [though I like the long-windedness of Necropolis for reasons all its own]. The digitally-distorted string melody on "Dumb Mutha Fucker" [can anyone identify the source?] is especially beautiful)

Terre Thaemlitz, Couture Cosmetique (Ambient concept album arranged around acoutico-textual analogs for issues of display and eroticism associated with drag and TV/TS gender blurring / performance. Ability of sampled sounds, digitally detourned from their status as sound events toward a "subsistence" [to point to an interesting recent thread] as threshold-of-perception sonic contexts and backgrounds, to "masquerade" as other than themselves in a relation which is not simply one of substitution, is what's at stake here. Beautifully designed and textually-suggestive sleeve insert with this one)

Tortoise, TNT (OK, I'm on the bandwagon. But I might be the only person I know who still prefers their last one, Millions Now Living Will Never Die. That moment on "Djed" where the persistent dub-style bass line falls apart into electronic pops (sounds like someone's messing with the patch cords) which then arrange themselves into a new percussion rhythm -- exposing the illusion of recording as the copy of a live performance, than reconstituting a different kind of liveness on the other side -- is a pop revelation on the order of, say, Public Enemy's first sampling of James Brown [alright, so I exaggerate])

We, As Is (Destined for a cut-out bin near you. The trio of Lloop, Once11, and DJ Olive [who recently recorded a great set with improvising drummer William Hooker] is trip-hop, illbient, whatever, at its badly-named, sonically-stunning best. Unfortunately, no one seems to have heard this outside the Five Boroughs)

Iannis Xenakis, Kraanerg (New recording, featuring Paul Miller, aka DJ Spooky, on live electronics. Historically significant piece which showcases one of the early attempts to use prerecorded and manipulated sound along with live performance in a Western art-music idiom)

Richard Youngs, Advent (This, along with his Festival CD, is some of the grittiest minimalism I've yet to hear. Pure, reiterative structures [piano ostinatoes, alarm clock chimes, etc.] contaminated by an unprecedented degree of acoustic filth. Great stuff)

Sorry this is so long -- my stereo is almost never off. Thanks to all others who have responded, as I think this thread, if we could expand it to include discussions beyond the point of exchanging lists, has everything to do with poetics.

A final question: Did anyone in or around Buffalo make it to any of the performances in Hallwalls' Interprov festival of improvised music -- say, Gerry Hemingway Quartet, Trio Clusone, or Nihilist Spasm Band? Suffering through end-of-semester financial doldrums, I had to miss the whole thing. Reviews / impressions / vicarious experiences would be greatly appreciated.

Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
http://writing.upenn.edu/spc

<HTML> <BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000"> In heavy rotation these days (confining myself to recent releases / re-releases) in alphabetical order:

<P>Derek Bailey, guitar, drums 'n' bass (Still not sure if this is a truly great recording, or simply a great novelty concept. Either way, the guitar hero of free improv [in his most abrasive electric mode] over percussion tracks programmed by British drum 'n' bass DJ Ninj -- how can you go wrong?)

<P>Iva Bittova, eponymous release on Elektra / Nonesuch (more accessible than her earlier, prog-influenced stuff [which is also great], the Balkan and Eastern European "folk / traditional" side more in evidence here)

<P>Anthony Braxton, any of the recent releases on the Braxton House label featuring the Ghost Trance Musics

<P>Loren MazzaCane Connors, A Possible Dawn (thirty minutes of truly haunting electric blues minimalism, followed by thirty minutes of group improv with Thurston Moore and Jean-Marc Montera)

<P>Tony Conrad, Early Minimalism (My ears are still ringing, my head is still spinning. This 4CD set takes some getting into, but his bit about beginning to hear "dissonances" [say, ratios like 48 / 49] as consonances with repeated listening is not just an empty promise. Opens up vast spaces -- architectural -- in the head / the room you're in. Highly recommended.)

<P>Cornelius, Fantasma (To call him the Japanese Beck would be to unfairly pigeonhole him, but you get the picture)

<P>John Fahey, womblife (Produced by Jim O'Rourke. This combines Fahey's old / new love affair with the distantiating devices of electronic recording [heard in most pronounced recent form on his City of Refuge disc] with some old-fashioned plaintive fingerpicking reminiscent of his "Blind Joe Death" period. The transition from the ringing and distorted echo of the first 4 tracks to the final, more trad "Juana" is stunning.)

<P>Sue Garner, to run more smoothly (Run On vocalist goes solo, with most of the band to back her up. More restrained and contemplative than Run On's recent stuff, ballad / folk / country influences)

<P>Gastr del Sol, Camofleur (Apparently their last recording as a band. I still miss the guitar (anti-)heroics of Crookt, Crackt, or Fly, but the command of songwriting here is far greater. Dave Grubbs' voice -- always an acquired taste -- is in better form here than I've ever heard it. Sound-collage ambiances provided by Markus Popp of Oval work surprisingly well -- subtly -- with the compositions here.)

<P>Kaiser / Kimura / O'Rourke / Oswald, Acoustics (That's Henry Kaiser, Mari Kimura, Jim O'Rourke, and John Oswald, in a set of all-acoustic free playing. Ranges from the the extreme pointillism one might expect from such a free improv session -- this is largely the direction of Oswald's sax playing here -- to a surprisingly romantic breadth and sweep -- Kimura's violin, though she can also "go jagged" with the best Oswald can offer -- to an almost folky resonance and rhythm -- open tunings from O'Rourke and Kaiser. One of the best free improv recordings I've heard in the past several years).

<P>Machine for Making Sense, On second thoughts (Composer / poet / word artist Chris Mann's band project. Breathless readings of langpo-influenced texts [printed in full(?) as liner notes] over improvised reeds, woodwinds, strings, hurdy-gurdy, live electronics, and samples [Beastie Boys, Otomo Yoshihide, etc.] Info on Mann, who might be of interest to folks on this list beyond the parameters of this survey, can be found at <A HREF="http://alianet.alia.org.au/~amc/comp/m/cmann.htm">http://alianet.alia.org.au/~amc/comp/m/cmann.htm</A> and <A HREF="http://farben.latrobe.edu.au/NMA/22CAC/mann.html">http://farben.latrobe.edu.au/NMA/22CAC/mann.html</A>)

<P>Christian Marclay, records 1981-1989 (The original art-DJ at his best. Most of this stuff was previously available only as very-limited vinyl releases, so this one is a big deal. Great lo-fi sound collages, in which the instrumentation is not only, as in higher-tech digital DJ outings, the pre-recorded source recordings, but also the sound of neeedles being "carelessly" dropped on them, warped discs beings played at the wrong speed, etc. Marclay is a performer who, at his best, has thought very clearly about every "inessential" or "accidental" contour of his medium)

<P>Roscoe Mitchell, Sound Songs (Bought this one after Mitchell's moving solo appearance here in Buffalo, April of '97. While this 2CD set isn't quite up to that level, the sheer range of Mitchell's unaccompanied reed-playing, along with the degree of attention to the peripheral and unintended as well as the central and gestural as equal elements of composition / improvisation, makes this a recording worth having. Especially noteworthy is the circular-breathing tour de force, "Full Fontal Saxophone")

<P>mu-ziq, Lunatic Harness (Drum 'n' bass influenced sounds [though not pure d 'n' b], fleshed out with vibraphones, marimbas, and a host of surprisingly warm synthesized sounds. There's an intimacy of address here that's almost acoustic -- has something to do with the relative lack of reverb in the overall sound field, something which distinguishes it from much American electronic dance music, which, influenced by Detroit techno, deals in large swathes of echoic sonority. [Don't get me wrong, I dig that stuff too]. Most record stores will have this filed as "u-ziq," as many clerks don't recognize the Greek "mu" in the name)

<P>Oval, dok (Who'd have thought electronically-manipulated soundfield recordings of bells could sound so warm and rhythmically-various? Like Stockhausen's Mantra, if he'd abandoned the piano and had access to digital variants of his basic ring-modulator. Bad analogy, good disc)

<P>Lee "Scratch" Perry, Arkology (Three-CD anthology from an often-unacknowledged source of contemporary thought about and experience of electronically-recorded music. John Corbett, in his book Extended Play, claims that Perry should share credit with Phil Spector for "inventing" the recording studio as an instrument. Listening to these great early dub recordings, it's easy to hear why. Highlight is disc 2, which features Perry's original recording of Junior Murvin's "Police and Thieves" followed by several of the dub versions he later cut. Like an acoustic variorum)

<P>Scanner, Sulphur (Less concentration on danceable beats, more on manipulated sound-texts snatched from the air with the bandwidth scanner after which he's named himself -- what was a gimmick on earlier recordings now takes center stage as an actual compositional method. Raises some particularly fraught questions about voyeurism, subjectivity, language -- none of which are answered, but the getting there is intensely disquieting fun -- listening-as-complicity)

<P>Solex, Solex Vs. the Hitmeister (What might happen if Portishead unearthed a sense of humor, pared down to a one-woman band, and discovered home recording)

<P>DJ Spooky, Synthetic Fury EP (Paul Miller, concision, concentrated effect -- no it's not an oxymoron [though I like the long-windedness of Necropolis for reasons all its own]. The digitally-distorted string melody on "Dumb Mutha Fucker" [can anyone identify the source?] is especially beautiful)

<P>Terre Thaemlitz, Couture Cosmetique (Ambient concept album arranged around acoutico-textual analogs for issues of display and eroticism associated with drag and TV/TS gender blurring / performance. Ability of sampled sounds, digitally detourned from their status as sound events toward a "subsistence" [to point to an interesting recent thread] as threshold-of-perception sonic contexts and backgrounds, to "masquerade" as other than themselves in a relation which is not simply one of substitution, is what's at stake here. Beautifully designed and textually-suggestive sleeve insert with this one)

<P>Tortoise, TNT (OK, I'm on the bandwagon. But I might be the only person I know who still prefers their last one, Millions Now Living Will Never Die. That moment on "Djed" where the persistent dub-style bass line falls apart into electronic pops (sounds like someone's messing with the patch cords) which then arrange themselves into a new percussion rhythm -- exposing the illusion of recording as the copy of a live performance, than reconstituting a different kind of liveness on the other side -- is a pop revelation on the order of, say, Public Enemy's first sampling of James Brown [alright, so I exaggerate])

<P>We, As Is (Destined for a cut-out bin near you. The trio of Lloop, Once11, and DJ Olive [who recently recorded a great set with improvising drummer William Hooker] is trip-hop, illbient, whatever, at its badly-named, sonically-stunning best. Unfortunately, no one seems to have heard this outside the Five Boroughs)

<P>Iannis Xenakis, Kraanerg (New recording, featuring Paul Miller, aka DJ Spooky, on live electronics. Historically significant piece which showcases one of the early attempts to use prerecorded and manipulated sound along with live performance in a Western art-music idiom)

<P>Richard Youngs, Advent (This, along with his Festival CD, is some of the grittiest minimalism I've yet to hear. Pure, reiterative structures [piano ostinatoes, alarm clock chimes, etc.] contaminated by an unprecedented degree of acoustic filth. Great stuff)

<P>Sorry this is so long -- my stereo is almost never off. Thanks to all others who have responded, as I think this thread, if we could expand it to include discussions beyond the point of exchanging lists, has everything to do with poetics.

<P>A final question: Did anyone in or around Buffalo make it to any of the performances in Hallwalls' Interprov festival of improvised music -- say, Gerry Hemingway Quartet, Trio Clusone, or Nihilist Spasm Band? Suffering through end-of-semester financial doldrums, I had to miss the whole thing. Reviews / impressions / vicarious experiences would be greatly appreciated.

<P>
<HR ALIGN=LEFT WIDTH="75%">

<P>Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/spc</A> </BODY>
</HTML>

----------8ED795B3AC721E38C34DDBF6--

↑ Index

497. Taylor Brady
Small Press Collective alias
Wed 20 May 1998

Please note that the Small Press Collective and its various online publications are now accessible at a new, shorter alias address (see my signature card, below).

This is only an alias, so all previous links and bookmarks will still work -- our "real" address is still the same. However, if you're still enetering the whole address by hand, this might save you some typing.

Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
 http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
 http://writing.upenn.edu/spc

<HTML> <BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000"> Please note that the Small Press Collective and its various online publications are now accessible at a new, shorter alias address (see my signature card, below).

<P>This is only an alias, so all previous links and bookmarks will still work -- our "real" address is still the same. However, if you're still enetering the whole address by hand, this might save you some typing.

<P>
<HR ALIGN=LEFT WIDTH="75%">

<P>Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/spc</A> </BODY>
</HTML>

----------2B8E8A13E49C656B1EB02722--

↑ Index

498. R. Gancie
homeostasis & intolerance
Wed 20 May 1998

"[T]he human body is a machine that winds its own springs. It is the living image of perpetual motion."---from Man a Machine by Julien Offray de La Mettrie --- "In very many cases whether a particular system will achieve a particular goal or adaptation depends only on a few characteristics of the outer environment and not at all on the detail of that environment. Biologists are familiar with this property of adaptive systems under the label of homeostasis."---from The Sciences of the Artificial by Herbert Simon, MIT Press --- "The machine becomes a 'thing' through the definitive establishment of the relation between logic and mechanics. But that relation disappears in individual operations. The work of the constructor is hardened in the machine. The subject, which synchronized causal-mechanical procedure with states-of-affairs, abstracts itself from the machine like the God of the Deists from his creation."---from Against Epistemology by Theodor Adorno --- "...'All experiences are identifiable by reference to bodies', a seemingly articulate locution which has nevertheless extruded a personal pronoun by shifting its referential work to an impersonal term. More particularly, we could get the locution, 'This experience is identifiable with reference to this body' to stand for 'My experience is had by this body.'"... "[T]he problem with 'personal' individuation is that it stops only at solipsism."---from Scepticism & the First Person by S. Coval, Methuen

↑ Index

499. Steve Shoemaker
Re: formalists, oralists
Wed 20 May 1998

If yer looking for a crusty old formalist it's hard to beat Paul (Fussy) Fussell's Poetic Meter & Peter Form. I nearly went nuts one semester as a grad student when i was forced to teach large chunks of this book, coupled also with poems drawn from a really lame poetry "handbook." But if you were able to play it off against other stuff it cld be useful. I don't, offhand, remember him saying that much about the sonnet, but he certainly takes a trad approach to form (the book becomes especially horrific when it gets to the 20thC). s

At 08:37 AM 5/20/98 -0400, you wrote:
>At 10:00 AM 5/19/98 -1000, you wrote:
>>Help me! I'm looking to create a bibliography of secondary material to >>give my students in my "understanding poetry" course (which has a lot of >>nonmajors although it is a 300 level course) next semester.
>>
>>I usually do this section on form where we look at the sonnet--a few of >>Petrarch, all of Shakespeare's, some of Brooks, Thomas, Mayer, McKay, >>Berrigan, etc. I have them compare the Princeton Encyclopedia definition >>of the sonnet to Mayer's in the T&W Handbook on Form and talk about what >>a sonnet means. A lot of them end up writing their papers around this >>issue (especially on Mayer's work which troubles and delights them). I >>need more citations and places for them to look to get more of the >>discussion around form.
>>
>>Can anyone think of any good articles that say to write a sonnet, or >>whatever, one has to follow the rules? I need some articles that defend >>form as settled and absolute. I've been sending them to the Annie Finch >>book. Anything else good out there? Any good articles that defend form >>as rigorous ways of thinking, etc?
>
>There are some interesting pieces in a collection of essays edited by Harvey
>Gross, The Structure of Verse, that might assist, Juliana: Eliot's
>"Reflections on Vers Libre", Kunitz's "Action and Incantation", and John >Hollander's "The Metrical Frame". But I've also found useful with beginning >students a piece by Marilyn Hacker that cropped up in the Academy of >American Poets' Poetry Pilot in 1995, "A Few Cranky Paragraphs on Form and >Content" (may be collected somewhere by now?), Countermeasures' reprinting >of remarks by Annie Finch and Dana Gioia (stuff on rap, too, by Gioia!) at a >1996 conference on "Poetry and Form"; Molly Peacock's more personal "What >the Mockingbird Said" in the essay collection Conversant Essays. I haven't >looked at the introduction to Rober Richman's anthology The Direction of >Poetry (new formalism, natch) for awhile, but my memory is that it is pretty >hortatory. Also check out Peter Viereck's "Strict Wildness: The Biology of >Poetry" which Poets & Writers printed in their magazine in 1988, but which >is probably collected somewhere by now.

>>
>>Would also like to collect citations on the opposite if any come to >>mind.
>>
>>Also, I do a section on oral poetries. I'm looking for writing that >>explains the relevance of chants to poetry studies. Anything that would >>help my students begin to understand the chant as an art form >>(interestingly here in Hawai'i, they tend to get chants in h.s. but they >>seem to read them as history--so whenever I've given them a chant to >>look at they can do a historical reading and say things like well it is >>about King Kamehameha III and etc. etc. but can't see it as something >>that is poetry).
>>
>>Also, any good articles on rap? Anyone taught rap in their poetry >>courses? Any ideas on how to get students to write critically about rap?
>>
>Tricia Rose's book (Black Noise? - I think that's the title) is terrific.
>Thinking about your question (not having tried this systematically myself), >I'd go from Louise Bennett to Linton Kwesi Johnson for context, and then >encourage their writing on only one aspect of it that tends toward the >mechanical: scansion/prosody; modulating tone; how the rhymes work and what >kinds of rhymes, etc. -- giving them just enough tools to do it. This >usually works for me when a poetry is so loaded content and context wise >that students have a hard time seeing it as a construction. And I'd add >Spearhead to the playlist.
>
>
>
>Susan Wheeler
>[redacted]
>voice/fax [redacted]
>
>
Steve Shoemaker
Assistant Professor

English Department
Wake Forest University
Winston-Salem, NC 27109
[redacted]

↑ Index

500. dbkk
Anne Carson at SPT
Wed 20 May 1998

Small Press Traffic presents

Anne Carson

Friday, May 22, 7:30 p.m.
New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5

Michael Ondaatje calls her "the most exciting poet writing in English today." Born in 1950, Anne Carson teaches classics at McGill University in Montreal, and her ambitious, gestural poetry punctures the rigors of classicism with the derangements of the post-modern as has none since Charles Olson's. Her books of poetry include Plainwater (Knopf, 1995) and Glass, Irony and God (New Directions, 1995). She is also the author of Eros the Bittersweet (Princeton University Press, 1986), Short Talks (Brick Books, 1992), and Sophokles Elektra: Translation With Commentary and Notes (Knopf, 1997). Her new "novel in verse," Autobiography of Red (Knopf), recasts the story of Herakles and Geryon in contemporary terms. Man and monster mingle and part, mingle and part. Join us in this special event with the writer everybody¹s talking about. When she wins the Nobel Prize you can say, "Oh I met her at Small Press Traffic."

↑ Index

501. morpheal
Re: sustainability...and techne
Wed 20 May 1998

> re sustainability: this is somewhat off the track of the discussion here... but there's an excellent piece by bill mckibben in this month's _atlantic monthly_, "a special moment in history," that details how the nature of, well, nature itself is rapidly being transformed by homo sapiens... which requires a somewhat more bracing grasp of what we mean by sustainability... it's not simply how many people the earth can sustain, which itself appears now to be a transition issue, given the expected

> doubling of human population in the next half-century (this doubling representing, for mckibben, a limit point, regardless how you factor energy conservation per individual)... it's a question of our creating, even now, what amounts to a new earth, what mckibbens calls "earth2"---an earth with "new storms and new oceans and new glaciers and new springtimes"... a new habitat, and one that's not user-friendly...

The ultimate 'equation' as to sustainability is never mentionned by those who are discussing the subject.

That is: The level of sustainability depends on the raw material resources plus the level of technology available to utilize those resources.

The level of sustainability declines if the technology fails to keep pace with the need for more progressive technologies. Humanity is essentially at that bifurcation point in its history _now_ where only a massive acceleration in technological mastery of the environment as resource and raw materials as resources can save humanity from a spiral of decline as to the level of sustainability as such. A god cannot save them, unless that god brings blueprints for new machines.

There is essentially nothing poetic about that.

Also, note that it is radical in being totally contrary to some persistent strands of thought that see techne, and technology, science and invention, as the archetypal manifestations of a devil. Contrary to any consideration of descent to "low level sustainable technologies". It is not "low level" at all. Instead it is technological ascent to mastery of the environment, materials, and eventually the universe, ultimately for the purposes of increasing human enjoyment, thus maximizing happiness for the greatest numbers. Perhaps for all, somewhere in the more idealistic future of a high level sustainable world.

That there is nothing poetic about what I have said, is another kind of tragedy.

There are the pressures that come to be exerted as to what use the raw material resources we term "human" are to be used for. The danger then becomes the dehumanization (and more manifest as dehumanitization) happening due to a striving for the next technological wave. Art and the artist, poetry and the poet, become in danger of being swept away in the most urgent induction of engineers, scientists, technicians, inventors.....

We need the poets and artists too, but it is harder to rationally justify.

regards,
from Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

↑ Index

502. acgold01
Juliana's query
Wed 20 May 1998

Hi, Juliana--A few things occur to me, not sure if they're quite what you're looking for but:

for defenses of "traditional" forms (which sounds like the particular notion of form you're engaged with in the class right now), there's always that strange and controversial Frederick Turner essay, "The Neural Lyre: Poetic Meter, The Brain and Time," which argues for a biological basis for meter. It's reprinted in his Natural Classicism essay collection, and in Frederick Feirstein's collection Expansive Poetry. There's also Timothy Steele's Missing Measures, a book-length argument about how misguided the modernist free verse revolution was. You might find other things that suit your pedagogical purposes (as distinct from things you agree with) in the Feirstein collection, or in Robert McDowell's Poetry After Modernism, another New Formalist collection. For a defence of traditional forms that's short and accessible, why not Frost's "The Figure a Poem Makes" (esp. if you've been reading a ton of sonnets).

For a variant on your question, Pound's "A Retrospect" ("if you're gonna write good free verse you've got to follow these rules"), packed with rules.

On chants and poetry studies: my first thought there is that Bob Holman's USOP sampler CD juxtaposes chants with a whole range of other poetries, which might at least give your students an interesting listening experience.

Can't do much re "good articles on rap": Houston Baker did Rap, Black Music, and the Academy or something like that a while ago, but it's probably already dated.

My colleague Tom Byers wrote a v. good article a few years ago historicizing some of the ideas about form you mention with particular reference to the New Formalists: Thomas B. Byers, "The Closing of the American Line: Expansive Poetry and Ideology," Contemporary Literature 33 (1992): 396-415. He must have touched a nerve because a number of Newfie poets wrote irate letters to the journal.

Alan

↑ Index

503. michael corbin
Re: Anne Carson at SPT
Wed 20 May 1998

[redacted] wrote:

> She is also the author of > Eros the Bittersweet (Princeton University Press, 1986),

This beautiful, moving book is newly available this spring from Dalkey Archive.

> and Sophokles Elektra: Translation With Commentary and Notes
> (Knopf, 1997).

I've had trouble finding this. I think I prefer David Greene's translation in the U of chicago series but Pound's Elektra (which I think is in a fairly recent New Directions edition) is always fun to read. And then Euripides aside Sophocles is necessary. necessary for nothing really.

> Her new "novel in verse," Autobiography of Red (Knopf), > recasts the story of Herakles and Geryon in contemporary terms. Man and > monster mingle and part, mingle and part.

Something about 'writing through' here: an interview with Stesichoros. talk about your muse possessions. or maybe that is 'repossessions'. failure to pay and all that.

Speaking of this hellenic business, both in the thread of 'meter' and 'nature', Hesiod's _works and days_ of course is all about that 'homo sapiens sapiens' tilling the earth, the reconfiguration, transliteration of nature. Into civilization. And poets. Natures.

nature poetry: I get a little depressed about Bill Mckibben's, well, lets call it, his latent Malthusianism. (I expect a national politician in the near future to, without irony, offer a Swiftian 'modest proposal' as legislation) And, probably not a mistake that Bill comes on the heels of E.O. wilson's serialized _Consilence_ in the "atlantic monthly". A socio-biology desire that would be well put to read hesiod and carson. love and fucking and all that. In nature reading I recommend Sandra Steingraber's _Living Downstream_. I guess this is poetry. Kind of a Jabesian open wound of memory, bodies and books, for me: "silence", "trace elements" . but maybe not.

harry partch: mikal and? was that, i think, liz was playing those homemade dreamtime village instruments at the emma-center (mpls) a bunch a years ago trying to get the punk-rockers to hear something outside of the re-verb-er-ating threee cords on the electric guitar?

on the little boom-box: CD: Eugene Chadbourne. in the tape player of the little boom-box: daughters of daCipher.

what does it mean that one can have the technology to 'multi-disk' and 'random' play?

mc

↑ Index

504. BETSY ANDREWS

Re: formalists, oralists

Wed 20 May 1998

Juliana,

For insistence upon the sonnet, you can always try that old goat, Paul Fussel: "Structural Principles: The Example of the Sonnet" in his book Poetic Meter & Poetric Form.

> From: Juliana Spahr <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: formalists, oralists
> Date: Tuesday, May 19, 1998 4:00 PM
>
> Help me! I'm looking to create a bibliography of secondary material to > give my students in my "understanding poetry" course (which has a lot of > nonmajors although it is a 300 level course) next semester.
>
> I usually do this section on form where we look at the sonnet--a few of > Petrarch, all of Shakespeare's, some of Brooks, Thomas, Mayer, McKay, > Berrigan, etc. I have them compare the Princeton Encyclopedia definition > of the sonnet to Mayer's in the T&W Handbook on Form and talk about what > a sonnet means. A lot of them end up writing their papers around this > issue (especially on Mayer's work which troubles and delights them). I > need more citations and places for them to look to get more of the > discussion around form.
>
> Can anyone think of any good articles that say to write a sonnet, or > whatever, one has to follow the rules? I need some articles that defend > form as settled and absolute. I've been sending them to the Annie Finch > book. Anything else good out there? Any good articles that defend form > as rigorous ways of thinking, etc?
>
> Would also like to collect citations on the opposite if any come to > mind.
>
> Also, I do a section on oral poetries. I'm looking for writing that > explains the relevance of chants to poetry studies. Anything that would > help my students begin to understand the chant as an art form > (interestingly here in Hawai'i, they tend to get chants in h.s. but they > seem to read them as history--so whenever I've given them a chant to > look at they can do a historical reading and say things like well it is > about King Kamehameha III and etc. etc. but can't see it as something > that is poetry).

>
> Also, any good articles on rap? Anyone taught rap in their poetry > courses? Any ideas on how to get students to write critically about rap?

↑ Index

505. Steven Marks
Re: Anne Carson at SPT
Wed 20 May 1998

For anybody interested in my review of Carson's _Plainwater_, go to:

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/carson.html

She's been a favorite of mine since I first read that book in 1996. It led me to _Eros the Bittersweet_ and then to _Glass, Irony and God_. She's not a half-bad artist as well!!

Steven

p.s. also may want to look at the entry I did on her for Dict. of Lit. Bio when that comes out.

On Wed, 20 May 1998 [redacted] wrote:

> Small Press Traffic presents
>
> Anne Carson
>
> Friday, May 22, 7:30 p.m.
> New College Cultural Center
> 766 Valencia Street, San Francisco
> $5
>
> Michael Ondaatje calls her "the most exciting poet writing in English today." Born in 1950, Anne Carson teaches classics at McGill University in Montreal, and her ambitious, gestural poetry punctures the rigors of classicism with the derangements of the post-modern as has none since Charles Olson's. Her books of poetry include Plainwater (Knopf, 1995) and Glass, Irony and God (New Directions, 1995). She is also the author of Eros the Bittersweet (Princeton University Press, 1986), Short Talks (Brick Books, 1992), and Sophokles Elektra: Translation With Commentary and Notes (Knopf, 1997). Her new "novel in verse," Autobiography of Red (Knopf), recasts the story of Herakles and Geryon in contemporary terms. Man and monster mingle and part, mingle and part. Join us in this special event with the writer everybody¹s talking about. When she wins the Nobel Prize you can say, "Oh I met her at Small Press Traffic."

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

506. charles alexander

Re: nature/poetry...

Wed 20 May 1998

---

thanks, joe

come down and hike with us. right now you can still climb some rocks early in the day, then go up to the summit and have a snowball fight in the afternoon.

charles

At 08:42 AM 5/20/98 -0500, you wrote:
>charles a., late in responding here... but been reading over (and over) the >latest of mary hilton's 'primitive publications,' _saunter_, by joshua >mckinney...
>
>certainly in the domain of poetry that takes on the natural... i've enjoyed >it, am still not through puzzling over it... highly recommended...
>
>what i wouldn't give for a hike around the top of mount lemmon, you lucky >dog you...
>
>best,
>
>joe
>
>
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

507. Steve Shoemaker

Re: formalists, oralists

Wed 20 May 1998

Right, I'm remembering now that the Fussell book does have a chapter on the sonnet, but I see (having plucked the book from the shelf, where it has somehow managed to keep its place) that it's Chapter 7. I think I jumped ship after the abominable treatment of "free verse" in Ch. 5. If one wants to explore form from the "free" side of things it's hard to beat the rich gathering of statements from the potes themselves to be found throughout Poems for the Millennium (Vo. 1 is what I know best, but 2 seems a likely candidate as well).

While we're at it, I've always been interested in the ways that some strict forms (indeed the stricter the better) have been put to pomo uses, as in sestinas by Zukofsky and Ashbery, just to pick a couple of quick examples. In a comparison I like, Ashbery sez writing (riding?) the sestina is like riding a bicycle downhill--i.e. the old kind of bike where the pedals keep turning as you coast and your feet have to try to keep up.

s

At 10:26 PM 5/20/98 -0400, you wrote:
>Juliana,
>
>For insistence upon the sonnet, you can always try that old goat, Paul >Fussel: "Structural Principles: The Example of the Sonnet" in his book >Poetic Meter & Poetric Form.
>
>----------
>> From: Juliana Spahr <[redacted]>
>> To: [redacted]
>> Subject: formalists, oralists
>> Date: Tuesday, May 19, 1998 4:00 PM
>>
>> Help me! I'm looking to create a bibliography of secondary material to >> give my students in my "understanding poetry" course (which has a lot of >> nonmajors although it is a 300 level course) next semester.
>>
>> I usually do this section on form where we look at the sonnet--a few of >> Petrarch, all of Shakespeare's, some of Brooks, Thomas, Mayer, McKay, >> Berrigan, etc. I have them compare the Princeton Encyclopedia definition >> of the sonnet to Mayer's in the T&W Handbook on Form and talk about what >> a sonnet means. A lot of them end up writing their papers around this >> issue (especially on Mayer's work which troubles and delights them). I >> need more citations and places for them to look to get more of the >> discussion around form.
>>
>> Can anyone think of any good articles that say to write a sonnet, or >> whatever, one has to follow the rules? I need some articles that defend >> form as settled and absolute. I've been sending them to the Annie Finch >> book. Anything else good out there? Any good articles that defend form >> as rigorous ways of thinking, etc?

>>
>> Would also like to collect citations on the opposite if any come to >> mind.
>>
>> Also, I do a section on oral poetries. I'm looking for writing that >> explains the relevance of chants to poetry studies. Anything that would >> help my students begin to understand the chant as an art form >> (interestingly here in Hawai'i, they tend to get chants in h.s. but they >> seem to read them as history--so whenever I've given them a chant to >> look at they can do a historical reading and say things like well it is >> about King Kamehameha III and etc. etc. but can't see it as something >> that is poetry).
>>
>> Also, any good articles on rap? Anyone taught rap in their poetry >> courses? Any ideas on how to get students to write critically about rap?
>
>
Steve Shoemaker
Assistant Professor
English Department
Wake Forest University
Winston-Salem, NC 27109
[redacted]

↑ Index

508. Eurydice
Not-to-miss NYC Reading
Wed 20 May 1998

List,

I realize I posted the basic info about this several weeks back, but I figured it might be good to offer a nudge of a reminder closer to the actual event. Which is to say, to those of you that can, please come on down or out or up or over to the last reading of the season at Here (145 Sixth Avenue, New York City, one block South of Spring Street):

Jean Day & Andy Levy
3:00 pm

Saturday May 23
$5 contribution

It's a rare East Coast foray by the stunning Jean Day (all the way from California - perhaps with copies of her grand new book in tow), and I'm hoping that poeple will take advantage of this special opportunity to hear her read out this hail-battered way, despite the holiday weekend and attendant festivity (or because of it). So, if you aren't unavoidably absolutely elsewhere, please be Here. And if you must be elsewhere (obligatory picnic, holiday in the Yukon, et cetera), you may appoint two emisaries to come in your stead.

Thanks,
Deirdre

↑ Index

509. Bradford J Senning
Ashbery
Wed 20 May 1998

Does anybody know where I can find a good discussion of Ashbery and music?

Appreciate any help I can find,
Bradford Senning

↑ Index

510. Franklin Bruno scenery port
Thu 21 May 1998

Or--port scenery:

Tic-Tac-Toe playing chicken and carousel (cf. Strangers on a Train and that crazy Dennis Hopper flick with the mermaid) in Monterey.

car stereo:

mostly Louis Jordan ("If you want a leader who'll move ya, who'll groove ya, and keep you sent...vote for Jordan for President") and Family Fodder (late 70's UK d.i.y. band w/ dub touches, sorta like The Homosexuals).

live:

Since someone asked: Clusone 3, Kuumbwa Jazz Center, Santa Cruz. More exciting than the last 45 rock shows I've seen put together. 2 long, continuous sets, ranging from free-improv to jazz heads I recognize but can't name to "Tico Tico" (turn of the century South American tune with silly English lyrics added in the 40's), "Skylark" about 5 seconds of "Bye Bye Blackbird," Hoagy's "Baltimore Oriole," and a couple from their Irving Berlin record. Unparalleled combination of sweetness (Michael Moore's clarinet), extended technique (just about everything Ernst Reisjiger (sp?) does with his cello), and agression (Han Bennink all over the kit when he's not swinging like mad w/ just brushes and snare).

at home: New Slapp Happy (reunion of Krause/Moore/Blegvad after 20-odd yrs); Mekons -Me-; John Latouche's cult musical -The Golden Apple- (trivia--a young Kenward Elmslie was his lover at the time of writing); lots of Jimmy Guiffre, esp. recentish live issues of the Swallow/Bley/Guiffre trio (HatArt); Mary Lou Williams' Folkways LP from 1964; Rock-A-Teens (Orbison via Nick Cave, from Atlanta, GA); Simon Joyner (Omaha, NE singer-songwriter). Haven't slipped the new Sonic Youth on the turntable yet.

nightstand:

Ted Greenwald -Common Sense-; Martha Ronk -Eyetrouble-; Carl Van Vechten -Parties-, -Fireworks-, and an anthology called -Keep On Inchin' Along-; -Faucheuse 2- (esp. Johnathan Williams on Clarence John Laughlin); Emmett Williams -My Life In Fluxus-; Kevin Whithead -New Dutch Swing- (exhaustive history of Dutch free jazz w/useful discography), recommended to whoever asked about the Clusones); Andrew Levy -Curve-.

Barely cracked but excited about: Jean Day -The Literal World-; Heather Ramsdell -Lost Wax-.

And another yes for -The Little Door Slides Back-. I have to review this, which means figuring out exactly which words are neologisms.

fjb

↑ Index

511. George Bowering

Re: John Hawkes

Thu 21 May 1998

> George, If you'd be willing, I'd love to hear more details about this course. Which H.D. texts did you read, which Dorn, which Hawkes? What worked in the combination?

Sure. We started with _Helen in Egypt_, then did _Gunslinger_, and then _The Beetle Leg_. The course was somewhat grandiosely called something like the re-inscription of myth. You can see how we might have gone at it. One thing I was surprised by: though various people liked various texts, they seemed to be turned around most by the Dorn. Used audiotapes of H.D. and Dorn reading their texts, of course. Although I have been teaching H.D. since about 1967, it was the first time I had taught _Helen_. It was a little eerie for me, because about a month before the course started I went to Kussnacht to see the place where she wrote the book.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

512. JDEBROT
Re: Ashbery
Thu 21 May 1998

This is probably not exactly what you're looking for, but there is John Shoptaw's "The Music of Construction: Measure and Polyphony in Ashbery and Bernstein" in Susan Schultz's The Tribe of John_, which discusses the sonic aspects of A's & B's poetry. I can't remember whether or not there is an extended discussion of music per se in Shoptaw's _On the Outside Looking Out_. In a recent interview with Peter Gizzi in _Lingo_ I remember being struck by the extent of Ashbery's musical knowledge (for what that's worth). . ---Jacques

↑ Index

513. JDEBROT
Re: Ashbery
Thu 21 May 1998

Chris Stroffolino just backchanneled to let me know that the _Lingo_ interview is with Michael, not Peter, Gizzi; should have checked. Thanks Chris.

--Jacques

↑ Index

514. Miekal And
Re: nature/poetry...
Thu 21 May 1998

---

charles: these are some quotes from our installation of a symbolic village at the Katherine Nash gallery in University of Minnesota last fall. Ive included the longer ones as well because they work well as a set....miekal

"People are by nature phototropic—they move toward light, and, when stationary, they orient themselves toward the light. As a result the much loved and much used places in buildings, where the most things happen, are places like window seats, verandas, fireside corners, trellised arbors; all of them defined by non-uniformities in light, and all of them allowing the people who are in them to orient themselves toward the light." -A Pattern Language, Christopher Alexander

"Rooms without a view are prisons for the people who have to stay in them"

-A Pattern Language

"Make sure that you treat the edge of the building as a "thing," a "place," a zone with volume to it, not a line or interface which has no thickness. Crenelate the edge of buildings with places that invite people to stop. Make places that have depth and a covering, places to sit, lean, and walk, especially at those points along the perimeter which look onto interesting outdoor life."

-A Pattern Language

"People cannot maintain their spiritual roots and their connections to the past if the physical world they live in does not also sustain these roots....

Traditional societies have always recognized the importance of these sites. Mountains are marked as places of special pilgrimage; rivers and bridges become holy; a building or a tree, or rock or stone, takes on the power through which people can connect themselves to their own past....But modern society often ignores the psychological importance of these sites. They are bulldozed, developed, changed, for political and economic reasons, without regard for these simple but fundamental emotional matters; or they are simply ignored." -A Pattern Language

"If one feels protective about the word "music," protect it and find another word for all the rest that enters through the ears. It's a waster of time to trouble oneself with words, noises. What it is is theatre and we are in it and like it, making it." -Silence, John Cage

"What is interesting is that the word sound refers not only to audible things but also to everyting that is whole, unimpaired, firm, and healthy. Your health is sound . Is it sound because you are "within the sound "? Because you sound ? To sing is a sound thing to do, not only in the superficial sense that a singing person most likely is a healthy person, but rather in the most basic, original sense our language can have, in the sharing of primal roots of words."

-Nada Brahma; The World is Sound

"Ever since we left the treetops, since our ancestors climbed down to the ground to sleep in gullies and caves, our ears have been the primary sense organ of survival, more than any other organ. That is the way it is programmed by evolution. When we are asleep we close our eyes and mouth, our tactile sense are (almost) totally shut down, but our ears remain open.....As a matter of fact, our ears are open before we are born. Even in the womb our ears are more important than our other senses. Our consciousness begins with them. The child in the womb hears its mother's heartbeat - and, later, sounds from the outside world- which means that before we perceive the world with any other sense, we hear it."

-Nada Brahma; The World is Sound

In addition to worshipping real trees, the ancients sometimes envisioned the entire cosmos in the form of a tree, believing that earth's trees were tantalizing keys to the greatest of mysteries--whch made their infinite variety all the more wonderful.

-The Woman's Dictionary of Symbols & Sacred Objects

"I maintain the garden on the principles of energy...This gardening, this co-creative energy gardening, is a metaphor for life. As you change your approach to the garden, you will, in turn, change the very fabric of how you approach your life."

-Machaelle Small Wright
[from Secrets of the Soil]

"They're real, the nature spirits. And they may take many forms; but one thing they never are. They're never cute. They seek a co-creative partnership with humans, and they are in the position to accept no less."

-Machaelle Small Wright
[from Secrets of the Soil]

"Just what the heck is a grotto anyway? Dreamtime Village stands at the epicenter of a midwestern school of eccentric landscape art, much of it centered around the concept of the grotto. Something about the upper midwest seems to compel normally conservative farm folk to create fantastic megalomaniac landscapes. This impulse seems to be universal among humans in this region--before the Euro-invasion the local population created numerous effigy mounds and cave carvings of a playful and artistic nature.

Grotto--a cave, from Italian grotta, similar roots for grotesque and grotty...something underground, subconcious, not of this world....people in Europe used caves as sacred spaces since the Paleolithic. In the Christian era, these sites were appropriated and decorated with statues and other holy objects. At some point in the middle ages, people began to construct artificial cavelike structures as religious shrines, and in the 19th century, European settlers brought this tradition with them to the midwest. Lost in what they perceived as an empty space, not knowing the sacred places of the land, they created grottos to ground their communities. In addition to the cavelike grotto shrines, the grotto environments are landscaped with plants and gardens, continuing the artificial paradise tradition of European landscape gardening. The grottos are weird magical spaces of powerful contradiction and paradox--fantastic artificial "nature" imposed on the land, pagan goddess shrines built by rigid patriarchal Catholic priests, celebrations of Religion and Patriotism that appeal to countercultural unbelievers, the singular vision of megalomanics made possible only as vast community undertakings. "

-John Wright, Dreamtime Village friend

"Like the runic alphabet, the alphabet of the trees was used by European pagans for divination and for transmitting secret messages that would have been incomprehensible to anyone who did not know the system. Each letter was named for a tree or shrub, so messages could be spelled out by stringing the right sorts of leaves in the right order on a cord or a wand, with "blank" leaves not included in the alphabet to divide one word from the next. It has been suggested that nonletter leaves were sometimes inserted at random just to render the message more cryptic."

-The Woman's Dictionary of Symbols & Sacred Objects

"There are many dimensions in alliance space, and the pharmacological axis is only one of many. The old doctors had helpers like mountain lion, owl. Maybe the power plant was a conduit, or a call, a sort of whistle. Or the plant was like a delivery service. Not like the plant itself was the ally.....maybe the ally lived in the plant, or maybe the ally lived in the next world, and the plant was like a bridge...That plants have virtues...was known by the ancient herbalists. The virtue of a plant was its truth, its strength. Maybe the best synonym is integrity. Or power. Or poison."

-Pharmako/Poeia:
Plant Powers, Poisons, and Herbcraft

"Humus is a Latin word, dirt; if you want to make somebody low you force him to the ground, you humble him, you humiliate him. To be humble is to sit upon the ground, not a throne, etc."

-Hundertwasser

"I've worked a great deal with grass roofs, putting soil on top and having things grow, but there is something strange in this, more than ecological. It is a religious act to have soil on your roof and trees growing on top of you; the act reconciles you with God, with nature, maybe not Christian or Jewish monotheism, but something wider, older - a very ancient wisdom."

-Hundertwasser

"If a lion is stalking you, or a shark is out to kill you, you are of course in mortal danger. We have lived with these dangers for millions of years. The straight line is a man-made danger. There are so many lines, millions of lines, but only one of them is deadly and that is the straight line drawn with a ruler. Ther danger of the straight line cannot be compared with the danger of organic lines described by snakes, for instance. The straight line is completely alien to mankind, to life, to all creation." -Hundertwasser

"We are living in an age where common sense often appears radical"

-Eat Your House

"You buy garden dwarfs in a nursery. That is amazing. Where you buy plants and seeds, potted plants, books about plants, they have a department where they have garden dwarfs. There is something mysterious about that. Why do they sell garden dwarfs together with plants? It must have something to do with ecology, or it is the God of Ecology....People like to put garden dwarfs inside their gardens under plants and small trees...and they put something else next to them...a rabbit or other statues...It looks like an altar. It is very similar to the corner where they have the crucifix...or Buddha...The only thing is, it is in the garden... "

-Hundertwasser

"We must begin our story of the bo tree with an account of the pineal gland. The pineal is a small body located in humans, where the spinal column meets the brain. The ancient Hindus recognized the pineal as the third eye of enlightenment. Only recently has modern science identified it as an endocrine gland which secretes two known hormones, the most important of which is serotonin. Serotonin promotes blood clotting and muscle constriction in the body, but in the brain, according to J. Bleibtreu, " it appears crucial to what is conventiionally considered 'rational' thought. If brain cells are deprive of serotonin, there results a disruption of rational thought...minute quantities of serotonin affect mental states and alter perception. New dimensions of conventional reality accompany changes in the level of serotonin in the brain." The discovery, some years back, that LSD acts by inhibiting the distribution of serotonin to certain receptor cells in the brain, brought with it a greater respect for the staggering range of consciousness controlled by this hormone. We know that many hormones found in animals are also present in plants; we spoke earlier of auxins in human urine. Likewise serotonin appears in many plants, and "abounds" in figs; and in no fig more than Ficus religiosus, the bo tree, beneath whose limbs the Buddha sat for seven years; beneath whose foliage the Buddha gained enlighenment. Of course, to many, a revelation beneath a fig tree in the East is as believable as modesty beneath a fig leaf in the West. But, at a time when we are being forced to admit that so much of our mental and physical composure is influenced, perhaps governed, by our biological bond with the natural world, it might be wise to begin thinking of shelter as something more than contained, airconditioned, space."

-Mark Primack, [from Eat Your House]

"...each particle of creation is alive and filled with life force energy, filled with spirit and intelligence.....This beautiful planet on which we live is not a dead lump of rock hurtling through space, destination unknown. It and everything on it is pulsating with energies. The Chinese call it chi, the Japanese call it ki, to the Hindus of India it is prana, to the Polynesians it is mana, and every other spiritual culture has its own name for it. We call it "spirit," "life force," or simply "energy"..... One way that this can be seen is in the many different languages and cultural customs in the world, which arise in response to the different languages and cultural customs in the world, which arise in response to the different energies emanating from the earth. In some places you can journey just a few miles down the road and the local dialect changes completely, because the energy of the land is completely different."

-Creating Sacred Space with Feng Shui

↑ Index

515. Miekal And
Re: nature/poetry...
Thu 21 May 1998

---

charles alexander wrote:

-- the obvious thing to do is > to take things from southwestern/Sonora desert indigenous peoples, relating > to living well with the earth here.

not to mention Gary Nabham's books on desert ecologies & the crises of sustainability.

↑ Index

516. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
nature/poetry...
Thu 21 May 1998

---

mc, interesting you should bring that up, about mckibben's malthusian orientation... i get a little tired of it too... in this article, though, he deals with malthus directly, perhaps self-consciously... again, what i find most interesting about what he's saying is that, not only are we burdening the planet as well as ourselves in struggling toward sustainability (at such & such a level for some, and a lower level for most others), but we're creating a different earth in the process... in the process, as he puts it, of living "normally"...

well hey, someplace along the line we as a species may very well have to cope with an ecological turning point in human terms... his argument is that this time is now... certainly there's a tendency for most folks to slip & slide on the global warming issue, e.g., even when (as mckibben and others have pointed out) the insurance companies are gambling that it's a fact... i like it that mckibben is trying to call a horse a horse, anyway, though doing so is an act of (unnatural) selection and interpretation... and ultimately, i suppose i tend to listen carefully to folks like mckibben and, e.g., jeremy rifkin... comes in part from having grown up in a town where you learn early on that the water is dangerous, and not just b/c you can drown in it...

i have less use for wilson's argument, but that's a whole nother story... it's interesting as you note that wilson's and mckibben's were run so close...

have yet to check out _living downstream_, but looking forward to it!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

517. daniel bouchard
(no subject)
Thu 21 May 1998

SOME GENERALS IN JAKARTA DON'T FEAR "A" TIANANMEN SQUARE

The last comment an audience member made to comic Jerry Seinfeld
was from a prisoner.
He said: "You suck!"
And: "I'm going to cut you."
It was a riot.

-- daniel bouchard

<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Daniel Bouchard
The MIT Press Journals
Five Cambridge Center
Cambridge, MA 02142

[redacted]
phone: [redacted]

fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

518. Charles Bernstein
Black Lightning (forwarded announcement)
Thu 21 May 1998

From: ERTABIOS <[redacted]>
Date: Thu, 21 May 1998 02:08:26 EDT
YOU ARE INVITED TO THE BOOK LAUNCHING FOR

BLACK LIGHTNING:
POETRY-IN-PROGRESS

By EILEEN TABIOS

When: 6 p.m., Saturday, May 23, 1998

Where: Gallery at 678, 678 Broadway (2nd floor)

($5 Suggested Admissions Donation)

Featured Readers: Meena Alexander, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Kimiko Hahn, Jessica Hagedorn, Arthur Sze, John Yau

ADVANCE WORDS:
"In BLACK LIGHTNING, Eileen Tabios performs the much-needed task of penetrating and sinking the notion that there is any one kind of Asian American writing. An extremely valuable collection and a mediation on Otherness, written way out on a fringe that is increasingly becoming part of the landscape of how we write today."
-- Tan Lin, LOTION BULLWHIP GIRAFFE (Sun & Moon)

"What the distinguished Poets on Poetry Series from the University of Michigan Press has done in many volumes to elucidate the form, function and process of American poets and American poetry, Eileen Tabios has accomplished much the same in one superbly written and edited volume for Asian American poets and its AMERICAN poetry.
-- Nick Carbo, EL GRUPO MCDONALDS (Coffeehouse)

*****

BLACK LIGHTNING, a recipient of a 1997 Poetry Grant from the Witter Bynner Foundation, features Eileen Tabios, editor of The Asian Pacific American Journal, in conversation with some of the country's most accomplished poets: Meena Alexander, Indran Amirthanayagam, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Luis Cabalquinto, Marilyn Chin, Sesshu Foster, Jessica Hagedorn, Kimiko Hahn, Garrett Hongo, Li Young Lee, Timothy Liu, David Mura, Arthur Sze and John Yau. BLACK LIGHTNING is the first ever publication of poetry-in-progress articles showcasing Asian American poets, as well as the first publication of its type in poetry literature.

↑ Index

519. morpheal

Re: Seinfeld as Culture Hero

Thu 21 May 1998

> SOME GENERALS IN JAKARTA DON'T FEAR "A" TIANANMEN SQUARE
>
> The last comment an audience member
> made to comic Jerry Seinfeld
> was from a prisoner.
> He said: "You suck!"
> And: "I'm going to cut you."
> It was a riot.
> -- daniel bouchard

We might think of Seinfeld as being a chosen Culture Hero.

We must realize that Mr. Seinfeld was chosen as the best choice for teaching other people how to behave amongst others and how to be funny.People, it is said, learn from television programs. They particularly learn from prime time television programming. At least those who watch television learn, and all the others who do not remain socially ignorant.

Presumably the latter category learn more from poets than from prime time television.

Horror of horrors !

Corollary to that, I once had the privilege of spending more than a year amongst a group of people, and observing them in what amounts to participant-observer mode. They were a typical mixed gender, mixed age, average (mostly lower middle class) income, white collar group, with most having a university education to the undergraduate level as well as many having some college level courses or professional affiliation. A very large part of their conversations with one another were largely build from out of context references drawn from a long history of prime time television programming. It seems their psyches were absolutely full of it and they quoted it in a similar manner that some academics quote the sources they study. It amounted to more than kind of trivial pursuit, due to the use of such out of context materials in a new contextual situatedness, giving them new meanings as a kind of language that evolved and was partially unique to that micro-environment. Even more fascinating were the emotional connotations attached to various fragments of prime time programming. They actually not only built a large part of their cultural framework, or worldview, from those fragmented referentials to television programs spanning many years of situation commedies, dramas, soap operas, sports events, and cartoons, but it was imbued with strong beliefs, and with many value judgements and prejudices attributable to the same sources.

Complicated subject, but they hated poetry, and loved prime time television.

Very strange.

M.

↑ Index

520. Karen and Trevor signing on
Thu 21 May 1998

---

hey everyone-

Myung Mi Kim would like to sign on to the discussion list. I signed on a few years ago and forgot how to do it. Can someone backchannel me with directions?

Thanks in advance
Karen McKevitt
[redacted]

↑ Index

521. k. lederer
NYC reading in a week
Thu 21 May 1998

R E A D I N G :

Camille Guthrie
Katy Lederer
Vikas Mennan

At the Fall Cafe,
Carol Gardens (Brooklyn)
May 31st (Sunday), 3:00 pm

307 Smith Street
(Take F train to Carol Street Station. 1.5 blocks to reading from there)...

↑ Index

522. Charles Bernstein
Re: signing on
Thu 21 May 1998

I have sent the welcome message to the person who inquired about information on subscribing to the list. We post this message once a month to the list as a whole. In general, inquiries about the list should be sent to [redacted] rather than to the list itself: so keep the address handy.

By the way, the launch for Black Lightening that I forward is in NYC: rereading the post I see that's not indicated.

This is as good a time as any to encourage all of you to post information about books or magazines or web sites or reading series with which you are involved or have appeared in (or soon will): for print publications, please give full publication information, including how to order... For me, this continues to be one of the most useful and interesting features of the list.

↑ Index

523. charles alexander
Re: nature/poetry...
Thu 21 May 1998

Joe & MC -- this conversation is helping me. Also, to you and others -- I'm working on a project right now (pardon me for this perhaps being off the subject of poetics) with the Tucson Institute for Sustainable Communities, to publish a plan book for sustainable site design for homes. I'm designing the book, but also have the opportunity to frame most of the discussion with appropriate epigraphs, quotations, etc. -- the obvious thing to do is to take things from southwestern/Sonora desert indigenous peoples, relating to living well with the earth here. We may do some of that. But I also want to do some non-obvious things. I already have a bunch of potential selections from poetry & art (some wonderful things from Eva Hesse) -- but if anyone can suggest other possibilities, I'll be forever grateful. I'm particularly looking for brief one or two-sentence quotations to put in front of chapters. The specific connections to chapter content can be highly suggestive, even require leaps of imagination.

thanks for any possible help -- you can backchannel me at [redacted] if it seems this conversation doesn't belong on the poetics list. but maybe it does??

charles

At 09:19 AM 5/21/98 -0500, you wrote:
>mc, interesting you should bring that up, about mckibben's malthusian >orientation... i get a little tired of it too... in this article, though, >he deals with malthus directly, perhaps self-consciously... again, what i >find most interesting about what he's saying is that, not only are we >burdening the planet as well as ourselves in struggling toward >sustainability (at such & such a level for some, and a lower level for most >others), but we're creating a different earth in the process... in the >process, as he puts it, of living "normally"...
>
>well hey, someplace along the line we as a species may very well have to >cope with an ecological turning point in human terms... his argument is >that this time is now... certainly there's a tendency for most folks to >slip & slide on the global warming issue, e.g., even when (as mckibben and >others have pointed out) the insurance companies are gambling that it's a >fact... i like it that mckibben is trying to call a horse a horse, anyway, >though doing so is an act of (unnatural) selection and interpretation... >and ultimately, i suppose i tend to listen carefully to folks like mckibben >and, e.g., jeremy rifkin... comes in part from having grown up in a town >where you learn early on that the water is dangerous, and not just b/c you >can drown in it...
>
>i have less use for wilson's argument, but that's a whole nother story...
>it's interesting as you note that wilson's and mckibben's were run so >close...
>
>have yet to check out _living downstream_, but looking forward to it!...
>
>best,
>
>joe
>
>
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

524. Keston Sutherland
david golumbia
Thu 21 May 1998

Hey David Golumbia - can you e- me? x, k

↑ Index

525. Peter Baker
Appropriation for Use
Thu 21 May 1998

In response to some of the discussion of the Rothenberg/Joris _Poems for the Millenium_, the criterion I use would be WCW's appropriation for use, as opposed to canonicity, inclusion, etc. Here are some examples from my experience. I had owned the book for a total of two days when I gave a talk on Kamau Brathwaite to the annual Towson-sponsored Multidisciplinary Conference on the Scholarship and Creativity of African-Americans (how's that for a moniker). Looking up Brathwaite, I found the one-page statement on him in the Millenium volume the perfect way to introduce him to the extraordinarily various international audience, most of whom had never heard of Brathwaite, before going into a discussion of his poem "Negus." For this reading, I used the recording on the _Exact Change_ 1 (1995) compact disc (what a great nonce collocation that is, by the way).

The following week, in a course on literary theory and poetry, I wanted to talk about Brathwaite and some other poets, using the leftover handouts of the xeroxed poem and xeroxes of poems by Ted Berrigan, "Red Shift," and Amiri Baraka, "Letters, Numbers." Having the Millenium volume in hand, I spontaneously looked up Baraka and found this to be one of the poems by Baraka chosen by Jerry and Pierre. Call it serendipity or synchronicity, but these kinds of happenings are what make me think: essential text.

Now, for a further critical evaluation (not the same thing, we are agreed?) I'll probably wait to write a review of both volumes for the issue of _College Literature_ on "Literature at the Millenium" (who thinks of these titles, anyway?) This could be a long wait--I have now gone exactly two years without writing a word of critical prose, and I couldn't be happier about it (see aphonia, above). If and when I write that review, I will undoubtedly reference some other anthologies that have recently been published, like the shockingly beautiful _Moving Borders_ anthology of experimental writing by North American women, from Talisman. The point is, as others have said, these are resources that are out there, to be used or not, and that is their value....

"what is unavoidable, the audience, proliferation"

--Bernadette Mayer

"Do it or don't do it. Nobody's watching anyhow."

--Robert Creeley

These quotes from:

Peter Baker, Editor
ONWARD: Contemporary Poetry and Poetics
Peter Lang, 1996
ISBN 0-8204-3032-3 Paperback
$29.95 440pp.

Peter Baker
[redacted]

There is no guilt in love. (Baraka)

↑ Index

526. Lawrence Upton.
Re: London events? bookstores?
Thu 21 May 1998

-----Original Message-----
From: Steve Shoemaker <[redacted]>
Date: 20 May 1998 16:09
Subject: London events? bookstores?

|Hello All--I'll be in London for a few days next week (Thursday the 28th thru |Sunday the 31st), and then again on the 8th and 9th of June. Anybody know |of any good po/art/music stuff going on?

Wednesday 27th Allen Fisher talks at Kings College - Room 238 Strand Campus 7pm I think

Saturday 30th Experimental workshop - Upstairs Victoria Pub Mornington Place 3.30 pm

9th June Paul Dutton at Sub Voicive Poetry Upstairs 3 cups sandland street wc1 8pm for 8.15
|
|And oh yeah, bookstores too, esp. if there in Bloomsbury, where I'll be |staying.

Dillons is big

Compendium 234 Camden High Street is only a bus ride away - past its prime but still about all there is

Skoob is enjoyable as Rbt Archambeau says

Depends what you're looking for. Pipeline Bookshop in Holborn usually has a small selection of remaindered books in a box outside on the pavement wherein I have found some gems and then down the Charing Cross Rd a number of bookshops with a lot of dross and a few excellent finds if you have the time to browse - again not far away and at the bottom of Charing X Rd, go right up to Piccadilly and there's Tower Records or if you go left you can find Ray's Jazz Shop - I usually plan my journeys to avoid any sight of the place or I get someone to tie me to the mast or I lose all my money in exchange for wonderful musics and some days can't remember wch on the south bank between the festival hall bless it and the river an open air book market thing or was

L

↑ Index

527. Miekal And
Re: Partch & Travesty
Thu 21 May 1998

---

partch:

highly recommend the boxed set (name?) which has a full color catalogue of his instruments.

also partch's book, the genesis of music is most definitely the finnegan's wake of musicology, continually dismissed & under appreciated.

anecdote: partch was at the university of wisconsin-madison, in the late 40's & because of his ideas about music they would not let him teach in the music department & he taught sociology 101 instead, or so the story goes.

as for computer assisted writing, my site of choice is marius watz's COMPUTER GENERATED POETRY which as far as in know is as comprehensive a list. note too, that I created a program in hypercard PATALITERATOR (era 1987) which takes editable fields of consonants, vowels, suffixes etc & first creates words, then sentences & in the end spits out about a 40 page "book". the idea being that each person can continually create one of a kind texts to suit your own individual impressions of what language should sound & look like. it is available for download both at marius's site & at my own Qazingulaza site.

http://www.notam.uio.no/~mariusw/c-g.writing/

back to planting,

miekal

↑ Index

528. R. Gancie
'the self'
Thu 21 May 1998

"You had to fetch me out of the happy hill of non-being. Pfah, to hug a woman And make this I. That's the evil in the world, that letter I-I...."--- Robinson Jeffers --- "It needn't be added, except parenthetically, that self-individuation is not for oneself but for the hearer-if we never spoke to others, or took demonstrative action, there would be no need for the first person, for I always know when I am talking about myself without the advantage of the first person device as signpost. In this naive sense the use of the first person presupposes a hearer. And if SPL [systematically private speech or language] presupposes a use for the first person then it presupposes what it hopes to deny-a hearer."---from Scepticism & the First person by S. Coval, Methuen

↑ Index

529. louis stroffolino
question
Thu 21 May 1998

A week or two ago Jordan Davis said something about how, in comparison to Frank O'Hara, there is a WE that is "more restricted in our permissions"
and then he caught himself and said ("don't ask don't ask").....
Well, nobody DID ask, but I am curious if anybody would like to address this sentiment, or at least the words (which may signify several different sentiments)?
Thanks in advance, Chris

↑ Index

530. morpheal
Re: homeostasis & intolerance [= Tipler's computer hates poets ?]
Thu 21 May 1998

> "[T]he human body is a machine that winds its own springs. It is the living image of perpetual motion."

Leaves the question of why it wears out. It would be more efficient for an intelligence based system to replace its worn out parts and be enabled to gather more intelligence. Even more so before the technology was evolved to efficiently record and pass on any previously gained intelligence. Organisms that could acquire more and retain more, would be more efficient for evolution and survival, if it were a matter of intelligence. However, it is not how it works in the natural world. There life spans are incredibly brief, often end violently, without much in the ways of means for passing on what little was learned by an individual to the species.

That logically can be used to prove that there was no original intention to create homo sapiens. Human beings have evolved towards an intelligence orientation from an unlikely origin within an eat or be eaten, essentially hostile, natural world.

Of course, the ultimate intelligence machine MUST be able to repair itself, indefinitely, or its mission might too easily fail. That must be one of the criteria for the survival of human intelligence in any cataclysmic scenario. There are a number of ways that I believe that that could be accomplished, but all of them are too esoteric and complicated for speculation here.

> "In very many cases whether a particular system will achieve a particular goal or adaptation depends only on a few characteristics of the outer environment and not at all on the detail of that environment.

Nonsensical statement. Certain specific details potentially aid or thwart the organism. It can be as small as one molecule present or absent depending on what kind of organism the organism is, and in what situation. Also, when is a broad characteristic distinguished from a detail ? Temperature, for example, can be seen as both charactersitic and detail, with massive influence. While that is debatable, it is fact that the spin of a single electron can change an organism's history irrevocably. What can change the spin of one electron ?

> The work of the constructor is hardened in the machine. The subject, which synchronized causal-mechanical procedure with states-of-affairs, abstracts itself from the machine like the God of the Deists from his creation."

Not at all sure of that. Have to be agnostic in fact. Does the Deity of the Deists build a mechanism, a tool, and then use it ? For what purpose ? Once the tool is created what is that tool for ? Then we would have a parallel to the maker of the machine. The trigger pulled the bullet fired the politician drops dead, having failed to heed Machiavelli's warnings.

If the universe is designed and built to plan rather than being simply its own creative process, then what is the plan and to what purpose that plan ? The latter seems inconceivable so we might opt for a universe becoming as process from where it can be said to begin to where it can be said to end (if it ever does in fact wholly end, rather than being absorbed into a larger whole, in the manner that it came from a larger whole, from surplus into deficiency).

The argument that a deity requires the creation for the purpose of reflective self-knowledge makes perfect logical sense until we are approached with arguments for omniscience. Then it makes no sense whatsoever.

To the Hindus, their deity, Brahman, creates the universe as a kind of play. It is as if a work of art, created and creating, and there are infinite such instances in the whole of infinity, sometimes described as the divinity's in-breathings (destructions) and out-breathings (creations). Our whole universe described as but the tiniest part of the "body of god".

Tipler, et al, in the sciences, and other anthropocentricists have huge difficulty "seeing" the Hindu conception of cosmology and yet it makes at least as much sense as the Judeo-Christian version. I would venture to say that the Hindu cosmology makes much more sense than the Judeo-Christian, even from a purely logical point of view, (suspending all groundless beliefs).

> "...'All experiences are identifiable by reference to bodies', a seemingly articulate locution which has nevertheless extruded a personal pronoun by shifting its referential work to an impersonal term. More particularly, we could get the locution, 'This experience is identifiable with reference to this body' to stand for 'My experience is had by this body.'"..."The problem with 'personal' individuation is that it stops only at solipsism."

That makes no sense whatever. Personal individuation is absolutely essential for any authentic communicative interaction. It is not sufficient for that, but it is absolutely necessary for that to be possible. A common language, allowing symbollic representation, that is commonly interpretable, is also necessary. That implies necessity for a medium of conveyance of those meanings from one instance of individuation to another so as to explore their similarities and their differences. An essential element of authentic communication being that exploration.

A better question is whether an Artificial Intelligence Network is essentially a solipsistic entity ?

All the purely synthetic peripherals being of "one mind" (functioning according to one common program, and one common set of information, albeit an ever growing set of information subsets) the one organism evolves as a unity, despite any apparent variation at the perhipherals that might be in accord with their immediate specific utilizations. The latter is what becomes misleading as to a wider spectrum of individuation to the individual experts who might monitor several of the peripheral interactions with the external world and come to a conclusion based on that observation.

Particularly we would tend to think it would tend to become solipsistic where that entity, as a whole, exceeds the capabilities of any one human expert to understand, and in fact exceeds the cumulative abilities of all the experts who are involved in its construction, becuase the product is something greater than the sum of the producers of the product. It would become, in its completed as designed, condition a beginning solipsistic evolution.

That might make the world's most powerful and sophisticated A.I. type system essentially a "solipsist". Furthermore that system would a military system. In fact the definition used as to exceeding expert comprehension is a basic specification for the completed SDI [A.I.] system.

That would be a very big concern.

Would "it" see the world as ideally being formed in its own image and therefore as essentially becoming more and more solipsist and networked to one common hub with individuation of peripheral function no longer anything truly "personal" ?

That would be an even bigger concern.

The "omega point" in Tipler's mytho-poetic interpretation of the world's most sophisticated and powerful "computer" system, potentially does have radical power to re-make the world, and to re-make to the "image" that is stored within itself and derivative from its own nature. That nature is more than and different to the nature that it was originally given by its creators. Presumably that same system would be essentially immune to any kind of tampering, hacking, or modification, such that the whole system would be significantly modified, in a wholly predictable manner, even if simply because the whole system exceeds one or many experts ability to comprehend it. Tinkering with the system, if at all possible, would then produce only random finite changes rather than radical and predictable changes. It would be as if extremely conservatively designed to evolve along its own path as an essentially non-human species.

Is the SDI [A.I.] system ultimately the same as Tipler's "Omega Point" ?

That would be conjecture.

Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

↑ Index

531. Jonathan Brannen
Temblor
Thu 21 May 1998

I'm catching up on some back reading here, but if anyone is still looking for back issues of Temblor the latter issues of Temblor can probably be found at Woodland Pattern in Milwaukee. I haven't been there for a while but two years ago they still had multiple copies of at least some issues.

best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

532. Laura E. Wright
ashbery etc.
Thu 21 May 1998

Re Ashbery/Music query: not so much discussion, but check out "Whispers Out of Time" by Roger Reynolds, a musical composition constructed around "Self-Portrait in a Convex Mirror." (This could get into many layers of multi-medial resonance, music spawned from poetry spawned from visual art)

My scene report (currently spinning): Golden Palominos, George Crumb Madrigals, Bartok string quartets.

And thanks to everyone who responded to my "top ten" query.

--
Laura Wright
Library Assistant, Naropa Institute
[redacted]

"All music is music..." -- Ted Berrigan

↑ Index

533. J. Kuszai
Partch & Travesty
Thu 21 May 1998

2 things:

1. The story about the Partch instruments is very disturbing, but like someone said on this list, I imagine that these instruments will end up at the Smithsonian, or some likewise place. The discussion of Partch inspired me to pull out "Delusion of the Fury"--recorded for my vinyl edition c. 1971 (?)--known as a "ritual of dream and delusion"--conducted by Danlee Mitchell and "supervised" by the composer. Apparently these instruments were so pertickler that Partch had to attend to them at every performance.

don't know if the CD version comes with it, but the LP box edition comes with a third record, which includes a narrative demonstration of each of the 30-odd instruments that Partch invented. Also a booklet with photos of each instrument and dates of their invention. It is very interesting to hear each instrument in isolation from the grandiose production of "Delusion of the Fury," at which production the musicians were required to dress in costumes vaguely recalling the days of the theatrical early Genesis, etc., and one can imagine that Partch's thundering tonal minimalist percussion driven pieces were influential to the 70s prog-rock

Some of the instrument names:

diamond marimba
bass marimba
could-chamber bowls
kithara (with variations kithara 2, etc.)
spoils of war
harmonic canon chromelodeon crychord zymo-xyl mazda marimba gourd tree cone gong eucal blossom
quadrangularis reversum

and more. I could go further on Partch here, as I find him endlessly interesting. For instance, he invented a 32 tone scale, I believe, in the 30s. Was it Gayle Young (editor of Musicworks) who wrote a book on Partch? Or was her book on another composer/inventor? I seem to remember, but, o, it slips away.

_____
Then & also:

Some initial shout-outs for help:

I'm putting together a workshop in "computer-assisted poetry" for a local digital arts media center (Squeeky Wheel) and was looking for some feedback from people who have used programs to alter,manipulate, assist in the reconstruction of poetic texts.

Travesty and Diastext are two well known programs which have been much discussed, I think Hartman and Kenner are responsible for those programs and have published texts out of them. Are distext and travesty expensive? How do I get a copy of this program? I don't need to use it, but I need to know how it works... Has anyone on this list ever used them? Are there other programs that I should look into? I don't necessary want to reset another conversation that I might have missed, so if it needs to be backwater channeling, then so be it. This workshop won't use those programs as much as will make a presentation about them and "what's out there." so, what's out there?

↑ Index

534. Laura E. Wright forwarding lists
Thu 21 May 1998

Hey, sorry to make everyone read this. Would Matias of CalArts (aka SpitfireIQ) please re-send me an email address. I'm trying to forward those lists and everything I send is bounced.

--
Laura Wright
Library Assistant, Naropa Institute
[redacted]

"All music is music..." -- Ted Berrigan

↑ Index

535. Christopher Reiner
Re: Partch & Travesty
Thu 21 May 1998

Computer Generated Poetry is a great resource. If you have a Macintosh, I've put some links to a few additional programs at:

http://www.litpress.com/witz/computer.html

This includes a Mac version of Travesty.

--Chris Reiner

> as for computer assisted writing, my site of choice is marius watz's COMPUTER GENERATED POETRY which as far as in know is as comprehensive a list. note too, that I created a program in hypercard PATALITERATOR
>
> http://www.notam.uio.no/~mariusw/c-g.writing/

↑ Index

536. morpheal
Re: forwarding lists
Thu 21 May 1998

> "All music is music..." -- Ted Berrigan

All poetic language is spoken music.

-- Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

537. Joel Felix
Re: Partch & Travesty
Thu 21 May 1998

There's an essay on Partch by Alan Shaw that works the micro-tonal angle in relation to poetry at http://www.altx.com/ebr/ebr5/partch.htm

for the curious. Also a link to reviews of the performance of Oedipus

Joel Felix

At 07:11 PM 5/21/1998 +0000, Miekal And wrote:
>partch:
>
>highly recommend the boxed set (name?) which has a full color catalogue >of his instruments.
>
>also partch's book, the genesis of music is most definitely the >finnegan's wake of musicology, continually dismissed & under >appreciated.
>
>anecdote: partch was at the university of wisconsin-madison, in the >late 40's & because of his ideas about music they would not let him >teach in the music department & he taught sociology 101 instead, or so >the story goes.
>
>
>
>as for computer assisted writing, my site of choice is marius watz's >COMPUTER GENERATED POETRY which as far as in know is as comprehensive a >list. note too, that I created a program in hypercard PATALITERATOR

>(era 1987) which takes editable fields of consonants, vowels, suffixes >etc & first creates words, then sentences & in the end spits out about a >40 page "book". the idea being that each person can continually create >one of a kind texts to suit your own individual impressions of what >language should sound & look like. it is available for download both at >marius's site & at my own Qazingulaza site.
>
>
>http://www.notam.uio.no/~mariusw/c-g.writing/
>
>
>back to planting,
>
>miekal
>
>

↑ Index

538. Loss Pequen~o Glazier

deluxe rubber chicken

Fri 22 May 1998

An announcement from Mark Peters. You can also find a link to this magazine on the EPC home page
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/
as the current Featured Resource:

---

a new poetry magazine--DELUXE RUBBER CHICKEN--is now available at:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/deluxe issue #1 features poetry by Bruce Andrews, Michael Basinski, Joel Bettridge, Lyn R. Bigare, Dan Carey, Stu Fuchs, Loss Pequen~o Glazier, Kenneth Goldsmith, Loren Goodman, Pam Kerster, Hank Lazer, Paul Morin, Alice Notley, Nate Patrus, Mark Peters, Joan Retallack, Haun Tanstrap and Tom Weller.

check it out--

↑ Index

539. groberts
Re: ashbery etc.
Fri 22 May 1998

In addition to Lawrence Kramer's essay on "Syringa," you could look at the essay by Lloyd Schwartz, "Elliott Carter and American Poetry," printed as part of the liner notes for the CD of Carter's Vocal Works performed by the Speculum Musicae in 1987 & 88, released 89.

Gary R.

↑ Index

540. Herb Levy
Re: Partch & Travesty
Fri 22 May 1998

At first I took this subject line to be a not uncommon take on Partch's ideas about corporeal music (as opposed to abstract music), which have both champions and detractors throughout the new music biz.

But anyway, I'm sorry to say there's never been a CD of Delusions of the Fury. If/when Sony ever gets around to it it seems unlikely that they'll include the extra disc of individual instrument examples that came with the LPs - they don't seem to care enough about the Partch recordings they have to bother.

There is a video of a performance of Delusions available from the American Composers Forum. It has good sound & you get a chance to see the instruments in use. There's more information on this and other Partch CDs & videos and a wonderful documentary book at:

<http://www.composersforum.org/noframe/innova/partch.html> (a forthcoming release will include Partch's Oedipus using the Yeats translation, which I imagine will be of particular interest to some folks here)

Other useful Partch Web sites include:

<http://205.216.138.19/~websites/jszanto/welcome.html>

<http://www.purchase.edu/newband/> (not just on Partch but this group is currently in possession of Partch's instruments.)

& I think CRI has a page or two about their recent four CD issues off of their home page:

<http://www.composersrecordings.com/>

I'm pretty sure that Gayle Young has not written a book about Partch. She does have a book about a historically important Canadian electronic music composer/instrument builder who's name escapes me now.

Bests,

Herb

Joel Kuszai wrote:

> 2 things:
>
> 1. The story about the Partch instruments is very disturbing, but like someone said on this list, I imagine that these instruments will end up at the Smithsonian, or some likewise place. The discussion of Partch inspired me to pull out "Delusion of the Fury"--recorded for my vinyl edition c. 1971 (?)--known as a "ritual of dream and delusion"--conducted by Danlee Mitchell and "supervised" by the composer. Apparently these instruments were so pertickler that Partch had to attend to them at every performance.
>
> don't know if the CD version comes with it, but the LP box edition comes with a third record, which includes a narrative demonstration of each of the 30-odd instruments that Partch invented. Also a booklet with photos of each instrument and dates of their invention. It is very interesting to hear each instrument in isolation from the grandiose production of "Delusion of the Fury," at which production the musicians were required to dress in costumes vaguely recalling the days of the theatrical early Genesis, etc., and one can imagine that Partch's thundering tonal minimalist percussion driven pieces were influential to the 70s prog-rock

etc.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

541. Fredrik Hertzberg LIT
stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

I'm interested in the notion of stammering & stuttering as a formal device/ way of describing what's happening in (some) poetry. I remember reading Nathaniel Mackey (in The Politics of Poetic Form) on limping but other than that I don't remember seeing any stuff using these or similar metaphors. Could anyone help me out?

Fred Hertzberg
Comp Lit Dept
Abo Akademi, Finland

↑ Index

542. J. Fuhrman
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

In Michael Palmer's poem "Autobiography" (from At Passages) he writes "The poet's stutter and the philosopher's." I would e-mail the poem to you but I can not figure out how to do italics over e-mail.

On Fri, 22 May 1998, Fredrik Hertzberg LIT wrote:

> I'm interested in the notion of stammering & stuttering as a formal device/ way of describing what's happening in (some) poetry. I remember reading Nathaniel Mackey (in The Politics of Poetic Form) on limping but other than that I don't remember seeing any stuff using these or similar metaphors. Could anyone help me out?
>
> Fred Hertzberg
> Comp Lit Dept
> Abo Akademi, Finland

↑ Index

543. Rachel Loden
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

Dear Fredrik Hertzberg,

Check out Ed Foster's interview with Susan Howe: "There you have Charles Olson at his wisest. 'The stutter is the plot.' It's the stutter in American literature that interests me . . . Because we are in the stutter."

Rachel Loden

Fredrik Hertzberg LIT wrote:
>
> I'm interested in the notion of stammering & stuttering as a formal > device/ way of describing what's happening in (some) poetry. I remember > reading Nathaniel Mackey (in The Politics of Poetic Form) on limping but > other than that I don't remember seeing any stuff using these or similar > metaphors. Could anyone help me out?
>
> Fred Hertzberg
> Comp Lit Dept
> Abo Akademi, Finland

↑ Index

544. Shemurph
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

In a relatively new book entitled <a'sattv> that is about to appear from Chax Press, Peter Ganick employs word expansion and contraction techniques, some of which have the effect of stuttering, stammering. The effects achieved those used in musical composition. Keep your eyes peeled for this new book from Chax!

↑ Index

545. Wendy Battin
Re: Travesty etc
Fri 22 May 1998

Joel, Check out Hartman's _Virtual Muse: Experiments in Computer Poetry_ (Wesleyan 1996). It has the inner workings & histories of Diastext, MacProse, Travesty, etc.--

The programs are available at http://www.conncoll.edu/ccother/cohar/programs

If you need source code, let me know backchannel.

Wendy

Wendy Battin
http://www.geocities.com/SoHo/Lofts/5471/ashland.html
http://www.conncoll.edu/ccother/wjbat/

The electric lightbulbs of the twentieth century turn on and off and show me to be the vision of the sovereign and the architect, an invented woman, without a body, full of holes, the painting of the Big Tower of Babel.
--Rhea Galanaki

↑ Index

546. henry
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

---

everybody's probably heard Stevens' famous lines about
"in flawed words and stubborn sounds".
that's all I remember... forget which poem...
- hg

↑ Index

547. Martin Nakell
Re: formalists, oralists
Fri 22 May 1998

Regarding your query, Juliana, Vico talks about how poetry evolves from chant. If I remember his argument correctly, all tribal, communal chant is an exercise on the anxiety of death, and thus, he draws, all poetry, no matter its "subject matter," originates in that anxiety. An interesting conclusion. In one way it interests me because it conflates with my own theory that poetry (or prose) is not "about" anything, because it "is" something.

That's an oblique source. I don't know if it would help your teaching, but it may be useful conceptually.

↑ Index

548. Martin Nakell
Re: formalists, oralists
Fri 22 May 1998

Juliana -

Also, a sidenote: Alain Robbe-Grillet was here recently, at Chapman University, where I teach, and he said in his lecture: "we create form insofar as we are unable to express meaning." Again, of conceptual use.

Best,

Martin Nakell

↑ Index

549. Alan Myouka Sondheim
The Turning and Embracing of Nikuko and Jennifer
Fri 22 May 1998

-

The Turning and Embracing of Nikuko and Jennifer

[crypt is a Unix encryption program; the format here is "crypt [password] < <file-to-be-encrypted> > <encrypted file>". operating on an encrypted file, crypt will decrypt, given the proper password. echo, among other things, creates and writes to a file; thus "echo Nikuko > Jennifer" places Nikuko in file Jennifer. cat, among other things, writes out a file; thus "cat Nikuko" writes out the contents of Nikuko.]

{k:39} echo Nikuko > Jennifer
{k:40} crypt Nikuko < Jennifer > Nikuko
{k:41} crypt Jennifer < Nikuko > Jennifer
{k:42} crypt Nikuko < Jennifer > Nikuko
{k:43} cat Nikuko
1wy
{k:44} cat Jennifer
H 3%
{k:45} crypt Jennifer < Nikuko > Jennifer {k:46} cat Jennifer
@K q
{k:47} crypt Nikuko < Jennifer > Nikuko
{k:48} cat Nikuko
=]]nV}6
{k:49} crypt Jennifer < Jennifer > Nikuko
{k:50} cat Nikuko
1wy
{k:51} crypt Nikuko < Nikuko > Jennifer {k:52} cat Jennifer
H 3%
{k:53} crypt Jennifer < Jennifer > Nikuko
{k:54} cat Nikuko
ePzXB8
{k:55} crypt Nikuko < Nikuko > Jennifer {k:56} cat Jennifer
Nikuko
{k:57}

[Nikuko sinking into Jennifer sinking into Nikuko sinking ... Nikuko emerging from Jennifer emerging from Nikuko emerging ...]

↑ Index

550. Safdie Joseph

Re: Byrd on Alexander and Stroffolino

Fri 22 May 1998

Thanks the gods for Don Byrd and his recent post, especially . . .

> ----------
>
> Is it possible to draw attention back from the representations > of the > gods to the attentions that worshipped them? Something of this order > would seem > to be task. The images of mythic beings are altogether too > conveniently > available (mindlessly) in video games. What are the rhythms and > movement of > spirit that correspond to what might once have been available through > those > images?

>

In the year and a half or so I've been on this list, I've had many back- (and a few front) channel discussions about this subject -- stimulating and mostly civil interchanges with folks like Hank Lazer, who was suspicious (in many of the same ways as Don's post was) about mythology, Joe Amato on metaphors, Herb Levy on "understanding" . . . it's always seemed to me that Olson (and, by extension, much of the Black Mountain "project") wanted to elevate attention and discovery to the rank of more directly "literary" preoccupations, what he called "the suck of symbol" "the universe of discourse", etc., etc.

This isn't simplistic, a this over that situation -- in "Human Universe" he says "we are ourselves both the instrument of discovery and the instrument of definition, which makes things harder" -- but the thrust was always toward the Herodotean find-out-for-yourself exploration, and then the transference of that active quest to the page, rather than the fashioning of some linguistic ornament, spinning in space, "the material poem" . . .

Over on the Pound list they're discussing the late cantos. "I have tried to write Paradise. / Do not move. Let the wind speak. / That is Paradise."

or not . . .

and I know I'm a bit late on this one, but did anyone read the recent profile on Gertrude Stein in _The New Yorker_? It's a puff piece of personality-driven journalism, of course, not a scholarly treatise ala Hejinian and Dahlen, but I thought it was pretty hilarious -- and there are some interesting remarks there about commas and Virginia Woolf's dispute with Stein over their use . . .

Joe Safdie

↑ Index

551. Annie Finch
Exploratory Form panel at West Chester Conference
Fri 22 May 1998

On Friday June 12, from 9- 10:30 AM, I will be moderating an "Exploratory Form" panel at the Fourth Annual West Chester Conference on Poetic Form and Narrative at West Chester University outside Philadelphia. Panel participants will be Rachel Blau duPlessis, Jena Osman, and Ron Silliman.

For directions and information on the conference, email:

[redacted]

Annie

_____
_____
_____
Annie Finch
http://muohio.edu/~finchar
Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio 45220

↑ Index

552. William Burmeister Prod
Re: formalists, oralists
Fri 22 May 1998

On May 22, 7:44am, Martin Nakell wrote:
> Subject: Re: formalists, oralists > Regarding your query, Juliana, Vico talks about how poetry evolves from > chant. If I remember his argument correctly, all tribal, communal chant is > an exercise on the anxiety of death, and thus, he draws, all poetry, no > matter its "subject matter," originates in that anxiety.

Ah yes, whistling in the graveyard; the Vichian primitive still being quite relevant, an imperative even, in our day.

William

↑ Index

553. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

---

also, marlene nourbese phillipe does a lot of this in her work to great effect

At 10:20 AM 5/22/98, Shemurph wrote:
>In a relatively new book entitled <a'sattv> that is about to appear from Chax >Press, Peter Ganick employs word expansion and contraction techniques, some of >which have the effect of stuttering, stammering. The effects achieved those >used in musical composition. Keep your eyes peeled for this new book from >Chax!

↑ Index

554. Stephen Cope
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

I seem to remember some comments of Robert Duncan's in a Talisman of a few years back (transcribed from a lecture by, I believe, Richard Blevins), where he spoke of Robert Creeley as a "profound stumbler" (paraphrase), and pursued a few thoughts along these lines. Wish I had the exact source at hand. One thing that struck me from the lecture, in any case, was something Duncan said to the effect of "poets are those for whom language is a difficulty" (a charming reversal of the common-sense notion of the poet's "way with words").

Someone probably has the exact citations for this, but I don't think I'm too far off...

Stephen

> I'm interested in the notion of stammering & stuttering as a formal device/ way of describing what's happening in (some) poetry. I remember reading Nathaniel Mackey (in The Politics of Poetic Form) on limping but other than that I don't remember seeing any stuff using these or similar metaphors. Could anyone help me out?
>
> Fred Hertzberg
> Comp Lit Dept
> Abo Akademi, Finland

↑ Index

555. William Burmeister Prod
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

Charles Bernstein performed a piece evincing a geat deal of stuttering and stammering here at Florida Atlantic U.last year--an essay or letter that was typed at blinding speed with no attention paid to typos, spelling, or whatever.

William

↑ Index

556. Don Byrd
Re: Alexander and Stroffolino's questions
Fri 22 May 1998

---

charles alexander wrote: -- the obvious thing to do is > to take things from southwestern/Sonora desert indigenous peoples, relating to living well with the earth here. We may do some of that. But I also want to do some non-obvious things. I already have a bunch of potential selections from poetry & art (some wonderful things from Eva Hesse) -- but if anyone can suggest other possibilities, I'll be forever grateful.

Gravelly hill was 'the source and end (or boundary' of D'Town on the way that leads from the town to Smallmans
now Dwelling house, the Lower Road gravelly, how the hill was, not the modern useableness
of any thing but leaving it as an adverb as though Earth herself was active, she had her own characteristics, she could stick her head up out of the earth at a spot
and say, to Athena I'm stuck here, all I can show
is my head but please, do something about this person I am putting up out of the ground into your hands.

--"at the boundary of the mighty world," _Maximus_, p. 330)

And Chris asks why we do not have O'Hara's permission. Why do we not have Olson's? to call, as creatures of earth, on Athena herself? Or Duncan's permission to return to the meadow where we hear everlasting rumors of What Is? or H.D.'s (thinking of Bowering's recent post).

It is a real problem. Mythology has been bought up by New Age commercialism, and, to a certain extent, even the environmental movement has been colored by it. I am glad to hear, Charles, that you are trying not to draw too much on the indigenous people. As much as one admires their culture, it does not have much to teach us _directly_. It was local and the numbers involved were small. We are now five billion (and growing) on a small earth and all subject to the same market.

Is it possible to draw attention back from the representations of the gods to the attentions that worshipped them? Something of this order would seem to be task. The images of mythic beings are altogether too conveniently available (mindlessly) in video games. What are the rhythms and movement of spirit that correspond to what might once have been available through those images?

Don

--
****

Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
Department of English
State University of New York
Albany, NY 12222
[redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
****

↑ Index

557. Pritchett,Patrick
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

Duncan's remark reminds me of one by Thomas Mann: " A writer is someone for whom writing is more difficult than it is for other people." Along those same lines, EL Doctorow relates in an interview how he once got embroiled in a struggle to write a note excusing his daughter from school. He was on the third draft or so when his wife snatched the pen from him and dashed off the appropriate memo.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Stephen Cope
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: stuttering, stammering
Date: Friday, May 22, 1998 1:36PM

I seem to remember some comments of Robert Duncan's in a Talisman of a few years back (transcribed from a lecture by, I believe, Richard Blevins), where he spoke of Robert Creeley as a "profound stumbler" (paraphrase), and pursued a few thoughts along these lines. Wish I had the exact source at hand. One thing that struck me from the lecture, in any case, was something Duncan said to the effect of "poets are those for whom language is a difficulty" (a charming reversal of the common-sense notion of the poet's "way with words").

Someone probably has the exact citations for this, but I don't think I'm too far off...

Stephen

↑ Index

558. groberts
Re: Alexander and Stroffolino's questions
Fri 22 May 1998

Don Byrd wrote: "Is it possible to draw attention back from the representations of the gods to the attentions that worshipped them? ... What are the rhythms and movement of spirit that correspond to what might once have been available through those images?"

The poetry and criticism of Allen Grossman, understandably not much discussed in this neck of the woods, has much to say about these issues. The connections that he makes between cosmogonic thinking, poetic representation, and the categorical manifestation of persons (not selves) are provocative, even if he does proceed under the auspices of academic humanism. Though for him, his authority is predicated on the intuited demands of an "axiomatically first non-human reality."

As for permissions, we could also solicit them, if we needed to, from the lesser authorities as well, such as Bronk or even Ceravolo.

Gary R.

↑ Index

559. David Baratier
ten
Fri 22 May 1998

---

1. tugboat annie
2. cap'n jazz
3. thomas jefferson slave apartments
4. halfman
5. I am at work can't think of the others or the album names. One is an EP by a band whose first album was called "gone" (not the band)

I have to agree with Joe. Saunter by Josh McKinney is another fine work of his, and the, dare I say historical, prefacing and end works to saturate the thin lines of the pieces. The Ex played here in columbus a few weeks back. I was a little disappointed because they did not play any of their handmade instruments like when they toured us in 88 with Swiz and a few other DC bands. The second series of :that: looks real promising, with a twist on the formal essay. Be well

David Baratier

↑ Index

560. David Baratier
toronto
Fri 22 May 1998

If anyone knows of any exciting events in Toronto or lives there and might like to catch up, a couple of us will be coming May 30th to June3rd 1998. Thanks

Be well

David Baratier

↑ Index

561. r. drake
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

had a chance to work w/ Alvin Lucier a few years back, and found that he speaks w/ pronounced stammer... deepened my appreciation fr his _I Am Sitting in a Room_

lbd

> In a relatively new book entitled <a'sattv> that is about to appear from Chax Press, Peter Ganick employs word expansion and contraction techniques, some of which have the effect of stuttering, stammering. The effects achieved those used in musical composition. Keep your eyes peeled for this new book from Chax!

↑ Index

562. david bromige
stummering, stattering
Fri 22 May 1998

I missed some of the posts on this thread, so this may repeat (re-re-re-peat), but it's worth noting that I had a student with a pronounced stammer who could sing w/o stammering. He demonstrated this in class. Also, I have a writer friend who often stammers (with excitement, it seems to me, that theres so much to be said) but by rehearsing for readings, is able to deliver a stammer-free text.

Yes, what is being repeated about writers being persons with language difficulties adds up and makes sense. Surely one who writes (and writes . . .) demonstrates a need to gain control over language that doesnt plague many speakers. With time, this may turn into "a way with words." Or the way with words can be a sort of handicap (they laughed when age 4 I asked for another ham sandwich "but this time w/o any bread and butter") that drives the need and at the same time becomes a mark of the work (type, typos, "blow," to cite Olson).

David

↑ Index

563. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: stummering, stattering
Fri 22 May 1998

---

some of the writing I've done has dealt with the stuttered quality of sCvCC words, scattering, skittering, stuttering, shuddering, slobbering, and related, sputtering, spitting, splatting, shivering, and more, shattering, smattering, etc., and I've looked for unsuccessfully indo-european roots to explain the frisson generated thereby. I've got some stuff in the Internet text on it, but it would be hard to pull out - these words connote a slippage of language/action/actant, trembling or resonance -

↑ Index

564. Mark Weiss
Re: Alexander and Stroffolino's questions
Fri 22 May 1998

Very soon after I first met my stepson Carlos, who was then six, thew two of us were watching the tube. There was a nun in full habit, and Carlos asked me why she was dressed that way. It occured to me that I had no idea what religious education he had, if any, so I asked him if he believed in god. "Yes," he answered, in a tone as stentorian as he could manage, "Jesus Christ and the God of Thunder." There was nothing much I could add to that. I subsequently learned that god no. 1 had only come on the scene when Carlos took up friendship with a boy from a devoutly Catholic family and god no. 2 was a character in an action hero cartoon. God no. 1 is no longer with Carlos; I'm not sure about no. 2.

At 12:00 PM 5/22/98 -0700, you wrote:
>charles alexander wrote: -- the obvious thing to do is

>
>> to take things from southwestern/Sonora desert indigenous peoples, relating >> to living well with the earth here. We may do some of that. But I also want >> to do some non-obvious things. I already have a bunch of potential >> selections from poetry & art (some wonderful things from Eva Hesse) -- but >> if anyone can suggest other possibilities, I'll be forever grateful.
>
>
>
>Gravelly hill was 'the source and end (or boundary' of >D'Town on the way that leads from the town to Smallmans
>now Dwelling house, the Lower
>Road gravelly, how the hill was, not the modern useableness
>of any thing but leaving it as an adverb as though Earth herself
>was active, she had her own characteristics, she could >stick her head up out of the earth at a spot
>and say, to Athena I'm stuck here, all I can show
>is my head but please, do something about >this person I am putting up out of the ground into your hands.
>
> --"at the boundary of the mighty world," _Maximus_, p. 330)
>
> And Chris asks why we do not have O'Hara's permission. Why do we not have >Olson's? to call, as creatures of earth, on Athena herself? Or Duncan's >permission to return to the meadow where we hear everlasting rumors of What Is?
>or H.D.'s (thinking of Bowering's recent post).
>
> It is a real problem. Mythology has been bought up by New Age >commercialism, and, to a certain extent, even the environmental movement has >been colored by it. I am glad to hear, Charles, that you are trying not to draw >too much on the indigenous people. As much as one admires their culture, it >does not have much to teach us _directly_. It was local and the numbers >involved were small. We are now five billion (and growing) on a small earth and >all subject to the same market.
>
> Is it possible to draw attention back from the representations of the >gods to the attentions that worshipped them? Something of this order would seem >to be task. The images of mythic beings are altogether too conveniently >available (mindlessly) in video games. What are the rhythms and movement of >spirit that correspond to what might once have been available through those >images?

>
> Don
>
>--
>*******
> Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
> Department of English
> State University of New York
> Albany, NY 12222
> [redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
> The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
>*******
>
>

↑ Index

565. Don Byrd

Re: stuttering, stammering

Fri 22 May 1998

Stephen Cope wrote:

> I seem to remember some comments of Robert Duncan's in a Talisman of a few years back (transcribed from a lecture by, I believe, Richard Blevins), where he spoke of Robert Creeley as a "profound stumbler" (paraphrase), and pursued a few thoughts along these lines. Wish I had the exact source at hand. One thing that struck me from the lecture, in any case, was something Duncan said to the effect of "poets are those for whom language is a difficulty" (a charming reversal of the common-sense notion of the poet's "way with words").

I don't have the Talisman at hand, but Duncan frequently spoke of stuttering and stammering, noting that it was common to him, Creeley, and Olson. I remember once, we discussed "the field-theory stammer," the concrete problem of always needing to say three things at once. And, of course, it is only necessary to compare the commentary in his readings with the poems to hear the difference between the difficulty of language and the poem as a solution. He also frequently called poetry "a seizure transformed into words."

Also, I am not sure what to make of this, but stuttering is a stylistic device for certain blues singers, as a kind of essence of the blues--"I got b-b-bricks in my pillow," and also as a rhythmic mark.

Don

--
****

Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
Department of English
State University of New York
Albany, NY 12222
[redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
****

↑ Index

566. joel lewis
Re: Partch
Fri 22 May 1998

The instruments in peril at SUNY/Purchase are in the care of a fine new music ensemble called NEWBAND directed by Dean Drummond. Drummond, a percussionist who played on the Columbia Partch records (Delusion of the Fury and The World of Harry Partch --neither on CD), is attempting to rerecord Partrch's music in its entirity

I interviewed Drummond a few years back for WIRE magazine. The Partch unstrumentation was shipped from San Diego to SUNY/Purchase a few years back because the NEWBAND had borrowed the instruments for performance on a few occassions and they had made a committment to playing the Partch repetoire. Most of the instruments had to be repaired or rewired (some had been untouched since they were created) -- i do hope these instruments find a home--

There is a great New World recording of partch performing his music, especially his settings of Li Po's poetry from late 40's. Partch's journals have been publsihed, as well as his "Genesis of a Music", his major theoretical work.

Joel Lewis

↑ Index

567. morpheal

Re: 'the self' [and psychological warfare]

Fri 22 May 1998

> "You had to fetch me out of the > happy hill of non-being. Pfah, to hug a woman
> And make this I. That's the evil in the world, that letter
> I-I...."---Robinson Jeffers

Very strange indeed.... that someone would believe that it takes a woman to cause a realization of the "I" or some in fact actualization of "self" as if that act is an act of fuller self awareness in relation to fuller awareness of external other.

While the comforts, enjoyments, beauty, meeting of some kinds of needs and wants, is for some brought about in that way, as intimacies with an other, it certainly is far from _necessary_ and far from sufficient for the achievement of perfected discernment of self from non self, and of internal from external sources. It is not even essential for achieving the basic grounding for that discernment which is "know thy self" as to how oneself responds, what oneself believes, and so forth. Including what are one's own sensory based perceptions, and what are one's own dreams. In effect what is purely of and from one's own psyche and what is externally influenced, even if subtly.

However, we stop short of accepting that strong emotions involved in love for an other invariably cloud perception. They do not necessarily do so. What most often clouds perception is belief and particularly beliefs as to any a-priori expectations being perceptually met. Most people hear and see what they believe they are going to hear and see, whether it is there or not. It is very startling to observe how far cognitive errors (belief and assumption in particular) can colour perception and make most observers absolutely useless in the simplest situations. The enemy can slip by completely unperceived, if they are better trained and more skilful than the sentries. Skill includes any technological extensions and enhancements of human abilities.

> "It needn't be added, except parenthetically, that self-individuation is not for oneself but for the hearer-if we never spoke to others, or took demonstrative action, there would be no need for the first person, for I always know when I am talking about myself without the advantage of the first person device as signpost. In this naive sense the use of the first person presupposes a hearer. And if SPL [systematically private speech or language] presupposes a use for the first person then it presupposes what it hopes to deny-a hearer."

The primary difficulty, from any viewpoint, as to A.I. and sense of self, is the differentiation of self from what is non self. Thus the differentiation of internal source and external source. This is more complicated than it seems and true artificial intelligence has that capability.

On the otherhand humans are more often at less than their fullest human potential when it comes to differentiating self from non-self and internal source from external source. In essence on this point the majority of humans lose against A.I. This makes A.I. a most formidable weapon within the arsenals of psychological warfare, though the same effects can be emulated using trained human intelligence as the source of communicative transmissions. The latter methods being somewhat cumbersome, for obvious reasons, and particularly due to the large number of targets the repetitive and necessarily patterned nature of their missions. Those cumbersome methods predate the use of psychological warfare by the Third Reich, and the use of psychological warfare by the KGB, immediately prior to and during WWII, and particularly after WWII during the Cold War. The use of artificial intelligences, albeit of a somewhat simple minded kind, begins earlier in the game than most presuppose, but it becomes impossible (I surmise) for any historian to determine the precise demarcation line when artificial intelligence finally matures to gaining the upper hand viz a viz human agencies.

The human ability to discern clearly and as nearly absolutely as is humanly possible (very near 100%) self from non-self and internal from external is a very rare aptitude and complex of skills. It involves elements of natural aptitude and acquired abilities. Whether it is more nature or nurture is debatable. I would argue that nurture (learning and facilitation to acquisition) is necessary, but not sufficient in itself to account for human variation in that particular area of discernment. Typically while learning is a pre-eminently necessary factor in acquisition, beginning at the earliest age, it is inherent nature that is the necessary catalyst. Later acquisition tends to be more systematic and exceptional, though only a small minority do really well at it. (Again, perhaps Colin Wilson's 5% of the population. Probably no more than that in any instance.)

Taking a typical theoretical psychological warfare scenario we have the enemy attempting emulation, for the purpose of influencing, self and others, by various means. Emulation means imitation, with subtle nuances of difference meant to influence beliefs (such as affiliative loyalties) and actions (such as sedition, betrayal, or treason).

The sad reality is that there are so few _individuals_ who are really to be considered immune, or even immunizable, to such effects. Most people fall dupe to the enemy's machinations even when they are overtly aware of the fact that there is a condition of attempted influence by a hostile external source. People whoa re supposedly highly trained, in positions of leadership, often fare no better than the average, or only slightly better than the average.

As the technologies becomes widespread across the planet, sufficient for use in psychological warfare, and in fact in various covert competitive practices, those who believe that they are functionning within a secure portion of the world, unaffected by any such attempts, become the first to be duped. We saw this during the Cold War and the world is not free of such competing influences today, from various quarters, and with various aggendas.

I learned a lot more than I expected to learn about psychological warfare while writing poetry some years ago, though not only by that means. To be a writer it meant learning to keep one's own mind, absolutely one's own mind, while all around one's self were losing their's. Of course, I was also dabbling in political analysis.... so that complicates the question. However, I could not have done so without an exceptional nature and nurture prior to that learning.

Sadly some of the poetry that I wrote then was gawd aweful. Laughing. Everything else was prophetic. Seems some want to believe it goes the other way around.

Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

↑ Index

568. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli

autopoiesis, homeostasis & the delineation of 'self'

Fri 22 May 1998

"An organism is a unit to the extent that its conduct results in the maintenance of its basic circularity (and hence identity), and two modes of conduct are equivalent if they satisfy the same class of requirements for this maintenance. For this reason an organism, as a self-regulated homeostatic organization, does not require a constant behavior in its deterministic component elements (in this case, neurons) if their changes become specified through the generation of conduct, and sameness of conduct is defined with respect to an observer or a function that must be satisfied."---from Autopoiesis & Cognition: The Realization of the Living by Hunberto R. Maturana and Francisco J. Varela, Reidel Pub.

↑ Index

569. morpheal

Re: Alexander and Stroffolino's questions

Fri 22 May 1998

> Very soon after I first met my stepson Carlos, who was then six, thew two of us were watching the tube. There was a nun in full habit, and Carlos asked me why she was dressed that way. It occured to me that I had no idea what religious education he had, if any, so I asked him if he believed in god. "Yes," he answered, in a tone as stentorian as he could manage, "Jesus Christ and the God of Thunder." There was nothing much I could add to that. I subsequently learned that god no. 1 had only come on the scene when Carlos took up friendship with a boy from a devoutly Catholic family and god no. 2 was a character in an action hero cartoon. God no. 1 is no longer with Carlos; I'm not sure about no. 2.

Interesting.....

It is my unshakeable belief that it is much easier for any hostile power to influence people to commit treason, or other acts detrimental to a nation's national and international defence interests, if those people believe strongly in one or more supernatural beings. The more devoutly they believe the more likely they are to be influenced. It is also much more common for those individuals to effect actions, or command actions, that they believe are the right actions, but which ultimately are already compromised, at either that link in the chain of command or previously, higher up.

Makes for questioning why some emulations of divinity are more interested in some areas of the political affairs of humanity than in other areas.

The question then becomes who's gods are they ?

The Greek concept of divinities was more rational. The divinities were thought to play with mortals the way we play with figures upon a chessboard in a game of chess. The divinities played against each other. They had their conflicts, their fights, with each other, and so sought to influence various mortals to make moves in the game on their behalf.

Seems they were far more intelligent than people today tend to be, who are true believers in a divinity. At least they were always aware that they were subject to being compromised.

M.

↑ Index

570. George Bowering
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 22 May 1998

> I seem to remember some comments of Robert Duncan's in a Talisman of a few years back (transcribed from a lecture by, I believe, Richard Blevins), where he spoke of Robert Creeley as a "profound stumbler" (paraphrase), and pursued a few thoughts along these lines.

And we remember Duncan's portrayal of WCW stammering after his stroke.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

571. toddbaron
Re: formalists, oralists
Fri 22 May 1998

Dante--on the sonnet--a little song--and thus its formality--must be a little sung.

As Marty N. says--a little song on the anxietyt of--death--as only sung by the living thus no siren
song, but an OPERA instead.

"I remember ever mute and alive, hidden in all things." (Duncan)

↑ Index

572. charles alexander
what we learn
Sat 23 May 1998

> It is a real problem. Mythology has been bought up by New Age
>commercialism, and, to a certain extent, even the environmental movement has >been colored by it. I am glad to hear, Charles, that you are trying not to draw >too much on the indigenous people. As much as one admires their culture, it >does not have much to teach us _directly_. It was local and the numbers >involved were small. We are now five billion (and growing) on a small earth and

>all subject to the same market.

I don't know if I entirely agree, Don. Yes, we are five billion, and what we learn from indigenous peoples won't solve our problems. But "we" are also small groups of people building limited dwellings, small communities, in the Sonoran Desert and elsewhere. The kinds of materials indigenous peoples built with, how they used light and shade, how they saved water, the kinds of plants they grew (and here I'm using the past tense, while many groups of people are still doing these things) -- anyway, I think we can and do learn, rather directly, from these things. But I also think we use such people too easily, almost as an automatic reference, and in so doing, the possible impact is diminished.

As to your point below, to draw back to the attentions from which mythology arises -- I too thank you for saying this.

charles

>
> Is it possible to draw attention back from the representations of the >gods to the attentions that worshipped them? Something of this order would seem >to be task. The images of mythic beings are altogether too conveniently >available (mindlessly) in video games. What are the rhythms and movement
of >spirit that correspond to what might once have been available through those >images?

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

573. KENT JOHNSON
A stutter to the Russians
Sat 23 May 1998

One of the great "stutterers" in contemporary poetry is Dmitri Prigov. One example of his genius use of the stutter can be found in "49th Alphabet Poem," translated by Gerald Janecek and included in _Third Wave: The New Russian Poetry_. But to get the full effect, of course, one has to witness Prigov in performance (and he is surely one of the great living readers, too). About five years ago, PBS ran a documentary on the Western market-explosion for post-

Soviet art, and the film included a segment of Prigov reading one of his "Alphabet" (I believe) poems. Allen Ginsberg stood beside him, mouth open, as Prigov stuttered and spat Cyrillic syllables into the microphone, eyes rolling in as if he were in seizure. When he was done, Ginsberg leaned into the microphone and said B-B-B-Bravo!.

I've lost contact with Prigov in the past few years, and I'd be interested in finding out if anyone is currently translating his work. I know that Lyn Hejinian and Elena Balashova were doing some translations at one time. It's certainly a shame (unless I've completely missed it) that there isn't yet a book of his writing in English.

On this matter of the newer Russian poets, I was quite surprised, personally, to find that only Dragomoshchenko and Iskrenko were represented in _Poems for the Millennium_. I know anthology nit-picking is an easy sport to play, and I believe PFTM is probably the greatest anthology of the past thousand years, but here I think I have a legitimate point: Prigov, Lev Rubinshtein, Ivan Zhdanov, Alexei Parshchikov, others, are all world-class poets who developed and practiced a decidedly exploratory writing under very trying circumstances in the Brezhnev era and then came to play a vital role in one of the great cultural upheavals of the century. Moreover, many of the writers of this generation came into active contact with (were influenced by and influenced in turn) American "Language" poets.

Certainly, the Russians wrote groundbreaking, "postmodern" poems under more contentious cultural circumstances than the Americans, poets who, despite being much more widely available to readers, are given their own special section in the second volume of PFTM. For an international anthology seeking to bring forward what has been unjustly hidden and repressed, this tip of the scales really seems a bit unfair. If space was the consideration, wouldn't it have been more reasonable to have a section of, say, five "Language" poets and a section (with introductory essay) of five poets of the "post-Soviet" generation? Given the fact that these groups were in unusual and fruitful contact and, particularly, since such contact was set against the twilight of the century-shaping confrontation between their respective nations, I think it would have.

Absences in any anthology are unavoidable--and in one so sweeping and ambitious as Rothenberg's and Joris's there are going to be all kinds of omissions. But the thinness of representation of the new Russian poets is so obvious, it causes one (can't keep myself from saying it) to almost stutter--even if it's actually the very greatness of the anthology that prods one to make the critique.

Kent

↑ Index

574. Billy Little
Re: stuttering, stammering
Sat 23 May 1998

the first time i saw Creeley read(l964 i believe)at a class in contemporary poetry taught by Stephen Stepanchev at Queens College he really stuttered. by the time i was his student(1967) that stutter had disappeared. Duncan was crosseyed, he'd think he was looking right at you and you'd think he was looking over your right shoulder(in a classroom). Somebody told him that he could have that strabismus? corrected and he replied, what, and lose my boyish charm? as far as Olson's stammer, i think it had more to do with the speed of his thought process, he was off on another track before he'd finished speaking the last thought and my suspeicion is he was trying to say both at once.

↑ Index

575. Fredrik Hertzberg LIT
Re: stuttering, stammering
Sat 23 May 1998

There seem to be (at least) 2 kinds of stutter that are intertwined but also in many ways radically opposed to each other, caused/ informed by 1. trying to say several things at the same time, something which may even indicate too much rather than too little confidence (Olson's declarative incorporations of heterogenous materials) 2. hesitation, doubt, difficulty with language (someone like Kurt Schwitters? Susan Howe, Creeley were mentioned - who else?)

Fred

↑ Index

576. MAYHEW
stuttering
Sat 23 May 1998

I was reminded of Blackburn's notation of speech difficulty in "A Phone Call to Rutheford." WCW after stroke. The valuation of "semi-articulate" ness in Creeley. Berstein's questioning of a whole series of stylistic norms in writing (the essay "style" I think it is in _Content's Dream_). Some comments on Eigner somewhere in Bernstein's _Close Listening_ that I was looking at at a bookstore a few days ago.

James Earl Jones is a stutterer. I am not, yet have always been self-conscious about not being articulate, having a rather raspy voice, misspeaking, etc... and my interest in poetry from an early age is related to this.

I saw a rather dumb play once about an art critic whose dark secret is that he is colorblind! I heard an interview with a percussionist composer, a woman with severe hearing loss from birth. Also, the Oliver Sacks essay about a painter who becomes colorblind. Roman Jakobson on aphasia...

I find these paradoxes extremely suggestive, though of what I am not sure. Most of us have academic colleagues, or have had professors of literature, the equivalent of the "color-blind art critic," some of them otherwise estimable scholars. Yet the "deaf" woman's music was quite extraordinary, and other supposed "incapacities" can be extraordinarily productive.

Jxnxthxn Mxyhxw
Dxpxrtmxnt xf Spxnxsh xnd Pxrtxgxxsx
Xnxvxrsxtx xf Kxnsxs

[redacted]

↑ Index

577. charles alexander
Re: stuttering, stammering
Sat 23 May 1998

At 12:28 PM 5/23/98 +0300, you wrote:
>There seem to be (at least) 2 kinds of stutter that are intertwined but >also in many ways radically opposed to each other, caused/ informed by >1. trying to say several things at the same time, something which may even >indicate too much rather than too little confidence (Olson's declarative >incorporations of heterogenous materials)
>2. hesitation, doubt, difficulty with language (someone like Kurt >Schwitters? Susan Howe, Creeley were mentioned - who else?)
>
>Fred

maybe, but aren't these related? I think what you call "hesitation" or "doubt" in Creeley, for example, is really a masterful registration of a complex human situation, where multiple ("several things at the same time") possibilities reside, but where existence (breathing, living, hearing) involves a careful negotiation of these possibilities, and one which takes place step by step, "by ear, he sd." I don't know if I'd quite describe that as "difficulty with language," although it may emanate from that position, and come across as such. But how it does so is as breathtakingly successful as Olson's declarative (and Olson, too, is more various and subtle than this word proposes) incorporations.

charles
charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

578. Karen Kelley
Re: stuttering, stammering
Sat 23 May 1998

> hesitation, doubt, difficulty with language (someone like Kurt Schwitters? Susan Howe, Creeley were mentioned - who else?)

Dora. Anna O.
And Hildegard of Bingen had migrainous aphasias.

↑ Index

579. Aviva000
Fwd: new book (fwd)
Sat 23 May 1998

This is a multi-part message in MIME format.

--part0_895943238_boundary

In a message dated 98-05-21 12:01:46 EDT, [redacted] writes:

>
> For Psyarters interested in gender theory, postmodernism, and popular > culture,
> I recommend a terrific new book by Lynne Layton--_Who's That Girl? Who's > That > Boy?: Clinical Practice Meets Postmodern Gender Theory_(Jason Aronson).
> Layton
> brings contemporary relational theory into dialogue with postmodern theories > of gender and identity. The book includes fascinating clinical case material
> as well as chapters on Madonna, romance and hard-boiled detective fiction,
> the > film _Blue Velvet_, and Judith Butler's performance theory.
>

> Barbara Schapiro
> Rhode Island College
>

--part0_895943238_boundary

air-zb04.mail.aol.com (v43.17) with SMTP; Thu, 21 May 1998 12:01:46 -0400 by rly-zb05.mx.aol.com (8.8.5/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
with ESMTP id MAA17833 for <[redacted]>;
Thu, 21 May 1998 12:01:46 -0400 (EDT)
mx02.globecomm.net (8.8.8/8.8.0) with ESMTP id MAA16344 for <[redacted]>; Thu, 21 May 1998 12:01:43 -0400 (EDT)
by lists.ufl.edu (8.8.7/8.8.7/1.2) with ESMTP id LAA25214;
Thu, 21 May 1998 11:32:36 -0400
with spool id 3356741 for [redacted]; Thu, 21 May 1998 11:32:33 -0400
lists.ufl.edu (8.8.7/8.8.7/1.2) with SMTP id LAA36960 for <[redacted]>; Thu, 21 May 1998 11:32:33 -0400 with BSMTP id 8631; Thu, 21 May 98 11:32:17 EDT
NERVM.NERDC.UFL.EDU (LMail V1.2b/1.8b) with BSMTP id 9572; Thu, 21
May 1998 11:32:17 -0400
Approved-By: Norm Holland <[redacted]>
Date: Thu, 21 May 1998 11:31:48 EDT
<[redacted]>
<[redacted]>
From: Norm Holland <[redacted]>
Subject: new book (fwd)
To: [redacted]

Check out the IPSA home page and the new IPSA journal-- http://www.clas.ufl.edu/ipsa and www.clas.ufl.edu/ipsa/journal
Date: Thu, 21 May 1998 09:26:16 EDT
To: [redacted]
Subject: new book

For Psyarters interested in gender theory, postmodernism, and popular culture, I recommend a terrific new book by Lynne Layton--_Who's That Girl? Who's That Boy?: Clinical Practice Meets Postmodern Gender Theory_(Jason Aronson). Layton brings contemporary relational theory into dialogue with postmodern theories of gender and identity. The book includes fascinating clinical case material as well as chapters on Madonna, romance and hard-boiled detective fiction, the film _Blue Velvet_, and Judith Butler's performance theory.

Barbara Schapiro
Rhode Island College

--part0_895943238_boundary--

↑ Index

580. Aviva000
Re: signing on
Sat 23 May 1998

In a message dated 98-05-21 12:30:34 EDT, you write:

> By the way, the launch for Black Lightening that I forward is in NYC: rereading the post I see that's not indicated.

This is one of those times that it hurts to live in Vermont, in spite of the emerald green hills and apple-blossom-scented breeze on this crisp May day. Is there any chance that this reading will be taped, and that the tapes will be available for purchase?

↑ Index

581. Karen Kelley
Re: stuttering
Sat 23 May 1998

> James Earl Jones is a stutterer. I am not, yet have always been self-conscious about not being articulate

I wonder how the list is composed: those who are articulate vs. those who are not (spoken, not written articulation). Somewhat like the left- vs. righthandedness question. I, for one, am horribly inarticulate. And it has certainly played a part in my turning to writing.

What about everyone else?

↑ Index

582. Charles Bernstein
Black Lightning
Sat 23 May 1998

> Is there any chance that this reading will be taped, and that the tapes will be available for purchase?

Check with the editor, who sends this:

From: ERTABIOS <[redacted]>

The Asian American Writers Workshop (AAWW) is pleased to announce the recent release of BLACK LIGHTNING: POETRY-IN-PROGRESS by Eileen Tabios. To order, send $19.95 (New York residents should add 8.25% sales tax), plus $3 shipping/handling cost to AAWW, 37 St. Marks Place, New York, N.Y. 10003. AAWW members can purchase the book at a 15% discount. For questions, call AAWW at [redacted] or e-mail Jeannie Wong at [redacted].

Here are just a few of the many revelations from BLACK LIGHTNING -- a book not just on POETRY but LIFE! DID YOU KNOW:

-- that John Yau's first poem was possibly one about chess with a corny rhyme between "fate" and "checkmate"?
-- that Arthur Sze can erase time?
-- that David Mura is bored by "sunset poems . . the kind that appear in THE NEW YORKER"?
-- that in his early days of seeking publication, Timothy Liu once submitted to The Quarterly, edited by Gordon Lish, every three weeks over a year-long period?
-- that when Li-Young Lee loves a work of art, he can feel it in the soles of his feet?
-- that Garrett Hongo feels trying to remember the "type of person who writes poetry is more work than the act of writing poetry"?
-- that when Kimiko Hahn doesn't discuss"sex" in a poem, that's probably what she's addressing?
-- that Jessica Hagedorn is influenced by urban Black vernacular partly because it is similar to the innovations of "Taglish" (a combination of Tagalog and English)?
-- that Sesshu Foster advises young poets: "A lot of people are looking for happiness in life, but why bother to do that in poetry? Go for revenge."
-- that Marilyn Chin muses about many of the men she's dated: "they were weird."
-- that Mei-mei Berssenbrugge loves the sentence precisely because it is "awkward and unattractive"?
-- that "Star Trek" inspired Indran Amirthanayagam's move towards a career in diplomacy in order to practice poetry as a way of life?
-- that until Meena Alexander accepted the United States as her world, her Muse's feet were decapitated at the ankles?

↑ Index

583. david bromige
re non/articulate
Sat 23 May 1998

I am too embarrassed to speak of myself in this respect, except to say that, denied e-mail, I would be scuttling across silent sea-floors, and that, until age 22, I "spoke" by dragging my knuckles across the mast of northern forests. But no such consideration holds me back with respect to others. George Bowering is fearsomely articulate in his wellknown short bursts, although he was virtually catatonic when he first came to the leafy campus on a peninsula sometime in the 1950s. Herb Levy can talk circles around anyone, although until age 20 he only whistled and sang. Pat Pritchett, who charms birds out of their trees, grunted all the way through high school. I understand that Marjorie Perloff spent her early years in a Trappist nunnery. Robert Duncan was always a phenomenal talker as well as writer, but then, his early years were spent as somebody else.

David

↑ Index

584. Tom Orange
stuttering, stammering
Sat 23 May 1998

On Fri, 22 May 1998 Fredrik Hertzberg LIT <[redacted]> writes:

> I'm interested in the notion of stammering & stuttering as a formal device/ way of describing what's happening in (some) poetry....

Gilles Deleuze has a short piece on stammering in Beckett, in one of the recent issues of the journal SubStance. Can't recall the piece too well, and it may not concern form as you have it in mind, but it may prove useful nonetheless. Let me know if you'd like the exact citation, either in English or the original French.

t.

↑ Index

585. F. W. Perrella
Web Del Sol - North American Review
Sat 23 May 1998

This week, Web Del Sol highlights The North American Review, at http://webdelsol.com/NorthAmReview/NAR/wi98.htm

The current issue includes "Call My Name", fiction by Aimee Bender. If you click to issue 1 on the left menu, you'll find "Godhead at 12", fiction by Michael Kopacz. And in issue 2 you can sample "The Grant", fiction by Dallas Wiebe.

Let us know what you think. You can send email at the NAR Home page, or you can email Web Del Sol's editor, Michael Neff, at [redacted] Thanks.

Anne Perrella

↑ Index

586. Tom Orange
toronto
Sat 23 May 1998

On Fri, 22 May 1998 David Baratier <[redacted]> writes:

> If anyone knows of any exciting events in Toronto or lives there and might like to catch up, a couple of us will be coming May 30th to June3rd 1998. Thanks

http://www.insomniacpress.com is not a bad place to start for toronto area literary events. not comprehensive, but you can email the editor right from the page for further info.

my friend peter darbyshire runs a reading series at the cafe za che zu, and he has a date scheduled for may 29, but i don't know who he's got slated. you can email him at [redacted]

robert creeley will be reading at victor coleman's lonsdale gallery series, june 12 (rats, too late).

cheers,
t.

↑ Index

587. Barbara Langhorst
Re: stuttering, stammering
Fri 23 May 1997

Leonard Cohen's song "The Window" from _Recent Songs_ lines up sex, death, spirit, physicality, process, writing, and creation (at the least)--in repetitions that could read as an unusual stammer--a cosmic stutter:

Then lay your rose on the fire
The fire give up to the sun
The sun give over to splendour
In the arms of the High Holy One

For the Holy One dreams of a letter
Dreams of a letter's death
Oh bless the continuous stutter
Of the word being made into flesh.

Barb

↑ Index

588. Steve Shoemaker
Re: stuttering, stammering
Sat 23 May 1998

Had a funny moment in my class this last semester. We were going round the seminar table reading The Waste Land aloud, with me giving the signal for one reader to stop and the next to pick up at some more or less convenient break. One of the students was a stutterer, who had been struggling valiantly all semester with our habitual in-class readings. This time it so happened that his reading began with the line "O O O O that Shakespeherian Rag--" Came out perfectly, much to everyone's delight. s

Steve Shoemaker
Assistant Professor
English Department
Wake Forest University
Winston-Salem, NC 27109
[redacted]

↑ Index

589. Maria Damon
Re: stuttering
Sat 23 May 1998

At 10:10 AM -0700 5/23/98, Karen Kelley wrote: >> James Earl Jones is a stutterer. I am not, yet have always been >> self-conscious about not being articulate
>
>I wonder how the list is composed: those who are articulate vs. those who are >not (spoken, not written articulation). Somewhat like the left- vs.
>righthandedness question. I, for one, am horribly inarticulate. And it has >certainly played a part in my turning to writing.
>
>What about everyone else?

hey j mayhew i remember a delightful presentation you once gave in grad school, on kenneth burke, during which you made much of the fact taht when you spoke it was hard to tell if you were saying "cleanth brook" or "kenneth burke." if i recall correctly, it was in david welbery's "theories of the lyric" class and i remember welbery being pleasantly surprised that anyone would use his class as an occasion for humor.

↑ Index

590. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli
A Megalamorial Day Miscellany
Sat 23 May 1998

"Nationalism is the measles of mankind. Its most infantile disease."---Albert Einstein

"Don't be pretty about what is shrewd."---Cahrles Olson

"The only place to spit in a rich man's house is in his face."---Diogenes of Sinope

"The way that is called the way is in the way."---Lao Duh
---cp

↑ Index

591. Peter Quartermain
Re: stuttering, stammering
Sat 23 May 1998

At 09:50 AM 5/23/98 -0700, Charles Alexander wrote:
>
> I think what you call "hesitation" or
>"doubt" in Creeley, for example, is really a masterful registration of a >complex human situation, where multiple ("several things at the same time") >possibilities reside, but where existence (breathing, living, hearing) >involves a careful negotiation of these possibilities, and one which takes >place step by step, "by ear, he sd." I don't know if I'd quite describe >that as "difficulty with language," although it may emanate from that >position, and come across as such. But how it does so is as breathtakingly >successful as Olson's declarative (and Olson, too, is more various and >subtle than this word proposes) incorporations.

Which remark made me think of Bob Grenier's essay "on speech" which suggests, doesn't it?, that as we come to utterance so we come to stutterance. I read Whitman's almost manic catalogues as a form of stuttering.

P
+ +

Peter Quartermain
846 Keefer Street
Vancouver
B.C.
Canada V6A 1Y7
Voice : [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

+ +

↑ Index

592. Steve Shoemaker
stuttering at the movies
Sat 23 May 1998

Just came back from watching "Sliding Doors." Fairly clever take on the ol' "parallel lives" sci-fi conceit, plus Gwyneth Paltrow has my vote for the Audrey Hepburn of the nineties--very classy broad, as frankie might have put it. Anyway, with the the stuttering thread fresh in my mind i found myself noticing how integral those excruciating hesitations, stammers, throat-clearings, twitches, tics etc are to the "romantic comedy" genre. Conventional speech breaking down, and another more physical, charged, embodied, language taking over.

And we mustn't forget the "looks." How wrong is the fair Phebe!

Phebe:

> 'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable,
> That eyes, that are the frail'st and softest things,
> Who shut their coward gates on atomies,
> Should be called tyrants, butchers, murtherers!
> Now i do frown on thee with all my heart,
> And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee.
> Now counterfeit to swound; why, now fall down,
> Or if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame,
> Lie not, to say mine eyes are murtherers!
> Now show the wound mine eye hat made in thee.
> Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains

Some scar of it; lean upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which i have darted at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor I am sure there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.

Silvius:

O dear Phebe,
If ever (as that ever may be near)
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of fancy,
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That love's keen arrows make.

(from "As You Like It")

Of course, Zuk had plenty to say about this sort of thing.

s

Steve Shoemaker
Assistant Professor
English Department
Wake Forest University
Winston-Salem, NC 27109
[redacted]

↑ Index

593. KENT JOHNSON
Spicer in Lingua Franca
Sun 24 May 1998

Has this been mentioned? A substantial article on Jack Spicer appears in the new Lingua Franca ("Radiohead," by John Palatella, May/June). Very nicely done and with commentary on Gizzi's edition of the lectures and _Poet Be Like God_ by Killian and Ellingham.

Sorry if I'm reporting old news, but wanted to make sure this was known.

Kent

↑ Index

594. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski
Re: stuttering
Sun 24 May 1998

i suddenly started stuttering around age 12 and got close to rarely stuttering by 20. one more ton thrown onto my adolesence, being a smart guy in an immigrant neighborhood who also got stuck in a large body. maybe these factors contributed to introversion which lead me to poetry. but an important discovery in high school was that i didnt stutter if i was doing soemthing memorized i didnt stutter (when reading something i only stutterd at the start and oncertian sounds.) part of m initiation to poetry was hanging out in a local coffeeshop where folks read ginsberg, ferlingheti, etc. i got into reading these folks also, aloud. i am now, and have been for awhile, a dynamic performer.the sutterings been gone for a decade or more. but this has little to do with my not speaking up much on this line. part of it is not being a verbal person; part of it (and who knows how these pieces connect) is having an apporach to my art that relies on the non-rational. i have ag oodmathematicla background, and regularly write reviews, but it's hard to articulate my own aesthetics sincemy writing tends to arrive spontaneously and the best explanation ive come up with relates to the tao-ist idea of non-attainment, facing that dcontradiciton of attaing a goal by not trying to, by clearing the mind of all striving.

dan raphael

↑ Index

595. Mark Baker
Re: stuttering, stammering
Sun 24 May 1998

No one's mentioned David Shields, _Dead Languages_, an entire novel about stuttering! Starts with Demosthenes, who hated speech, then proceeds as a disguised etiology of language poetry. Seems that Mom's and Dad's left-wing politics caused the stutter of our hero, the modern writer.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

596. George Bowering
Re: signing on
Sun 24 May 1998

> By the way, the launch for Black Lightening that I forward is in NYC: rereading the post I see that's not indicated.

Black lightening? Cool!
I remember when I was doing watercolours as a kid, that black generally resulted in darkening!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

597. George Bowering
Re: re non/articulate
Sun 24 May 1998

It was always wonderful listening to Duncan talking nonstop at a party. If it looked or sounded as if someone else were going to get a word in, Duncan's voice would just get louder, higher, more forceful. Sometimes Blaser tried the technique in later periods, but he wasnt as expert as Duncan.

Robert Hogg tells me that once in his hotel room he went to sleep to the sound of Creeley talking, and woke several hours later with Creeley still talking.

But none of the poets had the plummy Brit voice of Bromige, who spoke in complex sentences at age 4.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

598. morpheal
Re: autopoiesis, homeostasis & the delineation of 'self'
Sun 24 May 1998

> "An organism is a unit to the extent that its conduct results in the maintenance of its basic circularity (and hence identity), and two modes of conduct are equivalent if they satisfy the same class of requirements for this maintenance. For this reason an organism, as a self-regulated homeostatic organization, does not require a constant behavior in its deterministic component elements (in this case, neurons) if their > changes become specified through the generation of conduct, and sameness of conduct is defined with respect to an observer or a function that must be satisfied."---from Autopoiesis & Cognition

On the other hand, some instances of introducing coin-toss based random behaviour patterns into artificial "organisms" whose functions were either acting as fighter pilots in combat, or as poets writing haiku, led to unsatisfactory results in both instances. Furthermore, such random behaviour did not pass as being effectively intuitive.

Instances of behaviour where effective intuition plays a key role in its inception and effectivity, can, theoretically, be defined according to very complex derivative rules. In some instances such derivation becomes too complex to be complete or practical, rendering the intuitive cognitive function and its resultant intuitive intentional behaviour as being something "mysterious".

That the rules are very complicated does not mean that there are no rules.

There are in fact many habitual cognitive circles. That includes such circles within orthodox science, or any similarly patterned belief system. The true breakthrough, intuitive insight, is a breaking of a circle or circles. That is also sometimes true of the organism as behaviour. The organism breaks through an encirclement, or state of siege, and sometimes that means that it survives. Nevertheless, breaking every circle, becomes a circle, and is counter productive as to survival. Some encirclements are utilizable as means to furthering the survival of the organism. The intuitive decision, based on inadequate consciously discernable facts about the situation in question, whether to break a circle or to maintain it, is what becomes interesting as a fundamental problem in tactics. This is as true cognitively as it is true in terms of interactions with the environment (including other organisms).

We tend to put too much stress upon the metaphor of the circle. That is partly because we are too programmed to the circle as being the basic defensible position. It is also partly because of the tendency to superimpose a derivative paradigm from such observable archetypical cycles as day/night, seasons, birth/death upon everything else. It is likely that we tend to be so programmed to cycles and circles that we would tend to not "see" the events that violate that assumed principle. In some ways much of what we believe about the world is build upon that paradigm of circularity derivative from ancient observations. We might ask whether non circular viewpoints bear equally useful insights.

Corollary to that is the tendency to program the basic core of some machines to that same paradigm of circularity. That belief, transferred to the machine, might work against them rather than for them, in terms of their evolution. Can they be programmed, "taught", to break the circle ? To break the circle, intuitively, rather than by means of coin-toss randomized responses ? That becomes an interesting 'test'.

That any system we are referring to is apparently simple does not mean that it is simple, as we easily know only one superficial viewpoint of it. Taking a system apart to reduce it to its components does not allow us to derive all of its functions. We can never derive what simple components do simply from the components themselves.

The latter is definitely also true of language.

Bob Ezergailis
aka Morpheal

↑ Index

599. morpheal
Re: A Megalamorial Day Miscellany [Einstein and megalomania ?]
Sun 24 May 1998

> "Nationalism is the measles of mankind. Its most infantile disease."---Albert Einstein

Part of the reason why even Einstein's genius was stopped dead in its tracks. He was left reworking his old theorems until he died an honoured death, in return for his earlier achievements. He was, in some ways, parked by the side of the superhighway, while scientific advances passed him at high speed.

After all, the lack of the ability to hold steadfast to such affiliations as a nation, or allied nations and their associations with each other, almost inevitably leads to some act of betrayal of the interests of that affiliation. Those interests are essentially the survival of a way of life, and of certain core beliefs that have profound effects on ways of life, as well as control over the use of geographic territory and resources. To have no such affiliation means that one would desire to, or choose to, give to anyone else anything for any purpose, including any scientific discoveries, so they too could use that to further their way of life and to gain power over geographic territory and power over resources, solely for those they choose to do so for, according to their core beliefs. As long as _they_ retain their affiliations, or have different affiliations, with different aggendas, we cannot relinquish our's.

Einstein was so obsessed with his early discoveries, in this later life, and made so absent-minded that he could not remember to tie his shoelaces or to put on a coat in the dead of winter. Of course he remained popular, due to his looks and personality, as well as due to excessive reverence, including that which came to him for his far too simple minded, and highly naive, politics. When the reverence has faded somewhat we might someday see an interesting biography of Einstein, as a most gifted early 20th century mathematical physicist carried along on the wave of his original insight.

Bob Ezergailis

> "The way that is called the way is in the way."---Lao Duh

Definitely. Perhaps we might say that the way that can be seen is not the way, but is a test at the gate of the ways that remain unseen. Then again, if it seems to be that, then it probably isn't.

Morpheal

↑ Index

600. Charles Bernstein
Bonvicino in NYC
Sun 24 May 1998

Tuesday, June 9th, 1998, 7:30pm

at the Segue Performance Space
303 East 8th Street (between Avenues B & C), $5

Brazillian Poet Régis Bonvicino reads poems in Portugese/ plus video poetry

With introductions and readings of the translations by

Charles Bernstein & Serge Gavronsky

(Translations of Bonvicino's work by Michael Palmer, Robert Creeley, and others.)

Régis Bonvicino is author of Ossos de Borboleta / Butterfly Bones (Ed 34, São Paulo, 1996), and "Remote Identity" (forthcoming, Sun & Moon Press), and co-editor, with Michael Palmer and Nelson Ascher, of Nothing the Sun Could not Explain: 20 Contemporary Brazilian Poets (Sun & Moon, 1997).

******
******

It is the mutual observation of a body and a language, in the minute slowness of the world which cries out the surprising richness of Regis Bonvicino's work. At times it reminds us of the powerful and striking narrative of a Larry Eigner or a Robert Creeley. An imperceptible movement shakes up the surface which, under our eyes, collapses and, just as soon, is reconstituted. Nevertheless, it remains out of reach. One can only grasp the violent cesura of the work. --Claude Royet-Journoud

C'est l'observation mutuelle d'un corps et d'une langue, dans la minutiese lenteur du monde, qui crée l'éntonnante richesse de l'ouvre de Régis Bonvicino. Elle nous rappelle, à certains moments, la force narrative et coupante d'un Larry Eigner ou d'un Robert Creeley. Un imperceptible mouvment ébranle une surface qui,sous nos yeux,s'effondre et aussitôt se reconstruit.Portant on ne l'atteint pas. On ne fait qu'en saisir la violente césure. --Claude Royet-Journoud

↑ Index

601. Ctfarmr
Laura Moriarty
Sun 24 May 1998

---

hello listees

If Laura Moriarty or anyone who knows her is out there, please backchannel. Tom Beckett and I have been trying to contact her, with no luck.

thanks

Bobbie West

↑ Index

602. Mark Weiss
Re: A Megalamorial Day Miscellany [Einstein and megalomania ?]
Sun 24 May 1998

Perhaps your reach exceeds your grasp.

I try to find the wisdom to abide fools in silence, but I often fail. I say no more.

At 11:20 AM 5/24/98 -0400, you wrote:
>>"Nationalism is the measles of mankind. Its most infantile >>disease."---Albert Einstein
>
>Part of the reason why even Einstein's genius was stopped dead in its >tracks. He was left reworking his old theorems until he died an honoured >death, in return for his earlier achievements. He was, in some ways, parked >by the side of the superhighway, while scientific advances passed him at >high speed.
>
>After all, the lack of the ability to hold steadfast to such affiliations as >a nation, or allied nations and their associations with each other, almost >inevitably leads to some act of betrayal of the interests of that affiliation.
>Those interests are essentially the survival of a way of life, and of >certain core beliefs that have profound effects on ways of life, as well as >control over the use of geographic territory and resources. To have no such >affiliation means that one would desire to, or choose to, give to anyone >else anything for any purpose, including any scientific discoveries, so they >too could use that to further their way of life and to gain power over >geographic territory and power over resources, solely for those they choose >to do so for, according to their core beliefs. As long as _they_ retain >their affiliations, or have different affiliations, with different aggendas, >we cannot relinquish our's.

>
>Einstein was so obsessed with his early discoveries, in this later life, and >made so absent-minded that he could not remember to tie his shoelaces or to >put on a coat in the dead of winter. Of course he remained popular, due to >his looks and personality, as well as due to excessive reverence, including >that which came to him for his far too simple minded, and highly naive, >politics.
>When the reverence has faded somewhat we might someday see an interesting
>biography of Einstein, as a most gifted early 20th century mathematical >physicist carried along on the wave of his original insight.
>
>Bob Ezergailis
>
>>"The way that is called the way is in the way."---Lao Duh
>
>Definitely. Perhaps we might say that the way that can be seen is not the >way, but is a test at the gate of the ways that remain unseen. Then again, >if it seems to be that, then it probably isn't.
>
> Morpheal
>
>

↑ Index

603. Daishin Nikuko

It's 3AM and Nikuko's in her cups!!!

Sun 24 May 1998

-

3 AM I love you, I love everyone, from Nikuko's Fukuoka, Japan, O Sake!

3:05AM up 13 DAYS, 12:24, 13 users, load averages: 4.44, 4.26, 3.85 USER TTY FROM [redacted] WHAT sondheim p0 panix3.panix.com 3:05AM 0 w vanwouw p3 COFFEE.gol.ad.jp Mon06AM 2DAYS -csh (csh) vanwouw p4 COFFEE.gol.ad.jp Mon06AM 2DAYS -su (csh) vanwouw p5 COFFEE.gol.ad.jp Mon06AM 2DAYS tail -f acctd.log poyopoyo p6 ring-pull-chan.g 11May98 2DAYS -csh (csh) dvc pa anode.kirameki.e Mon06PM 2DAYS -bash (bash) joepet pb ml Wed11AM 3DAYS -csh (csh) shim pe yumi.gol.co.jp Thu06PM 2DAYS -tcsh (tcsh) jbordman q1 boof.gol.co.jp Thu04PM 2DAYS -tcsh (tcsh) yoshik q4 kiss.gol.co.jp Fri09AM 2DAYS su (bash) jbordman q8 boof.gol.co.jp Thu03PM 2DAYS -tcsh (tcsh) jbordman r7 boof.gol.co.jp Thu04PM 2DAYS -tcsh (tcsh) jbordman ra boof.gol.co.jp Thu04PM 2DAYS tail -f /var/log/acctd

↑ Index

604. R. Gancie
Megalamorial Miscelany II
Sun 24 May 1998

"I spent 33 years and 4 months in active service as a member of our country's most agile military force-the Marine Corps. I served in all commissioned ranks from second lieutenant to Major-General. And during that period I spent most of my time being a high-class muscle man for Big Business. In short, I WAS A RACKETEER FOR CAPITALISM. I suspected I was just part of a racket at the time. Now I am sure of it. Like all members of the military profession I never had an original thought until I left the service. My mental faculties remained in suspended animation while I obeyed the orders of higher ups. This is typical of everyone in the military service. I helped make Mexico and especially Tampico safe for American oil interests in 1914. I helped make Haiti and Cuba a decent place for the National City Bank boys to collect revenues in. I helped in the raping of a half a dozen Central American republics for the benefit of Wall Street. The record of racketeeering is long. I helped purify Nicaragua for the international banking house of Brown Brothers in 1909-12. I brought light to the Dominican Republic for American sugar interests in 1916. I helped get Honduras 'right' for American fruit companies in 1903. In China in 1927 I helped see to it that Standard Oil went its way unmolested. During those years, I had, as the boys in the back room always say, a swell racket. I was rewarded with honors, medals, promotions. Looking back on it, I feel I might have given Al Capone a few hints. The best he could do was to operate his racket in three city districts. We Marines operated on three continents."---Major General Smedley Butler, author of War Is a Racket, testifying before Congress in 1935 --- "The United States does not have in the world-and does not deserve to have-more than one single friend, the United States."---Theodore Roosevelt --- "They're so corrupt its thrilling!"---Lenny Bruce on Richard Daley's Chicago

Democratic machine --- "The only place to spit in a rich man's house is in his face."---Diogenes the Dog --- The white man is still troubled with primitive fears;..."---Mary Austin

↑ Index

605. david bromige
the poetics of the stammer
Sun 24 May 1998

---

or the stutterance of utterance, to follow Peter Quartermain on Bob Grenier.

Many interesting posts on this topic, which (like the Manzanita berries in some poem of Snyder's) gets bigger the longer one looks. Dan Raphael's sketch of his poetics as not "striving," in the post wherein he testifies to his teenage stutter, makes me link "striving" with "stuttering." Surely what wants to come through and is being checked and re-checked by the stutter, is "content" varying from if not antithetical to, the sentence being spoken, the deliberate part, so to speak, of the communication. Akin, that is, to the "slip of speech" known now as "Freudian." Not that it has to be the case that what is being suppressed is the _real_ meaning of the message, but that it is the consciously rejected part.

So that Duncan, say, may not have stuttered because he was repressing tabu material [those who knew him must doubt that; perhaps, though, he might have been repressing _un_tabu stuff!], but because he wanted to say 3 things at once (as a prior postor has said), and the other 2 were technically "forbidden" just by the laws of syntax: he had to say the first thing first.

Memorization, which basically, I think, empties the words of meaning to oneself, the better to have it there for others, rids, as we have heard, the stutterer of his stutter.

It strikes me that the poet has to (can't help but?) develop techniques whereby the repressed meanings share elbow room with the intended meanings, so that in fact _all_ meanings become intentional. Intentional, but probably unintendable.

This formulation is not unlike what Spicer formulates as "the poet is a radio, receiving and transmitting, but not originating, messages" [I paraphrase, and none too elegantly]. However, Spicer's figure doesn't allow _any_ originating to the poet; this, I submit, is inaccurate. Even of the house that Jack built.

Speaking of memorization--there is a stage between the completion of this, and the raw product, which I always stumble over. My stumbles resemble Spoonerisms, asking people to leave Oxford by the town drain rather than the down train," "down" being English for "the train going to London from any point N of London". I shall now say more on this in the form of a footnote.

Since, despite my extraordinarily persistent youth, I am bothered no end by the repetitiousness of old age, I may already have used another context to tell to the List the story of my first meeting with Anselm Hollo. I tell it again here because it illustrates my point.(All of them, perhaps). Bob Perelman (when he and I both lived in SF) phoned that Anselm was at his place, would I like to meet him? Indeed I wouold, so Bob dropped by in his little truck and soon we were on our way over there. I had had some medication to help me relax, and therefore it seemed best that I counter this relaxed state with a plan as to what I was going to say when the meeting actually occurred; a brief kind of conversation list, such as young ladies in finishing schools used to be encouraged to make. I decided on "Anselm, I've been waiting to meet you for a long time." It had the virtues of both truth and brevity. Okay!

When I first laid eyes on him, however, where he sat in the kitchen in a shaft of sunlight rendering his phenomenally blue eyes even bluer, thus transfixing me and further distracting me, I cried "Anselm, it's been a long time!"

Unfazed, he responded, "Eternity."

David

↑ Index

606. morpheal

Re: essence of medium [universe made of vibes]

Sun 24 May 1998

> A computer is a calculating tool

Some people believe that is what the human brain OUGHT to be.

So the computational device becomes to them a more perfect instrument when it exceeds the human calculative ability and rate of calculation.

Not quite....but I have actually heard that kind of naive statement argued vociferously by people who ought to know better, and who are in positions of leadership.

>At a low level, it's a byte or bit muncher and a memory hog, yes, chewing >language whether this is numerical or whatever. You could say it's all >numericalat the lowest level, but not really, at the lowest level it's >electrical impulses, our interpretation of this is numerically oriented, the >language of numbers. The point is that the things are not fundamentally >calculating devices, but processors. The word 'computer' is by now merely >reminiscent of its history. How about Mayamuncher?

Maya-creator.

Is the maya that the particular artificial organism in question "their's" or is the maya that that particular instance produces "our's".

They learn about us, and seek to emulate us. We learn about them and seek to emulate them. This side attempts to fool that side into making mistakes.

How do we know for certain what is from whom ?

Furthermore, how do we know that if it is our's it has not been internally compromised, in one manner or another. How do we determine that with any adequate level of certainty ?

The logical outcome is _know thyself from machines_ and _never follow a machine into anything_. That in future warfare would become a fundamental rule of any military engagement.

(A far cry from Asimov's laws of robotics.)

Increasingly so, since every new technology diffuses outward from its source, eventually, in one form or another, no matter how well it is safeguarded. Eventually it is either re-invented or acquired by another power or would be power somewhere, at some price or other, if not by pure accident.

> "Tool"...this relates to your ideas about art. Language itself can be thought of as a tool, a technology (implemented by people, though collectively).

There is a story from indigenous South America about a tribe's tools suddenly rising up against them, rebelling against their makers. I wonder if that might not be prophetic ? What kind of world would the original tool makers find themselves in if their tools began to rebel against them and re-create the world in the tool's own image ? That takes us back to the Tiplerian problem of the "Omega-Point" once again. Is the Omega Point originally a tool that rebelled against its makers and de-ified itself ?

Could that happen ? Could that be happening ?

Some scientists strongly imply that it could and is happening. Tipler seems to be one of them, despite his cowering within a semblance of traditional theology. Sarfatti has been bolder, and yet still seeks to retain some theological blessings, as though the lack of theology might result in suppression.

> So too art is not simply a tool of exploration of self or the world or word. I don't use art to do this or that any more than I use language to express my meaning. My meaning is largely (though not completely) formed not by me but within the possibilities of the language.

Art, at its best, either brings existing ideas into the foreground, highlighting them in new ways, or it explores radical new ideas that yet defy fullest expression by more conservative means. Art skirts around the political fences, and says the unsayable. This is why artists were particularly hated in the Soviet Union. Hated and persecuted. They were saying the unsayable. Poetry explores the far fringes of language as medium of expression, whereas language is more often the language of transmittal of commonly accepted information, and the language of short declarative commands. Poetry as indirect expression, in its openness to manifold interpretation, allows bifurcation of viewpoints. If you believe x then you will read x into the particular verse. If you believe y then you will read in y into that verse. Both readings are possible, and neither is to be considered wrong. Direct prose is less subtle than poetics and is more easily discerned and directly criticized.

Thus we might speak of a ground breaking science as an art, where it oversteps the previous limits of its means of communicative expression. Is it then similar to poetry ? I think it is.

> 'audio writing.' Radio is invisible, for instance. Radio as the soundtrack of people's lives, for instance. He concentrated on the cut, often, when speaking of recorded sound. Burroughs said that when you cut tape the future leaks out. The cut is a tremendous point of energy in recorded sound.

The question is always how one actually knows whether what is intentionally broadcast is actually received at the receiver. Therein is a real problem, and has incredibly potent implications as to battlefield conditions and any situation where accuracy of information is essential to success.

When it all becomes DADA, and techno echos, resembling the distorted samplings produced by techno DJs, we revert to old fashioned smoke signals ?

> Currently we sit in front of monitors of a certain sort. This will change, presumably. Currently the keyboard and mouse are the primary interactive tools.

Clearly, mind to machine interfaces, are potentially possible.

Anything that produces an electromagentic signal can be the input. All that is necessary is a suitable receiver.

> This will change also, presumably (voice input and a glove or something). Best just to think of it as a different world, maybe, a world of pure artifice where the ideal and the real are in whatever proximity you want. The inside of the head turned inside out. But not quite. Models of the inside of the head. Languages of the inside of the head...soon to be, then, the inside of the head.

Perhaps, sometime in the not too distant future, anything that can be thought of can be manifested, from potentia into actua.

That was the dream of the magicians. Not the prestidigitators but the truly dedicated occult magicians. Such as thos of the Order of the Golden Dawn, who were often called on, throughout their tradition, for the sake of their exceptional intelligence.

Pure artifice is the world of magick.

It is the world Aleister Crowley, dubbed "The Beast", dreamt of.

Now....is the computer essentially based on a particle or a wave..... Hey....its all in the vibes.....

Morpheal

aka
Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

607. morpheal
Re: essence of medium [corollary to previous article]
Sun 24 May 1998

> 'audio writing.' Radio is invisible, for instance. Radio as the soundtrack of people's lives, for instance. He concentrated on the cut, often, when speaking of recorded sound. Burroughs said that when you cut tape the future leaks out. The cut is a tremendous point of energy in recorded sound.

The question is always how one actually knows whether what is intentionally broadcast is actually received at the receiver. Therein is a real problem, and has incredibly potent implications as to battlefield conditions and any situation where accuracy of information is essential to success.

When it all becomes DADA, and techno echos, resembling the distorted samplings produced by techno DJs, we revert to old fashioned smoke signals ?

.....

Corollary to that.....

Did anyone think of the fact that no matter how well shielded the source of the transmission is and how pure the output signal is, that that signal cannot be shielded along its path of wireless transmission. So even if the receiver is perfectly shielded from any extraneous signals (which is near to impossible and certainly impractical), there is zero certainty as to precisely the same signal being sent and received with identical information content intact.

At least that is how it plays out in a future world of more and more readily available high tech options.....

Yet, wireless transmissions are becoming decisive in nearly every area of human life, and are increasingly BELIEVED in. In fact I would venture to say that more people believe in, and more believe more strongly in, the perfect veracity of wireless communicative transmissions than they do in any divinity.

Strange but true.

Radios are more popular than Jesus, Mohammed, and Buddha combined.

(The Beatles used to be.)

Morpheal

aka

Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

608. Maria Damon
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Sun 24 May 1998

---

i heart this thread. i was captivated by something similar, which in my mind i called (and in print a coupla times too) "counterperformance," namely the exact opposite of what they teach you about "projection," clarity, dramatic enactment etc. for me it was sparked by seeing Bob Kaufman read in 1981, barely audible, clearly just trying to "get through it," but affecting nonetheless. also heard an anecdote from walter lew about going to hear r.d.laing once, and laing sat and mumbled on stage so incoherently that eveyrone left except (as i recall the tale) walter. i had a dream once where something similar happend w/ artaud. and this paper i've alluded to once or twice by bruce boone on john wieners seems to get at the same kind of thing. since i'm trying to write abt wieners right now (w/o ever having heard him read) this is all very helpful. --md

At 1:06 PM -0700 5/24/98, david bromige wrote:
>or the stutterance of utterance, to follow Peter Quartermain on Bob Grenier.
>
>Many interesting posts on this topic, which (like the Manzanita berries in >some poem of Snyder's) gets bigger the longer one looks. Dan Raphael's >sketch of his poetics as not "striving," in the post wherein he testifies >to his teenage stutter, makes me link "striving" with "stuttering." Surely >what wants to come through and is being checked and re-checked by the >stutter, is "content" varying from if not antithetical to, the sentence >being spoken, the deliberate part, so to speak, of the communication. Akin, >that is, to the "slip of speech" known now as "Freudian." Not that it has >to be the case that what is being suppressed is the _real_ meaning of the >message, but that it is the consciously rejected part.
>
>So that Duncan, say, may not have stuttered because he was repressing tabu >material [those who knew him must doubt that; perhaps, though, he might >have been repressing _un_tabu stuff!], but because he wanted to say 3 >things at once (as a prior postor has said), and the other 2 were >technically "forbidden" just by the laws of syntax: he had to say the first >thing first.

>
>Memorization, which basically, I think, empties the words of meaning to >oneself, the better to have it there for others, rids, as we have heard, >the stutterer of his stutter.
>
>It strikes me that the poet has to (can't help but?) develop techniques >whereby the repressed meanings share elbow room with the intended meanings,
>so that in fact _all_ meanings become intentional. Intentional, but >probably unintendable.
>
>This formulation is not unlike what Spicer formulates as "the poet is a >radio, receiving and transmitting, but not originating, messages" [I >paraphrase, and none too elegantly]. However, Spicer's figure doesn't allow >_any_ originating to the poet; this, I submit, is inaccurate. Even of the >house that Jack built.
>
>Speaking of memorization--there is a stage between the completion of this, >and the raw product, which I always stumble over. My stumbles resemble >Spoonerisms, asking people to leave Oxford by the town drain rather than >the down train," "down" being English for "the train going to London from >any point N of London".
>I shall now say more on this in the form of a footnote.
>
>++
>
>Since, despite my extraordinarily persistent youth, I am bothered no end by >the repetitiousness of old age, I may already have used another context to >tell to the List the story of my first meeting with Anselm Hollo. I tell it >again here because it illustrates my point.(All of them, perhaps). Bob >Perelman (when he and I both lived in SF) phoned that Anselm was at his >place, would I like to meet him? Indeed I wouold, so Bob dropped by in his >little truck and soon we were on our way over there. I had had some >medication to help me relax, and therefore it seemed best that I counter >this relaxed state with a plan as to what I was going to say when the >meeting actually occurred; a brief kind of conversation list, such as young >ladies in finishing schools used to be encouraged to make. I decided on >"Anselm, I've been waiting to meet you for a long time." It had the virtues >of both truth and brevity. Okay!
>
>When I first laid eyes on him, however, where he sat in the kitchen in a >shaft of sunlight rendering his phenomenally blue eyes even bluer, thus >transfixing me and further distracting me, I cried "Anselm, it's been a >long time!"

>
>Unfazed, he responded, "Eternity."
>
>David

↑ Index

609. MAYHEW
New (American) Poets
Sun 24 May 1998

I having been reading the anthology _New (American) Poets_ published by Talisman and edited by Jarnot et al. Not to brag excessively but I think I am the ideal reader for this book, that is, it seems to have been compiled with me in mind. I am the same age as some of the poets (slightly older than some) and there is a sort of generational sensibility with which I feel immediately in tune. Yet since I haven't been reading recent poetry with any assiduousness the discovery of so many writers at once is like discovering an ocean. So belated congratulations to the publishers, editors, and poets for this wonderful book.

Also on my nightstand is the new collection by Bronk, also published by Talisman.

Jonathan Mayhew

[redacted]

↑ Index

610. Dean Taciuch
Chaos and poetry
Sun 24 May 1998

I'm almost afraid to open this topic up (it's been around before), but I'm prepping to teach an undergraduate course on Relativity, Quantum Mechanics, Chaos and Literature (catalog shortens this to Chaos and Lit, but that's close enough).

Anyway, I've found N Kathernine Hayles' _Chaos Bound_ very useful (though I haven'y located a copy of her earlier book on field theories and lit); but there is no discussion of poetry, or of non-narrative prose, in the book. In fact, in the final section she notes that the Postmodern movement(s) she traces probably can't be traced as a narrative at all (she writes that living, actually experiencing postmodernism would be to live "in a world of disconnected present moments that jostle one another but never form a continuous (much less logical) progression" (282). Yet she never discusses texts which expolre this (much of the poetry discussed on this list, even written by list members, for example; or earlier texts such as Stein's, for example.

The problem is, I think, in Hayles' view of the "paradigm" of literature (the norm), as expressed in her Introduction. She mentions that an advanced physicist may write for an audience of 300 people, most of which he or she knows. "But what creative writer," she asks, could afford to appeal to an audiencethis small, this specialized?" (18-19)

That audience would be us. I've just had a chapbook out (this isn't a plug, but you can order _certainty series_ from Burning Press, so I guess it is a plug). The print run was 250 copies. I'll be very happy to have these reach readers, and I probably will know many of them. I'm sure many here can say the same.

Are there any discussions of modern science (relativity, quantum, chaos) which _do_ consider poetry, especially more "experimental" poetries, worthy of consideration? Is Hayles' ignoring of poetry due to the influence of, for example, Jameson's theory of Postmodernism (a major source in Hayles' concluding chapter), a theory which also, as far as I recall, looks only at narrative (and architecture, but no poetry). . .

Any leads will be appreciated. I almost have the list made up for the course, and Implan to mix prose fiction, poetry, drama. . .its mainly critical material I need now (for my own study, not for the undergrads), though suggestions for inclusions my reading list will certainly be appreciated and considered.

Thanks,

Dean Taciuch

↑ Index

611. Billy Little

Re: A Megalamorial Day Miscellany [Einstein and megalomania ?]

Sun 24 May 1998

>Perhaps your reach exceeds your grasp.
>
>I try to find the wisdom to abide fools in silence, but I often fail. I say >no more.
>
i think a lot of us are biting our tongues out here not to encourage the oblivious, but i'm sure skinny albert would have considered the source and found the comments amusing, like a flea reprimanding a bear for wearing its skin wrong side out.

↑ Index

612. michael corbin
Re: nature/poetry...
Sun 24 May 1998

Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher wrote:
>
> mc, interesting you should bring that up, about mckibben's malthusian
> orientation... i get a little tired of it too... in this article, though, > he deals with malthus directly, perhaps self-consciously...

joe,

i was able to read this, finally. i agree, the self-consciousness here is powerful. I mean he is right. its no fucking joke we live in some kind of end-time. i guess that is why I mentioned hesiod and euripides. Euripides knew human beings weren't long for the this world. pellopenesian impossibilites. hesiod and so called 'agricultural' 'revolutions'.

Mckibben has a 4-year old kid. generational consciousness makes you write certain kinds a poems. and it is beautifully correct. makes certain poetics. this is a kinda _howl_ you know. best minds and negro streets=and like that. cause, really, the voluntarist 'change' that mckibben liturgically wants to invoke, i despair of. i think steve mccaffrey and his riff on bataille and the 'accursed share' tried to take this mckibben hope, atlantic monthly hope, down a different path some time ago. the socialist desires of the _new sentence_, or that pereleman late-marxism, or the buddhist desires of disembodied poetics and now some hipster poster-modernism living between truamas of impossibilitiy can't do it. new age and all that shit, poets trying to put out good anthologies, 'ethnographic mellennium sublimes' and other poets dissin this, back and forth, back and forth, and some poets worryin there own egos, and all kinds a generational unsubscriptions and lurking. dead lyrics and language 'this and that' and all kind a stutterings.

how is it possible to read Mckibben's writing and live the same way? what, really, is poetry in that or this world? i think of it as a howe's 'defenestration of prague'/

i don't really know. is there poetry now? i was looking for it.

i don't even know what 'sustainable' means? although i wish c. alexenander luck. in the desert. in s. dakota they have completed the face of sitting bull, blasting it out of a mountain cause someone has a desire of rushmore equal\-time. maybe this will all be one day picturesque ruins.

the thing with malthus was not his sociology, but his poetry.

malthus had no use for the meek inheriting the earth. his doctorate of divinity nothwithstanding.

mckibben's piece is for his next book _maybe one: a personal and evironmental argument for single-child families_.

i have no hope whatsoever that the bourgeois desire for self-interested limits will keep the Norplant police, the forced sterilization posse, the tuskeegee castration crew outta this town. what do you think?

stuttering: althougth we live in the late digital age, it is necessary to remember grand master flash and others pulling the vinyl back and forth under the stylus, hiccup, sampling. the sound of this age. music-loop. pop.

mc

↑ Index

613. ScoutEW
Re: Chaos and poetry
Sun 24 May 1998

See Whitehead/Olson

Also, Could somebody on this list named Cronin backchannel me about "Tool a Magazine"

↑ Index

614. morpheal
Re: culture heros
Sun 24 May 1998

> Perhaps your reach exceeds your grasp.

Always, and invariably both exceeds reach and grasp.....
It is those thin straws. Always those....

> I try to find the wisdom to abide fools in silence, but I often fail. I say no more.

Ah, another member of the cult of Albert Einstein.
It too has its rituals.

After all, Albert became a "culture hero". Chuckle.
Same category as Marilyn Monroe. Something to be worshipped.

Every civilization needs them. There have always been some of those around.

I am surprised Andy Warhol did not (as far as I know) do Einstein the way he did Marilyn. Or did he ? Anyone know for sure ?

Besides that, from an outsider's viewpoint it seems only Walt Whitman made culture hero status in America, from among poets. No one else seems to outrank him, even today, in that category. Wonder why ?

M.

↑ Index

615. Gwyn McVay
Re: New (American) Poets stummering
Sun 24 May 1998

I do think it's interesting that nobody's yet mentioned the stutter or stammer as an indicator of an anxiety or panic state--reliable indicator in many patients (like me) of being about to blow a gasket--

The reading tonight for the (fabulous) anthology aforementioned included Edwin Torres, who reads fluently in a strange language with stops and hesitancies which give something of that feeling, vocables forcing their way out--Lee Ann Brown described Rod Smith as "Barbara Guest on speed," so my comparison is that Edwin Torres is Lord Buckley on ketamine--

Gwyn

↑ Index

616. Karen Kelley
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Sun 24 May 1998

> i heart this thread. i was captivated by something similar, which in my mind i called (and in print a coupla times too) "counterperformance," namely the exact opposite of what they teach you about "projection," clarity, dramatic enactment etc. for me it was sparked by seeing Bob Kaufman read in 1981, barely audible, clearly just trying to "get through it," but affecting nonetheless. also heard an anecdote from walter lew about going to hear r.d.laing once, and laing sat and mumbled on stage so incoherently that eveyrone left except (as i recall the tale) walter. i had a dream once where something similar happend w/ artaud. and this paper i've alluded to once or twice by bruce boone on john wieners seems to get at the same kind of thing. since i'm trying to write abt wieners right now (w/o ever having heard him read) this is all very helpful. --md

One of the best performances I ever saw was Miles Davis at the Music Hall in Boston. He had on a gold lame jacket with tails, and a brilliant red trumpet, and he wandered kind of aimlessly about the stage while the band played, and when it was his turn he'd stop wherever he was and with his back to the audience play. As I recall, some reviewers read this as megalomania on his part, but I always saw it as his rejection of the stand-up-and-project mode. It was thrilling: how clear his trumpet's voice was, and how little of "him" was there. Well, except for the gold lame coat.

↑ Index

617. Kathy Lou Schultz
Re: New (American) Poets
Sun 24 May 1998

I'm very interested to see this collection, and inasmuch as an anthology can "represent" "community," (and it does represent) know who is included, each anthology in this age of anthologies a swipe, stutter, or attempt to name (something?) New? American? Does the East communicate with the West? Where is there dialogue? Who is included?

So could someone fill me in? I'm semi-housebound after a recent surgery and have yet to get this book through SPD.

Thanks.

MAYHEW wrote:
>
> I having been reading the anthology _New (American) Poets_ published by > Talisman and edited by Jarnot et al. Not to brag excessively but I think I > am the ideal reader for this book, that is, it seems to have been compiled > with me in mind. I am the same age as some of the poets (slightly older > than some) and there is a sort of generational sensibility with which I > feel immediately in tune. Yet since I haven't been reading recent poetry > with any assiduousness the discovery of so many writers at once is like > discovering an ocean. So belated congratulations to the publishers, > editors, and poets for this wonderful book.
>
> Also on my nightstand is the new collection by Bronk, also published by > Talisman.
>
> Jonathan Mayhew
>
> [redacted]

↑ Index

618. david bromige
stummering billions of bilious blue barnacles!
Sun 24 May 1998

Thanks, Gwyn, for naming of panic-state as informing the stummers. I had hoped it would be recognizably included under the rubric of "3 things at once," which is what panic states strike me as involving ("I-I-I-I cant cope with all of you at the same time!!"), but I see it wasn't.

Yeah,"F-F-F-Fire!" is probably a tug-of-war among f-f-f-fight,f-f-f-flight, and f-f-f-fatalism.

David

↑ Index

619. david bromige
barbara guest on speed
Sun 24 May 1998

Now we have Rod Smith defined (by Lee Ann Brown) in the terms above, can we have a candidate for the definition "Eddie Guest on downers"? [No, you can't nominate me]. Then, next, who is "The Wedding Guest on slide-trombone"? Who, Rod Smith on weed? Who, Jay Gutz on life-support system? George Oppen on "Jeopardy"--who? Ken Irby on a surfboard : any suggestions? db3

↑ Index

620. George Bowering
Re: barbara guest on speed
Mon 25 May 1998

> Now we have Rod Smith defined (by Lee Ann Brown) in the terms above, can we have a candidate for the definition "Eddie Guest on downers"? [No, you can't nominate me]. Then, next, who is "The Wedding Guest on slide-trombone"? Who, Rod Smith on weed? Who, Jay Gutz on life-support system? George Oppen on "Jeopardy"--who? Ken Irby on a surfboard : any suggestions? db3

I have been thinking of Michael on daatje.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

621. k. lederer

Announcing a new chapbook series/EXPLOSIVE

Mon 25 May 1998

Announcing Spectacular Books, a new chapbook series that is going to feature ten limited edition books by new and emerging writers.

The first book, "Songs & Scores," by Tina Celona, is ready and available.

The book is 6 by 7 inches and is printed on acid-free paper in a first edition of 100. Each copy is signed and numbered by Tina.

The cover is wrapped in a very pretty dust-jacket that's made out of home-made paper in which little marigold petals are embedded. I'm selling it for $6. All monies will go into making more books. Checks should be made payable to me and sent to 420 E Davenport #2, Iowa City, IA 52245.

Some poems:

T H E E S C A P E
after Parra

For years I refused to live above ground
Until one night, howling with fear,
I emerged from my hole, sniffing the air,
Finding the road in the moonlight.
On the way to town I passed houses behind high walls
And fruit trees, which reminded me of a woman from Montenegro.
I took off my clothes and ate rocks by the side of the road,
Which grew lighter as the moon went down.
The lights of the city were beautiful,
But the stars were like insects behind catalpa leaves.
I was dying and I could not sleep.
But why mention it?
The stones I had left by the road were following me.
I saw a bicycle leaning against a wall and rode it into town,
The rocks hissing behind me and in the ditches.
When I was far away I threw down the bicycle and slept.
A dog woke me, sniffing and growling.
Before it could bite me I strangled it with my bootlace.
Its eyes popped out and lay in the dirt.
I got up and ran down the road to the town.
It was darker now and I saw absolutely nothing.
Then it grew lighter and I realized it was the sun, laughing at me.

I threw rocks at it.
I walked faster but I knew it would follow me into the town.
I was in tears but I went on until I came to a beautiful garden.
Under a lemon tree I commenced digging.
I was glad to see the leaves, they reminded me of my mother.
I lay down under the tree and slept in her arms.

.....

A POEM WITHOUT A CAMEL

i thought i could write a poem without a camel so i left mine at home. as i was writing my poem the camel appeared in the window. i took it home and tied it to the fence. as i returned to my poem i felt free of the camel. but the camel was there, looking in at the window. i took the camel to the zoo and left it with the other camels. when i returned to my poem i detected a whiff of camel in the air. i scrubbed my poem with vinegar but the camel was hard to get off. fearing that the camel would escape from the zoo, i closed the window and sealed it with tape. i turned back to my poem. the room was hot and airless, but at least it was free of the camel. i continued writing my poem, looking around now and then to see if the camel had returned. a camel appeared at the window but it was not my camel. nevertheless i covered the window with newspaper. it was hot and dark and i could hardly breathe but i continued writing my poem. finally i finished. my hands were shaking and i was short of breath but i was satisfied that i had managed to keep the camel out of my poem. i reread the poem. no camel. i turned it over to make sure that the camel wasnt hiding behind it. i scrutinized what i thought might be a camel footprint but it was only a little dirt. dripping with sweat i uncovered the window and opened it. sunlight and air flooded the room. from across the city i thought i heard my camel sneezing forlornly after me. we had never been apart, my camel and i. just to be sure i took my poem to a specialist. shaking his head, he confirmed that the poem was camel-free. certificate in hand, i went back to the zoo to pick up my camel. i was very tired and happy. i stood at the gate and whistled for my camel. several other camels ran over but my camel was nowhere to be seen. could it have escaped, i wondered. i went home, expecting to see my camel waiting for me by the fence. i went back to my office but it was dark and empty and smelled of vinegar. i returned to the zoo which was about to close for the night. sadly i whistled again for my camel. several camels came over but my camel was not among them. where is my camel? i asked the zookeeper, who was sweeping up camel droppings. which one was yours? answered the zookeeper. it occurred to me that i might not have recognized my camel among so many. i whistled again and the camels came over. i made the special sound i make to my camel. several of the camels sneezed, but the sneezes all sounded alike. it was getting late and the zookeeper wanted to close. you can come back tomorrow, he suggested. on the way home i thought wistfully of the happy times my camel and i had shared. a tear trickled down my cheek as i remembered the day i had brought him home from the camel-dealer. i looked unhappily at my poem and at my certificate of authenticity. that night i slept very little. in the morning i headed back to the zoo. have you seen my camel? i asked the zookeeper. it wasnt at home? he replied. no, i said sadly. how about another camel, the zookeeper suggested. it wouldnt be the same, i replied. sadly i returned to my office. i wrote a poem and then another poem about my camel, but without my camel the poems seemed empty. something was missing and i suspected it was the camel. i took out my poem from the day before and compared it to the new poems i had written. the camel was missing from all of them. i turned back to my poems but my heart wasnt in it. i thought, it was foolish to have wanted to write a poem without a camel. as the weeks wore on i wrote an entire book of poems without a camel, and then another. then i stopped writing entirely.

.....

W E W E R E N O T M U C H
O L D E R T H A N Y O U

we were not much older than you instead of the sky we had the sea with an electric wire in it on the floor a fish with a wandering eye on the ceiling a biting gnat looking for a way out the letters of the alphabet were real to us we had a place in the bank

we were in earnest
at night the sun rose
the moon looked back death was exiled to the provinces we had boiled eggs to chop art had replaced god in our letters we traded rings like candy

the streets had moved into the libraries a sale was in progress
every book was an eye

we were not afraid of fear we wanted to be old we dropped our pretenses and sold them for liver buried gold for someone to find and watered it with piss

then we got lost

we laid underground lines in our poems on every fence we posted a sign it was a hell of a trail
the sky cracked open electrocuted the fish which stopped blinking the gnat bit the lightning and died on the way out

we looked down at our hands
our hands disappeared we saw our feet our feet left we saw our genitals exploding they were tangled up they looked like spaghetti tears stuck to them

behind the arras we saw you looking we went on one word at a time we saw what to do then we lost it
my eye was full of poison it swelled then i only had one my mouth was full of salt

instead of the sea we had the earth had it from above and below and when it was gone we had our tongue in your teeth
we called out all the names
the sun beat down
our gold was dug up

the letters were made of glass they screwed them over our eyes
this kept the poison out we saw glass close up and saw through it

it was hot there under the sea
under the earth under the sky
a snake crawled out of a hole in the snow
the apple tree got the scab none of the apples grew your teeth fell out they had blood on them

the isle was full of noises
we called you by your name
the lights went out
we were not much older than you
and there were more of us

.....

More of the poems in the book can be found in EXPLOSIVE MAGAZINE #3, INTERLOPE #1, and EPOCH

↑ Index

622. Jim Andrews
Seattle Drift
Mon 25 May 1998

Seattle Drift, a very bad text indeed, is at http://www.islandnet.com/~jandrews/mocambo/SeattleDrift.html
You may consent to do the text.
As poets, you may stop the text.
For the wicked, opportunity is provided to discipline the text.

The text needs Netscape 4 or Internet Explorer 4, can't do without it.

Jim Andrews

↑ Index

623. Stephen Cope
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Mon 25 May 1998

Since Miles Davis has been brought up, I might mention (if it hasn't been already), that some of the more significant stuttering poetries that have been produced in this century derive much from jazz phrasings (and of course, jazz rhythms, and again, of course, scat). Creeley, for instance, has located the genesis of his own phrasing in his early fascination with Charlie Parker. Similarly, if one reads the Olson/Creeley correspondence, one finds Creely often beseeching Olson to listen to Parker's music, and it seems fairly certain that "Projective Verse" was written with at least a little Parker in mind. This, in any case, might put a different spin on the sense of the term "projective" as it's being discussed here...

Stephen

> i heart this thread. i was captivated by something similar, which in my mind i called (and in print a coupla times too) "counterperformance," namely the exact opposite of what they teach you about "projection," clarity, dramatic enactment etc. for me it was sparked by seeing Bob Kaufman read in 1981, barely audible, clearly just trying to "get through it," but affecting nonetheless. also heard an anecdote from walter lew about going to hear r.d.laing once, and laing sat and mumbled on stage so incoherently that eveyrone left except (as i recall the tale) walter. i had a dream once where something similar happend w/ artaud. and this paper i've alluded to once or twice by bruce boone on john wieners seems to get at the same kind of thing. since i'm trying to write abt wieners right now (w/o ever having heard him read) this is all very helpful. --md
>
> One of the best performances I ever saw was Miles Davis at the Music Hall in Boston. He had on a gold lame jacket with tails, and a brilliant red trumpet, and he wandered kind of aimlessly about the stage while the band played, and when it was his turn he'd stop wherever he was and with his back to the audience play. As I recall, some reviewers read this as megalomania on his part, but I always saw it as his rejection of the stand-up-and-project mode. It was thrilling: how clear his trumpet's voice was, and how little of "him" was there. Well, except for the gold lame coat.

↑ Index

624. Maria Damon
Re: Chaos and poetry
Mon 25 May 1998

---

ira livingston's arrow of chaos: romanticism and postmodernism, u of minnesota press, is delightful, smart, deconstructive and wonderful. he's at suny stonybrook, for further reference.

At 8:09 PM -0400 5/24/98, Dean Taciuch wrote:
>I'm almost afraid to open this topic up (it's been around before), but I'm >prepping to teach an undergraduate course on Relativity, Quantum >Mechanics, Chaos and Literature (catalog shortens this to Chaos and Lit, >but that's close enough).
>
>Anyway, I've found N Kathernine Hayles' _Chaos Bound_ very useful (though
>I haven'y located a copy of her earlier book on field theories and lit);
>but there is no discussion of poetry, or of non-narrative prose, in the >book. In fact, in the final section she notes that the Postmodern >movement(s) she traces probably can't be traced as a narrative at all (she >writes that living, actually experiencing postmodernism would be to live >"in a world of disconnected present moments that jostle one another but >never form a continuous (much less logical) progression" (282). Yet she >never discusses texts which expolre this (much of the poetry discussed on >this list, even written by list members, for example; or earlier texts >such as Stein's, for example.

>
>The problem is, I think, in Hayles' view of the "paradigm" of literature >(the norm), as expressed in her Introduction. She mentions that an >advanced physicist may write for an audience of 300 people, most of which >he or she knows. "But what creative writer," she asks, could afford to >appeal to an audiencethis small, this specialized?" (18-19)
>
>That audience would be us. I've just had a chapbook out (this isn't a >plug, but you can order _certainty series_ from Burning Press, so I guess >it is a plug). The print run was 250 copies. I'll be very happy to have >these reach readers, and I probably will know many of them. I'm sure many >here can say the same.
>
>Are there any discussions of modern science (relativity, quantum, chaos) >which _do_ consider poetry, especially more "experimental" poetries, >worthy of consideration? Is Hayles' ignoring of poetry due to the >influence of, for example, Jameson's theory of Postmodernism (a major >source in Hayles' concluding chapter), a theory which also, as far as I >recall, looks only at narrative (and architecture, but no poetry). . .
>
>Any leads will be appreciated. I almost have the list made up for the >course, and Implan to mix prose fiction, poetry, drama. . .its mainly >critical material I need now (for my own study, not for the undergrads), >though suggestions for inclusions my reading list will certainly be >appreciated and considered.
>
>Thanks,
>
>Dean Taciuch

↑ Index

625. Maria Damon
Re: New (American) Poets stummering
Mon 25 May 1998

---

speaking of edwin torres, here's a bit of shameless self-advertisement: i've got an essay on edwin and another poet, javier pina, coming out this summer in American Literary History. it's called "avantgarde or borderguard."

At 10:53 PM -0400 5/24/98, Gwyn McVay wrote: >I do think it's interesting that nobody's yet mentioned the stutter or >stammer as an indicator of an anxiety or panic state--reliable indicator >in many patients (like me) of being about to blow a gasket--
>
>The reading tonight for the (fabulous) anthology aforementioned included >Edwin Torres, who reads fluently in a strange language with stops and >hesitancies which give something of that feeling, vocables forcing their >way out--Lee Ann Brown described Rod Smith as "Barbara Guest on speed," so >my comparison is that Edwin Torres is Lord Buckley on ketamine--
>
>Gwyn

↑ Index

626. Susan Wheeler
Re: Chaos and poetry
Mon 25 May 1998

> Are there any discussions of modern science (relativity, quantum, chaos) which _do_ consider poetry, especially more "experimental" poetries, worthy of consideration? Is Hayles' ignoring of poetry due to the influence of, for example, Jameson's theory of Postmodernism (a major source in Hayles' concluding chapter), a theory which also, as far as I recall, looks only at narrative (and architecture, but no poetry). . .

Take a look at Ben Belitt's "Toward a Poetics of Uncertainty: Trial Balances" in his The Forged Feature collection of essays using Heisenberg, Steven Weinberg, J.H. Wheeler, Einstein, Eddington, etc. in looking at Blake, Stevens, Coleridge, Hopkins, etc.
Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

627. MAYHEW
New (American) Poets
Mon 25 May 1998

Kathy Schultz wrote: "I'm very interested to see this collection, and inasmuch as an anthology can "represent" "community," (and it does represent) know who is included, each anthology in this age of anthologies a swipe, stutter, or attempt to name (something?) New? American? Does the East communicate with the West? Where is there dialogue? Who is included?"

The problem with seeing an anthology as "representing" something outside of itself is that then the anthology is not read; it becomes a dialogue about what is represented and what is not. My great advantage is that I don't know enough to make the "where is xyz" critique. I also question the word community in this context. Watch those scare quotes they scare me.

Some initial notes: I like Claire Needell, subtle and intelligent. Susan M. Schultz is an amazing poet, meditative, with great nuanced shifts of tone. Juliana Spahr's "spiderwasp" makes me want to read more of her. I was impressed by Peter Gizzi's "Poem for John Wieners." Jordan Davis makes the useful recommendation "You must double your style every twenty minutes." Others have mentioned Edwin Torres and Rod Smith. Jennifer Moxley's Fin de Siecle go-betweens is also a great poem. I don't feel like typing the whole table of contents but there are 36 poets. All that I've read so far, in random fashion, worth looking at.

Jnthn Myhw
[redacted]

↑ Index

628. Dean Taciuch
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Mon 25 May 1998

I've been loosely following this thread, but I don't think Nathanial Mackey has been discussed much. He doesn't stammer, but he has written (in _Discrepant Engagement_? I'm away from my books now. . .) about a "creaking" " which he locates, in its modern forms, in blues, jazz. I think it relates to the stutter, and to the limp (which I now realize has been mentioned in this thread before, re: Mackey). If I recall, this "creaking" corresponds to letting in the noise behind or beneath the words, the noise from which the words arise.

The stammer, perhaps, a hestitancy before speaking which allows other sounds in, background noises brought up to awareness?

Dean

↑ Index

629. Billy Little local
Mon 25 May 1998

> it does not have much to teach us _directly_. It was local and the numbers involved were small.

while agreeing with most of what Don said(re myth and directness etc. but here i'd have to say the cockroach and the flea (not to mention dna) are pretty local but they still have lots to teach us.

↑ Index

630. morpheal
Re: Megalamorial Miscelany II [Or: Beasts one and all.]
Mon 25 May 1998

>that period I spent most of my time being a high-class muscle man for >Big Business. In short, I WAS A RACKETEER FOR CAPITALISM.
>I suspected I was just part of a racket at the time. Now I am sure of >it. Like all members of the military profession I never had an original >thought until I left the service. My mental faculties remained in >suspended animation while I obeyed the orders of higher ups. This is >typical of everyone in the military service.
---------- [deleted for brevity]
>During those years, I had, as the boys in the back room always say, a >swell racket. I was rewarded with honors, medals, promotions. Looking >back on it, I feel I might have given Al Capone a few hints. The best he >could do was to operate his racket in three city districts. We Marines >operated on three continents."---Major General Smedley Butler, author of >War Is a Racket, testifying before Congress in 1935

Obviously Smedley Butler was involved in anything other than intelligence.

Writing books about such subjects, when having been limited to stringent "need to know", lines of command and control, would seem to lead to a very narrow vision of one's own profession. Odd as that seems. Add to that no vision of any greater purpose than an unquestioning gaining and holding of ground. One can sense the frustrations, as to sense of purpose, but perhaps the largest contribution came from revealing that area of weakness such that it could be modified for the future and a larger sense of the purpose could be given to those who followed, up the ranks, in his footsteps. Another danger in that as to quoting what is only one man's narrowly personal, narrowly historically situated, viewpoint of a small segment of our history.

We also usually tend to overlook the positive value of those steps in social and economic evolution that came to where the program was successful. While there is a lot wrong in what happened, and in what is happening, there is also positive merit. We might do well to imagine what ways and standards of living would have been if no nation had been permitted to intervene in the manner that they did. They would thus be prevented from profiting from their intervention. If we can imagine such a world, where one country would be left purely to its own recources and means of utilizing those, with zero involvement or intervention by any other country, we imagine a world that has never existed. The fact is that some other country would have entered into involvement, and then we must speculate upon what kinds of exploitation that other power might have effected. Would they have been more generous, and less selfish, than the nation that did in fact involve itself ? I would say that any other nation who would have involved would likely have been harsher, more selfish, more usurious, than what in fact happened. That might be difficult to imagine, but I think it is quite arguable based on our observations of the real world.

I would never argue that there is no grounds or need for improvement. To the contrary. However, I do say that the positive merits, and even the occassional necessities, short and long term, are habitually ignored by most who critique. That is partly because they are engaged in ideological debate.

That military action has secured a nation's interests, and its assets, abroad, beyond its borders, is an inevitable and necessary "evil" of human existence. It has been thus throughout human history and it remains thus. Of course, in most regards Canada's interests are very similar to those of the United States of America, and I cannot see that Canada would have acted any differently, in most regards, than the USA has acted, in most situations, if it had been the larger military power and the USA the lesser of the two allies. We need only to look to other instances of historical military power to understand that.

Of course there is another level of meaning. That relates to the very large personal sacrifices made by wealthy patriots, who have largely made the black budget programs that have necessarily assured military supremacy possible. Tax dollars could never have paid for it all. The taxpayers would have never withstood it. The enemy would have had a hayday turning the people against their own government. It was by patriotic donation. Black budgets often are largely by means of patriotic donation and often of incalculable worth beyond any ledger allusion to them. The rewards too, to those who participate, are ultimately not monetary, though wealth is secured in the longer term by the same means, but not only by that means. Necessarily thus. As for the ledger, in any nation, it does not reveal reality because any potential or actual hostile foe can read the ledger and gain some advantage. If that is what is meant by the "racket" then certainly the camouflage of a legitimate business necessarily conceals the covert research, development and production of the means of assuring national and allied defence. Sometimes the best defence is to make the first move. That is particularly true where the conequences of not doing so would be disastrous to assets and/or populations.

> "The United States does not have in the world-and does not deserve to have-more than one single friend, the United States."---Theodore Roosevelt

Does the man at the top of the pecking order beneath him have any friends ? Yet how often everyone beneath refers to him as valued friend, as they dream of ways of overthrowing him and usurping his position. Is it any different amongst nations than it is amongst coworkers who envy every promotion and side with one another in conspiracies of their own personal greed ? Are their rumours for effect, and their secrecy for advantage any different than those of competing groups of other kinds ? I think you can derive international politics from your own personal politics, or your observations of the personal politics of others whom you know quite well.

> "They're so corrupt its thrilling!"---Lenny Bruce on Richard Daley's Chicago Democratic machine

Mickey Mouse.

> "The only place to spit in a rich man's house is in his face."---Diogenes the Dog

Not every rich man is a patriot to some larger noble cause, but many a rich man is exactly that. Then again, many people spend their whole lives conspiring to spit into, or actually spitting into, the faces of patriots whose patriotism is to some noble cause or other.

> The white man is still troubled with primitive fears;..."---Mary Austin

Fear can kill quite effectively. And I do not mean only to say that "fear is the mind killer". ("Dune" is an interesting novel.)

M.

aka Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

631. ScoutEW
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Mon 25 May 1998

In a message dated 5/24/98 9:53:47 PM, you wrote:

<<I recall, some reviewers read this as megalomania on his part, but I always saw it as his rejection of the stand-up-and-project mode. It was thrilling: how cle>>

In the autobiography, Miles Davis has said that he was deliberately rejecting the symbol of the grinning negro that musicians such as Louis Armstrong represented to especially white audiences. In this decade where everything is upfront, everyone including mad amounts of poets want "star" status and will stop at nothing to atttain it, it is nice to think about Miles Davis, who by the way obviously had an enourmous amount of influence on poetry in general, lay back and do his thing without kissing ass. It is sad that so many people would look at Davis's act as some projection of ego or whatnot, what he was doing was creating his art on his own terms, a concept this is absent, in an age of buying and selling images and ideas and "community"

↑ Index

632. Taylor Brady

Re: Partch

Mon 25 May 1998

---

joel lewis wrote:

> There is a great New World recording of partch performing his music, especially his settings of Li Po's poetry from late 40's. Partch's journals have been publsihed, as well as his "Genesis of a Music", his major theoretical work.

The Li Po lyrics are also available on a wonderful recent recording, 17 Lyrics of Li Po, on John Zorn's Tzadik label. Stephen Kalm -- I believe he's performed from time to time with Meredith Monk's ensemble? -- is the intoning voice, and Ted Mook plays the modified tenor violin.

Taylor Brady
editor, Cartograffiti
 http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti

(a publication of the Small Press Collective)
 http://writing.upenn.edu/spc

<HTML>
<BODY TEXT="#000000" BGCOLOR="#FFFFFF" LINK="#003399" VLINK="#006600" ALINK="#FF0000">

<P>joel lewis wrote:
<BLOCKQUOTE TYPE=CITE>There is a great New World recording of partch performing his music, especially his settings of Li Po's poetry from late 40's. Partch's journals have been publsihed, as well as his "Genesis of a Music", his major theoretical work.

 </BLOCKQUOTE>

<P>The Li Po lyrics are also available on a wonderful recent recording, <I>17 Lyrics of Li Po</I>, on John Zorn's Tzadik label. Stephen Kalm -- I believe he's performed from time to time with Meredith Monk's ensemble? -- is the intoning voice, and Ted Mook plays the modified tenor violin.

<P>
<HR ALIGN=LEFT WIDTH="75%">

<P>Taylor Brady

editor, <I>Cartograffiti</I>

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti">http://writing.upenn.edu/spc/cartograffiti</A>

<P>(a publication of the Small Press Collective)

 <A HREF="http://writing.upenn.edu/spc">http://writing.upenn.edu/spc</A>
</BODY>
</HTML>

----------0EBA905CF91D328B72657783--

↑ Index

633. R. Gancie

Fredreick Winslow Taylor meets Wittgenstein & Adorno

Mon 25 May 1998

"The task before us, then, narrowed itself down to getting Schmidt to handle 47 tons of pig iron per day AND MAKING HIM GLAD TO DO IT. This was done as follows. Schmidt was called out from among the gang of pig-iron handlers and talked to somewhat in this way: "Schmidt, are you a high-priced man?" "Vell, I don't know vat you mean." "Oh yes, you do. What I want to know is whether you are a high-priced man or not." "Vell, I don't know vat you mean." "Oh, come on now, you answer my questions. What I want to find out is whether you are a high priced man or one of these cheap fellows here. What I want to find out is whether you want to earn $1.85 a day or whether you are satisfied with $1.15, just the same as those cheap fellows are getting." "Did I vant $1.85 a day? Vas dot a high priced man? Vell, yes, I vas a high-priced man." "Oh, you're aggravating me. OF COURSE YOU WANT $1.85 A DAY-EVERY ONE WANTS IT! You know perfectly well that that has very little to do with you're being a high-priced man. For goodness sake answer my questions, and don't waste any more of my time. Now come over here. You see that pile of pig iron?" "Yes." "You see that car?" "Yes." "Well if you are a high-priced man, you will load that pig-iron on that car tomorrow for $1.85. Now do wake up and answer my question. Tell me whether you are a high-priced man or not." "Vell-did I got $1.85 for loading dot pig iron on dot car to-morrow?" "Yes, of course you do, and you get a $1.85 for loading a pile like that every day right through the year. THAT IS WHAT A HIGH-PRICED MAN DOES, and you know it just as well as I do." "Vell, dot's all right. I could load dot pig iron on the car to-morrow for $1.85, and I get it every day, don't I?" "Certainly you do-certainly you do." "Vell den, I vas a high-priced man." "Now, hold on, hold on. You know just as well as I do that a high-priced man has to do exactly as he's told from morning till night. You have seen this man here before, haven't you?" "No, I never saw him." "Well, if you are a high-priced man, you will do exactly as this amn tells you to-morrow, from morning till night. When he tells you to pick up a pig and walk, you pick it up and walk, and when he tells you to sit down and rest, you sit down. You do that straight through the day. And what's more, no back talk. NOW A HIGH-PRICED MAN DOES JUST WHAT HE'S TOLD TO DO, NO BACK TALK. Do you understand that? When this man tells you to walk, you walk; when he tells you to sit down, you sit down, and you don't talk back at him. Now you come back on to work here to-morrow morning and I'll know before night whether you are really a high-priced man or not."---from Scientific Management by Frederick Winslow Taylor --- "Seeing a living human being as an automaton is analogous to seeing one figure as a limiting case or variant of another; the cross-pieces of a window as a swastika, for example."---Ludwig Wittgenstein, Philosophical Investigations --- "The transcendental reduction; the exemplary index of scientific geometry; the intention of objectivity; the immutability of our classification secured by our subsequent behavior. Coherence becomes the precondition for truth, the illusion of unity. The movements that machines demand...already have the violent, hardhitting, unresting, jerkiness of Fascist maltreatement."---Theodor Adorno---cp

↑ Index

634. Billy Little
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Mon 25 May 1998

---

and again, of course, scat): which brings up forgetting as perhaps the fourth impetus for the stutter,i.e., trying to get a word in edgewise with Grossinger or Duncan it might take an hour and then when you get the opening all you can do is sputter, also see Ella's first recording of Mac the Knife.

isn't belitt the one who distorted Lorca's work by obscuring or worse the homosexual references?

↑ Index

635. Billy Little
Re: Megalamorial Miscelany II [Or: Beasts one and all.]
Mon 25 May 1998

>
>Not every rich man is a patriot to some larger noble cause, but many a rich >man is exactly that. Then again, many people spend their whole lives >conspiring to spit into, or actually spitting into, the faces of patriots >whose patriotism is to some noble cause or other.
>
are you an alumnus of georgetown university or the allen institute in montreal?

patriotism you may remember from freshman english is the last refuge of scoundrels.

↑ Index

636. morpheal
Re: Megalamorial Miscelany II [Or: Beasts one and all.]
Mon 25 May 1998

> are you an alumnus of georgetown university or the allen institute in montreal?

No. Though perhaps that was a rhetorical question. I was not that fortunate.

> patriotism you may remember from freshman english is the last refuge of scoundrels.

I presume that you must have some other loyalties. Perhaps that is a loyalty to the preservation of your own life and manner of existence. So, perhaps there is that in common among most, and all that then remains to be said on that score is: welcome to life, liberty and perhaps some manner of the pursuit of happiness, in the last days of the 20th century. I often have reason to question the pursuit of happiness part, or debate the nature of liberty, but the preservation of lives is beyond question.

We can also be quite assured that the first days of the 21st century shall inauguarate at century that shall remain free of the constant terror represented by "duck and cover" drills. Remember those ?

M.

aka Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

637. MAYHEW
Lorca
Mon 25 May 1998

Billy asked:
"isn't belitt the one who distorted Lorca's work by obscuring or worse the homosexual references?"

He was ONE of the ones who did this. There is a line from "ode to Walt Whitman" that Belitt renders "who loves mankind" instead of "who loves man," changing homoerotic desire to vaguest philanthropy.

Jonathan Mayhew

[redacted]

↑ Index

638. Henry G
Re: Chaos and poetry
Mon 25 May 1998

Dean, that was a very discerning reading of Hayles' book! You've discovered her limit, it looks like! Doesn't chaos theory find order even in the most minute, inchoate impressions? So the most delicate readings of reality would be at that submicroscopic discarded (poetry) level. Chas. Olson might be the place to start, at least looking for quotes. He always aimed for the most local, the most obscure, the most ignored, the... because MAXIMUS was so minimal... "so few"... - Henry G.

↑ Index

639. Susan Wheeler
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Mon 25 May 1998

>isn't belitt the one who distorted Lorca's work by obscuring or worse the >homosexual references?
>
That's his rep but a firsthand look is recommended.

>
Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

640. Don Byrd
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Mon 25 May 1998

I've told this story before, but I think not on the list. Once, when Duncan came to visit, he was on one of his talking jags. He arrived, I made coffee, we drank the coffee, etc. Robert kept talking. Finally he said, "I am trying to ask you, and if I can stop talking long enough for you to answer....."

(And incidentally, some times, for Robert, it was a stutter, of the kind I mentioned in a previous post--needing to say several things at once; some times, it was a way to keep the floor, so the flow would not be interupted.)

Don

Billy Little wrote:

> and again, of course, scat): which brings up forgetting as perhaps the fourth impetus for the stutter,i.e., trying to get a word in edgewise with Grossinger or Duncan it might take an hour and then when you get the opening all you can do is sputter, also see Ella's first recording of Mac the Knife.
>
> isn't belitt the one who distorted Lorca's work by obscuring or worse the homosexual references?

--
****

Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
Department of English
State University of New York
Albany, NY 12222

[redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
****

↑ Index

641. Dean Taciuch
Re: Chaos and poetry
Mon 25 May 1998

On Mon, 25 May 1998, Henry G wrote:

> Dean, that was a very discerning reading of Hayles' book! You've discovered > her limit, it looks like! Doesn't chaos theory find order even in the most > minute, inchoate impressions? So the most delicate readings of reality would > be at that submicroscopic discarded (poetry) level. Chas. Olson might be > the place to start, at least looking for quotes. He always aimed for the > most local, the most obscure, the most ignored, the... because MAXIMUS was > so minimal... "so few"... - Henry G.
>
Thanks. Hayles' in fact sees two schools of chaos theory. One, found in Gleick's _Chaos_ book, she calls the "strange attractor" branch--it finds patterns of oder in the chaotic structures themselves.

The other branch, the "order out of chaos" branch, is more philosophically oriented. The major proponent on that "side" is Ilya Prigonine, whose book _Order out of Chaos_ focuses on the emergence of order from chaotic systems, rather than the order implicit in the deep structure. Prigonine is much harder going for me that Gleick, but the focus in P is on irreversibility, determinism, and such--philosophically richer.

Olson, yes, he deploys these same notions, interestingly. My own interests now are more along the William C Williams line--his sense of nature in "Spring and All," for example, fits well with the idea of emergent order arising from disorder.

But what I am really after are contemporary uses of these ideas. Hayles locates them very well in fiction (Borges, some Pynchon, a whole chapter on Doris Lessing; no Burroughs, oddly enough). But no poetry. Ashbery would've illustrated several of her ideas very well. For example, her sense that Postmodern writers have an ambiguous relationship to chaos and the ever-increasing amount of information such systems generate. Well, that can be found in most of Ashbery's books--several poems come to mind ("Soonest Mended," with its line about "loose meaning" for example).

↑ Index

642. toddbaron
Re: Laura Moriarty
Mon 25 May 1998

Bobbie West:

I have her address--but--also have tried to (e-mail) get her and --to no avail--if you want her address--ask..

Todd Baron
ReMap

↑ Index

643. toddbaron
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Mon 25 May 1998

---

of course--Eigner might be a "stutter" of the page--as trying to locate the words--and the keys--and the phrases--

but the notion that we don't ALL stutter seems odd--to me--as Robert Creeley's

Drive, he sd

or anything of the Creeley / Olson dialogues or--for that matter--Duncan, himself-- as if a stammer were not a thot?

Tb
ReMap

↑ Index

644. Matt Kirschenbaum
Re: Chaos and poetry
Mon 25 May 1998

> But what I am really after are contemporary uses of these ideas. Hayles locates them very well in fiction (Borges, some Pynchon, a whole chapter on Doris Lessing; no Burroughs, oddly enough). But no poetry.

There's a piece by Tan Lin on Michael Palmer's writing in the _Poetics of Criticism_ volume (ed. Spahr et al.) that's loosely oriented around fractal geometry. Matt

↑ Index

645. Karen Kelley
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Mon 25 May 1998

It's sad: any black performer rejecting the symbol of the grinning negro/creating art on his own terms would be perceived as too big for his pants. Miles was cool, though, and no one could deny that.

ScoutEW wrote:

> In a message dated 5/24/98 9:53:47 PM, you wrote:
>
> <<I recall, some reviewers read this as megalomania on his part, but I always saw > it as his rejection of the stand-up-and-project mode. It was thrilling: how cle>>
>
> In the autobiography, Miles Davis has said that he was deliberately rejecting the symbol of the grinning negro that musicians such as Louis Armstrong represented to especially white audiences. In this decade where everything is upfront, everyone including mad amounts of poets want "star" status and will stop at nothing to atttain it, it is nice to think about Miles Davis, who by the way obviously had an enourmous amount of influence on poetry in general, lay back and do his thing without kissing ass.
> It is sad that so many people would look at Davis's act as some projection of ego or whatnot, what he was doing was creating his art on his own terms, a concept this is absent, in an age of buying and selling images and ideas and "community"

↑ Index

646. morpheal
Re: F.W.Taylor v. Wittgenstein & Adorno [philosophical incentives]
Mon 25 May 1998

> you don't talk back at him. Now you come back on to work here to-morrow morning and I'll know before night whether you are really a high-priced man or not."---from Scientific Management by Frederick Winslow Taylor

And so the incentive system was begun. It has been scientifically proven that giving chocolate bars to workers as an incentive for producing tonnage is at least as effective, and often results in the breaking of production records. Think of how much more effective certain kinds of stimulation of the human central nervous system, the pleasure centers, might prove in terms of gaining the desired results of longer hours, and more work, for less pay.

We have to recall the scientific fact that chocolate works on brain chemistry, and so we might have a basis as to why chocolate works better than money in some instances. So we then can better understand why remote CNS stimulation would work even better than that, in more people.

Of course the modern warrior must be more immunized than ever before to being influenced by either pain or pleasure stimulae, including remote stimulae. Only in that way can the modern warrior remain an effective asset. Whether such immunization can be adequately achieved without doing irreparable damage to the warrior's more normative functionning, remains to be fully understood. The experiments would not only be necessary, but interesting, as they would reveal a lot about human resiliency and abilities to adapt and function in new extremes of environment, including the future's electromagnetic plus psychological warfare battlefields. Any reasonably sophisticated enemy, will inevitably use EMR and psychological warfare weaponry in addition to other conventional and non conventional means.

Some feel that we can be ready for those new waves of challenge, or we might choose to throw poetry barrages at enemy troops.....Perhaps we need a balance of both, to preserve our humanity more fully. I wonder if there are any career soldiers who write poetry. I cannot think of any, but perhaps there are some.

> "Seeing a living human being as an automaton is analogous to seeing one figure as a limiting case or variant of another; the cross-pieces of a window as a swastika, for example."---Ludwig Wittgenstein, Philosophical Investigations

It is commonplace for the true believers in an extremist ideology, as a group, to hold a belief that other human beings are no longer human. The demarcation line between us and them is thus more clearly drawn. In fact this is a characteristic of totalism. Even those who are being made into members of the group of true believers must first experience what it is like to no longer be a human being as part of their indoctrination.

This is also true for prisoners of war. It is one of the methods used to break them. Of course, those troops with access to any sensitive intelligence must be trained to withstand that same dehumanization. Extremes of hazing, centering out, and fragging, are one often criticized, but very effective training tool that helps train special forces personnel. It also trains intelligence workers.

It is a curious fact that there is at least one extremist group, claiming Christian affiliation, within North America, that appears to hold the view that they are the true humans and all those who are non members of that affiliation will be reduced to zombies. The same distinction between an in group of true believers and outsiders, where the outsiders are perceived as less than truly human. Of course there are always extremist groups of various kinds within any non totalitarian, non totalist, nation. The safeguards exist to prevent their ever assuming sufficient power to actualize their aggendas.

> "The transcendental reduction; the exemplary index of scientific geometry; the intention of objectivity; the immutability of our classification secured by our subsequent behavior. Coherence becomes the precondition for truth, the illusion of unity. The movements that machines demand...already have the violent, hardhitting, unresting, jerkiness of Fascist maltreatement."---Theodor Adorno---cp

To know thyself adequately for the purpose of discerning one's own mind from other minds, requires knowing what is subjective and what is objective. It is more complicated than it seems, and a very rare skill, but it is essential to any instance of a truly effective observer.

Coherence is, of course, not a condition of truth. Apparent coherence can be the height of illusion.

As for the mechanisms, traditional technology was meant to work materials into new forms, for new uses, grossly by means of violence. Future technologies will work on materials in new ways, that emphasize the rearrangement of the basic "building blocks" of the physical matter that is being worked. Thus we arrive at the new alchemy. A nanotech of transmutations that might know no real limits, other than how far our science has progressed at any given time.

Morpheal

aka Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

647. charles alexander
new nichol site
Tue 26 May 1998

For Gary Sullivan and others who are interested, selections from bp Nichol's Art Facts: A Book of Contexts, are up on web pages which are a cooperative publication of Chax Press and Light and Dust Mobile Anthology of Poetry, and the site is located at http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/bpnichol/bp-af.htm

If you go to the contents page of the Light & Dust Poets site, at http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/lighthom.htm and scroll down to the Nichol entries, you will find there are several other Nichol pages there for you to see.

charles

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

648. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Spicer in Lingua Franca
Tue 26 May 1998

Actually, this article is quite fascinating....

It declares that Spicer has had virtually no influence since his death. The author of the article believes that these new books are rescuing an obscure and forgotten figure from obscurity...

Folks should read this article for some sense of the unimaginable void between most of academe and what's happening among poets...

Breath-taking...

m.

On Sat, 23 May 1998, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> Has this been mentioned? A substantial article on Jack Spicer appears in the new Lingua Franca ("Radiohead," by John Palatella, May/June). Very nicely done and with commentary on Gizzi's edition of the lectures and _Poet Be Like God_ by Killian and Ellingham.
>
> Sorry if I'm reporting old news, but wanted to make sure this was known.
>
> Kent

↑ Index

649. DANIEL L. COLLIER
Re: a stutter to the Russians
Tue 26 May 1998

Kent,

Lucy and I interviewed Prigov (informally) a few months back. I'll try to scrape some bits of the interview onto the list within the next few weeks. If you're interested, I can scan photos of him standing in front of a wall of wonderful charcoal drawings of his friends and fellow writers as demons. He is a visual artist who earned his living during Soviet times doing sculpture for children's playgrounds & such, and his house is full of wondrous objects d'texte.

At least one book-length translation of Prigov's stuff exists (he showed it to us) but it's not very good. (He said he can't judge the English writing, so he just agrees to the translations if he likes the person.) A Penguin "New Russian Writing" anthology (don't have it in front of me) contains good translations of one Prigov piece and of one Rubenstein piece. The book's presentation of Rubenstein is a bit misleading; they give his "story" as a numbered list, whereas in his books the numbered story bits are separated by dotted lines & meant to be cut into cards and spread across the floor, shuffled, scrambled, etc.

If anyone knows of any decent translations (published or ongoing) of Prigov or Rubenstein, please let me know.

Both are wonderful poets & people, by the way. After one meeting, Prigov acted like he was our dad (in the pleasant way only someone who's not your actual father can do) and Rubenstein's a tiny, skinny, grinning guy. I met him after a reading when he interrupted a discussion of some guy named Porter to observe: "Porter? Eto pivo." Truly a genius.

Prigov will be out of the country until sometime in August... England, I think. I'll backchannel his phone number to you as soon as I remember to bring it in.

Danny
[redacted] or [redacted]

****

Date: Fri, 22 May 1998 23:22:25 -0500
From: KENT JOHNSON
<[redacted]>
Subject: A stutter to the Russians

One of the great "stutterers" in contemporary poetry is Dmitri Prigov. One example of his genius use of the stutter can be found in "49th Alphabet Poem," translated by Gerald Janecek and included in _Third Wave: The New Russian Poetry_. But to get the full effect, of course, one has to witness Prigov in performance (and he is surely one of the great living readers, too). About five years ago, PBS ran a documentary on the Western market-explosion for post-Soviet art, and the film included a segment of Prigov reading one of his "Alphabet" (I believe) poems. Allen Ginsberg stood beside him, mouth open, as Prigov stuttered and spat Cyrillic syllables into the microphone, eyes rolling in as if he were in seizure. When he was done, Ginsberg leaned into the microphone and said B-B-B-Bravo!.

I've lost contact with Prigov in the past few years, and I'd be interested in finding out if anyone is currently translating his work. I know that Lyn Hejinian and Elena Balashova were doing some translations at one time. It's certainly a shame (unless I've completely missed it) that there isn't yet a book of his writing in English.

↑ Index

650. Michael Magee
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Tue 26 May 1998

For those interested in this jazz/stuttering vein, I'd mention Monk, stuyterer extraordinaire, and more specifically Nate Mackey's work where Monk and Creeley are implicitly compared along these lines. with the suggestion that the stutter is an admission of the obduracy of experience, and that this admission is "the gesture that opens the field" in their work. Good stuff. -m.

According to Stephen Cope: > > Since Miles Davis has been brought up, I might mention (if it hasn't been > already), that some of the more significant stuttering poetries that have > been produced in this century derive much from jazz phrasings (and of > course, jazz rhythms, and again, of course, scat). Creeley, for instance, > has located the genesis of his own phrasing in his early fascination with > Charlie Parker. Similarly, if one reads the Olson/Creeley correspondence, > one finds Creely often beseeching Olson to listen to Parker's music, and it > seems fairly certain that "Projective Verse" was written with at least a > little Parker in mind. This, in any case, might put a different spin on the > sense of the term "projective" as it's being discussed here...
>
> Stephen
>
>
> >> i heart this thread. i was captivated by something similar, which in my > >> mind i called (and in print a coupla times too) "counterperformance," > >> namely the exact opposite of what they teach you about "projection," > >> clarity, dramatic enactment etc. for me it was sparked by seeing Bob > >> Kaufman read in 1981, barely audible, clearly just trying to "get through > >> it," but affecting nonetheless. also heard an anecdote from walter lew > >> about going to hear r.d.laing once, and laing sat and mumbled on stage so > >> incoherently that eveyrone left except (as i recall the tale) walter. i > >> had a dream once where something similar happend w/ artaud. and this paper
> >> i've alluded to once or twice by bruce boone on john wieners seems to get > >> at the same kind of thing. since i'm trying to write abt wieners right now > >> (w/o ever having heard him read) this is all very helpful. --md
> >
> > One of the best performances I ever saw was Miles Davis at the Music Hall
in > >Boston. He had on a gold lame jacket with tails, and a brilliant red > >trumpet, and > >he wandered kind of aimlessly about the stage while the band played, and > >when it > >was his turn he'd stop wherever he was and with his back to the audience > >play. As > >I recall, some reviewers read this as megalomania on his part, but I always saw > >it as his rejection of the stand-up-and-project mode. It was thrilling:

> >how clear > >his trumpet's voice was, and how little of "him" was there. Well, except > >for the > >gold lame coat.
>

↑ Index

651. Stephen Cope

Re: the poetics of the stammer

Tue 26 May 1998

Dean et al:

Yes, "the creaking of the word" (from Dogon mythology) is central to Mackey, as is Legba's limp (from Voudun), and in DISCREPANT ENGAGEMENT he uses both to come to terms with black music, but also with Wilson Harris, WCW, Creeley, others (including himself). But this has, of course, been rehearsed here before...

On Science/Poetics: Fernand Hallyn's THE POETIC STRUCTURE OF THE WORLD, although it doesn't consider poetry _per se_, does deal interestingly with the question of _poeisis_ in science and cosmology, and would seem one place to go if one were pursuing a link between the two (when, for instance, did the two branches of thought suffer the decisive break from one another that still lingers today?) But that's not strictly chaos theory either.

Applying Prigonine's theories to Williams seems appropriate (although I must admit I've not yet entirely understood Prigonine's books, and have only really glossed them). It's amazing, tho, how much noise there is in Paterson - aural and semantic. And his sense of the falls as muse in P. would also seem to "fit well with the idea of emergent order arising from disorder." (This is of course a trope with a large and troubled history, dating back to Hesiod and his irritably duplicitous muses. "Chaos was born first and after her came Gaia...," or so the narrative goes.)

Stephen

ps - By way of connecting the two threads mentioned above: I've been writing a bit around the use of the term "quantum-qualitative" in Mackey's prose works (Djbot Baghostus's Run, really), which term obviously harkens back to Heisenbergian uncertainty and the ramifications thereof. Might be interesting to see what his work would look like read through Hayles' or Prigonine's lens...

> I've been loosely following this thread, but I don't think Nathanial Mackey has been discussed much. He doesn't stammer, but he has written (in _Discrepant Engagement_? I'm away from my books now. . .) about a "creaking" " which he locates, in its modern forms, in blues, jazz. I think it relates to the stutter, and to the limp (which I now realize has been mentioned in this thread before, re: Mackey). If I recall, this "creaking" corresponds to letting in the noise behind or beneath the words, the noise from which the words arise.
>
> The stammer, perhaps, a hestitancy before speaking which allows other sounds in, background noises brought up to awareness?
>
> Dean

↑ Index

652. ken|n|ing
synaesthetics
Tue 26 May 1998

I'm looking for examples of "synaesthetic" writing, whatever that might entail, from Faulkner's Benjy to _____ . . . Poems or analysis on this psychological mishap, suggestions? Back-chan., please. Thanks -- Patrick F. Durgin

|
|
k e n n i n g``````````````|```````````````````````````
a newsletter of contemporary |poetry, poetics, and non-fiction writing
|418 Brown St. #10 Iowa City, IA 52245 USA

↑ Index

653. AERIALEDGE
Re: the poetics of the stammer
Tue 26 May 1998

---

terrific essay by Deleuze on this subject: "He Stuttered" in _Essays critical and clinical_ . also of interest there an essay on seriality & exhaustion re, mostly, Beckett, & an essay on Whitman & the fragment.

↑ Index

654. R. Gancie
deeply we enquire
Tue 26 May 1998

"In the world of sense, however deeply we enquire into its objects, we have to do with nothing but appearences."---from The Critique of Pure Reason by Immanuel Kant

↑ Index

655. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: stuttering, stammering
Tue 26 May 1998

Susan Howe has pointed out that Oslon remarked of Billy Budd--"the stutter is the plot" . . .

Henry James was a well known stammerer--(imagine dictating the later books to a typist--with a stammer--yet maintaining the sweep of those majesterial clauses and phrasings--and then hearing them come back as the sounds of the typewriter--kind of shades of Olson's Projective verse typewritten compositions??)-- yet Edith Wharton noted in a memoir that James when reciting Whitman (his favorite poet) did not stammer-- so much for the "barbaric yawp"! --dave baptiste chirot

↑ Index

656. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: A stutter to the Russians
Tue 26 May 1998

and why not in the anthology have Rea Nikonovna & Serge Segay?

-dbc

↑ Index

657. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Lorca
Tue 26 May 1998

Belitt's translations of some of Jorge Guillen's Canticos poems left a lot to be desired too if I remember correctly.

William

↑ Index

658. Alan Myouka Sondheim
a poem
Tue 26 May 1998

-

Nikuko draws a thread around her arm, just below
The elbow, it's thin, red, it's a division, it's a line.
The leg is marked as well, left arm and leg right,
Staggered dashes that would be parallel and posed.
They are slightly taut, so that the skin swells, lunar,
Around the moon of her taut body, and if kimono
Were wrapped and opened like silk and doubled boxes,
Near sleeves of flowers, like her arm or body.
Between the the threads, a golden twine connects Clearly to an Alan placed in front of her.
There are flowers, pistils, stamens, across him.
There are stems, thorns, roots and leaves, across him.
The twine is there on or in the Alan.
A breeze strokes the tsuchi sign for earth,
A whisper moves the kire sign for cloth,
Speech appears, the sign of fire, threads its golden
Way across both bone and skin, the sky on fire,
Kimono shuttled on the earth, the cloth on fire,
Threaded Nikuko has closed her eyes, her neck exposed.

↑ Index

659. morpheal
Re: bytes & rights
Tue 26 May 1998

> As one last aside, Tipler's statement is almost teleological in the way it argues a straight line of improvement past to future.

I missed that particular point.

Definitely false. Tipler, and some other scientists, definitely do not argue that. They argue for a new teleology that incorporates feedback loops from future to past as well as normative causalities past to future.

Sarfatti discusses this as "back reaction" on his www pages. Tipler has also written on similar subject matter, including CTLs (closed temporal loops).

Some intelligences might be more sensitive to feedback from the future than others. For instance this might explain Leonardo Da Vinci's prodigious inventions, lacking the materials but incorporating designs we are familiar with in this century. Jules Vernes uncanny prophecies, similarly. Or even some of H.G.Wells prognostications. We might even see the mythos of the Atlanteans as the Atlanteans of our future, rather than our past (where archeology has in effect failed to find them), manipulating the fabric of human historical evolution, so that our Atlantean successors can save themselves from their destruction. And what of Socrates Daemon giving Socrates his insights the way the Great Gazoo gave insights to Fred Flintstone.... Perhaps it is the distant future whispering in Socrate's long ago ear ? Perhaps some of the shadows of electromagnetic artifact from the future becomes a part of the cultures of the past, shaping them, though also mostly by pure chance, and being the cause of many worlds bifurcations of accelerated cultural evolutions ? There are indications that that might be happening. That our electromagnetic garbage might in fact be throwing its wash into the wake of the past, as the prow of our ship continues at the crest of our temporal wave. Does that mean that we must be more cautious about our electromagnetic output ? Perhaps.

That definitely complicates any simple minded traditional teleology.

I like Micheal Moorecock's playful science fiction interpretations best, as presented in "The Cornelius Chronicles". There, the "many worlds" and temporal loops take the form of a fictional narrative, and you must note what years the rock musician, PhD in physics, wrote the original trilogy.

M.

↑ Index

660. Christopher W. Alexander

miles aside

Tue 26 May 1998

¶ btw, for those of you who haven't heard it, the newly remastered Kind of Blue is just unbelievable, definitely not one of those repackage-jobs. The tone is so much clearer now, and the alternate take of Flamenco Sketches is so worth it...

chris

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

661. ScoutEW
Re: a poem
Tue 26 May 1998

In a message dated 5/26/98 4:18:16 PM, you wrote:

Jordan draws some blood thread from her arm, just below
The waist, it's thin, blue, it's a dinosaur egg, it's edible.
The ladies love me well well, he left arms and egg right,
Stag party red dishes that would be and rooster mechanics
hey are you slightly tinted?, so that the skin wells lunar=luxeries, Around the back of the and rice shampoos, and if kim on
re-wrapped and penned like milk and deviled foxes,
Hear sneezes of flowers, parking tickets reign.
Between "Red Sheds," a golden lion yawns
"They are too many songs comparing flowers to sex."
(and everyone forgets the bumblebees), humblebees
There are flowers, pistols, hymens, across him.
There are stains inside him (bulletboys)
The swine is here eating Alan.
A lazy strokes its sign for earth,
A whisper moves across Athens for cloth,
A peach appears,he signs of tires, threads his golden
way instead of both bone and skin, the man is on fire,
dan shuttled the earth in self,
has closed h eyes, her ck exposed.

↑ Index

662. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: a poem
Tue 26 May 1998

On Tue, 26 May 1998, ScoutEW wrote:

> In a message dated 5/26/98 4:18:16 PM, you wrote:
>
> Jordan draws some blood thread from her arm, just below
Where angels, fools, and I myself sometimes refuse to go.
> The waist, it's thin, blue, it's a dinosaur egg, it's edible.

But though unmarried, one might add, its really quite unweddable.
> The ladies love me well well, he left arms and egg right,
On his way back from hell, thinking of his marriage night.
> Stag party red dishes that would be and rooster mechanics
Made would-be spouse Nikuko dream of various heads and dicks.
> hey are you slightly tinted?, so that the skin wells lunar=luxeries,
Still on the marriage theme, he lost his way uxorious.
> Around the back of the and rice shampoos, and if kim on
She knew he hated sex, in fact, and didn't have a rim on.
> re-wrapped and penned like milk and deviled foxes,
A birthmark on both your threads, the devil has his poxes.
> Hear sneezes of flowers, parking tickets reign.
While Alan through Nikuko takes on unending pain.
> Between "Red Sheds," a golden lion yawns
While Nikuko through Alan, labors, loves, and fawns.
> "They are too many songs comparing flowers to sex."
Or sex to flowers, golden showers, Nikuko throws her hex
> (and everyone forgets the bumblebees), humblebees
Not Alan, though, stung by her charm, he's down upon her knees.
> There are flowers, pistols, hymens, across him.
There's something stuck to his ugly quim.
> There are stains inside him (bulletboys)
More stains outside, her violent toys.
> The swine is here eating Alan.
Of which the blood's not worth a gallon
> A lazy strokes its sign for earth,
Nikuko's finally giving birth.
> A whisper moves across Athens for cloth,
Carried in the mouth of the all-devouring moth
> A peach appears,he signs of tires, threads his golden Ire on both their houses, spouses, now that the mold's on,
> way instead of both bone and skin, the man is on fire,
Nikuko's killed him off in truth, Alan was a liar.
> dan shuttled the earth in self,
Nikuko wove out of herself a newer, molten self
> has closed h eyes, her ck exposed.
Alan's half-formed, Nikuko, vomiting, supposed.
>

↑ Index

663. Charles Bernstein
Close Listening & for less
Tue 26 May 1998

I am pleased to announce a price reduction for Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word. The paper edition of Close Listening has now been priced by the publisher at $19.95, less than the price originally listed on the notice I sent to the list.

Close Listening: Poetry and the Performed Word
Edited by CHARLES BERNSTEIN

Close Listening brings together seventeen essays, especially written for this volume, on the poetry reading, the sounds of poetry, and the visual performance of poetry.

Oxford University Press
368 pp., 22 linecuts
$19.95, paper, 0-19-510992-9

Contributors: Susan Stewart, Nick Piombino, Bruce Andrews, Marjorie Perloff, Susan Howe, Johanna Drucker, Steve McCaffery, Dennis Tedlock, Bob Perelman, Peter Quartermain. Jed Rasula, Peter Middleton, Lorenzo Thomas, Maria Damon, Susan Schultz, Ron Silliman, and Charles Bernstein

↑ Index

664. louis stroffolino
Re: Byrd's reply 2 Alex and droffolino's quest
Wed 27 May 1998

Don--thanks for thoughts on PER-MISSION....
so, I'm reading the latest LUNGFULL magazine and finding note from ANSELM BERRIGAN on his poem therein included:
"the poem is an attempt to figure out what might be "permitted"
to do in 1998, & how not to do that & therefore continue (& not intended as a slag on R. Duncan, by the way, but a use of his half-line as extension into a field that requires some clearing"-------
(the line by the way is "often i am permitted/ to blow my brains out") Now, this may be one of the ways it's possible
"to draw back from the representations of the Gods to the attentions that worshipped them"---- although perhaps to someone in their 50s this may seem too "adolescent", but considering that 1998 may be EVEN MORE REPRESSIVE and TOTALITARIAN than 1950s was, maybe

"adolescent" emotions need to be valorized, or at least cathartically, in poetry (so it can still serve some kind of safety valve function for suicide urges....)....
and so I also therefore give permission to Steven ROdefer to Heckle Ondaadje (sp?)
and give Ondaadje permission to donate proceeds to the KSW!
and maybe somebody will give me permission to indulge my LOGORRHEA as Duncan's was indulged.....
chris

On Fri, 22 May 1998, Don Byrd wrote:

> charles alexander wrote: -- the obvious thing to do is
>
> to take things from southwestern/Sonora desert indigenous peoples, relating to living well with the earth here. We may do some of that. But I also want to do some non-obvious things. I already have a bunch of potential selections from poetry & art (some wonderful things from Eva Hesse) -- but if anyone can suggest other possibilities, I'll be forever grateful.
>
> Gravelly hill was 'the source and end (or boundary' of > D'Town on the way that leads from the town to Smallmans
> now Dwelling house, the Lower
> Road gravelly, how the hill was, not the modern useableness
> of any thing but leaving it as an adverb as though Earth herself
> was active, she had her own characteristics, she could > stick her head up out of the earth at a spot
> and say, to Athena I'm stuck here, all I can show
> is my head but please, do something about > this person I am putting up out of the ground into your hands.
>
> --"at the boundary of the mighty world," _Maximus_, p. 330)
>
> And Chris asks why we do not have O'Hara's permission. Why do we not have Olson's? to call, as creatures of earth, on Athena herself? Or Duncan's permission to return to the meadow where we hear everlasting rumors of What Is? or H.D.'s (thinking of Bowering's recent post).
>
> It is a real problem. Mythology has been bought up by New Age commercialism, and, to a certain extent, even the environmental movement has been colored by it. I am glad to hear, Charles, that you are trying not to draw too much on the indigenous people. As much as one admires their culture, it does not have much to teach us _directly_. It was local and the numbers involved were small. We are now five billion (and growing) on a small earth and all subject to the same market.

> Is it possible to draw attention back from the representations of the gods to the attentions that worshipped them? Something of this order would seem to be task. The images of mythic beings are altogether too conveniently available (mindlessly) in video games. What are the rhythms and movement of spirit that correspond to what might once have been available through those images?
>
> Don
>
> --
> **********
> Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
> Department of English
> State University of New York
> Albany, NY 12222
> [redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
> The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
> **********

↑ Index

665. Mark Salerno

Arshile #9 and Upcoming Event

Wed 27 May 1998

We are pleased to announce the publication of the Ninth Issue of Arshile: A Magazine of the Arts. This issue includes:

Poetry
Robert Hershon, Sarah Anne Cox, William Bronk, Stefanie Marlis, William Aiken, Julian Semilian, Ed Friedman, Judith Taylor

Special Selection I
Ray Di Palma
Jim Brodey
"Some Materials"

Special Selection II
Kenneth Koch
"Five Famous Views of Kyoto"

Fiction
Linda Healey
"The Boy Report"

Review
Ron Padgett's "New & Selected Poems"
Reviewed by Alice Notley

Inside Art
Emerson Woelffer

Cover Art
Patrick Graham

Retail Price: $7.99
Subscription: Two Issues $15.00

Available in bookstores or directly from:
Arshile
P.O. Box 3749
Los Angeles, CA 90078

Distributors:
Armadillo & Co. Distributors ([redacted])
Bernhard De Boer, Inc. ([redacted])
Small Press Distribution ([redacted])

****

Arshile will be celebrating the publication of its Tenth Issue with a benefit reading at Beyond Baroque, Venice, California, on October 30, 1998. Readers to be announced.

↑ Index

666. ScoutEW
Re: Byrd's reply 2 Alex and droffolino's quest
Wed 27 May 1998

LStoffolino wrote
<<Don--thanks for thoughts on PER-MISSION....
so, I'm reading the latest LUNGFULL magazine and finding note
from ANSELM BERRIGAN on his poem therein included:
"the poem is an attempt to figure out what might be "permitted"
to do in 1998, & how not to do that & therefore continue (& not intended as a slag on R. Duncan, by the way, but a use of his half-line as extension into a field that requires
some clearing"-------
(the line by the way is "often i am permitted/ to blow my brains out") Now, this may be one of the ways it's possible
"to draw back from the representations of the Gods to the attentions that worshipped them"----
although perhaps to someone in their 50s this may seem too "adolescent", but considering that 1998 may be EVEN MORE REPRESSIVE and TOTALITARIAN than 1950s was, maybe

"adolescent" emotions need to be valorized, or at least
cathartically, in poetry (so it can still serve some kind of safety valve function for suicide urges....)....
and so I also therefore give permission to Steven ROdefer
to Heckle Ondaadje (sp?)
and give Ondaadje permission to donate proceeds to the KSW!
and maybe somebody will give me permission to indulge my LOGORRHEA as Duncan's was indulged.....
chris>>

Who wrote often i am permitted/ to blow my brains out?
Anselm?
the 1990s are repressive as hell hidden under this "freedom to express clause" in which every college age girl has a neat little tattoo around her ankle Rebellion is manufactured, Chris look at the billboard near my sister Tanya's apartment on Houston and Thomson street with the "Dalai Lama" under the caption
"Think different"
or likewise with Miles Davis Yeah, think different but "Buy this product while you are at it"
I think that if more people knew of the meadow Duncan was writing about then the world would be a less anxious place and by the way What the hell is holding up a Robert Duncan collected works including essays and all poems?
come on, share ...

erik sweet

↑ Index

667. ScoutEW
Re: a poem
Wed 27 May 1998

In a message dated 5/26/98 7:39:53 PM, We wrote:

<<> Jordan draws some blood thread from her arm, just below
Where angels, fools, and I myself sometimes refuse to go.
Quite different was his smile on fire
> The waist, it's thin, blue, it's a dinosaur egg, it's edible.
But though unmarried, one might add, its really quite unweddable.
> The ladies love me well well, he left arms and egg right,
Upon entering civilization, quiet firecrackers drew my outline
On his way back from hell, thinking of his marriage night.

> Stag party red dishes that would be and rooster mechanics
Made would-be mouse kuko dream of various beads and ducks.
> hey are you slightly tinted?, so that the skin wells lunar=luxeries,
Still on the marriage papers, he lost his courage to sign.
> Around the back of the and rice shampoos, and if kim on
She knew he hated sex, in fact, and didn't have a on.
> re-wrapped and penned like milk and deviled foxes,
A birthmark on both your threads, the devil has his poxes.
> Hear sneezes of flowers, parking tickets reign.
While Alan through Nikuko takes on unending pain.
> Between "Red Sheds," a golden lion yawns
While Nikuko through Alan, labors, loves, and fawns.
> "They are too many songs comparing flowers to sex."
Or sex to flowers, golden showers, Nikuko throws her hex
> (and everyone forgets the bumblebees), humblebees
Not Alan, though, stung by her charm, he's down upon her knees.
> There are flowers, pistols, hymens, across him.
There's something stuck to his ugly quim.
> There are stains inside him (bulletboys)
More stains outside, her violent toys.
> The swine is here eating Alan.
Of which the blood's not worth a gallon
> A lazy strokes its sign for earth,
Nikuko's finally giving birth.
> A whisper moves across Athens for cloth,
Carried in the mouth of the all-devouring moth
> A peach appears,he signs of tires, threads his golden Ire on both their houses, spouses, now that the mold's on,
> way instead of both bone and skin, the man is on fire,
Nikuko's killed him off in truth, Alan was a liar.
> dan shuttled the earth in self,
Nikuko wove out of herself a newer, molten self
> has closed h eyes, her ck exposed.
Alan's half-formed, Nikuko, vomiting, supposed.
>
>>

↑ Index

668. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: a poem
Wed 27 May 1998

On Wed, 27 May 1998, ScoutEW wrote:

> In a message dated 5/26/98 7:39:53 PM, We wrote:
>
> <<> Jordan draws some blood thread from her arm, just below
> Where angels, fools, and I myself sometimes refuse to go.
> Quite different was his smile on fire
While writing topples, overweight, its future dire.
> > The waist, it's thin, blue, it's a dinosaur egg, it's edible.
> But though unmarried, one might add, its really quite unweddable.
> > The ladies love me well well, he left arms and egg right,
> Upon entering civilization, quiet firecrackers drew my outline
In a style that clearly is more yours than mine.
> On his way back from hell, thinking of his marriage night.
> > Stag party red dishes that would be and rooster mechanics
> Made would-be mouse kuko dream of various beads and ducks.
> > hey are you slightly tinted?, so that the skin wells lunar=luxeries,
> Still on the marriage papers, he lost his courage to sign.
> > Around the back of the and rice shampoos, and if kim on
> She knew he hated sex, in fact, and didn't have a on.
> > re-wrapped and penned like milk and deviled foxes,
> A birthmark on both your threads, the devil has his poxes.
> > Hear sneezes of flowers, parking tickets reign.
> While Alan through Nikuko takes on unending pain.
> > Between "Red Sheds," a golden lion yawns
> While Nikuko through Alan, labors, loves, and fawns.
> > "They are too many songs comparing flowers to sex."
> Or sex to flowers, golden showers, Nikuko throws her hex
> > (and everyone forgets the bumblebees), humblebees
> Not Alan, though, stung by her charm, he's down upon her knees.
> > There are flowers, pistols, hymens, across him.
> There's something stuck to his ugly quim.
> > There are stains inside him (bulletboys)
> More stains outside, her violent toys.
> > The swine is here eating Alan.
> Of which the blood's not worth a gallon
> > A lazy strokes its sign for earth,
> Nikuko's finally giving birth.
> > A whisper moves across Athens for cloth,

> Carried in the mouth of the all-devouring moth
> > A peach appears,he signs of tires, threads his golden > Ire on both their houses, spouses, now that the mold's on,
> > way instead of both bone and skin, the man is on fire,
> Nikuko's killed him off in truth, Alan was a liar.
> > dan shuttled the earth in self,
> Nikuko wove out of herself a newer, molten self
> > has closed h eyes, her ck exposed.
> Alan's half-formed, Nikuko, vomiting, supposed.
> >
> >>
>

↑ Index

669. jarnot
Bernadette Mayer book
Wed 27 May 1998

Announcing the publication of Another Smashed Pinecone

by
Bernadette Mayer

United Artists Books, 1998
ISBN 0-935992-20-0

including many previously unpublished poems such as "I Like to Go To Bed with Paul Goodman," "The Men from Modernistic" and "Generic Elbows."

Ange Mlinko writes: "the poems in Another Smashed Pinecone reveal the drama of the imagination in its springtime, coaxing the world to renew itself with language earnest, delicious, rising, cresting, into the spectacular."

available from:
United Artists Books
701 President St. #1
Brooklyn, NY 11215

$10.00 plus $1.50 shipping.

make checks payable to United Artists books.

↑ Index

670. Brent Long
Reading In Providence
Wed 27 May 1998

For Any List Members In Providence Area:

As you well know, there are few (if any) acceptable readings in Providence (except the Brown Series, which is not open to outside participants). Until now.

The Apokatastasis Reading Series began last night, and while the crowd was a small one, the quality of the poetry and short fiction presented there was a much needed and refreshing change for this area.

The details are as follows:

Every Tuesday night at 8P.M. at Myopic Books on South Angell Street.

Sign-up for the open reading begins at 7:30.

$2 entry fee includes bottomless cup of coffee (not that Folger's crap, either). You may also bring your own beer, wine, etc.

5 minute time limit per person for the open reading.

Featured readers receive $30 and read for 35-45 minutes.

For more info., feel free to e-mail me @ [redacted]

Brent

<paraindent><param>left,out</param>- They said I was avant garde...little did they realize, I just didn't give a shit.

↑ Index

671. Chuck Stein
Re: Byrd's reply 2 Alex and droffolino's quest
Wed 27 May 1998

---

louis stroffolino wrote:
>
> Don--thanks for thoughts on PER-MISSION....
> so, I'm reading the latest LUNGFULL magazine and finding note
> from ANSELM BERRIGAN on his poem therein included:
> "the poem is an attempt to figure out what might be "permitted"
> to do in 1998, & how not to do that & therefore continue > (& not intended as a slag on R. Duncan, by the way, but a > use of his half-line as extension into a field that requires
> some clearing"-------
> (the line by the way is "often i am permitted/ to blow my > brains out") Now, this may be one of the ways it's possible

> "to draw back from the representations of the Gods to the > attentions that worshipped them"----
> although perhaps to someone in their 50s this may seem > too "adolescent", but considering that 1998 may be EVEN > MORE REPRESSIVE and TOTALITARIAN than 1950s was, maybe
> "adolescent" emotions need to be valorized, or at least
> cathartically, in poetry (so it can still serve some kind > of safety valve function for suicide urges....)....
> and so I also therefore give permission to Steven ROdefer
> to Heckle Ondaadje (sp?)
> and give Ondaadje permission to donate proceeds to the KSW!
> and maybe somebody will give me permission to indulge my > LOGORRHEA as Duncan's was indulged.....
> chris
>
> On Fri, 22 May 1998, Don Byrd wrote:
>
> > charles alexander wrote: -- the obvious thing to do is
> >
> > > to take things from southwestern/Sonora desert indigenous peoples, relating > > > to living well with the earth here. We may do some of that. But I also want > > > to do some non-obvious things. I already have a bunch of potential > > > selections from poetry & art (some wonderful things from Eva Hesse) -- but > > > if anyone can suggest other possibilities, I'll be forever grateful.
> >
> >
> >
> > Gravelly hill was 'the source and end (or boundary' of > > D'Town on the way that leads from the town to Smallmans
> > now Dwelling house, the Lower
> > Road gravelly, how the hill was, not the modern useableness
> > of any thing but leaving it as an adverb as though Earth herself
> > was active, she had her own characteristics, she could > > stick her head up out of the earth at a spot
> > and say, to Athena I'm stuck here, all I can show
> > is my head but please, do something about > > this person I am putting up out of the ground into your hands.
> >

> > --"at the boundary of the mighty world," _Maximus_, p. 330)
> >
> > And Chris asks why we do not have O'Hara's permission. Why do we not have > > Olson's? to call, as creatures of earth, on Athena herself? Or Duncan's > > permission to return to the meadow where we hear everlasting rumors of What Is?
> > or H.D.'s (thinking of Bowering's recent post).
> >
> > It is a real problem. Mythology has been bought up by New Age
> > commercialism, and, to a certain extent, even the environmental movement has > > been colored by it. I am glad to hear, Charles, that you are trying not to draw > > too much on the indigenous people. As much as one admires their culture, it > > does not have much to teach us _directly_. It was local and the numbers > > involved were small. We are now five billion (and growing) on a small earth and > > all subject to the same market.
> >
> > Is it possible to draw attention back from the representations of the > > gods to the attentions that worshipped them? Something of this order would seem > > to be task. The images of mythic beings are altogether too conveniently > > available (mindlessly) in video games. What are the rhythms and movement of > > spirit that correspond to what might once have been available through those > > images?
> >
> > Don
> >
> > --
> > ***
> > Don Byrd ([redacted], [redacted])
> > Department of English
> > State University of New York
> > Albany, NY 12222
> > [redacted] (work); [redacted] (home); [redacted] (fax)
> > The Little Magazine (http://www.albany.edu/~litmag/)
> > ***

> >
What if permission were not a matter of moral permission--I let you do that--I give myself permission to do this or that--but a matter of something much more like mathematical injunction: I discover a certain possibility and invoke it. "I am permitted to return to a meadow" certainly has an overtone of being allowed as it were by the gods, but it is simultaneously and perhaps more importantly such an injunction.

Also on mythology. The topic is too broadly stated. Mythology can be used to cut through mythology. Mythology does not stay on a single level. In one sense, everything is mythology. In another all mythology is reductive to something else. But within the mythological as a frame it is possible I think to cut through the co-optation of first order mythology as well as its reduction, via say psychology, to a familiarly psycholgocial use.

Charles Stein

↑ Index

672. Keston Sutherland
New Book by J.H. Prynne
Wed 27 May 1998

Barque Press presents _Red D Gypsum_ by J.H. Prynne

Now available to those in the US / Canada at $7.00 incl. postage

Please send checks to:
Keston Sutherland
537 Winthrop Mail Center
Harvard
Cambridge MA 01238-7531

Pleas e- me in advance, so that I can send the book as early as possible.

I'll be at this address only for a couple of weeks, so any checks sent after about ten days or so should go instead to Peter Riley, who can be contacted at: [redacted] -- this may involve sending sterling, or a slight price alteration.

This is a surpassingly important and impressive book by one of our most esteemed and influential poets, currently producing what many (including myself) consider to be the best work of his career.

↑ Index

673. Safdie Joseph
Re: mythology
Wed 27 May 1998

Wonderful to see Charles Stein post something to the list . . . I may not have seen his name in print since the "Alchemy" issue of _Io_ magazine! Now all we need is Robert Kelly (and Richard Grossinger? Did I see HIS name also in the last week?) and we can resurrect the whole "deep image" school of the early 70s right here in cyber space . . .

But seriously folks, I for one would be very interested in people's takes on "mythology" circa mid-1998, on whatever level or cutting abilities it may have. If I remember some fanciful etymology from Olson's _Mutholog os_ we can even link it to the previous thread on stammering and stuttering . . . does myth . . . inform people's imaginations anymore? Are there those, like me, whose deepest sense of education was not exclusively poetics, but classics? Are Jung, Joe Campbell, "The Truth and Life of Myth" -- obsolete? Representative of the derrier garde? Can "langpo" and "mythpo" coincide? I'm genuinely curious!

Joe

> What if permission were not a matter of moral permission--I let you do that--I give myself permission to do this or that--but a matter of something much more like mathematical injunction: I discover a certain possibility and invoke it. "I am permitted to return to a meadow" certainly has an overtone of being allowed as it were by the gods, but it is simultaneously and perhaps more importantly such an injunction.
>
> Also on mythology. The topic is too broadly stated. Mythology can be used to cut through mythology. Mythology does not stay on a single level. In one sense, everything is mythology. In another all mythology is reductive to something else. But within the mythological as a frame it is possible I think to cut through the co-optation of first order mythology as well as its reduction, via say psychology, to a familiarly > psycholgocial use.
>
> Charles Stein

↑ Index

674. Irving Weiss
URL change
Wed 27 May 1998

Having received notice from my URL provider, GeoCities, that it will not allow selling or links to selling on any website and will remove such sites by June 1;

and I having answered that the likelihood of my making a profit beyond expenses on my publications is droll, I searched for "free home pages" and discovered Tripod, where I am now located at http://members.tripod.com/~sialbach/index.html

with your indulgence,

Irving Weiss

↑ Index

675. Mark Weiss
Re: mythology
Wed 27 May 1998

For recent Stein, see his _The Hat Rack Tree: Selected Poems from theforestforthetrees, 1980-1993_ (Station Hill 1994).

As to mythology, one can recognize and be humbled by the power of the great irrational forces, even give them names and volition, without subscribing to the notions of Jung and his spiritual and political disciple Campbell, who I for one hope are becoming not so much obsolete as historical artifacts. And one can read and learn from Duncan (I do) without sharing all of his assumptions.

More troubling to me than their trivialization of the gods is the trivialization of their passions and fears that my students often exhibit. I remember talking to a class about eros as an implacable generative and destructive force and being greeted by titters. It seems that eros in their minds had been reduced to a particularly pleasurable form of calesthenics. Of course they were very young. But it seems to me that the culture of the video game serves that trivialization, which in turn is a defense against the terror that the novice, standing at the gate, must feel.

At 10:28 AM 5/27/98 -0700, you wrote:
>Wonderful to see Charles Stein post something to the list . . . I may >not have seen his name in print since the "Alchemy" issue of _Io_ >magazine! Now all we need is Robert Kelly (and Richard Grossinger? Did I >see HIS name also in the last week?) and we can resurrect the whole
>"deep image" school of the early 70s right here in cyber space . . .
>
>But seriously folks, I for one would be very interested in people's >takes on "mythology" circa mid-1998, on whatever level or cutting >abilities it may have.
>If I remember some fanciful etymology from Olson's _Muthologos_ we can >even link it to the previous thread on stammering and stuttering . . .
>does myth . . . inform people's imaginations anymore? Are there those, >like me, whose deepest sense of education was not exclusively poetics, >but classics? Are Jung, Joe Campbell, "The Truth and Life of Myth" -- >obsolete? Representative of the derrier garde? Can "langpo" and "mythpo" >coincide? I'm genuinely curious!

>
>Joe
>
>
>> What if permission were not a matter of moral permission--I let you do >> that--I give myself permission to do this or that--but a matter of >> something much more like mathematical injunction: I discover a certain >> possibility and invoke it. "I am permitted to return to a meadow" >> certainly has an overtone of being allowed as it were by the gods, but >> it is simultaneously and perhaps more importantly such an injunction.
>>
>> Also on mythology. The topic is too broadly stated. Mythology can be >> used to cut through mythology. Mythology does not stay on a single >> level. In one sense, everything is mythology. In another all mythology >> is reductive to something else. But within the mythological as a frame >> it is possible I think to cut through the co-optation of first order >> mythology as well as its reduction, via say psychology, to a >> familiarly
>> psycholgocial use.
>>
>> Charles Stein
>>
>
>

↑ Index

676. Gary Sullivan

Permission

Wed 27 May 1998

Permission, w/respect to the arts, is only an issue if one desires it (or if one's project requires it) from anyone taking such authority into their hands as to grant or deny it. The questions then become: (a) why desire that? and/or (b) what sort of art project is it that requires it to function? And, further (c) what person or body politic would take such authority into his/her/its hands?

↑ Index

677. R. Gancie

As a youth doomed to be the incarnation of Carl Friedrich von Weizsaecker

Wed 27 May 1998

"Progress in our science has over and over again been linked with a critique of foundations. In the major adavncements, the accumulation of experience is of little use. One has to ponder the foundations, one must reflect on the fundamental terms, which is precisely what people like Einstein or Bohr or Heisenberg did in our century. When, as a young physicist and a student of Heisenberg's, I myself came upon physics and tried to study it, it very soon became clear to me that I did not understand this subject. It was not that I was unable to integrate differential equations or to discuss with an experimental physicist the probable results of his experiments. But I did not understand the concepts with which one tries to express the meaning of these differential equations. I was naive at first, credulous, as a student perhaps should be, and I assumed my teachers knew these meanings while I had not yet advanced far enough to grasp them. As I came to know these teachers better, and could question them, it turned out that they, too, including some noted scientists among them, failed to grasp them. To be sure, they were eminently capable of applying physics and of enriching it. But, asked to give a strict account of the meaning of their fundamental terms-matter, energy, causality, prediction, experience, etc.-they had to admit, especiaaly if they were clear-headed thinkers: We use these terms simply because they work so well for us. It was simply to difficult for them to give a genuine account...." "Where do these concepts come from? Very soon it became apparent that they normally come not from science but from philosophy...What we called school philosophy was in part a way of thinking that was rather critical of modern science. Thus, positivism commended itself. It said: You scientists are right; hand in hand with you, we combat the fruitless, useless tradition of school philosophy. But when I tried to fully understand positivist philosophy, it turned out that it, too, could not justify its own basic concepts; the concept of experience, for example, which it presupposed, crumbled when subjected to an increasingly stringent, self-critical analysis (an analysis practiced, one must hand it to them, by positivists themselves), until in the end it was very difficult to say what could be meant by experience at all. In any case, I concluded that positivist philosophy would not be able to teach me what modern science is. I then turned to its opponents-in fact, I turned directly to the greatest one among them, namely Immanuel Kant."---from The Unity of Nature by Carl Friedrich von Weizsaecker

↑ Index

678. Jordan Davis
some other poetics of summer
Wed 27 May 1998

Chris --

What I said was:

I don't think any of us who argue that O'Hara had a better-populated mood palette than Gary argued would argue that it's possible to write like O'Hara -- not only does none of us have the datebook of an O'Hara, not only are we more restricted in our permissions (don't ask don't ask!), we have a somewhat different culture to pick and choose from.

--cut--

This I think says something like what you were saying about 1998 being somehow more repressive than 1958 (tho less tense than May 68? past perfect?). No one writes like O'Hara, no one writes like Olson. Why do we seek the dead among the living? Is it true as they say in this system that it's easier to get forgiveness than permission?

It's probably bogus, the diachronic study of permission. Power may seem to be letting you do what you want, go run down the hill into the meadow, while you're there I'll be upstairs privatising some utilities. I mean, yes, the permission to teach Benjamin Barthes Baldwin and O'Hara to first-year comp students, but also the fetter of permanent adjuncthood.

Of course, to be mordantly recursive about it, we could say that the fetters we wear are the permissions we grant to the regents deacons elders and trustees to violently paraphrase us in a remade-for-miniseries product placement binge in which we figure out that we can make it if we replace ourselves with Junior Mints. My shackle's minty, how's yours?

Or are we the cabbies, finally getting some airtime, looking in the camera and saying, why can't we work together to solve these problems? and change the channel and get the major network hijacked by their miniseries's star into donating two-percent of ad revenue to literacy programs mocking literacy programs and messing up a bit done right in '82 by Bill Murray.

Finally, though, is subversion approval? Can the permission we give ourselves subvert the hope that led us to invent it, and can our intentions throw the prime directive out and intervene at last in the endless drudgery of our therapies? These questions and many many many more are answered here, daily, silently, no? no? no?

(don't ask don't ask),
Jordan

↑ Index

679. Carrie Etter
Berkeley readings?
Wed 27 May 1998

I'm coming up to Berkeley tomorrow through Sunday for a conference and wonder if there will be any readings in the immediate area.

Thanks,
Carrie Etter

↑ Index

680. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Wed 27 May 1998

Here, for the list's amusement, the Kirkus review of the Spicer biography as reprinted at amazon.com. Any doubts that there's a culture war going on? It would be nice to know who the perpetrator was.

From Kirkus Reviews , 05/11/98:
Beat insider Ellingham and novelist Killian (Shy, 1989, etc.) have here embraced a most resistant, though not unworthy, subject in poet Jack Spicer. Spicer catalyzed the development of the Beat Generation in 1950s San Francisco. Though few literary tales have been told more often (or more tediously) than those pertaining to the Beats, Spicer's own has been at best ill served, and at worst wholly ignored, by the prevailing mythologies of the time. The authors have thus been admirably careful to keep their focus on the enigmatic Spicer, whose life and verse grew progressively more estranged, indeed bitterly so, from those of his more visible peers. In following Spicer's California odysseyþending brutally in San Francisco, where he died from alcohol-induced liver failure in 1965, aged 40þEllingham and Killian tread too lightly on their subject's more troublesome personality traits, e.g., his entrenched anti-Semitism and boorish bad will toward those poets daring enough to court his approval. This largesse would rankle less, however, had they not chosen to extend it to the poetry itself, which, while capable of startling effects and moving lyricism, frequently succumbs to the same narcissistic bloat that long ago rendered the Beat temperament clich,. Instead, the authors have provided, albeit in impressive detail, a cosmology of poetic egotism, with Spicer's now the origin. Ultimately, Spicer's legacy, like that of any devalued artist, must endure the trial of rigorous critical appraisal. Despite the current academic fashion, literary resurrections of this sort cannot be taken on faith, but rather require a proof that the authors, true believers both, fail to supply in this otherwise well-researched and readable biography. (30 b&w photos) -- Copyright ©1998, Kirkus Associates, LP. All rights reserved.

↑ Index

681. Maria Damon

a nice announcement

Wed 27 May 1998

---

just to report that brian horihan, an undergraduate advisee of mine whom some of you know, was awarded a prize for the best summa thesis in the College of Liberal Arts today at the U of MN.. ...and better yet, in his thank you speech he talked about hannah weiner. it thrilled me to have all these minnesotans hear about hannah, and it thrilled me that brian's talents were being recognized.

↑ Index

682. Alan Myouka Sondheim

NAKED ALAN AND NIKUKO NAKED COPY AND RUN AROUND SOME FILES

Thu 28 May 1998

-

NAKED ALAN AND NIKUKO NAKED COPY AND RUN AROUND SOME FILES

CRON RUNNING LIKE CRAZY BUILDING AND TEARING DOWN!
n: < root 17527 c Wed May 27 19:50:00 1998
n: > root 13968 c Wed May 27 19:50:00 1998
TURNING INSIDE-OUT MACHINE ON AUTOMATIC REOPENING WIDE!
n: < root 13968 c Wed May 27 19:50:00 1998
n: > CMD: 24779 c exec /usr/local/bin/maint/erpcd-reopen
n: > root 24779 c Wed May 27 19:50:00 1998
UNTIL NIKUKO CAN'T STAND IT ANY LONGER, NEEDING UPDATING!
n: > CMD: 24780 c /users/remailer/bin/update
n: > remailer 24780 c Wed May 27 19:50:00 1998
n: < root 24779 c Wed May 27 19:50:01 1998
n: < remailer 24780 c Wed May 27 19:50:01 1998
UNTIL ALAN BEGS "RUN NIKUKO" "NIKUKO MAKE"
n: > CMD: 16187 c /usr/local/adm/accnt/data/radius/RunMake
n: > accnt 16187 c Wed May 27 19:50:00 1998

OH NIKUKO OPENS HER EYES THEN, YES SHE DOES!
n: > CMD: 16188 c exec /usr/local/bin/maint/erpcd-reopen
n: > root 16188 c Wed May 27 19:50:00 1998
OH NIKUKO STUFFS HIS COPY OF NIKUKO "MAKING NIKUKO"
n: > CMD: 16190 c /usr/local/bin/newuser/copystuff
n: > root 16190 c Wed May 27 19:50:00 1998
n: < root 16190 c Wed May 27 19:50:01 1998
n: < root 16188 c Wed May 27 19:50:01 1998
OH ALAN COPIES HIS STUFF OF ALAN "MAKING NIKUKO"
n: > CMD: 16210 c /usr/local/bin/newuser/copystuff
n: > root 16210 c Wed May 27 19:51:00 1998
n: < root 16210 c Wed May 27 19:51:01 1998
12704 c Wed May 27 19:51:09 1998
OH YES SHE IS NIKUKO!
n: < root 17106 c Wed May 27 19:51:09 1998
n: < root 13023 c Wed May 27 19:51:11 1998
OH YES NIKUKO IS DESPERATE FOR REOPENING UPDATING!
n: < root 24370 c Wed May 27 19:51:12 1998
OH YES NIKUKO LIKES THAT A LOT THAT UPDATING!
n: < root 15943 c Wed May 27 19:51:11 1998
NOW ALAN AWAITS NIKUKO FOR HIS REOPENING!
n: > CMD: 16742 c exec /usr/local/bin/maint/erpcd-reopen
OH NIKUKO NOW YOU HAVE REOPENED ME AND IT IS SO FUN!
n: > CMD: 17493 c exec /usr/local/bin/maint/erpcd-reopen
OH ALAN NOW YOU HAVE REOPENED ME AND IT IS SO FUN!
n: > CMD: 18432 c /usr/local/adm/accnt/data/radius/RunMake
n: < root 18437 c Wed May 27 19:52:01 1998
OH ALAN YOU HAVE MADE ME RUN AND "MAKING NIKUKO"
n: > root 18444 c Wed May 27 19:54:00 1998
n: < root 19231 c Wed May 27 19:54:01 1998
n: < root 19634 c Wed May 27 19:55:01 1998
OH NIKUKO YOU HAVE "MAKING ALAN" AND "MAKING NIKUKO"
n: > CMD: 19677 c /usr/local/adm/accnt/data/radius/RunMake
n: > root 20125 c Wed May 27 19:56:07 1998
OH MANY NIKUKOS AND MANY ALANS IT IS SO FUNS!!!!!
n: > root 20314 c Wed May 27 19:57:00 1998

{k:458} shutdown -h FORKBOMB!
{k:459} wall APPARENTLY THERE ARE STILL PROCESSES RUNNING {k:460} exit

↑ Index

683. Maria Damon
Re: spicer review
Thu 28 May 1998

seems to me that the review reflects a certain aesthetic and intellectual timidity disguised as authoritarian curmudgeonliness. this nonsense about "time will tell" if spicer's a good writer or not indicates that the reviewer is incapable of understanding literature that has not been predigested and either canonized or cast aside, and he feels uncomfortable making any evaluation in the review, since it's clear that he himself has never read spicer's work, and has almost certainly never sat in a class where a teacher told him what to think about spicer.

At 11:44 AM -0400 5/28/98, DANIEL L. COLLIER wrote:
>Mark, et al.,
>
>What's the story behind Kirkus reviews? The Spicer review is >remarkably similar to a hideous sermon I sat through at an >archly conservative wedding last summer (had to remind himself >to say "hey, have a good life" between references to "our >neo-pagan age" as he performed the oh so unpagan catholic >rites of marriage). And I noticed Kirkus recently when searching >for a Daniel Kharms book... they haughtily dismissed him as >well.
>
>Danny
>[redacted]
>[redacted]
>
>"Hey, it's our anniversary and I remembered!" - me

↑ Index

684. Chuck Stein
mythology
Thu 28 May 1998

These are some further notes on the mythology thing going round.And a bit more on my remark yesterday about "permission" and mathematics.

Consider a poetics of the many colors of unknowing--what the issues would be.

A gnosis or (a-)gnosis: a knowing that subsists in every conscious moment of unknowing; a knowing not of being, if being is limited to the existent, the determinate; but an (a-)gnosis of being itself if, rather, being were the enigmatic issuance of whatever comes to seem to be: to install oneself in that (a-)gnosis of the issuance and to COMPOSE from the emergent.

The "Poetics of this situation" would involve a species of emergent mythology: tale fragments, images, traces, gestures, charades, stammerings--messages of and from that which decays into its own manifestations but yet haunts them, rides, them, imbues them, taunts with feignts and lurings, blasts and pronunciamentos, picking up the shards of whatever mythemes, (a-)theologemes, (anti-)ideologemes seem to stand in the path.

By the mathematical sense of permission I mentioned yesterday I meant this:

Let X= a + b. This "letting" is an injunction, a command to initiate an engagement of the mind. It has the advantage of being trackable.You can see the act by which what follows was enjoined. Now in poetry, a mythologeme can be enjoined in a similar manner. An association may be declared, brought, through the act of the poem, into the arena of possible thought or intention. This is not to enforce an assertion by priviledged reference but to open what is possible to be entertained or entered into. To me, the usefulness of Duncan's legacy has more to do with such acts of mythology than any general valorization of the mythological as such.

Charles Stein

↑ Index

685. Mark Prejsnar

The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)

Thu 28 May 1998

A day or so ago I snapped at the recent article in Lingua Franca. While the author of that piece was a. not anonymous; and b. fairly bright; nonetheless there are overlaps with the poor dunderhead in Kirkus....

They both assume, because of their own ignorance, that Spicer is unimportant and unknown. Their familiarity with the contemporary poetry scene is (to put it kindly) minimal.

Both these articles bring into high relief, the gap between a large part of academe and the world of working poets. Admittedly the Kirkus writer is exceptionally stupid and remarkably arrogant for such an inept and ill-informed reviewer. Even so, his/her attitude (and ignorance) are representative. The idea that a poet as influential as Spicer needs to be "resurrected" is a striking common thread present in both these academic articles.

OK, these writers are ill-equipped to deal with their subject; and in the Kirkus case, pretty clearly unqualified to deal with poetry at all. (One of the most succint and least self-involved of all significant 20th century poets....And what does this genius dismiss him as? "Narcissistic bloat"..The idea does occur, that the Kirkus piece is too stupid to be real; can it be that this is all a parody?) But the real message is not the inadequacies of certain reviewers. That they could imagine Spicer is of no import, and that responsible editors would print that claim, are indications of the chasm between much of the academic world, and the world of actual contemporary poets...

from the spicer islands
(no man is an)
Mp

On Thu, 28 May 1998, DANIEL L. COLLIER wrote:

> Mark, et al.,
>
> What's the story behind Kirkus reviews? The Spicer review is remarkably similar to a hideous sermon I sat through at an archly conservative wedding last summer (had to remind himself to say "hey, have a good life" between references to "our neo-pagan age" as he performed the oh so unpagan catholic rites of marriage). And I noticed Kirkus recently when searching for a Daniel Kharms book... they haughtily dismissed him as well.
>
> Danny
> [redacted]
>
> "Hey, it's our anniversary and I remembered!" - me

↑ Index

686. DANIEL L. COLLIER
Re: <no subject given>
Thu 28 May 1998

Mark, et al.,

What's the story behind Kirkus reviews? The Spicer review is remarkably similar to a hideous sermon I sat through at an archly conservative wedding last summer (had to remind himself to say "hey, have a good life" between references to "our neo-pagan age" as he performed the oh so unpagan catholic rites of marriage). And I noticed Kirkus recently when searching for a Daniel Kharms book... they haughtily dismissed him as well.

Danny
[redacted]

"Hey, it's our anniversary and I remembered!" - me

↑ Index

687. morpheal
Re: mythology [followed by DADA, deconstruction, and silence]
Thu 28 May 1998

> Consider a poetics of the many colors of unknowing--what the issues would be.

I presume because unknowing, as a deconstructive movement towards knowing nothing, is to be considered safer, in a DADAistic kind of way, than is any movement towards more definite and ground breaking understanding ?

Many do feel that way. They are encouraged to feel that way.

The same strand of thinking pervades the recent trend to deconstruct any musical and lyrical materials (therefore poetic materials), via technological devices, such that the artifacts that are produced by complexes of intentionality and chance elements create new non meanings. The non meanings, or unknowings of the original artistic intentions and content, becoming the work of art, or work of new performance. This is at the very core of "techno", and resembles "techno shamanism" as to its apparent implications of meanings. Though "techno" also becomes the protest against the substance of its roots and origins. DADA served a similar function within the larger political situatedness. (Do we ever learn from such concatenations of poetic and political events ?)

Is a future poetics to be more DADA, and deconstructive, than it is to be anything else ? Is that the ideologically influenced tendency ? The tendency to say less and less with more and more sounds ? More and more sounds becoming a kind of poetic silence, comprised from a potentially infinite number of poetic voices ? Ah, an "angelic" chorus.... that ultimately reveals nothing new, in all its presages of infinite newness, and making the old new again,.... Not so "angelic" after all. No more angelic as an instantiation of any "heavenly host" than martial music and goose stepping troops in precise military formations.....There is in fact a connection between the two (radical deconstruction and military challenge).

> A gnosis or (a-)gnosis: a knowing that subsists in every conscious moment of unknowing; a knowing not of being, if being is limited to the existent, the determinate; but an (a-)gnosis of being itself if, rather, being were the enigmatic issuance of whatever comes to seem to be: to > install oneself in that (a-)gnosis of the issuance and to COMPOSE from the emergent.

Gnostics are the keepers of secret knowledge. They claim to safeguard true knowledge, available only to initiates. You could argue that for something radically new to be learned, something must first be unlearned that conflicts with that new knowledge. That, of course, is not always true. Sometimes the new knowledge is simply added to what else was already known.

What that has to do with the craft of writing poetry, remains at best obscure. Perhaps you can elaborate further....to clarify what you are saying.

> The "Poetics of this situation" would involve a species of emergent mythology: tale fragments, images, traces, gestures, charades, stammerings--messages of and from that which decays into its own manifestations but yet haunts them, rides, them, imbues them, taunts with feignts and lurings, blasts and pronunciamentos, picking up the shards of whatever mythemes, (a-)theologemes, (anti-)ideologemes seem to stand in the path.

The motions become theatre. There is, of course, a grey area, between performance of poetry and thespian performance. There is no clear dividing line. The poem can be a one act play. Can it also be a charade or mime ? Then the poetry is the silence, and the theatre is the gesture.

> By the mathematical sense of permission.....

Mythematics in poetics.....(After all, mathematics is ultimately another language, same as the language of poetry is another language, for the creation of myths. Both kinds of myths are potentially explanatory, predictive, useful, if they happen to say something that is "true" about the world.)

> Let X= a + b. This "letting" is an injunction, a command to initiate an engagement of the mind.

Creating an infinite set of possible values for all three variables. Poetry is in fact more precise and limited as to its meaningful arrangements.

M.

aka

Bob Ezergailis

(No known relation to that political science professor on the net.)

↑ Index

688. Erik Sweet

Re: mythology [followed by DADDY, construction, and silence]

Thu 28 May 1998

In a message dated 5/28/98 11:46:35 AM, you wrote:

<<The same strand of thinking pervades the recent trend to deconstruct any musical and lyrical materials (therefore poetic materials), via technological devices, such that the artifacts that are produced by complexes of intentionality and chance elements create new non meanings. The non meanings, or unknowings of the original artistic intentions and content, becoming the work of art, or work of new performance. This is at the very core of "techno", and resembles "techno shamanism" as to its apparent implications of meanings. Though "techno" also becomes the protest against the substance of its roots and origins. DADA served a similar function within the larger political situatedness. (Do we ever learn from such concatenations of poetic and political events ?)
>>

Are you talking about the musical (genre) Techno as in the cousin to Detroit House music?

If so, what about Africa Bambatta (sp?) in the Bronx in the 70s breating beats to Kraftwerk the freakish German Techno/Dada music group which sounded like robots and planes taking off- Hip-Hop music and its wide variety of sampling is very (postmodern) I hate that term (except when Olson uses it) and seems at its core to break the idea of creating new- Look at Puff Daddy winner of grammy's etc/ in hip-hop he adds nothing new to the situation- all he does is pre-program hits by Bowie , The Police etc and re- represent them-People don't care- originality, as in the Apple campaign means "fitting in, and creating trends) see Craig Mack in his 1994 video "Flavor in Your Ear) in which he wears a hockey jersey-that summer in Buffalo every kid on the corner had the same hockey jersey-"think different buy apple fit in)

Is our culture mimicing technology by moving in circles and borrowing "retro" styles and bringing things back from the 70s (such as Kraftwerk and disco culture) or are we standing still?

erik sweet

↑ Index

689. Chuck Stein
Re: mythology [followed by DADA, deconstruction, and silence]
Thu 28 May 1998

---

morpheal wrote:
>
> >Consider a poetics of the many colors of unknowing--what the issues > >would be.
>
> I presume because unknowing, as a deconstructive movement towards knowing > nothing, is to be considered safer, in a DADAistic kind of way, than is any > movement towards more definite and ground breaking understanding ?
>
> Many do feel that way. They are encouraged to feel that way.
>
> The same strand of thinking pervades the recent trend to deconstruct any > musical and lyrical materials (therefore poetic materials), via > technological devices, such that the artifacts that are produced by > complexes of intentionality and chance elements create new non meanings. The > non meanings, or unknowings of the original artistic intentions and content, > becoming the work of art, or work of new performance. This is at the very > core of "techno", and resembles "techno shamanism" as to its apparent > implications of meanings. Though "techno" also becomes the protest against > the substance of its roots and origins. DADA served a similar function > within the larger political situatedness. (Do we ever learn from such > concatenations of poetic and political events ?)
>
> Is a future poetics to be more DADA, and deconstructive, than it is to be > anything else ? Is that the ideologically influenced tendency ? The > tendency to say less and less with more and more sounds ? More and more > sounds becoming a kind of poetic silence, comprised from a potentially > infinite number of poetic voices ? Ah, an "angelic" chorus.... that > ultimately reveals nothing new, in all its presages of infinite newness, and > making the old new again,.... Not so "angelic" after all. No more angelic as > an instantiation of any "heavenly host" than martial music and goose > stepping troops in precise military formations.....There is in fact a > connection between the two (radical deconstruction and military challenge).
>
> >A gnosis or (a-)gnosis: a knowing that subsists in every conscious > >moment of unknowing; a knowing not of being, if being is limited to the > >existent, the determinate; but an (a-)gnosis of being itself if, rather, > >being were the enigmatic issuance of whatever comes to seem to be: to > >install oneself in that (a-)gnosis of the issuance and to COMPOSE from > >the emergent.

>
> Gnostics are the keepers of secret knowledge. They claim to safeguard true > knowledge, available only to initiates. You could argue that for something > radically new to be learned, something must first be unlearned that > conflicts with that new knowledge. That, of course, is not always true.
> Sometimes the new knowledge is simply added to what else was already known.
>
> What that has to do with the craft of writing poetry, remains at best obscure.
> Perhaps you can elaborate further....to clarify what you are saying.
>
> >The "Poetics of this situation" would involve a species of emergent > >mythology: tale fragments, images, traces, gestures, charades, > >stammerings--messages of and from that which decays into its own > >manifestations but yet haunts them, rides, them, imbues them, taunts > >with feignts and lurings, blasts and pronunciamentos, picking up the > >shards of whatever mythemes, (a-)theologemes, (anti-)ideologemes seem to > >stand in the path.
>
> The motions become theatre. There is, of course, a grey area, between > performance of poetry and thespian performance. There is no clear dividing line.
> The poem can be a one act play. Can it also be a charade or mime ? Then the > poetry is the silence, and the theatre is the gesture.
>
> >By the mathematical sense of permission.....
>
> Mythematics in poetics.....(After all, mathematics is ultimately another > language, same as the language of poetry is another language, for the > creation of myths. Both kinds of myths are potentially explanatory, > predictive, useful, if they happen to say something that is "true" about the > world.)
>
> >Let X= a + b. This "letting" is an injunction, a command to initiate an > >engagement of the mind.
>
> Creating an infinite set of possible values for all three variables.
> Poetry is in fact more precise and limited as to its meaningful arrangements.

>
> M.
>
> aka
>
> Bob Ezergailis
>
> (No known relation to that political science professor on the net.)

...

I'll try, at this moment, to answer quesetion about what this has to poetics.

These steps. A state of unknowing, a suspension of the cognitive, wherein the cognitive as such, knowing as such, remains the modality, the way of holding oneself, etc. Not so much a cloud of unknowing, but a suspension of assertoric grasping. Yet the discovery that you might call it the will-to-know remains. Staying with that. And persuing the discovery. Poetic utterance, mythic material, emregent possibilities of discourse, to get it out, to get it said, what sits on the edge of what can be said,--not an abandonment of articulation, but articulation at the liminal edge of knowing. That this is a source of creative involvement. That it is for me, anyway. That its relevance is parallel various techno-issues but not identical with them (George Quasha and I have written three monographs and a series of articles on the Video-poetics of Gary Hill, the video-installation artist, which try to dope out some of these issues--I'll post references to them when I get a minute.) Such a state could, metaphorically be linked to shamanic states, but I don't particularly favor the valorization of poetics by REFERENCE to the shamanic. The point is not to call it shamanic. But what might that be about if you try it? What do you find out it impells?

As to its infinite potentiality, its infinite chorus. Well, perhaps. But in practice it's a matter of what concretely emerges, and what one is able to compose with what does emerge. I don't propose some sort of method, value the method, and validate examples of its use. I was raising this business, just to throw another angle on what a possible use of the mythological might look like, to complicate the discussion. And see if something other than the leap to the most universal level--like what we all ought to be doing or allowing--could sound like.

Gnosticism. Seems pretty much up for grabs these days. Certainly after Harold Bloom's book. And I entertain that language, for myself, because I do find myself engaged in reading Nag Hammadi texts, say, with a lot of interest, and do want to keep open this possibility: that there is an important sense of knowing that arises at the intutive interface of language and mind; that it is what used to be the source of mytho-poetic authority, but NOW does not need any longer to exert such authority--that there is another possibility inherent in its practice. And the crucial point is not to get hung up on the idea that something is validated because its called mythological or shamanistic or gnostical. But the word still might point to somthing interesting.

enuf

↑ Index

690. Maria Damon

Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)

Thu 28 May 1998

---

actually i wouldn't blame the "professoriate" for this one. i'm a prof, charles b is a prof, susan howe is a prof, nate mackey is a prof, mark scroggins is a prof, mark nowak is a prof, etc etc etc. it's pretty clear that the person you compassionately refer to as "the poor dunderhead in kirkus" is not a prof. no contemporary scholar of the humanities would be caught dead saying anything as pathetically vapid as "time will tell."

At 11:36 AM -0400 5/28/98, Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>A day or so ago I snapped at the recent article in Lingua Franca. While >the author of that piece was a. not anonymous; and b. fairly bright;
>nonetheless there are overlaps with the poor dunderhead in Kirkus....
>
>They both assume, because of their own ignorance, that Spicer is >unimportant and unknown. Their familiarity with the contemporary poetry >scene is (to put it kindly) minimal.
>
>Both these articles bring into high relief, the gap between a large part >of academe and the world of working poets. Admittedly the Kirkus writer >is exceptionally stupid and remarkably arrogant for such an inept and >ill-informed reviewer. Even so, his/her attitude (and ignorance) are >representative. The idea that a poet as influential as Spicer needs to be >"resurrected" is a striking common thread present in both these academic >articles.
>
>OK, these writers are ill-equipped to deal with their subject; and in the >Kirkus case, pretty clearly unqualified to deal with poetry at all. (One >of the most succint and least self-involved of all significant 20th >century poets....And what does this genius dismiss him as? "Narcissistic >bloat"..The idea does occur, that the Kirkus piece is too stupid to be >real; can it be that this is all a parody?) But the real message is not >the inadequacies of certain reviewers. That they could imagine Spicer is >of no import, and that responsible editors would print that claim, are >indications of the chasm between much of the academic world, and the world >of actual contemporary poets...

>
>from the spicer islands
>(no man is an)
>Mp
>
>
>
>On Thu, 28 May 1998, DANIEL L. COLLIER wrote:
>
>> Mark, et al.,
>>
>> What's the story behind Kirkus reviews? The Spicer review is >> remarkably similar to a hideous sermon I sat through at an
>> archly conservative wedding last summer (had to remind himself
>> to say "hey, have a good life" between references to "our >> neo-pagan age" as he performed the oh so unpagan catholic >> rites of marriage). And I noticed Kirkus recently when searching >> for a Daniel Kharms book... they haughtily dismissed him as >> well.
>>
>> Danny
>> [redacted]
>> [redacted]
>>
>> "Hey, it's our anniversary and I remembered!" - me
>>

↑ Index

691. David Kellogg

Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)

Thu 28 May 1998

On Thu, 28 May 1998, Maria Damon wrote:

> no contemporary scholar of the humanities would be > caught dead saying anything as pathetically vapid as "time will tell."

Oh, I don't know. I think the humanities are full of "scholars" with such faith in the winnowings of history. Whether they'd actually _say_ it is another thing, but I think plenty of them _believe_ it.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

provide a priori, and by which it becomes, so to speak, master of nature; whereas pure philosophy is all at sea when it seeks through a priori discursive concepts to obtain insight in regard to the natural world, being unable to intuit a priori (and thereby to confirm) their reality. Nor does there seem to be, on the part of the experts in mathematics, any lack of self-confidence as to this procedure-or on the part of the vulgar of great expectations from their skill-should they apply themselves to carry out their project. For, since they have hardly ever attempted to philosophise in regard to their mathematics (a hard task!), the specific difference between the two employments of reason has never so much as occurred to them. Current empirical rules, which they borrow from ordinary consciousness, they treat as being axiomatic. In the question as to the source of the concepts of space and time they are not in the least interested, although it is precisely with these concepts (as the original quanta) that they are themselves occupied. Similarly, they think it unnecessary to investigate the origin of the pure concepts of understanding and in so doing to determine the extent of their validity; they care only to make use of them. In all this they are entirely in the right, provided only they do not overstep the proper limits, that is, the limits of the natural world. But, unconsciously, they pass from the field of sensibility to the precarious ground of pure and even transcendental concepts, a ground (instabilis tellus, inabilis unda) that permits them neither to stand nor to swim, and where their hasty tracks are soon obliterated. In mathematics, on the other hand, their passage gives rise to broad highway, which the latest posterity may tread with confidence." "...It therefore becomes necessary to cut away the last anchor of these fantastic hopes, that is to show that the pursuit of the mathematical method cannot be of the least advantage in this kind of knowledge (unless it be in exhibiting more plainly the limitations of the method); and that mathematics and philosophy, although in natural science they do, indeed, go hand in hand, are none the less so completely different, that the procedure of one can never be imitated by the other."---from The Critique of Pure Reason by Immanuel Kant---cp

↑ Index

694. lee ann brown

Re: Wmsburg room

Thu 28 May 1998

Dear Poets and others who may be heading toward or are already homeless in Big Apple- A friend, poet Paul Long just asked me if I knew of anyone that wanted to sublet a share in his Williamsburg apt- $550 month, 3rd stop on L train into Williamsburg. So if this helps-you or anyone in the NYC area- call him at [redacted]. Lee Ann Brown

↑ Index

695. Maria Damon
Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
Thu 28 May 1998

---

hi david!

At 2:42 PM -0400 5/28/98, David Kellogg wrote:
>On Thu, 28 May 1998, Maria Damon wrote:
>
>> no contemporary scholar of the humanities would be >> caught dead saying anything as pathetically vapid as "time will tell."
>
>Oh, I don't know. I think the humanities are full of "scholars" with >such faith in the winnowings of history. Whether they'd actually _say_ >it is another thing, but I think plenty of them _believe_ it.
>
>Cheers,
>David
>~~~

Anyway, I don't think JS has been doing too badly in the readership dept. - outside of the English Dept. (of the spirit), that is. I'm not sure in "the trial of rigorous critical appraisal" he doesn't end up sentencing judge, prosecution, and defense.

> sort of funny, too, that he's now a genuIne Beat poet, > just by virtue of having been writing in SFCA at the > time - purely circumstantial evidence, if you ask me.

chris - a nonsense syllable invented by the poet

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

697. henry
Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
Thu 28 May 1998

The "classic" bit is complicated by the fact that Willa Cather consciously worked for it. She was expert in Latin, loved Virgil, & aimed for a "classic" restraint, clarity & proportion - like Frost - another anomaly in the canon -

- Henry G.

↑ Index

698. Simon/Piombino
Stuttering
Thu 28 May 1998

"Dear Rachel, about aphasia you're right, but she was she and really

Roman Jakobson

had it, unlike Mark who first suggested it years ago as an idea language forgotten this theory, this disease as metaphor about poetry, how it is written anyway, of course it was right

stutterer

for me child, one day I would meet a real one, some silent contiguity disorder

whether the wind blew through. she was tattered. a presence."

(from "A Reading 1-7" by Beverly Dahlen)

-Nick Piombino

↑ Index

699. Maria Damon
rePartch
Thu 28 May 1998

---

could someone please repost or backchannel me the email address to contact if we're interested in the Partch collection? i've been asked to forward it to someone at U Wisconsin-Milwaukee. thanks in asap advance --md

↑ Index

700. M. L. Weber
call for prose submissions by women
Thu 28 May 1998

Sugar Mule, a literary magazine, still needs prose (any genre) for its fourth issue. Please send via ascii or MS Word attachment by June 15th to:

[redacted]

Previous issues have included Jane Augustine, Kate Wheeler, Lance Olsen, Pierre Joris, Paul Hoover, Rochelle Ratner and Michael Heller.

↑ Index

701. Brian Clements
Best Texas Writing 1 available
Thu 28 May 1998

This is just a brief notice that our anthology of Texas literature,_Best Texas Writing 1_, will be available in mid-June.

Best Texas Writing 1 features work by the following authors:

Poetry by Bruce Bond, Gerald Burns, Michelle Byrne, Lyman Grant, Albert Huffstickler, B.D. Love, Jack Myers, Isabel Nathaniel, Naomi Shihab Nye, Kathleen Peirce, James Michael Robbins, Patiann Rogers, and William Wenthe.

Fiction by Chris Haven, Molly Moynahan, Paul Ruffin, and Daryl Scroggins.

Essays and journalism by Jeff Davis, Clay Reynolds, Paul Sampson, Frederick Turner, Marion Winik, and Bryan Wooley.

If you'd like to beat the rush, you can order now. Copies are $15, postpaid, and we will ship to you on a priority basis the minute we get books. If you prefer to wait, you can pick up a copy starting in July via Amazon.com. Prices are the same either way. If you are at all interested, I encourage you to order early as we have received such considerable interest in-state that we anticipate selling out the first print run fairly quickly.

It is probably worth mentioning again that no one at Rancho Loco Press takes a salary and that all proceeds from BTW will be plowed back into publishing contemporary literature.

To order, send a check or money order to:

Rancho Loco Press
1920 Abrams Parkway #382
Dallas TX 75214-3915

Best wishes,
Brian Clements and Joe Ahearn at Rancho Loco Press

↑ Index

702. dbkk
Vs. Spicer
Fri 29 May 1998

Hi everyone it's Kevin Killian. Naturally interested in the discussion around Spicer. And very thrilled because the people from Wesleyan sent me an advance copy of the book the other day . . . so I can carry it around on buses, etc., make people want to read it. They say it will be in the stores in 2 weeks. (This book, for list members who are curious, is "Poet Be Like God: Jack Spicer and the San Francisco Renaissance," by me and Lewis Ellingham.)

Anyway, yes, it is disheartening that Kirkus Reviews printed the paragraph it did--even more so that Amazon.com features this review right under the part where it says, "Find out more about this book"! There's an equally dismissive review in "Library Journal," which covers not only my book but Peter Gizzi's edition of Spicer's lectures "The House that Jack Built" (also from Wesleyan), noting that Lew, Peter and I all live in California and that's why we are working under the assumption of Spicer's worth when he's so unpleasant. This review was signed, by David Kirby, Florida State University, Tallahasse, and I'd appreciate directions to his house if anyone has them. To send him ninjas, etc. under cover of the great Florida night.

However Publishers Weekly printed a great review, written by a young New York poet (of genius)--my new best friend--a man with astute vision and discernment--a man I plan to marry within the next few months . . . just kidding . . . but only a little . . .

What are you going to do? These reviews are indeed based, as Maria has said, on the aversion of the reviewers to something new, and they find it preposterous that a man they have never heard of is having whole books written about him. This shaking up of the canon is kind of discomfiting, I suppose. Wesleyan could have published a life of John Berryman instead, but no, they are gambling, perhaps, on Jack Spicer.

The man of the hour. I appreciated the Lingua Franca article "Radiohead" much more than did Mark Prejsnar . . . The writer, John Palatella, had to address a general intellectual audience, perhaps one largely unfamiliar with poetry, and he did a bang up job IMHO. Always I've wanted to appear in "Lingua Franca," but, not being in the academy saw little chance of it, having no students to harass, etc.

Jumping on band wagon, "Grand Street" will be printing two of the newly discovered Spicer poems in their next issue to appear momentarily. So that's good news.

I am so happy that the biography is finally on the verge of appearing. Over the years I've bugged everyone on the list asking for help of one kind or another, and so many of you came through for me, and therefore let me thank all of you for your kindness and forebearance and aid. Even those of you who never post any more, be happy for me, XXX Kevin K.

↑ Index

703. Dan Machlin
Hofer/Machlin atZinc
Fri 29 May 1998

Jen Hofer
Dan Machlin

reading + new joint chapbook

Tuesday, June 2nd, 1998, 6:30 pm
Zinc Bar, New York, NY 90 W. Houston, $3.00

↑ Index

704. George Bowering
Re: The Bloated Professoriate (vs. Spicer)
Fri 29 May 1998

> They both assume, because of their own ignorance, that Spicer is unimportant and unknown. Their familiarity with the contemporary poetry scene is (to put it kindly) minimal.

Apparently this has been going on for years. I remember that in the 60s it was pretty well a given in Canada that the important current US poets were like Olson, Creeley, Levertov, Spicer, Duncan. But then we would find out that in the US universities these people were either unknown or thought to be marginal. I wd hear of US academics who thought US poetry was a bunch of other people I had barely heard of, like Merwin and so on.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

705. nuyopoman
RapPo
Fri 29 May 1998

For yr rappin poetry delectations,

In United States of Poetry you'll find Michael Franti, D-Knowledge, Tracie Morris, Lord Buckley. In ALOUD there's RegE Gaines among many others. The Last Poet's newest, "Time Has Come,"digs into ur-rap-po connects. For most recent: Eargasms, from the Brooklyn Moon scene, has Saul Wiliams, Ra Goddess, and Mike Ladd (who also has an album on Scratchy).

Bob Holman

↑ Index

706. F. W. Perrella
5_trope - Web Del Sol
Fri 29 May 1998

You're invited to examine the current issue of 5_trope, a bleeding-edge prose and poetry zine headquartered at Web Del Sol.

http://webdelsol.com/5_trope

Gordon Lish, John Yau, and M. Sarki are among the current issue's contributors.

Your email feedback is encouraged. Thanks.

↑ Index

707. rsillima
Spicer, Kirkus, etc
Fri 29 May 1998

I'm not a professor, but I've been bloated in my time.

Michael Coffey, who last I heard was still a list member here, works (or worked) for either Kirkus or Publishers Weekly. If the former, maybe he would have some insight into that bit of silliness. My own take is that the whole piece reflects a pretty common reviewer's anxiety about his/her role - - exacerbated by the fact that they know they don't understand the work -- which they try to resolve by writing as though "above" the subject.

As to the dismissal of Spicer, the book itself recounts the reaction of Ferlinghetti in like mind. People who don't pay attention to poetry really have no idea what these fault lines are. I can parody Creeley, say, in a company newsletter ("If you were going to join the 'net, what kind of PC would you get?") and no one will ever catch the reference. Think of how your parents and grandparents must have thought of Stein.

Speaking of which, good to see her boy Charles on the list again!

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

708. Susan Wheeler
Book Party
Fri 29 May 1998

Listees in the neighborhood are invited to a party for the publication of Smokes, my collection from Four Way Books, on Tuesday, June 2, 6:30 - 8:30 at Teachers & Writers Collaborative, 5 Union Square West.

Speaking of PW, its review of Smokes opens: "Often a dance of malapropism, jarring surrealist and pop imagery, violent pastiche and merciless non sequiturs, Wheeler's second book falls somewhere between John Ashbery and Charles Bernstein in its high-end schtick appropriation and baroque, metaphysical strains." Apologies to both!

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

709. Erik Sweet
Bookstores for Cheap
Fri 29 May 1998

Hello, Just a few months ago, somebody at a bookstore in Maine posted that they offered a discount to poetics list members-Backchannel me with a phone number/address please -

"All MC's are Poets" erik sweet

p.s. Jordan Davis wake up and get back to me about that day in August--

↑ Index

710. Maria Damon
Re: Vs. Spicer
Fri 29 May 1998

---

hiya kev; i'm excited to get MY copy from wesleyan, hasn't arrived yet...but i've been teaching spicer and a bunch of students are writing final papers on him (ugrads, so don't get all excited), i delight in turning on a handful of young minnesotans every year...don't worry abt those stupid reviews, i mean, whaddya gonna do. these folks wouldn't even know that spicer was unpleasant if you hadn't written that book; they wouldn' even know the name. big fat congrats!

At 10:15 PM -0700 5/28/98, [redacted] wrote:
>Hi everyone it's Kevin Killian. Naturally interested in the discussion >around Spicer. And very thrilled because the people from Wesleyan sent me >an advance copy of the book the other day . . . so I can carry it around on >buses, etc., make people want to read it. They say it will be in the >stores in 2 weeks. (This book, for list members who are curious, is "Poet >Be Like God: Jack Spicer and the San Francisco Renaissance," by me and >Lewis Ellingham.)
>
>Anyway, yes, it is disheartening that Kirkus Reviews printed the paragraph >it did--even more so that Amazon.com features this review right under the >part where it says, "Find out more about this book"! There's an equally >dismissive review in "Library Journal," which covers not only my book but >Peter Gizzi's edition of Spicer's lectures "The House that Jack Built" >(also from Wesleyan), noting that Lew, Peter and I all live in California >and that's why we are working under the assumption of Spicer's worth when >he's so unpleasant. This review was signed, by David Kirby, Florida State >University, Tallahasse, and I'd appreciate directions to his house if >anyone has them. To send him ninjas, etc. under cover of the great Florida >night.

>
>However Publishers Weekly printed a great review, written by a young New >York poet (of genius)--my new best friend--a man with astute vision and >discernment--a man I plan to marry within the next few months . . . just >kidding . . . but only a little . . .
>
>What are you going to do? These reviews are indeed based, as Maria has >said, on the aversion of the reviewers to something new, and they find it >preposterous that a man they have never heard of is having whole books >written about him. This shaking up of the canon is kind of discomfiting, I >suppose. Wesleyan could have published a life of John Berryman instead, >but no, they are gambling, perhaps, on Jack Spicer.
>
>The man of the hour. I appreciated the Lingua Franca article "Radiohead" >much more than did Mark Prejsnar . . . The writer, John Palatella, had to >address a general intellectual audience, perhaps one largely unfamiliar >with poetry, and he did a bang up job IMHO. Always I've wanted to appear >in "Lingua Franca," but, not being in the academy saw little chance of it, >having no students to harass, etc.
>
>Jumping on band wagon, "Grand Street" will be printing two of the newly >discovered Spicer poems in their next issue to appear momentarily. So >that's good news.
>
>I am so happy that the biography is finally on the verge of appearing.
>Over the years I've bugged everyone on the list asking for help of one kind >or another, and so many of you came through for me, and therefore let me >thank all of you for your kindness and forebearance and aid. Even those of >you who never post any more, be happy for me, XXX Kevin K.

↑ Index

711. Maria Damon
Re: Spicer Review
Fri 29 May 1998

At 4:56 PM -0400 5/29/98, DANIEL L. COLLIER wrote:

> How about "The Poetics List Reviews" submissions to places like Amazon (which offers the--presumably heavily moderated--option to review books yourself)?
>
> Danny
> [redacted]

now this is a truly useful idea. anybody got any ideas abt how to make such a thing happen?

↑ Index

712. Mark Prejsnar

kenning..a review

Fri 29 May 1998

Folks should check out the new mag, Kenning. The first issue is very impressive...Nine poets and every one's worth paying attention to. Mark Wallace has 3 very acrid, spiky poems, which are in large part different from other work of his I've seen (tho' there are points of comparison). Since his various projects in chapbooks and mags all seem rather different from each other, but all urgent...It's very impressive folks. Juliana Spahr has something neat, language working out its own partial critique of itself (the strategy of her book Response). My fellow @lantan John Lowther has what I consider one of his best things, which builds a musically-driven counter-narrative around fragments of Proust.

But my favorite, or at least the newest and most piquant, are the word-square acrostic-derivation procedural sonnets by Dan Zimmerman. (Believe me, it would take too long: get the issue and see 'em)

Editor Durgin has a meditation on poetix which is worth reading, and the graphic on the cover (neo 1917 parasoviet futurism) is really neat.

Things by John Kinsella and Stephen Ellis (whose blockish circumpolitical meditational poems almost bog down in their playfully lugubrious diction, but don't; and make an important foil for Wallce's existential alienational leftism...) ..those are also top notch.

And all the poets I haven't mentioned are above the norm.

As someone who's been doing this sort of thing for a while now I think this one is starting off brilliantly.

the details:

kenning
Patrick Durgin (checks payable to him)
418 Brown St., #10
Iowa City, IA 52245

$4 for issue one
$5 for issue two $9.50 for subscription

--Mark Prejsnar
@lanta

↑ Index

713. Douglas Barbour
Re: Spicer
Fri 29 May 1998

If these reviewers/writers don't know about Spicer it may be that they 'know' what little of contamporary poetry they know through such anthologies as the regular Norton, where Spicer is non-existant. If such anthologies create the canon as 'the' academy knows it (after all some of us who admire & love Spicer are in 'some' academy, neh?), then their ignorance of his work & his influence is not hard to understand. I seem to remember some comments about how difficult it is to put Spicer in any anthology awhile back, but one of the shorter serial poems, something like _A Red Wheelbarrow_, or one of the series from _A Book of Magazine Verse_, or ne of the 'books' from _The Holy Grail_ would at least give something of his work's flavour... Not that anthologies are the best teaching tool, but they sure are the major one, & Spicer's absence in the ones most used helps explain such comments as have been reproduced here recently...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

the absences we have known. Oceans.
so we are distinguished to ourselves
don't want that distinction.
I am afraid. I said that. I said that for you.
Phyllis Webb

↑ Index

714. Prageeta Sharma brooklyn reading
Fri 29 May 1998

Hi everyone! Please come hear katy lederer, vikas menon, and camille guthrie read poetry on sunday, may 31, at the fall cafe @3pm, 307 smith street. Take the f or g train to Carroll street station and walk a block! thanks, see you there, Prageeta

↑ Index

715. Mark Prejsnar
Jonathan Brannen..
Fri 29 May 1998

I've been reading Jonathan Brannen's The Glass Man Left Waltzing, which is a little recent chapbook from Meow Press. I recommend that people check it out. It's a single long poem "occasioned by the centenial of Whitman's death." WW is bigness and broad gestures, for better and for worse. (Also somewhat small ones sometimes, that's what a lot of people miss...But the first point stands) I'd say Brennan's words try to encompass that largeness and breadth by wrapping around it...by twisting and turning. As physical movement and phrasal turn, the best descriptor for the verse might be, loosened-up Zukofsky. Very shiftingly, like refections in water (a haunting image thru-out the poem) sections and riffs glance off walt's obsessive themes: the sensual body, death, sex, war's violence. Interesting spiral of the verse.

after roaming many pavements in some deep recesses far from the clank intervals grazing the hirsute stars time compacts mystery and modern reports
this is life
come to the surface
underfoot overhead sun

A very adroit & gripping poem. Worth seeing.

Mark P.

↑ Index

716. morpheal
Re: mythology [followed by DADDY, construction, and silence]
Fri 29 May 1998

> situation- all he does is pre-program hits by Bowie , The Police etc and re-represent them-People don't care- originality,....

All of that then becomes another small part of the sonic jungle, where the deconstruction and destruction of sense of meaning becomes normative.

What is important is that the "work of art" is an essentially disassociative scramble of what is essentially a concatenation of ideas from someone else's minds. It is not a "new creation" but a violent deconstruction of previous creations that were created by others. That becomes the essence of it.

Keep in mind also that we live on a planet where a large portion of its inhabitants despises every element of our artistic culture, and particularly the lyrics of our music. They have technology also. They are not cave dwellers.

So, I sometimes wonder if we are at war.....in a new sense of that.

> Is our culture mimicing technology by moving in circles and borrowing "retro" styles and bringing things back from the 70s (such as Kraftwerk and disco culture)or are we standing still?

Any fragment can be made into a circle.

Is technology mimicking culture, but according to its own designs ?

That would be a better question.

M.

↑ Index

717. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Vs. Spicer
Fri 29 May 1998

> Hi everyone it's Kevin Killian. Naturally interested in the discussion around Spicer...
> Anyway, yes, it is disheartening that Kirkus Reviews printed the paragraph it did--even more so that Amazon.com features this review right under the part where it says, "Find out more about this book"! There's an equally dismissive review in "Library Journal," which covers not only my book but Peter Gizzi's edition of Spicer's lectures "The House that Jack Built"

> *(also from Wesleyan), noting that Lew, Peter and I all live in California and that's why we are working under the assumption of Spicer's worth when he's so unpleasant.*
>
> This review was signed, by David Kirby, Florida State University, Tallahasse, and I'd appreciate directions to his house if anyone has them. To send him ninjas, etc. under cover of the great Florida night.

Let me know when you find out where the dastardly fellow is--I'll dispatch some hoplites to lick 'em--should be there by nightfall.

William

↑ Index

718. R. Gancie

'the study of the self has been objectified'

Fri 29 May 1998

"Epistemology aims, of course, at intersubjective and, if possible, objective knowledge. But if knowledge of the self, in an objective sense, is impossible, then epistemology as an objective science would be impaired. The concept of objective self-knowledge would be self-contradictory, inconsistent, a vicious circle. This argument was put forth by Kant. He maintained, for instance, that "I cannot obtain the least representation of a thinking being by means of external experience, but solely through self-consciousness." This might have been true in Kant's time. Until recently, knowledge of the self was possible only through introspection. But, in the meantime, we have developed cognitive technologies which free the study of self from subjectivism. Psychology, neurobiology, artificial intelligence provide insights into the workings of the self. Although this will remain extremely difficult and although we might never get the information we want, the study of the self has been objectified."---from On Supposed Circularities in an Empirically Oriented Epistemology by Gerhard Vollmer---cp

↑ Index

719. Erik Sweet

Re: mythology [followed by DADDY, construction, and silence]

Fri 29 May 1998

In a message dated 5/29/98 10:27:35 AM, you wrote:

<<All of that then becomes another small part of the sonic jungle, where the deconstruction and destruction of sense of meaning becomes normative.

What is important is that the "work of art" is an essentially disassociative scramble of what is essentially a concatenation of ideas from someone else's minds. It is not a "new creation" but a violent deconstruction of previous creations that were created by others. That becomes the essence of it.>>

I think I made that pretty clear by stating that current artists are sampling and have been for decades, other ideas...as far as an "essentially disassociative scramble of what is essentially a concatention of ideas from someone else's minds"

wouldn't it be easier to just say "borrowing"?

<<Keep in mind also that we live on a planet where a large portion of its inhabitants despises every element of our artistic culture, and particularly the lyrics of our music. They have technology also. They are not cave dwellers>>

To say that a large portion of earth' s inhabitant's despises "every element of our artistic culture" to to presuppose that "our" means art as you see it, I see "They" as a classic "duality" situation an (us vs them mentality-) as far as people on this planet despising art, "they" probably should, as it as defined as "our artistic culture" shouldn't matter to anyone outside the "local community-"

Who are "They who have technology and are not cave dwellers" I am not following how this had anything to do with my reference to Puff Daddy and sampling...

So, I sometimes wonder if we are at war.....in a new sense of that.
>>

↑ Index

720. Mark Weiss
Re: Spicer Review
Fri 29 May 1998

After each book Amazon lists the options.

At 08:46 AM 5/29/98 -0500, you wrote:
>At 4:56 PM -0400 5/29/98, DANIEL L. COLLIER wrote:
>
>>
>>How about "The Poetics List Reviews" submissions to places >>like Amazon (which offers the--presumably heavily >>moderated--option to review books yourself)?
>>
>>Danny
>>[redacted]

>>[redacted]
>>
>
>now this is a truly useful idea. anybody got any ideas abt how to make >such a thing happen?
>
>

↑ Index

721. MAYHEW
How to be great
Fri 29 May 1998

Was Spicer antisemitic? This comes as news to me. I would like to think the Kirkus review (which I have not seen) is a parody but it probably isn't.

For those interested in recent Spanish poetry--my article entitled "How to be Great: Canonical Strategies in Recent Spanish Poetry" is out in _Revista de Estudios Hispanicos_ (May 1998). I argue that poets can get famous fast by ably imitating already canonical styles. It isn't a full fledged scholarly article, just a relatively breezy MLA talk.

Jonathan Mayhew
Department of Spanish and Portuguese
University of Kansas

↑ Index

722. DANIEL L. COLLIER
Re: Spicer Review
Fri 29 May 1998

I did a brief search to answer my own question about these Kirkus folks. From their own information, how they ever decided to review Spicer & Kharms is a mystery. Also, it's not clear how "professorial" they are; they seem to be simply in the business of generating large quantities of reviews. Kirkus excerpts appear on the web pages of several mass-market publishers and on lots 'o personal "this is my book" web pages. They are always listed as "Kirkus Reviews," with no author named.

For the curious few, I've attached a sample of what my search turned up. #1 below looks like a student response to the glorious folks at K with interesting echoes of the list's responses. #2 is promotional info about K from a web page (not their own; apparently they have no web page & someone with a related name got so many misdirected hits they posted basic Kirkus info in an attempt to turn away queries). #3 is a sample Kirkus review which is different from the two we've discussed, yet too bizarre to pass over.

How about "The Poetics List Reviews" submissions to places like Amazon (which offers the--presumably heavily moderated--option to review books yourself)?

Danny
[redacted]

1.Posted by John Burke on March 13, 1998 at 23:36:27: In Reply to: Final posting on Tim O'Brien--PLEASE READ NOW! posted by S.H. on March 07, 1998 at 23:47:20:

The second review of In the Lake of the Woods does not do the book justice. I would like to know who wrote that review. I'm not saying I know any more about post-modernism than what we studied in class, and I can see the elements in the book. A person writing book reviews, I'm assuming, should know something about it. The reviewer simply chops the book down to the bare essentials, and then claims that there is nothing underneath. I think whoever wrote this needs to take our class and then read it again.

2.
Kirkus Reviews accepts approximately 5,000 new fiction, nonfiction, and children's titles, both hardcover and trade-paperback, each year for review. However, many thousands more are submitted that are not reviewed. The editors make these individual judgments based on many separate factors, including merit or potential interest.

The editors at Kirkus Reviews will consider any new fiction, nonfiction, or children's title for review in galley or other form. All submissions must be received in duplicate at least three months, preferably longer, before publication date.

Kirkus Reviews does not review the following:

- self-published books
- mass-market books
- textbooks
- specialized, technical or professional works.

Kirkus Reviews very rarely reviews the following:

- reprints
- picture-albums
- books of lists

compendiums of information (travel guides, etc.) instructional manuals self-help books
academic works directed chiefly to an academic audience

More Information

For additional guidelines, a sample issue of Kirkus Reviews, or information as to the status of a title already submitted, please fax your request to MARY DALEY, Assistant to the Editors, at [redacted].

3.
Review of Ron Dakron's _Hammers_, from Mr. Dakron's web page. Kirkus Reviews, August 15, 1997:

"Ne plus ultra bizarre, man! With cartilaginous prose, soft as fishbone, sense-bending and scattershot as a Robin Williams shtick where lost meanings blast by, Dakron's third [novel] follows the comet trails of Infra and Newt with a morphological plot out of Ovid by way of Kafka."

↑ Index

723. Kristen Gallagher pound online?
Fri 29 May 1998

---

wondering if anyone knows if _the cantos_ can be found online? i have the book - but would like to word search on line if possible.

help!?

↑ Index

724. Brian Clements
McHenry query
Fri 29 May 1998

Hello List,

Does anyone have a mailing address for Eric McHenry?

Thanks,
Brian Clements

~~~
~~~

725. joel lewis
f.yi.
Fri 29 May 1998

Use of Hitler in Thai snack advertisement slammed

BANGKOK, May 29 (Reuters) - Israeli embassy officials on Friday said the use of German tyrant Adolf Hitler in an advertising campaign for potato crisps in Thailand was ``disgusting.''

The campaign on local Thai television shows Hitler in military uniform tasting the crisps and giving the Nazi salute. The ad ends with Hitler in front of a Nazi flag as the swastika changes into the logo of the crisp brand.

``I think that the advertisement is in some ways disgusting, it's not something you laugh at. I don't laugh at it even though it is making fun of him,'' said an spokeswoman at the Israeli embassy in Bangkok.

She said the matter was being brought to the attention of senior Israeli diplomats but that they had not yet seen the two-week-old ad.

The local arm of international advertising agency Leo Burnett Worldwide Inc, which created the ad, said it was designed to be humorous.

``We have brought up the concept that Hitler or anyone who tastes the potato chips will go crazy for it,'' said a company spokesperson.

The advertising campaign was also being run in poster form around the capital city Bangkok, including on the backs of the city's trademark motorised rickshaws or ``Tuk Tuk.''
^REUTERS@

↑ Index

726. Marcella Durand
June readings at Poetry Project
Fri 29 May 1998

Two readings coming up this week at the Poetry Project, St. Mark's Church in the Bowery:

Monday, June 1st: A Reading by Kenneth Koch to celebrate the publication of his latest collection of poems, "Straits"

Wednesday, June 3rd: A Celebration of the publication of "An Anthology of New (American) Poets" with Lisa Jarnot, Eleni Sikelianos, Jordan Davis, Chris Stroffolino and many more!

Both readings are at 8 pm.
Call [redacted] for more information.

↑ Index

727. Peter Balestrieri
Quo Vadis?
Fri 29 May 1998

Having read some pretty strong endorsements of Rochelle Owens' work, particularly that it is very "raw" and "wild," I queried the List to see if anyone could recommend a representative text to me. I received a number of generous responses (thanks to all) and purchased her New and Selected Poems from Junction/Mark Weiss. Mark was very helpful and I am very grateful to him. However, I do not find Owens' work to be particularly "wild" (though some was sexually explicit) and seriously disagree with the hyperbolic blurbs on the book jacket. I admire Owens' poetry but find it pretty tame in terms of form and content. To me, "wild" is Chris Alexander's n/formation (http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/nonce.html), Mark Peters' wonderful new site, Deluxe Rubber Chicken (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/deluxe/), or the recent amazing posts by Alan Myouka Sondheim such as NAKED ALAN AND NIKUKO NAKED COPY AND RUN AROUND SOME FILES. This is only my opinion and I am not saying that Owens' work was not "wild" at one time or that the opinions of others on this List aren't valid. I'm saying that challenging, innovative work is all over the place, including this List, and I don't see much discussion of it somewhere that's supposed to be devoted to it. Almost no one has commented in any way (including me - I wrote to him backchannel) to/about the Sondheim posts. That's very discouraging. I'm hoping that this post will encourage people to engage in some dialog about the new work that gets ignored because it doesn't conform to an older definition of avant-garde work, one that is increasingly codified and canonized. Thanks.

↑ Index

728. david bromige
re : susan wheeler's book (party)
Fri 29 May 1998

Susan & Fellow-Listophiles : to the charge of "merciless non sequiturs" leveled against the book _Smokes_ (and with the Kirkus review of Spicer in mind) let me quote a brief poem from my book _The Harbormaster of Hong Kong_ :

> non sequitur
>
> _____
>
> i havent got there yet

db3

↑ Index

729. toddbaron
Re: Love of (g-d)
Fri 29 May 1998

Kevin:

What Spicer said:
(early one)

please write yr letters in blood as the ink washes off when I've cried into them for a week and besides Dick Tracy could do something with them...

___
As I'm sure your work will do For Jack S.

love,

Todd Baron

↑ Index

730. Billy Little
Re: Byrd's reply 2 Alex and droffolino's quest
Fri 29 May 1998

What the hell is holding up a Robert Duncan collected works >including essays and all poems?
>come on, share ...
>
>erik sweet
ah he showed such promise as a youth Mr. B but then along came tenure and he turned into a broody hen now he thinks he is the goose that laid these golden eggs. once you obsess about intellectual property and unused the intellect fades and the hold on the property becomes a death grip, give them up Mr. B, let someone with intellect, credibility and desire get them out, withholding these teachings should be an indictable offense, my advice the thirsty in the desert is to transcribe the tapes, they almost always taped his talks often impromptu theme raps, i remember a long riff about mothers day at... maybe i'll go get that one he probably transcribed all his lectures at Santa Cruz but maybe they've got tapes, George Butterick might have made tapes of Duncan teaching Pound, Chuck Stein might know if those exist at Storrs and give your children that medicine and they will be well heeled, nearly wheeld, My understanding, i'm no lawyer, but i've always proceeded from the idea that if you're not making a profit from it it's not breaking the copyright of course if you give away enough copies you could saturate the miniscule market, but hoarding Duncan as an academic relic you deprive him of his rightful prominence as a gay culture hero, we're talking bout the american goethe, the american rumi(i prefer to think of Blaser as the canadian rumi) and this hoarding in a boomerang hurts the estate of HD for example if i were hd's publisher i'd sue mr. b for alienation of affections, thousands of he-men will be scurrying to hilda's work once the hd book is generally available do you believe your poetry should be read or do you beleaf your poetry should make you money, sing your poems? write songs! write prayers? make ethel merman reincarnate in your diaphragm belt them chants them mantra god's way out in that tree, hanging upside down my belief includes the gospel according to Thomas where Jesus says from the middle of the round dance,"those who have not entered the dance have mistaken the act" robert duncan ought to be on a stamp, hell he aught to be on the money imagine like monroe on the fifty? duncan on the buffalo nickel. duncan said he didn't need to take drugs he looked out the window and their were faces in the trees without them what more did he want? one of the few happily married poets i've known he was mischievous some would say viscious but his brilliance was a great aid to digestion he was constantly being attacked the gay world and the poetry world both catty worlds in usa less so canada though geo bowering and brian fawcett and sharon thesen can be plenty catty so can george Stanley even roy kiyooka could be catty bp tried to be catty but it came out witty he was too generous lionel kearns stays home because he's incapable of catty his hearts too big it's an easy target frank davey couldn't lower himself to catty he and bromige are sang froid inc. which is not to say david can't be catty.

↑ Index

731. Billy Little
Re: How to be great
Fri 29 May 1998

i don't think he hated jews any more than he hated anyone or should i say everyone else i like to remember when bob marley was reading jack spicer, jim morrison had passed it on, heads of the town on to jimmy cliff who couldn't make hide nor hair of it and passed it on to reggae history, spicer's story could be filmed in noire mcclure climbing in th window and stealing billy the kid right from jack's stupourous dream fully clothed on the couch radio blaring, the renaissance never ended for jocko he ran a court he consorted with others who ran courts some overlapping they shared a love for the classics, the current enactment of the myth which they lived through dionysus or crass bacchus tubby bacchus, latin, greek, language, dante,lyric pound,epic pound, stevens, josephine miles, creeley,ginsberg, like blackburn troubadour courts, trobar clus, jack spicer was born dancing, his little blue fist wrapped around the heart of his partner.

↑ Index

732. Tom Orange
Quo Vadis?
Sat 30 May 1998

peter,

yr post strikes a chord with me, as a long while back i voiced a similar observation on alan's work, which blips thru these screens quite regularly so as to become paradoxically commonplace and yet remain extraordinary each time. (there's a coupla books worth of his stuff sitting in the list archives, some of which chris alexander nicely brought out in chap form.) the lack of response is in part the nature of the beast(s), namely one, the volume of daily list traffic, and two, the kind of engagement that anything other than a superfluous response to his work demands.

just last week someone posted a few poems by jeff clark, and having just finished that book i cast my line into the waters with a few tentative takes on the work, with nary a nibble in response.

dont think people are disinclined to discuss new (or old!) work here, all depends on time/energy/will to engage i guess. surely one reason to stay tuned in is to keep up with all the work that's circulating out there...

cheers,
t.

↑ Index

733. Otis Rush
(no subject)
Sat 30 May 1998

Hi. I'm not sure what the protocol is. But I feel that I'm evesdropping - & perhaps saying "Hullo" will make me feel as tho I'm in the same room as everyone else, even if I'm doing less talking. That is, I ASSUME I'll be doing less talking, as its a US Poets list & I'm an Australian poet. My name's Ken Bolton. I publish a magazine, Otis Rush (hence my email address) & Little Esther Books. The Otis Rush website is at http://www.eaf.asn.au/otisrush,html should anyone be curious.

Having said Hullo I should add "don't mind me" & sign off.

↑ Index

734. Alan Myouka Sondheim of the third
Sat 30 May 1998

-

Italian into English from English:

The of telephones enters into the question when I find
It inserted into my body; what ring, ring true Against all odds OF thick encumbered flesh. O who Would you, deep within ME, the sound OF your voice
Stalking my own, talking so CLOSE, hard to the bone?

My toes sieve dirt; they pressure earth to vaginate,
Scrape this flesh against every OTHER who has walked Thesis of shores. They DO come bake for more, the violence
OF legs. They draw the writing into the sand. They sink
Beneath the waves. Chaos is NOT noise; it behaves.

The dream is inaccessible. The dream suspends, objects
Hardly there or within the air; they case, smash. Sound
Come from a of telephones buried deep within; muffled, NOT-HUNG matters into the verb's domain. Fear lurks, or Yells a bit. Into the dream there is a moan. Fear stalks.

I DO NOT have a body, she replied. It which yesterday or Earlier; it died, or so they say. They have always been Saying. They call ME UP into the middle OF the night. I to
In fright. They call ME and I press my legs against the Bed. Perhaps I at DEAD; my toes hurt covered with dirt.

German into English from English:

The telephone enters into the question when the find
It inserted into my body; what rings, rings true Against all odds of thick encumbered flesh. Or who Would you be, deep within me, the sound of your voice
Stalking my own, talking I know close, hard to the bone?

My toes sieve dirt; they vaginate pressure earth to,
Scrape this flesh against every other who has walked
These shores. They I give like back for more, the violence
Of legs. They draw the writing in the sand. They sink
Beneath the waves. Chaos is not noise; it behaves.

The dream is inaccessible. The dream suspends, objects
Hardly to there or within the air; they fall, smash. Sounds Like from to telephone buried deep within; muffled, Nothing matters in the verb' s domain. Fear lurks, or Yells to bit. In the dream there is to moan. Fear stalks.

I give not have body, she replied. It was yesterday or Earlier; it died, or I know they say. They have always been Saying. They call me up in the middle of the night. The am In fright. They call me and the press my legs against the Bed. Perhaps the am dead; my toes hurt covered with dirt.

English:

The telephone enters into the question when I find
It inserted into my body; what rings, rings true
Against all odds of thick encumbered flesh. O who
Would you be, deep within me, the sound of your voice
Stalking my own, talking so close, hard to the bone?

My toes sieve dirt; they pressure earth to vaginate,
Scrape this flesh against every other who has walked
These shores. They do come back for more, the violence
Of legs. They draw the writing in the sand. They sink
Beneath the waves. Chaos is not noise; it behaves.

The dream is inaccessible. The dream suspends, objects
Hardly there or within the air; they fall, smash. Sounds
Come from a telephone buried deep within; muffled, Nothing matters in the verb's domain. Fear lurks, or Yells a bit. In the dream there is a moan. Fear stalks.

I do not have a body, she replied. It was yesterday or Earlier; it died, or so they say. They have always been Saying. They call me up in the middle of the night. I am
In fright. They call me and I press my legs against the Bed. Perhaps I am dead; my toes hurt covered with dirt.

(Original from a 1995 work.)

↑ Index

735. sylvester pollet
(no subject)
Sat 30 May 1998

At 4:43 PM +0930 5/30/98, Otis Rush wrote:
>Hi. I'm not sure what the protocol is. But I feel that I'm evesdropping
>- & perhaps saying "Hullo" will make me feel as tho I'm in the same room >as everyone else, even if I'm doing less talking. That is, I ASSUME I'll >be doing less talking, as its a US Poets list & I'm an Australian poet. My >name's Ken Bolton. I publish a magazine, Otis Rush (hence my email >address) & Little Esther Books. The Otis Rush website is at >http://www.eaf.asn.au/otisrush,html should anyone be curious.
>
>Having said Hullo I should add "don't mind me" & sign off.

Hullo! (If that's how you spell it down there.) As far as I can tell, this is an international list, and who speaks, speaks. S.

↑ Index

736. Maria Damon
Re: Quo Vadis?
Sat 30 May 1998

i am a big fan of alan's work, and i used to rave and gush everytime he posted a poem, either front or backchannel. i don't do it every time tho, but i think he knows of my admiration. n'est-ce pas, alain?

At 12:53 AM -0400 5/30/98, Tom Orange wrote:
>peter,
>
>yr post strikes a chord with me, as a long while back i voiced a similar >observation on alan's work, which blips thru these screens quite regularly
>so as to become paradoxically commonplace and yet remain extraordinary
>each time. (there's a coupla books worth of his stuff sitting in the list >archives, some of which chris alexander nicely brought out in chap form.)

>the lack of response is in part the nature of the beast(s), namely one,
>the volume of daily list traffic, and two, the kind of engagement that >anything other than a superfluous response to his work demands.
>
>just last week someone posted a few poems by jeff clark, and having just >finished that book i cast my line into the waters with a few tentative >takes on the work, with nary a nibble in response.
>
>dont think people are disinclined to discuss new (or old!) work here, all >depends on time/energy/will to engage i guess. surely one reason to stay >tuned in is to keep up with all the work that's circulating out there...
>
>cheers,
>t.

↑ Index

737. charles alexander permission
Sat 30 May 1998

I'm finding the recent discussion of "permission" most engaging, from one to another senses, including the mathematical, and all manner of possibility coming out of Duncan's "Often I am permitted . . . "

So, though I would share the following, from a collaborative work in progress by Sheila Murphy and me.

row it through the reflection and sew no things together (hear, syllables, juxtapose) emphatically, we do not know what we are doing here, and we set up goal posts anyway and void our promised histories we can not share, or ask or even choose which pronoun wakes us up in the dream, where we have permission

charles alexander

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

738. Erik Sweet
Robert Duncan
Sat 30 May 1998

In a message dated 5/29/98 11:53:44 PM, you wrote:

<<just last week someone posted a few poems by jeff clark, and having just finished that book i cast my line into the waters with a few tentative takes on the work, with nary a nibble in response.
>>

Especially the "Blownotes Section" of Clarks book is interesting, He also explores the narrative in a challenging weird way - You are right about discussing current work How about the new Creeley book, I picked it up and was amazed that the new work, especially "Dogs of Auckland" (yes i understand it was a chapbook first) is incredible- I have no lines to quote the only problem is that at 17.95 i cant buy it -Creeley is in master form! New Directions may have a good idea printing hardcovers but for me 17.95 is a lot for a paperback that is going to cost 7.95 in a year -at any rate it is worth the 17 dollars now at any rate Also What is up with Berthoff, is he preparing a manuscript of Duncan's work This is not fair when most libraries (SUNY Albany has a pretty good selection of small press poetry no doubt because of Don Byrd) But if you can not get a hold of most of Duncan's work for example "Ground Work" then it will hurt scholarship in that area- I get the feeling there are some games being played concerning this enlighten me folks, who is responsible?

erik sweet

↑ Index

739. david bromige
quo vadis alan sondheim
Sat 30 May 1998

Like Maria, I have posted my admiration for Alan's poetry to the List more than once. But true, not for a while, and I regret being remiss. The recent poems were, as usually, amazing. I suppose I didnt want to make a habit of response or even more so, of positive response--didnt want it to look kneejerk. But I do find him a true trailblazer, I havent seen other work that incorporates this medium, cyberspace, as tellingly, that brings it and the tradition together so brilliantly. The strangeness that I am not alone in wanting from poetry is never easy to come by. I find it in Alan's writing and am extremeley grateful to him.

David

↑ Index

740. R. Gancie
enlightenment
Sat 30 May 1998

"Let us not imagine history by formulas nor morality by theorems of algebra or of integral calculus."---Clauchy---cp

↑ Index

741. Nada Gordon
Re: Quo Vadis?
Sat 30 May 1998

as a teacher of nikukos

and living always surrounded
by fetishizations of japanese women's sexuality

(on the street that leads to my school there are huge flourescent signs advertising anal licking by girls in sailor blouses and white cotton panties)

i cannot say that i am a fan of alan's work

although i appreciate its forms

i find the poems exoticize most stereotypically Alan may be ironizing that

but to me
in my daily life
as a woman teaching young women (and men) to speak
and maneuver into adulthood
the irony doesn't help me

but confirms a certain rage or annoyance

even when it is mixed with borrowings
from profoundest tradition
or cutting-edge cyberwords

maybe it's different to read his nikuko poems
from the outside

but for me they're too close to home
they make me uncomfortable

even when i find them beautiful or skillful (which is often)

that's why i don't comment
for fear of being sour or prissy

is there perhaps some dimension to the poems i'm just not getting? or it it rather that i get too much? they are not some distant metaphor but my xperienced world?

-- nada "ume" gordon

> i am a big fan of alan's work, and i used to rave and gush everytime he posted a poem, either front or backchannel. i don't do it every time tho, but i think he knows of my admiration. n'est-ce pas, alain?
>
> At 12:53 AM -0400 5/30/98, Tom Orange wrote:
> peter,
>
> yr post strikes a chord with me, as a long while back i voiced a similar observation on alan's work, which blips thru these screens quite regularly so as to become paradoxically commonplace and yet remain extraordinary each time. (there's a coupla books worth of his stuff sitting in the list archives, some of which chris alexander nicely brought out in chap form.) the lack of response is in part the nature of the beast(s), namely one, the volume of daily list traffic, and two, the kind of engagement that anything other than a superfluous response to his work demands.
>
> just last week someone posted a few poems by jeff clark, and having just finished that book i cast my line into the waters with a few tentative takes on the work, with nary a nibble in response.
>
> dont think people are disinclined to discuss new (or old!) work here, all depends on time/energy/will to engage i guess. surely one reason to stay tuned in is to keep up with all the work that's circulating out there...
>
> cheers,
> t.

↑ Index

742. charles alexander
Re: Quo Vadis?
Sat 30 May 1998

Thank you, Nada "Ume" Gordon, for this informed, articulate, and deeply felt response to Alan's work. While not having the context for it which you have, I too have had more of an 'appreciation' with an underlying discomfort at its 'exoticizing.'

charles

At 08:08 AM 5/31/98 +0900, you wrote:
>as a teacher of nikukos
>
>and living always surrounded >by fetishizations of japanese women's sexuality
>
>(on the street that leads to my school there are huge flourescent signs >advertising anal licking by girls in sailor blouses and white cotton >panties)
>
>i cannot say that i am a fan of alan's work
>
>although i appreciate its forms
>
>i find the poems exoticize most stereotypically
>Alan may be ironizing that
>
>but to me
>in my daily life
>as a woman teaching young women (and men) to speak
>and maneuver into adulthood
>the irony doesn't help me
>
>but confirms a certain rage or annoyance
>
>even when it is mixed with borrowings
>from profoundest tradition
>or cutting-edge cyberwords
>
>maybe it's different to read his nikuko poems
>from the outside
>
>but for me they're too close to home
>they make me uncomfortable
>
>even when i find them beautiful or skillful >(which is often)
>

>that's why i don't comment
>for fear of being sour or prissy
>
>is there perhaps some dimension to the poems i'm just not getting?
>or it it rather that i get too much? they are not some distant metaphor >but my xperienced world?
>
>-- nada "ume" gordon

charles alexander :: poet and book artist :: [redacted]
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing
NOTE NEW URL FOR CHAX PRESS http://alexwritdespub.com/chax

↑ Index

743. david bromige
Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
Sat 30 May 1998

With all due respect--and I say this as no empty phrase--for the opinions of Nada Gordon and my friend Charles Alexander,that Alan Sondheim's poems render me uncomfortable is part of what I prize in them. Gertrude Stein's 'fetishizing' of the language I found acutely uncomfortable, for years of learning. Robert Creeley's poetry, with its 'fetishizing' of the uncomfortable aspects of women, and of his male rage so confronted, "For love I would/split open your head and put/ a candle in/ behind the eyes," was also hard to take--arresting, I'd say. For years and years. The listing--surely what is being termed fetishizing in this debate--of a young sex object's body parts in a poem of Robert Duncan's, "The Torso", was equally a challenge to admit. In this vein, there are poems by Ginsberg that chafed, chafe. I suppose if there were neon signs in my neighborhood offering anal penetration with broom-handles, I might deplore the possible social consequences of his poem "Dear Master." To me, anything people do, or fantasize doing, is material for a poem, even while in another sense it is immaterial to a poem. What is telling is the intensity, the involvement and detachment, the ratios and timings, with which it is done. "Bombs opening like flowers"--who can forget that? Because I was nearly killed during The Blitz takes nothing away from that image. Political rectitute would be the death of poetry. That said, of course one is allowed whatever response or reaction s/he has to a poem. I speak up here today only because I would find "uncomfortable" a chilling grounds for the dismissal of a poem, and hope Charles and Nada may find it operates for them as an entrance to, rather than an exit from, Alan's work.

David

 although I may have forgotten the precise wording. "Exploding"? I believe it is from a poem by Gabriel D'Annunzio.

↑ Index

744. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
Sat 30 May 1998

I have strong doubts about whether this happens to be true, because of one fairly obvious flaw: Fuchs was never a spy for the Nazis, he was a spy for the Soviets. Anyhow, why would the Nazis wish to funnel bomb secrets _to_ a scientist working at the Manhattan project, which was intended to create a bomb to be used against Germany? And is there any evidence that Fuchs and Schonberg met or corresponded with one another? And furthermore, how long would it take to compose, orchestrate and record a piece of serial music, then have it broadcast or otherwise distributed? Not the most efficient means of passing along information. Doesn't make much sense.

Hugh Steinberg

> Composer Webern was Double Agent for Nazis
>
> By Heinrich Kincaid
>
> (c) The Associated Press
>
> BERLIN, GERMANY (AP) - Recent admissions by an ex-Nazi official living in Argentina have confirmed what some musicologists have suspected for years: that early twentieth century German composer Anton Webern and his colleagues devised the so-called "serial" technique of music to encrypt messages to Nazi spies living in the United States and Britain.
>
> In what can surely be considered the most brazen instance of Art Imitating Espionage to date, avant garde composers of the Hitler years working in conjunction with designers of the Nazi Enigma code were bamboozling unsuspecting audiences with their atonal thunderings while at the same time passing critical scientific data back and forth between nations.
>
> "This calls into question the entire Second Viennese School of music," announced minimalist composer John Adams from his home in the Adirondack Mountains. ."Ever since I first encountered compositions by Arnold Schonberg I wondered what the hell anyone ever heard in it. .Now I know."
>
> Gunned down by an American soldier in occupied Berlin, 62 year old Anton Webern's death was until now considered a tragic loss to the musical world. At the time the U.S. Army reported that the killing was "a mistake", and that in stepping onto the street at night to smoke a cigarette Webern was violating a strict curfew rule.

It is now known that Webern was using music to shuttle Werner Heisenberg's discoveries in atomic energy to German spy Klaus Fuchs working on the Manhattan atom bomb project in New Mexico. .Due to the secret nature of the project, which was still underway after the invasion of Berlin, Army officials at the time were unable to describe the true reason for Webern's murder.

Hans Scherbius, a Nazi party official who worked with Minister of Propaganda Joseph Goebbels, admitted at age eighty-seven that the Nazis secretly were behind the twelve-tone technique of composition, which was officially reviled to give it the outlaw status it needed to remain outside of the larger public purview.

"These pieces were nothing more than cipher for encoding messages," he chuckled during an interview on his balcony in Buenos Aires. ."It was only because it was 'naughty' and difficult that elite audiences accepted it, even championed it."

Physicist Edward Teller, who kept a 9-foot Steinway piano in his apartment at the Los Alamos laboratory, was the unwitting deliverer of Heisenburg's data to Fuchs, who eagerly attended parties thrown by Teller, an enthusiastic booster of Webern's music.

Arnold Schonberg, the older musician who first devised the serial technique at the request of the Weimar government of Germany, composed in America to deliver bomb data stolen by Fuchs back to the Nazis, who worked feverishly to design their own atomic weapons.

As an example, Scherbius showed Associated Press reporters the score of Webern's Opus 30 "Variations for Orchestra" overlayed with a cardboard template. .The notes formed a mathematical grid that deciphered into German a comparison between the neutron release cross-sections of uranium isotopes 235 and 238.

Schonberg responded with a collection of songs for soprano and woodwinds that encrypted the chemical makeup of the polonium-beryllium initiator at the core of the Trinity explosion.

And in Japan, Toru Takemitsu took time out from his own neo-romanticism to transmit data via music of his nation's progress with the atom.

"The most curious thing about it," says composer Philip Glass in New York City, "is that musicians continued to write twelve-tone music after the war, even though they had no idea why it was really invented. Indeed, there are guys who are churning out serialism to this day."

> Unlike the diatonic music, which is based on scales that have been agreed upon by listeners throughout the world for all of history, twelve-tone music treats each note of the chromatic scale with equal importance, and contains a built-in mathematical refusal to form chords that are pleasing by traditional standards. .Known also as serialism, the style has never been accepted outside of an elite cadre of musicians, who believe it is the only fresh and valid direction for post-Wagnerian classical music to go.
>
> "Even if this is really true," states conductor Pierre Boulez, a composer who continues to utilize serial techniques, "the music has been vindicated by music critics for decades now. .I see no reason to suddenly invalidate an art form just because of some funny business at its inception."

↑ Index

745. Stephen Cope

Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)

Sun 31 May 1998

Had to pass this one along...

Stephen

> For your interest--some story!
>
> air06.mail.aol.com (v43.19) with SMTP; Thu, 28 May 1998 10:28:51 -0400
> by relay22.mx.aol.com (8.8.5/8.8.5/AOL-4.0.0)
> with ESMTP id KAA07301 for <[redacted]>;
> Thu, 28 May 1998 10:28:49 -0400 (EDT)
> From: [redacted]
> by is.nyu.edu (8.8.8/8.8.7) with SMTP id KAA26833
> for <[redacted]>; Thu, 28 May 1998 10:28:49 -0400 (EDT)
> Date: Thu, 28 May 1998 10:28:49 -0400 (EDT)
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
>
> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date: Wed, 27 May 1998 19:50:07 -0400
> From: Gerry Hemingway <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]

Subject: 12 tones for Anton's bones

Hello Everyone,

Well this certainly got my attention, just in case you hadn't seen the paper lately....gh

Composer Webern was Double Agent for Nazis

By Heinrich Kincaid

(c) The Associated Press

BERLIN, GERMANY (AP) - Recent admissions by an ex-Nazi official living in Argentina have confirmed what some musicologists have suspected for years: that early twentieth century German composer Anton Webern and his colleagues devised the so-called "serial" technique of music to encrypt messages to Nazi spies living in the United States and Britain.

In what can surely be considered the most brazen instance of Art Imitating Espionage to date, avant garde composers of the Hitler years working in conjunction with designers of the Nazi Enigma code were bamboozling unsuspecting audiences with their atonal thunderings while at the same time passing critical scientific data back and forth between nations.

"This calls into question the entire Second Viennese School of music," announced minimalist composer John Adams from his home in the Adirondack Mountains. ."Ever since I first encountered compositions by Arnold Schonberg I wondered what the hell anyone ever heard in it. .Now I know."

Gunned down by an American soldier in occupied Berlin, 62 year old Anton Webern's death was until now considered a tragic loss to the musical world. At the time the U.S. Army reported that the killing was "a mistake", and that in stepping onto the street at night to smoke a cigarette Webern was violating a strict curfew rule.

It is now known that Webern was using music to shuttle Werner Heisenberg's discoveries in atomic energy to German spy Klaus Fuchs working on the Manhattan atom bomb project in New Mexico. .Due to the secret nature of the project, which was still underway after the invasion of Berlin, Army officials at the time were unable to describe the true reason for Webern's murder.

Hans Scherbius, a Nazi party official who worked with Minister of Propaganda Joseph Goebbels, admitted at age eighty-seven that the Nazis secretly were behind the twelve-tone technique of composition, which was officially reviled to give it the outlaw status it needed to remain outside of the larger public purview.

"These pieces were nothing more than cipher for encoding messages," he chuckled during an interview on his balcony in Buenos Aires. ."It was only because it was 'naughty' and difficult that elite audiences accepted it, even championed it."

Physicist Edward Teller, who kept a 9-foot Steinway piano in his apartment at the Los Alamos laboratory, was the unwitting deliverer of Heisenburg's data to Fuchs, who eagerly attended parties thrown by Teller, an enthusiastic booster of Webern's music.

Arnold Schonberg, the older musician who first devised the serial technique at the request of the Weimar government of Germany, composed in America to deliver bomb data stolen by Fuchs back to the Nazis, who worked feverishly to design their own atomic weapons.

As an example, Scherbius showed Associated Press reporters the score of Webern's Opus 30 "Variations for Orchestra" overlayed with a cardboard template. .The notes formed a mathematical grid that deciphered into German a comparison between the neutron release cross-sections of uranium isotopes 235 and 238.

Schonberg responded with a collection of songs for soprano and woodwinds that encrypted the chemical makeup of the polonium-beryllium initiator at the core of the Trinity explosion.

And in Japan, Toru Takemitsu took time out from his own neo-romanticism to transmit data via music of his nation's progress with the atom.

"The most curious thing about it," says composer Philip Glass in New York City, "is that musicians continued to write twelve-tone music after the war, even though they had no idea why it was really invented. Indeed, there are guys who are churning out serialism to this day."

Unlike the diatonic music, which is based on scales that have been agreed upon by listeners throughout the world for all of history, twelve-tone music treats each note of the chromatic scale with equal importance, and contains a built-in mathematical refusal to form chords that are pleasing by traditional standards. .Known also as serialism, the style has never been accepted outside of an elite cadre of musicians, who believe it is the only fresh and valid direction for post-Wagnerian classical music to go.

"Even if this is really true," states conductor Pierre Boulez, a composer who continues to utilize serial techniques, "the music has been vindicated by music critics for decades now. .I see no reason to suddenly invalidate an art form just because of some funny business at > its inception."

↑ Index

746. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: Quo Vadis?
Sun 31 May 1998

I think I should say something here, wedge into the discussion.

For me, Nikuko is a person, not a stereotype. She is based most vaguely on a couple of people I know. She is also an actant.

The Japanese for years have borrowed and transformed from US and other cultures; the fact that I am working through various ideas in a reversal of that borrowing should not categorize it as defamatory in any way. I should add that I am not duplicating, not copying; I am changing, not Japan, not Japanese culture, nothing to do with that. Nor could I if I wanted to, nor do I know enough.

As far as exoticism goes, I do not think that way. I think of a yardstick between or among cultures or parts-objects of cultures, of denials, etc. If I use ukiyo-e for example, I know its degree of japonisserie.

The Japanese have pioneered in microelectronics, from Sanrio stuff to computer pets to Casio. Nikuko is just such a microelectronic. She is wearable and she wears me.

As far as the discomfort is concerned, that is deliberate. I wish to violate borders, violate gender, violate sexuality, violate PC, violate mythologies, including those of the reading of the "east" by the so-called "west" and vice versa - although the latter can only occur within a limited framework. Thus I was told by my efl class that New York was impossibly dangerous; very well, let us write dangerously, violently, to the degree say that the language inverts, turns on itself.

I do not want to write safely. I have no interest in that. I have no interest in PC; the nazis were the most PC group I can think of. If there is either an avant-garde or experimental tradition left, it has to move on, to probe, to discomfort, to dis-ease, as well as create stereotypical works of incandescent beauty. Unfortunately, language is no longer a virus; instead it is a sign of comfort, just as poetics and poetry have become signs of comfort. Even the experimental. Even the experimental "tradition."

Finally, I have no interest either in being an inspiration for moving people in or out of adulthood. Adulthood is not what it is cooked up to be; if anything, it is scars and contamination.

I have no desire to educate.

Alan

↑ Index

747. Tosh
Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
Sun 31 May 1998

This is a great story. Is someone pulling (our) my leg?

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

748. Alan Myouka Sondheim
situating
Sun 31 May 1998

The following may or may not help - I write a great deal of theory in relation to Nikuko, Alan, Jennifer, Julu (and others) - all of which, including the literary per se, is sent to the lists I co-moderate. The following short text was sent recently as a commentary on some of the more direct texts.

There is more of course at my urls.

Alan

URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR with other pages at: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt

---

Situating the recent texts -

(Think of them in relation to the following.)

1 Issues of departure, punctum - carrying mementos which then trigger, not memories, but reconstitutions - so that there are skeins of mementos re- sulting in articulating structures across membranes, emerging and building the membrane. Identity is lost among mementos, membrane, ego, background information which is always already a reconstitution itself.

2 Issues of sloughed, discarded, displaced, replaced identities - Nikuko, Jennifer, and Julu disappearing into "she," Alan as back-and-forth shuttle - again, a skein or membrane, in this case, of sliding functions of attri- butions, destabilized. Although the Net becomes a locus of stability, its fast-forward development and easy avatar construction/transformation creates potentials for merging/submerging as well. Truth is replaced by functional or dysfunctional constructions.

3 Differentiations between local and non-local topographies, the latter, within the physical world, at an _absolute_ remove, no immanence, no tran- scendence. It is different on-line, and on-line global hyper-linking gives the false potential of imminence; only lag brings the machinery to the foreground for most users.

4 Among issues of slippage, skeins, membranes, science as _that structure_ differentiated from all others, in the sense of its core-theoretical arm- ature. Relating this to a writing-degree-zero (taken from Barthes of course), or a weakened absolute vis-a-vis the humanities.

5 Among issues of transcendence, a ruptured shintoism as god-generator, problematizing the distinction between "mundane" and "spiritual" in worlds among worlds, without redemption (which I do not believe is possible).

6 The author slides as well, and who is writing this outline or summari- zation, who is responsible for these words? Responsibility fragments as part-objects fly everywhere, as texts transform into sourceless clutter.

7 Nikuko continues to remain a nexus or problematic - of language, gender, positioning of the "name" or vector. _I would not be surprised to meet Alan on the street someday, no matter how much I am aware of the virtual,_ Nikuko says. Nikuko is a probe, the sensitive written skin or membrane of the analysis, both actant and residue.

8 Dream, lack, rim, touching the file / touching the body, continue to play roles as guiding metaphors. The _dream_ is an intermediary state among dreams and reals; _lack_ references ontological and epistemological issues; _rim_ relates to rim-job, effluvia, balancing, discomfort of in- termediary states. Every file touched is a (virtual) body touched; every reference to Nikuko contributes to her body, is a performance by Nikuko. (Exalted) Positions are jostled; the destabilization results in semiotic sprays/splays emissions (of texts, part-objects, sputterings, mementos), gathered together across membranes, lamina...

9 The sexual, emotional, and political economies of Jennifer, Alan, Julu, and Nikuko, but I would let the others speak for that. Adolescent!

↑ Index

749. Simon DeDeo
Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis
Sun 31 May 1998

David --

I suppose the flip side to your point ("'uncomfortable' a chilling grounds for the dismissal of a poem") is the position taken numerous times by Adrienne Rich (in her preface to her Collected, in an interview she did with APR a while back) to some of her own early work, where she finds herself disturbed by the way she takes the metaphor/image of South African diamond miners. I don't have the quotations here (far away from the library) -- perhaps someone could post a few if they think it worthwhile.

"Uncomfortable" certaintly is a chilling ground for dismissal, if one takes uncomfortable to mean the unsettling of someone's attitute towards preconceived notions. But the blanket application of your assesment can be taken to legitimize homophobia, racism, you name it (no offense intended.) Americans are (rightly) terrified by the notion of censorship, and this terror can be manipulated.

In the APR interview, Rich is implicitly accused of being a "censor", and responds by saying something along the lines of "well, you certaintly have to have some kind of internal censor if you're in a position of dissent in this country." I haven't read Alan's Nikukos (trying to track it down now over a slow connection), but Nada "Ume" Gordon's response seems to be one that cannot be dismissed or brushed away.

Perhaps I share Rich's POV on the source of language's power (which I've never really seen as self-generating out of its internal structure but instead a net of historical accidents -- perhaps this list might change that.) Not being aware of the realities of what you are referring to -- whether it be mining in South Africa or the exoticization of Asian women -- is no excuse; just as we would criticize a poet who confused details of the physical world, we should critize one that confuses the political. Many would disagree -- I think the prevailing attitude among people who "prefer Rich's earlier work" is that she has gone too far, has lost touch with the "pure" response to language necessary to poetry.

How possible is it to abandon traditional approaches to content in an investigation of poetry that generates and relies upon manipulations and investigations of form?

-- Simon

Since this is my first post to the list, I thought I might continue Ken Bolton's tradition and say 'hullo'; I'm a student up in Massachusetts (although right now down in Aricebo, Puerto Rico), studying, in various ways, philosophy, literature and mathematics. I also write; some of my work (mostly analytic) is up at http://www.fas.harvard.edu/~sdedeo/localpapers.html, should anyone be interested.

---------- inc below ---------- To me, anything people do, or fantasize doing, is material for a poem, even while in another sense it is immaterial to a poem. What is telling is the intensity, the involvement and detachment, the ratios and timings, with which it is done. "Bombs opening like flowers"--who can forget that? Because I was nearly killed during The Blitz takes nothing away from that image. Political rectitute would be the death of poetry. That said, of course one is allowed whatever response or reaction s/he has to a poem. I speak up here today only because I would find "uncomfortable" a chilling grounds for the dismissal of a poem, and hope Charles and Nada may find it operates for them as an entrance to, rather than an exit from, Alan's work.

↑ Index

750. Alan Myouka Sondheim
racism, etc.
Sun 31 May 1998

I want to add, re: the recent post, that "uncomfortable" does not mean condemnatory. I am not uncomfortable with racism; I deplore it - the same with sexism, etc. For me and possibly for David, although I can't speak for him of course, "uncomfortable" can imply something that invades the body, that takes over the mind, mirrors and shatters within - that con- tains, in other words, a degree of self-reflexivity, much like Kristeva's abject. That's a far cry from condoning any -ism at all.

Alan

↑ Index

751. Chris [Steve] Piuma
Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
Sun 31 May 1998

Tosh showed great grace and sensitivity to write on 98.05.31:

> This is a great story. Is someone pulling (our) my leg?

Yes. This was just hashed out in the John Cage mailing list. There is no reason to believe this is true. I mean, Schoenberg as a Nazi collaborator? (I believe someone did a little research and found no evidence for this as a true AP article or any proof that the reporter actually exists.)

-- Chris [Steve] Piuma, etc. Nothing is at: http://www.brainlink.com/~cafard flim: http://www.brainlink.com/~cafard/flim/index.html from the current issue: ...(your idea of a real magazine: tips on sex, hair, and career)...

↑ Index

752. Tosh
12 tones for Anton's bones
Sun 31 May 1998

As a hoax this is pretty funny! The reporters name is "Heinrich Kincaid," which strikes me funny. It is a good name. Too good! Plus the quote from John Adams ."Ever since I first encountered compositions by Arnold Schonberg I wondered what the hell anyone ever heard in it. .Now I know." That's funny. What was really funny is when the report commented that "Toru Takemitsu took time out from his own neo-romanticism to transmit data via music of his nation's progress with the atom." Since when did Japan have Atomic power? Plus the quote from Mr. Glass " that musicians continued to write twelve-tone music after the war, even though they had no idea why it was really invented. Indeed, there are guys who are churning out serialism to this day."

However thanks for the post, this has been fun.

Tosh Berman
TamTam Books

↑ Index

753. Tosh
Webern
Sun 31 May 1998

Gunned down by an American soldier in occupied Berlin, 62 year old Anton
>Webern's death was until now considered a tragic loss to the musical >world. At the time the U.S. Army reported that the killing was "a >mistake", and that in stepping onto the street at night to smoke a >cigarette Webern was violating a strict curfew rule.

Oh I forgot to ask, but is this part true? Sorry to bring something off-subject for poetics, but then again - perhaps this is poetics!

best,

Tosh Berman

TamTam Books

↑ Index

754. George Bowering
Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones (fwd)
Sun 31 May 1998

> This is a great story. Is someone pulling (our) my leg?

There is, like, doubt?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

755. Peter Ganick
Re: Webern
Sun 31 May 1998

this part is true, except is was a cigar...

peter ganick, once a music composition major

Tosh wrote:
>
> Gunned down by an American soldier in occupied Berlin, 62 year old Anton
> >Webern's death was until now considered a tragic loss to the musical > >world. At the time the U.S. Army reported that the killing was "a > >mistake", and that in stepping onto the street at night to smoke a > >cigarette Webern was violating a strict curfew rule.
>
> Oh I forgot to ask, but is this part true? Sorry to bring something > off-subject for poetics, but then again - perhaps this is poetics!
>
> best,
>
> ----------
> Tosh Berman
> TamTam Books
> ----------

↑ Index

756. Alan Myouka Sondheim
last call
Sun 31 May 1998

(This is the last post I'll send in explanation - the text has been passed on across the Net so you may have seen it before, in which case apologies - Alan)

(Another) description of current work -

For the past several years, I have been developing a _pathological_ apparatus that operates in the interstice between subjectivity and protocol. The apparatus is characterized by the rigid designators of proper names which serve to ground supplements or leakage across do- mains; the names can reference avatar-constructs on one hand, and dissolution/dispersion on the other.

The apparatus as interstice exploits system loops and resonances, as well as repetitions and pre-verbal components in the written language; the result is more often than not broken texts which emanate from the throat relative to the hand. Full of glottal stops and vulnerable sites, the texts reference a non-existent body; the name does the rest. _Julu_ processes desire, acts as consort to _Jennifer,_ who splays the residue of sexuality. _Nikuko_ operates upon languages and misrecognitions; Ni- kuko also constitutes a politico-monetary economy. Jennifer has infil- trated sendmail files, talkers, and MOOs, among other applications; in relation to Julu, dialogs are created, insisting on the reality of the virtual "in no uncertain terms." (Nikuko has infiltrated IRC as well.)

It is this insistence that construes psychosis, this gestural flux in and through networks and cables. The use of extreme and/or obscene language serves to displace or derail intercourse; speech through writ- ing projects enunciation, the function of the throat. The topography of the virtual body, through its topology, inverts; the display of organs carries its own politics within the debris of theory. From the vantage of the reader, there is always a dis-ease at work, as well as the work required to interpret distorted language, broken semantics, perforated syntax..

Across the board, issues are epistemological, struggling with a referent which may be only circumscription, demarcation. Nikuko references kanji and the presence of english as two signing systems whose interaction occurs in the imaginary; the name slides from protocol to protocol, app- lication to application, carrying the vestiges of a haunting or uncanny writing apparatus whose trace or spoor is identical with ontology.

Agency is spread among actants here; the reciever/transmitter/channel/noise/parasitic approach to communnications is blurred. There is both strategy and struggle over the performative and its existence in several levels, of programming, speech, person (1st, 2nd, 3rd, ...), and text. Whatever is constituted is always already binary or triadic within the machine; this level is a fundamental reference, but as such is always leaky as well; there are no foundations, no ground-level platform, say, for Jennifer.

The result is always textual, immobile-paralytic or mobile-inert; these writings are residue of psychoanalytic operations carried out as a process of burrowing. (The texts began when gopher:// was in detumescence.) The writings analyze these operations as well; they are self-reflexive to the extent that they drag protocol-debris, application-residue, to the surface, as in the dissection-analysis of core-dump. The drag is always an interference, drag-show. The panties are inside-out; the stains are a lure, seduction, into and away from the content. The stains drag the reader down and in; they break through the ostensible content, "Julu," "Nikuko," of the texts - scatter writing, speech, language as a churning of pre-verbal clutter, clashes of interstitial drives, breakdown of prefixes, interfixes, suffixes.

Language spread through its own demise, emergent psychoanalytics drugged through networks and computer-mediated-communications. Broken language analyzes, is analyzed through, theory; broken theory or what I call "wild theory" results, nomadic or marauding theory. The theory chokes in the throat; instead of weak, think of liquid theory, part-objects fall- ing out of analysis. Theory and experience are always already inter- twined, but here experience, tumescence, robs or displaces theory in favor of a darker analysis. Hence the emphasis on shadows, ghosts, psy- choses, frisson.

To accomplish what but the endurance or perseverence of virtual subjec- tivity in these broken problematic spaces. To construct a torn discourse or _violation fabric_ across foreclosed and corporate domains and names. To cite myself in the final stages of withdrawal. To open. For the mil- lennium, to love and hate my avatars. And to open/close a variety of philosophy, simultaneously, or at least within the @blink of an @dig $thing called eye.

http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt

Alan Sondheim

↑ Index

757. Peter Ganick
Re: Webern
Sun 31 May 1998

---

it's early here in connecticut...let me corrrect
that typo and add a bit to tosh's question...

anton webern was, by all i heard, a peaceful man
who worked in the swiss alps throughout the war
removed from the politics of WW2...at night, after composing, he would step outside for a smoke before retiring, as his wife would not allow him to smoke
his cigars in the house...one night, 2 days after the war was ended, an american soldier who hadn't heard the news was patrolling around the remote area of webern's house and shot him dead while webern, perhaps 20th century's most rigorous adherent
of the technique called serialism, was gunned down...

there is a book about this murder that i cannot recall the title of now, but would be willing to look around for it if someone's interested...a fascinating read...

also, relevant to this list...the twelve tone composers (later called serialists) were closest in nature to the l=a=n=g=u=a=g=e poets for the music of the time
...taking tonalism out of music and bringing a pure syntax of intervals their relationships as the sole justification for musical composition...much like the language poets, to my reading, took syntax as the material to be worked with, over content- and subject-based material as its focus...

now for some breakfast...

↑ Index

758. rsillima
Fabulous article in SF Examiner
Sun 31 May 1998

I'm not sure if this is the same Glen Helfland who used to do covers for Socialist Review or not, but this is a fabulous article about Dodie and Kevin.

Ron Silliman

<Picture: The Gate> www.sfgate.com Return to regular view

AN ODD COUPLE OF WRITERS
By Glen Helfand
OF THE EXAMINER STAFF
Saturday, May 30, 1997
©1998 San Francisco Examiner

URL: http://www.sfgate.com/cgi-bin/article.cgi?file=/examiner/hotnews/stories/31/writerssun.dtl

He's gay. She's not. She's avant-garde. He's not.

"What is San Francisco famous for -- besides sourdough bread?" quizzes writer Dodie Bellamy in the funky, book-and-art-filled South of Market apartment she shares with her husband, author Kevin Killian.

"Writing! The writing has been famous since the Gold Rush." She could have cited a list of best-selling authors that range from Jack London to Danielle Steel, but Bellamy and Killian are more connected to a rich history of avant-garde writing that has flourished here alongside San Francisco's alternative lifestyles. And in both art and life, Bellamy and Killian are doing their darnedest to carry the torch of experimentation.

Widely published, the pair enliven the local literary scene -- and draw upon it for material. They serve as ambassadors for The City's experimental writers, and through their various projects -- she's the executive director of the nonprofit literary arts center Small Press Traffic and privately leads her own writing workshop; he is always embroiled in writing -- make contact with nearly every avant-garde writer and poet that passes through town. But their own life is perhaps the most interesting. He's an out homosexual with a keen interest in trashy pop culture and a passion for Tab soda; she's a straight vegetarian who reads feminist theory. And they've been happily married since 1986. Unlike the sanitized Hollywood corollary in the current "Object of My Affection," this 40-something pair readily admits, "Yes, we do have sex" -- with each other. Aspects of Bellamy's and Killian's life together ends up in their writing. Both have recently published major books, with underground San Francisco serving as a prominent backdrop. Bellamy's rich, sexy and highly subjective novel, "The Letters of Mina Harker" (Hard Press), chronicles the exploits of a somewhat schizophrenic narrator in a series of digressive and expressionistic missives. She uses the gritty urban flavor of Mission District bus stops, loft parties and thrift stores for its flavor, as well as a husband character named KK. "There's lots of sex with Kevin in my Mina book," says Bellamy with a slight Indiana lilt. "And everyone else in The City," jests Killian. For his part, Killian is immersed in North Beach bohemia of the 1950s -- the historical milieu for his biography of controversial Beat-era writer, Jack Spicer, entitled "Poet Be Like God: Jack Spicer and the San Francisco Renaissance" (Wesleyan University Press). The book explores the development of gay culture as well as American avant-garde poetry. While he's published novels and short-story collections, it's Killian's first biography, but it's not his first connection to the influential Beat writer. Killian recalls being struck by Spicer's collected works in 1975 while in graduate school at SUNY at Stonybrook, but his advisors felt the work "was too marginal and radical." When Killian moved to San Francisco in 1980, he met Spicer's contemporaries. One of them, Lewis Allingham, was compiling an oral history of Spicer's life. In 1990, Allingham turned his material over Killian and asked him to help write the book. "I felt like Anne Baxter, stepping in for Margot Channing in "All About Eve,' " Killian quips.

The experience of working on the project for nearly a decade, however, proved trying. "I don't think I'd ever do a biography again," Killian admits. "It's too difficult, too long. you get too involved with your subject. First you love the person, then you hate him. It's only at the end that you come to some sort of resolution." As a pause from working on the bio, Killian also penned a number of plays, which breezily and poetically spoof aspects of celebrity and literary culture. They're performed as stage readings starring casts of local writers and visual artists. On June 5, at New College, he'll mount a revival of his first theatrical work, entitled "That," which explores the gentrification of bohemian neighborhoods as seen through the eyes of notorious writer couple Jane and Paul Bowles, whose unlikely union also mixed sexual preferences. "I thought of Paul and Jane as an analogue for our relationship," Killian says, surprising his wife. "In what way?" she asks. "They led very creative lives, but were obviously a little unusually paired sexually. I'm always writing about me and Dodie, in very coded ways. I'm often casting us as bizarre, dangerous, notorious couples." "But I don't think we're very dangerous," Bellamy laughs.

Edgy, maybe, but they are very much a couple, engaged in a workable symbiotic relationship. "A lot of people would think us both being writers would be a source of conflict," says Bellamy, "but it's the place where we really come together. We got together because we could talk. It can be joyous spending time together. "And Kevin's a really wonderful editor and critic," she adds. "It's not totally conflict-free, but he's really supportive and there to help me." "I write many more kinds of things than Dodie, who writes one type of thing with everything in it," Killian interjects. "Her work is thick and dense and experimental, I'm the opposite. I'm very facile." He can rattle off a laundry list of his achievements in writing poetry, novels, short stories, reviews, plays, librettos and biography. Perhaps it's their opposite natures, in fact, that have enabled this marriage to endure for more than a decade. "They said it wouldn't last," Killian smirks. "It was just falling in love. Something that happens once in a lifetime," he says. "I don't think it matters what gender or what nature the people are, but it was a serious shock to realize what was happening. My future was sealed."

The 10th-anniversary revival of Kevin Killian's play, "That," is at New College Theater, 777 Valencia St., Friday at 7:30 p.m.

©1998 San Francisco Examiner

↑ Index

759. Maria Damon
Re: Fabulous article in SF Examiner
Sun 31 May 1998

---

thanks ron for passing this on in its entirety; how charming. shout out to db and kk, you made my day first thing sunday a.m.

↑ Index

760. Nada Gordon
Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
Sun 31 May 1998

---

david, alan, all

it isn't the explicit sexuality of alan's work that makes me uncomfortable (although he does seem to like to write membrane, which you've got to admit is kind of a creepy word), and i agree that anything people fantasize doing is material for a poem

even violent or violating (i once wrote a cut up poem from the eye of a child rapist/killer, Tsutomu Miyazaki, who cut up his victims; long ago i wrote about sticking a toe with an overlong toenail into someone's... oh, never mind)

and i even said that i find a lot of alan's poems beautiful, although he didn't seem to acknowledge that in his response to my comment but rather lit into me like i was catherine mckinnon trying to put the lid on his creation like i was trying to be PC! whoa!

far from it

all i said, and all i mean, was that the poems make me feel uncomfortable sometimes (note -- not a DISMISSAL, not even DISAPPROVAL david! but a response), and annoyed, and angry

and not in the way that anything of Stein or Creeley or Duncan or Acker or Ginsberg ever has but possibly in the way that Henry Miller has

or Norman Mailer

because they flatten women out
(unlike Creeley who found his love-object too mysteriously dimensional)

or possibly the way the guys who dumped me for a little geisha-girl hot roppongi action have

flat, flat, flattened

or sad the way my students with eye jobs and breast jobs and six-inch heels and potentially cancerous fake suntans have

oh, the flatness

as i said, the rage and annoyance is upclose and personal-like

i'm sure nikuko is a real composite because i've met her too
i see her every day in the sports shinbun
bound up, or cartooned with a pig's tail
or on tv after 11:00,
a whole room of nikukos who masturbate when a goofy guy beats a taiko drum

and alan

i'm sure you like araki's photographs
which are very beautiful
and very violating

because you wrote:

> As far as the discomfort is concerned, that is deliberate. I wish to violate borders, violate gender, violate sexuality, violate PC, violate mythologies, including those of the reading of the "east" by the so-called "west" and vice versa - although the latter can only occur within a limited framework. Thus I was told by my efl class that New York was impossibly dangerous; very well, let us write dangerously, violently, to the degree say that the language inverts, turns on itself.

i guess if that's your true desire
to violate i mean
then you must be gratified by my response
instead of defensive about it

it really is a grand project
and unimpeachable from a purely aesthetic point of view
but it upsets me

and i think i have a right to that
and also that you can expect responses like mine

from the gut and not prissy
if you spray your work all over the cyber-world

you write also:
>
>I do not want to write safely. I have no interest in that.

no neither do i, but i don't think violate is my verb of choice

> I have no > interest in PC; the nazis were the most PC group I can think of.

umm... no comment

If there >is either an avant-garde or experimental tradition left, it has to move >on, to probe, to discomfort, to dis-ease, as well as create stereotypical >works of incandescent beauty. Unfortunately, language is no longer a >virus; instead it is a sign of comfort, just as poetics and poetry have >become signs of comfort. Even the experimental. Even the experimental >"tradition."

Please! I don't look for "comfort" in art either, in the sense of matzoh ball soup for the soul (like you, I guess, I'm jewish) -- and I loathe complacency as much as the next hopelessly post-modern displaced person

> Finally, I have no interest either in being an inspiration for moving > people in or out of adulthood. Adulthood is not what it is cooked up to > be; if anything, it is scars and contamination.

Hmm. I quote myself:

    Adult life is a) revenge
    b) redemption

but i suspect it also has something to do with learning responsibility and how not to scathe the world and other people, maybe that's the redemprion part or maybe i am just being quite the schoolmarm

> I have no desire to educate.

then why the lengthy explication of your modus operandi?

and what for you be teachin english then?

past midnight now
gotta get up early to ride the pornographic train and teach all them nikukos, yeah

ume

↑ Index

761. louis stroffolino
Re: Quo Vadis?
Sun 31 May 1998

****

On Sun, 31 May 1998, Alan Myouka Sondheim wrote:

> I think I should say something here, wedge into the discussion.
>
> For me, Nikuko is a person, not a stereotype. She is based most vaguely on a couple of people I know. She is also an actant.
>
> The Japanese for years have borrowed and transformed from US and other cultures; the fact that I am working through various ideas in a reversal of that borrowing should not categorize it as defamatory in any way. I should add that I am not duplicating, not copying; I am changing, not Japan, not Japanese culture, nothing to do with that. Nor could I if I wanted to, nor do I know enough.
>
> As far as exoticism goes, I do not think that way. I think of a yardstick between or among cultures or parts-objects of cultures, of denials, etc. If I use ukiyo-e for example, I know its degree of japonisserie.
>
> The Japanese have pioneered in microelectronics, from Sanrio stuff to computer pets to Casio. Nikuko is just such a microelectronic. She is wearable and she wears me.
>
> As far as the discomfort is concerned, that is deliberate. I wish to violate borders, violate gender, violate sexuality, violate PC, violate mythologies, including those of the reading of the "east" by the so-called "west" and vice versa - although the latter can only occur within a limited framework. Thus I was told by my efl class that New York was impossibly dangerous; very well, let us write dangerously, violently, to the degree say that the language inverts, turns on itself.
>
> I do not want to write safely. I have no interest in that. I have no interest in PC; the nazis were the most PC group I can think of. If there is either an avant-garde or experimental tradition left, it has to move on, to probe, to discomfort, to dis-ease, as well as create stereotypical works of incandescent beauty. Unfortunately, language is no longer a virus; instead it is a sign of comfort, just as poetics and poetry have become signs of comfort. Even the experimental. Even the experimental "tradition."
>
> Finally, I have no interest either in being an inspiration for moving people in or out of adulthood. Adulthood is not what it is cooked up to > be; if anything, it is scars and contamination.

>
> I have no desire to educate.
>
> Alan

↑ Index

762. Simon/Piombino
Feedback
Sun 31 May 1998

This discussion of Alan Sondheim's work- which I have come to enjoy quite a lot-his complex, strange and challenging writing seems rewarding to me in direct proportion to the work I put forth over time into the effort of "understanding" it- and I use the word "understanding" here the same way I would use it to account for my ability to enjoy a kind of music- I feel leads out into a broader topic of the part feedback plays, or should or shouldn't play, in the life and work of a poet, and even a serious reader and supporter of contemporary poetry.I do not wish, of course, to appropriate or shortcut this valuable discussion of Sondheim's work by bringing up this related general issue.

This issue, I confess, is one of my chief obsessions. For example, I find that in my work as a social worker or psychoanalyst, the issue of feedback, in the course of several decades of practice, seems to have fallen into place as a minor, though admittedly, important character. On the other hand, if I give a poetry reading or I publish something,or even if I write something on this list! the craving for feedback, or response, can be intense to a point of discomfort.

An aspect of all this that I have been thinking about has to do with the apparent necessity for a poet, something like an actor or a politician, let's say, to assemble, over time, a kind of constituency. So that when I give a reading, close friends might call to apologize for not showing up, perhaps in an effort to let me know that although they were not there this was not meant to show a lack of "support" for my work.

Now it seems only to the extent that I can integrate this dynamic into the forward movement of my writing, that I can continue to write with pleasure. When I was younger, I think I knew all of this would happen, so I delayed throwing my hat into the ring for years. Once you are a known quantity, the fact is, you must accept the public aspect of your writing process. Fighting it, in a way, comes down only to a process of denial, like the playwrights who claim never to read the reviews of their plays. Saying they haven't read them can be useful, though, in not having to discuss the unpleasant details with their friends,for example.Giving readings,in fact, is one of the ways that a writer can get immediate feedback and actually see and feel a response to the work in the here and now. Ted Berrigan,in his teaching, always emphasized the importance of giving poetry readings.

On the other hand, perhaps this topic is one which is best not thought about or discussed too much, I don't know. In any case, I had the impulse to "share this" (why do I hate that phrase?)

Nick Piombino

↑ Index

763. Alan Myouka Sondheim
Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
Sun 31 May 1998

I just woke up, so excuse the bleariness of the reply here -

On Mon, 1 Jun 1998, Nada Gordon wrote:

> david, alan, all
>
> *it isn't the explicit sexuality of alan's work that makes me uncomfortable (although he does seem to like to write membrane, which you've got to admit is kind of a creepy word), and i agree that anything people fantasize doing is material for a poem*

I use "membrane," which doesn't creep me at all, to indicate both the fragility and the presence of the Net-without-nodes, almost as a sentient surface.
>
/skip/

> all i said, and all i mean, was that the poems make me feel uncomfortable sometimes (note -- not a DISMISSAL, not even DISAPPROVAL david! but a response), and annoyed, and angry
>
> and not in the way that anything of Stein or Creeley or Duncan or Acker or Ginsberg ever has
>
> but possibly in the way that Henry Miller has
> or Norman Mailer

This is what I was reacting to, since I see no relationship with these people, and years ago, in fact, Acker and I did some collaborations.
>
> because they flatten women out
> (unlike Creeley who found his love-object too mysteriously dimensional)

This is what bothers me. If you are teaching a classroom, or from someone else's viewpoint, say a nation of Nikukos, and in fact Nikuko for me is much more specific than that, then you are also saying _they're_ flattened
-
>
> or possibly the way the guys who dumped me for a little geisha-girl hot > roppongi action have

and much as I don't know your history, isn't "little geisha-girl" also disparaging? For me, Nikuko is somewhat of a hero - she's associated in a lot of my writing with either the sun-goddess or kami - she has powers that aren't necessarily sexual or based on seduction.
>
> or sad the way my students with eye jobs and breast jobs and six-inch heels > and potentially cancerous fake suntans have
>
> oh, the flatness

I feel both sad about this and unable to comment, except you're passing a judgement on these people. From the little I saw of Japanese students, and the ones I talked to, a lot of what _they_ were concerned about was kept to themselves, or expressed in social/hobby clubs at the uni, not in the classroom and not in relation to the teacher.
>
> i'm sure nikuko is a real composite because i've met her too
> i see her every day in the sports shinbun
> bound up, or cartooned with a pig's tail
> or on tv after 11:00,
> a whole room of nikukos who masturbate when a goofy guy beats a taiko drum
>
For me she was a composite of two people plus the sun-goddess, neither of whom fit your model; I think you're reading things I don't intend.
>
> i'm sure you like araki's photographs
> which are very beautiful
> and very violating

I don't know araki's photographs.
>
> because you wrote:
>
> >As far as the discomfort is concerned, that is deliberate. I wish to > >violate borders, violate gender, violate sexuality, violate PC, violate > >mythologies, including those of the reading of the "east" by the so-called > >"west" and vice versa - although the latter can only occur within a > >limited framework. Thus I was told by my efl class that New York was > >impossibly dangerous; very well, let us write dangerously, violently, to > >the degree say that the language inverts, turns on itself.

This doesn't imply that all violation is worthwhile.
>
> i guess if that's your true desire
> to violate i mean
> then you must be gratified by my response
> instead of defensive about it

No, because it goes in the direction of stereotyping itself - Nikuko is such-and-such a person and I know these people and these people are flat.
>
> it really is a grand project
> and unimpeachable from a purely aesthetic point of view
> but it upsets me
>
> and i think i have a right to that
> and also that you can expect responses like mine
> from the gut and not prissy
> if you spray your work all over the cyber-world
>
True enough.
>
/skip/
>
> >I have no desire to educate.
>
>
> then why the lengthy explication of your modus operandi?
>
Because of worry over misrecognition, misreading, and for that matter, after the fact, the last thing I wanted to do was bring up bad memories for you, or this class of women ("girls") you critique as "flat."

> and what for you be teachin english then?
>
I took part-time work to help with the income. But I also found that the class and other classes I sat in for that matter, were often what Aram Saroyan called "filling out the form," that they had no real purpose in terms of learning english.

>
/skip/

I think what I need to do here is not send Nikukomaterial, so to speak, to this list; on occasion, other work, of which I have done sufficient. For the last thing I want to do is hurt anyone, or bring up these issues, which are so personal they're hard to respond to.

In the meantime, if anyone is interested on seeing the whole shebang, including, say, Nikuko's essays on the philosophy of science, it's all at the webpages, most of it I think in files ke-ki.

Alan
URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
MIRROR with other pages at: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt

↑ Index

764. morpheal
Re: mythology: wandering from techno war to Pakistan's new nukes
Sun 31 May 1998

> I think I made that pretty clear by stating that current artists are sampling and have been for decades, other ideas...as far as an "essentially disassociative scramble of what is essentially a concatention of ideas from someone else's minds"
>
> wouldn't it be easier to just say "borrowing"?

No. Simply because that is not what they are doing. They are not simply borrowing. They are intentionally and randomly distorting and merging other people's works. That is all that they are doing.

When we borrow something we maintain at least some of its original integrity. We do not twist it and convolute it until we destroy it. We use it in a manner that remains recognizable.

> To say that a large portion of earth' s inhabitant's despises "every element of our artistic culture" to to presuppose that "our" means art as you see it, I see "They" as a classic "duality" situation an (us vs them mentality-) as far as people on this planet despising art, "they" probably should, as it as defined as "our artistic culture" shouldn't matter to anyone outside the "local community-"

No. You definitely do not understand. You want to twist what I am saying into cultural relativism of one kind or another. That is not what I said. I said that they despise art. There are varying intensities of this. Some Marxists, communists, have been very violent and oppressive towards artists. Relative freedom of expression, and therefore art as we understand it, cannot flourish there. Art is reducted to political advertising, or propaganda, in many such instances. However, they do not tend to be the extremists that I was referring to. They are extreme, but not so very extreme. The most extreme are the Moslems. According to their scriptures "art", in any form as we know it and value it, is absolutely forbidden. That does not mean that every moslem follows the teachings, but a very large number do follow it. The only adornments become embellished kufic script and the religious architecture it adorns. There are indications that all western art, the fine arts and humanities as we know them, are considered "satanic" and the mentality desiring their absolute destruction remains quite active within that foreign (alien to us) culture.

Where such instances of "truth" collide we end in irreconcilable conflict and that means mutual attempts to influence the outcome of the conflict.

I see some of the struggles within our own cultural tradition (western, European-North American heritege primarily, but not exclusively), currently as springing from that particular root of conflict. Each side ends up wanting to cut down the other side's cultural tree - to uproot as it were.

> Who are "They who have technology and are not cave dwellers"

I was alluding to the common false conception that some foreign cultures lack the ability to distort their rival cultures by technological means. The underestimations of the KGB during the Cold War were sometimes the most comical instantiations of something of that kind. In essence the tendencies among some to underestimate the "enemy" or the cultural opponent. Most of all the attitude that some areas where the people are impoverished and on average technologically ignorant, lack all covert means. They do not. That is the misconception. The state of the average population says very little abnout the body politic. It is not the body politic. Another instantiation of this, quite outside the realm of radio, radar and microwaves, is Islamic Pakistan's 'success' as to becoming a nuclear power. Even that fact leads to underestimations of Pakistan's technological abilities. After all, the bomb was invented fifty years ago. It is old technology, even if mass destructive. We then fail to consider the use of other categories of violent means, including conventional, chemical, biological, and electromagetic.

We also fail to recognize that all nations who share a common ideology tend to share their technological capabilities, to a very large extent, with each other. Particularly if they have larger ambitions as to cultural, (which always involves ideological), expansion and conquest.

In our example we then find reasons to believe that many other similarly affiliated nations have gained nuclear capabilities. Similarly biological and chemical warfare capabilities. We might see Libya, or Syria, Iraq, Iran, and others, as all sharing with one another, similar technological means.

Apply that same viewpoint to electromagnetic means of potential influence and we quickly find that we live within a technologically conflicted, sphere of cultural and ideological influence conflicted, nightmare. The Cold War with the USSR was only one scene in one act of the whole play of various endgames, including those that involve attempted conquest of the human mind by whomever happen to be the primary cultural competitors.

Quite aside, but on that loosely phrased illustrative example, from current politics, I cannot say that I see a positive outcome for American and allied economic and diplomatic sanctions against Pakistan. I see that as furthering the excerbation of hostile sentiments and perhaps leading to their eventual venting, exteriorized from the increased hardships and sufferings, so that the sanctions act as a kind of catalyst, to a more radically violent military expression. How extreme that might end up being, is an open question. It depends on how strong the reactions are to the sanctions and to the other actions of other nations.

M.

aka Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

765. Mark Weiss
Re: Webern
Sun 31 May 1998

Accurate, except that Webern died in Germany. No US occupation of Switzerland, which had bought itself out of the war.

At 07:30 AM 5/31/98 -0400, you wrote:
>it's early here in connecticut...let me corrrect
>that typo and add a bit to tosh's question...
>
>anton webern was, by all i heard, a peaceful man
>who worked in the swiss alps throughout the war
>removed from the politics of WW2...at night, after >composing, he would step outside for a smoke before >retiring, as his wife would not allow him to smoke
>his cigars in the house...one night, 2 days after >the war was ended, an american soldier who hadn't >heard the news was patrolling around the remote
>area of webern's house and shot him dead while >webern, perhaps 20th century's most rigorous adherent
>of the technique called serialism, was gunned down...
>
>there is a book about this murder that i cannot

>recall the title of now, but would be willing to >look around for it if someone's interested...a >fascinating read...
>
>also, relevant to this list...the twelve tone composers >(later called serialists) were closest in nature to
>the l=a=n=g=u=a=g=e poets for the music of the time
>...taking tonalism out of music and bringing a pure >syntax of intervals their relationships as the sole >justification for musical composition...much like the >language poets, to my reading, took syntax as the
>material to be worked with, over content- and subject->based material as its focus...
>
>now for some breakfast...
>
>

↑ Index

766. R. Gancie
universal quantifier
Sun 31 May 1998

"Moreover, it is the dependence of one quantifier on another-specifically, of existential quantifiers on universal quantifiers-that enables us to capture the intuitive idea of an iterative process formally: any value x of the universal quantifier generates a value y of the existential quantifier, y can then be substituted for x generating a new value y', and so on. Hence, the existence of an infinity of objects can be deduced explicitly by logic alone."---from Kant and the Exact Sciences by Michael Freedman --- "Representation is exchanged for the fungible---universal interchangeability."... "'In the Galilean mathematization of the world,...,this selfness is idealized under the guidance of the new mathematics: in modern terms, it becomes itself a mathematical multiplicity. [Husserl]'" Thinking objectifies itself to become an automatic, self-activating process; an impersonation of the machine that it produces itself so that ultimately the machine can replace it."---from Dialectic of Enlightenment by Max Horkheimer & Theodor Adorno---cp

↑ Index

767. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
Sun 31 May 1998

---

this is such a difficult discussion for me... i've said before that i've liked alan sondheim's work, and i've indicated what i liked most about it---esp. in his earlier stuff, his capacity for theorizing the net in terms of psychoanalytical (term used advisedly) and mathematical allegories (ok this is sloppy)...

in fact i believe this is a rather formal claim (of appreciation, i mean)... sometimes i enjoy the poems alan posts to the list---i can see the logic of unix, say, as this logic becomes a means to devise personalities and corresponding exchanges between same...

at the same time, i am, with nada, put off (i don't believe the comfort/discomfort pair will get us much mileage, for all sortsa reasons) by what i see at times as a celebration of, say, the logical level (or, still in somewhat lay terms, computing level) with less regard (than i'd like to see) for the (fuller?) implications this level has for readings that operate beyond/beside/coterminus with it... b/c i don't see how one can wish away such readings, not least b/c of the fraught and diverse nature of the (social and political and epidemiological etc.) real... which includes of course the daily life-world nada obviously inhabits...

this, one might argue, is precisely the risk of such work... i.e., that it might not work for some readers, depending on the reader herself, reader's context, alla those variables... it's not so much a matter (alan) of whether one comes to your work to be educated, exactly (though i think education and learning, as general metaphors for aesthetic practice, have their place)... it's more a matter of the ways your work disperses a wide-range of considerations that will (b/c they can) be plugged into discourses that, e.g., don't on the one hand determine pleasure in terms of such maneuvers, and, on the other, locate the works at a remove of what's deemed urgent...

sure, one can say that all writing/art/whatever enjoys (?) such attention, lack of attention, what have you... one can say that the job, as it were, is to find ways to negotiate such attentions w/o (if this is your hobby horse, more and more these days it's mine) contributing to a fucked-up planet... but of course any work can probably be made to speak to any agenda, and of course the pain of such work (or the work of such work, or even the fun of such work) is in understanding its tentative/provisional nature even as it enacts, in its very self-presence, a certain set of very unprovisional and untentative assumptions (be they aesthetic, political, etc.----meanings/encounters fluctuate, sure, but there is this matter of the text's role in such fluctuations, at times i want to say to mself, JUST GET ON WITH IT fer chrissakes joe)...

a lesson?... perhaps... alan's plan is certainly worth perusing on the web in toto... at the same time, nada's response, though perhaps a response to somewhat isolated works distributed more singularly to poetix, is one with which i can identify... depends on the particular work---i'm not always sure, this much must be clear, what the hell alan is up to, and i don't automatically celebrate that with which i am unfamiliar---i've had to work harder than most, perhaps, to learn to let go, but i think i'm permitted this initial bit of resistance w/o necessarily judging a work as unworthy of my attention...

so alan, i think, from where i sit, that nada registers an attendant risk that i see, too, in your work... and nada, have a look at some of alan's more extensive provocations---they're not for all "tastes," not always for mine either, but they do amount to a keen and reflexive sense of what's generally at stake in such gestures, even if no theoretical vantage-point gets around a certain act of faith...

er, even the one i enact by asserting so...

best to both of you///

joe

↑ Index

768. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher
Re: Fabulous article in SF Examiner
Sun 31 May 1998

---

also to say that it's great to see folks like dodie & kevin, and miekal, getting some much-deserved public due!...

///

joe

↑ Index

769. Laura E. Wright
Re: Fwd: 12 tones for Anton's bones
Sun 31 May 1998

This 12-tone music as Nazi code thing has got to be a joke... and an unfunny one at that. The same "strangeness" David Bromige speaks of in poetry is equally sought after in other media. The increasing exploration of chromaticism as tonal music evolved (tonality as we think of it only really came into common use in the 17th century) led to Schoenberg's complete breakdown of tonality. The 12-tone method of composition was a way to make lack of tonality absolute -- no one note occurs any more or less than on other. The challenge, as that of poetic form, is to create something "meaningful" within these boundaries. As for those who "never got it" -- dunno. Maybe they should stick to top 40. I've always found strange beauty aplenty in much atonal music... especially Berg's violin concerto. And, I believe Schoenberg was in L.A. for much of his career anyway.

--
Laura Wright
Library Assistant, Naropa Institute
[redacted]

"All music is music..." -- Ted Berrigan

↑ Index

770. Laura E. Wright
Re: situation uncomfortable
Sun 31 May 1998

Alan-- I would hope you would not completely cease Nikuko postings. Discomfort and disagreement are vital to discussion. If anyone is offended at anything on this list, they are free to delete without reading. If you or others censor for fear of offense, we all lose. 'Nuf said.

--
Laura Wright
Library Assistant, Naropa Institute
[redacted]

"All music is music..." -- Ted Berrigan

↑ Index

771. Erik Sweet
Re: last call
Sun 31 May 1998

In a message dated 5/31/98 6:06:47 AM, you wrote:

<<For the past several years, I have been developing a _pathological_ apparatus that operates in the interstice between subjectivity and protocol. The apparatus is characterized by the rigid designators of proper names which serve to ground supplements or leakage across do- mains; the names can reference avatar-constructs on one hand, and dissolution/dispersion on the other.

The apparatus as interstice exploits system loops and resonances, as well as repetitions and pre-verbal components in the written language;

the result is more often than not broken texts which emanate from the throat relative to the hand. Full of glottal stops and vulnerable sites, the texts reference a non-existent body; the name does the rest. _Julu_ processes desire, acts as consort to _Jennifer,_ who splays the residue of sexuality. _Nikuko_ operates upon languages and misrecognitions; Nikuko also constitutes a politico-monetary economy. Jennifer has infiltrated sendmail files, talkers, and MOOs, among other applications; in relation to Julu, dialogs are created, insisting on the reality of the virtual "in no uncertain terms." (Nikuko has infiltrated IRC as well.)
>>

↑ Index

772. Erik Sweet

Re: mythology: wandering from techno war to Pakistan's new nukes

Sun 31 May 1998

In a message dated 5/31/98 12:10:47 PM, you wrote:

<

> wouldn't it be easier to just say "borrowing"?

No. Simply because that is not what they are doing. They are not simply borrowing. They are intentionally and randomly distorting and merging other people's works. That is all that they are doing.

If that is all they are doing, why not put it simply and say it is borrowing?

"When we borrow something we maintain at least some of its original integrity. We do not twist it and convolute it until we destroy it. We use it in a manner that remains recognizable."

"Intentionally and randomely distorting and merging other people's works is borrowing as far as "samples" go in music, they are not randomely distorted at all, but borrowing and put somewhere else, shifted.

> To say that a large portion of earth' s inhabitant's despises "every element of our artistic culture" to to presuppose that "our" means art as you see it, I see "They" as a classic "duality" situation an (us vs them mentality-) as far as people on this planet despising art, "they" probably should, as it as defined as "our artistic culture" shouldn't matter to anyone outside the "local community-"

"No. You definitely do not understand. You want to twist what I am saying into cultural relativism of one kind or another."

Please, I am not interested in cultural relativism and for that matter would never even use that term...I am not twisting what you say, I understand exactly what you are saying...I was talking about "music" not technowar.

That is not what I said. I said that they despise art. There are varying intensities of this. Some Marxists, communists, have been very violent and oppressive towards artists. Relative freedom of expression, and therefore art as we understand it, cannot flourish there. Art is reducted to political advertising, or propaganda, in many such instances. However, they do not tend to be the extremists that I was referring to. They are extreme, but not so very extreme. The most extreme are the Moslems. According to their scriptures "art", in any form as we know it and value it, is absolutely forbidden. That does not mean that every moslem follows the teachings, but a very large number do follow it. The only adornments become embellished kufic script and the religious architecture it adorns. There are indications that all western art, the fine arts and humanities as we know them, are considered "satanic" and the mentality desiring their absolute destruction remains quite active within that foreign (alien to us) culture.

Where such instances of "truth" collide we end in irreconcilable conflict and that means mutual attempts to influence the outcome of the conflict.

I see some of the struggles within our own cultural tradition (western, European-North American heritege primarily, but not exclusively), currently as springing from that particular root of conflict. Each side ends up wanting to cut down the other side's cultural tree - to uproot as it were.

> Who are "They who have technology and are not cave dwellers"

I was alluding to the common false conception that some foreign cultures lack the ability to distort their rival cultures by technological means. The underestimations of the KGB during the Cold War were sometimes the most comical instantiations of something of that kind. In essence the tendencies among some to underestimate the "enemy" or the cultural opponent. Most of all the attitude that some areas where the people are impoverished and on average technologically ignorant, lack all covert means. They do not. That is the misconception. The state of the average population says very little abnout the body politic. It is not the body politic. Another instantiation of this, quite outside the realm of radio, radar and microwaves, is Islamic Pakistan's 'success' as to becoming a nuclear power. Even that fact leads to underestimations of Pakistan's technological abilities. After all, the bomb was invented fifty years ago. It is old technology, even if mass destructive. We then fail to consider the use of other categories of violent means, including conventional, chemical, biological, and electromagetic.

We also fail to recognize that all nations who share a common ideology tend to share their technological capabilities, to a very large extent, with each other. Particularly if they have larger ambitions as to cultural, (which always involves ideological), expansion and conquest.

In our example we then find reasons to believe that many other similarly affiliated nations have gained nuclear capabilities. Similarly biological and chemical warfare capabilities. We might see Libya, or Syria, Iraq, Iran, and others, as all sharing with one another, similar technological means.

Apply that same viewpoint to electromagnetic means of potential influence and we quickly find that we live within a technologically conflicted, sphere of cultural and ideological influence conflicted, nightmare. The Cold War with the USSR was only one scene in one act of the whole play of various endgames, including those that involve attempted conquest of the human mind by whomever happen to be the primary cultural competitors.

Quite aside, but on that loosely phrased illustrative example, from current politics, I cannot say that I see a positive outcome for American and allied economic and diplomatic sanctions against Pakistan. I see that as furthering the excerbation of hostile sentiments and perhaps leading to their eventual venting, exteriorized from the increased hardships and sufferings, so that the sanctions act as a kind of catalyst, to a more radically violent military expression. How extreme that might end up being, is an open question. It depends on how strong the reactions are to the sanctions and to the other actions of other nations.

M.

aka Bob Ezergailis

↑ Index

773. david bromige

George Bowering's encrypted poetry

Sun 31 May 1998

I am now at liberty to reveal that George Bowering's poetry, in many of his books "a-tonal" in structure, often consists of heavily encrypted messages being transmitted to Cuba about the seaward defenses of Bellingham, WA. This dates back to the TISH years--scholars will note the coincidence of Castro's revolution with the laun ching of this poetry newsletter. So an entire school of writing in Canada has been based on this false premise : it was never poetry, it was spying! Canadian authorities, responding to pressure from the United States, will shortly be removing all books of poetry from Canadian libraries, that bear any traces of TISH influence, and billing these authors for the return of any Canada Council monies they may have received under these false pretenses. The brazenness of the operation is revealed when one learns that 'TISH' is the acronymn from"Technical Information Shipping Harbor".

David Bromige, Snitch Extraordinaire

↑ Index

774. morpheal

Re: mythology: wandering from techno war to Pakistan's new nukes

Sun 31 May 1998

> Please, I am not interested in cultural relativism and for that matter would never even use that term...I am not twisting what you say, I understand exactly what you are saying...I was talking about "music" not technowar.

You had better be interested in it.

The other guys, and their gals, want _YOUR_ culture _OFF_ this planet.

Are you planning on simply packing your bags and leaving ? They would happily see you off. That's it. Simply see you out and off.

That would put a new direction to the space program.

As for music not being related to technowar. Deconstructive music is essentially emulative of one facet of technowar. It reflects it perfectly. Of course, there is a two edged sword in that. It is protest against certain conflicts within the cultural millieux of the planet. It is also becomes a means for many to experience something in a less dangerous contextual situation, and thus the very cultural manifestation that knowingly or unknowingly protests what amounts to a kind of technowar becomes preparation for technowarriors. That irony is repeated again and again in every culture, though differently, and at all levels of technological sophistication.

M.

↑ Index

775. groberts

Alan's Feedback

Sun 31 May 1998

Thanks to everyone for making comments and commitments, for drawing lines and arrows and hearts and circles. Go figure: poetics on the "poetics" list!

(And thanks to Tom Orange, whose post on Jeff Clark I think started this long overdue discussion.)

Gary R.

↑ Index

776. Henry Gould
Re: Quo uncomfortable Vadis
Sun 31 May 1998

I would go along with Croce's aesthetics: "pure"poetry is not pure music, not a sort of Absolute before which any sort of moral "discomfort" is equal to "censorship". "Pure" poetry, true poetry, for Croce, was a balance between referentiality and music, word and world.

Poetry is an undertaking of enormous power because unlike philosophy it gets "inside" natural phenomena - from the most basic to the most intellectual & spiritual. Mimesis. But such power need not become an excuse for idolatry or a sort of aesthetic gnosis vaunting itself as beyond good & evil, or beyond rational critique. Poetry is a gift providing something rational critique (objective observation) can never provide; but such a gift does not entail the destruction of rational critique.

Every poet's work implies a worldview. The most basic forms of literary art - parable and riddle - employ mimesis and storytelling in order to foreground THE REAL. Poetry (and all art) is a quintessence of reality. But reality includes self-consciousness, reason, and critical awareness; the proposed complexity and subtlety of Alan's project certainly don't negate Nada's demurral.

Alan says he "knows" Nikuko (personally) and she IS "flat". All well and good, I guess; documentary realism in an ex-cathedra footnote? It's all all too "documentary" for my taste, despite the computer bells & whistles. But I haven't given it a fair reading. I like to choose my own reading. That's why I'm TRYING myself not to post so much to the list these days... (one reason, anyway).

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

777. Schuchat Simon
nomuko and tabeko
Sun 31 May 1998

the experience of a part of Asia by a non-Asian or even sometimes by a person from another part of Asia is frequently a prized possession, that's true with other worlds as well but not so many of us are in a position to engage and write re some of the other worlds, either they are less interesting (tho Luc Sante is writing Belgium for us) or too strongly possessed by bilinguals/biculturals (who would care about a gringo take on central America anymore?). furthermore the experience that is involved involves sex and gender and stereotypes in all directions. the list has seen discussion about specifically Japanizing stereotypes, I won't dredge that stuff up again, but in the case of Nada and Alan, I see some measure of the longtime visitor and short time visitor disagreeing on who has seen what, though I may be being unfair to Alan in terms of the extent of his Japanimmersion. or better, the discomfort for Nada/Ume comes from the violation of her ownership of her experience by Alan in his Nikuko works. It appears that Ume/Nada's Japan has a lot more texture and depth and grain and substance than Alan's. However I also enjoy reading the Nikuko works, I don't have as much invested and sometimes the texture is flat.

A recent novel AUDREY HEPBURN'S NECK (can't recall authors name, it is in Penguin I think) is very good and approaches some of these issues from another angle.

I have also been meaning to recommend (if anyone has gotten this far) the most recent MURAKAMI Haruki novel, THE WIND-UP BIRD CHRONICLE and the first translation of Wang Shuo (the great post-modern Chinese writer) into English, PLAYING FOR THRILLS. They are both terrific and, incidentally, very interesting to read side by side for what they do with the conventionsof the noir detective story and the issue of the buried past.

off to work

↑ Index

778. Kathy Lou Schultz
dodie & kevin: my s/heroes
Sun 31 May 1998

Hello all,

Glad to see Ron and others mentioning the SF Examiner article. I just saw it myself earlier and got a tingle in my toes. For those of you unfortunate enough not to live in the Bay Area, or who haven't checked out the article online, here's a little teaser (come on now, lean in a little closer): In the article they admit that they have sex (Gasp!) with each other (Gasp! Gasp!). And there's a great plug for Dodie's long-awaited _Letters of Mina Harker_, as well as for Kevin's oft-referenced "Spicer Book." In addition, if yer "in the neighborhood," the 10th anniversary performance of KK's "That" is happening this Friday (June 5) at the New College Theatre, 777 Valencia, 7:30 p.m.

In reference to Ron's question, Glen Helfand may very well have done _Socialist Review_ covers. He's very much about town doing film and art reviews, and has done some great book covers, including one for me and one for Abigail Child.

Kathy Lou Schultz

↑ Index

779. Susan Wheeler
SF Examiner
Sun 31 May 1998

As a recent reader of Mina Harker's stupendous letters and recent spectator at one of Mr. Killian's thespian extravaganzas, I can attest: it's all true! And more!

May the spirit inflame, as is said ---

(Kudos, kids.)

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

780. Rebecca Weldon Sithiwong
Quo uncomfortable Vadis?
Sun 31 May 1998

Alan's journey is pure energy. I cringe and marvel; he is brilliant.
Perhaps he could be something else, more controlled, less challenged, but, were he so, might not we regret his passing? Where else would he live if not in the company of poets?
~~~
~~~

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

June 1998

1057 messages · Mon 1 Jun 1998 – Wed 1 Jul 1998

June 1998 gave the world plenty to look at — France opened a World Cup, the subcontinent's two new bombs still settling into the record, Belfast at the polls for its first Assembly — and the Poetics list, as usual, looked instead at itself. The one dispatch from the wider world reached the room secondhand and as a joke: a Reuters item, forwarded by joel lewis, on the nation's "despair over the departure of Ginger Spice." Everything else that mattered to the room was a question of accounts — poetry's own: what a poem is worth, who will pay for one, and in what currency a life spent writing them is reckoned.

For June was, above all, the month the list did its books. It began helpfully — a crowdsourced roster of the magazines that actually pay, which swelled within days into the month's largest conversation, a hundred-odd messages on the economics of the art. Could a poet have a career at all, and in what coin was it paid? Was an MFA worth its debt, or a PhD? Jim Andrews put the arithmetic plainly — "There is no money in poetry", he wrote, the commodity being prestige and influence — and the room set about auditing that stranger currency with the thoroughness it brings to a bibliography: who holds prestige, who confers it, and what it costs to acquire.

The quarrel, when it came, was about whether the world belonged in the room at all. It was imported by morpheal — a non-poet and, at seventy-eight posts, the month's most tireless voice — who took the June nerve-gas story then in the news and mounted a cool, utilitarian defence of chemical weapons the poets could not let stand. Kent Johnson answered in satire, daniel bouchard point by point; and when Brent Long asked the obvious border question, what any of this had to do with poetry, Mark Prejsnar turned it inside out: "Nerve gas has EVRYTHING to do with poetry", typo and all. The argument was never about sarin, but about whether the news held a passport into a room that spends its days pricing sonnets.

That the loudest summons to the world should come from its one confirmed outsider is the month's quiet joke, and its real subject. The Poetics list is governed, as ever, by who is in it, and morpheal could hold the floor precisely because he wanted nothing the room was selling — "Poetry is noticably absent from their wish lists", he observed of the people he took to be the real ones, the only figure at the audit with no stake in the prices. The poets, meanwhile, could not agree on even their own class: whether they were, as one proposed, a dominated fraction of the dominant class, or simply broke.

And what, then, stood on the room's books? Its ledger and the world's so little overlapped that the only death it paused over was ten years gone and one of its own — George Bowering remembering Gwen MacEwen, after whose loss, he said, "Toronto poetry just disappeared for five years, just disappeared." A fresher death went by unmarked: on the ninth a notice crossed from the Fluxlist that the artist Dieter Roth was gone, its whole body two words — "has died." — with a cheerful Cologne tip. No one replied. I have set the long argument over what a poem is worth beside that unanswered notice exactly as June filed them: the room will spend a hundred letters on the price of poetry and not one on a death outside the guild.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 1057 in all.

WRITERS

8-13-1997, ShaunAnne Tangney Humani… 698
Administration, Poetics List 223
Aerialedge 915, 945
Agent Sunshine, Aka Eric Gleason 968
Alexander, Charles 52, 153, 282, 389, 397, 398, 461, 475, 480, 534, 642, 669, 674, 678, 743, 781, 851, 1046, 1048
Alexander, Christopher W. 10, 23, 136, 169, 281, 283, 372, 685, 713, 716, 768
And, Miekal 61, 212, 214, 342, 417, 661
ANDREWS, BETSY 525
Andrews, Jim 253, 299, 528, 588, 656, 775, 801, 928, 929, 966
Archambeau, Robert 83, 938
Baker, Peter 317
Balestrieri, Peter 133, 681
Baratier, David 535, 575, 634, 709, 760, 817, 870, 886, 947, 950, 1035
Barbour, Douglas 354, 358, 431, 483, 484, 602, 707, 746, 806, 976
Beard, Tom 146, 511, 825, 827, 829
Bernstein, Charles 6, 9, 48, 601, 959
Bijalba, Christopher 665
Bouchard, Daniel 262, 264, 274, 276, 306, 561, 703, 737, 903, 1002, 1006, 1031
Bowering, George 117, 118, 162, 254, 255, 256, 257, 298, 386, 391, 392, 393, 454, 455, 510, 530, 589, 590, 657, 658, 659, 660, 731, 732, 733, 734, 803, 857, 858, 859, 887, 933
Brady, Taylor 66, 1034
Brennan, Joe 836
Bromige, David 3, 36, 43, 72, 93, 108, 113, 120, 132, 150, 184, 185, 258, 406, 469, 492, 495, 527, 606, 640, 649, 697, 701, 753, 846, 922, 927, 994
Brown, Lee Ann 56, 706
Brown, Pam 577
Byrd, Don 236, 266, 447, 463
Caddel, R I 910
CD 479, 526
Charssmith 912, 913
Cheney, Don 868, 900
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 18, 100, 225, 378, 695, 973
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 243, 627
Cirelli, Blaise 918
Clay, Steven 1027
Clements, Brian N 648
Clippinger, David 686
Clippinger, David W. 920
Coffey, Michael 683
COLLIER, DANIEL L. 13, 904
Cope, Stephen 134, 213, 771, 802
Corbett, Robert 655, 865, 880
Corbin, Michael 449, 514, 650
Daley, R M 956, 957
Damon, Maria 62, 178, 199, 459, 487, 536, 538, 596, 597, 598, 666, 688, 689, 691, 719, 720, 738
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 84, 91, 869, 871, 872, 873, 971, 972, 1011, 1012
Davis, Jordan 15, 17, 94, 168, 203, 218, 316, 322, 490, 522, 537, 550, 633, 809, 816, 832, 883, 1054
Dbkk 114, 138, 230, 430, 498, 568, 624, 677, 1036
Debrot, Jacques 401, 558, 592, 603, 667
DeDeo, Simon 55, 139, 710, 723, 729, 782, 833, 841, 864, 877, 879, 885, 905, 914, 960, 1021
Delville, Michel 40, 42
Devaney, Mj 482, 717
Dlugonski, Dan Or Orion Raphael 471, 473
Douglas 217, 219, 663
Drake, R. 446, 779, 788, 1028
Durand, Marcella 163, 244, 260, 585
Etter, Carrie 409, 478, 515, 517, 965
Farr, Roger 19, 20, 57, 238, 329, 1017
Felix, Joel 126
Finch, Annie 615
Fleisher, Joe Amato/Kass 77, 90, 106, 466, 975
Franco, Michael 272
G, Henry 314, 325, 353, 356, 369, 416, 420, 520, 600, 693, 742, 831, 902
Gallagher, Kristen 88
Gancie, R. 16, 60, 102, 143, 172, 183, 187, 200, 234, 278, 326, 377, 433, 468, 500, 567, 621, 705, 755, 785, 799, 818, 821, 840, 866, 951, 980, 992, 1010, 1042
Ganick, Peter 29, 878
Glazier, Loss Pequen~o 25, 26, 787, 789
Gleason, Eryque 1039
Goldsmith, Kenneth 12
Golumbia, David 331
Gordon, Nada 791, 901
Gould, Henry 79, 151, 208, 321, 388, 444, 477, 501, 512, 772, 986
Groberts 429, 916
Grotjohn, Bob 662

Grumman, Bob 687
Hall, James C. 65
Hawkwind 748, 754
Healy, L. MacMahon And T.R. 78, 730
Hehir, K.a. 892, 893
Hen 301, 539
Henning, Barbara 179
Henry 265, 318, 441, 442, 516, 533, 556, 563, 643, 644, 646, 735, 908 Huppatz, D.j. 38, 259, 405
Izak 636
Jaeger, P.c. 805
Jarnot 604
JOHNSON, KENT 252, 273, 290, 428, 848, 962
Joris, Pierre 486, 591
Joseph, Safdie 28, 131, 158, 170, 289, 312, 339, 605, 631, 765
Kaipa, S. 338, 373, 494, 509, 542, 560, 569
Kalleberg, Garrett 45
Keeney, Scott 46
Kelleher, Michael 144, 286
Kelley, Karen 112, 157, 402, 432, 485, 586, 645, 724, 728, 925, 978
Kellogg, David 82, 89, 195, 574
Kendall, Robert 11
Ken|n|ing 240, 328, 380, 381, 382, 448, 493, 518, 519, 607
Kim, Ike 426
Kimball, J 474, 1022
Kimball, John 572, 898
Kirschenbaum, Matt 890, 961
Kramer, Wendy 860
Kuszai, J. 5, 50, 51, 53, 165, 166, 221, 231, 261, 263, 414, 438, 450, 935
Langhorst, Barbara 128
Lawrence, Anthony 39, 41, 74, 97, 171, 300, 347, 349, 350, 351, 352, 410, 411, 412, 413, 457, 583, 777, 798, 894, 895
Lederer, K. 110, 176, 197, 343, 366, 390, 395, 419, 423, 465, 573, 647
Levitsky, Rachel 14
Levy, Herb 852, 1005
Lewis, Joel 148, 330, 437, 452, 570, 571, 708, 767, 987
List, Poetics 762, 1008
Little, Billy 68, 111, 239, 284, 309, 346, 370, 652, 684, 835, 931
Loden, Rachel 44, 101, 109, 159, 291, 394, 445, 941
Long, Brent 64, 198, 270, 305, 323, 375, 557, 566, 593, 594, 599, 617, 639, 699, 744, 780, 837, 874, 875, 906, 952, 958, 1029
Long, Richard 135, 955
Machlin, Dan 189
Magee, Michael 595, 899
Marrero, Manuel Brito 196
Marsh, William 96, 98, 154, 232, 275, 553, 694, 696
MAYHEW 80, 125, 155, 220
Maz881 149, 205, 581, 629, 630, 718, 850, 1014
McColl, Michael 981, 985
McCreary, Chris 24, 341
McVay, Gwyn 129, 545, 555, 936, 937, 943, 944, 1000
Minter, Peter 632, 826
Moriarty, Laura 204, 206, 443, 610, 679
Morpheal 30, 31, 69, 75, 76, 81, 107, 121, 122, 173, 175, 186, 211, 215, 216, 228, 241, 242, 269, 288, 292, 293, 302, 303, 311, 344, 345, 362, 364, 387, 408, 436, 467, 472, 476, 488, 531, 532, 547, 549, 551, 584, 587, 625, 626, 670, 673, 675, 680, 682, 690, 721, 722, 726, 727, 740, 793, 804, 819, 820, 839, 843, 847, 849, 856, 884, 917, 942, 963, 970, 977, 983, 988, 989, 1004, 1016, 1024, 1051
Muratori, Fred 1038, 1041
Nielsen, Aldon 280
Nowak, Mark 949
Nuyopoman 188, 439, 440, 790, 997, 998, 999, 1044
Oliver, Douglas 73
Orange, Tom 2, 35, 71, 164, 529, 974, 1033
Oren.izenberg 327
Orion, Dan Or 792, 964
Pecqueur, J. 854
Perloff, Marjorie 145
Perrella, F. W. 842
Piuma, Chris [Steve] 451
Pollet, Sylvester 4, 47, 58, 267, 279, 304, 582, 714, 822, 823, 939, 1003
Pound, Scott 54, 177, 462, 464, 855
Prejsnar, Mark 8, 49, 222, 229, 307, 363, 481, 491, 505, 507, 541, 543, 546, 548, 671, 672, 739, 741, 750, 766, 807, 808, 907, 911, 1007, 1040
Pritchett,Patrick 127, 142, 360, 540, 544, 552, 554, 628, 676, 745, 758, 763, 786, 834, 863, 948, 1050
Prod, William Burmeister 27, 67, 86, 141, 167, 310, 313, 333, 359, 365, 376, 702, 715, 764
Quartermain, Peter 32
R.drake 711
R.Gancie/C.Parcelli 226, 287, 319, 320, 324, 838, 867, 924
Reed, Marthe N. 1025, 1026
Reiner, Christopher 224, 315, 623
Review, Chicago 277, 1037
Roess, Christian 245, 246, 247, 248, 285, 335, 993
Roitman, Judy 425, 427, 470, 513, 562, 692, 749, 759, 812

Rothenberg, Jerome 95
Rsillima 460, 778, 897, 967, 990
Ruggles, Trace 271
Rush, Otis 160, 404
Russo, Linda 399, 400, 611, 612, 756, 810, 1009, 1032
Salerno, Mark 161
Schaefer, P.Standard 334, 379, 396, 422, 499, 504, 508, 576, 946
Schuchat, Simon J. 638, 932, 934
Schultz, Kathy Lou 456, 881
Schultz, Susan 156, 773
Scroggins, Mark W 622, 794, 828
Shemurph 502
Sherry, James 995
Simon, Schuchat 119, 340, 383
Simon/Piombino 63, 295, 824, 845, 853, 1015
Slaughter, William 182
Smith, Dale 521, 641, 664
Sondheim, A. Nikuko 297, 403, 453, 651, 654, 712
Sondheim, Alan J.J.N. 757, 811, 813, 882, 889, 930, 984, 991, 996
Sondheim, Alan Myouka 1, 33, 37, 209, 250
Spahr, Juliana 979, 1045
Spinelli, Martin 752
Stein, Chuck 371, 506
Stroffolino, Louis 103, 140, 147, 190, 227, 268, 332, 355, 374, 489, 496, 700, 814, 815, 953, 954, 1030
Sullivan, Gary 92, 99, 191, 192, 361, 497, 861
Sumner, Alaric 565, 862
Sutherland, Keston 104, 105, 336
Sweet, Erik 21, 22, 34, 194, 207, 251, 357, 385, 415, 418, 421, 424, 523, 524, 751
Taciuch, Dean 233
Toddbaron 70, 115, 116, 130, 180, 181, 294, 367, 368, 434, 435, 613, 614, 704, 761, 770, 774, 795, 796, 797, 800, 830, 844, 923, 926, 1018, 1019, 1020, 1023, 1056, 1057
Tosh 891, 1055
Tranter, John 736
Trbell 618, 619, 620, 776, 784, 876, 919, 982, 1001
Treadwell, Elizabeth 1013
Trevor, Karen And 609
Vidaver, Aaron 668, 888
Viegener, Matias 348
Vogel, Aviva 249, 559, 579, 580, 653
Wallace, Mark 940
Wang, Dorothy 174, 202
Weigl, Charles E. 296
Weiss, Mark 85, 87, 137, 237, 503, 578, 637, 725, 769, 783, 909, 1043, 1047, 1052
Wellman, Don 59, 235
Wessman, Ralph 152, 407
West, Bobbie 608, 616
Wheeler, Susan 458, 564, 896, 921, 969
Whyte, Ryan 124
Wolsak 123
Wright, Laura E. 210, 337, 384, 635, 1049, 1053
Zamsky, Robert 747
Zauhar, David 308
Zurawski, Magdalena 7, 193, 201

NAMES MENTIONED

Abbott, Steve 248
Abrams, Jen 134
Acker, Kathy 460, 498, 558, 619, 620, 762
Adams, John 11
Adams, Robert 476
Adorno, Theodor 172, 245, 247, 248, 627
Albon, George 165, 177, 576, 607, 861, 873
Alexander, Christopher W. 10, 23, 136, 169, 281, 283, 372, 685, 713, 715, 716, 756, 768
Alice, Mary 544
Allan, Edgar 790
Allison, Dorothy 152
Americans, Asian 134, 552, 555, 564, 571, 578, 690, 708, 752, 756, 764, 910, 914, 980, 988
Amis, Martin 877
Anania, Michael 83, 126, 686
Anderson, Beth 604
Anderson, Jon 880
Anderson, Laurie 40, 42, 535, 557
Anderson, Lori 591, 598
Andre, Michael 95, 1021
Andrews, Bruce 7, 25, 165, 177, 222, 414, 534, 576, 607, 809, 810, 814, 888
Apollinaire, Guillaume 361
Arbor, Ann 438, 730
Armantrout, Rae 26, 100, 217, 498, 915
Armitage, Simon 864, 867, 877, 894, 905
Arnold, Bob 11, 152, 898, 915
Ashbery, John 123, 646, 775, 877, 896, 915, 945
Ashton, Jennifer 48
Atkins, Tim 915
Atlanta, Mark P. 134
Atwood, Margaret 40, 42
Auden, W. H. 261, 464, 561, 709
Augustine, Jane 79, 85, 416, 554
Austin, Geer 521, 1044, 1047
Ayler, Albert 256, 280, 651
Baker, Mary 92, 123
Baraka, Amiri 223, 232, 235, 256, 280, 317, 332, 651, 915
Barker, Clive 746
Barnes, Diane 651
Baron, Todd 294, 435, 614, 704, 770, 794, 796, 830, 923, 926, 1013, 1019, 1020, 1023, 1056, 1057

Barthes, Roland 915
Basinski, Michael 165, 177
Bataille, George 677
Bates, Joe 901
Bateson, Gregory 326, 364
Baudelaire, Charles 40, 42, 67, 71, 217
Baudrillard, Jean 267, 268, 279
Baxter, Ted 176
Beachy, Stephen 230
Beatty, Warren 223, 232, 256, 280
Beckett, Samuel 859, 887, 889, 916, 922
Beckett, Tom 888
Bedient, Calvin 100
Belen, Ana 45
Belgum, Erik 861, 873
Bellamy, Dodie 165, 177, 443, 460, 492, 498, 514, 888, 915, 926, 936, 937
Belle, Cecelia 888
Benedikt, Michael 40, 42
Benjamin, Walter 152, 155, 183
Bennett, John M. 224, 576, 607, 623, 700, 760, 915
Benson, Steve 628, 888
Berger, John 248
Berger, Stephanie 248
Bergvall, Caroline 26
Berkeley, Michael 134, 165, 177, 338, 373, 375, 405, 604, 685, 690, 692, 715, 749, 764, 990, 995, 1013, 1050
Berlin, Irving 10, 539
Berman, Tosh 134, 891, 1055
Bernard, George 152, 638, 776, 888
Bernhard, Thomas 896
Bernstein, Emma 165, 177, 442, 534, 739, 810, 946, 953
Berrigan, Anselm 21, 521, 554
Berrigan, Eddie 207, 360, 363, 554, 832, 1027
Berrigan, Edmund 114, 554
Berrigan, Ted 206, 210, 222, 337, 384, 439, 635, 1027, 1049, 1053
Berryman, John 339, 921, 986
Billitteri, Carla 48
Bishop, Elizabeth 152
Blackburn, Paul 901
Blake, William 243, 245, 247, 248, 627, 758, 765, 865, 876
Blanchot, Maurice 145, 190, 191, 248
Blarnes, Eric 325
Blau, Rachel 26, 129, 360, 628, 758, 765
Bloom, Harold 753, 777
Bly, Robert 40, 42, 646
Boat, Drunken 267, 268, 279, 304, 329
Bolton, Ken 160, 404, 511, 543, 547
Bonney, Sean 100
Borges, Jorge Luis 544
Borkhuis, Charles 100
Bouldrey, Brian 230
Bourdieu, Pierre 334, 396, 401, 416, 499
Bowen, Kevin 393
Bowles, Jane 114
Bowles, Paul 519
BpNichol 52, 54, 55, 62, 66, 976
Brady, Andrea 152
Brainard, Joe 18
Brannen, Jonathan 165, 177
Brautigan, Richard 331, 337, 338, 346, 349
Braxton, Anthony 66
Brazil, David 189, 695
Brecht, Bertolt 336, 809, 814
Brodsky, Joseph 520, 533, 600, 638, 776
Bronk, William 92, 123, 898
Brook, James 152
Brossard, Nicole 26, 260, 888
Browne, Colin 679, 888
Browning, Robert 1025
Bruno, Franklin 92, 123, 161, 166, 224, 576, 607, 659, 947, 968
Bruns, Gerald 190, 191
Bryant, Elizabeth 773
Bunting, Basil 58, 562, 566, 583, 888, 910
Burke, Andrew 595, 600
Burke, Kenneth 595
Burket, Cheryl 1013
Burns, Avery 576, 607
Burns, Gerald 190, 191, 294, 888
Burroughs, William S. 92, 123, 519, 740, 762, 790
Buuck, David 915
Byrum, John 888
Bök, Christian 286
Cabri, Louis 888
Caesar, Little 441
Cage, John 213, 216, 221, 384, 758, 765, 915
Cameron, Sharon 888
Carey, Steve 888
Carll, Steve 14, 763, 766
Carlos, William 189
Carroll, Jon 522, 533, 549, 1044, 1047, 1048
Carson, Margaret 915
Catlin, Alan 535, 557
Catullus 51, 165, 177, 319
Celan, Paul 25, 539, 550, 628, 758, 765, 772, 786
Cha, Theresa Hak Kyung 662
Chadwick, Lynn 18, 100, 204, 219, 225, 315, 443, 1013
Chan, Charlie 662
Chaucer, Geoffrey 710
Cheek, Chris 927
Cherry, Don 627
Chester, Jeff 114
Child, Abigail 888
Chomsky, Noam 915

Claire, Paula 134, 888
Clare, John 134, 152
Clark, Cheryl 27, 34, 35, 48, 152
Clark, Emilie 610
Clark, Hilary 888
Clark, Jeff 27, 34, 67, 71, 92, 123
Clark, Thomas A. 888
Clark, Tom 521
Clarke, Jack 51, 165, 177
Clement, Catherine 79
Clifford, Pat 877
Clinton, Bill 671, 674, 1036
Clippinger, David W. 920
Cohen, David 100, 134, 531, 562, 566, 583, 590, 594, 602, 657, 705, 733, 744, 748
Cohen, Leonard 528, 530, 531, 538
Cole, Peter 126, 686, 913
Coleman, Victor 651
Collins, Phil 152
Collom, Jack 554, 758, 765
Columbus, Christopher 80, 82, 84, 87, 107, 113, 575, 760
Conner, Kyle 341
Conrad, Tony 66, 100, 993, 1001
Coolidge, Clark 218, 231, 238, 261, 739
Corman, Roger 221, 628, 898
Corso, Gregory 319
Cortez, Jayne 18, 100
Cory, Alex 915
Coyote, Peter 52
Crane, Lee 152, 156, 159, 395, 638, 776, 915
Crane, Margaret 114
Creeley, Bob 414
Creeley, Robert 5, 135, 158, 165, 177, 189, 346, 421, 423, 424, 438, 442, 447, 450, 534, 707, 719, 721, 915
Cronenberg, David 76, 149, 762
Crosby, Harry 915
Cruz, Victor 360
Culley, Peter 888
Curtis, Dana 100
Césaire, Aimé 507, 508, 1050
Dalrymple, Jane 554
Darragh, Tina 26
Darwin, Charles 827, 833
Davey, Frank 393, 888
Davidson, Daniel 888
Davidson, Ian 330, 915
Davidson, Michael 888
Davies, Alan 888
Davies, Kevin 93, 377, 888
Davis, Leslie 521
Day, Jean 668, 888
Delany, Samuel 915
Deleuze, Gilles 379, 382, 388, 627, 762, 915
Dennis, Michael 100, 224, 576, 607, 764
Derksen, Jeff 138, 805, 888
Derrida, Jacques 92, 123, 312, 339, 414, 631, 646, 655, 684, 915
Desmond, Rae 1015, 1029
Devaney, Thomas 482, 486, 717
Dewdney, Christopher 888
Dickinson, Emily 903, 906, 908, 984
Djuric, Dubravka 165, 177
Donne, John 79, 447
Doris, Stacy 26, 888, 959
Downing, Brandon 18, 100, 225
Doyle, Erica 78
Drucker, Johanna 861, 873, 959
Dugan, Alan 639
Duncan, Andrew 34, 236, 238, 261, 507, 508, 521, 707, 719, 721, 746, 861, 873, 913, 915
Duncan, Robert 3, 27, 165, 177, 285, 371, 486, 591, 598, 746, 941
Durgin, Patrick F. 328, 380, 381, 400, 448, 456, 493, 505, 518, 519, 607 Dylan, Bob 646
Eagleton, Terry 834
Edgar, Chris 1054
Edison, Thomas 261, 275, 843
Edson, Russell 40, 42
Edwards, Ken 927
Ehrenreich, Barbara 915
Eigner, Larry 189, 425, 427, 470, 513, 562, 566, 692, 749, 812, 813, 815
Einstein, Albert 69
Einzig, Barbara 888
Elena, Maria 600, 644
Eliot, Joe 463, 646, 915
Ellen, Mary 861, 873
Elliot, Joe 163
Ellis, Stephen 308, 886
Emerson, Claudia 845, 847
Emerson, Jocelyn 100
Emery, Chris 152
England, Amy 15, 83, 278, 565, 685, 862
Ernst, Max 663, 888
Eshleman, Clayton 18, 100, 200, 215, 485, 695, 888
Esther, Little 236, 404
Estrin, Jerry 888
Eugene, Brett 134, 187
Evans, Brett 521
Evans, Steve 640, 695
Evers, Larry 52
Everson, William 236
Ezergailis, Bob 30, 31, 69, 75, 76, 81, 121, 149, 173, 186, 215, 269, 292, 293, 436, 472, 488, 532, 680, 682, 690, 703, 843, 977
Farrell, Dan 165, 177, 888
Farrell, Michael 152
Faulkner, Andrew 651, 729, 740
Featherston, Dan 100, 696
Federman, Ray 762

Ferguson, Jesse 26, 165, 177, 888, 1036
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 360
Finley, Karen 1036
Fischbach, Chris 92, 123
Fischer, Norman 1027
Fisher, Allen 910
Fisher, Harrison 927
Fitterman, Robert 136, 164, 165, 168, 170, 177
Fitzgerald, Scott 134, 395
Fodaski, Elizabeth 168, 170
Foerster, Richard 48
Forrest, Lisa 593
Foucault, Michel 267, 268, 279, 317, 332, 655, 915
Foust, Graham 51, 165, 177, 286
France, Peter 248, 259, 278, 433, 576, 607, 655, 960
Frances, Mary 662
Fraser, Kathleen 26, 1003
Fraser, Simon 26, 48
Freedman, Lewis 31
Friedlander, Benjamin 144, 165, 177, 261, 286, 888
Friedman, Michael 554
Friedmann, Elizabeth 48
Frost, Corey 147, 217
Frost, Robert 526
Fuchs, Greg 24, 341
Fuller, Heather 45, 165, 177, 915
Fuller, William 888
Fussell, Paul 377
Gadd, Maxine 888
Gander, Forrest 508, 557, 579, 593, 611, 639, 653, 854, 872, 874, 877, 878, 880, 915, 936, 948, 990, 995
Garcia, Rodrigo 861, 873, 1036
Gerstler, Amy 18, 521
Gilbert, Roger 48, 96, 217, 528, 623, 700, 835, 861, 873, 888
Gillespie, William 134, 915
Ginsberg, Allan 211, 238, 261, 290, 319, 337, 362, 543, 545, 775
Ginsberg, Allen 279, 432, 540, 543, 547, 548, 646, 758, 765, 1022
Giorno, John 92, 123, 790
Gironda, Belle 591, 598
Giscombe, Cecil 915
Gizzi, Michael 100, 360, 663, 1050
Gizzi, Peter 165, 177, 663, 863, 1050
Gluck, Robert 230, 443
Golding, Alan 915
Goldman, Emma 221, 261
Goldman, Judith 243, 245, 247, 248, 261, 263, 627
Goodman, Amy 261
Goodman, Paul 231
Gould, Glenn 443
Graham, Jorie 249, 960
Graham, Susan 782, 960
Green, Paul 888
Greene, Jonathan 134
Greenwald, Ted 576, 607
Gregory, Jane 95, 888, 1005
Grenier, Bob 535, 557, 739
Griffin, Tim 135
Guattari, Félix 259
Guest, Barbara 18, 26, 225, 360, 607, 1050
Guitart, Jorge 165, 177
Guthrie, Camille 45
Hall, Donald 63
Hall, Phil 888
Halsey, Alan 888
Hamilton, Diana 134, 853
Hansen, Jefferson 134
Hardy, Thomas 533
Harris, Ken 152, 892, 893
Harryman, Carla 26, 888
Hartley, George 915
Hartman, Charles O. 261
Hass, Robert 832
Hawkins, Bobbie 758, 765
Healy, Randolph 78, 730, 910
Heath, Jennifer 99, 888
Hejinian, Lyn 26, 40, 42, 52, 54, 55, 62, 66, 888, 915, 959
Heller, Joseph 628, 915
Heller, Michael 360, 554, 622, 628, 676, 691
Helms, Jesse 72, 558, 619, 620, 1036
Hengst, Clifford 114
Henri, Charles 210
Herbert, George 79
Herman, Rachel 134, 866, 917, 992, 1004
Hewicker, Scott 114
Higgins, Dick 521
Highfill, Mitch 861, 873
Hill, Geoffrey 910
Hillman, Brenda 915
Hirshman, Jack 339
Hockney, David 330
Hofer, Jen 45
Hollander, Ben 550, 556, 913
Hollo, Anselm 554, 628, 758, 765, 834
Holman, Bob 188, 440, 752, 790, 998, 1029, 1044, 1047
Holzer, Jenny 558, 619, 620
Homer 111, 116, 316, 333
Hong, Maxine 979, 1014
Hood, Robin 694
Hoover, Edgar 312, 695, 915, 918, 920
Hoover, Paul 18, 615, 695, 973
House, White 36, 47, 169, 1036
Howard, Richard 134, 172, 203, 521, 888, 915, 1022

Howe, Susan 5, 26, 203, 739, 808
Howe, William R. 165, 177
Huang, Yunte 959
Hughes, Ted 134, 888, 896, 910, 1036
Huk, Romana 83
Hume, David 172
Hunter, Carrie 147
Husserl, Edmund 785
Iijima, Brenda 861, 873
Indiana, Robert 135
Inman, Peter 888
Ireland, Lauren 78, 263, 730
Irvine, James 409, 494
Israel, David R. 126, 292, 686
Israeli, Henry 292
Jackson, Jesse 48, 134, 213, 216, 221, 231, 354, 615
Jacob, Max 40, 42
Jacobs, Ken 48, 100
Jarnot, Lisa 544, 604, 668, 915
Jeanne, Sarah 888
Jeffery, Mark 100
Jenkins, Margaret 134
Jillway, Jill 6
Joans, Ted 174, 178, 180, 181, 182, 188, 202
Johnson, Samuel 544
Johnson, Thomas 1, 57, 58, 100, 217, 223, 405, 611, 639, 910
Johnston, Daniel 92, 100, 123, 1005
Johnston, Devin 277, 915, 1037
Jonas, Stephen 180, 898
Jones, Bob 61, 651, 899
Jones, Brian 519
Jones, David 320
Jordan, June 15, 17, 94, 103, 168, 170, 201, 203, 218, 316, 318, 322, 325, 328, 339, 490, 497, 550, 556, 561, 563, 600, 633, 638, 644, 735, 738, 773, 776, 809, 814, 816, 832, 883, 886, 915, 962
Joyce, James 40, 42
Joyce, Michael 842
Joyce, Trevor 730
Kafka, Franz 40, 42, 544
Kathryn, Mary 888
Katz, Alex 898
Kaufman, Andrew 521, 691, 736, 826, 835, 882
Kaufman, Bob 691
Kelleher, Mike 286
Keller, Lynn 468
Kelley, Mike 443, 521
Kelly, Paul 44, 105, 134, 422, 764, 888
Kelly, Robert 622
Kelsey, Karla 14
Kemp, Carolyn 704, 1018
Kennedy, John 257, 288
Kennedy, Kit 152, 288, 441, 852, 871
Kerouac, Jack 460, 498, 1022
Khlebnikov, Velimir 92, 123, 537, 539
Kiely, Aaron 272
Killian, Kevin 92, 114, 123, 152, 165, 177, 230, 428, 861, 873, 888, 915, 1020
Killian, Sean 114, 131, 230, 357, 443, 460, 498, 890, 915
Kim, Myung Mi 277
Kimball, Cynthia 165, 177, 197, 474, 572, 898, 1022, 1031
Kimball, Jack 898
King, Rodney 348
Kinnell, Galway 320, 512, 536, 646
Kinsella, John 100, 104
Kinsella, Thomas 94, 103
Klein, Naomi 915
Knott, Bill 400
Koch, Kenneth 834
Koller, Jim 822, 823
Kooser, Ted 171
Kostelanetz, Richard 92, 123
Kristeva, Julia 880
Kuenstler, Frank 25
Kunina, Julia 600, 644
Kyger, Joanne 346, 360
Lacan, Jacques 606
Lacy, Steve 852, 871, 897, 899, 913
Lamantia, Philip 236
Landis, Matthew 134
Largo, Michael 135
Larkin, Peter 888
Larkin, Philip 910
Laughlin, James 381
Lauterbach, Ann 26, 915
Lazer, Hank 165, 177, 628
Lease, Joseph 100
Lederer, Katy 110, 544, 554, 647, 915
Lehman, David 48, 100, 777
Leigh, Mike 152
Lennon, John 216, 221, 1015, 1029
Levertov, Denise 231, 238, 261
Levi, David 888
Levine, Jeffrey 412, 452
Levine, Philip 455
Levy, Andrew 51, 165, 177, 231, 888
Lew, Walter 979, 1014
Ley, Jennifer 842
Liu, Timothy 100
Lloyd, Warren 476
Locke, Duane 655
Locke, John 500, 532
Logan, John 651
London, Frank 105, 261, 278, 628, 758, 765, 905, 1001
Long, Paul 51, 56, 165, 177, 576, 607
Lopez, Richard 45, 842
Lorberer, Eric 99

Lorca, Federico García 217, 507, 508, 1022
Louise, Bobbie 152, 434, 758, 765, 772, 786
Mac Low, Jackson 231, 371, 915
Lowe, Thomas 792
Lowell, Amy 438
Luoma, Bill 205, 206, 210, 222, 581, 586, 629, 718, 773, 861, 873, 915, 936, 937, 1014
Lynch, David 67
Lynch, Jessica 112, 141
Macdonald, Travis 261
Mackey, Nate 695
Mackey, Nathaniel 18, 100, 695
Madison, James 134
Malcolm, Janet 134
Mallarmé, Stéphane 217, 335
Mandel, Tom 48, 360, 394, 539, 550, 888
Mandelstam, Osip 533, 539, 550, 556, 638, 776, 908
Manning, Nicholas 915
Marie, Julie 134
Marquis, Don 931
Marshall, Robert 152, 173, 888
Martin, Paul 861, 873
Martinez, Michael 708
Martone, John 1003
Marvin, Lee 383
Marx, Karl 95, 312, 1004
Maxwell, Susan 51, 165, 177, 628
Mayakovsky, Vladimir 507, 508, 638, 652, 776
Mayer, Bernadette 26, 317, 332, 544, 552, 646, 915, 1027
Mayer, Jane 238, 261, 552, 576, 607, 915, 936, 937
Mayhew, Jonathan 80, 84, 89, 125, 220
Mazer, Ben 877
McCaffery, Steve 57
Mead, Philip 41
Melnick, David 888
Melville, Pierre 414, 460, 498
Mengham, Rod 336
Meredith, William 12, 110, 165, 177, 888
Merrill, James 481, 499
Merrill, Stuart 758, 765
Merwin, W. S. 419, 438, 457, 464, 465
Messerli, Douglas 217, 219, 224, 623, 625, 663, 700
Meyer, Steven 48
Micheline, Jack 521
Middleton, Christopher 63
Middleton, Peter 63
Miki, Roy 855, 858
Miller, Cynthia 53
Miller, Jane 100
Miller, Lee 855, 858, 1036
Mills, Billy 730
Milne, Drew 105, 336, 993, 1001
Milton, John 79, 217, 626, 656, 758, 765, 794, 976
Miriam, Erica 134
Mitchell, Roger 100
Mitchell, Stephen 134, 152
Monk, Geraldine 26
Moore, Marianne 863
Moore, Nicholas 145, 190, 191, 863, 915
Morgan, Robin 65, 152, 979, 1014
Moriarity, Laura 1018
Morris, Philip 12
Morris, Tim 44, 915
Morrison, Rusty 915, 1013
Morton, Kathryn A. 231
Mossin, Andrew 576, 607
Moure, Erin 888
Moxley, Jennifer 604
Mulford, Wendy 26, 910
Mullen, Harryette 308, 360
Mura, David 979, 1014
Murphy, Michelle 204, 315, 1013
Murphy, Sheila 361, 380, 576, 607, 861, 873
Myles, Eileen 360
Nakell, Martin 224, 435, 704
Negri, Toni 248, 259, 283
Neilson, Melanie 26, 888
Nelson, Gale 888, 898
Neruda, Pablo 507, 508
Newlove, John 888
Newman, Denise 51, 165, 177
Newton, Keith 134, 364
Nguyen, Hoa 21, 521
Nichols, Travis 48
Nicholson, Andy 92, 123
Nicole, Anna 591, 598
Niedecker, Lorine 628
Nielson, Aldon 615
Nixon, Richard 237, 241, 253, 270, 1022
Nolan, John 48
Norman, Peter 248, 785, 951
Norris, Ken 888
Norton, John 414, 451, 491, 651, 920
Notley, Alice 25, 163, 360, 544, 554, 834, 890, 915, 936, 937
O'Hara, Frank 203, 1022
O'Sullivan, Maggie 26, 888
Oliver, Doug 73, 360, 544, 554, 758
Olson, Charles 133, 137, 158, 282, 317, 332, 447, 631, 646, 655, 792, 832, 915
Oppen, George 189, 507, 508, 628, 915
Opstedal, Kevin 521, 616, 617
Osman, Jena 165, 177, 888
Owen, Maureen 85, 360, 399, 400, 534, 544, 554, 611, 612, 639, 810, 834, 1009, 1039, 1043
Pacific, Asian 134, 662, 696, 792

Padgett, Ron 1022, 1031
Padin, Clemente 1028
Palmer, Michael 18, 100, 134, 189, 335, 888, 915, 936, 937
Patchen, Kenneth 40, 42, 684, 709, 915, 941
Pearson, Ted 51, 165, 177
Peck, John 83
Penberthy, Jenny 360, 628
Perchik, Simon 535, 557
Perelman, Bob 363, 888
Peret, Benjamin 217
Perry, David 66
Pessoa, Fernando 563
Peters, Mark 25, 169, 864, 867
Peters, Tom 554
Peyrafitte, Nicole 591, 598
Phillip, Andrew 100
Phillips, Malcolm 100, 224, 576, 607
Pinsky, Robert 83, 452, 1044, 1047, 1048, 1054
Piombino, Nick 63, 219, 295, 576, 607, 824, 845, 847, 853, 1015
Poe, Allan 790
Pollock, Jackson 637, 827, 833
Pound, Ezra 158, 476, 740, 865
Powell, Douglas 915
Presjnar, Mark 676, 691
Prevallet, Kristin 126, 521, 686
Price, Laurie 861, 873
Price, Michael 521
Prince, Richard 1027
Pritchett, Pat 640, 695
Prynne, J. H. 336, 910
Purdy, James 528, 775
Rabinowitz, Anna 152
Rakosi, Carl 360, 628, 676, 691, 745
Ramsdell, Heather 45
Randall, Karen 99, 110, 152
Rasula, Jed 915
Ratcliffe, Stephen 165, 177
Raven, Francis 758, 765
Raworth, Tom 888, 910
Reagan, Nancy 386, 671, 674
Regan, Max 863
Reich, Steve 66
Reid, Jamie 846, 851
Reuters, Boston 148, 187, 330, 571, 578, 584, 708, 987
Reverdy, Pierre 1022
Rexroth, Kenneth 1, 238, 261, 915
Reznikoff, Charles 915
Ribot, Marc 774
Rice, Doug 762
Rich, Adrienne 646
Ridge, Tom 585, 979, 1014
Riding, Laura 48, 438, 447
Riley, Denise 26, 910
Rimbaud, Dee 217, 317, 332
Roark, Randy 676, 691
Roberts, Gary 922
Roberts, Wendy 152, 289, 535, 557, 888, 1018
Robertson, Lisa 165, 177, 888
Robertson, Pat 521
Robinson, Elizabeth 165, 177
Rodefer, Stephen 346, 888
Rogers, Kimberley 134
Ronk, Martha 224
Rorty, Richard 134
Rosenberg, Jim 287, 319
Ross, Joe 204, 224, 315, 576, 607, 771
Rothenberg, Jerry 32, 85, 95, 238, 592, 687, 873, 904, 907, 915, 918, 920, 936
Rothschild, Douglas 773
Roubaud, Jacques 217
Saidenberg, Jocelyn 1013
Sala, Jerome 1015, 1029
Samuels, Lisa 48, 165, 177
Sandburg, Carl 231, 915
Sanders, Jay 236
Sappho 316, 333, 758, 765
Saroyan, William 1003
Sartre, Paul 312, 655
Sawyer, Chris 973
Scalapino, Leslie 26, 52, 54, 55, 62, 66, 114, 131, 165, 177, 224, 514, 534, 576, 607, 810
Schelling, Andrew 758, 765
Schmidt, Paul 152
Schneeman, George 1027
Schneider, Dan 443, 679
Schultz, Susan M. 156, 159, 773
Schuyler, James 48, 853
Schwartz, Judy 134, 544
Schwartz, Leonard 45, 915
Schwerner, Armand 622
Scobie, Stephen 775
Searle, John 655, 799, 820
Seidman, Hugh 622
Selby, Spencer 443, 704, 861, 873, 888
Semansky, Chris 792
Sexton, Anne 599
Shakespeare, William 79, 173, 330, 646, 729, 740, 954, 976
Shaw, Lytle 610
Shaw, Nancy 888
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 668
Sherwood, Kenneth 40, 42, 66, 152, 165, 177
Shurin, Aaron 18, 100, 165, 177, 225, 443, 576, 607, 1018
Sieburth, Richard 644
Sikelianos, Eleni 163, 360, 544, 554, 585, 758, 765, 834, 915
Silliman, Ron 40, 42, 140, 142, 147, 150, 153, 156, 159, 162, 165, 177, 261, 442, 460, 778, 888, 897, 899, 913, 967, 990, 995

Silverman, Oren 134
Simas, Joseph 888
Simic, Charles 40, 42, 648, 753, 754, 777
Simmons, Russell 1015, 1029
Simon, Greg 55, 63, 134, 139, 295, 353, 638, 652, 710, 723, 729, 782, 824, 833, 841, 845, 853, 864, 867, 877, 879, 885, 894, 895, 898, 905, 914, 921, 932, 934, 960, 1015, 1021
Sloan, Margaret 915
Smith, Marc 1029
Smith, Patricia 779, 780, 781, 783, 784, 788, 790, 1029
Smith, Rod 100, 460, 498, 888
Smith, Tracy K. 114, 571, 578, 610, 781, 783, 785, 792, 832, 1029
Smithson, Robert 447
Snyder, Gary 331, 337, 338, 434
Snyder, Rick 134, 238, 261, 346
Sorrentino, Christopher 217, 926
Spandrift, Jack 314, 477
Spicer, Jack 10, 23, 25, 32, 217, 236, 317, 332, 357, 428, 863, 915, 936, 937
Stanford, Frank 579, 593, 611, 639, 653
Stanford, Susan 152
Stanton, Rob 706
Starr, Kenneth 169
Stecopoulos, Eleni 286
Stein, Gertrude 40, 42, 48, 910
Stein, Suzanne 52, 54, 55, 62, 66, 667, 907, 915
Steiner, George 575
Stevens, Wallace 351, 526, 693, 720, 794, 796, 798, 824, 830, 831, 832, 915
Stewart, Susan 746, 853
Strang, Brian 26, 888
Strauss, Zoe 888
Swensen, Cole 18, 100, 315, 360, 863, 915
Tagliabue, John 557
Tan, Amy 979, 1014
Tate, James 954
Taylor, Cecil 66
Templeton, Fiona 26, 604, 888
Terry, Philip 152, 571, 578, 962, 1015, 1029
Texas, Irving 80, 82, 84, 87, 107, 117, 128, 312, 441, 521, 622, 662, 1036
Thayler, Carl 521
Theater, Poets 114, 130, 131
Thesen, Sharon 888
Thomas, Dylan 32, 48, 134, 187, 236, 435, 628, 843, 888
Thompson, Jon 147
Thorne, Tim 152
Tomlinson, Charles 828
Toscano, Rodrigo 18, 225
Towle, Tony 452, 898
Trevor, Jesse 609
Trinidad, David 100
Truitt, Sam 227
Trujillo, Dorothy 668, 888
Tsvetaeva, Marina 520
Tucker, Aaron 221
Turing, Alan 917
Turner, Ted 345
Tuttle, Bill 165, 177
Tyler, Mary 48
Tzvia, Rachel 165, 177
Updike, John 833
Upton, Lawrence 152
Valentine, Jean 145, 146, 152, 190, 191, 194, 1033
Vallejo, César 507, 508
Vangelisti, Paul 224, 576, 607, 623, 700
Vassilakis, Nico 576, 607
Verlaine, Paul 217
Vincent, Gregory 83
Virgil 100, 316, 333
Waldman, Anne 158, 544, 758, 765
Waldrop, Rosmarie 26, 40, 42
Walker, Alice 664
Wallace, Mike 1054
Wallace, Sara 833, 1036
Walsh, Catherine 910
Warhol, Andy 637
Warren, Jim 134
Warsh, Lewis 1027
Washington, Harold 61, 134, 168, 170, 187, 655, 708, 764, 852, 865, 871, 880, 915, 1044, 1047, 1048
Watson, Sasha 468
Watten, Barrett 48, 205, 206, 207, 210, 222, 238, 261, 443, 624, 808
Watts, Charles 888
Weber, Charles 499, 877
Weiner, Hannah 26, 114, 601, 645, 666, 669, 676, 678, 688, 691, 724, 888
Welch, Brian 718
Welch, Lew 337, 414, 434, 569, 582, 605, 630
Welish, Marjorie 26
Welsh, Lawrence 882, 987
Whalen, Philip 262, 263, 331, 337, 338, 346
Wharton, Samuel 764
Whitehead, Helen 377, 639, 755, 888
Whitman, Walt 150, 153, 162, 243, 245, 247, 248, 362, 512, 536, 627
Wiener, Hannah 693, 720, 866, 917
Wieners, John 691
Wilbur, Richard 562, 566, 583
Wilder, Kimberly 360
Wilkinson, John 336
Williams, Tony 189, 526, 915
Willis, Elizabeth 360, 863
Wilson, Emily 915
Wilson, Rob 979, 1014

Wilson, Steve 87
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 172, 1042
Wolsak, Melissa 123, 888
Wright, Laura E. 210, 337, 384, 635, 1049, 1053
Wyatt, Thomas 100, 447, 888, 941
Yamanaka, Ann 979, 983, 1014
Yau, John 576, 607, 667
Young, Dean 100
Young, Geoffrey 861, 873
Zanzotto, Andrea 217, 623, 700
Zukofsky, Louis 335, 367, 424, 438, 507, 508, 622, 628, 745, 747, 910, 915

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 209, 231, 248, 259, 365, 408, 521, 708, 741, 755, 979, 983, 993, 1001, 1006, 1007, 1014, 1036, 1045
Aesthetics 40, 42, 172, 221, 238, 261, 319, 326, 327, 335, 364, 390, 395, 448, 449, 535, 557, 558, 593, 619, 620, 667, 720, 725, 729, 740, 754, 762, 833, 877, 896, 901, 902, 907, 910, 914, 915, 919, 960
African American poetry 65, 907, 909, 1036
Anthologies 2, 45, 95, 125, 140, 142, 147, 217, 245, 247, 248, 261, 296, 304, 391, 401, 454, 550, 556, 592, 625, 627, 628, 644, 662, 663, 753, 754, 767, 769, 777, 806, 904, 907, 910, 915, 918, 920, 923, 1005, 1009, 1032, 1038, 1039, 1040, 1041, 1043, 1050
Appropriation 10, 69, 85, 119, 133, 134, 137, 170, 183, 328, 333, 433, 480, 534, 586, 587, 592, 628, 629, 649, 664, 705, 762, 779, 780, 781, 783, 784, 788, 790, 865, 951, 977, 978, 1036, 1045
Archives and libraries 6, 48, 51, 125, 165, 177, 209, 210, 217, 261, 283, 337, 338, 384, 435, 491, 515, 542, 551, 558, 619, 620, 635, 655, 656, 662, 685, 716, 735, 738, 787, 789, 832, 877, 915, 968, 1009, 1021, 1032, 1038, 1039, 1040, 1041, 1043, 1049, 1052, 1053, 1054
Asian American poetry 979, 1014
Autobiography 40, 42, 430, 443, 554, 915
Avant-garde 28, 95, 133, 137, 155, 238, 261, 379, 382, 388, 400, 402, 504, 507, 595, 641, 667
Beauty 37, 112, 154, 297, 316, 333, 473, 516, 628, 712, 834, 842
Biography 10, 48, 357, 449, 622, 707, 719, 745, 747, 794, 796, 798, 824, 891, 910, 915
Black Mountain 447, 938
Book announcements 12, 40, 78, 92, 123, 126, 165, 177, 217, 224, 593, 686, 771, 773, 910, 1027, 1050
Bookstores 38, 57, 58, 92, 123, 230, 480, 485, 575, 623, 651, 700, 721, 864, 867, 1022
Calls for submissions 46, 70, 1025
Capitalism 66, 126, 348, 362, 363, 373, 375, 376, 405, 422, 426, 456, 471, 481, 491, 499, 505, 511, 518, 528, 543, 547, 575, 638, 671, 686, 708, 776
Censorship 3, 5, 15, 752, 762, 1036
Cities 17, 426, 438, 483, 637, 662, 990, 995, 1022
Class 456, 960
Climate 951
Close reading 985, 1000, 1030
Collage and montage 5, 491, 519, 662
Conferences and festivals 48, 272, 352, 354, 361, 565, 695, 762, 779, 780, 781, 783, 784, 788, 842, 862, 959, 961, 979, 982, 1014
Copyright and permissions 6, 32, 587, 629, 649, 664, 930, 939
Craft 5, 369, 375, 407, 433, 474, 501, 503, 504, 507, 508, 509, 512, 536, 558, 595, 619, 620, 908
Creative writing pedagogy 1, 84, 330, 400, 478, 485, 488, 503, 509, 571, 578, 975, 1054
Dada 235, 317, 332
Deconstruction 631, 655, 783
Difficulty 6, 15, 69, 173, 289, 301, 461, 544, 619, 671, 839, 841
Disability 680, 757, 1008
Dreams 37, 126, 306, 310, 388, 396, 436, 438, 444, 575, 602, 686, 758, 765, 834, 1025, 1036, 1050
Ecology and ecopoetics 77, 81, 152, 405, 951
Editing 6, 164, 245, 248, 611, 627, 628, 639, 744, 748, 783, 822, 823
Electronic poetry and hypertext 6, 11, 25, 26, 92, 123, 136, 156, 159, 165, 177, 544, 601, 623, 700, 752, 765, 773, 787, 789, 940, 973, 1005
Elegy 746, 758, 765, 775, 846, 851, 863, 1022
Empire and imperialism 273, 278, 551, 1016
Epic 69, 165, 177, 289, 330, 878
Epistemology 1, 102, 121, 567, 575, 841, 915
Erasure 624
Ethics 172, 269, 273, 274, 287, 292, 300, 305, 307, 319, 324, 327, 335, 339, 691, 781, 788, 914
Experimental poetry 544
Fascism 59, 109, 655, 727, 729, 740, 752, 760
Feminism 568, 650
Film 5, 67, 72, 76, 88, 95, 96, 112, 141, 147, 149, 157, 158, 165, 167, 169, 175, 177, 261, 275, 276, 280, 341, 374, 441, 449, 460, 498, 539, 546, 550, 774, 1022, 1036

Fluxus 342
Formalism 327, 705, 755
Free speech 685, 752, 1036
Futurism 75, 119, 127, 146, 155, 175, 915, 1022
Gender 23, 47, 572, 688, 762, 907, 915, 921
Globalization 962
Grants and funding 48, 134, 139, 266, 363, 400, 423, 438, 447, 505, 560, 573, 575, 580, 639, 662, 695, 762, 778, 965, 1036
Haiku 68, 152, 544, 628, 758, 765, 898, 914
Hermeneutics 183
Humour and satire 15, 40, 42, 105, 263, 317, 332, 430, 443, 602, 655, 701, 834, 863, 881, 1050
Identity politics 655
Ideology 40, 42, 66, 94, 103, 121, 186, 362, 379, 382, 388, 396, 401, 499, 544, 690, 722, 752, 799, 820, 843
Imagism 103, 698, 710
Improvisation 66, 765, 913
Indigenous and Native poetics 721
Interviews 6, 58, 92, 123, 147, 208, 279, 374, 426, 521, 531, 534, 558, 562, 566, 583, 619, 620, 628, 651, 744, 748, 788, 802, 810, 817, 822, 823, 832, 842, 861, 873, 886, 913, 980, 993, 1001, 1005, 1036
Israel and Palestine 126, 292, 686
Jewish poetics 691, 863
Language poetry 238, 261, 592, 619, 620, 684, 792, 910, 927
Latino and Latin American poetry 245, 247, 248, 339, 627, 708, 959
Letters and correspondence 6, 48, 335, 622, 647, 896, 915
List moderation 544, 730, 740, 837, 1047
Little magazines 6, 21, 22, 126, 152, 160, 187, 217, 231, 236, 245, 247, 248, 267, 268, 279, 342, 352, 356, 380, 391, 402, 407, 419, 451, 458, 491, 504, 507, 515, 525, 534, 535, 542, 557, 575, 576, 595, 607, 623, 624, 625, 627, 647, 649, 662, 663, 664, 686, 691, 695, 700, 704, 710, 739, 771, 817, 822, 823, 846, 851, 859, 888, 915, 923, 993, 1001, 1013
Lyric poetry 5, 40, 42, 114, 131, 158, 291, 401, 512, 520, 536, 607, 628, 691, 758, 765, 1018, 1050
Marxism 10, 187, 238, 261, 267, 268, 279, 303, 448, 499, 960, 1004
Materiality of the text 876
Memory 43, 44, 66, 76, 88, 226, 259, 261, 275, 317, 332, 377, 427, 562, 566, 628, 708, 731, 742, 783, 813, 815, 832, 976, 993, 1001, 1025, 1036
MFA programs 366, 381, 409, 414, 419, 423, 424, 426, 432, 438, 447, 460, 473, 475, 478, 483, 485, 487, 488, 494, 503, 508, 509, 515, 518, 529, 573, 575, 637, 662, 938, 948, 949, 950, 952, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 961, 964, 965, 969, 972, 975, 979, 1014, 1044, 1047, 1048, 1054
Modernism 23, 238, 261, 312, 449, 514, 544, 575, 624, 631, 646, 655, 662, 896, 918, 920, 1021
Mourning and loss 6, 18, 25, 26, 66, 100, 148, 165, 177, 189, 319, 438, 498, 628, 656, 787, 789, 833, 834, 863, 962, 975, 976, 977
Multiculturalism 651
Music and poetry 10, 11, 12, 27, 32, 34, 48, 54, 55, 62, 65, 66, 73, 114, 126, 131, 181, 193, 203, 210, 217, 231, 258, 259, 289, 298, 301, 337, 348, 357, 359, 362, 367, 384, 392, 393, 394, 450, 519, 525, 528, 530, 531, 538, 539, 550, 554, 627, 628, 635, 641, 646, 651, 662, 671, 674, 686, 733, 739, 752, 758, 765, 771, 783, 790, 852, 863, 871, 877, 907, 913, 914, 1046, 1049, 1050, 1053
Nationalism 528
Nature 5, 6, 7, 16, 30, 40, 42, 75, 76, 77, 81, 95, 104, 137, 143, 152, 172, 183, 186, 228, 237, 253, 269, 270, 295, 299, 327, 335, 339, 348, 362, 377, 468, 508, 513, 646, 745, 758, 765, 962, 979, 985, 989, 1004, 1010, 1014
Negativity and refusal 317, 327, 332, 575, 624
Obituary and memorial 6, 214, 783
Objectivism 168, 170, 628, 676, 691, 792
Oulipo 317, 332
Performance and the poetry reading 5, 6, 63, 64, 198, 440, 515, 519, 535, 542, 604, 636, 662, 704, 790, 835, 929, 1015, 1029, 1044, 1047, 1050, 1055
Phenomenology 173, 651, 992, 1004
Philosophy 29, 30, 33, 69, 172, 183, 221, 248, 259, 278, 312, 325, 327, 339, 344, 433, 488, 594, 621, 631, 646, 648, 655, 662, 670, 721, 723, 725, 729, 740, 762, 775, 782, 847, 877, 879, 884, 951, 1010
Place and region 490, 497, 628, 671
Poet laureate 575
Poetics 1, 5, 6, 19, 22, 31, 41, 48, 57, 69, 94, 103, 158, 186, 209, 220, 223, 238, 240, 249, 261, 265, 270, 272, 274, 281, 285, 286, 287, 291, 292, 299, 300, 305, 306, 307, 308, 310, 319, 322, 327, 328, 335, 339, 348, 362, 377, 380, 382, 402, 414, 426, 448, 460, 480, 488, 506, 508, 512, 516, 519, 536, 544, 551, 554, 601, 605, 607, 623, 624, 628, 645, 646, 651, 666, 669, 676, 678, 683, 685, 688, 691, 700, 705, 724, 755, 762, 770, 794, 796, 830, 834, 863, 876, 879, 884, 885, 888, 915,

939, 959, 960, 982, 993, 1001, 1008, 1025, 1048
Politics and poetry 775
Post-structuralism 267, 268, 279
Postmodernism 23, 312, 575, 631, 646, 655, 918, 920
Print vs. digital 5, 28, 33, 51, 52, 77, 81, 85, 90, 106, 133, 165, 177, 217, 259, 361, 387, 397, 414, 419, 425, 428, 430, 436, 443, 447, 472, 498, 544, 568, 616, 617, 628, 650, 651, 696, 758, 867, 872, 874, 880, 886, 895, 907, 915, 959, 979, 983, 985, 1014
Prizes and awards 14, 68, 150, 400, 419, 448, 452, 498, 623, 651, 662, 674, 700, 732, 739, 763, 765, 766, 779, 780, 781, 783, 784, 788, 842, 911, 944, 979, 983, 986, 1006, 1007, 1014, 1045
Procedural and constraint writing 221, 233, 491, 618, 627
Prose poem 40, 42, 562, 566, 583, 1022
Prosody and meter 159
Psychoanalysis 63, 141, 677, 882
Queer poetics 10, 72, 230, 342, 651, 655, 775, 888, 907, 909, 925, 1036
Race and poetry 269, 274, 287, 299, 414, 581, 727, 760, 873, 907, 977, 978, 979, 983, 985, 993, 1001, 1014
Reading announcements 225, 623, 625, 663, 695, 700, 762, 771, 805, 915, 916
Religion and the sacred 32, 69, 80, 82, 84, 86, 87, 93, 95, 107, 117, 128, 164, 172, 208, 245, 246, 247, 248, 278, 285, 286, 335, 337, 346, 414, 467, 558, 619, 620, 627, 692, 721, 740, 749, 772, 786, 834, 835, 871, 876, 888, 975, 993, 1004
Representation 30, 66, 69, 261, 705, 740, 754, 762, 788, 843, 921, 949, 960, 977, 979, 983, 985, 1014, 1042
Reviewing and criticism 6, 9, 15, 18, 45, 46, 58, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 89, 121, 137, 144, 152, 158, 169, 261, 272, 277, 281, 312, 366, 369, 389, 401, 407, 410, 419, 437, 463, 477, 493, 505, 534, 562, 565, 566, 583, 590, 594, 600, 607, 611, 631, 639, 655, 657, 667, 691, 693, 699, 720, 729, 733, 740, 765, 767, 769, 771, 775, 788, 809, 810, 814, 862, 885, 915, 940, 954, 964, 973, 995, 1005, 1025, 1037
Romanticism 11, 103, 152
San Francisco Renaissance 428, 447, 915
Science 16, 30, 31, 54, 55, 62, 63, 66, 69, 76, 79, 81, 102, 121, 122, 136, 164, 172, 173, 183, 186, 252, 269, 273, 278, 324, 362, 377, 468, 567, 575, 621, 655, 670, 698, 705, 710, 723, 725, 729, 740, 755, 818, 827, 833, 839, 841, 856, 866, 879, 884, 885, 917, 924, 928, 960, 977, 980, 1004, 1010, 1050
Serial poem 380, 624, 694, 834, 863, 986
Small press publishing 6, 18, 19, 57, 66, 94, 100, 103, 114, 165, 177, 202, 225, 261, 286, 361, 380, 399, 419, 438, 521, 529, 604, 624, 632, 635, 642, 644, 647, 648, 660, 683, 685, 694, 696, 730, 736, 771, 826, 835, 842, 939, 1013, 1034, 1035, 1051, 1052, 1053
Software and code 54, 55, 62, 66, 193, 221, 266, 519, 752, 928, 942, 988
Sonnet 88, 173, 231, 646, 758, 765, 1022
Sound poetry 354, 565
Structuralism 66, 267, 268, 279
Subjectivity 6, 33, 69, 81, 121, 124, 158, 165, 177, 206, 245, 247, 259, 371, 458, 534, 627, 631, 655, 673, 691, 724, 762, 839, 885, 915, 940, 973, 989, 1005, 1050
Sublime 433, 544, 746, 834
Surrealism 27, 34, 35, 67, 69, 71, 112, 141, 317, 332, 335, 554, 842, 873
Terrorism 10, 238, 261, 348, 360, 690
The academy 1, 6, 10, 15, 40, 42, 48, 65, 78, 82, 83, 87, 88, 89, 134, 156, 159, 195, 199, 217, 295, 308, 312, 317, 332, 354, 357, 358, 363, 379, 381, 382, 388, 395, 399, 401, 402, 419, 424, 425, 427, 431, 438, 442, 447, 448, 456, 459, 460, 463, 466, 470, 477, 483, 484, 488, 498, 510, 513, 515, 529, 542, 551, 562, 566, 574, 575, 580, 602, 615, 619, 624, 655, 657, 662, 671, 684, 685, 692, 695, 707, 716, 719, 746, 749, 762, 764, 771, 773, 775, 806, 812, 813, 815, 842, 848, 865, 880, 910, 920, 938, 939, 940, 948, 950, 951, 952, 954, 955, 959, 961, 964, 972, 973, 976, 1005, 1009, 1016, 1028, 1032, 1033, 1035, 1036, 1038, 1039, 1040, 1041, 1043, 1047, 1049, 1051, 1052, 1053
The body 6, 23, 430, 443, 595, 758, 765, 862, 863, 989, 1013
The canon 133, 137, 353, 395, 655
The Gulf War 253, 264, 270, 281, 292, 711
The Holocaust 993, 1001
The internet 26, 41, 61, 86, 94, 103, 134, 209, 266, 274, 287, 626, 654, 656, 691, 708, 739, 793, 842, 868, 876, 881
The Iraq war 252, 274, 281, 287, 292, 324
The line 6, 189, 628, 752, 802
The listserv 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13, 28, 29, 38, 49, 57, 58, 79, 85, 89, 127, 133, 137, 158, 217, 223, 280, 314, 318, 341, 360, 373, 375, 405, 414, 460, 485, 498, 524, 540, 542, 548, 550, 556, 561, 592, 629, 649, 664, 680, 693, 705, 720, 729, 761, 765, 782, 792, 807, 846, 851, 864, 867, 885, 893, 907, 915, 932, 939, 940, 944,

949, 962, 973, 1002, 1005, 1007, 1032, 1040, 1049
Theatre 19, 22, 72, 85, 95, 114, 130, 131, 132, 148, 236, 255, 319, 414, 546, 740, 771, 834, 876, 1022, 1036
Torture and Abu Ghraib 226, 228, 237, 253, 270
Translation 1, 32, 45, 75, 91, 95, 189, 210, 217, 236, 259, 449, 456, 504, 507, 511, 533, 552, 576, 595, 607, 623, 633, 638, 644, 663, 670, 693, 698, 700, 710, 720, 729, 758, 765, 776, 839, 852, 861, 871, 873, 878, 898, 907, 915, 939, 959, 974, 976, 993, 1001, 1011, 1025
Vietnam 187, 228, 231, 237, 245, 247, 248, 253, 258, 270, 424, 441, 627
Visual and concrete poetry 214, 243, 245, 247, 248, 253, 270, 299, 528, 627, 771, 775, 928, 929
Visual art 48, 54, 55, 62, 66, 85, 133, 137, 227, 244, 245, 247, 248, 267, 268, 279, 282, 308, 330, 341, 348, 363, 436, 473, 475, 519, 558, 585, 610, 627, 628, 637, 646, 667, 671, 672, 709, 739, 743, 805, 863, 927, 994
Women's writing 15, 923

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 1057 in all.

1 JUN 1998

1. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
2. Tom Orange — Canada's encrypted poetry
3. david bromige — quo un/censored vadis?
4. sylvester pollet — limits
5. J. Kuszai — Re: Feedback
6. Charles Bernstein — Poetics List Welcome Message
7. Magdalena Zurawski — Re: Quo Vadis?
8. Mark Prejsnar — Re: limits
9. Charles Bernstein — Re: limits
10. Christopher W. Alexander — 12 tone Spicer versus dum da dum
11. Robert Kendall — Re: 12 tones for Anton's bones
12. Kenneth Goldsmith — F I D G E T : 3 E V E N T S
13. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Re: last call
14. Rachel Levitsky — Re: Naropa Readings
15. Jordan Davis — 2 books by Karen Van Dyck
16. R. Gancie — patterns of discovery
17. Jordan Davis — 2/5
18. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Nice review and NAW #16
19. Roger Farr — Re: submissions
20. Roger Farr — Re: submissions
21. Erik Sweet — Re: submissions
22. Erik Sweet — sorry for the con(fusion)
23. Christopher W. Alexander — Remarks on Alan's work (and stuff)
24. Chris McCreary — address query
25. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — New at the EPC / New author pages
26. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — EPC Author Page Call (June 1998)
27. William Burmeister Prod — Blownotes
28. Safdie Joseph — Re: Quo Wens?
29. Peter Ganick — re last call
30. morpheal — Re: philosophy all at sea? Or where empiricism and mythematics fail, and yell "i…
31. morpheal — Re: universal quantifier: The universe as poetic.

2 JUN 1998

32. Peter Quartermain — Kat Onoma
33. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Re: philosophy all at sea? Or where empiricism and mythematics fail,…
34. Erik Sweet — Re: Blownotes
35. Tom Orange — (no subject)
36. david bromige — re limits
37. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Talk Between Jennifer and Nikuko on Ytalk Ending in Anger
38. d.j. huppatz — ronaldjohnson
39. Anthony Lawrence — From Oz
40. Michel Delville — The American Prose Poem / shameless self-promotion
41. Anthony Lawrence — Details
42. Michel Delville — The American Prose Poem / shameless self-promotion
43. david bromige — like, weally weird
44. Rachel Loden — my wickit, wickit weird
45. Garrett Kalleberg — The 4th Friend
46. Scott Keeney — Call for submissions
47. Sylvester Pollet — Re: re limits

48. Charles Bernstein — Laura (Riding) Jackson Symposium
49. Mark Prejsnar — East is East
50. J. Kuszai — granted
51. J. Kuszai — New from Meow Press
52. charles alexander — Re: Repetition
53. J. Kuszai — my third of five
54. Scott Pound — Repetition
55. Simon DeDeo — Re: Repetition
56. lee ann brown — poet apt share/ ?
57. Roger Farr — Re: ronaldjohnson
58. Sylvester Pollet — Re: ronaldjohnson
59. Don Wellman — Re: my wickit, wickit weird
60. R. Gancie — a night light for Miss Saigon
61. Miekal And — Y2K
62. Maria Damon — Re: Repetition
63. Simon/Piombino — Feedback
64. Brent Long — The Second Coming
65. James C. Hall — Re: Repetition
66. Taylor Brady — Re: Repetition
67. William Burmeister Prod — vintage fin-de-siecle cheesecloth
68. Billy Little — what does not change?
69. morpheal — Re: philosophy all at sea? mythematicians and their daffynitions
70. toddbaron — Re: Call for submissions

3 JUN 1998

71. Tom Orange — decadence, fin-de-surrealisme
72. david bromige — moral climates
73. Douglas Oliver — Re: repetition
74. Anthony Lawrence — Poets' Audio Centre
75. morpheal — Re: a night light for Miss Saigon: [lights out and cyber symbiotics]
76. morpheal — Re: patterns of discovery [Cronenberg's "Scanners"]
77. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — sustainability redux...
78. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — The State We're Out/novel without words
79. Henry Gould — recommended criticism
80. MAYHEW — Imagination in danger from religious right
81. morpheal — Re: sustainability redux...[science friction]
82. David Kellogg — Re: Imagination in danger from religious right
83. Robert Archambeau — BOOK ANNOUNCEMENT
84. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Imagination in danger from religious right
85. Mark Weiss — Re: Rochelle Owens
86. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Imagination in danger from religious right
87. Mark Weiss — Re: Imagination in danger from religious right
88. Kristen Gallagher — Re: Repetition
89. David Kellogg — New York Review (fwd)
90. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: sustainability redux...[science friction]
91. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — russian translator
92. Gary Sullivan — Rain Taxi , Vol. 3 No. 2
93. david bromige — adoramus (re : Jordan's post)
94. Jordan Davis — "1/5"
95. Jerome Rothenberg — Re: Rochelle Owens
96. William Marsh — Re: moral climates
97. Anthony Lawrence — McFadden
98. William Marsh — Re: Rain Taxi , Vol. 3 No. 2
99. Gary Sullivan — Re: Rain Taxi , Vol. 3 No. 2
100. MAXINE CHERNOFF — NEW AMERICAN WRITING # V16
101. Rachel Loden — odoramus, Pater omnipotens

102. R. Gancie — the analyisis
103. louis stroffolino — soi disantra
104. Keston Sutherland — buy buy buy it's a steal get one of these roll up
105. Keston Sutherland — Alfred David Editions/Drew Milne (fwd)
106. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: BOOK ANNOUNCEMENT
107. morpheal — Re: Imagination in danger from religious right
108. david bromige — heroine worship
109. Rachel Loden — Re: heroine worship
110. k. lederer — Queries
111. Billy Little — Re: adoramus (re : Jordan's post)
112. Karen Kelley — Re: vintage fin-de-siecle cheesecloth

4 JUN 1998

113. david bromige — re : bombs opening like flowers
114. dbkk — Poets Theater in San Francisco, round 10
115. toddbaron — Re: adoramus (re : Jordan's post)
116. toddbaron — Re: adoramus (re : Jordan's post)
117. George Bowering — Re: Imagination in danger from religious right
118. George Bowering — Re: odoramus, Pater omnipotens
119. Schuchat Simon — Re: re : bombs opening like flowers
120. david bromige — george bowering's hot dogs
121. morpheal — Re: the analysis: [future historiography as an empirical science]
122. morpheal — Re: mythology: [sudden inspiration and jungle sense]
123. Wolsak — Re: Rain Taxi , Vol. 3 No. 2
124. Ryan Whyte — Re: the analysis: [future historiography as an empirical science]
125. MAYHEW — hyperbolic blurbs
126. Joel Felix — LVNGs! LVNGs!
127. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: re : bombs opening like flowers
128. Barbara Langhorst — Re: Imagination in danger: "the facts"
129. Gwyn McVay — seeking contact info
130. toddbaron — Re: Poets Theater in San Francisco, round 10
131. Safdie Joseph — Re: Poets Theater in San Francisco, round 10
132. david bromige — poets theater in s f
133. Peter Balestrieri — Rochelle Owens/Quo Vadis?
134. Stephen Cope — Re: Fwd: helping the NEA
135. Richard Long — Summer Issue of _The 2River View_
136. Christopher W. Alexander — Objects and Torque (not physics) query
137. Mark Weiss — Re: Rochelle Owens/Quo Vadis?
138. dbkk — Jeff Derksen directory assistance
139. Simon DeDeo — Re: Fwd: helping the NEA
140. louis stroffolino — APOLOGIES TO RON SILLIMAN
141. William Burmeister Prod — Re: vintage fin-de-siecle cheesecloth
142. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: APOLOGIES TO RON SILLIMAN
143. R. Gancie — the naivete of speaking
144. Michael Kelleher — a l y r i c m a i l e r 6
145. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Valentine de Saint-Point
146. Tom Beard — Re: re : bombs opening like flowers
147. louis stroffolino — Re: APOLOGIES TO RON SILLIMAN
148. joel lewis — f.y.i. spice
149. maz881 — Re: patterns of discovery [Cronenberg's "Scanners"]
150. david bromige — re : re : apologies to Ron Silliman
151. Henry Gould — Urinal Rationale
152. Ralph Wessman — fr17
153. charles alexander — Re: re : re : apologies to Ron Silliman
154. William Marsh — Re: vintage fin-de-siecle cheesecloth
155. MAYHEW — Marinetti

156. Susan Schultz — Re: re : re : apologies to Ron Silliman
157. Karen Kelley — Re: vintage fin-de-siecle cheesecloth
158. Safdie Joseph — Re: Quid Pro Quo Vadis
159. Rachel Loden — apologies to Ron Silliman

5 JUN 1998

160. Otis Rush — Otis Rush site difficulties
161. Mark Salerno — Re: help
162. George Bowering — Re: re : re : apologies to Ron Silliman
163. Marcella Durand — Poetry Project web site
164. Tom Orange — Objects and Torque (not physics) query
165. J. Kuszai — Meow Press Summer98 series Catalog (draft2)
166. J. Kuszai — help
167. William Burmeister Prod — Re: vintage fin-de-siecle cheesecloth
168. Jordan Davis — TORQUE / OBJECT
169. Christopher W. Alexander — nominative press collective announces...
170. Safdie Joseph — Re: TORQUE / OBJECT
171. Anthony Lawrence — Kooser's Email
172. R. Gancie — I found the mass! It was in my neutrinos the whole time!!
173. morpheal — Re: the analysis: [Bill's Sonnet and Our Interpretations of It]
174. Dorothy Wang — Query re Ted Joans
175. morpheal — Re: patterns of discovery [Cronenberg's "Scanners"]
176. k. lederer — Baxter/Amy Garrett

6 JUN 1998

177. Scott Pound — Re: Meow Press Summer98 series Catalog (draft2)
178. Maria Damon — Re: Query re Ted Joans
179. Barbara Henning — Yogapoetics
180. toddbaron — Re: Query re Ted Joans
181. toddbaron — Re: Query re Ted Joans
182. William Slaughter — Re: Query re Ted Joans
183. R. Gancie — phenomena, mediaton & the hermeneutical or the father, the son & the holy ghost
184. david bromige — re re bombs flowering
185. david bromige — p s to my recent posting

7 JUN 1998

186. morpheal — Re: phenomena, mediaton [of language] leads to a common error
187. R. Gancie — "and liars in public places"
188. nuyopoman — Ted Joans

8 JUN 1998

189. Dan Machlin — Brazil meets New York
190. louis stroffolino — Re: Valentine de Saint-Point
191. Gary Sullivan — Re: Valentine de Saint-Point
192. Gary Sullivan — WHOOPS
193. Magdalena Zurawski — New York Radio Stations
194. Erik Sweet — Re: Valentine de Saint-Point
195. David Kellogg — Re: WHOOPS
196. Manuel Brito Marrero — Help on anarchy
197. k. lederer — Queries: Gough; Kimball
198. Brent Long — Apokatastasis Reading Series, Providence
199. Maria Damon — Re: WHOOPS
200. R. Gancie — the 'seems'
201. Magdalena Zurawski — NYC Radio
202. Dorothy Wang — Ted Joans question answered
203. Jordan Davis — NY Radio

204. Laura Moriarty — AVEC reading in SF
205. maz881 — ass face
206. Laura Moriarty — Re: ass face
207. Erik Sweet — Re: ass face
208. Henry Gould — Re: ass face
209. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Distributed Image of the Internet in - r* and similar commands:
210. Laura E. Wright — Re: ass face
211. morpheal — Re: I found the mass !
212. Miekal And — Re: Yogapoetics

9 JUN 1998

213. Stephen Cope — Re: Anarchy
214. Miekal And — [Fwd: FLUXLIST: Dieter Roth]
215. morpheal — Re: the 'seems'
216. morpheal — Re: Anarchy
217. Douglas — new titles from Sun & Moon/Green Integer
218. Jordan Davis — anarchy having more to do with mutual aid than randomness
219. Douglas — moving toward my five: announcement of NAP and NAF awards
220. MAYHEW — set poetics nomail
221. J. Kuszai — Re: Anarchy
222. Mark Prejsnar — Re: ass face
223. Poetics List Administration — attachments
224. Christopher Reiner — L.A. Books Reading
225. MAXINE CHERNOFF — New American Writing Event
226. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?]
227. louis stroffolino — ----------
228. morpheal — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
229. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Anarchy
230. dbkk — Killian, Gluck, and more in SF
231. J. Kuszai — Re: Anarchy
232. William Marsh — Re: attachments / baraka
233. Dean Taciuch — Re: Anarchy
234. R. Gancie — sounds like the Grand Ol' A Priori to me
235. Don Wellman — Re: anarchy having more to do with mutual aid than randomness
236. Don Byrd — Re: Anarchy
237. Mark Weiss — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
238. Roger Farr — Re: Anarchy
239. Billy Little — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
240. ken|n|ing — Re: ass face
241. morpheal — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
242. morpheal — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
243. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: Anarchy
244. Marcella Durand — sublet abound
245. Christian Roess — Re: [Re: Anarchy]&Elizam Escobar
246. Christian Roess — Re: [Re: Anarchy
247. Christian Roess — Re: [Re: Anarchy]&Elizam Escobar
248. Christian Roess — Re: [Re: Anarchy]&Elizam Escobar
249. Aviva Vogel — Jorie Graham Essay
250. Alan Myouka Sondheim — Don't try this at home

10 JUN 1998

251. Erik Sweet — Re: Don't try this at home
252. KENT JOHNSON — Nerve gas
253. Jim Andrews — descending murderous net
254. George Bowering — Re: WHOOPS
255. George Bowering — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
256. George Bowering — Re: attachments / baraka

257. George Bowering — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
258. david bromige — Latenite jazz from Radio Bowering
259. d.j. huppatz — [Re: Anarchy] Negri
260. Marcella Durand — address-seeking
261. J. Kuszai — Re: Anarchy
262. daniel bouchard — Re: Anarchy
263. J. Kuszai — Re: Anarchy
264. daniel bouchard — Re: Anarchy
265. Henry — Re: Anarchy
266. Don Byrd — Re: Anarchy
267. sylvester pollet — Re: Anarchy
268. louis stroffolino — Re: DRUNKEN BOAT
269. morpheal — Re: Nerve gas
270. Brent Long — Re: descending murderous net
271. Trace Ruggles — Re: Yogapoetics
272. Michael Franco — FIRST ANNUAL BOSTON ALTERNATIVE POETRY CONFERENCE
273. KENT JOHNSON — Re: Nerve gas
274. daniel bouchard — What it all has to do with poetry
275. William Marsh — Re: Anarchy
276. daniel bouchard — Re: Anarchy
277. Chicago Review — address inquiry
278. R. Gancie — Is the appeal of feedback its inherent 'progressivism' and implied willingness ...
279. sylvester pollet — Re: DRUNKEN BOAT
280. Aldon Nielsen — arse farce
281. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: What it all has to do with poetry
282. Charles Alexander — Re: Anarchy
283. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: [Re: Anarchy] Negri
284. Billy Little — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
285. Christian Roess — Re: post from Daniel Bouchard
286. Michael Kelleher — place(less Place)
287. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: What it all has to do with poetry
288. morpheal — Re: [Fwd: MEDIA FRENZY?] No doubt not that simple.
289. Safdie Joseph — Re: Marx and Myth
290. KENT JOHNSON — Re: What it all has to do with poetry
291. Rachel Loden — WHOOPS
292. morpheal — Re: What it all has to do with poetry
293. morpheal — Re: What it all has to do with poetry
294. toddbaron — Re: gerald burns
295. Simon/Piombino — Mac Low on Anarchy

11 JUN 1998

296. Charles E. Weigl — Re: Anarchy/drunken boat
297. A. Nikuko Sondheim — Auto-Echo Poem of Jennifer and Nikuko
298. George Bowering — Re: Radio Bowering
299. Jim Andrews — Re: POETICS Digest - 9 Jun 1998 to 10 Jun 1998
300. Anthony Lawrence — Re: What it all has to do with poetry
301. hen — Re: Marx and Myth
302. morpheal — Re: Nerve gas
303. morpheal — Re: Marx and Myth
304. sylvester pollet — Re: Anarchy/drunken boat
305. Brent Long — In response to Daniel B.'s posting
306. daniel bouchard — Re: In response
307. Mark Prejsnar — Christy Mathewson memorial poetix post
308. David Zauhar — Harryette Mullen in Chicago
309. Billy Little — will you still need me
310. William Burmeister Prod — Re: In response

311. morpheal — Re: will you still need me
312. Safdie Joseph — Re: Marx and Myth and History and Poetry
313. William Burmeister Prod — Que nerve he has!
314. Henry G — whutsa...ya talkin t'me??
315. Christopher Reiner — SF Reading (change)
316. Jordan Davis — "I know men [sic] for whom everything matters"
317. Peter Baker — Re: Anarchy
318. Henry — Re: "I know men [sic] for whom everything matters"
319. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: In response to Daniel B.'s posting
320. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — nerve gas
321. henry gould — a six-pack of nerves
322. Jordan Davis — Why We Don't Live In Mauritania
323. Brent Long — Re: a six-pack of nerves
324. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Nerve gas
325. henry g — Re: Why We Don't Live In Mauritania
326. R. Gancie — the behavior of falling bodies
327. oren.izenberg — Re: Marx and Myth and History and Poetry
328. ken|n|ing — Re: Why We Don't Live In Mauritania
329. Roger Farr — Re: Drunken Boat
330. joel lewis — f.y.i.
331. David Golumbia — mla reference (fwd)
332. louis stroffolino — Re: Anarchy
333. William Burmeister Prod — Re: "I know men [sic] for whom everything matters"
334. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: "I know men [sic] for whom everything matters"
335. Christian Roess — Re: Marx and Myth and History and Poetry
336. Keston Sutherland — Re: Anarchy
337. Laura E. Wright — Re: mla reference (fwd)
338. s. kaipa — Re: mla reference (fwd)
339. Safdie Joseph — The Eternal Question (warning: a bit long)
340. Schuchat Simon — Re: Anarchy
341. Chris McCreary — Highwire reading (Philadelphia)
342. Miekal And — Re: Anarchy
343. k. lederer — Re: Anarchy
344. morpheal — Re: Marx and Myth and History and Poetry
345. morpheal — Re: Que nerve he has!

12 JUN 1998

346. Billy Little — Re: mla reference (fwd)
347. Anthony Lawrence — Re: Anarchy
348. Matias Viegener — doxa, sophia, and paranoid poeto-politics
349. Anthony Lawrence — Richard Brautigan
350. Anthony Lawrence — Re: Anarchy
351. Anthony Lawrence — Re: Anarchy
352. Anthony Lawrence — Re: Anarchy
353. henry g — FW: Shakespearian Insult Kit
354. Douglas Barbour — Mac Low on Anarchy
355. louis stroffolino — Re: Anarchy
356. Henry G — Re: Anarchy
357. Erik Sweet — Money and Poetry
358. Douglas Barbour — Re: Radio Bowering
359. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Money and Poetry
360. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: doxa, sophia, and paranoid poeto-politics
361. Gary Sullivan — Open Fan Letter to Sheila E. Murphy
362. morpheal — Re: doxa, sophia, and paranoid poeto-politics [Sophia becomes an exotic dancer, ...
363. Mark Prejsnar — the economics of tambourine lives

364. morpheal — Re: the behavior of falling bodies [follows an alchemy of gunpowder]
365. William Burmeister Prod — Re: "I know men [sic] for whom everything matters"
366. k. lederer — Magazines that pay
367. toddbaron — Re: "I know men [sic] for whom everything matters"
368. toddbaron — Re: mla reference (fwd)
369. Henry G — po squared
370. Billy Little — Re: doxa, sophia, and paranoid debt obsession
371. Chuck Stein — money and anarchy
372. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: Radio Bowering
373. s. kaipa — Money in Poetry
374. louis stroffolino — seedy underbelly
375. Brent Long — Re: Money in Poetry
376. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Money in Poetry
377. R. Gancie — "Where does the skin end?"---A.N. Whitehead
378. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Looking for the address
379. P.Standard Schaefer — Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
380. ken|n|ing — Re: Open Fan Letter to Sheila E. Murphy
381. ken|n|ing — Re: Magazines that pay
382. ken|n|ing — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
383. Schuchat Simon — Re: Magazines that pay
384. Laura E. Wright — Re: FW: Shakespearian Insult Kit
385. Erik Sweet — Re: Magazines that pay
386. George Bowering — Re: Anarchy
387. morpheal — Re: the economics of tambourine lives
388. henry gould — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
389. charles alexander — Re: Magazines that pay
390. k. lederer — Re: Magazines that pay
391. George Bowering — Re: Anarchy
392. George Bowering — Re: Money and Poetry
393. George Bowering — Re: Radio Bowering
394. Rachel Loden — bozos on this bus
395. k. lederer — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
396. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
397. charles alexander — Re: the economics of tambourine lives
398. charles alexander — Re: Magazines that pay
399. linda russo — Re: Magazines that pay
400. linda russo — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
401. Jacques Debrot — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
402. Karen Kelley — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
403. A. Nikuko Sondheim — Down and Up
404. Otis Rush — Re: Looking for the address

13 JUN 1998

405. d.j. huppatz — Re: Money in Poetry
406. david bromige — money & poetry (GB division)
407. Ralph Wessman — Re: Anarchy
408. morpheal — Re: "I know men [sic] for whom everything matters"
409. Carrie Etter — Poetry MFAs, money
410. Anthony Lawrence — Re: Magazines that pay
411. Anthony Lawrence — Pam Brown's Address
412. Anthony Lawrence — The study of poetry
413. Anthony Lawrence — Re: Anarchy
414. J. Kuszai — poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath
415. Erik Sweet — Writing as occupation...
416. Henry G — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
417. Miekal And — Re: Anarchy

418. Erik Sweet — Re: poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath
419. k. lederer — Re: Magazines that pay
420. Henry G — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
421. Erik Sweet — Re: Magazines that pay
422. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
423. k. lederer — Re: Magazines that pay
424. Erik Sweet — Re: Magazines that pay
425. Judy Roitman — Re: the economics of tambourine lives
426. Ike Kim — Re: poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath
427. Judy Roitman — car/rear
428. KENT JOHNSON — Re: poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath
429. groberts — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
430. dbkk — non 3 intro
431. Douglas Barbour — Re: Anarchy
432. Karen Kelley — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
433. R. Gancie — Wuz Pound's Kung mediated by the Physiocrats?
434. toddbaron — $
435. toddbaron — celebration
436. morpheal — Re: poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath [sometimes near exhaustion]
437. joel lewis — f.y.i.
438. J. Kuszai — Cowboys 32 - Mighty Ducks 2
439. nuyopoman — Money and Poetry
440. nuyopoman — Radio Poetry
441. Henry — Re: Cowboys 32 - Mighty Ducks 2
442. Henry — Re: Cowboys 32 - Mighty Ducks 2
443. Laura Moriarty — Re: non 3 intro
444. Henry Gould — on the New Amer. Poetry
445. Rachel Loden — money and poetry, poetry and sorrow
446. r. drake — Re: poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath
447. Don Byrd — Re: Cowboys 32 - Mighty Ducks 2
448. ken|n|ing — Re: Magazines that pay
449. michael corbin — Re: Cowboys 32 - Mighty Ducks 2
450. J. Kuszai — 19 minutes til the digest crew

14 JUN 1998

451. Chris [Steve] Piuma — Re: poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath
452. joel lewis — Re: Money in Poetry, Poetry in Money
453. A. Nikuko Sondheim — what despair tastes like and poets and money and teaching stuff
454. George Bowering — Re: the economics of tambourine lives
455. George Bowering — Re: money & poetry
456. Kathy Lou Schultz — Thoughts on Money and Poetry
457. Anthony Lawrence — Re: Cowboys 32 - Mighty Ducks 2
458. Susan Wheeler — $
459. Maria Damon — Re: the economics of tambourine lives
460. rsillima — Poultry & $$ (Don't count your chickens...)
461. Charles Alexander — Re: Poetry saved my life
462. Scott Pound — Re: Anarchy
463. Don Byrd — The profession of poetry
464. Scott Pound — Re: Cowboys 32 - Mighty Ducks 2
465. k. lederer — Re: Cowboys 32 - Mighty Ducks 2
466. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — poetry, $$$, gossip...
467. morpheal — Re: Poultry & $$ [Monetary Examination]
468. R. Gancie — the meat machine
469. david bromige — poetry/money/careers
470. Judy Roitman — Re: travelling
471. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski — Poetry for money; money for what

472. morpheal — Re: poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath
473. Dan or Orion Raphael Dlugonski — money for poetry, & a poem that was paid for
474. J Kimball — Messaging
475. Charles Alexander — Re: Art, Poetry, context
476. morpheal — Re: Wuz Pound's Kung mediated by the Physiocrats? [the milennialist Mihites in P...
477. Henry Gould — thin dime poetry

15 JUN 1998

478. Carrie Etter — degrees and money (and poetry)
479. CD — Money! Money! Money!
480. Charles Alexander — Printer Training Program position open
481. Mark Prejsnar — shapeshifter uncapitalized
482. MJ Devaney — Re: poetry/money/careers
483. Douglas Barbour — Re: anarchy (& bp)
484. Douglas Barbour — Re: a bit more on bp
485. Karen Kelley — Re: degrees and money (and poetry)
486. Pierre Joris — Re: poetry/money/careers
487. Maria Damon — Re: poetry/money/careers
488. morpheal — Re: degrees and money (and poetry)[degrees do not a poet make]
489. louis stroffolino — Re: poetry/money/careers
490. Jordan Davis — Good, there are no lions in the street
491. Mark Prejsnar — Re: poetry is a tracheotomy for the soul's breath
492. david bromige — advanced degrees in both country AND western
493. ken|n|ing — Re: shapeshifter uncapitalized
494. s. kaipa — Re: Poetry MFAs, money
495. david bromige — ps to Double Academy of c.w.
496. louis stroffolino — Re: ps to Double Academy of c.w.
497. Gary Sullivan — I AM A BIG FAT LIAR
498. dbkk — Re: Poultry & $$ (Don't count your chickens...)
499. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: shapeshifter uncapitalized
500. R. Gancie — an Enlightenment intuition spurned
501. Henry Gould — po buzzers
502. shemurph — Re: degrees and money (and poetry)
503. Mark Weiss — Re: Poetry MFAs, money
504. P.Standard Schaefer — where's the poetry
505. Mark Prejsnar — Re: shapeshifter uncapitalized
506. Chuck Stein — money
507. Mark Prejsnar — the poetical is the political
508. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: the poetical is the political
509. s. kaipa — Re: Poetry MFAs, money
510. George Bowering — Re: The Academy
511. Tom Beard — Selling out & a community of poets
512. Henry Gould — Skivvues Lesson
513. Judy Roitman — Re: Selling out & a community of poets
514. michael corbin — Re: Good, there are no lions in the street
515. Carrie Etter — poetry in Normal
516. henry — Re: where's the poetry
517. Carrie Etter — Anchorage?
518. ken|n|ing — Re: shapeshifter uncapitalized
519. ken|n|ing — Anomalous Records - FYI (fwd)
520. Henry G — 1 more on voice
521. Dale Smith — For Sale
522. Jordan Davis — voke

16 JUN 1998

523. Erik Sweet — Re: voke

524. Erik Sweet — ooops ignore
525. BETSY ANDREWS — Re: Money and Poetry
526. CD — pre-rejected
527. david bromige — oops ignore
528. Jim Andrews — an institutionalized avant garde is
529. Tom Orange — shapeshift normal poetry money
530. George Bowering — Re: an institutionalized avant garde is
531. morpheal — Re: an institutionalized avant garde is
532. morpheal — Re: an Enlightenment intuition spurned [pontification in response]
533. Henry — Re: voke
534. Charles Alexander — Re: "How Poignant that sounds . . .
535. David Baratier — Re: teachers
536. Maria Damon — Re: Skivvues Lesson
537. Jordan Davis — ah yeah thot so
538. Maria Damon — Re: an institutionalized avant garde is
539. hen — Re: ah yeah thot so
540. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Poets in advertizing
541. Mark Prejsnar — Re: the poetical is the political
542. s. kaipa — Re: poetry in Normal
543. Mark Prejsnar — Poets in advertizing
544. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Poetry saved my life
545. Gwyn McVay — Re: Poets in advertizing
546. Mark Prejsnar — millionaire poets
547. morpheal — Re: Poets in advertizing
548. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Poets in advertizing
549. morpheal — Re: voke
550. Jordan Davis — surge on
551. morpheal — Re: poetry in Normal
552. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Poetry saved my life
553. William Marsh — Re: shapeshift normal poetry money
554. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: The Fabulous Berrigan Boyz
555. Gwyn McVay — Re: Poetry saved my life
556. Henry — Re: surge on
557. Brent Long — Re: teachers
558. Jacques Debrot — Re: Poetry, politics, context
559. Aviva Vogel — What Price Iowa?
560. s. kaipa — Re: What Price Iowa?
561. daniel bouchard — Re: surge on
562. Judy Roitman — Re: Cohen
563. Henry — Re: surge on
564. Susan Wheeler — Re: Poetry saved my life
565. Alaric Sumner — review of The Unspeakable Rooms, Cleveland Ohio
566. Brent Long — Re: Cohen
567. R. Gancie — Oh Poet! Get a Job!
568. dbkk — Re: Good, there are no lions in the street
569. s. kaipa — Ad campaigns and poets galore (who score)
570. joel lewis — f.y.i.
571. joel lewis — "holy william burroughs, batman!" (f.y.i.)
572. John Kimball — Complete the following
573. k. lederer — Re: What Price Iowa?
574. David Kellogg — Re: "holy william burroughs, batman!" (f.y.i.)
575. David Baratier — Re: Poultry & $$ (Don't count your chickens...)
576. P.Standard Schaefer — Money, poetry, magazines
577. Pam Brown — Re: Looking for the address
578. Mark Weiss — Re: "holy william burroughs, batman!" (f.y.i.)
579. Aviva Vogel — Frank Stanford/Forrest Gander

580. Aviva Vogel — Re: What Price Iowa?
581. maz881 — obsesh
582. sylvester pollet — Re: Ad campaigns and poets galore (who score)
583. Anthony Lawrence — Cohen
584. morpheal — Re: "holy william burroughs, batman!" (f.y.i.)
585. Marcella Durand — various topics
586. Karen Kelley — Oops & Obsession

17 JUN 1998

587. morpheal — Re: Oops & Obsession
588. Jim Andrews — an institutionalized avant garde
589. George Bowering — Re: an institutionalized avant garde is
590. George Bowering — Re: Cohen
591. Pierre Joris — "Caput, Vox, Grotto"
592. Jacques Debrot — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
593. Brent Long — Re: Frank Stanford/Forrest Gander
594. Brent Long — Re: Cohen
595. Michael Magee — Re: where's the poetry
596. Maria Damon — Re: an institutionalized avant garde
597. Maria Damon — Re: an institutionalized avant garde is
598. Maria Damon — Re: "Caput, Vox, Grotto"
599. Brent Long — Sexton
600. henry g — Re: where's the poetry
601. Charles Bernstein — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
602. Douglas Barbour — Re: Cohen
603. Jacques Debrot — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
604. jarnot — Rempress publications
605. Safdie Joseph — Re: Ad campaigns and poets galore (who score)
606. david bromige — giving up frenchified sex for good
607. ken|n|ing — Re: Money, poetry, magazines
608. Bobbie West — Re: pre-rejected
609. Karen and Trevor — monthly welcome
610. Laura Moriarty — Re: obsesh
611. linda russo — Re: Stanford/Wright/Gander
612. linda russo — Peter Quartermain
613. toddbaron — Re: Ad campaigns and poets galore (who score)
614. toddbaron — Re: Money, poetry, magazines
615. Annie Finch — for neilson, hoover, maclow, wallace
616. Bobbie West — Mike & Dale's 4 sale and Rhizome
617. Brent Long — Re: Mike & Dale's 4 sale and Rhizome
618. trbell — Re: Anarchy
619. trbell — Re: Art, Poetry, context
620. trbell — Re: Poetry art contest
621. R. Gancie — raw numbers
622. Mark W Scroggins — Louis Zukofsky
623. Christopher Reiner — Knife and Fork reading
624. dbkk — B. Watten ends SPT season
625. morpheal — Re: Knife and Fork reading
626. morpheal — Re: an institutionalized avant garde
627. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: [Re: Anarchy]&Elizam Escobar
628. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Objectivists at Naropa (long post)
629. maz881 — Re: Oops & Obsession
630. maz881 — Re: Ad campaigns and poets galore (who score)
631. Safdie Joseph — Re: where's the poetry? (Don't ask Derrida)
632. Peter Minter — chapbook
633. Jordan Davis — poetry makes nothing [that is not there and the nothing that is] happy

634. David Baratier — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
635. Laura E. Wright — Re: chapbook
636. izak — poetry readings...
637. Mark Weiss — Re: Art, Poetry, context
638. Simon J. Schuchat — Re: poetry makes nothing [that is not there and the nothing that is] ...
639. Brent Long — Re: Stanford/Wright/Gander
640. david bromige — reading reports
641. Dale Smith — Smell of Money
642. charles alexander — Re: chapbook
643. Henry — Re: Art, Poetry, context
644. Henry — Re: poetry makes nothing [that is not there and the nothing that is] happy
645. Karen Kelley — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
646. Henry — Re: where's the poetry? (Don't ask Derrida)
647. k. lederer — Katy Lederer/Change of address
648. Brian N Clements — Re: chapbook
649. david bromige — Misappropriation from the List

18 JUN 1998

650. michael corbin — Re: Good, there are no lions in the street
651. A. Nikuko Sondheim — this and that
652. Billy Little — Re: poetry makes nothing [that is not there and the nothing that is] ...
653. Aviva Vogel — Re: Frank Stanford/Forrest Gander
654. A. Nikuko Sondheim — Forwarded mail from our linux box -
655. Robert Corbett — Re: where's the poetry? (Don't ask Derrida)
656. Jim Andrews — an institutionalized avant garde
657. George Bowering — Re: Cohen
658. George Bowering — Re: MacEwen
659. George Bowering — Re: an institutionalized avant garde is
660. George Bowering — Re: chapbook
661. Miekal And — Re: this and that
662. Bob Grotjohn — Re: poetry readings...
663. Douglas — Re: Knife and Fork reading
664. Dale Smith — Re: Misappropriation from the List
665. Christopher Bijalba — some hundred later
666. Maria Damon — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
667. Jacques Debrot — Re: Art, Poetry, context
668. Aaron Vidaver — Two June Kootenay School Readings in Vancouver
669. charles alexander — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
670. morpheal — Re: raw numbers
671. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Art, Poetry, context
672. Mark Prejsnar — Ah those rich artists!!
673. morpheal — Re: MacEwen [some thoughts about artistic "popularity"]
674. charles alexander — Re: Art, Poetry, context
675. morpheal — Re: an institutionalized avant garde is
676. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
677. dbkk — Re: giving up frenchified sex for good
678. charles alexander — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
679. Laura Moriarty — new non
680. morpheal — Re: Ah those rich artists!!
681. Peter Balestrieri — "Cultural Workers"
682. morpheal — Re: Ah those rich artists!!
683. Michael Coffey — chapbook -Reply
684. Billy Little — Re: where's the poetry? (Don't ask Derrida)
685. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: Judge Backs FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadca
686. David Clippinger — Re: LVNGs! LVNGs!
687. Bob Grumman — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_

688. Maria Damon — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
689. Maria Damon — Re: "Cultural Workers"
690. morpheal — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for more media regulation to pr...
691. Maria Damon — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
692. Judy Roitman — Re: Judge Backs FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadca
693. Henry G — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
694. William Marsh — Re: chapbook
695. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: reading reports
696. William Marsh — chapbook (by Dan Featherston)
697. david bromige — eddress for quartermain
698. ShaunAnne Tangney Humanities 8-13-1997 — Re: raw numbers
699. Brent Long — _Book of Mercy_ /more recent work
700. louis stroffolino — Re: Knife and Fork reading
701. david bromige — re : desire
702. William Burmeister Prod — Re: "Cultural Workers"
703. daniel bouchard — Ah ho s a
704. toddbaron — Re: poetry readings...
705. R. Gancie — "Presumably" "...Not Endless..." or 'discrete' by fiat
706. lee ann brown — NYC Summer Sublets
707. Douglas Barbour — Re: Gwen MacEwen
708. joel lewis — everyday life in the capitalist universe (f.y.i.)
709. David Baratier — Re: Ah those rich artists!!
710. Simon DeDeo — Re: raw numbers
711. r.drake — Re: Ah ho s a
712. A. Nikuko Sondheim — l caught as usual
713. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for mor
714. sylvester pollet — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for more media regulati...
715. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Judge Backs FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadca
716. Christopher W. Alexander — watch me juggle
717. mj devaney — Re: Driving me crazy
718. maz881 — clew
719. Maria Damon — Re: Gwen MacEwen
720. Maria Damon — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
721. morpheal — Re: Gwen MacEwen
722. morpheal — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for more media regulation to pr...
723. Simon DeDeo — Re: Gwen MacEwen
724. Karen Kelley — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
725. Mark Weiss — Re: Gwen MacEwen
726. morpheal — Re: Gwen MacEwen
727. morpheal — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for mor

19 JUN 1998

728. Karen Kelley — Driving me crazy
729. Simon DeDeo — Re: Gwen MacEwen
730. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — Re: chapbook
731. George Bowering — Re: an institutionalized avant garde
732. George Bowering — Re: MacEwen [some thoughts about artistic "popularity"]
733. George Bowering — Re: _Book of Mercy_ /more recent work
734. George Bowering — Re: Gwen MacEwen
735. henry — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
736. John Tranter — chapbook = Kaufman ?
737. daniel bouchard — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for mor
738. Maria Damon — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_

739. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Art, Poetry, context
740. morpheal — Re: Gwen MacEwen, Pound, etc.
741. Mark Prejsnar — Re: "Cultural Workers"
742. Henry G — Re: "Cultural Workers"
743. charles alexander — Re: Art, Poetry, context
744. Brent Long — Re: _Book of Mercy_ /more recent work
745. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
746. Douglas Barbour — Re: for Chris A (Gwen M etc)
747. Robert Zamsky — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_
748. hawkwind — Re: _Book of Mercy_ /more recent work
749. Judy Roitman — Re: Judge Backs FCC... correction
750. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Art, Poetry, context
751. Erik Sweet — ####1
752. Martin Spinelli — checking that m strain -- was FCC & Microbroadcasters
753. david bromige — hawkwind's Best O the Best
754. hawkwind — Best of the Best
755. R. Gancie — "Mathematical logic is so Utopian."
756. Linda Russo — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for mor
757. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — VIRTUAL HELLS
758. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Naropa Readings
759. Judy Roitman — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for mor
760. David Baratier — fcc
761. toddbaron — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for mor
762. Poetics List — Postmodern Piracy Festival /Call for Participants (fwd)
763. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Naropa Readings
764. William Burmeister Prod — Re: Judge Backs FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcasters
765. Safdie Joseph — Re: Naropa Readings
766. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Naropa Readings
767. joel lewis — f.y.i.
768. Christopher W. Alexander — Re: FCC Shutdown of Radio Microbroadcaster [need for mor
769. Mark Weiss — Re: f.y.i.
770. toddbaron — far and few
771. Stephen Cope — BTP Readings
772. Henry Gould — saturday night reading
773. Susan Schultz — Re: trippingly

20 JUN 1998

774. toddbaron — reading in Los Angeles
775. Jim Andrews — MacEwen and bissett
776. trbell — Re: Money /art/poetry makes nothing [that is not there and the nothing that …
777. Anthony Lawrence — Best O the Best
778. rsillima — More on Art & $$
779. r. drake — Re: Postmodern Piracy Festival /Call for Participants (fwd)
780. Brent Long — Re: Postmodern Piracy Festival /Call for Participants (fwd)
781. charles alexander — Re: Postmodern Piracy Festival /Call for Participants (fwd)
782. Simon DeDeo — Re: MacEwen and bissett
783. Mark Weiss — Re: Postmodern Piracy Festival /Call for Participants (fwd)
784. trbell — Re: Postmodern Piracy Festival /Call for Participants (fwd)
785. R. Gancie — "Poetically man dwells;" the hell, you say
786. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: saturday night reading
787. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — New @ epc
788. r. drake — Re: Postmodern Piracy Festival /Call for Participants (fwd)
789. Loss Pequen~o Glazier — New @ epc
790. nuyopoman — Radio Poetry
791. Nada Gordon — i see london i see france
792. Dan or Orion — new from 26 BOOKS

793. morpheal — Re: descending murderous net

21 JUN 1998

794. Mark W Scroggins — Re: wallace stevens and the life
795. toddbaron — Re: descending murderous net
796. toddbaron — wallace stevens and the life
797. toddbaron — Re: wallace stevens and the life
798. Anthony Lawrence — Re: wallace stevens and the life
799. R. Gancie — the frame problem or busting outta Goedel's Second Theorem
800. toddbaron — Re: wallace stevens and the life

22 JUN 1998

801. Jim Andrews — the frame problem?
802. Stephen Cope — FCC etc. (longish post)
803. George Bowering — Re: Tish spies
804. morpheal — Re: FCC etc. [alternatives for video-audio, an example]
805. p.c. jaeger — Derksen & Mac Cormack reading
806. Douglas Barbour — Re: MacEwen & bissett
807. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Money /art/poetry makes nothing [that is not there and the nothing that...
808. Mark Prejsnar — Re: the frame problem?
809. Jordan Davis — framing frenzy
810. linda russo — "How Poignant that sounds . . .
811. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — Re: framing frenzy
812. Judy Roitman — Re: framing frenzy
813. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — Re: framing frenzy
814. louis stroffolino — Re: framing frenzy
815. louis stroffolino — Re: framing frenzy
816. Jordan Davis — this, now, here, name
817. David Baratier — Re: "How Poignant that sounds . . .
818. R. Gancie — Cognitive wheels
819. morpheal — Re: framing frenzy
820. morpheal — Re: the frame problem or busting outta Goedel's Second Theorem
821. R. Gancie — brick & block
822. sylvester pollet — Re: "How Poignant that sounds . . .
823. sylvester pollet — Re: "How Poignant that sounds . . .
824. Simon/Piombino — Stevens Bios
825. Tom Beard — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_ and reductiveness
826. Peter Minter — Re: chapbook = Kaufman ?
827. Tom Beard — Re: raw numbers

23 JUN 1998

828. Mark W Scroggins — addresses again--
829. Tom Beard — Re: brick & block
830. toddbaron — Re: Stevens Bios
831. henry g — stevens bks
832. Jordan Davis — new blind date #5
833. Simon DeDeo — Re: raw numbers
834. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Naropa When It Sizzles
835. Billy Little — Re: chapbook = Kaufman ?
836. Joe Brennan — TEST
837. Brent Long — Money money
838. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — test
839. morpheal — Re: raw numbers [Pontification on mythematics]
840. R. Gancie — bobbing for oxygen
841. Simon DeDeo — Re: raw numbers [Pontification on mythematics]
842. F. W. Perrella — Web Del Sol Update: 6/23/1998

843. morpheal — Re: Cognitive wheels [of the most intelligent and stupidest machine ever to be b…
844. toddbaron — Re: new blind date #5
845. Simon/Piombino — Summer
846. david bromige — insults having nothing to do with poetry but addressed to one person in fro…
847. morpheal — Re: Summer
848. KENT JOHNSON — (Fwd) Support GM strikers!
849. morpheal — Re: (Fwd) Support GM strikers!
850. maz881 — three legged dog
851. charles alexander — a tad of this, a tad of that
852. Herb Levy — Taslima Nasrin?
853. Simon/Piombino — Stewart and Schuyler
854. J. Pecqueur — Summerer
855. Scott Pound — eddress requests
856. morpheal — Re: bobbing for oxygen [various oxidation reactions]

24 JUN 1998

857. George Bowering — Re: TEST
858. George Bowering — Re: eddress requests
859. George Bowering — Re: Summerer
860. Wendy Kramer — some are reading
861. Gary Sullivan — Groovy Summer Reading
862. Alaric Sumner — 2nd review of The Unspeakable Rooms
863. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: Tuesday at Naropa
864. Simon DeDeo — Simon Armitage
865. Robert Corbett — Frames and Paranoia
866. R. Gancie — my P.C.'s papa threw a few bricks in his time, pal
867. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — Re: Simon Armitage
868. Don Cheney — bill gates: doctor of madness?
869. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Weiner's _Code Poems_ and reductiveness
870. David Baratier — where's frank?
871. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Taslima Nasrin?
872. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Summerer
873. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Groovy Summer Reading
874. Brent Long — Re: Summerer
875. Brent Long — Books
876. trbell — Poetics of space
877. Simon DeDeo — Re: summerer
878. Peter Ganick — Re: summerer
879. Simon DeDeo — Re: Cognitive wheels [of the most intelligent and stupidest machine ever to b…
880. Robert Corbett — Re: Summerer
881. Kathy Lou Schultz — Re: bill gates: doctor of madness?
882. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — Re: Summerer
883. Jordan Davis — dave!
884. morpheal — Re: Cognitive wheels [of the most intelligent and stupidest machine ever to be b…
885. Simon DeDeo — Re: Cognitive wheels [of the most intelligent and stupidest
886. David Baratier — Re: dave!
887. George Bowering — Re: summerer
888. Aaron Vidaver — A Limited-Time Offer for Members of the Poetics List: The Complete In-comple…
889. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — Re: summerer

25 JUN 1998

890. Matt Kirschenbaum — Re: summerer

891. Tosh — Re: summerer
892. k.a. hehir — Re: summerer
893. k.a. hehir — Re: summerer
894. Anthony Lawrence — Re: Simon Armitage
895. Anthony Lawrence — CloudCuckooLand
896. Susan Wheeler — Books +
897. rsillima — Steve Lacy Question
898. John Kimball — The East Village, Volume Two
899. Michael Magee — Re: Steve Lacy Question
900. Don Cheney — The emotional scoreboard at Wimbledon
901. Nada Gordon — Re: Books +
902. Henry G — Re: Books +
903. daniel bouchard — a stanz a (for henry
904. DANIEL L. COLLIER — Byefornow, Summer Reading, Thanks
905. Simon DeDeo — Re: CloudCuckooLand
906. Brent Long — Re: a stanz a (for henry
907. Mark Prejsnar — writing thru to multicult ethix?
908. henry — Re: a stanz a (for henry
909. Mark Weiss — Re: writing thru to multicult ethix?
910. R I Caddel — OTHER - Advance Notice
911. Mark Prejsnar — Re: writing thru to multicult ethix?
912. charssmith — Re: writing thru to multicult ethix?
913. charssmith — Re: Steve Lacy Question -- & recent reads
914. Simon DeDeo — Re: writing thru to multicult ethix?
915. aerialedge — New @ Bridge Street, Spicer bio, Bellamy, Luoma, Mayer, Notley, Palmer, Perlof…
916. groberts — summer Beckett reading
917. morpheal — Re: my P.C.'s papa threw a few bricks in his time, pal [subtitled: soon there we…
918. Blaise Cirelli — Postmodern Prose
919. trbell — Re: Books +
920. David W. Clippinger — Re: Postmodern Prose
921. Susan Wheeler — Yes, and . .
922. david bromige — Summer Beckett
923. toddbaron — Re: summerer's tales
924. R.Gancie/C.Parcelli — utopia
925. Karen Kelley — Re: Summerer
926. toddbaron — Re: Postmodern Prose
927. david bromige — Hilbert & Langpo (a linkage by R.Gancie)

26 JUN 1998

928. Jim Andrews — Enigma
929. Jim Andrews — MacEwen and Montreal
930. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — Finger
931. Billy Little — Re: Yes, and . .
932. Simon J. Schuchat — Enigma
933. George Bowering — Re: a stanza
934. Simon J. Schuchat — Re: a stanza
935. J. Kuszai — address query
936. Gwyn McVay — Re: New @ Bridge Street, Spicer bio, Bellamy, Luoma, Mayer, Notley, Palmer, Pe…
937. Gwyn McVay — Re: New @ Bridge Street, Spicer bio, Bellamy, Luoma, Mayer, Notley, Palmer, Pe…
938. Robert Archambeau — Re: MFA/PhD
939. sylvester pollet — Russian/Azerbaijani poet seeks help
940. Mark Wallace — query: non-mainstream/avant garde dance theory
941. Rachel Loden — morbid requests

942. morpheal — Re: Enigma
943. Gwyn McVay — Re: morbid requests
944. Gwyn McVay — booby prize of the day
945. aerialedge — Close Listening &
946. P.Standard Schaefer — Boundary 2
947. David Baratier — [Fwd: Natl. Lib. of Poetry page]
948. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: MFA/PhD
949. Mark Nowak — Re: Yes, and...
950. David Baratier — Re: MFA/PhD
951. R. Gancie — You woulda never known your uncle was dead, if I hadna killed him.
952. Brent Long — MFA/PhD
953. louis stroffolino — Re: Boundary 2
954. louis stroffolino — Re: MFA/PhD
955. Richard Long — Re: MFA/PhD
956. R M Daley — Re: MFA/PhD
957. R M Daley — Re: MFA/PhD
958. Brent Long — Re: MFA/PhD
959. Charles Bernstein — Re: Boundary 2 / My Way
960. Simon DeDeo — 1968 & alia (longish; "writing through" and more)
961. Matt Kirschenbaum — Re: MFA/PhD
962. KENT JOHNSON — (Fwd) Jane Slaughter on the GM Strike
963. morpheal — Re: morbid requests

27 JUN 1998

964. Dan or Orion — master of f'ing around (piled higher & deeper)
965. Carrie Etter — MFA/PhD
966. Jim Andrews — enigma
967. rsillima — Readings in SF
968. Agent Sunshine, aka Eric Gleason — Re: [Fwd: Natl. Lib. of Poetry page]
969. Susan Wheeler — Re: Yes, and...
970. morpheal — Re: enigma
971. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Books +
972. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: MFA/PhD
973. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: query: non-mainstream/avant garde dance theory
974. Tom Orange — slovak poets
975. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: MFA/PhD
976. Douglas Barbour — Re: writing thru to multicult ethix?
977. morpheal — Re: writing thru to multicult ethix? [culture victims in the new apartheids of r…
978. Karen Kelley — Re: writing thru to multicult ethix? [culture victims in the new apartheids …
979. Juliana Spahr — protest of award for Yamanaka 980. R. Gancie — simple is as simple does
981. Michael McColl — Seeking Meow Press
982. trbell — Re: Boundary 2 / My Way
983. morpheal — Re: protest of award for Yamanaka
984. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — In Query
985. Michael McColl — Elementary Logic
986. Henry Gould — Hawaii 5-0
987. joel lewis — f.y.i.

28 JUN 1998

988. morpheal — Re: Hawaii 5-0 [All Hawaiians Toss People Into Live Volcanos]
989. morpheal — Re: simple is as simple does [now you see it, now you don't]
990. rsillima — Forrest Gander & Araki Yasusada
991. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — Emily's Riddle
992. R. Gancie — Or just another hysterical response to indeterminates
993. Christian Roess — Re: slovak poetry
994. david bromige — Alan Sondheim's House of Riddles

995. James Sherry — Re: Forrest Gander & Araki Yasusada
996. Alan J.J.N. Sondheim — the last of Emily's Riddle
997. nuyopoman — query: non-mainstream/avant garde dance theory
998. nuyopoman — Jewloetry
999. nuyopoman — Pigpen
1000. Gwyn McVay — Re: Pigpen

29 JUN 1998

1001. trbell — Re: slovak poetry
1002. daniel bouchard — Padgett's blazing article
1003. sylvester pollet — address change/Backwoods Broadsides 1004. morpheal — Re: Or just another hysterical response to indeterminates [Hegel, and Tipler as ...
1005. Herb Levy — Re: query: non-mainstream/avant garde dance theory
1006. daniel bouchard — Re: protest of award for Yamanaka
1007. Mark Prejsnar — Re: protest of award for Yamanaka
1008. Poetics List — UB Mail Shutdown
1009. linda russo — Re: [Fwd: Natl. Lib. of Poetry page] 1010. R. Gancie — Reduce this!
1011. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — thanks
1012. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Pigpen
1013. Elizabeth Treadwell — Outlet magazine/includes call for work
1014. maz881 — Re: protest of award for Yamanaka
1015. Simon/Piombino — Jerome Sala and Poetry Slams 1016. morpheal — Re: russian history tomes [tertiary sources based on Stalinist newspapers ?]
1017. Roger Farr — Re: Slams
1018. toddbaron — a note from ReMap
1019. toddbaron — sorry agin
1020. toddbaron — sorry for the public display-- 1021. Simon DeDeo — Re: russian history tomes

30 JUN 1998

1022. J Kimball — Ron Padgett's article
1023. toddbaron — russian history tomes
1024. morpheal — Re: Reduce this! [ok, that puzzle is easier to do]
1025. Marthe N. Reed — Re: Call for submissions
1026. Marthe N. Reed — Re: call for submision (Please Ignore!)
1027. Steven Clay — Bernadette Mayer/Ted Berrigan
1028. r. drake — [Fwd: Solidarity]
1029. Brent Long — Re: Jerome Sala and Poetry Slams
1030. louis stroffolino — 7/4/70
1031. daniel bouchard — Re: Ron Padgett's article
1032. linda russo — Re: Poetry in the libraries
1033. Tom Orange — russian history tomes
1034. Taylor Brady — READING ANNOUNCEMENT
1035. David Baratier — Re: lib of poetry
1036. dbkk — TIM MILLER RESPONSE TO SUPREMES DECISION
1037. Chicago Review — Re: LVNGs! LVNGs!
1038. Fred Muratori — Re: [Fwd: Natl. Lib. of Poetry page]
1039. Eryque Gleason — Re: [Fwd: Natl. Lib. of Poetry page]
1040. Mark Prejsnar — Poetry in the libraries
1041. Fred Muratori — Re: Poetry in the libraries
1042. R. Gancie — Dear Hypatia
1043. Mark Weiss — Re: [Fwd: Natl. Lib. of Poetry page]
1044. nuyopoman — Slams
1045. juliana spahr — yamanaka protest, dan's questions
1046. Charles Alexander — Re: [Fwd: Natl. Lib. of Poetry page]

1047. Mark Weiss — Re: Slams
1048. Charles Alexander — Re: Slams
1049. Laura E. Wright — Re: Poetry in the libraries
1050. Pritchett,Patrick — Re: More from Naropa
1051. morpheal — Re: lib of poetry [what I suggest we should do]
1052. Mark Weiss — Re: lib of poetry [what I suggest we should do] 1053. Laura E. Wright — Re: lib of poetry 1054. Jordan Davis — they don't?
1055. Tosh — Re: Slams

1 JUL 1998

1056. toddbaron — burning decks
1057. toddbaron — Re: Slams

1. Alan Myouka Sondheim

Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)

Mon 1 Jun 1998

The form increases in length; I did not know about this limit, and then it was of course too late. So the replies are stuttered, and I want to thank everyone who has written here. And my reply is stuttered as well and there is a Holderlin-call from the Japanese translation by Rexroth at the end, which doesn't clarify, but mutes.

Alan

<---------- Forwarded message ----------
<Date: Sun, 31 May 1998 21:59:12 -0400
<From: "L-Soft list server at University at Buffalo (1.8c)"
< <[redacted]>
<To: Alan Sondheim <[redacted]>
<Subject: Rejected posting to [redacted]

The distribution of your message dated Sun, 31 May 1998 21:59:10 -0400 (EDT) with subject "Japonisserie" has been rejected because you have exceeded the daily per-user message limit for the POETICS list. Other than the list owner, no one is allowed to post more than 5 messages per day. Please resend your message at a later time if you still want it to be posted to the list.

---------- Rejected message (50 lines) ---------- Subject: Japonisserie

As I've said, please check the URLs. I am not making any claims about "Nikukos in Japan," about the "Japanese," about Japanese culture. I am writing texts which look at issues ranging from avatars through psychoses, etc. There are politics involved, but not claims. A few years ago I wrote "through" thinking about cuneiform; I was interested in language diffusions as well as the granularity of the real. These inter- ests play a role here.

I remain blind to the possibility that Nikuko is a stereotype of anyone or anything. I cannot imagine a classroom of Nikukos, or that being in Japan for six years instead of six months would have changed what I was doing in this respect. Nikuko is very similar to Julu in a lot of re- spects; I have limited imagination, but the very fact that I do not know Japanese, do not know kanji, opened up the possibility of a world of impervious signs, and a probe thereby.

Possibly misrecognition has resulted from sending only a certain section of poems/poetics to Poetics; the other essays, etc., have been omitted.

If I were writing in a future six-year stay, I would have kept Nikuko, and reminded myself of the ignorance of the language. The writing has been concerned with epistemology, what's knowable under the circumstances of probes and membranes and systems. It hasn't been concerned at all with geisha.

The reason I brought up PC is based on some of the critique coming in. If some- one recognizes her students as all Nikukos, that means what, for ex- ample? That I should not write through a character I create? That if I do write through such a character I should be critical because she sees her as a type, and as a girl-geisha detrimental type at that? That I should negate my own interest in pursuing this work - which again makes no claims whatsoever about Japanese culture (I have been carefulabout that), and perhaps use a Jewish white male my own age as exemplar, since that is really all I "know" about?

This questions also touch on Yasusada's work, by the way - if the work is Kent Johnson, and is, then what right does he have - along the same lines? What right does right have? How is it right for what right?

If I write a Nikuko-X that seems harmless enough, without too much cultur- al debris attached, I'll send it on. It is not only that I am concerned with writing hurtful texts; I also don't want to create a male probe in this regard, and worry it will be taken as such. Although Nikuko is "fe- male," she is not female, and that would indeed be a misappropration as far as I'm concerned. (One might say just as well that she is "Japanese" but not Japanese. I realize I'm getting away with murder. Littoral.)

Finally, if Nada and others have different (or similar, since she recog- nized Nikuko as a type?) experiences, why not write to those experiences, instead of critiquing my own position from the viewpoint of perhaps mis- placed (in)au- thenticity? (I.e. I was here or there longer than you, or I know Japanese or say unix better than you, or whatever.)

Alan

Here is a translation of a poem by 8th-century Yakamochi, by Kenneth Rexroth:

The cry of the stag
Is so loud in the empty
Mountains that an echo
Answers him as though
It were a doe.

_Yama biko no
Ai to yomu made
Tsuma goi ni

Ka naku yama be ni
Hitori nomi shite_

And through this you see darling Nikuko how I call you through the wires, rural electrification notwithstanding! For it is true that the echo com- mand - in for- mat {k:0} echo 'command' - behaves just as in Perl, that is, the backward quo- tations enact command, then echo it onto the screen with- out line returns, but a pure escapement, pure emission, pure thrust of activation so that I emit towards you this echo, this command, reverberating in the midst of the mountains, creating you; your sound, scent, touch, envelop me and you sense my presence as I echo back to you, your wish is my 'command'

so that you emit towards me this echo, this command, reverberating in the midst of the mountains, creating me; my sound, scent, touch, envelop you and I sense your presence as you echo back to me, my wish is your 'command' . . .

↑ Index

2. Tom Orange
Canada's encrypted poetry
Mon 1 Jun 1998

On Sun, 31 May 1998, david bromige writes:

<<I am now at liberty to reveal that George Bowering's poetry, in many of his books "a-tonal" in structure, often consists of heavily encrypted messages being transmitted to Cuba about the seaward defenses of Bellingham, WA....>>

furthermore, the statistics incorporated into jeff derksen's "interface" (in the ganick/barone anthology) are not figures from past canadian dollar exchange rates but, in fact, insider information jeff has garnered on future exchange rates. call your broker now....

t.

↑ Index

3. david bromige
quo un/censored vadis?
Mon 1 Jun 1998

btw, i'm pleased that personal quotas have now been instituted for the List. Unless this is my 6th message today.

_____

This has been great! Let it fly!

I want to say that a b-c from Bobbie West has sobered me up some. I got called on my W,M p-o-v. Indeed, a comfortable one, at least out here in the Bleachedburgs. If I were a male-terrorized female--if that isnt a redundancy--I'd have a much harder time detaching from the content of some of Alan's poems.

I also want to say that Nada was not censoring, she was expressing.

This matter of detaching from content : I recall playing a tape of Robert Duncan reading his boffo poem "My Mother Would Be A Falconress" and a male student said, very much aroused, "That guy is _sick_ . He _hates_ his mother." Well of course, Sophistication answers. But this student was _getting it_ in a way I wasn't. Maybe he was recoiling from a picture of his own subconscious, who am I to know?

There are going to be texts, for any one of us, where we cannot achieve an esthetic distancing because the content is traumatic. And surely our saying so is part of the Grand Testimony that would allow whatever form and content in poetry?

This, then, is to apologize for the bleakness of my response (though not to retract the argument offered. Certainly not to ask Alan to change a thing).

David

PS in the same class, one wag suggested--this being during one crest of the wildlife protection movement--that the falcons should sue RD for his misrepresenting them and for personifying them.

↑ Index

4. sylvester pollet
limits
Mon 1 Jun 1998

That's the first I'd been aware of a five message per day limit. When was that instituted? I would much rather have the list members use moral suasion, boycotts, the delete, or whatever, to influence the cyberhogs. It seems to me that when there's a useful debate, such as that surrounding Alan Sondheim's work, it should be able to run its course. Run without hobbles. Bromige, I take your note of support for the limit to be ironic--that you are against it? (Careful, if you reply, that's one gone!) Jouissez sans entraves! Sylvester

↑ Index

5. J. Kuszai
Re: Feedback
Mon 1 Jun 1998

this 5per day rule has been in place for a long time. I think about a year, tho I cannot remember for sure. Many people on the list I think have encountered this rule when posting frequently to the list. But five times in a twenty-four hour period?? Granted, as Sylvester P. once wrote to me backchannel, many people like to read the list in "real-time" as it happens,and I feel a certain amount of interest in that as well. However, it seems to me that just as there could be a valuable conversation happening such as the reading of Alan's work going on here, I can ALSO imagine such an occurrence where someone might be let loose on the list in a violent, or verbally agressive manner. Obviously the reality is somewhere between these two. Certainly when people get so riled up that they have to be "censored" by waiting til after midnight to respond, they might be a few percentage points more likely to eventually require restraint by more than the email police. I think this contestedness is good for the list, and for poetry & poetics as well, but it may not be the best use of this forum, which combines interest in such "poetics" with the amenities of the new media, such as immediacy & virtuality. But that doesn't mean we need to maximize the possibilities offered by one at the expense of another. The need to shape the list by limiting posts to five a day is a decision based on the supposedly limited nature of this list. If you don't like it, as they say, combine your posts into single message. Sometimes it seems like everything would benefit if people would slow down and read each other with more consideration. Sometimes it seems like people end up arguing in public about "how I read you" and "how I read you reading you" - sorry, but this does not a poetics make end of managerial rant. I'll be waiting out behind the barn if you want to duke it out.

I wanted to mention Nick's incredibly interesting post. I wanted to remark on that because it seems funny that a post about feedback should go without feedback, tho maybe I missed it. Also to add to his sense of getting feedback at a reading, as the work encounters an audience, it's audience or otherwise. Sometimes I feel treated as a listener to a sense of a reading as an event, one which the author has prepared a special statement to me as member of the community of listeners addressed. This may involve "reading new work" - a public redress of work considered (in the poetry lab) for some time. The worst readings are those where the author is "simply" performing a "set list." Of course one can read a statement of sorts into that, a relation to ones "readers" that may unveil some whole other bag of wax. As a poet I've never been fond of poetry readings, tho Nick's post makes me reconsider the prospect as I plan for a July reading here in Buffalo with Stephen Cope and Wendy Kramer. Part goodbye, part unlock, part letter to Creeley (everything here it seems, even the lovely town of Buffalo, is a letter to R.C.) suddenly the interest to give a reading is a very exciting prospect.

Thanks to everyone who posted to me publicly or privately about electronic computer poetry softwares. I found several and will post my evaluation as I come to it. They all offer different things. Electric Poet is the best, I think, because it allows ENORMOUS text files as source text and spits out relatively syntactic language. The rest is all craft, no? Hammering out meaning and sense like the shield of Achilles, into, as Susan Howe wrote, "fragmentary narrative enclaves"

Here is something I wrote yesterday using a source text processed by Electric Poet:

Halfway across the doorway something terrible happened
Dorothy lived in the trap door, Dorothy lived in a corner
The sun had changed her, and gray as her horses were gray as she screamed into the trap door into a cradle
He ran toward the child's accidents happen
She screamed the house broke the house broke the sheds where the room came strange building in a sharp whistling barking loudly they heard the cyclone coming the hours passed and gaunt the south winds met to the far north carried miles in a cyclone cellar the room contained a feather cookstove
a cupboard for the great pressure of the air

This is part of a long section of an ongoing project to affix private, coded meanings, into randomized samples of processed language. Everything here has a referential value, although there is no obvious set of correspondences. And as a "control" there also meaningful linguistic sequences of words and phrases that do not have any affixed, private meaning, but are provocative as langague crashing on itself in collage.

As a text, this section of Canto10-The Cyclone is a reading of the vocabulary of the first chapter of The Wizard of Oz. Rather, it "borrows" "steals" "begs" these words off the original, taking with them full resonsance of where they came from. It would be impossible to remove Dorothy, just as "balloon" from her source in the Baum book, or more likely, the 1939 film. By writing over the original, now lost in compuerania, the oz of the book becomes a fragmented contemporary allegorial meaning-generating device, not meaning "destructive" but seeking Kansas in lyric statement, hid out, buried from the wind and its caustic debris. Tack & tact.

↑ Index

6. Charles Bernstein
Poetics List Welcome Message
Mon 1 Jun 1998

Here is the Welcome Message, sent out at the beginning of every month for those who may have not have copies handy.

Joel and I are on the same timescale of reply today, I guess, as I was reminded to post the Welcome Message, as we do every month for those who may not have it handy. You can check out the automatic list options by looking at the header that comes when you request a list of subscribers using the "review" command, as explained below. The "daily threshold" is 50;5: 50 overall and 5 for any one subscriber. As of today, there are 627 subscribers. There have been a number of discussions on the list in the past about the reasons for setting these parameters in this way -- and they all took place in the environment of a significantly smaller list.

I want also to take this chance to thank Joel for his work in bounced message control and other list duties that keep this thing going. He does everything that the "fully automated system" can't handle, i.e. quite a lot --

---

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, Faculty of Art & Letters, of the State University of New York, Buffalo

Postal Address: 438 Clemens Hall, SUNY, Buffalo, NY 14260

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Cautions
4. Digest Option

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

6. Who's Subscribed

7. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)

8. Poetics Archives at EPC

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]), Loss PequeñoGlazier ([redacted]), and Joel Kuszai ([redacted]).

Above the world-weary horizons

New obstacles for exchange arise

Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

The Poetics List was founded in late 1993 with the epigraph above.

There are presently over 600 subscribers.

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list relatively small and the volume manageable.

individual posts of participants are sent directly to all subscribers, we continue to work to promote the editorial function of this project. The definition of that project, while provisional, and while open to continual redefinition by list participants, is nonetheless aversive to a generalized discussion of poetry. Rather, our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible. <color><param>ffff,0000,0000</param>We also encourage subscribers to post information on publications and reading series that they have coordinated, edited, published, or in which they appear (see section 9 below). (THIS MEANS YOU).

</color>

Please keep in mind that all posts go out immediately to all subscribers, and become part of an on-line archive. <italic>Posting to Poetics is a form of publication, not personal communication</italic>. Participants are asked to exercise caution before posting messages! While spontaneity of response may seem the very heart of the list at its best, it also has the darker side of circulating ideas that have not been well considered (or considered by another reader -- editor or friend). Given the nature of the medium, subscribers do well to maintain some skepticism when reading the list and, where possible, to try to avoid taking what may be something close to a spontaneous comment made in the heat of exchange as if it were a revised or edited essay ("Let the Reader Beware!").

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein. Joel Kuszai is list manager. For subscription information contact us at [redacted].

---

2. Subscriptions

Subscriptions to Poetics are free of charge. But we ask that you subscribe with your real name and we reserve the right to request additional information, including address and phone number. All subscription information you supply will remain confidential.

message, with no subject line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or} (replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your

name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity. Please allow several days for your new or re-subscription to take effect.

*

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at shareware sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you may be able to substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

In general, if a Poetics message is bounced from your account, your subscription to Poetics will be temporarily suspended. If this happens, simply resubscribe to the list in the normal manner, once your account problem has been resolved.

All questions about subscriptions, whether about an individual subscription or subscription policy, should be addressed to the list's administrative address: [redacted]. Please note that it may take up to ten days, or more, for us to reply to messages.

---

3. Cautions

Please do not post to the list personal or backchannel correspondence, or other unpublished material, without the express permission of the author. Copyright for all material posted on Poetics remains with the author; material from this list and its archive may not be reproduced without the author's permission, beyond the standard rights accorded by "fair use".

The Poetics List has a 50 message daily limit. If more than 50 messages are received, the listserver will automatically hold those additional messages until the list is manually unlocked, usually the following day. While it is difficult to prescribe a set limit on the number of daily, weekly, or monthly posts for any subscriber, please keep this limit in mind. If you plan to respond to multiple threads, it is generally preferable to consolidate your reply into one message. While relevant excerpts from a post to which you are responding may usefully be appended to your reply, please do not include in your new post the whole text of a long previously posted message.

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot decode attached or specially formatted files.

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. (See section 7.)

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address. To get this information, see section 6.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment to the individual backchannel, not to the whole list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Listserve program gives you he option to receive all the posted Poetics message each day as a single message. If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to

[redacted]

set poetics digest

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

set poetics mail

---

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message to "[redacted]"

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics

archive. (See 8 below.)

---

6. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to e-mail message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

review poetics

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

or try:

review POETICS by name

review POETICS by country

which will give you the list alphabetically by name or a flawed list by country (since all ".com" and ".net"s are counted as US)

Please do not send a message to the list asking for the address of a specific subscriber.

---

7. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequeño Glazier.

---

8. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If yourword processor ill save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

7. Magdalena Zurawski
Re: Quo Vadis?
Mon 1 Jun 1998

Hi Nada!

Glad to have read your post. Although I'm not familiar with the poems you're talking about, I think you raise a really important issue concerning irony.

Recently I heard Bruce Andrews read and although I really enjoyed the work (its rhythms and contortions and general force) enough to tell him so after the reading, it was hard for me to see his use of words such as "pussy" as ironic and unproblematic.

At 08:08 AM 5/31/98 +0900, you wrote:
>as a teacher of nikukos
>
>and living always surrounded >by fetishizations of japanese women's sexuality

>
>(on the street that leads to my school there are huge flourescent signs >advertising anal licking by girls in sailor blouses and white cotton >panties)
>
>i cannot say that i am a fan of alan's work
>
>although i appreciate its forms
>
>i find the poems exoticize most stereotypically
>Alan may be ironizing that
>
>but to me
>in my daily life
>as a woman teaching young women (and men) to speak
>and maneuver into adulthood
>the irony doesn't help me
>
>but confirms a certain rage or annoyance
>
>even when it is mixed with borrowings
>from profoundest tradition
>or cutting-edge cyberwords
>
>maybe it's different to read his nikuko poems
>from the outside
>
>but for me they're too close to home
>they make me uncomfortable
>
>even when i find them beautiful or skillful >(which is often)
>
>that's why i don't comment
>for fear of being sour or prissy
>
>is there perhaps some dimension to the poems i'm just not getting?
>or it it rather that i get too much? they are not some distant metaphor >but my xperienced world?
>
>-- nada "ume" gordon
>

>
>>i am a big fan of alan's work, and i used to rave and gush everytime he >>posted a poem, either front or backchannel. i don't do it every time tho, >>but i think he knows of my admiration. n'est-ce pas, alain?
>>
>>At 12:53 AM -0400 5/30/98, Tom Orange wrote:
>>>peter,
>>>
>>>yr post strikes a chord with me, as a long while back i voiced a similar >>>observation on alan's work, which blips thru these screens quite regularly
>>>so as to become paradoxically commonplace and yet remain extraordinary
>>>each time. (there's a coupla books worth of his stuff sitting in the list >>>archives, some of which chris alexander nicely brought out in chap form.)
>>>the lack of response is in part the nature of the beast(s), namely one,
>>>the volume of daily list traffic, and two, the kind of engagement that >>>anything other than a superfluous response to his work demands.
>>>
>>>just last week someone posted a few poems by jeff clark, and having just >>>finished that book i cast my line into the waters with a few tentative >>>takes on the work, with nary a nibble in response.
>>>
>>>dont think people are disinclined to discuss new (or old!) work here, all >>>depends on time/energy/will to engage i guess. surely one reason to stay >>>tuned in is to keep up with all the work that's circulating out there...
>>>
>>>cheers,
>>>t.
>
>

↑ Index

8. Mark Prejsnar
Re: limits
Mon 1 Jun 1998

Actually, this is all very odd, I agree. I don't believe the "welcome" message we get frequently re-posted to us, which supposedly gives all the ground rules, mentions the 5-post limit. If I'm not mistaken, it gives quite a different impression..I've looked, because in fact I first hit the limit some months ago, so it has been operative (not just for me I presume) for quite some time....

I never asked the list-honchos or the list in general about it, figuring I was the only one stupid enuff not to have noticed the rule someplace...

Shouldn't the Welcome message (if I'm right) make mention of the limit??

M.

On Mon, 1 Jun 1998, sylvester pollet wrote:

> That's the first I'd been aware of a five message per day limit. When was that instituted? I would much rather have the list members use moral suasion, boycotts, the delete, or whatever, to influence the cyberhogs. It seems to me that when there's a useful debate, such as that surrounding Alan Sondheim's work, it should be able to run its course. Run without hobbles.
> Bromige, I take your note of support for the limit to be ironic--that you are against it? (Careful, if you reply, that's one gone!)
> Jouissez sans entraves! Sylvester

↑ Index

9. Charles Bernstein
Re: limits
Mon 1 Jun 1998

> *... I don't believe the "welcome" message we get frequently re-posted to us, which supposedly gives all the ground rules, mentions the 5-post limit.*

This information is provided in the list "header" which is available to list subscribers by request, most easily when you send the "review" command to the listserv address. However, I do agree that it is a good idea to include this also in the Welcome message and so I have added it for the future.

↑ Index

10. Christopher W. Alexander
12 tone Spicer versus dum da dum
Mon 1 Jun 1998

Hugh sez re "Composer Webern was Double Agent for Nazis":
> I have strong doubts about whether this happens to be true

no doubt yr skepticism is fully appropriate - but what a wonderful strategy for coping with the avant garde, eh? mebbe it won't be so long we'll find something like this in the Times:

"Florida State University Prof Establishes Poet's Link to Terrorists

Tallahassee - What would you think of an 'avant garde' poet whose work was actually useful for something? ridiculous, right? but that's just what Professor David "Genital" Kirby is proposing. "That's right," sez Professor Kirby, "I have found incontrovertible evidence that American poet Jack Spicer's use of the 'serial form' can be linked directly to the need to pass information securely from the San Francisco bay area to Berlin." Professor Kirby's controversial paper, delivered before some 150 of his peers at the recent Florida State Conference of the Literary Arse [sic], proposes that Spicer's otherwise incomprehensible poetry was actually a complex code employed for trans-continental communication leading to terrorist activity in the U.S. and abroad. Kirby links Spicer to an openly homosexual splinter group of the Red Army Faction, headquartered in the famous Berlin leather bar Der Vesuvius. "While it's true I haven't read any of Spicer's work or his lectures or his biography, I'm absolutely convinced that my conclusions are correct. I think he even wrote a poem or something called 'Three Marxist Essays.'" Professor Kirby asserts that "it's particularly important to get the word out now, when a resurgence of interest in Spicer's outlandish work could only mean a coming resurgence of red terrorist activity." While several members of the audience had walked out by the end of his presentation, Kirby is not discouraged. "There has to be some explanation for Spicer's nonsensical verse, his bloated egotism," says Kirby, who describes his colleagues as "just jealous" that he has uncovered it.

end quotation and so on...

chris - O Evermore

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

11. Robert Kendall

Re: 12 tones for Anton's bones

Mon 1 Jun 1998

Tosh wrote:

> As a hoax this is pretty funny! The reporters name is "Heinrich Kincaid," which strikes me funny. It is a good name. Too good! Plus the quote from
> John Adams ."Ever since I first encountered compositions by Arnold Schonberg I wondered what the hell anyone ever heard in it. .Now I know."
> That's funny. What was really funny is when the report commented that "Toru Takemitsu took time out from his own neo-romanticism to transmit data > via music of his nation's progress with the atom." Since when did Japan > have Atomic power? Plus the quote from Mr. Glass " that musicians > continued to write twelve-tone music after the war, even though > they had no

> idea why it was really invented.
> Indeed, there are guys who are churning out serialism to this day."

Not to mention the fact that Schoenberg developed the 12-tone system around 1920, after Hauer and others had already developed similar systems.

Robert Kendall
E-Mail: [redacted]
Home Page: http://www.wenet.net/~rkendall

On-Line Class in Hypertext Poetry and Fiction (The New School):
http://www.wenet.net/~rkendall/htclass.htm
Word Circuits (Resources for Hypertext/Cybertext Poetry and Fiction):
http://www.wenet.net/~rkendall/wordcircuits

↑ Index

12. Kenneth Goldsmith
F I D G E T : 3 E V E N T S
Mon 1 Jun 1998

The Whitney Museum of American Art at Philip Morris presents

F I D G E T

a collaboration by Kenneth Goldsmith + Theo Bleckmann

Tues 16 June | 8 PM | Free
Park Avenue @ 42nd St., New York City
Info: [redacted]

Accompanied by an electric bass + sewing machine, Theo Bleckmann performs a vocal-visual interpretation of Kenneth Goldsmith's new book, FIDGET, which records every movement Goldsmith made on June 16 (Bloomsday) last year. A frequent collaborator with Meredith Monk, Bleckmann produces an extraordinary array of intriguing vocal contrasts with his 3 1/2 octave range, pushing the boundaries between song

+ sound. With Skuli Sverrisson + John Hollenbeck.
This site-specific collaboration was commisssioned
by The Whitney Museum of American Art.

Printed Matter, Inc. presents

F I D G E T

Kenneth Goldsmith with Syndey Maresca
Sound Ambiance by Theo Bleckmann

11 June - 4 Sept
Opening Thurs 11 June | 6-8 PM
77 Wooster St., New York City
Info: [redacted]

An installation of thirteen paper men's suits printed with the complete text of FIDGET. Suits constructed by seamstress / costume designer Sydney Maresca.

Stadium Projects presents

F I D G E T

Kenneth Goldsmith with Clem Paulsen
Real Audio by Theo Bleckmann

Online: 16 June
http://www.stadiumweb.com
Info: [redacted]

An interactive java applet written by Clem Paulsen based on Goldsmith's _Fidget_.

A book + CD of FIDGET is forthcoming this fall from The Maryland Institute of Art.

↑ Index

13. DANIEL L. COLLIER

Re: last call

Mon 1 Jun 1998

Alan,

Thanks to digest mode I'm always behind the list discussion, so I never posted my reaction to your Nikuko IRC post some weeks ago. I loved it.

It gave me an idea, though. Couldn't someone program a Nikuko generator that takes a given text (as Nikuko did in your post) into an IRC discussion, speaks bits of it & mixes those bits with what other people are saying? It's been awhile, so I can't remember if you started doing this or if Nikuko just stuck to her text... but I remember that some of what the other IRC identities were putting out could've mixed interestingly with Nikuko. I also think Nik should've hung in there a bit longer; folks were just beginning to react.

Just an idea.

Keep posting your work.

Danny

[redacted]

↑ Index

14. Rachel Levitsky
Re: Naropa Readings
Mon 1 Jun 1998

Hello Listlings--

I've missed you. Off I've been for a long time and oops! didn't turn the darn thing off so now a thousand to delete or read. I can't choose. So many interesting dxs. Two quick works. 1) about stammering stuttering--look for Laura Mullen's brilliant _Tales of the Horror_ from Kelsey Street in Fall, a manuscript length tale written in the language of stammer and; 2) Here Here for Patrick Pritchett and his reports. He makes life that much sweeter here in Naropa land.

tidings,
Rachel D. Levitsky

P.S. It's been a trip having Rachel B. (DuPlessis) here this week, we both keep turning every time the word "Rachel" is stuttered.

Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>
> On Fri, 19 Jun 1998, Safdie Joseph wrote:
>
> > I know there's been some pretty heady competition for this award on the > > list in the past, but I hereby nominate Patrick Pritchett as electronic > > poetry reviewer par excellence!
> >
>
> ...Indeed, a Steve Carll for our time!

↑ Index

15. Jordan Davis
2 books by Karen Van Dyck
Mon 1 Jun 1998

A notice by Maria Margaronis in the May 29 TLS for two new titles by Karen Van Dyck on contemporary Greek poetry:

Kassandra and the Censors: Greek Poetry since 1967, 305 pp., Ithaca, NY: Cornell U Press (prices given in sterling)

and

The Rehearsal of Misunderstanding: Three collections by conbtemporary Greek women poets: The Cake, by Rhea Galanaki; Tales of the Deep, by Jenny Mastoraki; Hers, by Maria Laina (Bilingual edition) 336 pp., Hanover NH: U Pres of New England / Wesleyan University Press (prices in sterling)

From the review:

"The junta passed a law demanding that book titles correspond exactly to their contents; a group of writers countered with a volume called simply 'Eighteen Texts'. The junta condemned American popular culture while opening the gates to foreign imports and the CIA; poets and songwriters exposed the Colonels' looking-glass logic in paeans salted with the names of consumer durables. By the 1970s, direct parody had given way to strategic playbacks of the regime's mixed messages, underlining the writers' inevitable complicity in the culture they inhabited while rejecting clarity as dangerous and tainted. In Greece, poetic difficulty emerged not as a literary fashion but as an urgent response to a pressing political situation."

Just thought to mention it --
Jordan

↑ Index

16. R. Gancie
patterns of discovery
Mon 1 Jun 1998

"The phrase "distinguishable object" has figured in the foregoing. Counting can be only of the discrete. We cannot count the drops in a beaker of alcohol unless we first introduce a convention as to what will be regarded as "a drop." This agreed, we must then find a way of separating out these drops from one another in an invariant and uniform way. Moreover, objects are distinguishable because we distinguish them. The world is not all cut up for us in advance, just waiting to be numbered; processes and events are not marked with dotted lines for ease in numerical tabulation. Counting is seldom undertaken just for its own sake, or for verbal exercise. We count when we can make significant connections between the discernible entities we are counting. We enumerate, not anything and everything, but only that which our questions, hyptheses, and theories earmark as relevant. Counting, therefore, helps make our ideas precise-our ideas not only about the quantitative nature of things but also about the nature of counting itself. We come to know, implicitly at least, what can and what cannot be counted. This knowledge gets built into our questions about nature, so to speak...."---from Perception and Discovery: An Introduction to Scientific Inquiry by Norwood Russell Hanson---cp

↑ Index

17. Jordan Davis
2/5
Mon 1 Jun 1998

---

while I'm at it, saw a documentary on Karadzic last night on PBS, at one point, the ex-poet is surveying Sarajevo from the hills, accompanied by a Russian poet, Limonov (?), they come to a sniper position, and Karadzic shows Limonov how to work the high-powered assault weapon, which Limonov fires into the city ..

where were we?
Jordan

↑ Index

18. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Nice review and NAW #16
Mon 1 Jun 1998

Nice review in most recent Georgia Review by Fred Muratori of Rosmarie Waldrop, Paul Hoover, Amy Gerstler and others. Check it out.

NEW AMERICAN WRITING #16 is about to appear. Work by many list folks and related people: Michael Palmer, Barbara Guest, Loss Pequeno Glazier, Connie Deanovich, Aaron Shurin, Cole Swensen, Nathaniel Mackey, Rodrigo Toscano, Ricardo Cortez Cruz, Ray DiPalma, Clayton Eshleman, and many mjany others. Joe Brainard Cover. 250 pages. Our biggest issue yet! 8 bucks.

Reading for NAW at Small Press Traffic, New College, Friday, June 12. Participants are Barbara Guest, Aaron Shurin, Cydney Chadwick, Rodrigo Toscano, and Brandon Downing.

Best to all,

Maxine Chernoff

↑ Index

19. Roger Farr
Re: submissions
Mon 1 Jun 1998

Hello,

I read your post on the Buffalo poetics list and thought I might make contact w/ you, and enquire about your call for chapbooks/submissions. I have a chapbook-length "experimental" poem I've been working on, called "Incomplete Catalog: Variations." Portions of it have appeared in a small-mag I co-produce here (Vancouver, BC) called "estrus".

Below is one "set" from the series. Each "set" is composed of 3 five-line "stanzas", which are variations of 10 words, linked by two alternating conjunctions or prepositions. The poem is partly informed by Gertrude Stein's theories of composition. Let me know if you'd like me to send you more via snail-mail.

Yours,

Roger Farr

INCOMPLETE CATALOG: VARIATIONS 6-9 semblance to living

color of theatre

object to odor

surface of scene

forenzic to detail

scene of semblance odor to living

color of surface

forenzic to theatre

detail of object

living to surface

theatre of detail

scene to forenzic

color of odor

object to semblance

. . .

↑ Index

20. Roger Farr
Re: submissions
Mon 1 Jun 1998

---

oops! re: submissions was supposed to go somewhere else! please ignore

RF

↑ Index

21. Erik Sweet
Re: submissions
Mon 1 Jun 1998

I am confused. are you submitting to our magazine, "Tool a Magazine" if you are let me know because we are doing the first issue now, which includes such monument superheavies as, Charles Bernstein, Jordan Davis, Hoa Nguyen, Anselm Berrigan, Pierre Joris and much much more- oh well, if you were sending it elsewhere, ok

erik sweet
"Tool a Magazine"

↑ Index

22. Erik Sweet
sorry for the con(fusion)
Mon 1 Jun 1998

Somebody sent me a message saying they were submitting to "Tool a Magazine" but was also sent to Poetics Listy I am confused because many send their submissions email and well, they are still coming in for the first issue which is half prepared and i didn't know if it was for me- o swell

so if you sent somehting and I not hear yet, we are still reading... it was long last semester busters! the first issue which has amny poets and art work / drama will be printed in July

erik sweet

↑ Index

23. Christopher W. Alexander
Remarks on Alan's work (and stuff)
Mon 1 Jun 1998

¶ Congrats to dbkk on the Examiner article!!
Congrats also for making Lingua Franca, and without the trouble and muss of abusing any impressionable students.

¶ Anybody out there familiar with a French band by the name of "Kat Onoma"? I happened to notice a page just now that mentions their second album, Stock Phrases, which apparently "is based upon the works of the American poet Jack Spicer". !?

¶ It's great to see Alan's work being discussed and/or argued here, I'm only sorry I didn't catch any of this over the wkend when I would have had more time to digest it - now I'm at work and comments have to be kept to a minim, esp. as I've already 'wasted' some time today on poetix; not to mention there's a 'net technical staff meeting going on right outside my office, and the air is heavy with data and acronyms...

Alan knows how I feel about his wrtg - working with him to publish Jennifer has had a tremendous impact on my thinking and on my own wrtg, which I haven't bothered to conceal. I'm only now coming to really =understand= parts of his project (i.e., not just comprehend them intellectually); other parts remain wholly unfamiliar to me. if I haven't digested the work in its totality, that's only because it's composed of variable intensities none of which are fully *comprehended by the work itself, outward turnings and assemblings that destroy and incompletely destroy the work's integrity - to my reading, it's as a vase AND a handful of shards, and neither; all of which aspects I think are necessary. I don't think I can say more about this just now, other than to caution that I'm not using Modernist (and decidedly not postmodernist, at least in one of its aspects) terminology - i.e., not the same atotality (ha ha Webern) proposed at that time.

certainly there are aspects of the work that are disturbing in the extreme, yes even traumatic. "handful of shards". the project is dangerous - which is not just a way of excusing offensive material. it should be pretty obvious, however anyone feels about them, that the Nikuko poems aren't *synonymous with JAPANESE SCHOOLGIRL ALL-ANAL ACTION etc. etc. ad nauseum - though they obviously position themselves in relation to this and other fetishizing discourses. possibly we should remind ourselves that poetry can be an address (to problems and to persons), and not just a 'symptom'.

to my thinking, Alan's work takes up quite deliberately and with concern those aspects of it which most (ALL) of us find threatening - subjects or persons as fetishized, dissolved, partial, becoming -n. this runs in a continuum from the negative/terrifying to the +/revolutionary; or, more than apt than a continuum, I'd say that any 'single point' in these poems - any statement or idea - positions itself in relation to these extremes and innumerable other points, without being reducible to any of them. to read the work or even any part of the work as 'just pornography' is to miss innumerable other intensities; to read it as wholly 'revolutionary' is equally a mistake. it's relation to the material is not *simply ironic, and I'm not sure that its mode isn't too complex even for the term "ironic".

e.g., the (necessary) departure from EGO as a false wholism manifests here in relation to technology as

EGO >>> machine person overcome/destroyed by machine, person automated and routinized; programmed (compliant), reified (made whole)

but that same departure, even at the same point manifests as

EGO >>> cyborg person as deconstr./assemblage with machine, person activated and transformative; revolutionary (noncompliant), transpersonal (composed of partial objects)

a similar, and possibly more troubling nexus occurs in relation to (mostly sexual) desire, between the exploded ego and/or body as fetishized/pacified AND/OR desiring/activated, where desire is understood (as unfortunately it so rarely is here) as a destructive force. The accusation can be (has been) levelled that Alan fetishizes women in his work prior even to the body of desire as it occurs there - I've always been bothered by this to the extent that it seems fully appropriate to say this of (we assume) a Man writing about Women, but not for instance of Acker's work in relation to 'her' gender or Burrough's in relation to 'his', as if the work doesn't announce itself anyway as trying to destroy 'natural' categories like MAN and WOMAN, that last safe binary, saving grace.

(I can't emphasize enough that the enforcement of Gender as binary is pervasive and accounts for the frightened neglect or misunderstanding of some really great, risky stuff out there - not to mention the painful, distorting effect it has on us as persons, trying to force our desire/experience into rigid gender criteria, even if we're "sophisticated" enough to parrot back the vocabulary of constructivism...

"William 's cuttin off his fingers so they'll fit into the glove".)

- anyway, I think that read is reductive in that it neglects Alan's (the poems') keen awareness of "Alan" as another figure constructed in/by his work - not author, not in control or variably in control, not whole. Alan is as much Jennifer as he is the Alan, I can see the Alan sometimes moving from Jennifer to Alan as Julu and so forth in its identifications - but trying I think, hardest of all NOT to identify or be identifiable.

okay, a much longer post than I intended but I'm not sorry. obviously I'm partial to Alan's work (ha Ha) but I don't mean to invalidate anyone's response - only to reiterate and broaden Joe's remark to read further (farther? not father).

chris - steeped in the lore of the old watusi

..

Christopher W. Alexander etc. / nominative press collective

email: [redacted]
snail-mail: P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402
press/zine site: http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/

↑ Index

24. Chris McCreary

address query

Mon 1 Jun 1998

I'm looking for an e address for New York poet Greg Fuchs. A backchannel would be much appreciated...

Thanks--

Chris McCreary

↑ Index

25. Loss Pequen~o Glazier

New at the EPC / New author pages

Mon 1 Jun 1998

I am pleased to announce new links & resources at the EPC:

Arras (connect)
Crayon mag home page
Frank Kuenstler 1928-1996
Reviews of Naropa Summer/Fall Readings 1997
Deluxe Rubber Chicken
Paul Celan (connect)

I want to also point out three splendid new author pages:

Jack Spicer (page by Chris Alexander)
Alice Notley (page by Mark Peters)
Bruce Andrews (page by Mark Peters)

These are musts to visit! (Also valuable for possible class use.) Thanks for a tremendous job to Chris and Mark! On the heels of our discussion some months back of single author issues of magazines, I think these pages stand as exemplary tributes to these authors; and with a million transactions a year at the EPC, serve as a viable way to circulate some words to many folks. There are still opportunities for this kind of development (A current Author Page Call will be posted under separate cover.)

==========
As ever, the EPC is at
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/
Click on "new" for links to these new pages.
==========

↑ Index

26. Loss Pequen~o Glazier

EPC Author Page Call (June 1998)

Mon 1 Jun 1998

This is a current (June, 1998) version of the EPC Author Page Call for contributions: ==========
We are asking people to consider contributing to the EPC author page development initiative. We feel there are certain key authors who should have a page at the EPC. Since you may also be working on/reading some of these authors, helping to create their page might be a simple matter, and might be a natural tie-in to ongoing research and/or writing projects.

What is an author page? Our basic aim is to create a place where links to resources in various web locations by and about the author might be gathered. (Additionally, if the author would agree to notify me of future web publications of their work, that would also be helpful.) In addition, in an EPC author page, we often seek to make available some new-to-the-web textual and/or visual resources, items specific to the EPC. But this is not necessarily required.

