certain age, with long gray hair spouting from the sides of his cap and a heavy Bronx accent said: “ Hi Doug, what do ya’ have in there a Blonde?’ I said: “Well my wife is here, she’s sort of blondish.” I asked him in but I guess he sensed I was in no condition for company. He declined and promptly took a cab back to his hotel.

Since then I have had the opportunity to meet him on a couple of occasions. Fox is full of anecdotes about many of the stumblebums, poets, poseurs, publishers, editors, with all their infinite variety, on the small press scene. I am glad this manuscriopt has seen the light of day. And when you read it hopefully you will see the light too."

--Doug Holder (2006)

I don’t remember when I first became aware of Hugh Fox. He was a prolific writer across all genres. It might have been through one of the many reviews he wrote for the Small Press Review; it might be from the manuscripts he sent me to publish, or through the many poets of the “Invisible Generation” (A term he used to describe his peer group of writers) he befriended over the years. Whatever you say about Fox, he wasn’t a cliché of a man—he was a total original. He was a PhD with a big disdain for the academy; his breadth of knowledge left me breathless; he could be incredibly kind and incredibly rude, but I loved him warts and all—-hey ain’t that what love is afterall?

I asked Fox a few years ago what he would like to be remembered for. He told me: "That I reminded people to take a close look and engage the world around them.” Fox took it all in: from sex, the Aztecs, religion, the meaning of being, the meaning of meaning…you name it.

He was a firm believer in the small press—not the New York publishing houses where the buck is the bottom line. It was his religion, his passion, to review the thousands of small press books of all genres for the late Len Fulton’s Small Press Review, and other publications. To Hugh, the chap, or the big tome was all high holy. Nothing was too obscure, too raw. He called many a writer a “genius,” but what I think what he really was tring to say he recognized the genius in all of us.

He took many a writer under his wing. He could be unapologetically flirtatious but more often that not he would charm the pants off you—and in his younger days I am sure he literally did. Hugh had a huge cadre of writers that were the objects of his affection.

He introduced me and countless others to the short form or capsule book review. In one of his short reviews he could really get to the core of the book with an economy of words, and he nixed the deadening academic jargon that could bleed the life out of any writing.

I would get unexpected calls late at night from Fox. He would say: “ Hey I miss you pal—why haven’t you called?” When I was laid off of my job of many years he offered to put me and my wife up at his home in Ann Arbor; he lobbied for me to be included in the important avant-garde poetry anthology “ Inside the Outside.” Fox told me he loved me more than once… and you know what?... I truly think he did.

I thought that Fox would never die. He told me for years he was on his last legs with cancer, and his time was short. He even wrote a play that concerned him and the noted small press poet Lo Galluccio, meeting cute while in the throes of ovarian and prostate cancer. To my knowledge Galluccio has never suffered from ovarian cancer, but she was a dear friend of Fox and he included a lot of us in his work.

As Samuel Beckett wrote: “ We are born astride the grave,” and Fox is gone. He died in a hospice in Michigan at 79, heavily sedated, out of pain finally, drifting up into the ether in a dream—to the cosmos—to that grand poem— infinity.

Truck rolls on into September - Which way is left?

Mon 5 Sep 2011

After a bit of holiday weekend transmission difficulties, Truck is up and running smoothly--or will be as soon as YOU contribute to it. Yes, back seat drivers are actively desired. The wheel is waiting for your direction. On the windshield you'll find a few questions. Answer them honestly or answer them wildly, straightly, queerly, or as very slantly and quite delightfully askew as you please to pleasure us. As creative or confessional (or creatively confessional, if you must) as you see fit.

You'll find the details in the passenger seat of Truck: http://halvard-johnson.blogspot.com/2011/09/which-way-is-left.html.

Cheers,

Tod

If the challenge of our time is the challenge of empathy, to make an empathetic relation; that is, to see another person, to feel their pain, story, whatever--that--that how can a poetic material making be part of--of that?

*New from SAY IT WITH STONES - j/j hastain's *long past the presence of common
Mon 5 Sep 2011

I'm pleased to announce the latest title from SAY IT WITH STONES (an emanation of Interbirth Books): j/j hastain's _long past the presence of common_!!!

To learn more & to purchase, please visit http://sayitwithstones.com/?page_id=333 long past the presence of common is a revolutionary document -- a collection of poetry, collage, and scripts that challenges a political stability premised on always already repressive and hypocritical social norms and practices. This work takes strategies of categorization, simplification, and reduction to task for their failure to acknowledge the fundamental instability and unpredictability of organic energy and, in the process, it unleashes a radical assault on psycho/sexual conservatism, cultural conventionality, and spiritual stasis.

Answer from BlazeVOX + Upcoming readings

Mon 5 Sep 2011

With all the needless controversy surrounding BlazeVOX that we've seen recently, including some poets apparently backing away from their association with the press, I think it's a good time to announce my new BlazeVOX book

Answer on this list. And with publisher Geoffrey Gatza having recently affirmed that BlazeVOX will indeed go forward, there has never been a better time to support this vital 21st Century publisher.

http://www.blazevox.org/index.php/Shop/Poetry/answer-by-mark-ducharme-239/

Answer by Mark DuCharme
Poetry
Paperback: 104 pages
Binding: Perfect-Bound Publisher: BlazeVOX [books]
ISBN: 978-1-60964-053-8

"Excuse me, what was the question," Mark DuCharme asks coyly in this in this, his fourth collection. Yet don't expect any easy answers, because these edgy lyrics aren't about to give them. Instead, the book presents a "reflecting, sexy discourse," a poetics of often intimate response, an entanglement with the phenomenal world which insists always on the pleasure of reading as a value in its own right.

"Enter a shimmering, wavering, vacillating, crinkly reality, the mysterious acrobatic disjointing of what you thought you knew. Enter Mark DuCharme's Answer, where the self-evident succumbs to the agnostic as a wizardly lyric unpins certainty. Brilliantly unpredictable, these poems divine by assemblage of a familiar quotidian and set us wondering." —Maureen Owen

http://www.blazevox.org/index.php/Shop/Poetry/answer-by-mark-ducharme-239/

I also wanted to announce a couple of upcoming readings to launch the book: On Monday, September 19th I'll be reading in the "So, You're a Poet" series at the Laughing Goat Coffee Shop, 1709 Pearl Street, Boulder, CO. I'll be reading with Laura E. Wright, author of Part of the Design and co-editor (with Anne Waldman) of Beats at Naropa. The featured reading starts at 9 p.m., and is preceded by an open reading at 8:00. On Wednesday, October 26th I'll be reading at 7 p.m. at Innisfree Poetry Bookstore & Cafe, 1203 13th Street Suite A, Boulder, CO.

I hope to see you there!

Mark DuCharme

SMALL PRESS COLLECTION AT ENDICOTT COLLEGE Wants You!
Wed 7 Sep 2011

SMALL PRESS COLLECTION AT ENDICOTT COLLEGE

BEVERLY, MASS.

Doug Holder, Adjunct Instructor of English and head of the office of the Ibbetson Street Press at Endicott College (Beverly, Mass.) has started a small press book collection with the help of Brian Courtemanche Director of Endicott's Halle Library, and his staff: Audrey Koke and Kristyl Roderiques. Holder, a widely published poet, and arts editor of The Somerville News, has long run his own lauded independent small press and literary magazine "Ibbetson Street" from his home in Somerville, Mass. Holder has long admired the great small press collections at the University of Buffalo and Brown University, and has always wanted to bring books of poetry, novels, etc..from the vast and eclectic sea of independent presses from this country and abroad to Endicott College. The Library's website now has a link to the collection: http://www.endicott.edu/Academics/AcadResources/~/media/LibraryMediaLibrary/PDFs/Ibbetson.ashx and it will be updated twice a year. The books listed so far are only a small portion of the books received.

We hope to have an extensive collection and we would love for you to be part of it. Send your donations to :

Some Math by Bill Luoma, new from Kenning Editions
Fri 9 Sep 2011

Kenning Editions is pleased to announce the publication of /Some Math/ by Bill Luoma.

In /Some Math/, the syncopations of poetry meet the (ir)regularity of mathematical equations. Consider the "story problems" of high school math class. When encountering the word "and," replace it with the addition symbol "+." When encountering the word "of," replace it with the multiplication symbol "x." Now reverse the process. The result is a series of sound poems that both employ and interrogate the global language of systems and networks. Astrophysics. Computer science. Short tetrameters. Long dactyls. 9/11. US military strategy. The energy pathways of acupuncture. The fish ladders of Gmail. The wires and electrodes of torture. The swirling products of global capital. Mathematician Benjamin Pierce called his field "the science that draws necessary conclusions." You do the math.

Bill Luoma is the author of /Works and Days/, /Dear Dad/, /Swoon Rocket/, and /Western Love/.

Poetry & trains were meant to be

Fri 9 Sep 2011

I have an great fall lineup of readings, starting with Grey Borders in St. Catharines, Ontario, on Friday, September 23.

I'll be reading with Shannon Maguire, Aisha Sasha John, and Zorras Multimedia Troupe—a treat to be reading with these terrific poets! And many thanks to Eric Schmaltz and Niagara Artists Centre for making this event happen.

Then on to Toronto, Ottawa, Kingston, Washington DC, and New York. Details: http://rogueembryo.wordpress.com/camille-martins-upcoming-events/

I'll have copies of Codes of Public Sleep and Sonnets at each stop on the tour, but if you'd like to get a copy now, just go to my website, which lists clickable vendors for these books:

http://www.camillemartin.ca

I'm doing all these trips by VIA Rail and Amtrak. There's nothing better for writing than a window seat on a train . . .

Cheers!

Alan--

You must be going through a really difficult time these days. Know that I have been thinking about you. It really doesn't matter how old one's parent is. They always die too soon, and if the relationship has been a difficult one, there seems to be a second death as well: the death of hope that the relationship will improve.

I hope you are taking extra care with rest and food during such a stressful time.

best,
Martha

100 Thousand Poets for Change Organizes Largest Poetry Event in History

Number of Participants Worldwide Growing Daily

650 events in 450 cities and 95 countries will take place on September 24 to promote environmental, social, and political change. Poets, writers, artists will create, perform and demonstrate in their communities, and decide their own specific area of focus for change within the framework of peace and sustainability, which founder Michael Rothenberg stated, ".is a major concern worldwide and the guiding principle for this global event."

Bob Holman and Margery Snyder, in a recent article on About.com said, "the beauty of the concept of 100 Thousand Poets for Change is that it is completely decentralized and completely inclusive." All those involved are hoping, through their actions and events, to seize and redirect the political and social dialogue of the day and turn the narrative of civilization towards peace and sustainability.

In Mexico there are over 30 events, with 18 poetic actions in Mexico City, where poets as well as environmental and political activists are hoping to encourage reflection and creative responses against systemic violence through the written and the spoken word with day long street events, readings and workshops. More than a third of these events are organized by collectives actively working towards a non-violent approach to solve the country's most pressing problems.

To date there are over 260 events in the United States. There are 20 events statewide in North Carolina where teacher/poets have mobilized to protest cuts in education funding. And along the Platte River near Omaha, Nebraska, poets will be demonstrating against TransCanada's planned Keystone XL tar sands pipeline. More examples of events can be found at the 100 Thousand Poets for Change www.100TPC.org. Each event organizer has an Event Location blog page on the website for posting, poetry, artwork, photos, and video to document this global mega-event across national borders.

Immediately following September 24th all documentation on the 100TPC.org website will be preserved by Stanford University in California, which has recognized 100 Thousand Poets for Change as an historical event, the largest poetry reading in history. They will archive the complete contents of the website, 100TPC.org, as part of their digital archiving program LOCKSS.

Founder Michael Rothenberg is a widely known poet, editor of the online literary magazine Bigbridge.org and an environmental activist based in Northern California.

"The Lost Way of Stones is built around indigenous rock art found in Southern California, including that of the Chumash Indians who lived mainly along the Santa Barbara Channel; and art made by Shoshonean peoples that is located on the Naval Air Weapons Station, near Death Valley, CA., where, contrasting human creativity with its destructive shadow, it is "one of the most spectacular concentrations of rock art sites in North America." Herso: An Heirship in Waves
by Susana Gardner

http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/9780982573143/herso.aspx

"I don't know another poet so formally daring. Rebellious curlicue and lace significant: the pages gleam with pleasure, finesse and audacious measure of human becoming. A consideration of feminine inheritance, rebirth paroled by langue, a her(o)'s journey as decadently articulated as sea-froth. Find it too pretty at your peril—you'll get pricked by the fine point on this punning"—Catherine Wagner.

It’s a pleasure to watch Susana Gardner stretch the language out to its full wingspan, displaying the gendered presumptions that give it flight. Her writing lines up “our turmoils in filched onus rows,” then ships them out via “Rouged Ifs” and charged “stutterance” toward “a restless and scattered hopeful.” Herso is my her(o): froward, many-minded, multi-tongued. —Rodney Koeneke

If Susana Gardner didn’t exist we’d need to invent her Right Now. You’ll want to travel with her, as sometimes you just want to wake up into language in a red-gold way, hearing all the voices, where we’re going. Like a self picked up in echosound, flipping & flick-flacking. HD & Loy & Woolf & Barnes suddenly re-born on a twenty-first-century beach. That continual discovery of what it means to step out in to the day, the gift & adventure of it. Herso rings with rich footsteps, archaic, playful, tongued.—Carol Watts * * * Carolyn Forché calls Susana Gardner's first full-length collection, [LAPSED INSEL WEARY], "an extended social lyric of longing that refuses isolation because the 'grandmany' is all around, in ancestry and memory and books and shared future.... This poetry is full of heart and intelligence." Geraldine Monk calls it "Disturbingly beautiful" while Elizabeth Treadwell describes the work as "architecturally wild and sturdy."

About the author: Susana Gardner is the author of the full-length poetry collections HERSO (Black Radish Books, 2011) and [LAPSED INSEL WEARY] (The Tangent Press, 2008). She has published several chapbooks, including Hyper-Phantasie Constructs (Dusie Kollektiv, 2010) andHerso (University of Theory and Memorabilia Press, 2009). Her poetry has appeared in many online and print publications including Jacket, How2, Puerto Del Sol, and Cambridge Literary Reviewamong others. Her work has also been featured in several anthologies, including 131.839 slög með bilum (131,839 keystrokes with spaces) (Ntamo, Finland, 2007) and NOT FOR MOTHERS ONLY: CONTEMPORARY POEMS ON CHILD-GETTING AND CHILD-REARING (Fence Books, United States, 2007). She lives in Zürich, Switzerland, where she also edits and curates the online poetics journal and experimental kollektiv press Dusie.

Aleph Null: new interactive net art

ALEPH NULL
http://turbulence.org/spotlight/alephnull
by Jim Andrews

Aleph Null is a new work of generative art I wrote in JavaScript using the HTML 5 canvas tag. It's a visual piece and goes in some unusual, exciting directions, visually.

The last year has mainly been one of 're-tooling', for me. I've been learning JavaScript at a deeper level. And learning jQuery, jQuery UI, and the canvas tag commands. Previously, I'd been using Director to create my net art works. But that proprietary piece of software is almost dead. JavaScript, on the other hand, is public, open source, and on the upswing. Aleph Null is the first piece I've created after my year-long study of JavaScript and related things.

I feel like there's some more territory for me to explore concerning the canvas tag. But Aleph Null gets in there at some depth.

Listening Sounding Writing: An Ecopoetics Workshop with Jonathan Skinner

Tue 13 Sep 2011

Listening Sounding Writing: An Ecopoetics Workshop with Jonathan Skinner
September 29 to October 2

The Millay Colony for the Arts offers four-day retreat workshops on Colony's sylvan setting. Each class includes twelve hours of workshop time, all meals, and ample time to work, ruminate and explore our lush natural surroundings. Private bedrooms and spacious private studios are available for all participants.

Workshop Description: This workshop focuses on soundscape as an approach to changing our writing practice. Listening and field recording techniques will be integrated with writing and discussion, around the following concerns. A word is intervention in the whole design landscape. We stalk our poems in the debris field, listen for what water does, once it hears a mouth open. Listen for what we cannot see or hear. From the out to the inside of other bodies, sounding with our own. Listening for the dead, in touch with the living. What wants to be heard in this world and how can we be ready to hear?

How can the inertial heft, the fact of our own perspective, be useful in its very limitations? Let’s practice poetry as an ear to the earth. “The Orphic explication of the Earth,” wrote Mallarmé, “impersonal and alive.” Listening also helps us know what to do, when we hear what we are listening for. It is usually something we already are doing. But knowing so wakes us to how poetry matters, to better focus our sounding and advocacy.

We’ll meet outdoors, approach local soundscapes, translate bird and insect song, walk with our ears, and write out of deep listening. We'll track sounds with Ak’abal, Eigner, Howe, Johnson, Khlebnikov, MacLow, Neidecker, Patton, O’Sullivan, Vicuña, amongst others. In addition to poems (new or renewed) we’ll try our hand at field recordings, and scoring/ writing sound walks.

Jonathan Skinner's poetry collections include Birds of Tifft (BlazeVOX, 2011), With Naked Foot (Little Scratch Pad Press, 2009) and Political Cactus Poems (Palm Press, 2005). He founded and edits the journal ecopoetics (www.ecopoetics.org), which features creative- critical intersections between writing and ecology. Skinner also writes ecocriticism on contemporary poetry and poetics: his essays on the poets Ronald Johnson and Lorine Niedecker appeared in volumes published by the National Poetry Foundation and by University of Iowa Press. His essays on urban landscape and poetics have appeared in Qui Parle (19.2) and in the Ecolanguage Reader (2011). Skinner is a 2011-2012 fellow with Cornell Society for the Humanities.

Workshop Schedule: Each day begins with a fresh breakfast followed by a three- hour workshop at 10:00 AM. Total workshop time for the retreat will be twelve hours. The afternoon can be spent working in the studio, visiting local sites, swimming in a nearby lake or walking the mountain trails. Dinner is served overlooking our gorgeous meadows. Evening hours are devoted to worktime.

Fees: $600 includes tuition, private room, private studio and all meals. $375 includes tuition and meals only. Workshop is limited to seven participants.

2nd Annual Malpais Review Poetry Reading, ABQ Sept 18

Tue 13 Sep 2011

The second annual Malpais Review poetry reading will be held from 2-5PM at Alamosa Books (8810 Holly Ave.) in the northeast heights of Albuquerque on Sept. 18. Poets who have published (or have work accepted) in the Review will present their poems. Among the poets who will read are: Tony Mares, Lauren Camp, Larry Goodell, Amalio Madueno, Ken Gurney, Kathleen Johnson, Marilyn Stablein, Dale Harris and many others.

http://malpaisreview.com/ "The Badlands are everywhere"
http://www.alamosabooks.com/node/542

The event is free and the public is invited to attend. The shopping center is at Paseo & Ventura, with a Trader Joe's at one end and Alamosa Books at the opposite end.

The Malpaís Review seeks to expand upon New Mexico's rich and diverse cultural heritage by bringing together poetry, poetry translation, essays on aspects of poetry from writers around the state and beyond.

The issues will be published quarterly. Each issue will take 10 to 20 pages for one featured writer with the remaining pages open to everyone else. Some interior pages may be used for black and white artwork.

A Book About A Candle Burning in a Shed
by Paige Ackerson-Kiely

They called me down and I went down and arrived. My uniform was basically clean; a life alone makes the need for external demonstration almost disappear, but not fully. One thing I hate is when you get there and its all over. Like felled trees after a storm you have to cut up and drag them off the road. But not really the same thing. I knew it would be an important day when someone first hollered help in my direction. Mostly it is small jobs, unlocking cars and checking on the elderly. Sometimes they think I am their son and cry when I leave. Other times they are pretty much dead and I call the paramedics. None of the situations is good. I was north of town when the dispatcher crackled to me. Her clothes found in the river, hung up on some rocks, probably she got taken in the storm but I was still uneasy, even though nature is out of my hands, which should be a relief like it is to be a child and not a man. Beside the river there was an old mattress and a womans swimsuit, the kind that was in style 5 years ago, with ties on either side of the leg openings that you cinch or relax, depending on company. Waters high and full of silt, and it smelled like squash bugs and my ex-girlfriends neck when she worried about money. There was never enough of anything but I guess I got used to it. She was still beautiful from a distance and always in my memory delivered on a soft cloud. I didnt make a grab for her shirt as it drifted away, there on the banks, sun as bright as Id ever seen it. I was afraid to be pulled under.

amsterdam this sunday evening Beats in Translation | Music | mini book-fair

Tue 13 Sep 2011

This is about a poetry music evening in Perdu (on the large canal between Munt & Nieuwmarkt) the evening is free, but the theatre is not so large and so "reserve to avoid disappointment" by emailing or telephoning, details below. http://perdu.nl/agenda.cfm This is a very full program, there is a bar too. The theme is Amsterdam in translation - translations of Beat poets (now & then) and Rodaan al galidi (from Iraq) - his Zorro poetry. We'll also have live music.

Beat Poets and Beyond. Amsterdam in Translation.
Book launch, poster launch, live music, poetry in translation projected onto video screen. All for free!

What: A free evening of music and poetry in Perdu, with a mini book-fair. Hosted by Sahand Sahebdivani Who: Louise Landes Levi, Rodaan al Galidi, Hans Plomp, David Miller, Sahand Sahebdivani, Cralan Kelder. Details & Program: Amsterdam in Translation - Vinkenoog's J A C K K E R O U A C Amsterdam Calling translated by Simon and Louise Landes Levi who will read the English. Hans Plomp will read the Dutch on Simon's behalf. Rodaan al Galidi's Zorro translated by Cralan Kelder who will read the English. Rodaan will unveil a new poetry poster and read the Dutch. Cralan will also introduce his new book Give Some Word. David Miller is traveling from London to play clarinet and read from his newly released Spiritual Letters (Chax Press 2011). Louise - LLL will also read from Tower 2 /TARA or dc-x and her translations written with Henri Michaux and play Sarangi to accompany David Miller. LLL studied sarangi under Ali Akvar Khan in Basel. There will be a mini-book fair with poetry books and magazines. Translations will be projected on a video screen for EZ-reading pleasure.

Where: Perdu, Kloveniersburgwal 86, Amsterdam
When: Sunday 18 September from 19:30 onwards
Cost: Free, but please reserve to avoid disappointment. Send an email to [redacted] or call 020-4220542
Sponsored by Perdu Bookshop

Rodaan al Galidi is an Iraqi refugee living more than 10 years in Holland - where it rains a lot. We are now working on translations of his work:

Rain

Hey rain,
why do you fall here?
Are you blind, egotistical, are you crazy?
Why do you open umbrella's here when you can open flowers there?

Thirsty seeds wait for you to rip through the darkness and lay a shadow.
Naked branches,
beg woodstoves for one more day.
Rivers
try to recall the sea and redness dries on hands.

Rain
why are you a shower for green when you can be her life?
Hey rain,
why do you fall on rain?

David Miller's Spiritual Letters (ongoing) has just been released in a full edition from Chax:

...letter by letter. Having no wish to be detained by clever fabrications, stories that might distract. A dark courtyard, a lecture on aesthetics. – And if art is only lies, for the sake of rapture and power? Facing the wall, away from the wind, she struck a match for her cigarette – the flame drawing my look. Feckless, volatile girl; in the dream she began shouting at me as I turned away from her. – Flung across the hospital room by the Holy Ghost, the musician said. A phone-call: the driver survived; he died – the friend I'd stopped seeing. I thought of how he'd insisted on reading poem after poem to me at dinner; I'd looked (but not wanting to) at the spittle ejected upon his lip as he spoke the words. Faces of friends by my bed. Memory's unquenched: her long hair that she tossed around her neck; her hand that reached for mine. Eye toward eye.... Slow phleboclysis (drop by drop; into the vein).

Louise Landes Levi will read from her translations of Simon Vinkenoog and Henri Michaux:

HM & ME

Everyone

wants to know abt. Michaux/ I already wrote about him, but they want to know more,

All

I remember are the old men in the café where I did the translation

& the tailor, the quiet man who sold suits/ they're gone now, the men, the suits, the poet,

I

 visit the place & smell the old aromas, they must be in a dream/ I

I can see things as they were & as they are/

Knowing

 I can't ever explain to you what it was really like, what the great man & I really said, as the afternoons wore away, reading poems & chatting

 like any 2

old friends

"Oh, Bleek Strategies" at the Newberry Library
Wed 14 Sep 2011

"Oh, Bleek Strategies" at the Newberry Library

Wednesday, October 5, 2011 (6-8 p.m.)

Newberry Library
60 West Walton Street
Chicago, IL 60610-3380

You are invited to attend "Oh, Bleek Strategies," a Chicago Calling event that includes literary, musical, kinetic, and multidisciplinary performances that creatively play around with and pay homage to Oblique Strategies. Oblique Strategies is a deck of creative strategy cards created by Peter Schmidt and Brian Eno; Peter Schmidt would have been 80 this year. This event is free and open to the public. "Oh, Bleek Strategies" is part of the Sixth Annual Chicago Calling Arts Festival and Chicago Artists Month.

Oh, Bleek Strategies includes— • "The Red Thread Project: Oh, Bleek Strategies Knitting Circle," with Lindsay Obermeyer (Chicago), Corinne D. Peterson (Chicago), and other participants. • H. V. Cramond (writer & editor, Chicago) and Seth Berg (poet & sculptor, Chaska, MN) • Erin Teegarden (Chicago), Mairead Case (Chicago) and other participants • "Oh, Bleek Surrealist Taxis" – with Helen Scarlett O'Neill (curator & performance designer, London), Harry Ross, curator & director, London), Anthony Poretti (percussionist, Chicago), Michael Erzen and his artbot (kinetic sculptor), Chicago), Mari Frogner (dancer, London), and Dan Godston (writer, Chicago). This performance will involve a live video feed with London. Performers at the Newberry Library will be using Oblique Strategies cards to help direct a surrealist taxi in London.

2011 CHICAGO CALLING ARTS FESTIVAL The Borderbend Arts Collective presents the Sixth Annual Chicago Calling Arts Festival, a multi-disciplinary collaboration festival that happens during Chicago Artists Month. During Chicago Calling, people in the Chicago area work with people outside of Chicago -- both here in the U.S. and abroad. These collaborations include a range of art forms, such as music, dance, film, literature, and intermedia -- and they are prepared or improvised. Some Chicago Calling events involve live feeds between Chicago and other locations. Many Chicago Calling events also include partnerships with local arts organizations and other institutions.

CHICAGO ARTISTS MONTH Chicago Artists Month is a citywide, collaborative effort showcasing Chicago visual artists and their work throughout the month of October. Coordinated by the Chicago Department of Cultural Affairs and Special Events in partnership with the Chicago Office of Tourism and Culture, Chicago Artists Month showcases over 200 events, ranging from exhibitions to open studio tours and neighborhood art walks presented by museums, galleries, cultural centers, artist collaboratives, and other organizations throughout the city. The primary goal of Chicago Artists Month is to raise awareness of the extraordinary quality and depth of our visual arts community. Explore this site to see what happened during Chicago Artists Month 2010!

This year's theme, "Artful Networks," explores the communities that nurture and inspire Chicago artists and their work. The people with whom artists choose to work can be supportive in encouraging creative growth, experimentation, dialogue among peers, and community building. Ranging from traditional residency programs to collaboratives to informal relationships, our communities impact the way we create, support and appreciate art. In celebration of the Alliance of Artists Communities' 20th Anniversary Conference, which takes place in Chicago from October 19 to 22, Chicago Artists Month 2011 looks at the various ways artists in Chicago are influenced by their social environments.

Re: 100 Thousand Poets for Change Organizes Largest Poetry Event in History - We're almost there! 9/24

Wed 14 Sep 2011

Its a great event to which we are honoured to be contributing to here in Tullamore, Irelanbd through the readings of Anthony Sullivan, Ken Hume, myself and others, and the launch of POETS FOR CHANGE TV @ http://www.world.tc/poets_for_change_tv featuring local poets and global poetry on the topic of change in human rights, the environment and business and society, with more additions daily.

We hope to be able to live broadcast a reading from Tullamore if we can.

Roll on September 24th!!!!

100 Thousand Poets for Change Organizes Largest Poetry Event in History

Number of Participants Worldwide Growing Daily

650 events in 450 cities and 95 countries will take place on September 24 to promote environmental, social, and political change. Poets, writers, artists will create, perform and demonstrate in their communities, and decide their own specific area of focus for change within the framework of peace and sustainability, which founder Michael Rothenberg stated, ".is a major concern worldwide and the guiding principle for this global event."

Bob Holman and Margery Snyder, in a recent article on About.com said, "the beauty of the concept of 100 Thousand Poets for Change is that it is completely decentralized and completely inclusive." All those involved are hoping, through their actions and events, to seize and redirect the political and social dialogue of the day and turn the narrative of civilization towards peace and sustainability.

In Mexico there are over 30 events, with 18 poetic actions in Mexico City, where poets as well as environmental and political activists are hoping to encourage reflection and creative responses against systemic violence through the written and the spoken word with day long street events, readings and workshops. More than a third of these events are organized by collectives actively working towards a non-violent approach to solve the country's most pressing problems.

To date there are over 260 events in the United States. There are 20 events statewide in North Carolina where teacher/poets have mobilized to protest cuts in education funding. And along the Platte River near Omaha, Nebraska, poets will be demonstrating against TransCanada's planned Keystone XL tar sands pipeline. More examples of events can be found at the 100 Thousand Poets for Change www.100TPC.org. Each event organizer has an Event Location blog page on the website for posting, poetry, artwork, photos, and video to document this global mega-event across national borders.

Immediately following September 24th all documentation on the 100TPC.org website will be preserved by Stanford University in California, which has recognized 100 Thousand Poets for Change as an historical event, the largest poetry reading in history. They will archive the complete contents of the website, 100TPC.org, as part of their digital archiving program LOCKSS.

Founder Michael Rothenberg is a widely known poet, editor of the online literary magazine Bigbridge.org and an environmental activist based in Northern California.

INTERVIEW

_The Art of Fiction No. 212 _
Nicholson Baker
â€œI think I felt some of the terrifying arbitrariness that someone whoâ€™s writing a folktale feelsâ€”â€˜Once upon a time, the old miller climbed a tree.
No he didnâ€™t, he dug a well. No, actually he swam out in the middle of a pond and met a genie.â€™ It doesnâ€™t matter. Who cares? Anything can happen.
There are a hundred possibilities. But if you bring it very close to something you know, then the number of possibilities drops way down. And it becomes interesting to come up with words that wrap around realityâ€™s utility pole.â€

INTERVIEW

_The Art of Fiction No. 213 _
Dennis Cooper
â€œI think pornography is a very rich medium, and Iâ€™ve studied it closely and learned quite a lot as a writer from it. Porn charges and narrows the readerâ€™s attention in a swift, no-nonsense way, and it creates an anxious, intimate, and secretive atmosphere that I find very helpful as a way to erase the context around my characters and foreground their feelings, their psychological depths, their tastes. But Iâ€™m also always interested in subverting and counteracting pornâ€™s effect, and the sex in my books is never merely hot.â€

ESSAY

Some Notes on Translation and on â€˜Madame Bovaryâ€™ Lydia Davis
Not long ago, I was chatting with an older friend who is a retired engineer and also something of a writer, but not of fiction. When he heard that I had just finished a translation of _Madame Bovary_, he said something like, â€œBut _Madame Bovary_ has already been translated. Why does there need to be another translation?â€ or â€œBut _Madame Bovary_ has been available in English for a long time, hasnâ€™t it? Why would you want to translate it again?â€ Often, the idea that there can be a wide range of translations of one text doesnâ€™t occur to peopleâ€”or that a translation could be bad, very bad, and unfaithful to the original. PORTFOLIO

_Children, Anon. _
from the personal collection of Terry Castle Iâ€™ve been collecting anonymous photographs for more than two decades now and probably own a thousand or so, in all kind of formats. Nineteenth-century tintypes and cyanotypes, cabinet cards and cartes de visite, turn-of-the-century RPPCs (Real Photo Postcards), disaster pix, police mugshots and Bertillon cards, photo-booth strips, deaccessioned newspaper photos (especially ones with white crop marks), old prom photos, not to mention a recently acquired batch of ratty, Nan Goldinâ€“style, 1970s Polaroids. Should I be in rehab?

ESSAY

Into the Zone
Geoff Dyer
Tarkovsky is saying to the audience: Forget about previous ideas of time.
Stop looking at your watches, this is not going to proceed at the speed of Speed, but if you give yourself over to Tarkovsky time, then the helter-skelter mayhem of _The Bourne Ultimatum_ will seem more tedious than _Lâ€™__Avventura_.

_Pretty Citadel _
Kerry Howley
I pretend to know something about real estate and cook up a column called â€œHouse of the Week.â€ Half my Burmese colleagues have had family members disappeared. My friend Phyo had her father and brother dragged screaming from their kitchen when she was nine. â€œThe second-floor dining room,â€ I

100 Thousand Poets for Change Organizes Largest Poetry Event in History

Number of Participants Worldwide Growing Daily

650 events in 450 cities and 95 countries will take place on September 24 to promote environmental, social, and political change. Poets, writers, artists will create, perform and demonstrate in their communities, and decide their own specific area of focus for change within the framework of peace and sustainability, which founder Michael Rothenberg stated, ".is a major concern worldwide and the guiding principle for this global event."

Bob Holman and Margery Snyder, in a recent article on About.com said, "the beauty of the concept of 100 Thousand Poets for Change is that it is completely decentralized and completely inclusive." All those involved are hoping, through their actions and events, to seize and redirect the political and social dialogue of the day and turn the narrative of civilization towards peace and sustainability.

Poetry demonstrations are being organized in political hotspots such as Madison, Wisconsin and Cairo, Egypt. Poetry and peace gatherings are planned in strife-torn Kabul and Jalalabad.

In Mexico there are over 30 events, with 18 poetic actions in Mexico City, where poets as well as environmental and political activists are hoping to encourage reflection and creative responses against systemic violence through the written and the spoken word with day long street events, readings and workshops. More than a third of these events are organized by collectives actively working towards a non-violent approach to solve the country's most pressing problems.

To date there are over 260 events in the United States. There are 20 events statewide in North Carolina where teacher/poets have mobilized to protest cuts in education funding. And along the Platte River near Omaha, Nebraska, poets will be demonstrating against TransCanada's planned Keystone XL tar sands pipeline. More examples of events can be found at the

> Immediately following September 24th all documentation on the 100TPC.org website will be preserved by Stanford University in California, which has recognized 100 Thousand Poets for Change as an historical event, the largest poetry reading in history. They will archive the complete contents of the website, 100TPC.org, as part of their digital archiving program LOCKSS.

Thu 15 Sep 2011

Please join us to hear NICK DEMSKE and MATT HART read in 40 Irvin, Monday, September 19, at 8pm. Nick is an astonishing young poet and performer who read at an open mic session at the post_moot convocation a couple of years ago and blew everyone present away. We are also lucky to be able to host Cincinnati poet MATT HART, a terrific performer and poet with a national reputation, as a late and welcome addition to the ticket. * * *

Nick Demske lives in Racine, Wisconsin and is a librarian at the Racine Public Library. His self-titled book Nick Demske was selected by Joyelle McSweeney for the Fence Modern Poets Series Award in 2010 and was chosen as one of the year’s top 10 books of poetry by a Believer Magazine reader survey. Visit Nick at nickipoo.wordpress.com.

"Nick Demske writes from culture like the Hollywood version of a rebellious slave, the role shredding off him, culture's synthetic exemplary tales shredding and piling up on the floor of the projector room."—Joyelle McSweeney

Matt Hart is the author of Who's Who Vivid (Slope Editions, 2006), Wolf Face (H_NGM_N BKS, 2010), and Light-Headed (BlazeVOX, 2011), and various chapbooks. His fourth full-length collection of poetry, Sermons and Lectures Both Blank and Relentless, will be published by Typecast Publishing in 2012. The founder and editor of Forklift Ohio: A Journal of Poetry, Cooking, & Light Industrial Safety, he teaches writing and aesthetics at the Art Academy of Cincinnati.

"In Matt Hart's poetry, crackling diction and soulful exuberance take the wheel for a happily bent ride through waking and dreaming spaces. Hart works the contours of his chosen forms with precision and humor, and emphasizes reoccurrence as poetic value and material dynamic through which to channel further depths of possibility for the imagination"—Anselm Berrigan

89 screenshots from Aleph Null

Here is a series of 89 screenshots from Aleph Null: http://vispo.com/aleph/jim . They're mostly 1920x1080 though some are smaller.

These screenshots show you how Aleph Null can look with a little patience and experimentation.

Aleph Null is an interactive, generative piece I wrote in JavaScript. It's at http://vispo.com/aleph

The idea of the interactive Aleph Null is color music. It's a kind of a game. The goal of which is to experience color music and create something you like to look at.

I think those screenshots stand up with screenshots of any computer generated art I've seen.

new from above/ground press: rob mclennan's The underside of the line,

Fri 16 Sep 2011

The underside of the line,
by rob mclennan
$4

Future Bakery: Interim Report

1.

Tumble awake, this morning. Start from fragments. A gauntlet. Urge others, speak slowly, more. Unity precedes. A cranial. Decline to leave names.

Regular harbour, weave. Brunswick House, girlfriend. Ease down like an astronaut. What brief integrity, dialed. Composure governs. I pull my soldiered hands, small fortunes.

3.

Children, the frame. Agency of water, fresh and unremarkable, rare. Brace, with low chairs. The sun strikes everything, rattling plastic clouds. Who is this, really? Table this, divide.

Windspeck, taste of rain. Illusions in this distance, blue. Compulsive fingernails. Battered, cleared and crawled. Hotel concordance, congress. In passing, spark tongues. Suppress. These rooms are legion.

5.

Mechanical lineage. By the way, no longer. Sorry flightless birds. Submit is not the word. The right lane ends. All these coloured pencils. A shelf-life. Blueprint grit. She worries: where we cease to be.

6.

A corkscrew, distance. Impatient, leaf. Sweet fragrance. Hotel, sustains. Time changes colour. Coffee cools, and something moves. Synopsis: boundaries. Hips and dashed integrity. Relieved, we plummet.

Sun 18 Sep 2011

"Peter O’Leary was born in Detroit, Michigan in 1968...His books include Watchfulness, A Mystical Theology of the Limbic Fissure, Depth Theology, Wren/Omen, and Benedicite. In 2010, the Cultural Society published his third full-length book, Luminous Epinoia. He lives in Berwyn, Illinois and teaches at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago and for the Committee on Creative Writing at the University of Chicago. Vocations to poetry and religion have committed him to the pursuit of what St. Bonaventure named an itinerarium mentis in deum, or the journey of the mind to God, with particular attention devoted to the mystagogical-initiatic and the mytho-poetical." *BRAVE MEN PRESS*MICHELLE TARANSKY - NO, I WILL BE IN THE WOODS*NOW AVAILABLE*

Mon 19 Sep 2011

Hello friends,

BRAVE MEN PRESS

(http://www.bravemenpress.com)

is pleased to announce to the release of

MICHELLE TARANSKY's

new chapbook

NO, I WILL BE IN THE WOODS

"Yes, I will be in Michelle Taransky's words. I will call Michelle Taransky into question. She says we are all addicted to evidence. Yes, I will be in Michelle Taransky's woods. Michelle Taransky decided to make these choices. And she says the word feverfew. No, it isn't as simple as taking one o away and putting in its place an r. But I love how she gets me to do this. These point the way, the way a slash on a tree in the woods blazes a path. A hint, an inkling. I will go there to see what she says see. And I'm pretty sure I'll be better off everafter."

- Dara Wier, author of* Reverse Rapture* & Hat on a Pond

Michelle Taransky is the author of Barn Burned, Then, selected by Marjorie Welish for the 2008 Omnidawn Poetry Prize. Before moving to Philadelphia to work at Kelly Writers House, Taransky received a BA from The University of Chicago, worked as Programs Coordinator at The Poetry Center of Chicago, earned her MFA from The Iowa Writers' Workshop, taught poetry at the Iowa Young Writers Studio, and was a resident at Wave Books' Poetry Farm. She is a member of the Critical Writing Faculty at Penn and an adjunct poetry instructor at Temple University. Taransky is always happy to talk about poetry, glitter, Charles Barkley, or her book-in-progress: Never Quit: The Poetics of Charles Barkley.

New from Snare : "SEEN OF THE CRIME: Essays on Conceptual Writing" by derek beaulieu

Mon 19 Sep 2011

New from Snare Books:

Seen of the Crime

Essays on Conceptual Writing by derek beaulieu

In a series of statements, essays, missives, and informal discussions, seen of the crime surveys the radical edges of Canadian and international poetry; the conceptual and the concrete, the political and the playful. With seen of the crime, derek beaulieu explores the flourishing and frustrating alternatives: poetry without subjectivity, without narrative, without words, and even without letters.

Praise for beaulieu¹s Seen of the Crime:

ŒFinally, a book about poetry that is actually about poetry. derek beaulieu is quickly proving himself an essential companion to the contemporary.¹

~ Sina Queyras

Author of five books of poetry, three volumes of conceptual fiction, and over 150 chapbooks, DEREK BEAULIEU has been consistently praised as having produced some of the most radical and challenging contemporary Canadian writing. Publisher of No Press, former editor of many notable Canadian magazines, beaulieu currently teaches at Mount Royal University, Alberta College of Art + Design and the University of Calgary.

SHOW YOUR HOPE. This is a traveling story telling exhibition with over 350 paintings made by international artists, specially for this mobile and global exhibition.

Public presentations will be held throughout the period of the project. Supported by the paintings, universal stories from the world, about hope, will be told to the audience. Classical tricks will be used to stimulate interaction with the audience.

We will make a journey around the world and ask 80 questions in places we visit. This journey will take several years and we travel with an old DAF truck, ones made in our hometown (in the netherlands). We will publish information about this journey live on the internet and we will make analyzes about the similarities and differences of the answers. We will create a document that will give a wide contemporary view on how the people of this planet think about the planet as it is, and the hope that is left. -- Community Cultural Exchange is a 501(c)3 non-profit with the mission to create community through art and culture. Jesse Seldess, October 29th, Chicago

Kenning Editions <http://www.kenningeditions.com> and Green Lantern Gallery <http://thegreenlantern.org/> are pleased to announce a reading and talk by poet Jesse Seldess.

Seldess' poetry has been critically acclaimed since it first saw wide exposure in the form of his first collection, /Who Opens/. He will read from his latest book, /Left Having/, and give a talk on his compositional process, under the working title of "Inconstants and Variables."

Jesse Seldess recently relocated to Brooklyn from Karlsruhe, Germany. He is the author of two books, /Who Opens/ <http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/0976736403/who-opens.aspx> (2006) and/ Left Having <http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/9780976736486/left-having.aspx>/ (2011), both from Kenning Editions. He has also published chapbooks with Hand Held Editions, Instance Press, Answer Tag Press, and the Chicago Poetry Project Press. His work has recently appeared in the journals /The Recluse/, /EOAGH/, /Jacket/ <http://jacketmagazine.com/40/at-seldess-jess.shtml>, /Little Red Leaves/ <http://littleredleaves.com/LRL4/Jesse_Seldess.html>, and /out of nothing/. Since 2001, he has edited and published /Antennae/ <http://www.antennae-journal.com>, a journal of experimental writing and language-based performance and music scores.

Saturday October 29th, 2011, 7:00 PM at Green Lantern Gallery, 1511 N. Milwaukee Avenue in Chicago's Wicker Park neighborhood. Admission is free, along with beer, wine, and refreshments. The gallery is a third floor walk up and is not ADA accessible. This event is funded in part by Poets & Writers, Inc. Bring a little extra cash and help yourself to books from Kenning Editions and Green Lantern Press!

lived in this house from 1952-60, returned for short or long periods of time over the next 51 years. so this was, after the cleaning, the final stay, and because it, and the landscape and river and coal, figured so much in my work, i took a last 'walk around the block' in the middle of the night, talking about a departure-event which often passes unnoticed, and so is hereby recorded. please forgive the maudlin, the sentimental; given my state of mind, i was lucky to make the walk and recording at all.

thus 'a document.'

BAD DATE AMERICA is the Chicago event of 100 Thousand Poets for Change. In the spirit of community-building, guest curators Larry Sawyer and Lina Ramona Vitkauskas are asking local poets to go on a hypothetical â€œdateâ€ with America. Has your relationship with America started to seem like a bad date? See -- http://baddateamerica.wordpress.com

100 THOUSAND POETS FOR CHANGE is a global initiative of poetry readings, political demonstrations, community picnics, awareness events, and parades that will take place in 450 cities across the planet on September 24, 2011 to promote serious social, environmental, and political change. See -- http://www.100tpc.org

MESS HALL is a Chicago-based experimental cultural center and collaborated with Red Rover Series on Bad Date America. Mess Hall is a place where visual art, radical politics, creative urban planning, applied ecological design and other things intersect and inform each other. They host exhibitions, discussions, film screenings, brunchlucks (brunch + potluck), workshops, concerts, campaigns, meetings (both closed and open) and more. See -- http://messhall.org

RED ROVER SERIES is curated by Laura Goldstein and Jennifer Karmin. Each event is designed as a reading experiment with participation by local, national, and international writers, artists, and performers. The series was founded in 2005 by Amina Cain and Jennifer Karmin.

ClEARVIEW/LIE by Ted Greenwald
Mon 19 Sep 2011

New from UNITED ARTISTS Books

CLEARVIEW/LIE by Ted Greenwald

Cover by Hal Saulson 193 pages

ISBN 0-935992-28-6 $16.00

Ted Greenwald was born in Brooklyn and raised in Queens.
He is the author of over thirty books, including 3 (Cuneiform Press, 2008), Permanent Record (LRL, 2008), In Your Dreams (BlazeVox, 2008), and Two Wrongs (Cuneiform Press, 2007), a collaboration with Hal Saulson.

"This autobiographical epic from American poetry's best-kept secret dynamo goes streaming onward and veering between electric poles and templates of "anyway," deep in the heart of diction. The poem is a form of reading one life into another, a bridge-and-tunnel work, swift and huge as capital letters." Bill Berkson

"Ted Greenwald's CLEARVIEW/LIE is a memoir, of sorts--a portrait of the poet as a young man gathering information and harboring knowledge. This book can also be read as an ars poetica, though nowhere does Greenwald make the mistake of confining it in a summation. Offering impressions, observations, side-bars, "takes," propositions, he writes of things that have given him pause. Greenwald keeps his account terse and yet its vision is capacious; its tone is sardonic and yet it is informed by generosity of spirit. It is about the grace of skepticism. CLEARVIEW/LIE affirms the virtues of necessity. It's an account of getting real. We live life where conditions are specific and things actual; these are the limit conditions that provide a lived life with its creative contradictions and its adamant individuality, modest perhaps and certainly magnificent." The link posted earlier for the Tullamore event should have been www.worldtv.com/poets_for_change_tv

Inaddition, Roma Media Film Productions have posted a video channell as part of their contribution to the event featuring poems for and by Romany (gypsy) peoples. Their website is www.romafilmfund.com

PREDA.org have also published online the poems of myself, Ken Hume and Anthony Sullivan who preformed at a reading as a fundraiser for them in Open Heart House in Dublin. Look for the Poetry link... (although held earlier than the Sept 24th date, its part of the Tullamore reading for the event...)

Those poems will also be on the poetry wall at the main event in Budapest, Hungary, so if your there... check it out!!!

100 Thousand Poets for Change Organizes Largest Poetry Event in History

650 events in 450 cities and 95 countries will take place on September 24 to promote environmental, social, and political change. Poets, writers, artists will create, perform and demonstrate in their communities, and decide their own specific area of focus for change within the framework of peace and sustainability, which founder Michael Rothenberg stated, ".is a major concern worldwide and the guiding principle for this global event."

Bob Holman and Margery Snyder, in a recent article on About.com said, "the beauty of the concept of 100 Thousand Poets for Change is that it is completely decentralized and completely inclusive." All those involved are hoping, through their actions and events, to seize and redirect the political and social dialogue of the day and turn the narrative of civilization towards peace and sustainability.

Poetry demonstrations are being organized in political hotspots such as Madison, Wisconsin and Cairo, Egypt. Poetry and peace gatherings are planned in strife-torn Kabul and Jalalabad.

In Mexico there are over 30 events, with 18 poetic actions in Mexico City, where poets as well as environmental and political activists are hoping to encourage reflection and creative responses against systemic violence through the written and the spoken word with day long street events, readings and workshops. More than a third of these events are organized by collectives actively working towards a non-violent approach to solve the country's most pressing problems.

To date there are over 260 events in the United States. There are 20 events

Poets Wear Prada
http://pwpbooks.blogspot.com/

Founded in 2006, Poets Wear Prada is a small press devoted to introducing new authors through limited edition, high-quality chapbooks, primarily of poetry.

Austin Alexis

Austin Alexis has published poetry and flash fiction most recently in VFirst Literary Review—East, Nomad's Choir, Mobius: The Poetry Magazine, Rusty Typer, Dance Macabre, Come Hear (an anthology), Quill and Parchment, and Vox Poetica. His second chapbook, For Lincoln & Other Poems (Poets Wear Prada), was named a Small Press Review "Pick of the Month" and contains a Pushcart Prize nominated poem. One of his short stories was performed at the 2010 Woodstock-Diamond Dance Festival.

Joel Allegretti
http://www.joelallegretti.com/

Joel Allegretti is a guitarist and songwriter whose influences embrace Anglo-American balladry, blues, Celtic traditions, and even the sounds of India and the Middle East. He occasionally performs as one half of Blue Egypt.

Allegretti is the author of two full-length volumes from The Poet’s Press: The Plague Psalms and Father Silicon, selected by The Kansas City Star as one of 100 Noteworthy Books of 2006, a list that included novels by Cormac McCarthy and Thomas Pynchon. Poets Wear Prada released his third collection, Thrum, a chapbook of poems and poetic essays about musical instruments. His work has appeared in The New York Quarterly, Margie, Fulcrum, Voices in Italian Americana, and Sentence: a Journal of Prose Poetics and many other national journals, as well as on the Best American Poetry blog. Allegretti’s poems were the basis of two song cycles by Frank Ezra Levy, whose symphonic work is available in the American Classics series on Naxos.

Jee Leong Koh
http://jeeleong.blogspot.com

Jee Leong Koh is the author of three books of poems, Payday Loans (Poets Wear Prada), and Equal to the Earth and Seven Studies for a Self Portrait (both from Bench Press). Born in Singapore, he lives in New York City, and blogs at the above url.

Maria Lisella

Maria Lisella's Pushcart Poetry Prize-nominated work appears in Amore on Hope Street (Finishing Line Press) and Two Naked Feet (Poets Wear Prada). Her poetry has appeared in The New York Quarterly, Skidrow Penthouse, Paterson Literary Review, and New Verse News, among others; her latest short story appears in Sweet Lemons 2, Writing with a Sicilian Accent (Legas Press). She co-curates the Italian American Writers Association monthly literary readings at Cornelia St. Cafe on the second Saturday of each month. She is a travel writer by profession.

Karen Neuberg
http://karenneuberg.blogspot.com/

Karen Neuberg lives in Brooklyn, and West Hurley, N.Y. Her poems have appeared in numerous publications including Big City Lit, decomP, elimae, NewVerseNews, Pirene’s Fountain, Stone Telling, and the anthology Child of My Child. She’s a two-time Pushcart and a Best of the Net nominee, holds an M.F.A. from the New School, and is associate editor of Inertia Magazine and of First Literary Review, East. Her chapbook Detailed Still was published by Poets Wear Prada and is available from Amazon. For more information and links to her online work, visit her website at the above url.

Dorinda Wegener

Dorinda Wegener holds a M.F.A. from New England College where she was a Joel Oppenheimer Award recipient. Her poems have been published in The Antioch Review, Indiana Review, Hotel Amerika, and Mid-American Review, among many others. She has had the honor of reading with the louderARTS Project in New York City. Her poems “The Harvest” and “Evening Service” were both finalists for the Marlboro Prize as judged by poet Edward Hirsch. She currently resides with her husband and daughter in Staten Island, where she’s a teaching artist of poetry for Teachers & Writers Collaborative. In 2011, Wegener will present a reading and discourse on William Carlos Willams at the Williams Center for the Arts in Rutherford, N.J., as well as join the editorial staff of Green Mountains Review as a reader.

Richard Marx Weinraub

Related to the Marx Brothers through his mother, Richard Marx Weinraub was born in New York City in 1949; he was a professor of English at the University of Puerto Rico from 1987 through 2010. A book of his poetry, Wonder Bread Hill, was published by the University of Puerto Rico Press. His poetry has appeared in many journals, including The Paris Review, Asheville Poetry Review, South Carolina Review, The Hampden-Sydney Poetry Review, Green Mountains Review, North American Review, Measure, The Evansville Review, Slate, and River Styx. A Spanish translation of Wonder Bread Hill was recently published by Terranova Press. Poets Wear Prada published Heavenly Bodies, a chapbook of his poetry, and a poem from it was nominated for a 2009 Pushcart Prize.

Carol Wierzbicki

Carol Wierzbicki is a published poet, editor, and reviewer. She has run poetry readings in New York City, and she is co-editor of The Unbearables Worst Book and Sex anthologies. Her latest chapbook is Top Teen Greatest Hits, poems about teen angst (Poets Wear Prada). Her short story, “Mending,” will appear in the summer 2011 issue of Many Mountains Moving.

Boog City
http://www.boogcity.com/

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 21st year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women’s writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea’s ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB’s, The Knitting Factory, and The Sidewalk Café. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

103. michael farrell

come to our poetry reading if u can like to - sappho oct 4

Wed 21 Sep 2011

Sappho Poetry Readings: "Avant Gaga", a gala night of experimental poetry with Michael Farrell and troupe

Time: October 4, 2011 from 7pm to 9pm
Location: Sappho Books Cafe and Wine Bar Street: 51 Glebe Pt Rd
City/Town: Sydney
Website or Map: http://www.sapphobooks.com.au/
Phone: 02 9552 4498

A special evening at Sappho featuring...

MICHAEL FARRELL (Melb)
Michael grew up on a dolphin farm where he and his siblings regularly shot each other with animal tranquilizers, or so he recollects. He coedited Out of the Box: Contemporary Australian Gay and Lesbian Poets with Jill Jones. His most recent publication is thempark from Book Thug. He is working on an Australian tribute to John Ashbery. Michael won the Barrett Reid Prize for a 'radical poetry manuscript' with open sesame: an expanded version of that manuscript will be published by Giramondo in 2012. His poetry has been described as 'muppet lyricism'.

TIM WRIGHT (Melb)
is a poet living in Melbourne and a member of the recently founded school of 'relaxed proceduralism'.

ELLA O'KEEFE (Melb) is a PhD candidate at Deakin University, School of Communication and Creative Arts. She also makes radio, organises festivals, soaks lentils and writes poems (sometimes). She lives in Melbourne and has a terrible sense of direction.

OSCAR SCHWARTZ (Melb)
After forgetting how to speak at the age of 19, Oscar took up the study of poetry. Now, at 23, he realizes that cliches are the only valid form of communication.

ASTRID LORANGE (Syd) is a grammar machine. She is also an occasional homebrewer and a staunch defender of opacity and ambiguity. She is writing a number of things simultaneously, mostly concerned with the constructive capacities of thinking through language.

TOM LEE (Syd)
When Tom Lee, coming along the passage, walked into the open doorway, he saw that it was raining. It was not raining very much.

NICK WHITTOCK (Melb) started pumping iron a year ago. You can really notice the results.

Note de lâ€™Ã©diteur

Lâ€™Autobiographie de Gertrude Stein, par Martin Richet, serait Ã lâ€™Å“uvre de lâ€™auteur amÃ©ricaine ce que Before the Flowers of Friendship Faded Friendship Faded, de Gertrude Stein, est Ã Enfances de Georges Hugnet. Non pas Å“uvre de circonstance comme on lâ€™a souvent cru, oÃ¹ lâ€™ennui et lâ€™indiffÃ©rence amÃ¨nent progressivement une capitulation Ã lâ€™Ã©gard du projet initial de traduction, mais, au sens complexe du terme, un reflet :

Â« Les vÃ©ritables sujets du poÃ¨me, Ã©crit Martin Richet Ã propos de Before the Flowers of Friendship Faded Friendship Faded, sont les prÃ©positions et pronoms, â€œinâ€, â€œwhichâ€, â€œwithâ€, â€œawayâ€..., qui opÃ¨rent et dÃ©finissent constamment le travail de Gertrude Stein. PÃ©nÃ©trant DANS le texte de Georges Hugnet, Stein en capte la construction, lâ€™architecture ou le pliage et Ã©crit, en reflet, AVEC ce quâ€™elle y trouve, les Ã©lÃ©ments ou indices non-ressemblants QUI recrÃ©ent ou traduisent le sujet en lignes et phrases qui se dÃ©collent, aussi, DE leur sujets, du nom des choses, pour affirmer lâ€™intensitÃ© de leurs propres mouvements et de leur Ã©quilibre (...) Â».

poursuivre notre analogie, on avancera que lâ€™Autobiographie de Gertrude Stein, non moins que Before the Flowers of Friendship Faded Friendship Faded, forme le projet dâ€™une redÃ©finition des enjeux de la traduction par lâ€™Ã©criture.

Que ce projet passe par lâ€™Ã©pellation du nom mÃªme de Stein dans un titre volontiers paradoxal : Lâ€™Autobiographie de Gertrude Stein (lui-mÃªme transposÃ© de la fameuse Autobiographie dâ€™Alice Toklas), câ€™est faire droit Ã une intensitÃ© Ã rÃ©inventer, et cela dans la forme Ã©minemment steinienne â€“ et chez elle Ã©galement toujours grammaticale â€“ du portrait.

Ce portrait de Gertrude Stein, le livre de Martin Richet lâ€™effectuera Ã travers lâ€™essai de diverses formes, souvent minimales : quatrains composÃ©s de vers dâ€™un mot, palindromes, acrostiches sur le nom de lâ€™auteur amÃ©ricaine, traductions littÃ©rales ou dÃ©placÃ©es par la postÃ©ritÃ© de Stein, etc. OÃ¹ le minimalisme de la composition confÃ¨re une matÃ©rialitÃ© palpable au phrasÃ©, et une incandescence toute particuliÃ¨re Ã la question du sens, que nâ€™aurait sans doute pas dÃ©savouÃ© lâ€™auteur de Before the Flowers of Friendship Faded Friendship Faded.

Aussi bien : Ã dÃ©plier le nom de Gertrude Stein, le texte sâ€™enjoint-il de rÃ©aliser cette intensitÃ© en quatorze mouvements, que dÃ©signe la table des matiÃ¨res en fin de volume, et qui sont opÃ©rations dialectiques, steiniennes-richetiennes, â€“ ou pour employer ici un mot important, comme celui de mariage. De sorte que lâ€™objet du livre (lâ€™Å“uvre de Stein) nâ€™est jamais indÃ©pendant du regard Ã©rudit portÃ© sur elle et sa postÃ©ritÃ©, ni sÃ©parable des circonstances prÃ©sentes de la composition de cette Â« autobiographie Â» qui en ressaisissent dÃ¨s lors un portrait rÃ©flÃ©chi : tout de mÃ©ditation.

NEW RELEASE Furniture Press Books: Ryan Eckes, Old News

Wed 21 Sep 2011

Furniture Press Books is thrilled to release Old News by Ryan Eckes. You can buy your copies at Furniture Press Books (furniturepressbooks.com or http://furniturepressbooks.com/books/eckesoldnews/). Just follow the signs!

Eric Baus says

Old News is a real city. Many persons on the pavements. A picture teacher. A brief history of Spirit-matter. A brief history of a lost dog. Total Assets: a flash card with the word friend on it. Professional History: picking through the garbage with Gabriel Garcia Marquez. Often it is permitted to return to a factory. A car goes by and it doesn’t explode. What’s it say to all these dead people? White House for rent, 2 bdrms 1 bath. And Stan Mir states

What immediately strikes me about Old News is the commingling of journalistic brevity with everyday vernacular. This combination naturally pulls irony to the surface, which is refreshing in an era when popular culture's version of irony bombards us. Oftentimes, pop culture leads us to believe that irony isn't natural and must be produced for us in the form of a sitcom. In turn, this manufactured irony makes it harder to discern true irony when we encounter it. Old News is journalism - objective and informative - but it is journalism written by someone who knows, whether it is 1923 or 2011, what's at the core of everyday life.

Two Jobs

Fri 23 Sep 2011

There are two positions available at UHV: Chair of Humanities & Lecturer in English.

Chair of the Humanities Division of the School of Arts and Sciences. The Division of Humanities offers bachelor's programs in BAAS, Communication, English, and History, and has robust Master's Programs in Publishing and Interdisciplinary Studies. It also anticipates launching Bachelor's Programs in Spanish and Communication Design no later than the fall of 2012. In addition, the division is seeking to enrich its programmatic offerings in other areas as well. The humanities division has over 1,400 majors, twenty full-time faculty, and is home to the Cuneiform Press, Dark Sky, Society for Critical Exchange, Fiction Collective Two, Centro Victoria, and two internationally distributed journals: American Book Review (http://americanbookreview.org) and symploke (www.symploke.org).

Lecturer in English in the School of Arts and Sciences. The position requires teaching core composition classes though there may be opportunity to teach some upper-division and graduate classes in English and courses in our MS in Publishing program. The School of Arts and Sciences is home to the Society for Critical Exchange, Cuneiform Press, Centro Victoria, Dark Sky, and two internationally distributed journals: American Book Review (http://americanbookreview.org) and symploke (www.symploke.org).

More details about both positions are available at:

OT: On-site Childcare @ AWP - Cast your vote?

Fri 23 Sep 2011

Thanks for signing the petition to show your support, Tad! It's strange: mostly women have signed. Don't men who write and attend AWP also have children?

Not so incidentally, someone asked me off-list about the actual logistics of getting childcare at AWP - Christian Teresi spoke with Sandra yesterday and reported that it would cost AWP $70k to do so. I haven't done the research, but a rough calculation suggests that with over 9,000 attendees, that would raise the cost for everyone by $7.75 per person. As a non-parent, I would be willing to pay such a fee to help the writing community fare better for writers who have children. I mean, I think that's key, isn't it? We're writers who attend the conference for a variety of reasons, together? As a community? I'd give up the cost of one of the many drinks AWP attendees incur for such a cause. Or am I just being sentimental?

I know other conferences have handled childcare for their members, some not even on the scale of AWP -- can anyone weigh in with the logistics on such a long overdue and sorely needed "technicality"?

Thanks much,

Amy

Culture Night vs 100 000 Poets for Change, Edenderry, Co. Offaly, Ireland

Photos:

We had planned to do a reading for the 100000 Poets for Change event in Tullamore, but a family illness on my part, and sheer lack of co-ordination meant it did not come to be. While quering venues, our good friend Ken Hume got invitede to Culture Night in Edenderry, an annual cultural event in Ireland, held for the first time outside of Dublin.

And so we renegades of the Tullamore Rhymers Club decided to infiltrate the event and merge ours with theirs, and so a day early we kicked off 100000 Poets for Change at the Culture Night in the Library in Edenderry in Co. Offaly... as you do!

The eveening started off with Irish traditional music from members of Edenderry Ceoltas (Irish music society) that featured a man and a number of young relatives on banjo / ukelele, accordians and a harp, the latter of which was excellent considering the young age of the harpist.

A talk, morelike conversation from Geraldine O' Neill about how she got into writing stories and books kept all agog for a half hour or so, after which we had a break for more wine, skewered cheeses, salmon on crackers and other delicacies I could not recognise but ate reguardless. It must have been the wine, but they tasted lovely reguardless!!!

After that Ken Hume read out poems about a local charachter here in Tullamore, and another two poems, and read Anthony Sullivans 911 piece recently published in the Midland Tribune.

Then his mother Triona read out two of her pieces to great acclaim.

She was followed by a local poetess Fionnula ? who had three evocative non rhyming poems, one on the loss of her sister as a child, and another on street signs of all things, and my favourite one, about the bog.

Being up next, I kept to the theme and read my poem "Walking the Bog", followed it up with "Out of Tune" before finishing up with "Fate and Faiths".

Geraldine O Neill took the stage again and gave tips about writing, afterwhich the usual thanks to all was given by the county librarian and the librarian of Edenderry, and we had a chat and mingled a bit before heading home from a very enjoyable night.

As 100000 Poets for Change draws to a close...

Sat 24 Sep 2011

As 100000 Poets for Change draws to a close, I say a big YAY! to all who have taken part. A small idea, a little belief, a big effort and a massive success!!!!

As part of the Tullamore contribution, we wrote a series of poems to suit the occasion, and the latest one I wrote is a haiku sequence (poem of multiple verses which are all haiku, non rhyming).

> "Occupy!" The Wall Street Occupation 2011 - A silent movie poem.

Before I sleep, Ill share a last video of mine based on the Wall Street occupations this week. Its a silent one, unlike my normal poetry videos, feel free to share!!!

"Occupy" The Wall Street Occupation 2011

Wall Street was occupied multiple times by anti-capitalist and anti-globalization protestors in the past weeks. These protestors get minimum coverage in the mainstream media, so it is left to viral news videos on YouTube and Indymedia, Twitter and Facebook to get the message out there, that at the heart of the American financial system founded on Usury, there are people objecting, protesting and making their voices heard. They can ignore the people, but they cannot keep them silent. They can control where the people walk on the streets, but they cant keep the people off of the streets.

I have had enough!
Bankers gamble with money: we Pay with our lives...

We will be heard loud
Whose future is destroyed by them Whose gain is our loss

Our tomorrow will Be better, for we all now Occupy today

We occupy here
Greedy capitalism's heart
We squeeze out its life

What's my job, you ask?
Fight injustice, for justice
That's all of our jobs!

Poets for Change has been quite an event!!! As Michael Rothenberg would say... "YAY"!

looking for photos of Robert Duncan
Sun 25 Sep 2011

Hi All,

My Robert Duncan biography is in production with UCal Press and I still need a few photos. Does anyone have anything in a private archive? Or have you seen something good in a library archive? (I've already been through the collection at Buffalo.) I'm looking for unusual unpublished things.

Thanks,
Lisa Jarnot

Camille Martin and Jim Johnstone at Boneshaker
Sun 25 Sep 2011

I'm excited to be reading with Jim Johnstone this Tuesday - if you're going to be in Toronto, please come!

Tuesday, September 27, 7:00pm - 8:30pm
1748 St. Clair Ave West- St. Clair/Silverthorn Library
Toronto

Boneshaker Reading Series
hosted by Lillian Necakov

Camille Martin, a Toronto poet and collage artist, is the author of Sonnets (Shearsman), Codes of Public Sleep (BookThug), and Sesame Kiosk (Potes & Poets). Recent poetry projects: “Looms,” a collection of layered narratives, and “The Evangeline Papers,” a poetic sequence based on her Acadian/Cajun heritage and her participation in archaeological digs at an eighteenth-century village in Nova Scotia (finds: ancestral pipes and wine bottles).

Jim Johnstone is the author of 3 books of poetry including Sunday, the locusts (Tightrope Books, 2011) and Patternicity (Nightwood Editions, 2010), which contains a suite of poems that won a 2008 CBC Literary Award.

Re: new york in the fall -- address and dates

Sun 25 Sep 2011

Murat,

I'll tell them to give you a kiss on the cheek for me when they get there.

To all my other old friends, I'm back on the BuffPo list after five years or so . . . has anything changed?

Submit to The Claudius App
Sun 25 Sep 2011

The Claudius App, an online journal of negative reviews and poems, is now accepting submissions for its second issue, deadline November 15th. The first issue, cached into eternity at www.theclaudiusapp.com, included work by or attributed to: Charles Bernstein, Joshua Clover, Robert Fernandez, Simon

Jarvis, Kent Johnson, Francesca Lisette, Joe Luna, Marianne Morris, Geoffrey G. O'Brien, Vanessa Place, Rod Smith, and Keston Sutherland. In addition to poems and negative reviews of contemporary books of poetry, we're also potentially interested in negative reviews of groups of books, groups of poems, magazines (including our own), aesthetic movements (including our own), proleptic reviews of books yet to appear, redundantly ad hominem obituaries, etc. etc. Query [redacted] for more information.

Please do be advertised that this is neither the Battlefield Where The Moon Says I Love You nor The Balcony Where The Sun Says Good Morning. The moon in our bureau mirror will be delivered of neither pathos nor pity, is against both labor and love and any preposition that might come between them. Spray paint made pointillism obsolete. We're working on makeup but will never quit smoking: any cancer's worth giving our loved ones the opportunity for grand gestures.

Plutarch Lives! As for your monthly Ode to the National Grid, we know that pentameter rolls through all things, so take a number. "The second showerhead of your heavenly shower has been turned off in an effort to conserve our most precious natural resource," but we'll sooner die with our money in our pockets than step into that river twice. May you meet us there on the rocky banks, at the warier end of November, when our contrails will return into snow.

Traveling with Pessoa: “The universe isn’t mine: it’s me.”

"Slow Remains," a little film I made with videos taken during my train ride to St. Catharines to read at the Grey Borders Poetry Series, is on YouTube:

Xi Chuan Poetry blog Notes on the Mosquito

Tue 27 Sep 2011

Friendsâ€”

To promote my forthcoming translations of the poetry of Xi Chuan è¥¿å·, Notes on the Mosquito (New Directions, 2012), I have set up the following blog: http://xichuanpoetry.com/

The most recent announcement is the schedule of his US reading tour, in promotion of the new anthology Push Open the Window: Contemporary Poetry from China, with more to follow soonâ€”such as details on a chapbook published by Tinfish press, which should be available at his US readings!

Enjoy, and please send me links you think Iâ€™ve missed!

Lucas

(cross-posted; apologies)

â€œJe mâ€™apercevais que ce livre essentiel, le seul livre vrai, un grand Ã©crivain nâ€™a pas, dans le sens courant, Ã lâ€™inventer puisquâ€™il existe dÃ©jÃ en chacun de nous, mais Ã le traduire. Le devoir et la tÃ¢che dâ€™un Ã©crivain sont ceux dâ€™un traducteur.â€

Wave Books 3 Days of Poetry: Poetry in Translation

Tue 27 Sep 2011

Wave Books presents its 2nd annual 3 Days of Poetry festival. This year the festival will celebrate POETRY IN TRANSLATION, November 4th through 6th, in association with the Henry Art Gallery at the University of Washington in Seattle, featuring readings in the James Turrell Skyspace, art exhibitions, lectures, and discussions. Each day, attendees can choose from fifteen hour-long talks and readings, with local and national poets, translators, and editors.

Nightly events will include parties and readings with featured poets and translators. The schedule of events will be released in October. Daytime events will be 11am-4pm, evening events 7pm-9pm.

Participants include: John Beer, Don Mee Choi, Zhang Er, Jonathan Way, Alejandro de Acosta, Deborah Woodard, Michael Biggins, Sarah Valentine, Maged Zaher, Matthew Zapruder, Joshua Beckman, Michael Wiegers, Graham Foust, Samuel Frederick, Anthony McCann, Cole Heinowitz, Summer Robinson, Kevin Craft, Annie Janusch, Giuseppe Leporace, Anthony Geist, and Alissa Valles.

Sunday, November 6th, at 7:30pm, Wave is partnering with Seattle Arts & Lectures to present Peter Cole, Bill Porter (aka Red Pine) & Nikolai Popov: Translators on Translation.

Tickets and more information here: http://www.wavepoetry.com/catalog/114-3-days-of-poetry-poetry-in-translation?page=&by=new

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA PROJECT was founded in 2006, and is edited and published by Tisa Bryant, Miranda Mellis and Kate Schatz. The Encyclopedia Project is a hybrid publication that plays with the reference book, literary journal and arts catalogue, blending all into a hybrid series of cross-referenced hardcover volumes. Each book complicates categorical, genre and narrative expectations, while connecting seemingly disparate writers, artists and ideas within and among volumes. Encyclopedia Vol. 1 A-E was published to wide acclaim in 2006; Encyclopedia Vol. 2 F-K just launched new excitement in 2010. See -- http://www.encyclopediaproject.org

SAMIYA BASHIR is the author of Gospel, finalist for the Hurston/Wright Legacy Award and the 2009 Lambda Literary Award, and Where the Apple Falls, a Poetry Foundation bestseller and finalist for the 2005 Lambda Literary Award. Bashir is editor of Black Womenâ€™s Erotica 2 and co-editor, with Tony Medina and Quraysh Ali Lansana, of Role Call: A Generational Anthology of Social & Political Black Literature & Art. Bashirâ€™s poetry, stories, articles and editorial work have been featured in numerous publications and granted several awards. For over a decade, Bashir worked as a social justice communications professional and was a founding organizer of Fire & Ink, a writerâ€™s festival for LGBT writers of African descent. Most recently, she was owner and principal consultant of Lead Time Consulting, specializing in communications for non-profits and arts organizations. She currently lives amidst the Ann Arbor trees beneath which she teaches writing at the University of Michigan.

TISA BRYANT is the author of Unexplained Presence (Leon Works, 2007), a collection of hybrid essays on myth-making and black presences in film, literature and visual art. She is co-editor/founder of The Encyclopedia Project, and co-editor (with Ernest Hardy) of War Diaries, an anthology on black gay menâ€™s desire and survival, published in 2010 by AIDS Project Los Angeles, and nominated for a LAMBDA Literary Award. Her work has recently appeared or is forthcoming in the journals 1913, Animal Shelter, Mandorla, Mixed Blood, Viz., in the â€˜zine, Universal Remote: Meditations on the Absence of Michael Jackson, and the solo exhibits of visual artists Jaime Cortez, Wura-Natasha Ogunji, and filmmaker Cauleen Smith. A novel, The Curator, is forthcoming. She teaches at the California Institute of the Arts.

GABRIELLE CIVIL is a black woman poet, conceptual and performance artist originally from Detroit, MI. Over the last ten years, she has premiered over twenty original performance works nationally (Minneapolis, Chicago, NYC) and internationally (Mexico, Puerto Rico, The Gambia).She is currently disseminating work from her 2008-2009 Fulbright Fellowship project â€œIn and Out of Place: Making Black Feminist Performance Art in Mexicoâ€ and is circulating Swallow the Fish, her critical/creative text on race, body and performance art. She teaches at St. Catherine University in St. Paul, MN. The aim of all her work is to open up space.

CARINA GIA FERRO, writer and interdisciplinary performer, received her BA from U.C. Berkeley, and her MFA from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. She is currently a PhD candidate in English at the University of Wisconsin at Milwaukee and a professor at the Illinois Institute of Art in Chicago. Her poems were most recently published or are forthcoming in Verse Daily, Arsenic Lobster, The Encyclopedia Project and Windy City Queer.

KRISTA FRANKLIN is a poet and visual artist from Dayton, OH who lives and works in Chicago. Her poetry and mixed medium collages have been published in lifestyle and literary journals such as Coon Bidness, Copper Nickel, RATTLE, Indiana Review, Ecotone, Clam and Callaloo, and in the anthologies Encyclopedia Vol. 2 F-K and Gathering Ground. Her visual art has been featured on the covers of award-winning books, and exhibited nationally in solo and group exhibitions. Franklin is a Cave Canem Fellow, a co-founder of 2nd Sun Salon, a community meeting space for writers, visual and performance artists, musicians and scholars, and a teaching artist for Young Chicago Authors, Neighborhood Writing Alliance, and numerous organizations in the city of Chicago.

JOHN KEENE is a writer, translator and Associate Professor of English and African American Studies at Northwestern University. He has a B.A. from Harvard and an M.F.A. from New York University. He was a longtime member of the Dark Room Collective, an organization that from 1988 to 1998 celebrated and gave greater visibility to emerging and established writers of color. His first novel, Annotations, was published by New Directions in 1995. A new collection of poems entitled Seismosis, in collaboration with Christopher Stackkhouse, was published by 1913 Press in 2006.

THE CHICAGO CALLING ARTS FESTIVAL presents multi-disciplinary collaborations during Chicago Artists Month and collaborated with Red Rover Series on Experiment #51. For the 6th Annual Chicago Calling Arts Festival, people in the Chicago area will work with others outside of Chicago â€" both in the U.S. and abroad; these collaborations include a range of art forms, such as music, dance, film, literature, and intermedia â€" prepared or improvised. See -- http://www.chicagocalling.org

RED ROVER SERIES is curated by Laura Goldstein and Jennifer Karmin. Each event is designed as a reading experiment with participation by local, national, and international writers, artists, and performers. The series was founded in 2005 by Amina Cain and Jennifer Karmin.

New Poetry and Poetics

CUE Books is pleased to announce the launch of Species Branding by Danielle LaFrance:

Saturday October 1st
7:00 â€“ 9:00 pm
Pulp Fiction Books
2422 Main Street @ E. Broadway
Vancouver, BC

"Abjection, translation, insurrection: in LaFrance's Species Branding these coordinates give new garb to some of poetry's most enduring idealisms and abstractions: beauty, desire, and friendship. No frame is left uncatalogued. Every bastion of the bourgeoisie is stormed. Every wall - every gender - is scaled. In other words,'revolution ends here, man.'"

Time for Prose Holiday Fiction Writing Contest to benefit Burrow Press
Â
Who can enter: ANYONE (except the judges, who arenâ€™t sure if they want to be outed yetâ€”they fear bribery and retribution).
What weâ€™re looking for:
1.Â Â Great writing.The holidays are whatever you do or donâ€™t celebrate. Theyâ€™re traditional, theyâ€™re original, they span religions, cultures, secular traditions. Theyâ€™re loved, hated, anticipated, dreaded, ignored. They change with our changing lives and beliefs. Your story should be honest, possibly surprising, edgy, even hard to take, and definitely impossible to forget.
2.Â Â Length.Maximum length is 5,000 words; there is no minimum.
3.Â Â Entry fee.There is a fee of $10 for each entry (yes, you can submit more than one story). Donations should be made out to Urban Think Foundation.

4.Â Â Deadline and submission guidelines.Deadline is November 18, 2011. Stories should be typed, double-spaced, with author name and other information on a separate page. Send to: Burrow Press c/o Time for Prose, 625 E. Central Blvd., Orlando, FL 32801.
The top three stories will be featured at Decemberâ€™s Time for Prose. Who knows, there many even be a prize.

"The only war is the war against the imagination..."Â --Diane di Prima

â€œAnyone with eyes open knows that the gangsterism of Wall Street â€” financial institutions generally â€” has caused severe damage to the people of the United States (and the world). And should also know that it has been doing so increasingly for over 30 years, as their power in the economy has radically increased, and with it their political power. That has set in motion a vicious cycle that has concentrated immense wealth, and with it political power, in a tiny sector of the population, a fraction of 1%, while the rest increasingly become what is sometimes called â€œa precariatâ€ â€” seeking to survive in a precarious existence. They also carry out these ugly activities with almost complete impunity â€” not only too big to fail, but also 'too big to jail.'â€Â Â --Noam Chomsky

"We are your every day Americans, who are against the corporate greed that has plagued this country, and the politics who allow this greed to occur. We include teachers, college students, labor members, unemployed workers, and the other 99 percent. We are standing in solidarity with friends in New York City, and across the country." --Occupy Philadelphia

Gale Nelson & Lori Baker: Saturday in Brooklyn
Thu 29 Sep 2011

Dear everybody,

This Saturday evening at 7:00, the poet Gale Nelson and the fiction writer Lori Baker will be visiting from Providence, and reading from their new publications at Unnameable Books.

Unnameable Books is at 600 Vanderbilt Ave., in the heart of Prospect Heights, Brooklyn NY. Take the Q train to 7th ave., or the 2/3 trains to Grand Army Plaza.

Gale Nelson is the editor & publisher of Paradigm Press, and the Assistant Director of Literary Arts at Brown University. His latest book, This Is What Happens When Talk Ends, is recently out from Burning Deck.

Lori Baker has taught writing at Brown University, Boston College, and Wheaton College in Norton, Massachusetts and is the author of Crazy Water, which won the Mamdouha S. Bobst Literary Award for Short Stories.

Baker's new collection of stories, CRASH & TELL, is just out from Louisiana State University Press. Harry Mathews says "This is superb writing and storytelling, ripe with unerring wit and grippingly unanswered questions that never failed to move me."

From the comical re-imagining of Jane Goodallâ€™s life among the apes -- told from the eyes of Jane as a debutante escapee -- to a professional research subject who outwits a cunning psychiatrist; a photographer must come to grips with a peculiar family obsession; a bored wife on vacation experiences an unexpected seaside interlude with a strangely menacing dentist; a car crash leads to the most unromantic of romances -- the alienated suburbanites of these tales value memories (and ghosts) over people.

Nelson's new book, THIS IS WHAT HAPPENS WHEN TALK ENDS, contains 8 sets of 8 poems: the poems within a set follow the vowel pattern of a particular passage from Shakespeare. They could be called homovocalic translations though they ignore Shakespeare's content while trying to build toward their own coherence. The poems are arranged in a chess pattern, the earliest surviving knight's circuit, attributed to al-Adli ar-Rumi of Baghdad and presumed to date from 840 A.D.

The reading may be outdoors if the weather permits, or down one flight of stairs in the basement (not wheelchair accessible: sorry) if or the weather and.

Non-NYC Small Press Needed for Boog's levy lives Series

Fri 30 Sep 2011

Greetings,

I'm looking for a non-NYC small press Boog City's never hosted before for our "d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press" series here in NYC to fill an open slot in season nine (2011-2012). The event will be held on Tues. Nov. 29, 2011 at 6:00 p.m.

Below this note is our invite letter, which spells everything out. Please backchannel any inquiries or suggestions, be they for your own or other presses.

Thanks,
David

Hi,

David Kirschenbaum here. I'm the editor and publisher of Boog City, a New York City-based small press and community newspaper now in its 21st year. I'd like to invite you to take part in the ninth season of our “d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press” series.

The series is held at Chelsea’s ACA Galleries (http:// acagalleries.com/), which is owned by the son-in-law and daughter of the poet Simon Perchik. It’s a nice space, and we fit 100 people, including a nine-piece jazz flash orchestra, in it for Chax Press’s event, with plenty of room to spare. The gallery provides wine and other beverages, and cheese and crackers and hummus and chips.

Once a month I have a different non-NYC press host and feature three or more of their authors to read (we’ve had as many as 10 for one press and usually have 3-6) for 60 minutes total. We also have a musical act perform two 15-minute sets. If the visiting press is able to book the musical act that’s preferred, so it’s truly their night, if not I can book one that I think will work well with the night. (Also, once a year we play host to our NYC brethren.)

The series is held on the last Tuesday of each month at 6:00 p.m. If you’re game to partake, please let me know, in order, your top three date preferences. The following dates are available:

Tues. Nov. 29

We started the series in August 2003. In our first eight seasons we hosted:

Chicago Calling
Fri 30 Sep 2011

Hi folks,

You're invited to come to Chicago Calling! “Bicycles & the Arts” is the festival’s kickoff event – tonight at Chicago Hot Glass.

Hope to see you there,

Dan

The Borderbend Arts Collective presents the Sixth Annual Chicago Calling Arts Festival, a multi-disciplinary collaboration festival that happens during Chicago Artists Month. During Chicago Calling, people in the Chicago area work with people outside of Chicago -- both here in the U.S. and abroad. These collaborations include a range of art forms, such as music, dance, film, literature, and intermedia -- and they are prepared or improvised. Some Chicago Calling events involve live feeds between Chicago and other locations. Many Chicago Calling events also include partnerships with local arts organizations and other institutions.

2011 Chicago Calling events include “Bicycles and the Arts” at Chicago Hot Glass; Chicago Scratch Orchestra performances on WNUR’s Airplay show and at Ball Hall; Red Rover Series’ Experiment #51: “X-Ref = Encyclopedia Vol. 2 F-K” at Outer Space Studio; “Construction” at Studio 914 and the Chicago

The complete festival schedule is available as a downloadable .pdf file at http://www.borderbend.org/chicago-calling.html

Call for papers: Emergent Communities in Contemporary Experimental Writing (Conference at UC Santa Cruz)

Fri 30 Sep 2011

Hello everyone,

We're following up last year's lovely conference with another this year in May. Please come and join us in the redwoods! Some crazy thinkng goes on out here.

Eireene

Emergent Communities in Contemporary Experimental Writing
May 4-5, 2012

Hosted by the Poetry and Politics Research Cluster, University of California, Santa Cruz

This conference is organized around experimental writing and its many, varying communities including performance art collaborations, small press publishing and editorial projects, virtual and digital work, academic affiliations, and intersecting aesthetic, social and political identities and representations. The goal of this conference is to embrace the productive and generative connotations of community and experiment as innovative acts and encounters that are always in the process of both venturing to do something previously untried, and questioning and testing the very boundaries and mores, however contingent, established by those attempts. Of particular interest is how writing communities might be changing historically in the early twenty-first century, and how writers theorize and make use (or not) of various conceptualizations and practices of community. What do such formations include and leave out? What are the conditions of possibility for a community to emerge? From where does one emerge? And into what? How are writing communities that share an often contested collective vision themselves experimental formations for attempting new modes of relation, affiliation and creation?

Confirmed respondents include: Tisa Bryant, Sueyeun Juliette Lee, Anna Moschovakis, Vanessa Place, Juliana Spahr, and Ronaldo Wilson.

The call for papers is open to all writers and academics, and we encourage proposals that continue to push the critical/creative divide. We welcome interdisciplinary papers that engage philosophy, history, publishing, pedagogy, art and digital media. Conference activities will include panels, round-table discussions and a small press book fair. Each day will culminate with evening readings of the guest writers' creative work.

Please submit an abstract of 350 words to [redacted] by December 1, 2011. Individual speakers will be placed on panels and allotted 15-20 minutes to present their work. Panel proposals are also welcome. Selected papers will have the opportunity to be published on a post-conference website and in an edited volume of essays inspired by the conference. Please email Andrea Quaid, [redacted] or Juliana Leslie, [redacted] if you have any questions.

October 2011 caught the pendulum swinging back — after a decade of cool conceptual detachment, a turn toward feeling, sincerity, and sentiment, and a Nobel handed to the quietest of lyric masters. One hundred and sixty-six messages moved through the list, and its currents ran to the question of whether earnestness could be rehabilitated, whether the heart could be readmitted to a poetry that had spent years exiling it. The month asked, with real curiosity, whether it was possible to mean it again.

The largest thread named the turn. Under headings borrowed from criticism — the charms of entropy and the new sentimentality, the New Sincerity — the room took up the reaction against the conceptual and the ironic, and one poster posed the paradox at its heart: "How is it possible for sentimentality to be new?" Could feeling, the oldest and most suspect thing in poetry, be reclaimed as an avant-garde position; could sincerity be, of all things, experimental? After years of appropriation and deadpan and the death of the author, the room found itself genuinely unsure whether earnestness was a regression or the next move.

The vindication came from Stockholm. Tomas Tranströmer won the Nobel Prize — the Swedish poet of spare, luminous, deeply felt images, a lyricist of silence and snow and the inner life, about as far from conceptual gamesmanship as a living poet could be — and the room welcomed it as a kind of answer. Against the exhausted irony of the decade, the establishment had crowned exactly the quiet, sincere, image-driven lyric the New Sincerity was groping back toward.

The quarrel, gentle, was whether the return was earned or nostalgic. To some, the new sentimentality was a hard-won recovery of feeling after conceptualism had proven its point; to others, a failure of nerve, a retreat into the comforts the avant-garde had rightly burned down. The room did not resolve it, but the very fact of the argument marked the shift: feeling was back on the table, and had to be reckoned with. For a community that had spent a decade treating sincerity as the one embarrassment a serious poet must avoid, simply to be debating whether earnestness might be permissible again was itself the news.

I have set October down exactly as the archive delivered it — the new sentimentality and its paradox, the puzzle of how sincerity could be new, and Tranströmer's Nobel for the quiet felt lyric — because it was the month the list felt the decade turn, the long conceptual winter giving way to a wary rehabilitation of the heart. A room that will seriously ask whether sentimentality can be new, and greet a Nobel for the most sincere of lyric poets as a vindication, is a room ready to forgive itself for feeling again, testing whether earnestness, after everything, might be the freshest available move, precisely because the avant-garde had spent so long insisting it was the one thing forbidden.

Interview with DeWitt Henry--founder of Plougshares Magazine
Sun 2 Oct 2011

DEWITT HENRY: PLOUGHSHARES and other â€˜Sweet Dreamsâ€™

DEWITT HENRY: PLOUGHSHARES and other â€˜Sweet Dreamsâ€™

http://dougholder.blogspot.com Boston Area Small Press and Poetry Scene

Interview with Doug Holder

DeWitt Henry is an acclaimed essayist, and fiction writer. He is the founding editor of Ploughshares literary magazine. Ploughshares is perhaps the most influential literary magazine in the country. Henry has a new memoir out "Sweet Dreams" that covers his youth, his time at Harvard, the formation of Ploughshares, and his coming of age as a writer and a man. I spoke to him on my Somerville Community Access TV show: "Poet to Poet to Writer to Writer."

Doug Holder: You are one of the most educated men I know. You have a PhD from Harvard and an MFA from the Iowa Writer's Workshop.

DeWitt Henry: I wanted to avoid the draft (Laugh).

DH: You came from a Philadelphia Main Line family, but your childhood was far from idyllic. Your dad was an alcoholic, a racist, and he abused your mom. Some people would retreat into drug abuse, mental illness, etc... in reaction to all this. Do you think literature was the elixir that saved you?

DWH: I was a child when this was going on--so I had an innocent perception of things. My father was a decent man; he tried to make up for what he did. I was the baby of the family; my older siblings experienced the brunt of it. But really--I don't think anyone has a so-called totally "happy" background.

Yes. Literature was a shelter for me. My mother was a writer and artist. During the trauma caused by my father she had her own nervous background. My mother hooked up with a prominent psychiatrist--and later on she became a sort of psychiatrist's assistant. She helped my father and in a way protected me. In retrospect I grew up in a protective environment. My sister and mother promoted reading. My sister was very literate and a good writer. She encouraged me to read stuff over my head. So in eight grade I was reading " Crime and Punishment.' I probably didn't understand it!

DH: Your father was a successful candy manufacturer. What did he think of your desire to be a writer?

DWH: He wanted me to be a candy maker. I considered it--we all did at one point. He himself was second generation. My grandfather started the company. He sent my father to business school. My father got into chemistry which was sort of the high tech of today--very in vogue. This was in the 1920's. He worked for DuPont for a year or two. He got a call when my grandfather had a heart attack to come home and take care of the business. He essentially left a corporate career for the sake of family.

DH: You got your PhD at Harvard and you also attended the Iowa Writers Workshop where you studied with Richard Yates, author of "Revolutionary Road" among other novels. Was Yates' background similar to yours?

DWH: Well he was born in Yonkers, N.Y. His mother was socially pretentious and ambitious. She appeared in many different guises in his short stories. He was 14 or 15 years older than me--but we both had the drive to rise in society. The Main Line Philadelphia society where I grew up was very socially stratified. It was worse than the Boston's Brahmins. It was the kind of a place if you went into a dry cleaner or a Woolworth's, within five seconds they tried to place you . So we had that common background that pushed us to succeed in society.

DH : Was there elitism prevalent in the Boston literary scene when you arrived?

DWH: When I arrived there was a literary stratification between the establishment and the young and unknown writers. The big Boston publishing houses, Harvard, were not interested in the newer or younger people. They did not encourage community. They were just the opposite. It was a Brahmin culture.

One thing about starting Ploughshares at the Plough and Stars Pub in Central Square, Cambridge, with the co-owner Peter O'Malley--was that it was Irish. Behind it was tradition of the Irish against the Boston Brahmins, against Harvard, against the established order.

DH: Is a pub a good place to birth a magazine?

DWH: I'm not sure I would recommend it, but there is the Irish tradition of the literary pub. It goes way back to William Butler Yeats and the Irish Renaissance. The literary pub has a tradition of readings and publishing broadsheets. The tradition was inherent in the presence of Peter O'Malley . O'Malley is still around--you will probably find him having a drink at the pub to this day.

DH: The memoirist Malachy McCourt told me that when you write a memoir you should not get bogged down with facts.Memoir is more about impressions.

DWH: The kind of memoir I write is more like fiction--rather than literal fact. You have to look hard for details for your writing. I tell my students to look for artifacts around their homes that are unexplained ... kind of bizarre. In my family we have these bear skin rugs--bear skin rugs--how do you figure that? You really have to use your imagination to make things come alive.

DH: How important was the founding of Ploughshares in your development as a writer?

DWH: As I say on p. 196 of Sweet Dreams, that the venture of starting "Ploughshares lent me social identify as a writer...I was taken seriously by writers my age who had themselves managed to publish books and land teaching jobs." I needed that because my first novel was such slow going. The magazine also exposed me to contemporary poetry and fiction, and to the emerging writers producing it, like colleagues, and I felt both in my editing and my writing that I was talking back to them in "the cultural conversation." I think of Tim O'Brien, Andre Dubus, Fanny Howe, Thomas Lux, James Tate, Jim McPherson, Sue Miller, Frank Bidart, David Gullette, Joyce Peseroff, the list goes on. The magazine helped to forge my sense of literary enterprise, combining editing, writing, and teaching. It also proved to be the credential--more than my PhD--that helped me find my place at Emerson College and the Creative Writing Program there. Of course, in the long view back, I had been writing and producing magazines since my school days with a toy printing press, and later a basement print shop, and then in college editing the Amherst Literary Magazine. My love of reading, writing, and publishing had been one love for most of my life.

URL: http://www.lulu.com/product/paperback/storage-case/17278460

john martone’s collages splice images and text drawn from Buddhism, radio schematics, cell biology, and natural history to open the *Storage Case *of the Unconscious. All of martone's visual poems stand alone as individual works, but he assembles them into book-length sequences, where their effect is enhanced. This volume offers a triptych of these visual books, in full, for the first time.

john martone’s many collections of poetry include st. john’s wort, shooting star and ksana. He currently produces his handmade books and ebooks under the samuddo / ocean imprint.

Bruce Andrews et al. read in Brooklyn on Monday*
Sun 2 Oct 2011

Dear everybody,

Tomorrow (Monday!) evening (7:00!) please join us at Unnameable Books* for this. The poets Gilbert Adair, Bruce Andrews, Robert Fitterman and Aodan McCardle will be reading or otherwise performing texts they wrote. We'll open a couple bottles of red wine, too.

This to celebrate the release of printed versions of those texts, from Veer Books, a UK-based press specializing in innovative and experimental writings in poetry and poetics associated with the Contemporary Poetics Research Centre of Birkbeck College at the University of London.

*i.e., Gilbert Adair, Robert Fitterman & Aodan McCardle.

Bruce Andrews's YOU CAN'T HAVE EVERYTHING...WHERE WOULD YOU PUT IT! is a brand new book length work, comprising 3 sections (A. Oxymoron, B. Where Was I Been Comin' From, C. RICO).

Robert Fitterman's HOLOCAUST MUSEUM is a brand new book length work â€“ a sample is at http://afilreis.blogspot.com/2010/01/conceptual-writing-project-holocaust.html and at http://jacket2.org/category/commentary-tags/robert-fitterman

Gilbert Adair's SABLE SMOKE is a large work that has been ongoing for many years, and is finally available. Some of the Sable Smoke poems are online at http://chax.org/eoagh/issuefour/adair.html, and there is an interview with Adair which relates to this book online at the CPRC's Readings webjournal (http://www.bbk.ac.uk/readings/issues/issue5/Gilbert_Adair_interview)

Aodan McCardle's IS ING is a new collection of performance work â€“ see http://www.bbk.ac.uk/cprc/publications/Veer_Publications/Veer038 - See as well as http://vimeo.com/23961711 for a recent performance.

*Unnameable Books is at 600 Vanderbilt Ave. in the heart of Prospect Heights, Brooklyn, New York. Take the B or Q train to 7th ave., or the 2 or 3 train to Grand Army Plaza.

Yours, etc.

Buffalo Poets Theater Presents

*Gertrude Stein’s Doctor Faustus Lights the Lights

plus

Three Short Italian Futurist Plays

TWO SHOWS: 9.30pm Saturday, October 8 and 2pm Sunday, October 9

FREE!

Alleyway Theatre

1 Curtain Up Alley—Buffalo, NY

www.alleyway.com

[redacted]

Presented by Buffalo Poets Theater and sponsored by the MSA13 Conference at UB.

Doctor Faustus Lights the Lights stars Sean Reynolds, Morani Kornberg-Weiss, Nava Fader, John Hyland, Robin Brox, Soma Feldmar, Emily Anderson, Josh Smith, Damian Weber, and Sandra Dedo, and is directed by David Hadbawnik.

The presentation of three short Futurist plays stars Emily Anderson, Sandra Dedo, John Hyland, and Josh Smith. Lights and tech for all pieces by Sara Elizabeth Genco and Chris Van Patten.

Is the timeless story of Doctor Faustus one about temptation from the devil, or is it about gender conflict, relationship trouble, and anxieties about technology in the modern age? Count on Gertrude Stein to tease out and develop the latter threads from the classic tale. In her rendering of the play, Faustus is not so much magician as modern inventor, and the implications of the technologies he creates are only the most apparent—and, still, highly amusing—new wrinkles that she adds. While Mephisto remains a diabolical presence throughout the play, her rendering brings forward the conflict that Faustus' megalomania sparks with his love interest, the doubly named Marguerite Ida and Helena Anabelle, as well as characteristic Steinian language pyrotechnics involving a chorus and other characters, including a Dog, a Little Boy, a Country Woman, and a mysterious Man from Over the Seas.

The play has been performed numerous times—including by the Judson Poets' Group, the Wooster Group, and Robert Wilson—as its relative accessibility and discernible narrative line are well balanced with Gertrude Stein's challenging language play. Buffalo Poets Theater, which has previously performed Eileen Myles' libretto Hell, excerpts from Jack Spicer's * Troilus*, Carla Harryman's Memory Play, and Robert Duncan's Origins of Old Son, is pleased to undertake this production as part of the MSA13 Conference at UB.

Contact David Hadbawnik ([redacted]) or Robin Brox ([redacted]) for more details.

Station Hill of Barrytown
http://www.stationhill.org/

Station Hill of Barrytown, established in 1977 by George Quasha and Susan Quasha, is an independent publisher whose mission is to challenge and expand conceptions of human possibility. Innovative works in human alternatives have been published in the arts, particularly in poetry and literature (including fiction, non-fiction, and criticism), and contemporary art and music; philosophies and practices of conscious living (including studies in Buddhism/Dzogchen/ Zen and Jewish esotericism); alternative health and healing (including acupuncture, bodywork, oriental medicine, mind-body therapies, and cooking); and social and ecological studies.

David Arner

David Arner (piano, harpsichord, percussion), a long time proponent of innovative music and spontaneous composition, teaches at Rensselaer

Polytechnic Institute. Performing throughout the US both solo and collaboratively (with musicians Michael Bisio, Tomas Ulrich, Jay Rosen, as well as poet/sound-artists Charles Stein and George Quasha), he has also pioneered a re-vitalization of new music for silent film (recently at The Museum of Modern Art).

Bernadette Mayer

Bernadette Mayer was born in Brooklyn and is the author of more than two dozen books of poetry, including most recently Studying Hunger Journals (Station Hill Press), as well as Ethics of Sleep and Poetry State Forest. She has taught writing workshops at The Poetry Project at St. Marks Church for many years and served as its director. She lives in East Nassau, N.Y.

George Quasha
http://www.quasha.com/

George Quasha, poet/artist/sound artist, explores a common principle in language, sculpture, drawing, video, sound, and performance. His books include Ainu Dreams, Axial Stones: An Art of Precarious Balance, Verbal Paradise (preverbs), and, with Charles Stein, An Art of Limina: Gary Hill's Works and Writings. He has received a Guggenheim Fellowship (video art) and NEA Fellowship (poetry). For more info please visit the above url.

Charles Stein
http://www.charlessteinpoet.com/

Charles Stein is author of 13 books including most recently From Mimir's Head (Station Hill Press); a translation of The Odyssey; a vision of the Eleusinian Mysteries, Persephone Unveiled; a study of poet Charles Olson, The Secret of the Black Chrysanthemum; and, with George Quasha, a study of Gary Hill, An Art of Limina. He holds a Ph.D. from the University of Connecticut and lives in Barrytown, N.Y. For more info please visit the above url.

Sam Truitt
http://www.samtruitt.org/

Sam Truitt is the author of Vertical Elegies 6: Street Mete (Station Hill Press); Vertical Elegies: Three Works (Ugly Duckling Presse); Vertical Elegies 5: The Section (The University of Georgia Press); and Anamorphosis Eisenhower (Lost Roads Publishers), among other books. He teaches in the Language and Thinking Workshop at Bard College and is managing director of Station Hill Press. For more info please visit the above url.

Peter Lamborn Wilson

Peter Lamborn Wilson is author most recently of Ec(o)logues, a Menippean Satyre (mixed poetry and prose, both serious and humorous), published by Station Hill Press, as well as co-author of Green Hermeticism=alchemy and ecology (Lindisfarne Books); and author of Escape from the Nineteenth Century & Other Essays: Fourier, Marx, Proudhon and Nietzsche (Autonomedia) plus numerous other books and essays. He is a long-time member of the Autonomedia Collective and lives in the Hudson Valley.

Boog City
http://www.boogcity.com/

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 21st year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women's writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea's ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB's, The Knitting Factory, and The Sidewalk Café. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

Durand, Prevallet, Harrington - Zinc Bar 10/14

Sun 2 Oct 2011

Zinc Bar Reading Series presents

Marcella Durand, Kristin Prevallet, & Joseph Harrington

Friday, October 14, 7:00 p.m.
Zinc Bar, 82 West 3rd Street

Marcella Durand is the author of Deep Eco Pré, a collaboration with poet Tina Darragh, available as a PDF<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/dep.html>; AREA<http://belladonnaseries.org/area.html> (Belladonna Books, 2008); and Traffic & Weather, a site-specific book-length poem written during a residency at the Lower Manhattan Cultural Council (Futurepoem Books, 2008). She was a 2009 Fellow in Poetry from the New York Foundation for the Arts, the 2010-2011 Fellow in Poetics and Poetic Practice for the Center for Programs in Contemporary Writing at the University of Pennsylvania, and is a 2011-2013 Fellow at the Black Earth Institute. Her poem “Scale Shift” was recently set to music by composer Jonathan Newman and performed in Okazaki, Japan, by the Nagoya Academic Winds and Chorus; excerpts from the same poem were incorporated into a public art project by artist Hillary Mushkin at Van Nuys Sherman Oaks Park, CA. She lives in New York City with her husband Rich Orussa and son Ismael, and works fulltime as a writer and editor at the National MS Society. She is working on a new collection of poems tentatively titled Montage in the Feuilleton.

Kristin Prevallet is the author of I, Afterlife: Essay in Mourning Time, an experimental elegy designed by poet Jeff Clarke and published by Essay Press in 2007; Shadow Evidence Intelligence, a book of conceptual confrontations with the form/content rift that occurred during the Bush II years, published by Factory School in 2008). She was a 2007 Fellow in Poetry from the New York Foundation for the Arts, and her poem “Everywhere... Here and in Brooklyn” was recently set to music by composer Colette Alexander and performed at Dixon Place in 2010; excerpts from the same poem were recently published in Spoon River Review and the online journal Tinge. “Blood on the Illusion,” an essay about the emotional underpinnings of the financial crisis as it has evolved over the past decade, will be published this winter in Michigan State University’s journal of nonfiction, Fourth Genre. A member of the Belladonna Collaborative, she lives near the docks of Greenpoint, Brooklyn and works as a hypnotherapist in Manhattan.

Joseph Harrington is the author of Things Come On (an amneoir)<http://www.upne.com/0-8195-7135-0.html> (Wesleyan Poetry 2011), a mixed-genre work relating the twined narratives of the Watergate scandal and his mother's cancer, which was a Rumpus magazine Poetry Book Club selection; the chapbook Earth Day Suite<http://beardofbees.com/harrington.html> (Beard of Bees Press 2010 - available as free PDF); and the critical study Poetry and the Public (Wesleyan UP 2002). His creative work also has appeared in BathHouse, 1913: a journal of forms, Hotel Amerika, No Tell Motel, With+Stand, Otoliths, Fact-Simile , and P-Queue, among others. Harrington was Walt Whitman Chair of American Literature and Culture at the University of Groningen, The Netherlands, in 2005, under the auspices of the Fulbright Distinguished Chairs Program; he also was a Mayers Fellow at the Huntington Library and has held both research and creative work fellowships from the Hall Center for the Humanities. He is currently at work on a four-volume mixed-genre and -media account of his mother's life and times. He teaches at the University of Kansas in Lawrence, USA.

new Burning Deck translations
Mon 3 Oct 2011

2 new translations from Burning Deck now available from www.burningdeck.com, www.spdbooks.org, and in Europe:
www.audiatur.no/Bokhandel

1. Gérard Macé
THE LAST OF THE EGYPTIANS translated from the French by Brian Evenson Prose, 80 pages, offset, smyth-sewn
ISBN 978-1-936194-11-7, original paperback $14
Champollion loved the novels of Fenimore Cooper, in particular THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS. Macé explores Champollion's twin interests: Egypt and "America's savage nations," his deciphering of the Rosetta stone and the Indians' deciphering of the forest. He finally follows Champollion to the Louvre where he set up the Egyptian galleries and saw Indians of the Osage tribe and felt the sadness in their slow song.

Gérard Macé's unclassifiable texts cross the lines between essay, dream, biography, fiction, history, and poetry. His many honors include the Prix France Culture for the present volume (1989), and the Grand Prix of the Académie française for life achievement (2008).

Brian Evenson is the author of ten books of fiction, most recently the novel LAST DAYS and the story collection FUGUE STATE. He is the recipient of three O. Henry Prizes and directs Brown University's Literary Arts Program.

“Though much of the text is replete with intricate details, the story maintains a certain dreamy quality…. The story follows a unique path to storytelling that only a genuine poet could master.”— hey small press!

2. Monika Rinck
TO REFRAIN FROM EMBRACING translated from the German by Nicholas Grindell Poetry, 80 pages, offset, smyth-sewn.
ISBN 978-1-936194-07-0, original paperback $14

With linguistic sophistication and a great deal of humor, Rinck sets in tension the most disparate ideas “along with their margins.” She is equally at home with Kant and Bob Dylan, Hölderlin and bar talk. The book is indeed a “tour de trance.”

Monika Rinck lives in Berlin and is author of 3 collections of poems (VERZÜCKTE DISTANZEN (2004), ZUM FERNBLEIBEN DER UMARMUNG (2007), HELLE VERWIRRUNG / RINCKS DING- UND TIERLEBEN (2010)) and a book of essays, AH, DAS LOVE-DING (2006). Her awards include the Ernst Meister and Georg K.Glaser prizes.

Nicholas Grindell, born in the UK in 1968, has been living in Berlin as a translator since 1993. His poetry translations have appeared in SHEARSMAN, DICHTEN=, CHICAGO REVIEW etc.

“As adaptable, multifaceted, and aggressively engaged as any voice in contemporary German poetry, Monika Rinck is a poet of intellect, experimentation and humour. Her work over the last decade has been marked by a singular turn of expression, the profound imbedded in a poetic discourse that disarms the reader.” —S. J. Fowler, 3:AM Magazine/Maintenant #4

Features:
Women Writers:
In response to Amy Kings assertion that women writers find it hard to get published in the media, we done our bit to rectify the percieved wrong. We sent out a special call for women writers, which increased, but so did male writer submissions, leaving us a 45-55% breakdown still in favour of male writers, to spite a campaign of emails, facebook and twitter posting and posts inviting submissions from female writers on this and other listserves. However, the results were excellent, and we are proud to bring you our selection of writers.

WritersCafe.org Competition
Those who remember the last issue, wil remember the WritersCafe.org competition winners, of whom only half were published. We publish part II in this issue.

News:

100,000 Poets for Change, the Irish entry in pictures. The PREDA fundraiser, the Readings at the Pallet, all are in image and word in the News section.

The Mens Corner

The fellahs had us swamped with submissions, half of which we have held over for the next issue, due in December.

Submissions

We still want more submissions, from both men and women. See website for past issues to see what we publish.

Celebrating New Titles By Steve Fellner, Paolo Javier, Mary Mackey and Stephen Paul Miller.

Thursday, October 27, 2011
6:00 PM - 8:00 PM
Ceres Gallery, 547 West 27th St .
Suite201, New York , NY 10001

Steve Fellner: The Weary World Rejoices

"Steve Fellner takes us into the hidden places in this beautiful and frightening collection. Here is testimony to the brave and shameful impulses of the human heart, composed in language that is both familiar and completely original.... You will not forget these poems." -Laura Kasischke

Paolo Javier: The Feeling Is Actual

"Javier hits the big notes: sex, romance, even aging and regret. The poetry often comes in the form of prose ... and of visual poetry in which comics collide with sly wit. All this with the multi-cultural vantage we expect from the poet, which comes to the fore in later sections, abetted by found images and typography. 'if im like a piece of bok choy / then you are probably / a piece of broccoli... /its just the communication thing.' Listen to this book, watch it, lap it up." -Vincent Katz

Mary Mackey: Sugar Zone

"Mary Mackey takes you on a fascinating journey to the interior, somewhere between Saint Theresa's Inner Castle and the thicket of Eros-but also a place of desperate actuality, even if it is 'on the other side of the world.' Mackey joins other visionary poets of dépaysement-Henri Michaux in Asia, John Ash in Anatolia, Sharon Doubiago in Peru , Lorca in Manhattan . But Mackey really seems to recover a lost part of herself in the edgy lyricism of the tropics, haunted by fado, forro, and death . . . SUGAR ZONE authoritatively creates a language and a culture; but the lines are tense with the vulnerability of lovers, strangers, and travelers with no ticket home." - Dennis Nurkse

Stephen Paul Miller: There Is Only One God and You're Not It

"Stephen Paul Miller has written the most swingin', rockin', jazzy history of Judaism, Jews, and our favorite one and only God there is, that you will ever read. In verse. And if you read it you will have to think about it. While tapping your foot. And is it unbelievably funny to see this maniac of a poet wrestling with a disembodied spirit aided by Plato and Irving Berlin? That too. With Hitchcock and John Cage wagging the dog? Enter this book, you enter Indie Poetry." -Alicia Ostriker Marsh Hawk Press books often highlight the affinity of poetry and the visual arts. Each book is produced with particular care to visual style, often including reproductions of artwork alongside poems. Marsh Hawk Press also sponsors readings and exhibits, and hosts a web site with a rotating exhibition space, as well as several blogs focused on poetry and visual art. The press also offers a poetry prize judged by a poet of national stature.

Aleph Null in Atticus Review
Mon 3 Oct 2011

ALEPH NULL
http://atticusreview.org/aleph-null

Aleph Null is an online interactive work of visual art written in JavaScript using the new HTML 5 canvas tag. No plugin required.

It's a playful activity, the goal of which is to experience color music (no audio) and create something you like to look at.

The experience of color music isn't so much about the creation of beautiful stills as experiencing and modulating/modifying the flow of color and shape in a pleasing way.

But it's also possible to approach Aleph Null toward the creation of beautiful stills. See http://vispo.com/aleph/jim for my own attempt at creating beautiful stills with Aleph Null. These are best experienced at night. Or at least with the lights off.

Aleph Null is best viewed with Chrome, Firefox, or Safari, though it also works with other browsers and IE 9. It also runs on smart phones and the iPad, though it runs more slowly on these devices.

Aleph Null is my first work using the new HTML 5 canvas tag and the first serious visual work of art I've seen created with the canvas tag.

The absence of irony does not necessarily equal sincerity. And sentimentality has its own pitfalls, which may make irony's flaws seem rather inviting.

rob's first two novels now (apparently, only) available via the author,

Wed 5 Oct 2011

As part of the winding down of Toronto's long-running The Mercury Press, the last copies of my first two novels--white (2007) and missing persons (2009)--are (apparently) now available only through me, with a half-dozen boxes appearing recently at my front door. If anyone is interested in either one, they're $20 each (postage included; outside of Canada, $20 US) either via my paypal on the sidebar, or by sending cheques to me at: 402 McLeod Street #3, Ottawa ON Canada K2P 1A6.

Related links; the Globe & Mail review of white; review/article on white in Edmonton's Vue weekly; white on the 2008 ReLit Award longlist ; Cassie Leigh on missing persons ; the short essay I wrote on the geography of missing persons;

It's disappointing to have all my fiction out-of-print. Here's hoping that I can get that third novel placed, fourth done and out, and/or even that collection of short short stories finished. Sigh,

Take any subway train to 14th Street, where you can get the L train to Brooklyn. Get out at the Bedford Ave. stop, the first one in Brooklyn. If you want to take a bus from the subway, leave the platform at the Driggs Ave. exit. Take the #62 bus, the only bus that stops there. The bus stop is in front of the pizza place. The ride usually lasts about 15 minutes. Get off the bus at Division Ave. and Berry Street. Walk toward the water on Division Ave. for two blocks to Kent Ave., turn right one block to 475 Kent. It's that big, gray former warehouse building. The number on the door buzzer is 410. That means fourth floor, tenth unit. The door to the floor should be locked. Don't worry about it. I'll be right out.

You can also take the J or M train to the Marcy Ave. stop. Take the #62 bus which stops at Roebling St.,corner of S. 8th St. (near Broadway), to Division Ave. and Berry Street (see above). If you prefer to walk, turn left on Havemeyer to Division Ave., turn right and walk seven blocks to Kent Ave., turn right one block to 475.

By car or by taxi from Manhattan--get on the Williamsburg Bridge from Delancey St., in the right lane. Exit at the first exit, "Broadway-Staten Island." Go straight across the intersection. Go two blocks to the next light (Division

By car from the BQE: going north, take the Flushing Ave. exit, turn left on Classon, turn onto Kent Ave., stay on Kent to 475. (watch for Division Ave. 475 is on the next corner--S. 11th St.); going south, exit at Metropolitan Ave., take Metropolitan to Wythe Ave., turn left and go to Division Ave., turn right on Division to Kent. Turn right to 475, one block. There is parking on Kent Ave.

36. Michael Heller
Transtromer
Thu 6 Oct 2011

Tranströmer.I heard him read just once, at one of the early Poets House venues or NYU where I taught and was immediately taken by the clean precision, the almost conversational and yet insistent tone of the translations---I think they were Robin Fulton's---a tone that I could only intuit as being in the Swedish lines that Tranströmer read.Looking again at those translations, I sense that the poetry was always performing some balancing act between the poet's need to get down what he saw and felt, and a certain almost disbelief about whether literary composition could ever achieve the rendering of a personal vision.So many of Tranströmer's poems begin in observable data and end in an odd swerve into the surreal, almost an escape mechanism into an unplanned and unforeseen imaginative realm.He remarked to Fulton in an interview that the release of inner pressure sparked by a "very special kind of ignition" began the poem. Where it would go, no poet could ever be sure.Confidence then is an odd thing in poetry, not that the next word will be right, but that our loyalty to the process is itself a leap into the unknown.I think this is the nature of Tranströmer's fidelity to the poem, the willingness to leave (to surrender?) the known spaces of the world in order to find what is true simultaneously to both that "ignition" and to language itself:

And the sea wind is in the dry pines further away, hurrying over the churchyard sand, past the leaning stones, the pilot's names.

The dry sighing

of great doors opening and great doors closing.

37. Anny Ballardini
With a Happy Birthday to Karl Young
Fri 7 Oct 2011

Bringing the Text Back Home:

What Alphabets have Made of Us

From Papyrus Fragments to Electronic Screens

By Karl Young

Beginning in the mid 1960s, I started trying to expand the poetic possibilities of Greek literary fragments. I often used ideas generated by art forms that ran under such banners as minimalism and multimedia, as well as models from advertising and accidental characteristics of mimeograph production, to draw greater significance from fragments. I was interested in the way the origins of literacy and Western culture related to the present.

In 1975, I changed my source to fragments written in Aramaic and left by a colony of Jewish exiles in Egypt during the first Diaspora. Many of the fragments were lists of names based in the Biblical Book of Psalms, implying or registering circumstances of birth and social position, the fathers' pride and the mothers' pain, the fears, hopes, and obligations of individuals in a precariously situated community. The fragments – the oldest Jewish writing that survives on anything like paper – included the first mention of a pogrom, and lists used in managing the daily affairs of the community. This seemed an ideal starting point for a brief and gritty sketch of some of the basics of Western history. The result was a book, Cried and Measured, published by David Meltzer's Tree Books in 1977.

I moved on to early fragments of Old Latin. In my workings of the earliest texts in the alphabet that we now use, I turned to an exploration of reading practices in relation to poetry in our own time. The Roman alphabet evolved into a writing system that could be read silently. This reduced or destroyed the sound patterns which had distinguished poetry from other forms of language art. In working with Old Latin fragments, I used some of the practices of early writing (inconsistent direction of reading; lack of separation between words) to create rhythms by differing reading speeds, replacing such devices as metrics with pacing that didn't depend on audibility. At a time when literati were talking about "interrogating" the nature of meaning, it was discouraging to me to see how much trouble they had with a work like this which experimented with the more basic questions of the essential mechanics of reading. In this much larger book, frameworks of stoicism, dread, tranquility, and, despair frame comic and quotidian trills. bpNichol published the book that resulted, Should Sun Forever Shine, in 1980.

That next step was the translation into contemporary terms by the distant descendents of the authors of the original documents which survived in fragments. For Cried and Measured, that would require a contemporary Jew, who had lost family in the Holocaust, and was, as the Psalms put it, "A stranger in a strange land," living outside Israel and writing in a language other than Hebrew. Marton Koppany, a Hungarian Jew whose very name resembles those of the fragments, offered to do the job. Since Marton is, in my opinion, the best literary minimalist I'm familiar with, I could not have been more fortunate. There were many coincidences in this work: My father, a U.S. Army chaplain, had given primary aid to the survivors of the concentration camp at Dachau; an event which changed his life and set in motion aspects of mine before I was born. My father taught at an Army base in Germany when the Soviets destroyed the Hungarian uprising of 1956. As a child watching these events unfold at close hand, they had a significant impact on my worldview.

I had several Italian translators in mind through much of the 90s and early 00s, particularly those belonging to the Inismo group. However, I came into contact with Anny Ballardini, who worked extensively with internet publication. She seemed an ideal translator for more reasons than I could have imagined or hoped for in advance. This completed the basic process of "bringing the text back home" - I had first returned to the origins of western culture in Judaism, from whence the figure Jerome Rothenberg had called "the first universal Jew" had given the Mediterranean world a nexus of ideas around which to build a new religion. A modern Jewish exile had translated it into the language of a hostile nation. The writing system the Romans used for their evangelical book, like it or not, has held the west together ever since. Likewise, a modern Italian woman who had made extensive use of the Roman alphabet in cyberspace, translated my second fragment book into Modern Italian, the language into which Old Latin has evolved. Its alphabet, made transmissible by digital electronics, was the first to make the internet a force in binding the world's individuals together. I used the first Roman efforts at writing to suggest a new poetic process, as well as to transform visual poetry into a more complex and flexible genre.

Although drafts have been on-line for comment since New Year's Day, and annexes will be added, my birthday, with Yom Kippur starting on its sunset, seems a good day to make a general announcement of its presence.

At a time of geo-political crisis, and in the midst of revolutions in communication, we, the distant heirs of the origins of what's best and worst in western culture, the more immediate heirs of the Holocaust, the gulags, the country that could unleash nuclear weapons on the world, as well as the most rapid expanse in human knowledge and human potential, (and perhaps the last generation to learn to write without the availability of electronic communication) look back at our origins, and forward with confidence in the evolution of writing, and at least some examples of adaptability and survival to make hope seem more than a sentimental joke.

At this point, the site includes

A general, and essential, essay on the project and its participants.

Four e-books: The complete English texts of the two books. Complete Hungarian translation of Cried and Measured. Complete Italian translation of Should Sun Forever Shine.

Contextualizing essay on the original use of the Roman alphabet.

Notes on relation of this project to others related to it.

Annexes to come include work already done by other people suggested by Cried and Measured, Should Sun Forever Shine, and work and comment on the whole project. It will also include more source material and reflections on Judaic writing and the Roman alphabet.

This book explores influence by crossing out or responding to poets who have influenced me. The Whitman and Andrade pieces are cross-outs, and anyone familiar with the first version of C*alamus* will notice that I did not respond to the entire collection. I left out pieces that I did not think would cut well for my project or pieces that have too much personal meaning for me. The response pieces to Leopardi and Neruda are probably even more telling, for in these pieces, it is sometimes difficult to see how the pieces directly relate to the original. Still, the influence is there reworked through my experience. — William Allegrezza

William Allegrezza edits the e-zine Moria and teaches at Indiana University Northwest. He has previously published five books, In the Weaver's Valley, Ladders in July, Fragile Replacements, *Collective Instant, *and Covering Over; two anthologies, The City Visible: Chicago Poetry for the New Century and La Alteración del Silencio: Poesía Norteamericana Reciente; seven chapbooks, including Sonoluminescence(co-written with Simone Muench) and Filament Sense (Ypolita Press); and many poetry reviews, articles, and poems. Sun 9 Oct 2011

Announcing the Unlikely Stories south Louisiana "Unlikely Saints" mini-tour! Please check out:

Friday, November 4, 8:30pm
at Cité des Arts
109 Vine Street, downtown Lafayette, Louisiana
Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Michael Harold, Clare L. Martin and Jonathan Penton will read, followed by an open mic. This event will be in conjunction with Words & Words, the regular reading series at Cité des Arts. Check out this sweet venue at http://www.citedesarts.org/

Saturday, November 5 at the 10th Annual New Orleans Bookfair 500-600 Frenchman Street, French Quarter, New Orleans The Nola Bookfair, which technically runs from 10am to 6pm but realistically starts between 11a and noon, is an annual event in which the bars and clubs of the 500 block of Frenchman Street open their dance floors and sidewalks to a variety of publishers and booksellers, such as AK Press and our friends at Deep South Samizdat Books. They have readings, lectures, and floor sales. Once the Bookfair is "over," the block runs literary-themed events for the rest of the night, such as literary burlesque and the anarchists' party. We went last year and had a fantastic time, so we're thrilled to be going back. Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Frankie Metro, Michael Harold, Clare L. Martin, Kristina Marshall and Jonathan Penton will all give daytime reads as part of the Bookfair's program (exact times to be announced). Learn more at http://www.nolabookfair.com/

Sunday, November 6, 3pm
The Maple Leaf Bar and Grill
8316 Oak Street, New Orleans
Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Frankie Metro, Clare L. Martin, Michael Harold, Kristina Marshall and Jonathan Penton will read, followed by an open mic. This event will be in conjunction with the Everette C. Maddox Prose & Poetry Reading, which just happens to be the longest-running reading series in North America. Check it out at http://mapleleafbar.com/

Hope to see you there!

Someone I was ina poetry group for many years with loved him & was influenced by his writing. She had been in therapy & had a surreal bent & a sense of linguistics, all of which she gleaned from the translations of his poetry, always hard-edged & clear tho wading in murky waters. He remained psychologically convincing no matter how far from the image he went, as I remember.

Where it would go, no poet could ever be sure.Confidence then is an odd thing in poetry, not that the next word will be right, but that our loyalty to the process is itself a leap into the unknown.I think this is the nature of Tranströmer's fidelity to the poem, the willingness to leave (to surrender?) the known spaces of the world in order to find what is true simultaneously to both that "ignition" and to language itself:*
> And the sea wind is in the dry pines further away, hurrying over the churchyard sand,
>
> past the leaning stones, the pilot's names.
>
> The dry sighing
> of great doors opening and great doors closing.

Take any subway train to 14th Street, where you can get the L train to Brooklyn. Get out at the Bedford Ave. stop, the first one in Brooklyn. If you want to take a bus from the subway, leave the platform at the Driggs Ave. exit. Take the #62 bus, the only bus that stops there. The bus stop is in front of the pizza place. The ride usually lasts about 15 minutes. Get off the bus at Division Ave. and Berry Street. Walk toward the water on Division Ave. for two blocks to Kent Ave., turn right one block to 475 Kent. It's that big, gray former warehouse building. The number on the door buzzer is 410. That means fourth floor, tenth unit. The door to the floor should be locked. Don't worry about it. I'll be right out.

You can also take the J or M train to the Marcy Ave. stop. Take the #62 bus which stops at Roebling St.,corner of S. 8th St. (near Broadway), to Division Ave. and Berry Street (see above). If you prefer to walk, turn left on Havemeyer to Division Ave., turn right and walk seven blocks to Kent Ave., turn right one block to 475.

By car or by taxi from Manhattan--get on the Williamsburg Bridge from Delancey St., in the right lane. Exit at the first exit, "Broadway-Staten Island." Go straight across the intersection. Go two blocks to the next light (Division Avenue), Turn right. Go to the end of the street and turn right at Kent Avenue. 475 Kent is at the end of the block.

By car from the BQE: going north, take the Flushing Ave. exit, turn left on Classon, turn onto Kent Ave., stay on Kent to 475. (watch for Division Ave. 475 is on the next corner--S. 11th St.); going south, exit at Metropolitan Ave., take Metropolitan to Wythe Ave., turn left and go to Division Ave., turn right on Division to Kent. Turn right to 475, one block. There is parking on Kent Ave.

DuPLESSIS & HARRINGTON, Phila., Moonstone, this Sat.

Mon 10 Oct 2011

Fact-Simile Editions presents a reading with

RACHEL BLAU DuPLESSIS & JOSEPH HARRINGTON

Sat., Oct. 15, 7 p.m., @ Robin's Books & Moonstone Arts Center, 110A S. 13th St., Philadelphia PA.

Rachel Blau DuPlessis is an American poet-critic, whose ongoing long poem project, begun in 1986, is collected in Torques: Drafts 58-76, Drafts 1-38, Toll (Wesleyan University Press, 2001) and Drafts 39-57, Pledge, as well as Draft unnnumbered: Precis (Salt Publishing, 2004). DuPlessis was awarded a residency at Bellagio in 2007; she was the recipient of a Pew Fellowship for Artists and of the Roy Harvey Pearce/Archive for New Poetry Prize, both in 2002. On October 21st, 2011 from 10am to 5pm, Temple University will celebrate her career and life's work with an all day tribute featuring poets from Philadelphia and beyond.

Joseph Harrington is the author of Things Come On (an amneoir) (Wesleyan Poets 2011), a Rumpus magazine Poetry Book Club selection; the chapbook Earth Day Suite (Beard of Bees Press 2010); and the critical study Poetry and the Public (Wesleyan UP 2002). His creative work also has appeared in BathHouse, 1913: a journal of forms, Hotel Amerika, The Collagist, Otoliths, Fact-Simile, and P-Queue, among others. He teaches at the University of Kansas in Lawrence, USA.

Tomorrowland Forever!

October 13-15, 2011
University of California at San Diego

Full schedule:
http://andnowfestival.com/program

Free featured events:
http://andnowfestival.com/featured-events

&NOW is a festival of fiction, poetry, and staged play readings; literary rituals, performance pieces (digital, sound, and otherwise), electronic and multimedia projects; and intergenre literary work of all kinds, including criti-fictional presentations and creatively critical papers. We particularly encourage pieces that promote linguistic and genre transgressions, along with literary artworks that promote interdisciplinary explorations and conversations with past, present, or future literary concerns and movements.

&NOW 2011: Tomorrowland Forever! is especially interested in literary artistic and literary critical works that circle ideas of innovation, experimentation, newness, and not-yetness; in futurisms of all kinds; in queries about progress, technology, market practices, and identity in relation to them; and in the possibilities of interrelationship between arts and other disciplines and engaged practices.

Hosted by Erin Foley
8:00 pm, Monday, October 17
The Grad Club
Kingston, Ontario
https://www.facebook.com/event.php?eid=240082686042844

Camille Martin is the author of three collections of poetry: Sonnets, Codes of Public Sleep , and Sesame Kiosk. Steeped in lyric traditions and influenced by her training as a pianist, her poetry is known for its meditative and musical qualities. Yet it also restlessly questions the assumptions of traditional lyricism, form, and narrative.

Of Sonnets, Rae Armantrout observes that “in some ways, these poems are almost traditional," yet "in these taut, fast-paced, self-aware poems, the lyric meets 21st-century paranoia and sparks fly.” Carol Dorf writes that Martin creates “a world where science and myth intersect,” a “world of a mind reflecting on itself, the natural and built environments, time, and language.” And Jordan Scott speaks of “the magnificence in these poems, a poetic magnetic, propelling you to turn the page.”

One of her current poetry projects is “Looms,” a collection of layered narratives. She is also working on “The Evangeline Papers,” a poetic sequence based on her Acadian/Cajun heritage and her participation in archaeological digs at an eighteenth-century village in Nova Scotia. Her finds: wine bottles and smoking pipes.

She blogs at Rogue Embryo, and her website is www.camillemartin.ca

IMRAM tomorrow !

Thu 13 Oct 2011

Friday14 Ocober

6.00pm (doras 5.30)
CITY ARTS 15 Bachelor's Walk
in Dublin, Ireland
Saorchead isteach/free admission

Siompóisiam ar Bhlagadóireacht na Gaeilge

Tagann City Arts agus IMRAM le chéile i mbliana le hiniúchadh a dhéanamh ar thodhchaí litríocht na Gaeilge ar líne le Siompóisiam ar Bhlagadóireacht na Gaeilge. Curtha i láthair ag an gcraoltóir Scott de Buitléir, beidh ceathrar cainteoirí ag an siompóisiam - Alex Hijmans, iriseoir agus údar; Aonghus Ó hAlmhain, blagadóir; Alison Ní Dhorchaidhe, file agus blagadóir; agus Mary Burns, riarthóir ghrúpa Facebook, Gaeilge Amháin.

I measc na n-ábhar a bheidh á bplé ar an oíche, cuirfear an cheist; an í an blagadóireacht an chéad chéim eile ar bhóthar na litríochta Gaeilge? An bhfuil teacht Twitter agus na meán sóisialta ag cur deireadh leis an mblagadóireacht, nó á neartú? An bhfuil áit ann do bhlagadóireacht mhionteanga i spás ollmhór an idirlín? Seans é seo do phobal na Gaeilge (agus an Bhéarla) breathnú go dáiríre ar an gcéad ghlúin eile de litríocht mhionteanga sa 21ú haois le réimse taithí na gcainteoirí.

Symposium on Irish language blogging

This year IMRAM joins force with City Arts to look at the future of Irish-language literature on-line. Broadcaster and writer Scott de Buitléir will be joined by journalist and author Alex Hijmans; blogger Aonghus Ó hAlmahin; poet and blogger Alison Ní Dhorchaidhe; and Mary Burns, administrator of Facebook group Gaeilge Amháin.

Is blogging the next step forward for Irish-language literature? Has the arrival of social websites and Twitter rendered blogging obsolete? Can minority languages flourish on the internet? These are just some of the questions that will be discussed in this provocative symposium.

An Homage to Pádraig Ó Fiannachta

File, sagart, foilsitheoir agus scoláire, tá áit lárnach i saol liteartha agus spioradálta na tíre seo ag an Moinsíneoir Pádraig Ó Fiannachta. Bronnadh Duais an Chraoibhín air sa bhliain 1969 de bharr a shaothair liteartha. Is é príomhaistritheoir agus eagarthóir An Bíobla Naofa é a foilsíodh sa bhliain 1982. I measc a chuid cnuasach filíochta tá Ponc, Rúin, Deora Dé, Léim an Dá Mhíle. Úrscéalta dírbheathaisnéise is ea An Chomharsa Choimhthíoch agus Ag Siúl na Teorann. Foinsí éagsúla inspioráide aige, an béaloideas áitiúil, an mhiotaseolaíocht, an litríocht chlasaiceach agus a ghairm mar shagart. Ón mbliain 1964 is é stiúrthóir agus eagarthóir coimisiúnaithe An Sagart é, teach foilsitheoireachta a fhoilsíonn filíocht, béaloideas, drámaíocht, léirmheastóireacht liteartha agus leabhair a bhaineann leis an diagacht. Sa bhliain 1996 bhunaigh sé An Díseart, Institiúid Oideachais agus Chultúr Dúchais a bhfuil cáil uirthi ón Daingean go Dubai.

Poet, priest, publisher and scholar, Monsignor Pádraig Ó Fiannachta is a central figure in Irish letters. Tonight IMRAM celebrates Pádraig's life and work in the company of poets and speakers Nuala Ní Dhomhnaill, Bríd Ní Mhoráin, Domhnall Mac Síthigh, Ceaití Ní Bheildiúin,Tadhg Ó Dubhsláine, Peadar Ó hUallaigh; and singers and musicians Seosaimhín Ní Bheaglaíoch, Caitlín Loughnane and Eoin Duignan. The homage night will be followed by an informal session organized by Feis na nGael in Conradh na Gaeilge's Club at 9.00pm, featuring singer Máire Ní Choilm, sean-nós dancer Rónán Ó Riagáin, musicians Larry Kinsella, Lynsey MacRitchie, Ceitlin Smith and Anne Louise Stewart.

Re: Transtromer
Thu 13 Oct 2011

Hi Poeticals,

I was at a wonderful Mary Oliver reading at Stanford last Monday. The only poem she read that was not her own was Transtromer's "Allegro" copied below.

enjoy,
Wallis Leslie
 "Allegro" by Tomas Transtromer
I play Haydn after a black day and feel a simple warmth in my hands.
The keys are willing. Soft hammers strike.
The resonance green, lively and calm.
The music says freedom exists and someone doesn't pay the emperor tax.

I push down my hands in my Haydnpockets and imitate a person looking on the world calmly.
I hoist the Haydnflag - it signifies:
"We don't give in. But want peace.'

The music is a glass-house on the slope where the stones fly, the stones roll.
And the stones roll right through but each pane stays whole.
From Tomas Tranströmer, New Collected Poems, translated by Robin Fulton (Bloodaxe Books, 1997/2011)

Someone I was ina poetry group for many years with loved him & was influenced by his writing. She had been in therapy & had a surreal bent & a sense of linguistics, all of which she gleaned from the translations of his poetry, always hard-edged & clear tho wading in murky waters. He remained psychologically convincing no matter how far from the image he went, as I remember.

On 10/6/11 12:08 PM, "Michael Heller" <[redacted]> wrote:

Where it would go, no poet could ever be sure.Confidence then is an odd thing in poetry, not that the next word will be right, but that our loyalty to the process is itself a leap into the unknown.I think this is the nature of Tranströmer's fidelity to the poem, the willingness to leave (to surrender?) the known spaces of the world in order to find what is true simultaneously to both that*

Fri 14 Oct 2011

I heard Robert Bly, that John Wayne of poets, read Transtromer translations at least five years ago, at the CUNY Grad Center. Bly was big and blustery, God-damned admirable and really, sorta lovable; so enthusiastic about Tranströmer and in encouraging more translations. That's when I keyed in on Tranströmer (& realized yet again what I'd miss w/o our great army of translators). I'm half Swedish so always eager to counter native gloominess and that Bergman movie in which the woman with drops her glass eye in a martini glass.

Here are Patty Crane's translations which Blackbird e-blasted after the announcement:

A towering figure in Scottish literature, Sorley MacLean was a love poet par excellence. He was also a political poet who bravely tackled themes of oppression and hardship both in Scotland and throughout the world. In many ways, his work brought Scottish Gaelic poetry into the modern world for the first time. But his work had deep roots in the Gaelic tradition, and the fresh modernism of his work was founded on the corner stones of that tradition. In this lecture, Máire Ní Annracháin will provide a new reading of some of Maclean's best-known poems, illuminating and celebrating their themes of love, heroism and the very land itself.

Until one can no longer tell where one’s limbs or eyelashes begin and the author’s sentences end. If either can, in fact, be said to begin or end at all. Pick any one of Freeland’s expertly carved sonic doorknobs and turn to open. The room waiting there contains the very universe, if not the socks, you’re standing in right now. PLEASE SUPPORT BIG BRIDGE Online! 15th Anniversary Issue, 2012!

Sat 15 Oct 2011

Dear Friends of Big Bridge,

It's that time again for our annual request for donations to help us keep Big Bridge going.

We greatly appreciate any amount you can contribute during these difficult economic times. Thanks so much to all who donated the last time we made a call for donations. Your contributions helped pay our Webmaster, and server fees.

Information on how to donate is at the bottom of this email.

Here are some highlights of what is to come in the 15th Anniversary Issue of Big Bridge due out in Spring 2012:

bridge work, a feature poetry chapbook by Andrei Codrescu, with illustrations by Nancy Victoria Davis

Voices for Change: A Contemporary Anthology of Moroccan Poets, edited by El Habib Louai

Guest Editor, Ampat Varghese will offering up a fine selection of New Wave Indian Writing

Jonathan Penton will manifest Cuyahoga Burning, a feature on current Ohio literature

We are honored to present an anthology of Tibetan Poets in Exile, from guest editor Teresa Chuc Dowell

Brian Unger will grace Big Bridge with another installation of Excerpts from the Philip Whalen Journals

Poetry from Japan, A Contemporary Anthology of Japanese Poetry will be a special guest edit by Jane Nakagawa

Guest editor, Adam Cornford will present a special feature "Neo-Surrealism and the Politics of The Marvelous"

Susan Deer Cloud will guest edit a Native American Anthology of poetry, prose, art and articles.

Thomas Devaney will be editing an exploratory anthology of contemporary tree poems.

Guest editor, Bonnie Finberg will be presenting 20 POETS, a poetry anthology dedicated to Akilah Oliver which will include poems by Jim Harrison, John Yau, Steve Dalachinsky, Bob Holman, Alice Notley, Patricia Spears Jones, Lynn Crawford, Louise Landis Levi and more.

And the compelling artist, Jim Spitzer, will be back with his tour de force project of art and text: THE BOOK: 40 PAGES

Plus! A mindbending gallery of visual splendor from Paris-Tsunami Book's Henrik Aeshna.

As you know, Big Bridge is always free to readers. Please support Big Bridge, so we can keep giving you all we've got!

All donations are greatly appreciated!

BONUS: Donations of $20 dollars or more will get you a copy of Goofbook for Jack Kerouac by Philip Whalen.

Please, donate now if you can!

There are two ways to donate.

You can send a check to Big Bridge, Box 870, Guerneville, CA 95446

Please make checks payable to Committee on Poetry, our fiscal sponsor, a 501(c) 3 Corporation.

or

You can go to Big Bridge Donation page at: http://www.bigbridge.org/BB15/donations.html and make a donation via Paypal.

Thanks to our fiscal sponsor, all donations are tax-deductible.

Thank you for your support.

Love and Peace,

New from Delete Press: Michael Leong's THE PHILOSOPHY OF DECOMPOSITION / RE-COMPOSITION AS EXPLANATION: A POE AND STEIN MASH-UP

Sat 15 Oct 2011

Dear All,

Delete Press is pleased to announce the release of THE PHILOSOPHY OF DECOMPOSITION / RE-COMPOSITION AS EXPLANATION: A POE AND STEIN MASH-UP, by Michael Leong. The cost is $10, which includes shipping. Orders can be placed through our new and improved website:

deletepress.org

THE PHILOSOPHY... is, in the words of the author, "a genetic splicing of two classic essays on composition." Using Poe's "The Philosophy of Composition" (1846) and Stein's "Composition as Explanation" (1926), Michael Leong has "lifted out individual words and phrases from the two source texts and used them to slowly accrete linked assemblages of verbal tesserae" and, in the process, intentionally constructed a novel work of constraint-based, conceptual poetics. It enacts the phenomenology of finding language, of imagination-at-work, while performing a critique of editorial and authorial ethics.

The cover of THE PHILOSOPHY... is made from Xylene ink transfers, and the interleaf is singed & scarred with homemade gunpowder burns.

Please consider ordering a copy and, as always, happy reading.

Best,
Jared

Unitarian Church, Halloween Belly-Dance Event, Brevitas marathon event

Sun 16 Oct 2011

Hi Folks - this is just to let you know that this Wednesday, October 19, i'll be featuring at the Unitarian Church on the corner of Pierrepont St. and Monroe Place in Brooklyn Heights - the reading runs from 7:00 until 9:00 and there will be an open mic as well - it's an intimate little reading usually held in the wood-panelled Alice White Room - the entrance is at 50 Monroe Place on the side of the building down several steps - it's near the Court St. stop on the "R" train and the Borough Hall stop on the 2, 3, 4, and 5 trains - there's a $3 admission charge - i'll be reading poems that tell stories (both linear and more subtle) including a few in the spirit of the Halloween season then on Halloween itself i'll be part of Evie Ivy's Dance of the Word Halloween Belly Dance & Poetry event at the Cornelia St. Cafe, featuring Evie Ivy and her dancers (easily worth the price of admission alone) along with poets Robert Gibbons, Robin Small-McCarthy, Bob Heman, Jack Tricarico, et al. - it will be a lot of fun and a perfect way to start your Halloween evening - it will begin right at 6:00 and run until 8:00 - admission is $12 and includes a drink - the Cornelia St. Cafe is at 29 Cornelia St. (just off of Bleecker St.) in Greenwich Village and is near the West 4th Street Station on the A, B, C, D, E, F, and M train lines and the Christopher Street Station on the "1" train - the wearing of masks & costumes is encouraged - i'll be reading all "spooky" poems then on Sunday, November 6th, from 2:00 until 5:00 p.m., i'll be part of the 8th Annual Brevitas Festival of the Short Poem at the Bowery Poetry Club - it's a unique event - Brevitas is a group dedicated to the small poem who twice a month share poems no longer than 14 lines - there will be over 40 poets participating - and while each poet reads their poems, the poems will be projected on a screen above their heads - in addition each person attending will receive a free copy of an anthology of all the poems being read (and more!) -

the anthology is a handsome professionally-produced perfect-bound book and is easily worth the price of admission ($7) - so for you a mere $7 you'll get to hear over 40 poets read and see their works projected and get to take home a book with all those poems (and more that weren't read) - the Bowery Poetry Club is on Bowery (a.k.a. 3rd avenue) between Bleecker and Houston (just across from where CBGB's used to be) and is near the Broadway-Lafayette Station on the "D" and "F" lines, and the Bleecker Street Station on the "6" train and the Prince Street Station on the "R" - it will be a great afternoon

so hopefully you'll mark all of this on your calendars and maybe come to my feature on Wednesday and to the two great group events (both of them unique)

see you all soon

- Bob

Jake Berry and Chris Mansel in Conversation:

Sun 16 Oct 2011

Jake Berry and Chris Mansel in Conversation:
http://www.argotistonline.co.uk/Berry%20interview.htm
Excerpt below:
CM: From the very beginning I have always described my writing as literally attempting to empty my head. The thoughts that hounded me and would not go away, I tried to get down on paper. Along with this are the bits of words flashing about. To me itâ€™s a troubling process. It is I suppose an expression of self. A never-ending sculpture that you can walk around in and explore. No matter how horrific it may be. [...]

JB: My place in the world? Do I have one? If we are defined by what we do then I am a poet, some of those poems are sung more abstractly than others, including visual poetry. I also play musical instrumentsâ€”the guitar first, but also piano, banjo, mandolin and a little flute. I write the occasional review and bits of prose that might be called philosophical. I draw and paint, work with clay and wood. I have had books and CDs published. I don't know if this places me in the world. I don't know if any of it has had any impact. I try to be a reliable companion to my wife, a reliable human to the cats in our home and tend houseâ€”all in what most people would consider a very eccentric fashion. I also try to be a good friend and usually fail by anyone's standards, including my own. Where does all this place one in relation to the world? [...]

stage version of Bill Manville's brilliant VILLAGE VOICE column of the late 1950's, capturing the drinking days and nights of the bar crowd of the Beat era. Set to a jazz score, the play takes us to the San Remo, where the lost-and-found souls Manville calls the "intellectuals, horned-rimmed men, poets, dancers, the beat and the bearded and their black-stockinged women, acrobats, tenors, sexual engineers, Spanish waiters, bust-ups and run-aways" act out their lives in vivid poetic fashion. The NY TIMES called SALOON SOCIETY "a downtown bromide, clever, the essence of bitter-sweet, and studded with little gems of truth." With J. Eric Cook, Dana Watkins, Nalina Mann, David Arthur Bachrach, Tony Torn, Frances Uku, Alex Bilu, Carmit Levite, andDan Illian. Direction and stage adaption byJim Milton, with assistance byJoan Meltzer. Immediately after the show, there will be a talk-back led by noted biographer, Patricia Bosworth.

(Includes some WOmpos) -- "Beauty is a Verb: The New Poetry of Disability"
Sun 16 Oct 2011

Beauty is a Verb: The New Poetry of Disability Edited by Jennifer Bartlett, Sheila Black, and Michael Northen. The anthology provides an understanding of the history and contemporary vitality of the poetry and poetics of the non-normative body. Three sectionsâ€”"Foremothers and Forefathers," "The Disability Poetics Movement," and "A Language of New Embodiment"â€”gather the poems and statements on poetics together in a meaningful whole.Â

Ron Silliman on "Beauty is a Verb" - "...Â BeautyÂ is the book that shows whatÂ identarianÂ poetry & politics can be in an age that has already absorbed the lessons of DonnaÂ Harawayâ€™sÂ â€œCyborg Manifestoâ€ & the works that followed exploding/exploring the concept of identity itself.

For the real question for any project like this has to be: Who is disabled? What is a disability? ..." Â

Creative Writing Position
Sun 16 Oct 2011

FYI.

Rochester Institute of Technology
English, College of Liberal Arts, 92 LombMemorial Drive, Rochester NY 145623-5604

Assistant Professor of English/Creative Writing

Situated within a vibrant technological university, the English Department seeks a teacher, writer, and scholar for a tenure-track position in Creative Writing, with a specialization in fiction and expertise in the practice of Electronic Literature/Digital Arts. Required qualifications: Ph.D. in English or MFA in Creative Writing in hand, evidence of outstanding college teaching, a strong research agenda, and publication. We seek candidates who approach their subject matter with fresh critical and theoretical perspectives. Applicants with significant experience in a wide range of E-literatures are especially welcome. Interdisciplinary approaches and global perspectives are highly desirable.

The successful candidate will teach both introductory and advanced fiction workshops and will develop courses in thetheory and practice of electronic literature/digital arts. Teaching assignments include introductory and advanced creative writing courses, as well as general education offerings such as first-year writing. The teaching load for new faculty is two courses per quarter and includes the possibility of developing with students the Web version of the undergraduate publication, Signatures.

We are seeking an individual who has the ability and interest to contribute to a community committed to Respect, Diversity, and Pluralism. (View links to RIT's core values, honor code, and statement of diversity.)

Apply online at http://careers.rit.edu . Faculty Search: IRC52157. Please submit a letter of application addressing the listed qualifications, the names of three references with contact information, a CV, and a statement of teaching philosophy. You can contact the search committee with questions on the position at: Dr. Sandra Saari, Search Chair, [redacted].

Application deadline is November 7, 2011.

Fabulous, Jesse - reminds me of Doc Drumheller here in New Zealand, his chapbook series The Great Distraction (production interrupted by the Christchurch earthquake; he lives down there). I haven't heard him perform it but his pages read themselves, to me, in shape and busting avant-rhyme, Lisa

New (no) business model for LRL e-editions

Mon 17 Oct 2011

The editors of LRL e-editions are thrilled to announce the launch of SIX new books! This time around, we're changing things up a bit:

In the past, we've only ever charged $2-3 over cost for our print-on-demand books. We're now ready to commit to making exactly $0 from this series: FROM NOW ON, ALL PROFITS FROM THE SALE OF PRINT-ON-DEMAND BOOKS IN THIS SERIES WILL BE DONATED TO A DIFFERENT SMALL PRESS EACH YEAR. First up: Chax Press<http://www.chax.org/>. So, any purchase of a print-on-demand title from this series during 2011-2012 will have the added benefit of helping to support the efforts of Chax!

Over the next few weeks, we'll launch one or two titles at a time, beginning with a book-length review of Michael Cross's Haecceities (Cuneiform, 2010)<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/group-review-of-michael-crosss-haecceities>, which is now available for download/purchase. Please stay tuned for new books from David Brazil, Sarah Mangold, Hugo García Manríquez, and Pattie McCarthy–as well as one monumental reprint from Beverly Dahlen!

Find out more on our newly redesigned e-editions site:

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is “Dark Hope” by Vernon Frazer and Michelle Greenblatt

Tue 18 Oct 2011

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œDark Hopeâ€ by Vernon Frazer and Michelle Greenblatt

Description:

As their divergent styles merge experimental language and personal experience into a rare musical synergy, Vernon Frazer and Michelle Greenblatt create a series of poems whose images of terror and darkness shadow dance across the page, their sinuous movements balancing a kernel of optimism that reveals itself as â€œDark Hopeâ€.

TENDENCIES: Poetics & Practice 10/20:
Joy Ladin, Sarah Dowling, Tony Leuzzi This series of talks on queer poetics, titled in honor of Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick, explores the relationship between queer writing, manifesto, poetic practice, and pedagogy.

The fall 2011 series begins with talks by:
Joy Ladin
Sarah Dowling
Tony Leuzzi

...followed by a discussion/Q&A session.

on Thursday, October 20 at 7 PM free admission
at CUNY Graduate Center
(in the Skylight Room, 9100)
365 Fifth Avenue, NYC

Joy Ladin, David and Ruth Gottesman Professor of English at Stern College of Yeshiva University, is the author of Soldering the Abyss: Emily Dickinson and Modern American Poetry (VDM), five books of poetry, including Coming to Life (winner of a 2010 Forward Fives award) and Transmigration (a 2009 Lambda Literary Award finalist). A new collection, The Definition of Joy, is due out from Sheep Meadow in spring 2012; her autobiographical reflections on gender transition, Through the Door of Life: A Jewish Journey Between Genders, will be published by University of Wisconsin Press around the same time. Her poetry, her criticism, and her essays on gender identity have been widely published.

Sarah Dowling is the author of Security Posture, which was recipient of the Robert Kroetsch Award for Innovative Poetry (2009). A Ph.D. candidate at the University of Pennsylvania, Sarah has published critical essays in GLQ and Canadian Literature. Her poetry has appeared in EOAGH, P-Queue, and West Coast Line, and is included in the anthology I'll Drown My Book: Conceptual Writing by Women. Sarah curates the Emergency Reading Series, and is international editor at Jacket2.

Tony Leuzzi lives in Rochester, NY, where he teaches literature and composition. He is the author three books of poems: Tongue-Tied and Singing (Foothills, 2004); Radiant Losses (New Sins press 2010); and Fake Book (forthcoming in Fall 2011 from Anything Anymore Anywhere). His poems and prose have seen print in a number of small press, academic, and literary journals, including Perigree, Sentence, EOAGH, Jacket, The Kenyon Review, and others. In Fall 2012, BOA Editions will release his book of interviews with twenty American poets.

Parks & Occupation, Hasty Call for Work
Tue 18 Oct 2011

Dear all:

1. an announcement, that the production of the next full issue (this one titled 'Lithic') has *not *been abandoned. Production has been slow or on hold, but by no means stopped.

2. in the meantime, and in light of the continuing occupation of Zucotti Park in NYC (along with similar actions everywhere) Whiskey & Fox is going to take up the torch of its earlier hasty mode of production, making haste on a series of very short issues in a special series dispatched specifically for the various radical occupations currently underway. What is meant by "for the occupations" is not "in tribute to," perhaps not even "in solidarity with," but as a foxing of theory and poetry/poetics into the occupations/as part of the occupations. See the full call for work at, Whiskeyandfox.org <http://whiskeyandfox.org>, download the nice-looking PDF of the call for work here in order to circulate it<https://sites.google.com/site/whiskeyfoxarchive/Home/parksandoccupation.pdf>, or just see below:

Parks & Occupation: a call for work
Vol. 5, Special series (dedicated to Denise Levertov & Robert Duncan)

Writing as the Office for Soft Architecture, Canadian poet Lisa Robertson asks, "what shall our new ornaments be? How shall we adorn mortality now?"—insisting that "this is a serious political question." *Whiskey & Fox*wishes to provisionally believe this and calls for work that will function to ornamentally elaborate the current occupations of parks, squares, etc.

An editorial in the second issue of the *Occupied Wall Street Journal*states, "For Wall Street and Washington, the demand is not on them to give us something that isn't theirs to give. It's ours. It's on us. We aren't going anywhere. We just got here." But where are we; and how are we going to think, elaborate, and decorate this place? It is no surprise that the spaces currently occupied are parks. Park space in particular already ornaments, articulates the interfaces of our human affects with countless non-human ecologies. This is not a matter of aesthetic surplus. How we decorate a new kind of a public space will matter; it will determine the variability of its surfaces. As we continue to witness capitalism collapse in on itself it will become more and more urgent to elaborate parkspace, even in small hasty bursts; to decorate the spaces we already occupy as parks with/as the ornaments that will articulate the spaces of a new democracy. But how to decorate the new park? How does poetry occupy such a park? For example, is there room for the intimacy of the coterie in the new park, or must the 'public' projects of Duncan and Olson dominate?

Whiskey & Fox asks for paragraph-long essays, poems, images, et alia, to publish in a special series which will return to our short format issues (roughly 6 pages an issue). For this series the 'Fox again requests hasty writing and will proceed with hasty publication of very brief issues to facilitate hard copy distribution. The libraries accumulating at the public occupations are of increasing importance and in need of, among other contributions, those pertinent to issues of the queer sexual politics which inhere in *Whiskey & Fox's *function as a journal of poetry, theory, and queer-heterotopoi.

*Whiskey & Fox *asks you to 'language Language for democratic dwelling,' Make haste! Decorate the new democracy. Send contributions to parksandoccupation [at] whiskeyandfox [dot] org.

The fox "raids the chicken 'coup' and snacks on the state."

Edwin Romond (EdRomond.com<http://www.edwinromond.com/>) is the author of, most recently, Alone with Love Songs (Grayson Books), and three earlier books of poems. His work has appeared in The Sun, Barrow Street, The Rockhurst Review, New Letters, English Journal, The Pittsburgh Quarterly, Poet

Lore, and other journals. Romond has been awarded poetry fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts and from both the New Jersey and Pennsylvania State Councils on the Arts. Before retiring in 2003, he was a public school English teacher for 32 years in Wisconsin and New Jersey. He now lives in Wind Gap, PA with his wife, Mary, and their son, Liam.

Burt Kimmelman (BurtKimmelman.com<http://burtkimmelman.com/>) has published six collections of poetry. A poem from his most recent book, As If Free (Talisman House, Publishers, 2009), was featured on NPR's The Writer's Almanac. A seventh collection, The Way We Live, is forthcoming (from Dos Madres Press, 2011). For over a decade he was Senior Editor of the now defunct Poetry New York: A Journal of Poetry and Translation. He has also published a number of books of criticism, including The "Winter Mind": William Bronk and American Letters (Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1998), as well as scores of essays on medieval, modern, and contemporary poetry. Recent interviews of Kimmelman can be accessed online: a video interview with George Spencer that was broadcast on Poetry Thin Air (click here<http://vimeo.com/27710442>) and a lengthy email exchange with Tom Fink published in Jacket 40 (click here<http://jacketmagazine.com/40/iv-kimmelman-ivb-fink.shtml>); Kimmelman's interview of Michael Lally, moreover, has just appeared in Jacket2 online (click here<http://jacket2.org/interviews/crowd-inside-me>). Kimmelman is a professor of English at New Jersey Institute of Technology. He lives in Maplewood, NJ with his wife, the multiple award-winning novelist and short-story writer Diane Simmons.

http://www.stationhill.org/

Station Hill of Barrytown, established in 1977 by George Quasha and Susan Quasha, is an independent publisher whose mission is to challenge and expand conceptions of human possibility. Innovative works in human alternatives have been published in the arts, particularly in poetry and literature (including fiction, non-fiction, and criticism), and contemporary art and music; philosophies and practices of conscious living (including studies in Buddhism/Dzogchen/ Zen and Jewish esotericism); alternative health and healing (including acupuncture, bodywork, oriental medicine, mind-body therapies, and cooking); and social and ecological studies.

David Arner

David Arner (piano, harpsichord, percussion), a long time proponent of innovative music and spontaneous composition, teaches at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Performing throughout the US both solo and collaboratively (with musicians Michael Bisio, Tomas Ulrich, Jay Rosen, as well as poet/sound-artists Charles Stein and George Quasha), he has also pioneered a re-vitalization of new music for silent film (recently at The Museum of Modern Art).

Bernadette Mayer

Bernadette Mayer was born in Brooklyn and is the author of more than two dozen books of poetry, including most recently Studying Hunger Journals (Station Hill Press), as well as Ethics of Sleep and Poetry State Forest. She has taught writing workshops at The Poetry Project at St. Marks Church for many years and served as its director. She lives in East Nassau, N.Y.

George Quasha
http://www.quasha.com/

George Quasha, poet/artist/sound artist, explores a common principle in language, sculpture, drawing, video, sound, and performance. His books include Ainu Dreams, Axial Stones: An Art of Precarious Balance, Verbal Paradise (preverbs), and, with Charles Stein, An Art of Limina: Gary Hill’s Works and Writings. He has received a Guggenheim Fellowship (video art) and NEA Fellowship (poetry). For more info please visit the above url.

Charles Stein
http://www.charlessteinpoet.com/

Charles Stein is author of 13 books including most recently From Mimir’s Head (Station Hill Press); a translation of The Odyssey; a vision of the Eleusinian Mysteries, Persephone Unveiled; a study of poet Charles Olson, The Secret of the Black Chrysanthemum; and, with George Quasha, a study of Gary Hill, An Art of Limina. He holds a Ph.D. from the University of Connecticut and lives in Barrytown, N.Y. For more info please visit the above url.

Sam Truitt
http://www.samtruitt.org/

Sam Truitt is the author of Vertical Elegies 6: Street Mete (Station Hill Press); Vertical Elegies: Three Works (Ugly Duckling Presse); Vertical Elegies 5: The Section (The University of Georgia Press); and Anamorphosis Eisenhower (Lost Roads Publishers), among other books. He teaches in the Language and Thinking Workshop at Bard College and is managing director of Station Hill Press. For more info please visit the above url.

Peter Lamborn Wilson

Peter Lamborn Wilson is author most recently of Ec(o)logues, a Menippean Satyre (mixed poetry and prose, both serious and humorous), published by Station Hill Press, as well as co-author of Green Hermeticism=alchemy and ecology (Lindisfarne Books); and author of Escape from the Nineteenth Century & Other Essays: Fourier, Marx, Proudhon and Nietzsche (Autonomedia) plus numerous other books and essays. He is a long-time member of the Autonomedia Collective and lives in the Hudson Valley.

Boog City
http://www.boogcity.com/

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 21st year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women’s writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea’s ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB’s, The Knitting Factory, and The Sidewalk Café. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

114. Rob McLennan

rob's newest poetry collection: A (short) history of l. (BuschekBooks); Ottawa + Toronto launches,

Wed 19 Oct 2011

My most recent poetry collection, A (short) history of l. (BuschekBooks) is now available. To order, check the BuschekBooks website, or drop $20 (outside Canada, $20 US) and I'll mail you a copy. Copies will also be available at the fall edition of the ottawa small press book fair, November 5, 2011.

rob mclennans A (short) history of l. is a collection of short, sharp, tight, lyric love poems, written still under the influence of the Canadian ghazal (as brought into Canadian literature through British ex-pat John Thompson), writing evasive and disparate leaps between lines that leave the connection sometimes thin, and often open-bare. How far can a poem go when so many seemingly unconnected references are woven through the text, the idea of the love poem, including science, popular culture, old film stars, historical characters? A (short) history of l. works to specifically place these poems firmly in the immediate world, one that includes the whole world and not just compartmentalizing love away from all else. When we love, do we lose our interest in the world?

link to BuschekBooks here.
http://www.buschekbooks.com/

Challenging but never cryptic, intimate but never insular, these poems deftly walk a series of fine lines. mclennan is a master at writing the particular details of any moment in such a way that the reader is free to imagine the larger structures of feeling and meaning. The results are exhilarating! Andy Weaver, author of Gangson

Oh, the stubborn heart. A (short) history of l. read with the urgency of an impossible narrative. Hunger, longing, desire, confusion, ache...what more did you want? mclennan has carved an ancient story new. These are poems to fall into without regret. Rhonda Douglas, author of Some Days I Think I Know Things

The author of more than twenty trade books of poetry, fiction and non-fiction in a number of countries, rob mclennan has published work in over two hundred trade journals in fourteen countries and three languages, and performed in Ireland, England, Wales, the United States and across Canada. His most recent titles are the poetry collections Glengarry (Vancouver: Talon, 2011), kate street (Chicago: Moira, 2011) and 52 flowers (or, a perth edge) (Japan: Obvious Epiphanies, 2010) and a second novel, missing persons (Toronto: The Mercury Press, 2009). In 1999, he won the CAA/Air Canada Prize for most promising writer (in any genre) in Canada under the age of thirty, and spent the 2007-8 academic year in Edmonton as writer-in-residence at the University of Alberta, and, since June 2003, has been regularly posting reviews, essays, interviews and other notices at robmclennan.blogspot.com. rob lives in Ottawa, Ontario.

Toronto launch: reading at the Art Bar Reading Series, Tuesday, November 22, 2011, 8pm, with Pearl Pirie and Shannon Maguire.

Ottawa launch: reading at Collected Works Bookstore and Coffeebar, Wednesday, November 23, 2011 at 7pm. Lovingly hosted by Rhonda Douglas.

Reading November 3: Levenberg and Simmons
Wed 19 Oct 2011

You're invited to hear Mitch Levenberg and Diane Simmons read new prose at Prose Pros – Thursday, November 3. 6:30 sharp at SideWalk Café, 94 Avenue A –corner of 6th Street – New York. Woody Allen meets Franz Kafka in Levenberg's urban prose – tempered lately by his commitment to a daughter adopted from China shortly before 9/11 interrupted his conviction that he could offer her peace and protection. Simmons is a different sensibility: her contemporary westerns are peopled by waitresses, conmen, truckers, and dusty saints. Her latest collection, Little America,won the short fiction prize from Ohio State University.

Somatic Engagement: the Politics, Poetics and Publics of Embodiment. A Chain Links book

Thu 20 Oct 2011

Somatic Engagement: the politics, poetics and publics of embodiment. A Chain Links book.

Edited by community artist, scholar, and dancer Petra Kuppers, the book opens with Arnieville, a Californian protest camp of disability, homelessness, and poverty activists. From there, a series of enactments welcome trespass and incursion in the name of survival.

Amy Sara Carroll on the Transborder Immigrant Tool, a GPS phone that uses poetry to lead the disoriented and thirsty to water caches and safety sites in the US-Mexican borderlands.

Devora Neumark on washing Tali Goodfriend?s hands in Lebanese olive oil outside the hotel where Colin Powell speaks to the Jewish National Fund, hands gliding over one another in the middle of an angry public protest.

Christian Nagler on writing an experimental novel while conducting an oral history of agricultural labor practices and migration patterns at the site of the Panamerican Highway in El Salvador.

Georgina Kleege on touch and blindness as she discusses Katherine Sherwood?s paintings of magic and the human brain, paintings that Sherwood began after her stroke ten years ago.

Eleni Stecopoulos on the healing quest as research and the complexities of cultural appropriation.

Amber DiPietra and Denise Leto on the collaborative connections of breath, body, pause, pain, and form. Somatic Engagement is an exploration of how relation and support play out in breaths, steps, and touch.

SAMPLE OF WORK FROM â€œTEXT LOSES TIMEâ€:

FROM â€œTHE SCAFFOLDINGâ€

The Rhymes of Vellum

A boy or girl, Vellum, blows a few papers in the wind It answers noise Hopping, hopped. Tapping, tapped Swim sweet twins swing twig Think of losing, serendipity or the wings of a sentence He will get them, but not tell you where they were I like to drink through my brotherâ€™s center A fingerâ€™s rose begins A shadow grows down the sidewalk Clapping, clapped It helps to rip this box open Sound harbor, sound hole Blind rose is a very shape friend I want a shirt to visit my slacks Moon noose soon loose A good look at the cookbook - lots of oâ€™s - ghost epaulets on the shoulders of a paragraph Dishes mixes, buses guesses I sit down to work; I draw with my right hand The response sadly is never Living as wide as it gets Think sift You could fault the long moth, the dog lost in soft fog, but itâ€™s the songâ€™s cost, its crust I got frogs in my throat, a forehead throat Boris said, â€œYour throatâ€™s red.â€ Timothy hums a nail into the wood I run uphill swimming The test isnâ€™t over The floorâ€™s hard The new girl at school Can you look at a book without getting caught on a line? Like radio, writing is a broadcast They found people in the mailbox A huge gem in a cage Susan flips back to the glossary Only a certain type of fastener The letter â€œRâ€ in each corner of a page Unexpectedly the middle is empty Next, write your best trick Most banjo Odd pretty piece asleep A drum whisking discard into cream In this way we raise our pigs on fire & Kenny is always six yards old The donkey said, â€œEnough.â€ The donkey said, â€œEnglish.â€ Dark thoughts wonâ€™t cure light sickness The ladder moved slightly throws the world in disarray The teacherâ€™s a bird and flies out the window They had found their clown center Art will say, â€œI like to pitch. What is your name?â€ Art will say, â€œHi, Iâ€™m Art. I like to pitch. Whatâ€™s your name?â€ Slowly toward a large bird Paper hats, cats A lot of noise comes to visit Long thin water in a line of people I called you once today to say geese make a village of gold & both of my little friends like to sing. Their secret voices are beautiful Spray Spray Spray

AUTHORâ€™S STATEMENT:

This book intends to present both verbal and visual poetries as equal. Though notions of poetics have shifted and swerved, what has stayed solid throughout is that the alphabet, the word â€“ however arranged â€“ contains, within it, dual significance. First, the proto-historic role of the visual conveyance of represented fact. Second, the overriding desire of human utterance to substantiate existence. In conjoining these two models this book hopes to form a third, blurred value. Thought and experience are factors that accrue, while staring and writing help resolve and conclude. Text itself is an amalgam of units of meaning. As you stare at text you notice the visual aspects of letters. As one stares further, meaning loses its hierarchy and words discorporate and the alphabet itself begins to surface. Shapes, spatial relations and visual associations emerge as one delves further. Alphabetic bits or parts or snippets of letters can create an added visual vocabulary amidst the very text one is reading. One aim, to this end, is to merge and hinge visual and textual writing into workable forms. This book collects some of these experiments.

AUTHOR BIOGRAPHY:

Nico Vassilakis was born in New York City in 1963. He has co-written and performed a one-man play about experimental composer Morton Feldman. Vassilakis is co-founder and curator for the Subtext Reading Series and editor of Clear-Cut: Anthology (A Collection of Seattle Writers). He has been a guest-editor of WOS#35: Northwest Concrete and Visual Poetry and his visual poetry videos have been shown worldwide at festivals and exhibitions of innovative language arts. In 1998, Vassilakis co-produced, with Rebecca Brown, a 24-hour â€œGertrude Stein-a-thon.â€ His work has appeared in numerous magazines, including Ribot, Caliban, Aufgabe, Chain, Talisman, Central Park and Golden Handcuffs Review. He works for Fantagraphic Books and lives in Seattle with his son, Quixote. With Crag Hill, he edited The Last Vispo Anthology: 1998-2008, a major anthology of visual poetry, due out in 2012 from Fantagraphics.

COMMENTS ON TEXT LOSES TIME:

â€œPart nested Minimalist cubes and part laser light that won't diverge across distance, Nico Vassilakis' poetry seems to ask whether we are primates at play on a baseball diamond of memory and desire beside mural-lined public structures slipping toward infinite regression.

Richly iterative, these pairings and alphabets escape the mirror to thrill us with variation and sting all forms of complacency. Vassilakis extends Oulipian strategies: Perec references, lamellisections, crystalline build-outs and transpositions, a scat of nonrepresentational vocables, lettered whirlwinds giving speed for legibility, -- "extracting the gem through layers of gauze" and, other times, lowering a gem into a fold.

Can an argument between a machine that produces texts and "longhand into tiny notebooks" wake us up? In pain, "the throbbing thumb" makes us "attend to the living."

If Vassilakis revises the rock lyric "meet-the-new-boss, same-as-the-old-boss" to "meet the solipsistic era. same as the old solipsistic era," is treatment to be had in a bar, a science lab, or will it reach us over the radio? Try a road trip, so

"you can't afford to blink, to be blind for even a second" going through a colander out where dust is breeding and "glass traps lighting" like no scene you've seen in quite this way. Through crevices, perforations, punctures, piercings, pinholes, see neighborhoods as "that place where organized sleeping happens." So, look for a faceted colony that "sometimes congeals."â€

--Deborah Meadows

â€œNico Vassilakis' Text Loses Time unhinges the folds of the book and the word; as the 'folded loose leafed sheets whiz past your ears' you can hear the echoes of meaning. The words flake off the page like aged paint leaving a patina of colour and meaning on the surface and a growing heap of signification at our feet. Here the means of writing rise up and turn against our expectation, lurching into new spaces. Letters become tactile, meaning becomes rubbery, and both reading and writing become a new collaboration.â€

Reminder: Jesse Seldess, reading and talk 10/29, Chicago

Sat 22 Oct 2011

Kenning Editions <http://www.kenningeditions.com/> and New Corpse <http://thecorpselives.com/> are pleased to announce a reading and talk by poet Jesse Seldess. Plus, The Paper Cave <https://www.thepapercave.com/books/> and Kenning Editions pop up shop, on site!

Seldess' poetry has been critically acclaimed since it first saw wide exposure in the form of his first collection, /Who Opens/. He will read from his latest book, /Left Having/, and give a talk on his compositional process, under the working title of "Inconstants and Variables."

Jesse Seldess recently relocated to Brooklyn from Karlsruhe, Germany. He is the author of two books, /Who Opens/ <http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/0976736403/who-opens.aspx> (2006) and/ Left Having <http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/9780976736486/left-having.aspx>/ (2011), both from Kenning Editions. He has also published chapbooks with Hand Held Editions, Instance Press, Answer Tag Press, and the Chicago Poetry Project Press. His work has recently appeared in the journals

/The Recluse/, /EOAGH/, /Jacket/ <http://jacketmagazine.com/40/at-seldess-jess.shtml>, /Little Red Leaves/ <http://littleredleaves.com/LRL4/Jesse_Seldess.html>, and /out of nothing/. Since 2001, he has edited and published /Antennae/ <http://www.antennae-journal.com/>, a journal of experimental writing and language-based performance and music scores.

Saturday October 29th, 2011, 7:00 PM at Green Lantern Gallery, 1511 N. Milwaukee Avenue in Chicago's Wicker Park neighborhood. Admission is free, along with beer, wine, and refreshments. The gallery is a third floor walk up and is not ADA accessible. This event is funded in part by Poets & Writers, Inc. Bring extra cash and avail yourself of the best book shop in the whole midwest.

Seldess also reads at the Poetry Project in New York City, November 16th, with Hoa Nguyen <http://poetryproject.org/program-calendar/hoa-nguyen-jesse-seldess.html>, and in the Moles Not Molars series, Philadelphia, November18th, as well as the DC Arts Center November 20th.

The age of alligator

Launching in conjunction with the IMRAM Festival

in Dublin, Ireland //

IT'S THE AGE OF ALLIGATOR

AND OTHER POEMS

by Collin Tholl //

is published by

The Red Jasper in Dublin :

[redacted]

Through song, dream-like narrative, and contemplations on imagery both abstract and concrete, Collin Tholl's debut chapbook, “It's the Age of Alligator and Other Poems,” urges a fundamental revaluation of our collective perception as well as the relationship we have with the forces governing over our everyday lives. The poems, though seemingly disparate, are bound by an oscillation between an earnest reflection on the universality of suffering and a detached, unaffiliated mysticism yearning to transcend such cynicism. Underlying Tholl's meditations and cries for liberation is a language punctuated with a childlike playfulness that is humorous yet assuredly sincere. This voice leads us to the periphery of some forgotten state of primal innocence — a state in which enlightenment may not necessarily be attained, but is glimpsed at as a taunting possibility, just barely out of our reach.

Please circulate widely:

Network Archaeology
Conference at Miami University, Oxford OH
April 20-21, 2012
Call for Papers (submissions due November 29, 2011)

This conference will bring together scholars and practitioners to explore the resonances between digital networks and “older” (perhaps still emergent) systems of circulation; from roads to cables, from letter-writing networks to digital ink. Drawing on recent research in media archaeology, we see network archaeology as a method for re-orienting the temporality and spatiality of network studies. Network archaeology might pay attention to the history of distribution technologies, location and control of geographical resources, the emergence of circulatory models, proximity and morphology, network politics and power, and the transmission properties of media. What can we learn about contemporary cultural production and circulation from the examination of network histories? How can we conceptualize the polychronic developments of networks, including their growth, adaptation, and resistances? How might the concept of network archaeology help to re-envision and forge new paths of interdisciplinary research, collaboration, and scholarship?

The conference will trace continuities and disjunctures between a variety of networks, including telecommunication networks, distribution systems for both digital and non-digital texts, transportation routes, media storage (libraries, databases, e-archiving), electrical grids, radio and television broadcast networks, the internet, and surveillance networks. We seek to address not only the technological, institutional, and geopolitical histories of networks, but also their cultural and experiential dimensions, extending to encompass the histories of network poetics and practice. The proceeds of the conference will form the basis for a substantial publication on Network Archaeology.

This conference is organized by the Miami University Humanities Center and is the final event in a year-long series entitled “Networked Environments: Interrogating the Democratization of Media.” It is a companion to our Fall 2011 symposium, “Networks and Power,” on November 17-18th featuring panels, interventions, and keynote presentations by Wendy Chun (Brown University) and Lisa Parks (UC Santa Barbara), that interrogate the interrelationships between networked environments, both old and new, and varied forms of power. The “Networked Environments” series, involving an interdisciplinary group of ten humanities scholars, seeks to show how the network dynamics so crucial to contemporary political developments have deep and perhaps unexpected roots in the histories of earlier forms of information production and circulation.

We welcome presentations of academic research and artistic projects on contemporary and historical network studies. Please send abstracts of 250 words and a short bio to cris cheek ([redacted]) and Nicole Starosielski ([redacted]) by November 29, 2011.

Keynote speakers include:

Lisa Gitelman, Associate Professor of Media and English at New York University, and author of Scripts, Grooves, and Writing Machines: Representing Technology in the Edison Era (2000), New Media, 1740-1915 (2004), and Always Already New: Media, History, and the Data of Culture (2008).

Richard R. John, Professor of Journalism at Columbia University, and author of Spreading the News: The American Postal System from Franklin to Morse (1995) and Network Nation: Inventing American Telecommunications (2010).

Alan Liu, Professor of English at the University of California, Santa Barbara, and author of The Laws of Cool: Knowledge Work and the Culture of Information (2004) and Local Transcendence: Essays on Postmodern Historicism and the Database (2008).

Jussi Parikka, Reader in Media & Design at Winchester School of Art (University of Southampton), and author of Digital Contagions: A Media Archaeology of Computer Viruses (2007), Insect Media: An Archaeology of Animals and Technology (2010), and Media Archaeology: Approaches, Applications, Implications (2011).

> Through song, dream-like narrative, and contemplations on imagery both abstract and concrete, Collin Tholl's debut chapbook, "It's the Age of Alligator and Other Poems," urges a fundamental revaluation of our collective perception as well as the relationship we have with the forces governing over our everyday lives. The poems, though seemingly disparate, are bound by an oscillation between an earnest reflection on the universality of suffering and a detached, unaffiliated mysticism yearning to transcend such cynicism. Underlying Tholl's meditations and cries for liberation is a language punctuated with a childlike playfulness that is humorous yet assuredly sincere. This voice leads us to the periphery of some forgotten state of primal innocence — a state in which enlightenment may not necessarily be attained, but is glimpsed at as a taunting possibility, just barely out of our reach.

Poets In Nassau Reading Circuit Presents Lisa Sisler and Dorinda Wegener

Sun 23 Oct 2011

Lisa Sisler
&
Dorinda Wegener
Â
with special guest Sam Hilliard author of The Last Track
Â
featuring in Tuesdays With Poetry
Â
Where: Bellmore Memorial Library
2288 Bedford Ave, Bellmore, NY

When: Tuesday, October 25, 2011
Â
Lisa Sislerâ€™s poetry has been described by Brian Henry as, â€œurgent, skillful, and necessary. [Lisaâ€™s] poems are fiery, command your attention, and, for however disturbing or painful or difficult her poems can be, they often seek and ultimately achieve a sort of cathartic alchemy that we can find only in poetry.â€ Lisa is the editor of Knocking at the Door: Approaching the Other, a poetry anthology from Birch Bench Press, an imprint of Write Bloody Books in April 2011 and a guest editor of the on-line journal, OVS.

Dorinda Wegener holds an MFA from New England College where she was a Joel Oppenheimer Award recipient. Her poems have been published in The Antioch Review, Indiana Review, Hotel Amerika, and Mid-American Review, among many others. Dorinda has had the honor of reading with the louderARTS Project in New York City. She has served on editorial boards at OVS Magazine, Naugatuck River Review, and Summer Home Review. A Teaching Artist for Teachers & Writers Collaborative of New York City, Dorinda resides with her family in Staten Island, NY.

Â
Open mic to follow feature
Â
Hosted by Lorraine Conlin
Â
Poets In Nassau is a group of poets who write, read, and discuss poetry at different venues in Nassau County.Â All are welcome.Â For more information, visit http://poetsinnassau.blogspot.com Â Â Join us on Facebookâ€”Search Poets In Nassau

Call for Work: Inaugural Issue of The Barefoot Review
Mon 24 Oct 2011

The Barefoot Review publishes original written work by people who have or have had physical difficulties in their lives, from cancer to seizures, Alzheimer's to tumors. It is also a place for caretakers, families, significant others and friends to write about their experiences and relationships to the person. They are a vital part to being able to live with an illness.

Submissions Guidelines The Barefoot Review is a new publication. Our purpose is to help people who have faced serious health issues. We publish twice a year, on the winter solstice and summer solstice. We look forward to reading all submissions. Who Should Submit? We are looking for submissions from two categories of people: 1) those who currently have or have survived a serious health issue and 2) those in their livesâ€"caretakers, families, significant others and friends. From each category of people we are looking for different content. From the challenged person we are looking for any subject, especially concerning aspects of living or surviving. From people in the challenged person's life we'd like writing about the person or your relationship with him or her. Specifics We accept submissions year-round of unpublished* work. Please submit up to five poems or a short prose piece (max 1000 words) per edition. Simultaneous submissions are acceptable; however, we request that you inform us immediately if your work is accepted elsewhere. We will let you know as soon as possible if your work will be published here. * Poetry is limited to no more than 5 poems. * Prose is limited to 1000 words. * Any style is acceptable, from personal tragedy to humorous reflection, with poetry from free-verse to rhyming. Please email work in the body of the message; attached files will not be opened. Also provide a brief biography of yourself (and the person with the illness if that is not yourself). The Barefoot Review acquires first-time North American rights. After publication, all rights revert to the author and may be reprinted as long as appropriate acknowledgment to The Barefoot Review is made. * Note: published work does not include posted on personal blogs or websites. Send email with work to [redacted]

W/F Parks and Occupation No. 1
Mon 24 Oct 2011

Friends of the Fox:

To follow up on the hasty call for work in light of the current occupations: http://www.whiskeyandfox.org/2011/10/parks-occupation-no-1.html

1. The first issue of Whiskey & Fox Vol. 5 Special Series, Parks & Occupation is out. It can be picked up at the Free Zine Station at Zuccotti Park in NY; OR you can download the PDF from http://whiskeyandfox.org.

Contributors include: Robin Clarke, David Hadbawnik, michael farrell, Jeff T. Johnson, Sten Carlson, & Rebecca Mertz. This is set of really incredible poems. As Spicer writes: "Reading the poem that does not appear when the magician starts or when the magician finishes. A climbing in-between. Real."

2. The Parks & Occupation series will continue for at very least a couple more tiny-format issues, and while we have some good material already, we will consider more submissions. So please, consider sending work in accordance with the call for work,<http://www.whiskeyandfox.org/2011/10/parks-occupation-call-for-work.html>to parksandoccupation [at] whiskeyandfox [dot] org (please don't sent back to this address). We will make an announcement if we can no longer accept any submissions. We hope to get another hasty tiny-format issue out next weekend or early next week.

Make haste & Decorate the new democracy!

BOOBY, BE QUIET! -- "One of the most engaged and enthusiastic works of poetics in recent years" (Charles Bernstein)

Tue 25 Oct 2011

Dear friends.

Booby, Be Quiet! is a collection of essays and columns about poetry, literature and literary politics(the title is a very learnÃ©d reference to Audenâ€™s translation of the Eddas). The essays and columns have been published in various places in the last five years â€“ about half of the book consists of material written for The ReykjavÃk Grapevine, Iceland's english speaking magazine, the other half are lectures and longer pieces written for various occasions, but all aimed at a foreign audience.

The book is currently available on the poEsia web:
http://www.poesia.fi/booby-be-quiet/

It can also be downloaded as a pdf â€“ no strings, but free donation apreciated (5-15 euro suggested â€“ click here: https://www.paypal.com/cgi-bin/webscr?cmd=_s-xclick&hosted_button_id=3ATHQ59 4SC5YS)

http://www.norddahl.org/english/2011/10/booby-be-quiet/

Other e-book formats will be available soon (if you want .mobi, .lit or .epub versions drop me a line and I'll send them to you via email as soon as they are available â€“ if you want other formats, please just ask).

You can also like the page on Facebook, thatâ€™s always nice:
http://www.facebook.com/BoobyBeQuiet

BOOBY BE QUIET EirÃkur Ã–rn NorÃ°dahl

â€œThese youthfully exuberant essays on translation, innovation, performance, and audience are compelling, delightful, and often funny: illuminating as Reykjavik white nights and sharp as the skate blade of a North American racing champion. EirÃkur Ã–rn NorÃ°dahl redefines the issue of poetry and national language in a brilliant and transformative essay that is the centerpiece of the collection. His impatience with the tried and true is infectious. One of the most engaged and enthusiastic works of poetics in recent years. â€œ

Charles Bernstein, author of All the Whiskey in Heaven (Farrar, Strauss & Giroux, 2010), Attack of the Difficult Poems (University of Chicago Press, 2011) amongst other books.

â€œNorÃ°dahl's essays are brilliant vivisections of contemporary poetry and its problems, filtered through the prism of Iceland's 2008 economic collapse â€” a close cousin of our own so-called "economic downturn." The kitschy, nostalgia-driven "future economies" of both contemporary money culture and poetry culture are closely linked here (and elsewhere): " . . . the present worships an outdated past, even at the cost of a living present." As poets we may be working toward a goal of "fame" in the twilight of imagination â€” and, as citizens, working toward "affluence" in the twilight of capitalism â€” but if we identify the importance of the living moment as "the only eternity that lasts, without pause," at least one of us may yet become that "he or she who affects . . . the entire critical mass of moments we call eternity" â€” beyond the mirage-like glow of "fame." NorÃ°dahl's lively essays also introduce us to (perhaps) heretofore unexplored global poetries old and new in the most entertaining way, and leave us pondering a few delightful scenarios: "Imagine a poem so robust and resourceful that it could survive humanity . . . the nuclear dust finally settles and all that's left of mankind is poetry." Considering how long poetry's been around, that's probably what's going to happen anyway. But in case you're wondering what a poetry that robust might look like, there may be some presentiments of it right here.â€ â€” Sharon Mesmer, author of Annoying Diabetic Bitch (Combo Books, 2008) and The Virgin Formica (Hanging Loose, 2008).

Hope you are all doing well.

151. Eric Hoffman
Hoffman - The American Eye
Tue 25 Oct 2011

Dos Madres Press announces: The American Eye by Eric Hoffman
http://www.dosmadres.com/dos-madres-books/american-eye-by-eric-hoffman/

Included in this volume are two poems: the first, Emerson in Europe, a verse translation of the journals of Ralph Waldo Emerson, who, just prior to his Harvard speech, lamenting the death of his wife and having given up the cloth, tours Europe, meeting with Wordsworth, Coleridge and Carlyle. A second poem, The Vast Practical Engine, a lyric collage of the philosophy of pragmatism, utilizes the cadences of Emerson's godson William James. Together, these poems comprise a concise meditation on the immense transformation in human thought contributed by these two radical thinkers. Praise

In Eric Hoffman's new poems, quarried in part from Emerson's Journal, the American eyeball is no longer "transparent" but constantly active and exploratory, the seer "insisting / Upon his right to see & judge." Emerson's reflections here acquire subtly new and distinctive rhythms that register the appetencies of vision even as they seek to measure "the weight of history." The American eye, "Like a chemist assembling substances," is searching, urgent, attracted to the accuracies of science, yet as the last sequence of poems also warns (Louis Agassiz is the exemplary figure here), that piercing gaze may also viciously affirm a world of social and racial hierarchies—in face of which our only hope, as Hoffman's Emerson memorably avers, is to "search for what is similar / In ourselves." – Peter Nicholls An Excerpt author bios:

Leo Brent Robillards most recent novel is entitled, Drift. Set in South Africa during the Second Boer War, it raises questions about why and how we come to fight wars in far flung places be it in defense of ideals or in quest for economic gain. These issues all too relevant today -- are handled intimately through the journey of two prairie boys, an Australian nurse, and a South African balloonist, as they drift together in the blast furnace of the Great Karoo. Robillard is also the author of Leaving Wyoming and Houdinis Shadow. The former was listed in

Bartleys Top Five in the Globe & Mail for Best First Fiction of 2005. The latter was eventually translated into Spanish. His work has appeared in numerous magazines, journals and anthologies at home and abroad, including CV2, The Fiddlehead, Grain, Prairie Fire, Queens Quarterly, and Verge. He lives on Lake Eloida in south-eastern Ontario with his wife and two children. www.leobrentrobillard.blogspot.com

Nicholas Lea published his first book Everything is movies (Chaudiere Books, Ottawa) to acclaim in 2007. Reviews of his work have appeared in the Ottawa Xpress, Matrix Magazine,Prairie Fire and The Globe & Mail Online. He has served as a poetry reader for Bywords.ca as well as The Fiddlehead. He lives in Ottawa where he is currently working on his second collection of poetry. He launches a new chapbook with Andrew Faulkner and Leigh Nash's The Emergency Response Unit.

Lillian Necakov has been writing and publishing for over 30 years. Her work has appeared in publications in Canada, the United States, China and Serbia. She is the author of Sickbed of Dogs, Wolsak and Wynn, 1989, Polaroids, Coach House Books, 1997, Hat Trick, Exile Editions, 1998 and The Bone Broker, Mansfield Press, 2007. She was the editor of the very small press Surrealist Poets Gardening Assoc. for a bunch of years. During the 80s she sold her books on the streets of Toronto and was one of the subjects of the documentary film Street Writers, Lucky to be Here. Lillian runs the Boneshaker Reading Series. OCCUPY via WTO

Robert Mittenthal and I co-fashioned a libretto for a WTO anniversary project, two years ago, that never quite saw the light of day. Reading it recently I noticed connections to the current OCCUPY movement. So, I thought to send it out again. Please pass it along.

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is "Woody Alliances Laundered" by Andy Brown and William Wordsworth
Wed 26 Oct 2011

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is "Woody Alliances Laundered" by Andy Brown and William Wordsworth

Description:

In â€œWoody Alliances Launderedâ€ Andy Brown and William Wordsworth collaborate on 16 reinterpretations and variations of the most popular of English Romantic poems "I wandered lonely as a cloud". Among other questions, these witty and insightful new poems ask what if Dorothy Wordsworth were the original source of the poem; what if William vanished from the picture altogether; what does commerce and recession have to do with daffodils; and why is the Reverend Spooner out walking in Grasmere, conversing with rhyming Cockneys, Zen poet-monks, and archaeologists who have just uncovered the Rosetta Stone for Wordsworthâ€™s original poem?

recording made with Westinghouse vibration mic fed into mono Marantz cassette recorder; the result was downloaded into Audacity and edited in CoolEdit. Different versions above have different filtering.

Analog was used to avoid digital issues between the mic and recorder. The sound was gathered at a number of sites in Eyebeam, most of them involving metal grids: stairways, interior fencing, upper-level flooring. The result was a gathering of resonances between metal, Eyebeam-body (interior space), and sounds transmitted either in air or directly through metal. The harmonic structures are strong and dissonant. The body cries out in murderous delight.

Down the street, an 18-wheeler is gathering up the disassembled Matthew Barney work. Such heavy metal would have collapsed with a thud. Elsewhere lighter-than-air work delights the blue-grey sky and rain is forecast. The Eyebeam building is singing everywhere. It is singing

Re: Poetic Parkour, or Avant-Rhyme
Wed 26 Oct 2011

Thanks for this, Lisa. Actually the speedily craggy lines of Chapman's translation of the Iliad suggested the idea. There is something deliciously rough and improvisational about his couplets--as if he had thrown himself from a rooftop and were looking for the next place to land and somersault to another transition. An Opera based on William Burroughs' 1962 dystopian novel about identity disintegration, oppression of humanity's collective consciousness through technological influence, and revolution through the subversion of those very technologies. Featuring six talented vocalists, an ensemble of fifteen instrumentalists, and live video projections, the opera is organized using the same cut-up techniques and emphasis on language that distinguishes Burroughs' literary work.

Call for Papers: Bob Dylan book
Fri 28 Oct 2011

Call for Papers

Planned scholarly book of essays centered around Bob Dylan’s 2001 and 2006 albums *Love & Theft *and Modern Times, arguably two of his best and most important works since 1975’s Blood on the Tracks.

Essays to be edited with an introduction by Eric Hoffman.

Tentative title: *From *Love & Theft *to Modern Times: Bob Dylan and the Twenty First Century*

Possible topics to include:

· *Love & Theft *and *Modern Times *in context: modern rock, the baby boom generation, in contrast to Dylan’s other works, etc.

· Song structure: Dylan’s use of the American songbook

· Lyrics: Dylan’s use of various texts including Peter Green’s Ovid translations, Saga’s Confessions of a Yakuza, etc.

· Political content in Dylan’s late work

· Love & Theft and musical blackface: Dylan’s self-conscious “borrowings” of American roots music

Please send your papers to: [redacted]

Suggested length: 7,500 words.

Deadline for abstracts: June 2012

Deadline for final papers: October 2012

November 2011

165 messages · Fri 28 Oct 2011 – Wed 30 Nov 2011

November 2011 turned the room toward the look of the word — typography, the visual source, the poem as a thing seen as much as read — while, downtown, a movement in the streets was turning poetry back toward the public square. One hundred and sixty-five messages moved through the list, and its currents ran between the eye and the occupation: the ancient art of how a poem sits on the page, and the sudden question of what poetry owes a protest camp. The month held the visual and the political in a single frame.

The largest currents were about seeing. A thread on the poetics of typography summoned the ghost of Gutenberg to ask how the arrangement of type itself makes meaning, while another traced the visual sources behind William Carlos Williams's Spring and All, the poem as an object with a look and a lineage in the eye. An interview with the concrete poet bill bissett drew the difficulty into the open — one reader confessing he gave up, that reading bissett "wasn't worth all the effort of trying to figure out what he was saying", the visual-sound poem pushed so far past sense that even a sympathetic room could balk.

The quarrel was about difficulty and its limits. bissett's radically visual, phonetic, unpunctuated work forced the old question — how much strangeness a reader owes a poem, where legitimate difficulty ends and mere noise begins — the room split, as it always had, between those who would do the work and those who suspected the work was a bluff. It was the appropriative decade's difficulty debate in a new, purely visual key.

And the world walked in from the park. Occupy Wall Street was in full occupation, and a poetry anthology had sprung up in the camp — poetry gathered not in a magazine or a portal but in a tent in a plaza, the visual and typographic questions of the month suddenly set beside the very physical fact of bodies holding a public space. The look of the word on the page met the look of a movement in the square.

I have set November down exactly as the archive delivered it — the poetics of typography, Williams's visual sources, the reader defeated by bissett, and the poetry rising in the Occupy camp — because it was the month the list held the eye and the street in one hand: the poem as a seen object, and poetry as a thing that happens where people gather to be counted. A room that will argue how type makes meaning and whether bissett is worth the effort, in the same weeks that an anthology grows in an occupied plaza, is a room reminded that the word has always had two lives, one on the designed page and one in the crowded square, and that in the autumn of 2011 both were, unexpectedly, alive.

TIME, Seven Poems
by Piotr Gwiazda

Piotr Gwiazda is the author of two books of poetry, MESSAGES (Pond Road Press, 2012) and GAGARIN STREET (Washington Writers' Publishing House, 2005). He also published a critical study, James Merrill and W.H. Auden: Homosexuality and Poetic Influence (Palgrave Macmillan, 2007). His poems, essays, and reviews have appeared in many journals, including Barrow Street, Chicago Review, Hotel America, Jacket, PN Review, Postmodern Culture, Rattle, The Southern Review, The Times Literary Supplement, and XCP: Cross Cultural Poetics. Excerpts from Gwiazda's translation of Polish writer Grzegorz Wroblewsk's volume of prose poems KOPENHAGA were recently featured in the Denver Quarterly, AGNI Online, Colorado Review, and Seneca Review. He was Writer-in-Residence at the James Merrill House in Stonington, Connecticut in the fall of 2008, where some portions of TIME were composed. He teaches modern and contemporary poetry at the University of Maryland Baltimore County (UMBC).

Subject: BOOBY, BE QUIET! -- "One of the most engaged and enthusiastic works of poetics in recent years" (Charles Bernstein)

Dear friends.

Booby, Be Quiet! is a collection of essays and columns about poetry, literature and literary politics(the title is a very learnÃ©d reference to Audenâ€™s translation of the Eddas). The essays and columns have been published in various places in the last five years â€“ about half of the book consists of material written for The ReykjavÃk Grapevine, Iceland's english speaking magazine, the other half are lectures and longer pieces written for various occasions, but all aimed at a foreign audience.

The book is currently available on the poEsia web:
http://www.poesia.fi/booby-be-quiet/

It can also be downloaded as a pdf â€“ no strings, but free donation apreciated (5-15 euro suggested â€“ click here: https://www.paypal.com/cgi-bin/webscr?cmd=_s-xclick&hosted_button_id=3ATHQ59 4SC5YS)

http://www.norddahl.org/english/2011/10/booby-be-quiet/

Other e-book formats will be available soon (if you want .mobi, .lit or .epub versions drop me a line and I'll send them to you via email as soon as they are available â€“ if you want other formats, please just ask).

You can also like the page on Facebook, thatâ€™s always nice:

â€œThese youthfully exuberant essays on translation, innovation, performance, and audience are compelling, delightful, and often funny: illuminating as Reykjavik white nights and sharp as the skate blade of a North American racing champion. EirÃkur Ã–rn NorÃ°dahl redefines the issue of poetry and national language in a brilliant and transformative essay that is the centerpiece of the collection. His impatience with the tried and true is infectious. One of the most engaged and enthusiastic works of poetics in recent years. â€œ

Charles Bernstein, author of All the Whiskey in Heaven (Farrar, Strauss & Giroux, 2010), Attack of the Difficult Poems (University of Chicago Press, 2011) amongst other books.

â€œNorÃ°dahl's essays are brilliant vivisections of contemporary poetry and its problems, filtered through the prism of Iceland's 2008 economic collapse â€” a close cousin of our own so-called "economic downturn." The kitschy, nostalgia-driven "future economies" of both contemporary money culture and poetry culture are closely linked here (and elsewhere): " . . . the present worships an outdated past, even at the cost of a living present." As poets we may be working toward a goal of "fame" in the twilight of imagination â€” and, as citizens, working toward "affluence" in the twilight of capitalism â€” but if we identify the importance of the living moment as "the only eternity that lasts, without pause," at least one of us may yet become that "he or she who affects . . . the entire critical mass of moments we call eternity" â€” beyond the mirage-like glow of "fame." NorÃ°dahl's lively essays also introduce us to (perhaps) heretofore unexplored global poetries old and new in the most entertaining way, and leave us pondering a few delightful scenarios: "Imagine a poem so robust and resourceful that it could survive humanity . . . the nuclear dust finally settles and all that's left of mankind is poetry." Considering how long poetry's been around, that's probably what's going to happen anyway. But in case you're wondering what a poetry that robust might look like, there may be some presentiments of it right here.â€

â€” Sharon Mesmer, author of Annoying Diabetic Bitch (Combo Books, 2008) and
The Virgin Formica (Hanging Loose, 2008).

Hope you are all doing well.

SPLAB Presents Occupy Seattle and Dodie Bellamy

Sat 29 Oct 2011

Politics do not change until the culture changes. And t
Dear SUNYstas,

Politics do not change until the culture changes. And the Occupy movement suggests that weâ€™re ready for a cultural shift again. Here are some of the voices from the Occupy Seattle rally of October 15th, including David Korten, the Peopleâ€™s Mic and Seattle folk legend Jim Page. SPLAB Presents for 10.24.11.

In town for a celebration of an exhibition by feminist artist Carolee Schneemann, Dodie Bellamy read from The Buddhist at the Henry Art Gallery on October 20th, 2011 and an excerpt was featured on SPLAB Presents for the week of October 31, 2011.

If you're coming to Seattle, give me a heads-up and perhaps we can get you on the air on KBCS.FM. The segments are archived at:
http://splab.org/2010/11/interviews/

Happy Halloween.

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is "Articulating Space: Short Essays on Poetry" by Jessica Smith

Mon 31 Oct 2011

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œArticulating Space: Short Essays on Poetryâ€ by Jessica Smith
Description:
Composed between 2000 and 2006, these short essays on poetry and poetics straddle the genres of traditional academic essay and manifesto. They include analyses of L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poetics (Andrews, Bernstein, DuPlessis, Hejinian, Howe, McCaffery, and Silliman) and poetry by Modernists Eliot, Stein, and Zukofsky; 19th Century poets Browning, Rossetti and Shelley; and contemporary poets Cecilia VicuÃ±a and Christian BÃ¶k. Spinning 200 years of poetry and philosophy, Smith weaves a theory of the concomitance of space and time in language.

Unlikely is dead; long live the new Unlikely!

Tue 1 Nov 2011

Greetings, fellow very slow and unidirectional chrononauts! There's a new, massive, text-and-multimedia issue up at www.UnlikelyStories.org, featuring:

Angela Tyler-Rockstroh's 20-minute documentary of Occupy Wall Street
Linh Dinh's description of Occupy Wall Street
Phil Rockstroh's essay on the need for Occupation Yacov Ben Efrat on the Tel Aviv protests
Sam Vaknin on the Ponzi scheme that is the Chinese economy
"In you, everything sank," a Short Film by Rebecca Freeman and Adam Fine Musical Selection from /Whispers of Arias/ by Stephen Mead and Kevin MacLeod Visual Art by Stephen Harrison, Sheri L. Wright and Fabio Sassi
"Living Two Wars," Creative Non-Fiction by Rita Bozi Hot New Fiction by George Sparling, Heidi Bell, Paul Kavanagh, Jon Alan Carroll, and Iman Carol Fears "Autobiography," a Spoken-Word Film by Kristina Marshall and Fresh Poetry by Wendy Taylor Carlisle, John Grochalski, AE Reiff, KJ, Luke Skoza, Luke Marinac, Sheri L. Wright, and Jonathan Penton along with A Sardine on Vacation, Episode Sixty-Nine

This will be the last issue of /Unlikely 2.0/ under that title. We are shutting down that name, and, followed by a brief hiatus, will resume publication at www.UnlikelyStories.org under a new banner. The full explanation can be be found at http://www.unlikelystories.org/11/penton1111.shtml

And just as a reminder, UnlikelyStories.org, in co-ordination with the Nola Bookfair, the Everette C. Maddox Memorial Prose & Poetry Reading, and Words & Words, is hosting three gigs in southern Louisiana this weekend:

Friday, Nov. 4
Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Michael Harold, Clare L. Martin and Jonathan Penton will read at Cité des Arts
109 Vine St. in downtown Lafayette
8:30pm

Saturday, Nov. 5
Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Frankie Metro, Michael Harold, Clare L. Martin, Kristina Marshall and Jonathan Penton will be at The New Orleans Bookfair

500 Block of Frenchman and 2100 Block of Chartres approx. 11am to 6pm

Sunday, Nov. 6
Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Frankie Metro, Michael Harold, Clare L. Martin, Kristina Marshall and Jonathan Penton will read at The Maple Leaf
8316 Oak Street
3 pm

Hope to see you there!

new from above/ground press: Camille Martin's If Leaf, Then Arpeggio

Wed 2 Nov 2011

Right now is what dwindling feels like, despite the mulberry outside my window steadfastly anchoring its taproot. The new century counts planets that might support rooted beings and ravenous predators.
But stardust piles up on lines connecting dots in constellations, blurring them into nebulae. Shapeless experience waffles between concrete and abstract, accounting for the popularity of horoscopes, especially when Jupiter enters Aries and we vacillate, like volcanoes heaving ash before the pyroclastic flow, collapsing before tsunami, dwindling until the next cycle. I abstractly shake dew from ripe mulberries.
Or I lie down, gazing at shivering green tracery non-existent a couple of months ago and just as soon to vanish.
A more or less concrete cup of coffee balances on my belly, wobbling to the diastolic and systolic rhythms of my heart.

If Leaf, Then Arpeggio

Camille Martin, a Toronto poet, is the author of Sonnets (Shearsman Books, 2010) and Codes of Public Sleep (BookThug, 2007). Her work has been widely published in journals in Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, and Australia. Her current work in progress is a collection of double sonnets. She is also engaged in a project funded by the Ontario Arts Council: a long poem (working title: The Evangeline Papers) based on her Cajun/Acadian heritage and her recent visit to Nova Scotia to participate in an archaeological dig at Beaubassin and to research Acadian and Mikmaq history and culture. She earned an MFA in Poetry at the University of New Orleans and a Ph.D. in English at Louisiana State University. Currently she teaches writing and literature at Ryerson University. #OccupyPhilly with Jacques Lipchitz

Thu 3 Nov 2011

SOME NEW VISUAL POETICS:

With the statue of William Penn standing guard, the protestors of Occupy Philadelphia are standing up. But there's also another rather large monument, just across the street in Thomas Paine Plaza, that is keeping a watchful eye as well.

It's Jacques Lipchitz's "Government of the People," which was designed as a symbol for democracy and dedicated during the bicentennial of the United States of America in 1976.

In light of everything that's now occurring, I think Government of the People is starting to make more sense to more people.

Suggested Donation: $5

Come to Edge: A Reading Series of Emerging and Younger Writers. Edge is a series of local and national writers and cross-genre artists, emphasizing diversity of narrative, identity and literary source. Its purpose is to create community, visibility and voice for emerging and younger writers. Broadsheets of the authors' work will accompany each reading. Books and journals will be available for purchase and signing by the authors. Refreshments will be available after the reading.

Readers:

Charles Alexander is the founder and director of Chax Press, in Tucson, where he has lived all but three of the past 27 years. His books includeHopeful Buildings (Chax 1990),Arc of Light / Dark Matter(Segue 1992), Near or Random Acts (Singing Horse 2004),Certain Slants (Junction 2007), and Pushing Water, which has just been published in its entirety by Cuneiform Press. He is recipient of the distinguished Arizona Arts Award, and is a former director of Minnesota Center for Book Arts, of Black Mesa Press, and of the Tucson Poetry Festival. He teaches workshops in poetry through Chax Press, the UA Poetry Center, Naropa University's Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics, and many other sponsoringinstitutions. He is a Senior Lecturer at University of Arizona South.

Naïm Amor is a parisian musician who moved to Tucson Arizona in 1997. Naïm collaborated with Joey Burns and John Convertino of CALEXICO on the album Tete A Tete under the name of ABBC (Amor, Belhom, Burns, Convertino). In 2005 he recorded "Sanguine", an album produced by Joey Burns of CALEXICO and briefly released on Universal/Atmosphérique in France, now on german label Le Pop for Europe and distributed through Cd Baby in the US. Naïm has been also persuing sort of a "side project" that results on four albums of instrumental music called SOUNDTRACKS. A first one came out in 2000, a volume II was released in 2004, a volume III came out in 2009 and the volume IV is coming out by fall 2011. Today, Naïm just finished a new album "Dansons" that should be released by the end of 2011.

Shannon Cain's debut collection of short stories, The Necessity of Certain Behaviors, is the winner of the 2011 Drue Heinz Literature Prize. Her stories have been awarded the O. Henry Prize, the Pushcart Prize, and a fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts. Shannon is a writing coach and workshop facilitator, the fiction editor and board co-chair for Kore Press, and the Artist in Residence for the City of Tucson's Ward One. She is coeditor ofPowder: Writing by Women in the Ranks, from Vietnam to Iraq, and the recipient of a Pushcart Prize, the O. Henry Prize, and a fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts. Cain's work has appeared, or is forthcoming, in Tin House, Colorado Review, New England Review, American Short Fiction, and Southword: New Writing From Ireland. She has taught fiction writing at the University of Arizona and Arizona State University, and was the 2011 Picador Guest Professor in Literature at the University of Leipzi.

Next Edge Reading will be held on Wednesday, January 18, 2011.

Mon 7 Nov 2011

This Sunday, Nov. 13, 2:00-5:30 pm, at the Memorial Art Gallery auditorium, 500 University Ave., Rochester, there will be a group reading to celebrate the forthcoming Poets Walk, Rochester and honor poets to be included in this tribute to two centuries of poetry in the Greater Rochester/WNY area (including Lucille Clifton and Robert Creeley). Over 40 poets will read their chosen poem, and others will read poems by departed poets or poets not able to be present.

The reading will be followed by a reception in the atrium of the Gallery.

Poets Walk, a sidewalk along University Avenue between North Goodman Street and Prince Street, will feature the engraved words of local poets placed in granite blocks and bands throughout the length of the block. An interactive component will allow visitors to use their cell phones to hear audio recordings of community voices performing poetry written by local poets or poets who are historically significant.

Transcripts and audio of the included poems, along with biographical information from each featured poet, can be found at http://artdrop.democratandchronicle.com/poets-walk .

Poets Walk, a joint venture between the City of Rochester, the Memorial Art Gallery and Writers & Books, is part of the Artwalk Extension project.

After Language /Letters to Jack Spicer
Mon 7 Nov 2011

After Language / Letters to Jack Spicer
Stephen Vincent (BlazeVox)

The test of a true poem, Stephen Vincent writes, is how not to die for it. How can a book that chills you to the bone — As Jack Spicer’s Language surely does — become a structuring, challenging, politicizing and even comforting recurring presence through forty years of a life lived under its spell? With a hard-won, contrarian patience, Vincent applies the test, and the hope he finds at the end is all the more convincing for the precariousness of the path it takes through the silent gap between No and One listens to poetry.

—Peter Manson

Stephen Vincent's engagement with Jack Spicer's poetry goes arguably farther back than anyone who wasn't a friend or acquaintance. What is not arguable is the generative richness of that engagement. Having been sent Spicer's Language by a friend while serving as a Peace Corps volunteer in a Nigeria poised on the brink of civil war, he finds in its "uncomfortable music" a poetry uncannily expanding the borders of meaning. Cast in the creative-epistolary form of Spicer's own After Lorca, this book is a tactful searching: it respects the intransigence of the poems, and tries, in the gentlest of ways, to understand the man who wrote them. After Language is a meditation on interpretive migration, on the troubled paths of poetic inheritance, and on the tangled, fraught (and yes, magical) ways that poetry survives it makers.

—George Albon

94 pages; $16.

Nov 11: The Human Micropoem @ Occupy Chicago

Mon 7 Nov 2011

You are invited to participate in THE HUMAN MICROPOEM

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 11th @ 5pm at Jackson & Lasalle (NE corner) as part of Occupy Chicago
http://occupychi.org

Bring one poem 5 minutes in length to be read aloud or just come & be part of the chorus -- all welcome!

The Human Micropoem is a call and response choral form utilizing the human microphone at the occupy movements to amplify the speaker's words by those listening. The speaker says a line and then everyone who can hear repeats it.

Bone Bouquet
http://www.bonebouquet.org

For two years, Bone Bouquet has aimed to highlight the important work of female poets, who are often underrepresented in the writing community and popular media. Rather than personal politics, their criteria are excellence and vibrance. Rather than segregating the poetry of “women’s issues” from “regular” creative work, their goal is to provide an additional arena in which female poets can make their work more visible to readers, building their reputations as artists.

*Sarah Bridgins

Sarah Bridgins’ work has appeared in Monkeybicycle, InDigest, Pear Noir!, Playground, and Bone Bouquet among other journals. She lives in Brooklyn with a cat and a boy.

*Lauren Nicole Nixon
http://www.laurennicolenixon.com

Lauren Nicole Nixon is a Brooklyn-based artist representative, teaching artist, and poet. Nixon’s poetry appears and is forthcoming in literary journals such as Bone Bouquet, Sugar House, Eleven and a Half, The Montreal Review, The Tulane Review, Aforementioned Productions, 491, Jelly Bucket, Rougarou, Umbrella Factory, The Belladonna* Chaplet Series, Spillway, The Writing Disorder, In Posse Review, RELEASE, Leveler, and No, Dear. She is a Pushcart Prize nominee. Her first chapbook, There's a Jukebox in the Back, will be published next summer by Dancing Girl Press.

Lunar Chandelier Press
http://lunarchandelier-lunarchandelier.blogspot.com/

Lunar Chandelier Press, formed in 2009, publishes books of modern, evocative writing. They are inspired by the spirit of the poet- and artist-directed expatriate productions of the 1920s Paris Left Bank and the various contemporary poetry projects of Brooklyn's Gowanus Canal's right bank: Belladonna Books, Cabinet, Litmus Press, Portable Press at Yo-Yo Labs, and Ugly Duckling Presse, as well as the venerable Hanging Loose Press, based in downtown Brooklyn. Lunar Chandelier's first three books debuted in the fall of 2010, with Vyt Bakaitis's new collection of poems Deliberate Proof; Lynn Behrendt's long-awaited first book of poems petals, emblems; and Joe Elliot's new collection of poems Homework.

*Vyt Bakaitis
http://www.eoagh.com

Vyt Bakaitis, a native of Lithuania, has been living in New York City since 1968. A book of his poems, City Country, appeared in 1991 (Black Thistle Press), and con/structs, his book of visual poems and photographs, came out in a limited edition from Arunas K. Photo +Graphics. Bakaitis has also published translations of poetry from several languages, including his anthology Breathing Free: Poems from the Lithuanian. His translations of the poems of Jonas Mekas were published as There Is No Ithaca (Black Thistle Press), with a foreword by Czeslaw Milosz, and as Daybooks (Portable Press at Yo-Yo Labs). Lunar Chandelier Press published Deliberate Proof last year. Poems are forthcoming in the online journal Eoagh.

*Joe Elliot
http://www.fauxpress.com/e/elliot.pdf

Joe Elliot ran a weekly reading series at Biblios Bookstore and Café in NYC for five years, starting in the early '90s, and helped move the series to the Zinc Bar where it continues. He co-edited two chapbook series, A Musty Bone and Situations, which published authors such as Antje Katcher, Paul Genega, Duncan Nichols, Mitch Highfill, Rich O'Russa, Douglas Rothschild, Shannon Ketch, Lisa Jarnot, Bill Luoma, Kevin Davies, Marcella Durand, Rick Snyder, and many others. He is the author of numerous chapbooks, including You Gotta Go In It's The Big Game, Poems To Be Centered On Much Much Larger Sheets Of Paper, 15 Clanking Radiators, 14 Knots, Reduced, Half Gross (a collaboration with artist John Koos), and Object Lesson (a collaboration with artist Rich O'Russa). Granary Books published If It Rained Here, a collaboration with artist Julie Harrison. His work has appeared in many magazines, including The World, The Poker, Giants Play Well In The Drizzle, The Poetry Project Newsletter, Torque, Hanging Loose, Eoagh, Occo, BoogLit, and Arras. His long poem, 101 Designs for The World Trade Center, was published by Faux Press e-mag (see the above url) and subpress published his collection Opposable Thumb. Lunar Chandelier Press published his most recent collection of poems, Homework.

*John Godfrey

John Godfrey began writing and publishing poems while at Princeton University. His recent publications include City of Corners, Private Lemonade, and Push the Mule, and his book Tiny Gold Dress is forthcoming from Lunar Chandelier Press next year. He has received fellowships and grants from the General Electric Foundation, the Foundation for Contemporary Art, and the Fund for Poetry.

*Toni Simon
http://vimeo.com/29734702

Toni Simon has exhibited her drawings at the Drawing Center and A.I.R Gallery in NYC. She lives in Brooklyn with her husband, poet and psychoanalyst Nick Piombino. She has contributed illustrations to many poetry books and magazines and recently she collaborated on Contradicta, a book of aphorisms by Piombino with over 80 of her illustrations (Green Integer). Simon just made a video for Trickhouse magazine (forthcoming) and an animated video for Stacy Doris' Cakepart project (see the above url). Earth After Earth is forthcoming from Lunar Chandelier Press.

Douglas Manson

Douglas Manson has played guitar for many years. Writing two to three songs per year since age 15, he now has about 50 songs and is ready to share the harvest. He teaches in Queens and lives in Brooklyn.

No, Dear magazine
http://www.nodearmagazine.com/

No, Dear, founded in 2007, is a slim volume hand-made in Brooklyn of new local poems loosely centered on a single-word theme.

*B.C. Edwards

B.C. Edwards is the recipient of the 2011 Hudson Prize. He is the author of the forthcoming collections of fiction, The Aversive Clause, and poetry, How to Mend Small Children and From the Standard Cyclopedia of Recipes. He is a regular contributor to BOMBlog and his work can be found in La Petit Zine, Red Line Blues, The Sink Review, Mathematics Magazine, Hobart, and others. He is also a Literary Death Match Champion and has the medal to prove it.

*Amy Lawless
http://www.amylawless.blogspot.com/

Amy Lawless is the author of Noctis Licentia (Black Maze Books), a four poem pamphlet from Greying Ghost Press, and the forthcoming chapbook Elephants in Mourning ([sic]). Her poems have recently been published or are forthcoming in Leveler, LIT, Catch Up Louisville, and Forklift, Ohio. She is a 2011 New York Foundation for the Arts fellow. She was born and raised in Boston and lives in Brooklyn.

Off the Park Press
http://www.offtheparkpress.com/

Off the Park Press is a non-profit small press determined to enrich the deep cross-cultural between visual art and poetry. Located in New York City, their intention is to reach out to writers and visual artists, known and unknown, across the country to participate in their experimental collaborative publishing projects. They also publish yearly anthologies of poems written by poets invited to respond to specific visual artwork that appears on the anthology's cover.

*Claudia La Rocco
http://www.theperformanceclub.org

Claudia La Rocco's poetry and arts writing have appeared in such outlets and publications as http://www.failbetter.com, Slate, Artforum, WNYC New York Public Radio, and the anthology Viva la Difference: Poetry Inspired by the Painting of Peter Saul. She writes about performance for The New York Times and is dance editor for The Brooklyn Rail. She is on the faculty of the School of Visual Arts' graduate program in art criticism and writing, and is editing an anthology of poems by painters for Off the Park Press. She runs The Performance Club.

*Ronna Lebo
http://www.ronnalebo.com/Ronna_Lebo/Welcome.html

Ronna Lebo received an M.F.A. from Mason Gross School of the Arts and teaches at Kean University. She performed for 12 years as Alice B. Talkless, won a Jackie 60 New Artist Award, and was included in two CMJ music festivals. Her work appears in Arbella, Long Shot, Big Hammer, Words, This Broken Shore, Whim Wit, and the anthology Will Work for Peace edited by Brett Axel. Her book Prolapse came out this year from Off the Park Press.

Boog City
http://www.welcometoboogcity.com

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 21st year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and

Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women's writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea's ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB's, and The Knitting Factory. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

Directions: C/E to 23rd St., 1/9 to 18th St.
Venue is bet. 10th and 11th avenues

New LRL e-editions: David Brazil & Pattie McCarthy!

Thu 10 Nov 2011

The editors of LRL e-editions <http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/> are thrilled to announce the launch of new books from David Brazil<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/david-brazil-economy>and Pattie McCarthy <http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/pattie-mccarthy-lo>! Please spread the word!

For those who haven't heard, this time around, we're changing things up a bit:

FROM NOW ON, ALL PROFITS FROM THE SALE OF PRINT-ON-DEMAND BOOKS IN THIS SERIES WILL BE DONATED TO A DIFFERENT SMALL PRESS EACH YEAR.

First up: Chax Press <http://www.chax.org/>. So, any purchase of a print-on-demand title from this series during 2011-2012 will have the added benefit of helping to support the efforts of Chax!

Please feel free to browse the catalog<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog>to date and stay tuned for new books from Sarah Mangold and Hugo García Manríquez--as well as one monumental reprint from Beverly Dahlen!

Sincerely,
The Editors

David Brazil, ECONOMY<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/david-brazil-economy> In David Brazil's ECONOMY a meditation takes shape as prosody, and the material trace of that effort is everywhere in evidence. Such a scrap heap of thought in facsimile might at first be reminiscent of Francis Ponge's notational practice in The Making of the Pré. However, in Brazil's pré/conomics the field's littered with home furnishings: "From stuff, to sense, among us." And the elemental dwelling places of sentiment are politicized: home ("The house as a production unit, productive") and also touch (as both sentimental & productive). ECONOMY is a home economics as prosody: "Am I doing the right things with my time?"

Pattie McCarthy, L&O<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/pattie-mccarthy-lo> In this, the fourth book from Pattie McCarthy, repetition marks the coordinates of maternity and childhood. Divided into two sections, the first "Liminal" opens between the death of a father and the speaker's pregnancy. "… it's easy to disappear/ completely into it. masses of flowers" McCarthy writes while rendering a figure neither wholly swallowed by grief or birth, but extensively visible in such a threshold state punctuated by "the stiff curl of wildcarrot leaf" (in quotation from WCW), the son who eats "…a freshly/ fallen orange/ autumn leaf before/ anyone can stop him." The second section "Oyer", Middle English for hearing (also in the legal sense before a court) cribs it's 14 line structure from the sonnet, yet end-rhymes give way to a more imperfect repetition that nonetheless defines an intimacy across "this precipitous division" — "the baby raises his arms (because he/ believes me & I pick him up —…" Such returning gestures (and returning phases) define the consolation of what repeats as well as the harder mourning for what can't. These determinatives "make explicit the caesura," McCarthy writes while weaving each section from a bordering network of quotation, multiplying the body of the text further, so that from "…quietly inside the house, it expands to meet you."

http://www.amazon.com/Historic-Diary-Tony-Trigilio/dp/1609640128/ref=sr_1_1?ie=UTF8&qid=1293910614&sr=8-1

"Tony Trigilio's Historic Diary (named after Lee Harvey Oswald's account of his time in the Soviet Union) excavates the nightmarish record of the first Kennedy assassination, its auguries and aftermath, with a blue fury and an obsessive zeal that border on the Talmudic. What he finds there goes beyond chilling to a pure-product-of-America craziness that makes me tremble for my country. 'I am waiting // for someone to / ride me, the / locomotive of history,' Trigilio writes, and his ticket beyond the grave takes us, willy-nilly, on this scarifying, brilliant, and disturbing ride" (Rachel Loden)

"'Hegel makes no sense when everyone is looking at you,'" confides the protagonist of Tony Trigilio's Historic Diary, and he's speaking from experience. In this extraordinary work of imaginative reconstruction, Trigilio assembles a postmodernist Warren Commission Report from archival research, obituaries, interviews, and historical broadcasts surrounding the assassination of John F. Kennedy, only to discover, in the chaos of evidence, rumor, and falsehood, that no dialectical method can offer his speaker an escape from the prison house of paranoia. By composing what Ezra Pound would have called 'a poem including history' from this harrowing litany of Cold War casualties, however, he offers his reader the stark consolation of an elegy for the truth itself: 'This is the story of what never happened, written ahead of time'" (Srikanth Reddy)

"Richly varied and deeply brave, Historic Diary is both a page-turner that takes you into remote corners of the Kennedy assassination controversy, and a bold postmodernist collage of poetic styles, voices, and forms. This fine book will keep you rereading and reworking the fragments the poet offers until you are left with not only an oblique but fascinating portrait of Lee Harvey Oswald and the times in which he lived, but also a challenging poetic exploration of the nature of history itself" (Martha Collins)

Re: Poets Walk reading at Rochester's Memorial Art Gallery

Fri 11 Nov 2011

John,
This event sounds wonderful -- great to see something like this in Rochester. I will be there!
Thank you
Cassie Lewis-Getman

This Sunday, Nov. 13, 2:00-5:30 pm, at the Memorial Art Gallery auditorium, 500 University Ave., Rochester, there will be a group reading to celebrate the forthcoming Poets Walk, Rochester and honor poets to be included in this tribute to two centuries of poetry in the Greater Rochester/WNY area (including Lucille Clifton and Robert Creeley). Over 40 poets will read their chosen poem, and others will read poems by departed poets or poets not able to be present.

The reading will be followed by a reception in the atrium of the Gallery.

Poets Walk, a sidewalk along University Avenue between North Goodman Street and Prince Street, will feature the engraved words of local poets placed in granite blocks and bands throughout the length of the block. An interactive component will allow visitors to use their cell phones to hear audio recordings of community voices performing poetry written by local poets or poets who are historically significant.

Transcripts and audio of the included poems, along with biographical information from each featured poet, can be found at http://artdrop.democratandchronicle.com/poets-walk .

Poets Walk, a joint venture between the City of Rochester, the Memorial Art Gallery and Writers & Books, is part of the Artwalk Extension project.

Fwd: TRUCK stop
Fri 11 Nov 2011

If you're at a loose end, or even if you're as busy as hell, please take a minute or two to read TRUCK at http://halvard-johnson.blogspot.com/ I've published a sequence to follow Doug and Sheila's - and this one is by Phil Hall, Canadian poet, and myself, Aussie bloke. I explain the circumstances before the poem, but I must tell you my wife suggested placing it in the mag at this stage. Good thought. I normally avoid publishing myself when I'm editing - it just seems bad manners - but I tell myself it is a sequence, and Phil had more control over it than I had. I hope you agree.

You'll also find Lawrence there, and Ken Wolman, and Australian poets Geof Page and Andrew Taylor.

More to come in the days that follow!

Brmmm brmmm and off we go again ...

The Poetry Anthology (at Occupy Wallstreet) (created and maintained by Occupy Language)
Fri 11 Nov 2011

Hey, poets. To place your poem in the Poetry Anthology, which is cataloged in the Occupy Wall Street library and maintained by the Occupy Language (formerly Occupy Poetry) group . . . email a poem (attachment fine) to Stephen Boyer at stephenjboyer [@] gmail . com. You will receive an automated response. Like everything else I've seen at Zucotti Park, the project is extremely well-organized. You can trust your poem will be included.

Right now the Anthology is organized in binders, by week. Portions or all will or probably will migrate to the Web.

Occupy Language is also defining its Dissemination Project. One member showed us origami-like handouts with word placements (on it). Some members have/will read to each other on a subway or bus. Their choice of text. Yesterday there was a marathon reading of Bartleby the Scrivener in an indoor galleria/coffee place with tables (I cannot find the noun) in a big bldg. at 55 Wall Street about seven blocks from the park. No mic. (No mic, to keep it from being shut down, not that Police Commissioner Ray Kelly has a stated aversion to Melville but you never know.)

War Poetry for 11/11/11
Fri 11 Nov 2011

Too many Irish lost their lives in wars in the past centruy, and many of the diaspora are in armies right across the world fighting for varius nations.

Let us remeber them, and the forcefully forgotton - those who faught for armies for whom it is taboo to remeber - the UK army in WWII and also the axis armies in the same period.

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is “Slight Return: Remix and Ekphrasis” by Robert Archambeau

Sat 12 Nov 2011

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œSlight Return: Remix and Ekphrasisâ€ by Robert Archambeau

Description:

What if Kafka had written the â€œKama Sutraâ€? What if the rhetoric of manifest destiny were mashed up with the destruction of Hiroshima? What if the icons of punk and glam found themselves curled up with Sheena of the Jungle? What happens when a poet draws a lucky card in the Mexican lotteria? What if poems were made from the flotsam and jetsam of culture, high and low? What if the author really has died, as Roland Barthes told us he would, and been replaced by the scriptor, whose sole power is to mingle texts? What if Jimi Hendryx had only given us the last two words of â€˜Voodoo Child (slight return)â€™? The questions, if not all the answers, are in the poems in â€œSlight Return: Remix and Ekphrasisâ€.

Learning their Lesson - Citizens of a Free Land #occupyberkely

Tue 15 Nov 2011

Learning their Lesson - Citizens of a Free Land http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kNHXuf6qJas In the following video, the first woman (in pink) that the police drag out of the crowd by her hair is Professor Celeste Langan, a beloved professor of British Romanticism and media studies and director of the UC Townsend Center of the Humanities. As she places herself in front of students, the police approach her with batons. She repeatedly told the police not to beat her but arrest her instead. As you can see here, they respond by dragging her out by force and throw her to the ground.

(Source article: http://www.huffingtonpost.com)
Their families for generations paid taxesThey study so as useful citizens to beThey protest as is every citizens rightIn America, land of the free But the only lesson that today they learnedIs that it don't matter what you think, that you fightThe state does not care, as it tears by the hairA professor for exercising her right A right taken for granted under ObamaUnder whom we thought change would comeAll that changed was the masters we servedAnd less free America would become. Police are there to control, not protect youThey impose theirs, not serve your willWhen that lesson's learned, the right we'll have earnedTo fight and to win to begin. Sure, there are worse countries out there like ChinaBut brutality seems to be like an infectionThat America has caught as to survive it has soughtThe state is moving in a Chinese direction...

Big Lucks
http://www.biglucks.com

Big Lucks is a Washington, D.C.-based literary journal founded in 2009. It publishes biannual print issues featuring conceptual poetry and prose, and recently started accepting work for themed online issues. Its editors are most frequently interested in work that changes their lives.

Emily Einhorn
http://www.myspace.com/emilyeinhorn
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1punuzO1mxQ

Emily Einhorn hails from Chicago. She frequently haunts a stage at the anti-folk venue, the Sidewalk Cafe. At 18 she picked up a banjo to learn how to play bluegrass, and at 18-1/2 she picked up a guitar to woo a boy. The rest is history. Her musical influences are The Smiths, Billie Holiday, Hank Williams, and Leonard Cohen. She resides in Brooklyn.

Joe Hall
http://www.joehalljoehall.wordpress.com/

Joe Hall's first book of poems is Pigafetta Is My Wife (Black Ocean Press). His poetry and fiction have appeared in Gulf Coast, HTML Giant, Barrelhouse, Hayden's Ferry Review, and Zone 3 among others. With Wade Fletcher he co-organizes the D.C.-area reading series Cheryl's Gone. He no longer lives in a trailer park.

Adam Robinson
http://www.publishinggenius.blogspot.com/

Adam Robinson lives in Baltimore, where he runs Publishing Genius Press and plays guitar in Coach Taylor, a rock band. His first book, Adam Robison and Other Poems, was nominated for the Goodreads Poetry Award. He self-published his second book, Say, Poem. He is also the editor of Dzanc Books' Best of the Web 2011. Robinson has an M.F.A. from the University of Baltimore and is a contributor to HTMLGiant.

Wei Tchou
http://www.wxtchou.com/

Wei Tchou is an M.F.A. candidate at Hunter College who is working on a book about her family. Previously, she contributed to Slate Magazine and ruined the Big Lucks twitter feed. She is a graduate of The University of North Carolina.

Mike Young
http://www.mikeayoung.blogspot.com/

Mike Young is the author of the book of stories Look! Look! Feathers (Word Riot Press) and the book of poems We Are All Good If They Try Hard Enough (Publishing Genius Press). He co-edits NOÖ Journal and runs Magic Helicopter Press. He lives in Baltimore.

Boog City
http://www.boogcity.com/

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 21st year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women's writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea's ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB's, The Knitting Factory, and The Sidewalk Café. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

Poetry Bus - Issue 3 --- Ransom Demand!!!!!

http://www.fundit.ie/project/pb3-the-poetry-bus-mag-issue-three

The Poetry Bus, Irelands newest and second best independent magazine (Cartys Poetry Journal being THE best, check it out!!!) is fundraising for the third issue. Its edited, its set, its ready to run, only its held hostage by the printers who are refusing to release it until the print run is paid for. The cheek of them, and it a recession and all!!!

So the Poetry Bus Liberation Front is asking poetry lovers everywhere to help out with FUNDIT.ie and subscribe, where you can get a copy of issue 3, with a FreeCD and other enhanced packages!!!

Background

The Poetry Bus started off as a blog which started off as a thread on the website of the Stinging Fly (Irelands third best independent magazine after the Bus and Cartys Poetry Journal!!!). Two issues have hit the streets, and the next is in the garage as we speak.

If you cant donate to get a copy, give it some publicity anyway, share online... we have â,¬600 to raise in 5 days!!!!

Yabba dabba do it now, to paraphrase Peadar O Donoghue, the Poetry Bus chief engineer!!!!

Call for Papers

Wed 16 Nov 2011

Barzakh, a biannual multi-genre journal with an internationalist stance run by graduate students in the English department at the University at Albany, SUNY is open to submissions for its next issue. ?Barzakh? is a word / concept that names the connecting link, the ?between? of something, such as different spheres of existence. In light of the current global occupy movements Barzakh is seeking innovative creative, critical and collaborative writing as well as writing in translation that specifically addresses the political implications of "the idea of being as essentially being-with-one-another." The "between" of self and other is what allows other and self to reverse positions and thus complicates fixed notions of identity and relationship. When we are with one another and aware of the between we are vulnerable because our position can be changed. How can language specifically address and facilitate this vulnerable "between"? Can the polis be an all-inclusive space and what role would language play in it? Can power relations be conceived as flowing between concentric circles rather than as a hierarchical top down movements? Can both listening/reading and speaking be considered authorial and thus reciprocal? Can there be a politics of reciprocal relationship or love based on mutual respect? Can the other be animal, plant, machine, alien or self? How could an all-inclusive polis be one that is based on differentiation and not assimilation? How could a unity of diversity be articulated in language? For its next issue Barzakh is looking for innovative creative, critical and collaborative writing as well as writing in translation that addresses the ethos and praxis of sharing in common a polis that is contingent on the "between" of "being with."

Please send any creative or critical work that delves into these subjects to [redacted] by February 28, 2012.

Concrete/visual poetry exhibition opening 11/17
Wed 16 Nov 2011

Dear all,

On behalf of the Poetry Collection of the University Libraries, University at Buffalo, it is my pleasure to announce the opening of LANGUAGE TO COVER A WALL, an exhibition of concrete and visual poetry curated by Steve McCaffery, Karen Mac Cormack, and Michael Basinski in collaboration with the University Art Galleries and others.

LANGUAGE TO COVER A WALL:
VISUAL POETRY THROUGH ITS CHANGING MEDIA

Nov 17, 2011 - Feb 18, 2012
UB Art Gallery, Center for the Arts, North Campus, Buffalo, NY

Opening reception Thur Nov 17, 5 pm to 7 pm:
5:45 pm Opening address by Marvin Sackner 6:15 pm Sound poetry performance featuring internationally acclaimed Canadian sound poets Paul Dutton, Nobuo Kubota, and W. Mark Sutherland

This exhibition of international scope will be one of the largest single gatherings of its kind, drawing upon language-art material from as early as a Pueblo Indian petroglyph (Galisteo Basin, New Mexico, ca. 1350-1680) up to the twenty-first century that contributes to an alternative tradition to standard linear poetry. Included are examples of seventeenth-century pattern poems, contemporary concrete, poesia visiva, eye poems, typestracts, poem-objects, and digital poems. Works by George Herbert, Lewis Carroll, Ian Hamilton Finlay, Barbara Kruger, Henri Chopin, Robert Lax, Dick Higgins, Daniel Spoerri, Alison Knowles, d. a. levy, Bob Cobbing, Siebren Versteeg, bpNichol, Bill Bissett, and Guy de Cointet are among a multiplicity on view.

* at CUNY Graduate Center*
* in the Skylight Room (9100)*
* 365 Fifth Avenue, NYC*

What are the new poetics and the new manifestos? What do authors REALLY DO when they write, and what can we learn from their investigations? This series of talks on queer poetics, titled in honor of Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick, explores the intersection of queer writing, the manifesto, poetic practice, and pedagogy.

A Distinguished and Presidential Professor of English and American Studies at the Graduate Center of the City University of New York, ROBERT FITZGERALD REID-PHARR holds a Ph.D. in American Studies from Yale University and a B.A. in Political Science from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Before coming to the Graduate Center he was an assistant and associate professor of English at the Johns Hopkins University. In addition, he has been the Edward Said Visiting Chair of American Studies at the American University of Beirut, the Drue Heinz Visiting Professor of English at the University of Oxford, the Carlisle and Barbara Moore Distinguished Visiting Professor of English at the University of Oregon, and the Frederic Ives Carpenter Visiting Assistant Professor of English at the University of Chicago. A specialist in African American culture and a prominent scholar in the field of race and sexuality studies, he has published three books and numerous articles in, among other places, American Literature, American Literary History, Callaloo, Afterimage, Small Axe, The Chronicle of Higher Education, Women and Performance, Social Text, Transition, Studies in the Novel, The African American Review, and Radical America. His research and writing have been supported by grants from the Ford Foundation, the Mellon Foundation, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation. He lives in Brooklyn.

STEPHEN MOTIKA is the editor of Tiresias: The Collected Poems of Leland Hickman (2009) and the author of the poetry chapbooks Arrival and At Mono (2007) and In the Madrones (2011). His first book, Western Practice, is forthcoming from Alice James Books in Spring 2012. Recent work has appeared in The Brooklyn Review, Eleven Eleven, The Boog City Reader 4, and The Poetry Project Newsletter. The Field, his collaboration with visual artist Dianna Frid, was on view at Gallery 400 at the University of Illinois, Chicago, in 2003.

A 2010-20122 Lower Manhattan Cultural Council Workspace Resident, he is currently the program director at Poets House and publisher of Nightboat Books.

SAMUEL ACE has published widely in periodicals and journals, including Ploughshares, EOAGH, Nimrod, The Prose Poem, an International Journal, and the Kenyon Review. He is the author of three collections of poetry: Stealth, co-authored with Maureen Seaton (Chax Press), Normal Sex (Firebrand Books) and Home in three days. Don't wash. (Hard Press). He is a two-time finalist for a Lambda Literary Award in Poetry, a recipient of a New York Foundation for the Arts grant, winner of the Astraea Lesbian Writer's Fund Prize in Poetry, The Katherine Anne Porter Prize for Fiction and the Firecracker Alternative Book Award in poetry. He currently lives in Tucson, AZ and Truth or Consequences, NM.

H_NGM_N reissue - Paul Violi
Thu 17 Nov 2011

H_NGM_N BKS has just reissued Paul Violi's first major collection - IN BALTIC CIRCLES. First released by the Kulchur Foundation in 1973, this new edition includes an introduction by series editor Nate Pritts, an afterword by Matt Hart.

http://www.h-ngm-n.com/in-baltic-circles/

Before passing away in April, 2011, Paul Violi was directly involved in the editing and proofreading of this reissue. Any differences between this version and the original represent corrections or changes that were expressly requested by the author himself.

Paul Violi needs to be read (and taught) MORE—with incredible seriousness and with serious delight. He was, hands down, one of our best poets—inventive, adventurous, original, and resourceful—his poems always pushing the boundaries and expanding the possibilities of what poetry could be, while simultaneously reaffirming at every instant exactly what poetry has always been: singing in the service of the infinite. *Please note that H_NGM_N BKS is currently open to submissions of full-length poetry/hybrid manuscripts.

Best,
Nate

OT: Help Belladonna Collaborative? Performance / Auction -- Donate / Participate [Speaking of 175 poets...]

Thu 17 Nov 2011

Dear Friend, Â Greetings from Belladonna Series! Reformulated in 2010 as the Belladonna* Collaborative, we are a feminist poetry press and reading series based in Brooklyn. To date, we have published the work of over 175 writers and poets, bringing experimental writing to the publicâ€”writing that would not have reached its audience without us. Â We are hosting a benefit that will showcase a musical performance by Anne Waldman and Ambrose Bye, live auction by renowned auctioneer Erin Ward with special assistant Amy King, and a dance performance by the A.O. Movement Collective, plus special surprise guests. Currently, we are looking for special one-of-a-kind items to feature during our live auction, and valuable donations and gifts to offer through our silent auction and everyone wins raffle. We are hoping to raise the money to publish the first full-length books of four important writers and a community engagement in feminist poetics and â€˜material lives.â€™ Â Our event is a live auction, silent auction and multi-genre performance set to take place December 13 at the Hi Art Gallery in Chelsea. Doors open at 6:30pm for the silent auction, and performances begin at 7:30pm. Donations valued at $250+ will be featured in our live auction, while donations of smaller values will be bundled into packages with other items (books, subscriptions, memberships) as part of our silent auction, which will take place throughout the evening. Weâ€™ll also have a book raffle in which every ticket wins a prize, ranging from single chapbooks to independent press subscriptions. Â The auction and the benefit will support Belladonnaâ€™s 2012 season of books and events, which share a theme of caring for the material realities of poets, viewing a publishing project holistically. We're referring to 2012 as The Year of Material Lives. We plan to host combination readings/dinners with ample time set aside to discuss the economic and social concerns of writers, artists, publishers, and other creators. Moreover, in addition to continuing our commemorative chaplet series, we hope to publish four full-length books of hybrid and experimental work in the coming year including new work by Julie Patton, LaTasha N. Nevada Diggs, Tonya Foster, and R. Erica Doyle. Â At the auction, we are hoping to earn the funds to complete our budget for 2012. This year weâ€™ve been fortunate to be the recipient of funds from both NYSCA and The O Books Fund, but we still have work to do to make our goals for this year a reality! Part of our benefit proceeds will also support honoraria for our wonderful interns. We hope you are able to join us! Tickets are now available on our website, and if youâ€™re unable to attend in person we invite you to purchase a ticket on behalf of a local New York poet. Belladonna* is now a 501(c)3 federally recognized non-profit organization. Â Best wishes to you!Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â

MASS NON-VIOLENT DIRECT ACTION !

THE REVOLUTION CONTINUES !

The Occupy Wall Street! Movement is calling upon you to participate in an international day of direct action on November 17th and again on November 19th in celebration of the the two month anniversary of the Occupy Wall Street! Movement.

http://occupywallst.org/action/november-17th/

"Occupy Together" ...

http://www.occupytogether.org/

"The last week has seen a coordinated attack against numerous major occupations in the United States, including Portland, Phoenix, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Denver, Oakland, San Francisco, New York and other cities across the country. Several news reports have indicated that these simultaneous attacks were directed by the Department of Homeland Security, in consultation with local mayors and police departments. It should be clear to us that this is happening not because we are weak, but because we have become a real threat to the status quo, and the US government fears the new, more forceful direction the Occupy Wall Street! movement has taken in recent weeks. If our adversaries in the government can coordinate a national offensive against the 'Occupy' movement, then we too can coordinate a response that draws upon the considerable depth, breadth and diversity of our occupations. Occupy Wall Street’s national call for a two month birthday celebration on November 17th is an important step in this direction. To continue this national momentum, we call on all other occupations to join our day of action against state repression on November 19th."

WHY I AM A NET ARTIST
http://dx.doi.org/10.3998/3336451.0014.214

A new essay I wrote published in the Journal of Electronic Publishing in an issue on digital poetry. The essay is called Why I am a Net Artist in which I attempt to explain my folly and explore some of the properties of the medium.

If you google +"Why I am a Net Artist" you will find but one instance of this phrase on the net. Or, if there are, by now, multiple instances, they will all refer to this essay.

Pierre Joris - Cartographies of the In-between, ed. Peter Cockelburgh
Sat 19 Nov 2011

Litteraria Pragensia Books is proud to announce the publication of

PIERRE JORIS - CARTOGRAPHIES OF THE IN-BETWEEN
ed. Peter Cockelbergh
ISBN 978-80-7308-370-0 (paperback). 420pp.
http://litteraria.ff.cuni.cz/books/joris.html

Pierre Joris's work is known to many and in many guises, but nevertheless seems to slip through the mazes of American, British, French, North African, Luxemburgish and German secondary literature. Long overdue, this volume brings together renowned poets, critics, philosophers, translators and scholars, all with different backgrounds and languages, contributing a range of texts on as many aspects of Joris's work as possible (and needed). The main sections of the book are devoted to spaces (Luxemburgish, North African and English), "po, po & po" (poetry, poetics & politics), nomadics, translations, and American "lineages and crossovers." Additionally, short so-called "geographemes" cut across the book, in which Joris revisits and ruminates on earlier campsites, journeys and writings. Supplementing this volume, an online archival platform with additional poems, audio and video materials, unpublished essays, translations and book illustrations will be launched as well.

Contributors: Louis Armand, Tony Baker, Franca Bellarsi, Mohammed Bennis, Charles Bernstein, Nicole Brossard, Geert Buelens, Clive Bush, Corina

Ciocarlie, Peter Cockelbergh, Clayton Eshleman, Allen Fisher, Christine Hume, Robert Kelly, Abdelwahab Meddeb, Jennifer Moxley, Carrie Noland, Alice Notley, Marjorie Perloff, Nicole Peyrafitte, Jean Portante, Christopher Rizzo, Jerome Rothenberg, Dale Smith, Habib Tengour.

About the editor: Writer, scholar and translator, Peter Cockelbergh studied at the universities of Antwerp and Leuven (Belgium), at the EHESS in Paris, and is currently working on a PhD at the Technische Universitat Darmstadt (Germany). For a number of years, he has been reading, writing on and translating Pierre Joris's poetry and essays (into Dutch, French & English), and has recently worked on the author's papers and archives.

Call for Papers: kadar koli—the Violence issue

Sat 19 Nov 2011

Call for Papers: kadar koli--the Violence issue

The idea for this special issue of* kadar koli *emerged from a question posted by British poet Keston Sutherland to the UK poetry listserv and to the Sous Les Pavés online discussion group in response to "calls for violence" during and after the U.K. protests: "I ... want to know what people think about the wishing for and urging of violence (against whom? just the police, or who else? how?)." One example cited by Sutherland is Justin Katko's "Lines for a Protest Song, After 9 December":

Sometimes I wish that instead of their horses

They'd call up the hold where they store their guns;

And when they shoot one of us down we'll rise up stronger,

For in the taste of our blood be remembered we are one.

Sutherland's question is an urgent one, particularly for participants in the "Occupy" movement who are debating the role of violence in collective action, its justifications and consequences: What kind of violence? Coming from whom? For what ends? Indeed, from Tunisia to London to Oakland, our current geo-political landscape has been swept by a series of uprisings, reminding us of the power of mass mobilization and of the intimate connection between violence and democracy. What role does or can poetry play in these uprisings? This question suggests the venerable problem of aesthetics and politics: How might thinking about violence alongside poetic practice throw different light on this quandary?

These questions open up other areas of possible inquiry that fall under the general heading of violence and contemporary poetry. How have contemporary poets responded to or documented different kinds and instances of violence? What kinds of poetic practices have been developed as a result of violence? How does violence get defined or named by poetry? Slavoj ®i¾ek says we should distance ourselves from "the fascinating lure" of "violence performed by a particular agent" and instead try "to perceive the background which generates such outbursts." How does or can poetry disclose the unseen contours of the violence that determines our everyday lives? How can poetry illuminate--or sound out--the histories of discipline and punishment that determine the quotidian?

Violence is often said to be "meaningless." But perhaps violence does have meaning. What can it tell us? How does it communicate? Perhaps, it is only the poem that can help us answer these questions. How have poets reckoned with the ways that language itself is bound up with violence? Similarly, how might the poetic act be an act of violence, however necessarily?

Finally, it might be said that the same logics that structure our socio-cultural realities also shape the field of contemporary poetry. Certain "brands" of poetry, for example, remain dominant. The editors would like to see work that tackles the structural violence that shapes our field.

For this special issue of kadar koli, we invite submissions that reckon with the relation between violence and contemporary poetry. We seek poetry, short critical statements (max. 1,500 words), and longer critical essays(max. 4,000 words). We are also interested in art (collage, photographs, drawings). Deadline for submission is January 15.

kadar koli 7 will be produced as a print journal, as well as an open-source, downloadable file, in Spring 2012.

“Beat Poets, not beat poets.”
Sun 20 Nov 2011

By Robert Haas.Â My wife [Brenda Hillman] bounced nimbly to her feet. I tripped and almost fell over her trying to help her up, and at that moment the deputies in the cordon surged forward and, using their clubs as battering rams, began to hammer at the bodies of the line of students. It was stunning to see. They swung hard into their chests and bellies. Particularly shocking to me â€” it must be a generational reaction â€” was that they assaulted both the young men and the young women with the same indiscriminate force. If the students turned away, they pounded their ribs. If they turned further away to escape, they hit them on their spines.Â

http://dx.doi.org/10.3998/3336451.0014.214

A new essay I wrote published in the Journal of Electronic Publishing in an issue on digital poetry. The essay is called Why I am a Net Artist in which I attempt to explain my folly and explore some of the properties of the medium.

If you google +"Why I am a Net Artist" you will find but one instance of this phrase on the net. Or, if there are, by now, multiple instances, they will all refer to this essay.

The professional Jew-hater G. K. Chesterton was a hugely fat man who dressed to accentuate his fatness and devised a jolly prose style to accompany that persona. Reading the typography of a Chesterton fanzine here, I discover something about how jolliness is communicated.

Mon 21 Nov 2011

bill bissett's work is very readable, actually. and he makes his living selling his books, cds, and paintings at readings. people buy his books and read them. many years ago, jack kerouac described him as the greatest living poet.

bill bissett gets the sort of resistance in canada that allen ginsberg got in the usa. and bissett is still at it after all these years. keeping an open mind.

Big Lucks
http://www.biglucks.com

Big Lucks is a Washington, D.C.-based literary journal founded in 2009. It publishes biannual print issues featuring conceptual poetry and prose, and recently started accepting work for themed online issues. Its editors are most frequently interested in work that changes their lives.

Emily Einhorn
http://www.myspace.com/emilyeinhorn
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1punuzO1mxQ

Emily Einhorn hails from Chicago. She frequently haunts a stage at the anti-folk venue, the Sidewalk Cafe. At 18 she picked up a banjo to learn how to play bluegrass, and at 18-1/2 she picked up a guitar to woo a boy. The rest is history. Her musical influences are The Smiths, Billie Holiday, Hank Williams, and Leonard Cohen. She resides in Brooklyn.

Joe Hall
http://www.joehalljoehall.wordpress.com/

Joe Hall's first book of poems is Pigafetta Is My Wife (Black Ocean Press). His poetry and fiction have appeared in Gulf Coast, HTML Giant, Barrelhouse, Hayden's Ferry Review, and Zone 3 among others. With Wade Fletcher he co-organizes the D.C.-area reading series Cheryl's Gone. He no longer lives in a trailer park.

Adam Robinson
http://www.publishinggenius.blogspot.com/

Adam Robinson lives in Baltimore, where he runs Publishing Genius Press and plays guitar in Coach Taylor, a rock band. His first book, Adam Robison and Other Poems, was nominated for the Goodreads Poetry Award. He self-published his second book, Say, Poem. He is also the editor of Dzanc Books'

Best of the Web 2011. Robinson has an M.F.A. from the University of Baltimore and is a contributor to HTMLGiant.

Wei Tchou
http://www.wxtchou.com/

Wei Tchou is an M.F.A. candidate at Hunter College who is working on a book about her family. Previously, she contributed to Slate Magazine and ruined the Big Lucks twitter feed. She is a graduate of The University of North Carolina.

Mike Young
http://www.mikeayoung.blogspot.com/

Mike Young is the author of the book of stories Look! Look! Feathers (Word Riot Press) and the book of poems We Are All Good If They Try Hard Enough (Publishing Genius Press). He co-edits NOÖ Journal and runs Magic Helicopter Press. He lives in Baltimore.

Boog City
http://www.boogcity.com/

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 21st year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women's writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea's ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB's, The Knitting Factory, and The Sidewalk Café. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

Directions:

new Prynne
Fri 25 Nov 2011

Critical Documents announces the publication of J.H. Prynne's new book, _Kazoo Dreamboats; or, On What There Is_ (http://plantarchy.us/kazoo), from which you will be unable to avoid reading statements like this: "Rule One: people with top pay are rubbish, / everyone knows this, it’s a law of nature." Prynne will give a reading from _Kazoo Dreamboats_ as part of a night of music, talks and readings, from 6:30pm on Sunday 27 November at the Lady Mitchell Hall, on the Sidgwick Site at the University of Cambridge (UK). Lady Mitchell Hall is presently occupied by the student-group Cambridge Defend Education, in protest of the right-wing British government's privatisation of higher education. The evening will also include a talk by veteran revolutionary Selma James.

Mary Rising Higgins EPC Page
Fri 25 Nov 2011

Hi. It's Jennifer,

I have begun to compile an EPC page for the poet Mary Rising Higgins. I am looking for assistance with the project. Our plan is make PDFs of all her books. I need help with a few things: 1. I need most of the books and/or I need help scanning the books. Would anyone like to take a few hours to scan their copies of Mary's books? Would anyone be able to loan/sell me the books? The ones I need are below. 2. I need permission from all of Mary's publishers - so if you published Mary - please write me. 3. Anyone with any other documents of interest, please email me. I have a cd of Mary reading with Gene and a few other folks at the Harwood Center in Abq -Mary also used to handmade little Christmas chapbooks, so if any one has those? Below is the list of books - Anyone who will help (or has a student who will help) will be grandly karmically rewarded.

Mary was/is a very special poet & we don't want folks to forget her.

CFP : Network Archaeology (reminder . proposal deadline November 29)
Sat 26 Nov 2011

Network Archaeology
Conference at Miami University, Oxford OH
April 19-21, 2012
Call for Papers (submissions due November 29, 2011)

This conference will bring together scholars and practitioners to explore the resonances between digital networks and “older” (perhaps still emergent) systems of circulation; from roads to cables, from letter-writing networks to digital ink. Drawing on recent research in media archaeology, we see network archaeology as a method for re-orienting the temporality and spatiality of network studies. Network archaeology might pay attention to the history of distribution technologies, location and control of geographical resources, the emergence of circulatory models, proximity and morphology, network politics and power, and the transmission properties of media. What can we learn about contemporary cultural production and circulation from the examination of network histories? How can we conceptualize the polychronic developments of networks, including their growth, adaptation, and resistances? How might the concept of network archaeology help to re-envision and forge new paths of interdisciplinary research, collaboration, and scholarship?

The conference will trace continuities and disjunctures between a variety of networks, including telecommunication networks, distribution systems for both digital and non-digital texts, transportation routes, media storage (libraries, databases, e-archiving), electrical grids, radio and television broadcast networks, the internet, and surveillance networks. We seek to address not only the technological, institutional, and geopolitical histories of networks, but also their cultural and experiential dimensions, extending to encompass the histories of network poetics and practice. The proceeds of the conference will form the basis for a substantial publication on Network Archaeology.

This conference is organized by the Miami University Humanities Center and is the final event in a year-long series entitled “Networked Environments: Interrogating the Democratization of Media.” It is a companion to our Fall 2011 symposium, “Networks and Power,” on November 17-18th featuring panels, interventions, and keynote presentations by Wendy Chun (Brown University) and Lisa Parks (UC Santa Barbara), that interrogate the interrelationships between networked environments, both old and new, and varied forms of power. The “Networked Environments” series, involving an interdisciplinary group of ten humanities scholars, seeks to show how the network dynamics so crucial to contemporary political developments have deep and perhaps unexpected roots in the histories of earlier forms of information production and circulation.

We welcome presentations of academic research and artistic projects on contemporary and historical network studies. Please send abstracts of 250 words and a short bio to cris cheek ([redacted]) and Nicole Starosielski ([redacted]) by November 29, 2011.

Keynote speakers include:

Lisa Gitelman, Associate Professor of Media and English at New York University, and author of Scripts, Grooves, and Writing Machines: Representing Technology in the Edison Era (2000), New Media, 1740-1915 (2004), and Always Already New: Media, History, and the Data of Culture (2008).

Richard R. John, Professor of Journalism at Columbia University, and author of Spreading the News: The American Postal System from Franklin to Morse (1995) and Network Nation: Inventing American Telecommunications (2010).

Alan Liu, Professor of English at the University of California, Santa Barbara, and author of The Laws of Cool: Knowledge Work and the Culture of Information (2004) and Local Transcendence: Essays on Postmodern Historicism and the Database (2008).

Jussi Parikka, Reader in Media & Design at Winchester School of Art (University of Southampton), and author of Digital Contagions: A Media Archaeology of Computer Viruses (2007), Insect Media: An Archaeology of Animals and Technology (2010), and Media Archaeology: Approaches, Applications, Implications (2011).

Adrian Johns, Chair of Conceptual and Historical Studies of Science at University of Chicago, and auhor of The Nature of the book: print and knowledge in the making (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1998), Piracy: The Intellectual Property Wars from Gutenberg to Gates. (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2009)

Help with Fair Use and Copyright Law

Sun 27 Nov 2011

I was just about to send the final copy of my new manuscript of poems to my publisher (U. of Pitt) when I started looking up issues of fair use with regard to song lyrics. I want to quote 1 line from a Bob Dylan song as an epigraph. Does anyone know if I need permission? Am I in danger of being sued? Obviously the press won't pay any money for that kind of thing. Of course I'm down to the wire and need to know what to do asap.

Thanks for any input.

Occupy di Suvero

From a class, http://nyc.thepublicschool.org/class/3805 , Conversations after Performance, offered by Taeyoon Choi; they were occupying the Mark di Suvero sculpture a few doors down from Eyebeam and we joined them for a while. Taeyoon's work is amazing, by the way - check it out.

"Next door, Paula Cooper gallery is showing Mark Di Suvero pieces called 'Paula's pleasure' It's a huge swing made of rusted H-beams. He is the artist who made 'the big red thing' in Zuccotti Park. It may be interesting to 'Occupy' the sculpture for our conversation, temporary and poetically it may be. from: Taeyoon (D.A.N.) 25 Nov 2011 8:39AM"

Poets In Nassau Needs Features for 2012
Mon 28 Nov 2011

Hi everyone,
I'm looking for writers interested in featuring at one of our readings in the upcoming months. Featured readers have about 30 minutes to read. An open mic follows. The feature usually reads one or two poems at the end. I list readings on Facebook and create fliers for features to distribute for publicity. I connect the reader with the venue host.

Poets In Nassau is a poetry and prose reading circuit on Long Island, NY. We host three readings per month:

First Fridays at Hillside Public Library in New Hyde Park, NY at 7 PM

Third Thursdays at Wyld Chyld Tattoo and Cafe in Merrick, NY at 7:30 PM

Last Tuesdays at Bellmore Memorial Library in Bellmore, NY at 7 PM

All readings are free and open to the public. Features may sell books at the readings but receive no compensation other than gratitude and praise. I will send you to GoogleMaps for directions. Features are responsible for their own transportation.

If you are interested, please backchannel: [redacted]

You know ML Liebler got some Dylan contributions for the marvelous Working Words edition. I'd email him for larger sections, but one line, I believe, only needs citing.

from "Jacques Lipchitz" by Paul Siegell
Tue 29 Nov 2011

MOTHER & CHILD:
http://www.everseradio.com/from-jacques-lipchitz-by-paul-siegell/

Created entirely in Microsoft Word, "Jacques Lipchitz" is a book-length visual poem built upon typographical recreations of the sculptorâ€™s biography and works. Known as one of the twentieth centuryâ€™s major artists, Jacques Lipchitz (1891-1973) was a cubist sculptor, and is Paul Siegellâ€™s all-out absolute favorite.

No, you don't need permission as long as the line is attributed to Dylan in the text. Go to US Copyright Code sec. 107 for details.

William Bronk Collected

Wed 30 Nov 2011

Hi,
I was wondering if anyone knows of a 'complete' collected poems by William Bronk?
I know that North Point published Life Supports in 1982. I'm not sure if the Talisman reissue of it in 1997 added any additional material. I can't get a table of contents from Amazon to check.
I know that Bronk lived until 1999 and published many volumes after Life Supports was released.

Thanks,
Ric

December 2011

157 messages · Tue 29 Nov 2011 – Sat 31 Dec 2011

December 2011 closed the year with poetry's two great power questions breaking at once — who owns the institutions of the art, and who gets written into its official history. One hundred and fifty-seven messages moved through the list, and its currents ran between Occupy Wall Street's challenge to the corporate patrons of poetry and a bitter fight over a new anthology of the American century. The month asked, from both directions, the same thing: whose poetry is this, and who gets to say.

The largest political current took aim at the patron. As Occupy Wall Street pressed its case against corporate power, the room turned the lens on its own field — a thread on the unfortunate truth about the Poetry Foundation, the vastly endowed institution some now saw as corporate and hostile to the movement, and companion threads on Occupy Books and the poetics of the occupation, including a conversation titled You Can't Evict an Idea. Poetry's money, its foundations and prizes, stood accused of being on the wrong side of the barricade, and the room debated whether the art's institutions served poets or capital.

The largest historical current was a canon war. Rita Dove had edited the Penguin Anthology of Twentieth-Century American Poetry, and Helen Vendler had reviewed it with a severity many read as an attack on Dove's inclusiveness — her attention to Black poets and to the range beyond the established greats — and the room took sides, one member confessing a "personal dismay" that "a relatively mainstream anthology is causing such a stir". It was the oldest fight in a new decade: who belongs in the record of American poetry, and whether widening the door is generosity or the dilution the gatekeepers feared.

The two quarrels were one quarrel. Occupy asked who owned poetry's institutions; the Dove-Vendler war asked who owned its history — and both came down to power, to whether the art's money and its canon would stay with the few who had always held them or open to the many pressing at the gate. A William Bronk collected edition passing quietly through the month was a reminder of the uncelebrated the whole fight was really about.

I have set December down exactly as the archive delivered it — the Poetry Foundation arraigned beside Occupy, the poetry rising in the camps, and the Dove-Vendler war over who belongs in the American century — because it was the month the list closed a year of diminishment on its largest questions of power:

who owns the institutions, and who owns the history. A room that will indict the corporate patron of poetry and fight over the inclusiveness of an anthology in the same December is a room that has understood, even in its smallness, that the deepest quarrels in the art were never really about style: they were always about the gate, and who holds the key, and how many the keepers are willing to let in.

Call for Submissions: quarter after Thu 1 Dec 2011

Dear All:

We (quarter after) are interested in art that pushes, or rather forcefully shoves, the boundaries. If your art exudes thought, we want it. We are looking for poetry, visual poetry, asemic writing, poetic statements, visual art (in all of its glorious forms) and statements of theory. We strive to be a place for the thinking artist.

Please send all submissions to [redacted].

The subject line of your submission should include the type of submission, followed by the word “submission” and your name (example: Poetry Submission: Calvin Pennix). Please include a brief bio in the body of the submission’s email, outlining what you’re into and any previous publications. Poetry/Visual Poetry/Asemic Writing/Art:

Submit up to five (5) pieces as one (1) Word or pdf. file attached to the email. There is a wide range of opportunity here, so anything you feel might fit send it over.

Poetics Statements/Artists Statements/Theory Essays:

Submit one (1) statement/essay at a time as one (1) Word or pdf. file attached to the email. Again, there is a wide range of opportunity here, so anything you feel might fit send it over.

And remember, we are interested in art that pushes, or rather forcefully shoves, the boundaries. If your art exudes thought, we want it. We strive to be a place for the thinking artist. If you didn't think about your work neither will we.

Again, please send all submissions to [redacted].

We look forward to checking out your work!

All the Best,

Calvin Pennix

The Loft Bookshop
Twisted Pepper, 54 Middle Abbey St Dublin 1, Ireland

Mount your hobby horse for the final wurm im apfel event of the year: we're opening the mic to anyone who wants to conduct poetry performance experiments: bring out your sound poems and your found poems, your prose poems and your schmooze poems, your vispo and your pisspo, your collaborations and your Resistance (but not blue paint. Rob The Loft says no paint. Please don't bring paint, even if you are going through a Blue Period.) We will have a visit from the Tongue Box Exquisite Corpse, now housed in its very own collage reliquary; venite et adoramus, for this is now likely to be the fattest and maggotiest Cadaver in Ireland. We will have frolics with field recorders and a Cut-up Contest.

Register your interest in performing at [redacted], or just show up on the night. Performances should be less than 7 minutes long, or seem less than 7 minutes long.

(Please, no paint. I can't stress how important the no-paint thing is.)

Please share!

upcoming gig at Unnameable Books (fwd)
Thu 1 Dec 2011

(edited from Adam Tobin at Unnameable Books)

Meanwhile, a ragtag gang of roving musicians has stumbled into our basement, creating a space we never knew was there before, and making sounds we'd like to hear again. This Sunday evening, for one, our very own ALAN SONDHEIM plays the oud and pipa with EspDisk's CHRIS DIASPARRA on baritone sax and JUDY of Caspar the Holy Ghost. WHAT? Improvised music. They are amazing, and I'm not just saying that because I love them. They start making music at 7pm on Sunday, and may they never stop. That's Sunday the 4th, at 8 pm.

Much love,
yours at Unnameable Books

It added more material, but (without my having done a comparison of the contents) it seems to be pretty radically winnowed. I agree that a true "Collected" is very much in order.

13. Kimmelman, Burt
William Bronk Collected
Fri 2 Dec 2011

Dear Ric,

I'm copying Ed Foster (publisher of Talisman House, Publishers, as well as editor-in-chief of Talisman magazine) who is planning on bringing out Bursts of Light: The Collected Later Poems of William Bronk this spring. This volume will complement Talisman House's edition of Life Supports: New and Collected Poems of William Bronk, which came out after the North Point Press volume was no longer available, and the Collected Later will include the work from the many volumes that were published post Life Supports (and I think some poems that never made it into that earlier collected, but as I write this I'm not sure about that inclusion).

The appearance of Bursts of Light will coincide with a two-day symposium on Bronk (organized by Ed and me, with crucial help from Peter Nicholls and Michael Golston), which we are tentatively calling "William Bronk in New York" and which will take place on April 13th (at NYU) and April 14th (at Columbia U) and will culminate on the 14th with a plenary keynote talk by Henry Weinfield to be followed by a large number of poets, critics and scholars reading favorite Bronk poems to the gathering. We are planning to have the entire conference audio- and video-recorded (ultimately the audio to be streamed at PennSound and the video at the future Talisman website).

Until I finish teaching this semester I won't have the time ascertain if we might still be able to add a paper or two to the schedule we'll be working up (but if you're interested in presenting a paper then do send Ed and me an abstract and we'll see if we can fit it in)-but, while we already have commitments from a number of people to come and read Bronk poems aloud on the 14th we are still hoping more people, including you if you can come, will want to help us celebrate his work by reading a bit of it to us all during this closing ceremony (after which we'll head somewhere still to be determined for drinks and talk).

I will be sending more information about "William Bronk in New York" along with, eventually, a full schedule of events, before too long.

I don't know if the Collected Later will be available prior to the conference but of course it will be available for sale there.

Best wishes,

Burt

Hi, I was wondering if anyone knows of a 'complete' collected poems by William Bronk? I know that North Point published Life Supports in 1982. I'm not sure if the Talisman reissue of it in 1997 added any additional material. I can't get a table of contents from Amazon to check. I know that Bronk lived until 1999 and published many volumes after Life Supports was released.

Thanks,

Belladonna Benefit: Dec 13 NYC & Online*
Fri 2 Dec 2011

Belladonna* Benefit Performance and Auction
Tuesday, December 13, 2011, 6:30 pm

Â
Location: Hi Art! 227 West 29th Street, 4th Floor (between 7th & 8th) New York, NY 10001
Â
Advanced ticket sales are only $12! At the door, tickets are $20.
http://www.belladonnaseries.org/benefit.html
Â
The Belladonna* Benefit will showcase a performance by Anne Waldman and Ambrose Bye, live auction by renowned auctioneer Erin Ward of Star Benefit Auctions with special assistant Amy King, and a dance performance by the A.O. Movement Collective.
Â
The Auction and the Benefit will support Belladonna*s 2012 season of publications and events, which share a theme of caring for the material realities of poets, viewing a publishing project holistically. We're referring to 2012 as The Year of Material Lives, and we plan to host combination readings/dinners with ample time set aside to discuss the economic and social concerns of writers, artists, publishers, and other creators. Moreover, in addition to continuing our commemorative chaplet series, we hope to publish five full-length books of hybrid and experimental work in the coming year including new work by Julie Patton, LaTasha N. Nevada Diggs, and Tonya Foster.
Â

At the auction, we are hoping to earn the funds to complete our budget for 2012. This year weâ€™ve been fortunate to be the recipient of funds from both NYSCA and The O Books Fund, but we still have work to do to make our goals a reality! Part of our benefit proceeds will also support honoraria for our wonderful interns.
Â
Some exciting auction items include:
Â Â Â Â * Mei-mei Berssenbrugge and Kiki Smith Limited Edition collaborative print
Â Â Â Â * A weekend at The Millay Colony
Â Â Â Â * Tickets to the Gotham Girls roller derby
Â Â Â Â * Helen Adam's dress
Â Â Â Â * 1.5 hour hypnotherapy session with Kristin Prevallet Â Â Â Â * And many more!
Â
Please come out to support Belladonna*!
Â
Are you able to contribute a little extra to our benefit? Thank you! We really appreciate it!
Friend: For $25, you'll receive admission to the benefit and acknowledgement on our website.
Super Supporter: For $50, you'll receive admission to the benefit and acknowledgement on our website, a complimentary Belladonna* book of your choice, and our undying love and gratitude!
Belladonna* Lover: For $200, you'll receive two Benefit tickets, a full limited-edition Elders Series set, 5 signed chapbooks, and a one of kind Belladonna* bag.
Â
Are you going to be out of town, but still want to support us? We'd love it if you could purchase a ticket on behalf of a local New York poet! Please include a note when you purchase your ticket. Thank you!

SUBMISSIONS We are currently accepting submissions for our online multimedia issues: art, mixed genre, multimedia, poetics, prose. We are especially interested in publishing collaborations between artists. We are not currently reading for print, but we always consider work published on our multimedia site for upcoming issues. For complete submission guidelines, please visit www.certaincircuits.org.

PRINT ISSUE 2.1 Thank you to all of you who submitted to our second print issue. Our editors are meeting throughout December and January to select the content. We will announce our selections on January 31, 2012 via this list, Facebook, and Twitter.

READINGS/MULTIMEDIA SERIES We are currently curating some Philadelphia area readings, and we will feature artists from the multimedia editions. Please be in touch with us if you would like read, perform, or show multimedia work.

Certain Circuits

PARTNERSHIP WITH COMMUNITY CULTURAL EXCHANGE Our November issue featured work by the artists of the Community Cultural Exchange (CCE), 501(c)3, located on 706 South Street in Philadelphia. The work featured was part of the exhibition, "Turn of the Century South Street Artists: 1990-2010." Pictured: details of work by Gesshel, Bridget Goldhahn, Eli Klein, natalie c. felix, Jed Williams, and Pam Cole.

The CCE's mission is to create community through art and culture. They do so by acting as a bridge between local art and culture groups, businesses, artists and the South Street area community. Encouraging the exchange of Philadelphia culture, they facilitate programs and events of all disciplines including musical, visual, performing, literary and wellness arts. The CCE is part of the Arts on South Program. For the complete CCE issue, click the "2" tab at the bottom of www.certaincircuits.org. For details on the CCE, click www.communityculturalexchange.org.

Founded by artists, Certain Circuits publishes poetry, experimental prose, art, and new media. We are especially interested in documenting multimedia collaborative work between artists. We recently published issue 1.1 which features work from artists in Australia, Brazil, France, Mexico, India, Japan, Uruguay, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Our editors are currently working on print issue 2.1.

Furniture Press Books Weekly Giveaway Volume 1

Fri 2 Dec 2011

I though it'd be a good idea to start holding a free weekly contest in which the winner (which I choose with the utmost prejudice) receives one copy of a Furniture Press Books titles (to be chosen by yours truly each week).

This week's contest is as follows:

Write (in no more than 50-100 words) about the relationship between community/neighborhood sustainability and the practice of writing poetry.

As always, you may interpret as broadly as you wish.

This week's prize is Old News by Ryan Eckes (plus a copy of the CD featuring a collaboration between Ryan and Dan Yorty).

If you like to know more about the book and/or Ryan's poetics, please read an excellent intereview at http://habenichtpress.com/?p=782 and here at http://starlightphiladelphiapoetry.blogspot.com/2011/07/feature-ryan-eckes-philadelphia-anthems.html .

The deadline for entries is December 9 at midnight.

Good Luck!

Sunday, December 4, 2pm - Vanessa Place Reading

Fri 2 Dec 2011

The Renaissance Society presents
Vanessa Place
Sunday, December 4, 2pm
Swift Hall, Room 106 - 1025 E. 58th St

The Renaissance Society will be hosting a reading from Vanessa Place on Sunday, December 4th, at 2pm. This event will take place in Swift Hall, Room 106, on the University of Chicago campus. This event is presented in conjunction with our current exhibition, Anne-Mie van Kerckhoven's In a Saturnian World<http://www.renaissancesociety.org/site/Exhibitions/Intro.Anne-Mie-Van-Kerckhoven-In-A-Saturnian-World.623.html>, on view through December 18, 2011. This is the last event presented in conjunction with this exhibition.

Place is a writer, a lawyer, and co-director of Les Figues Press. Her dual appointment as lawyer by day and experimental writer by whenever makes her a handful and a head-full. She is author of *Dies: A Sentence *(2006), *La Medusa *(2008), Notes on Conceptualisms, co-authored with Robert Fitterman (2009), and *The Guilt Project: Rape, Morality and Law *(2010).

This event is FREE and open to the public. Feel free to RSVP (though not required) via Facebook <https://www.facebook.com/events/136656629773299/>and share with friends.
This event was funded in part by Poets & Writers, Inc.

I WANT TO MAKE YOU SAFE (ARRIVES!!)

Please support SPD - http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/9781933959238/i-want-to-make-you-safe.aspx

"Rarely have the nude and the cooked been so neatly joinedâ€ as in Amy Kingâ€™s I Want to Make You Safe. If â€œus,â€ â€œherons,â€ and â€œdustâ€ rhyme, Â then these poems rhyme. If that makes you feel safe, it shouldnâ€™t. Amy Kingâ€™s poems are exuberant, strange, and a bit grotesque. Theyâ€™re spring-loaded and ready for trouble. Categories collapse. These are the new â€œthunderstorms with Barbie roots." â€” Rae Armantrout Vulnerability, fragility, and anxiety are all flushed out into the open here and addressed with such strong sound and rhythm that we recognize a resilient, defiant strength within them. King puts relentless pressure on forces seemingly beyond our reach and, in bringing them closer, exposes their own vulnerable centers. This is a poetry equally committed to language as a tool with social obligations and language as an art material obligated to reveal its own beauty. Kingâ€™s language does both magnificently.Â â€” Cole Swensen

Amy Kingâ€™s poems seem to encompass all that we think of as the â€œnaturalâ€ world, i.e. sex, sun, love, rotting, hatching, dreaming, especially in the wonderful long poem â€œThis Opera of Peace.â€ She brings these abstractions to brilliant, jagged life, emerging into rather than out of the busyness of living: â€œLet the walls bear up the angle of the floor,/Let the mice be tragic for all that is caged,/Let timeâ€™s contagion mar us/until spoken people lie as particles of wind. â€” John Ashbery

I love Amy King's smile in photos of Amy King, Amy King's exuberance and looping, bashing panache (flamboyant manner, reckless courage) in the poems of Amy King, I'm going to say Amy King every chance I get in this blurb to make you think "I gotta read me some Amy King," especially if you're "looking for anything/that will pull the cork, boil the blood/of displeasure," as only the poems of Amy King can in the world in which Amy King is King (and Queen).Â Â Â Â Â â€” Bob Hicok

The first poem I read by Amy King was "MEN BY THE LIPS OF WOMEN" and it struck me with a force I had previously felt on encountering masterworks by

Lorca and Dylan Thomas. Â I won't live long enough to see if her poetry will continue to equal the magnificence of theirs, but the fact that she achieved it once (at least) proves to me it could.Â Â Â Â Â â€” Bill Knott Belladonna* loves you and needs you....

Â
Belladonna* Benefit Performance and Auction
Tuesday, December 13, 2011, 6:30 pm

Location: Hi Art! 227 West 29th Street, 4th Floor (between 7th & 8th) New York, NY 10001 Â Advanced ticket sales are only $12! At the door, tickets are $20. http://www.belladonnaseries.org/benefit.html Â The Belladonna* Benefit will showcase a performance by Anne Waldman and Ambrose Bye, live auction by renowned auctioneer Erin Ward of Star Benefit Auctions with special assistant Amy King, and a dance performance by the A.O. Movement Collective.

Â The Auction and the Benefit will support Belladonna*s 2012 season of publications and events, which share a theme of caring for the material realities of poets, viewing a publishing project holistically. We're referring to 2012 as The Year of Material Lives, and we plan to host combination readings/dinners with ample time set aside to discuss the economic and social concerns of writers, artists, publishers, and other creators. Moreover, in addition to continuing our commemorative chaplet series, we hope to publish five full-length books of hybrid and experimental work in the coming year including new work by Julie Patton, LaTasha N. Nevada Diggs, and Tonya Foster. Â At the auction, we are hoping to earn the funds to complete our budget for 2012. This year weâ€™ve been fortunate to be the recipient of funds from both NYSCA and The O Books Fund, but we still have work to do to make our goals a reality! Part of our benefit proceeds will also support honoraria for our wonderful interns. Â Some exciting auction items include: Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â * Mei-mei Berssenbrugge and Kiki Smith Limited Edition collaborative print Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â * A weekend at The Millay Colony Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â * Tickets to the Gotham Girls roller derby Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â * Helen Adam's dress Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â * 1.5 hour hypnotherapy session with Kristin Prevallet Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â * And many more! Â Please come out to support Belladonna*! Are you able to contribute a little extra to our benefit? Thank you! We really appreciate it! Friend: For $25, you'll receive admission to the benefit and acknowledgement on our website. Super Supporter: For $50, you'll receive admission to the benefit and acknowledgement on our website, a complimentary Belladonna* book of your choice, and our undying love and gratitude! Belladonna* Lover: For $200, you'll receive two Benefit tickets, a full limited-edition Elders Series set, 5 signed chapbooks, and a one of kind Belladonna* bag. Â Are you going to be out of town, but still want to support us? We'd love it if you could purchase a ticket on behalf of a local New York poet! Please include a note when you purchase your ticket. Thank you! Â PREVIEW AUCTION ITEMS AND PURCHASE TICKETS HEREhttp://www.belladonnaseries.org/benefit.html

Bursts of Light was the book I was referring to. I am glad you (or Bursts of Light?) have clarified the matter. It will be an absolutely great book and long overdue.

we might still be able to add a paper or two to the schedule we'll be working up (but if you're interested in presenting a paper then do send Ed and me an abstract and we'll see if we can fit it in)-but, while we already have commitments from a number of people to come and read Bronk poems aloud on the 14th we are still hoping more people, including you if you can come, will want to help us celebrate his work by reading a bit of it to us all during this closing ceremony (after which we'll head somewhere still to be determined for drinks and talk).

I will be sending more information about "William Bronk in New York" along with, eventually, a full schedule of events, before too long.

I don't know if the Collected Later will be available prior to the conference but of course it will be available for sale there.

Hi,
I was wondering if anyone knows of a 'complete' collected poems by William Bronk?
I know that North Point published Life Supports in 1982. I'm not sure if the Talisman reissue of it in 1997 added any additional material. I can't get a table of contents from Amazon to check.
I know that Bronk lived until 1999 and published many volumes after Life Supports was released.

Thanks,

Re: Rita Dove responds to Helen Vendler's review
Sun 4 Dec 2011

First, th
Thanks for posting this link, Wendy.Â Excerpts of note:

First, thereâ€™s an attack on Doveâ€™s choices, as when states, "Multicultural inclusiveness prevails,â€ and then Vendler proceeds to tally up pages given Whiteâ€”all maleâ€”poets versus Black poets.

And the obvious question is why does no one say that White folks are writing about â€œraceâ€ when they write about themselves? (No one except Toni Morrison in Playing in the Dark, of course.) No, when White folks write about themselves, they are writing about America. They are writing about unraced universal experience. They are writing about the ultimate human existence.

Now, itâ€™s not that Black folks arenâ€™t human; only the meanest White person would say something like that. But whatâ€™s implied is that cultural production assumes humanity from the start. It also assumes something else: privilege. In Rita Doveâ€™s introduction to her anthology, she assumes her own kind of privilege, intellectual privilege, and her right to claim that privilege galls Helen Vendler, for if Blacks and other poets of color are not included in Doveâ€™s anthology because of multiculturalism, but rather, on their literary merit alone, then the whole American literary landscape not only changes in the present, it also reconfigures the past. And Helen Vendler and others like her are terrified of that prospect.

--From HonorÃ©e Fanonne JeffersÂ http://networkedblogs.com/r06EP

Â
I wrote elsewhere (w only time to cut / paste now) a few haphazard thoughts that speak to these larger issues too:

I thought Dove was kind. Vendler's assessment stuck me as elitist and racist on my first read. Second and third reads confirm. Dove could have been harsher in reply. I hope others call Vendler out on this (esp as Vendler's represents a larger trend) though across-the-board the general focus seems to be on Dove's error by omission instead [see Jeffers' above]. That's the business, I suppose. The parameters of who is "great," and how we assert that monumental status (as well as who gets to do so), are quite narrow (& defined historically) [again, see Jeffers' above].Â Why worry about the nearly-unchecked perpetuation of bias for decades or who has been omitted from the canon / the publishing world down the years because of that bias (something Dove is cursorily addressing in the making of this anthology) when we can focus on the in's and out's of how Plath and Ginsberg have been left out in the cold ad nauseum...Â [that aspect of the debate seems to boil down to:Â Dove was wrong not to have spent the money or Dove was right to have omitted -  so what other issues does the anthology raise? **]

There has been a lot of detailed, micro-discussion over why Plath and Ginsberg were omitted and how to remedy that, AT THE EXCLUSION OF the very appearance & existence of this anthology and how it's a drop in the bucket towards addressing (remedying?) a publishing / canonical history that has excluded numerous writers who were never supported / encouraged and only peripherally published, if at all. Vendler, unknowingly, touches on this in her critique of Dove's including 'angry black poets,' bc, god forbid an across-the-board selection of representations would actually reflect a history of black poets writing in response to a country that historically repressed and beat them back, did not encourage long-term publishing careers, etc.Â Those poets couldn't be considered worthy of anthology-status...

Dove's anthology raises more questions than have been touched on.Â How many uncelebrated (even celebrated black writers, like ZNHurston, beloved for a spell only to die in poverty) were cast aside by the literary world and died unknown?Â Why?Â How many have been omitted from anthologies / curriculum for not meeting Vendler's, and critics like her, criteria for "greatness"?Â How many others were not supported / published / encouraged?Â What does it mean to be "great" in the history of American poetry?Â Influence?Â Wide-publishing history?Â Accessibility?Â What is "universal" appeal?Â How does the regulation / perpetuation / cultivation of "universal" appeal and "popularity" exclude?

I wonder how the appearance of this anthology, orchestrated within and beyond the usual expectations of the usual anthologies (& how anthologies serve to cultivate readers) -- and what it says as a response to the sacred canon, isn't at play more predominantly.Â It raises very large questions, more than I can imagine right now, that seem to be unnoticed and ignored for the little Plath /

Ginsberg bush in front of the forest. They certainly add to the American poetry landscape, but are there other details to consider too?Â To cite a white guy (& give my questions some merit), Eliot himself might investigate how its appearance affects that entire body of literature AND what it uncovers / reveals (a la Tradition and the Individual Talent) - but very few are doing so.

The Unfortunate Truth About the Poetry Foundation: corporate, anti-occupy, and should be boycotted.

Sun 4 Dec 2011

"I felt a profound tenderness on witnessing these young people, because I knew it was sign of a much deeper struggle, that of poetry against the powers of a shameful order."

–Raul Zurita (quoted on Isola di Rifiuti blog)

Has anyone missed that the Poetry Foundation is now in the business of slapping handcuffs and lawsuits on poets and performance artists? The story of their incredible, reprehensible treatment of Stephanie Dunn, which provoked an act of civil disobedience by the Croatoan Poetic Cell at the $20,000,000 PF compound in Chicago (and which may or may not have been completely civil, thank goodness), can be found in a number of online places, including the widely read Salon.com. Apparently these nobodies have irritated the PF enough to erect (or lower from the sky) a concrete slab blocking what was formerly public access to their interior gardens.

The Poetry Foundation and its actions, here and elsewhere, are consistently antithetical to the exigencies of the revolutionary poetic act. It is a cultural monolith and economic and political powerhouse that should be boycotted, discredited, discarded. Period.

Here is an exhaustive string of links documenting and addressing Dunn and the CPC's actions, and the PF's harsh, intolerant, vindictive response, all followed by some interesting facts about John Barr:

OTHERWISE, here are some rather damning factoids about John Barr et al, lifted from the comments section at the Montevidayo blog:

1. "The Illinois State's Attorney is looking into allegations of poor "fiscal practices, conflict of interest, nepotism and playing fast and loose with the rules of charitable organizations" (concerning the Poetry Foundation)

2. "Penny Barr, wife of John Barr, who admits she is "not versed in poetry," was paid $23,000 by the Foundation for setting up a poetry contest."

3. "The Poetry Foundation also plans to build a $25 million mansion in the Gold Coast with accommodations for visiting poets of its choice and a stage to host readings on. An ex-trustee accused the Foundation of acting like a "private club" and using Ruth Lilly's money for "personal gratification."

[source: http://chicagopoetry.com/modules.php?
op=modload&name=News&file=article&sid=1342]

4. The company Barr founded, Dynergy, frequently likened in business columns to Enron, paid out a $3 million fine for accounting fraud (after Barr left as an executive) and a US Attorney said in a letter "We have become increasingly concerned that Dynegy's 'cooperation' is more apparent than real."

5. John Barr donated the maximum to Rudolph Giuliani in early 2007, a month after Giuliani declared his candidacy. Giuliani's accomplishments as mayor of NYC including a smear campaign against contemporary artists and the Brooklyn Museum that displayed them, attempting to defund the institution. Soon after Barr's donation, Giuliani named as his foreign policy adviser Norman Podhoretz right after he published the book World War III which advocated a global war, who in a previous life as a literary editor engaged in critical attacks against Allen Ginsberg and Jack Kerouac.

6. Barr's current company is lobbying foreign governments, mostly Spanish speaking countries in the hemisphere, to privatize their natural resources on behalf of his clients.

7. Robert Pinsky takes credit for selecting Barr for his position.

Dove, Vendler, Beauty is a Verb
Mon 5 Dec 2011

Hi All,

I have been following the news on Vendler/Dove with a personal dismay. What is nagging at me is that a relatively mainstream anthology is causing such a stir. A few months ago Sheila Black, Michael Northen, and I published Beauty is a Verb: The New Disability Poets & although we got great reviews from some of my favorite poets, the controversy of the book has been very nonexistent. My argument isn't that there are real racial and gender problems that need to be solved. My point is that the arguments about race and gender are so loud that the civil rights of people with disabilities are consistently ignored. And the problems of this minority remain so severe in comparison to other groups.

First, looking at the Dove anthology itself what interests me is the still glaring lack of attention paid to poets/people with disabilities as a multicultural group. In what appears to be the ultimate inclusive collection Larry Eigner, Vassar Miller, Josephine Miles, Jim Ferris, Paul Guest are all absent and there is no mention of Crip Poetics The only poet in the collection who might identify as 'disabled" is Duncan, and I'm guessing the Duncan poems don't address his vision/vision which was arguably central to his work.

I do think that an anthology, such as ours, which for starters is an entirely new phenonemen calls for a little attention. Beauty is a Verb discusses how aphasia is a link to experimental language (Cole), addresses 'crip poetics" which most people have never heard of (Kuppers), speaks to the linguistically complexity of translating English to ASL (Clark), and most of all addresses the disabled body as something that is okay, even sexy and a worthwhile experience.

I wonder if speaking about disability is still a thing that makes people nervous, and they feel afraid of having a voice. Although there is plenty of discussion regarding race from white people, and unlike skin color, most of the able-bodied will have some disability in their lifetime. More importantly, it seems that people still dismiss disability as a category/identity and one that is privileged to the most simple rights like getting into the store or having a job, for gosh sake - not to mention being in the Penguin anthology.

It also seems true that in the poetry world you have to insult someone directly or indirectly to get attention - which I did a few years ago when I called out Paul Guest for allowing John Ashbery to call him an invalid in his blurb. All hell broke lose & evidently the right to call a person an invalid is something people of which are very attached to.

But that was the old Jennifer & the new Jennifer wants to be heard without causing too much anger. & Bob Grenier told me 'fighting is for young people." Perhaps Rita & Helen need Bobly's phone number!

Free download of my new chapbook
Tue 6 Dec 2011

Being as I have had no luck getting anything published the past year, I have decided to digitally release a couple chapbooks I've finished. I'll release one, well, now and one next week. This first one is named "I sail. I swim to you. I know the water."

It is a piece about sexual identifications rather than sexual identity and (more broadly) about about liminal identity spaces of all types and the psychic and physical violence and trauma which so often exists in these spaces. It utilizes textual appropriation and collage, formal constraints, typographical manipulation, and lyric elegy in order to plomb the depths of a loosely structured, implied narrative that runs the gamut from an estranged mother and child to a fractured chronicle of the development of sexual dimorphism, 19th century sexology/psychiatry, and the subversive significance of alternative sexual & gender based identifications.

I hope you'll read it, enjoy it, share it. Information wants to be free after all.

Richard Kostelanz: The Avant Garde at Brown University: 1960
Tue 6 Dec 2011

Richard Kostelanz: The Avant Garde at Brown University: 1960

This appeared on the Boston Area Small Press and Poetry Scene
http://dougholder.blogspot.com

Richard Kostelanetz, the noted avant-garde writer, was kind enough to send this excerpt of an interview conducted at Brown University in 2004 to the Boston Area Small Press and Poetry Scene.---Doug Holder

I

Richard Kostelanetz, born in New York City in 1940, went to Brown in 1958, graduating with honors in American Civilization early in 1962. He later did graduate work at Columbia University in American history and at Kingâ€™s College, the University of London, as a Fulbright scholar, taking an M.A. at the former in 1966. Ever since, he has been an independent scholar/writer/media artist residing, until recently, in lower Manhattan. His work in various domains has been recognized with individual entries in Contemporary Poets, Contemporary Novelists, Postmodern Fiction, Bakerâ€™s Biographical Dictionary of Musicians, A Readerâ€™s Guide to Twentieth-Century Writers, the Merriam-Webster Encyclopedia of Literature, Websterâ€™s Dictionary of American Authors, The HarperCollins Readerâ€™s Encyclopedia of American Literature, NNDB.com, and Britannica.com, among other distinguished compendia.

The interviewer, whose comments appear here in italics, was Sarah Bird, an undergraduate working with the radical cultural historian Paul Buhle in the American Civilization program at Brown University. She talked with Richard Kostelanetz in November 2004 after RK's lecture to the Coalition of Independent Scholars at the General Society Library in New York City. RK corrected and amended the transcript then and, with brackets, later.

I

The only remotely avant-garde entity on campus around 1960 was the college literary magazine that had been edited by the painter John Willenbecher just before I arrived. In its small office I met Bill Berkson, who left Brown only a few months after I arrived, later becoming a prominent poet and art critic on the West Coast, who remembers our meeting in the literary magazine office in a memoir that I found on the Internet and incidentally reprinted in my CD-Rom Intellectual Correspondence in the 21st Century (2005): â€œI can hear you now, in the Brunonia office, talking of Dissent, PR [Partisan Review], and other critical journals, of which at the time I knew not one thing.â€

In my library is an impressive copy of Brunonia's Fall 1958 issue that contains contributions by Berkson, Richard Foreman, and myself, each of us presaging what we later became. While Bill has a critical review of "beat" poetry, Richard contributes not only a short play that he calls "a cartoon," but also an extended review of Bertolt Brecht's "epic opera," as he calls it, Mahagonny, which Richard was invited to direct decades later in Lille, France. (It didnâ€™t happen, even after being fully prepared, for reasons beyond his control.) My own contribution to Brunonia is a witty aphoristic dictionary that presages the Dictionary I wrote in 1990 and rewrote a decade later. (This issue also has a stylistically unusual story by Peter Goldman, who briefly became an avant-garde filmmaker before doing something else.) May I wonder if other issues of Brunonia and its successors, not to mention undergraduate literary magazines anywhere, are so professionally prophetic?

I knew less Steve Overbeck, perhaps two years ahead of me, who, as S. K. Overbeck, was later a Newsweek cultural staff writer for a while. Only after graduating did I meet Harry Smith, who left Brown just before I came, but as publisher of a literary periodical titled Pulpsmith he became one of the few Brown alumni to publish me.

I took only one course with S. Foster Damon, a great teacher and a sort of underground avant-garde celebrity, whom I saw more off-campus, so to speak. An activist in the art and musical avant-garde dating back to the 1920s, he taught me an awful lot of useful stuff, especially how to be a professional, which is not quite the same thing as â€œhow to write.â€ There was at Brown around 1960 no conscious political or artistic avant-garde or underground to any degree that Paul Buhle, a few years younger than I, understands the latter term from his own experience at Wisconsinâ€”certainly not when I was there in the late fifties and early sixties. Paul edited an anthology of rich memoirs about the 1950s and 1960s in at the University of Wisconsin that I recall reading with envy [History and the New Left, 1991], because nothing comparable could be written about Brown during those years.

II

For my last three semesters at Brown I lived down Hope Street, next to a local library that became an historical society; that location was at the time really more off-campus than it appeared to be the last time I visited Brownâ€”in the early 1980s. We lived on the edge of a Portuguese slum called Fox Point that was probably slummier then than now. And Foster Damon lived a few blocks away, at a parallel distance from the main campus, at 24 Thayer.

Who is Foster Damon?

Foster was an extraordinary man whom I hope is still remembered in some way or another at Brown. Do a Google search of his name now, and youâ€™ll find a healthy number of references, thousands I think. His influence persists, even though he died decades ago. He founded the Harris Collection of poetry in the library, he knew avant-garde music, and he knew avant-garde literature. As an undergraduate at Harvard before World War I, he had co-founded with other students the Harvard Musical Review (1912-1916), which was meant to appreciate contemporary music ignored by their teachers. One partner in this Review was a man who went on to a more distinguished career, the composer Roger Sessions, whose daughter Elizabeth was my Most Significant Other for many years. Fosterâ€™s brother-in-law was the eccentric Boston poet John Brooks Wheelwright, who died too young, whose literary executor Foster became, whose poems are treasured to this day by John Ashbery, among others.

[Since this interview, Ashbery questioned in correspondence with me about New Directions waiting thirty years between announcing in 1939 and finally publishing Wheelwrightâ€™s collected poems in 1970, conjecturing that Foster might have been responsible for the delay, speculating further about Fosterâ€™s possible dementia. Knowing John, I replied that Foster was quite lucid in 1960-62, when I knew him best, if often pickled. John replied that the Wheelwright papers kept at Brown were a mess. I recalled that though Foster sorted American songs for the Harris Collection he wasnâ€™t skilled at detailed archiving. I didnâ€™t recall Foster discussing Wheelwright, though he often mentioned W.S.B. Braithwaite, who had anthologized Foster; but in 1960 I might not have recognized Wheelwrightâ€™s name. I speculated that perhaps publication had to wait for his wife Louise, Wheelwrightâ€™s sister, to return from institutionalization, as she did just before he died. Since he, not she, was the official executor, while they didnâ€™t have children, my speculation was admittedly insufficient.]

Foster was important as well for publishing in 1924 the first big book on William Blake in America. In this respect, he influenced my wife-to-be, a Pembroker, who wrote her Columbia doctorate on Blake and, Iâ€™m told, gave her son by her next husband the first name of Blake. In the 1930s, Foster compiled a pioneering anthology of American Songs that subsequently influenced the musical compositions of his contemporaries Virgil Thomson and Aaron Copland.

Then roughly that same age that I am nowâ€”in his mid-sixties--Foster had been involved in various boysâ€™ clubs in Fox Point, which was then a Portuguese slum behind Power Street. Ed Margolis, long an English professor in Staten Island, remembers that a decade before me Foster taught boxing to the Fox Point kids. Because his wife Louise Wheelwright had been institutionalized for many years, select local kids would become his house helpers. Some of them went on to careers at Brown, like Ernie Costa, who worked in the Brown library until he died young. Though Foster had more connection to Fox Point than I did, perhaps my experience there prepared me for my next address, which was a low-rent public housing project in Harlem, down the hill from Columbia University.

Dinner at his Thayer Street house once a week, first for me and then for both Bunny and myself, was central to our experience of â€œunderground Brown.â€

Were you already interested in the avant-garde when you were at Brown?

Not so consciously. I remember reading on my own initiative Harold Rosenberg's The Tradition of the New, which turned me onto the idea of the avant-garde, and then Roger Shattuckâ€™s The Banquet Years. I must have reviewed the Rosenberg book for the undergraduate literary magazine because I received an appreciative letter from the publisher who a few years later did a book of mine. Foster told me a lot, as I said, about the American avant-garde, not only in literature but also in music.

Did you feel at that time that avoiding the Brown writing program was probably a wise move?

As a major yes, but not Foster Damonâ€™s verse writing course for which I signed up, even though I had no ambitions to write poetry at the time and I didnâ€™t much like Damonâ€™s assignments, which required us to write poems in a succession of English verse forms from Beowulf to the present. [A half-century later, long since a devout radical formalist, I wish I could take it again.]

From Foster above all others I probably developed the intellectual ambition for always aiming to take my work to a higher level, to go where no one else has gone or would go, in my case not only in criticism but creative work and even in this interview I hope, much as he and Cummings did in their own careers. Remember that Fosterâ€™s big book on William Blake, published in 1924 when Foster was only thirty-one, achieves an extraordinary unraveling. Check it out sometime to be impressed even now by his powers of elucidation, defining clarity in literature that previously seemed inscrutable. Foster would tell that when he was a graduate student in English lit at Harvard in the early 1920s, supplicants were asked what they thought of William Blake. It was enough for the student to say, â€œOh Blake, heâ€™s crazy,â€ for the examiner to move onto another subject. Simply, Fosterâ€™s Blake wasnâ€™t crazy, and heâ€™s not been crazy since. When I edited a decade ago an anthology of the more radical Cummings writings, it was appropriate to dedicate that book to Foster. From him and from the Brown history professor Bill [William G.] McLoughlin, as well as other intellectual heroes, such as George Orwell, whom I also discovered in college, also comes the ambition to tell the truth, even an unfamiliar truth, much as I hope to do here.

Though David Kelly continued to major in creative writing, I realized, partly through observing Davidâ€™s experience, that I should stay away from other Brown writing courses, which I now think were designed to make high school teachers. I have a vague recollection of John Hawkes telling me in my freshmen year that I had â€œno talent for prose.â€ Since he dismissed me, I had no reason to take any other courses with him, probably to my good fortune, we could now judge. I must have kept in touch with Hawkes nonetheless because I remember taking him and his wife Sophie to dinner at Foster Damonâ€™s. They hadnâ€™t met before, even though they were Harvard undergraduates thirty years apart. Should we be surprised that Hawkes never contacted me after my graduation, though, need I say, as an alumnus publishing both fiction and fiction criticism that are recognized in histories and encyclopedias. If he mentioned my work or even my name to later Brown students, Iâ€™ve never heard about it. Should this be considered another sign of Brown professorsâ€™ lack of respect for their more successful students? I remember a close relative of his telling me, perhaps two decades ago, that Jack â€œhated every minuteâ€ of teaching, which may have been true.

Some alumni writers a generation younger than I have acknowledged John Hawkesâ€™s importance to their development. One of them, whom Iâ€™ve not met, Jeffrey Eugenides, even successfully appropriated the Hawkes formula of a narrator whose physical abnormalities give him a peculiar perspective on experience. Perhaps by Eugenidesâ€™ time Hawkes became more respectful of his better students, not to mention his teaching talents, and thus a more effective writing teacher.

Probably because Hawkes and Edwin Honig didnâ€™t get tenure at Harvard, where they had previously taught, they assumed that even their stronger students were likewise Harvard rejects, as indeed we probably were, though that stigma didnâ€™t disqualify us finally from literary careers.

David Kelly, at any rate, went on to get an Iowa MFA writing degree and is now [was, alas] a prominent West Coast editor, whose book on Secrets of the Old Growth Forest (1990) won an award from northwest booksellers.

FMLS issue on contemporary poetry & Blackbox Manifold translations

Tue 6 Dec 2011

Apologies for cross-posting.

A couple of announcements that I hope might be of some interest.

Firstly, Forum for Modern Language Studies has recently published an issue on contemporary poetry, ably edited by Steven Winspur. I've yet to have a chance to read through much of the rest of the issue, though I look forward to doing so. I have had to read my own article, much of which is occupied with a reading of virtuality, and the poetry of Chris Goode. I had a go at the task, that much is true.

I've pasted the contents below.

Secondly, Blackbox Manifold, edited by Adam Piette and Alex Houen, has a new issue out that Robin Purves and I had some hand in (a small hand, but a coaxing/waving one), which includes a number of poets from this end of the spectrum (insert "You are here" sticker): Rod Mengham, Tim Atkins, Michael Kindellan, Keston Sutherland, Tom Jones, Vahni Capildeo, and another showing for a couple of Geoff Ward's Rilke translations, available from Equipage. It was nothing to do with us, but there's a fun Geoff Gilbert/Alex Houen collaboration too, and poetry from Duncan White:

FILMS OF SOUND: austraLYSIS
Saturday 10 December 2011, 8:00pm

1. Film of Sound: austraLYSISSydney Conservatorium of Music Recital Hall East

Please note this event is at Recital Hall East, Sydney Conservatorium of Music

austraLYSIS will premiere a film-music work, Film of Sound, the film is composed in immediate relation to the sound structure, rather than in the more usual converse relationship. The film will have surfaces that are physical, abstract, human and inanimate. At times it will have verbal content displayed, spoken or deconstructed amongst the sound-image field. This work will be made in a new collaboration with US film-maker Will Luers. Film will also be the basis for a second piece, a real-time manipulation performance, Film Moves in which austraLYSIS use video material for continuous transformation, partnered by an algorithmically synaesthetic sound process. Active viewer and performer transformation of the visual and sonic worlds are at the core of this pair of pieces, which will be complemented by electroacoustic and audio-visual work from David Worrall, an Australian pioneer in the field, and Daniel Blinkhorn, both creative members of austraLYSIS. There will also be computer-interactive improvisation and new composition by austraLYSIS members.

Bone Bouquet
http://www.bonebouquet.org

For two years, Bone Bouquet has aimed to highlight the important work of female poets, who are often underrepresented in the writing community and popular media. Rather than personal politics, their criteria are excellence and vibrance. Rather than segregating the poetry of “women’s issues” from “regular” creative work, their goal is to provide an additional arena in which female poets can make their work more visible to readers, building their reputations as artists.

*Sarah Bridgins

Sarah Bridgins’ work has appeared in Monkeybicycle, InDigest, Pear Noir!, Playground, and Bone Bouquet among other journals. She lives in Brooklyn with a cat and a boy.

*Lauren Nicole Nixon
http://www.laurennicolenixon.com

Lauren Nicole Nixon is a Brooklyn-based artist representative, teaching artist, and poet. Nixon’s poetry appears and is forthcoming in literary journals such as Bone Bouquet, Sugar House, Eleven and a Half, The Montreal Review, The Tulane Review, Aforementioned Productions, 491, Jelly Bucket, Rougarou, Umbrella Factory, The Belladonna* Chaplet Series, Spillway, The Writing Disorder, In Posse Review, RELEASE, Leveler, and No, Dear. She is a Pushcart Prize nominee. Her first chapbook, There's a Jukebox in the Back, will be published next summer by Dancing Girl Press.

Neal Climenhaga

Neal Climenhaga is a poet living in New York City. He met Kenneth Patchen when he was six years old.

Steve Dalachinsky

Steve Dalachinsky was born in 1946 in Brooklyn. His work has appeared extensively in journals and anthologies. He has written liner notes for many artists' CDs. His 1999 CD, Incomplete Direction (Knitting Factory Records), a collection of his poetry read in collaboration with various musicians, has garnered much praise. His most recent chapbooks include In Glorious Black and White (Ugly Duckling Presse) and the book of collages Christ Amongst the Fishes (Oilcan Press). His books include A Superintendent's Eyes (Hozomeen Press); PEN Oakland National Book Award-winning book The Final Nite (Ugly Duckling Presse), complete notes from a Charles Gayle Notebook; and Reaching into the Unknown (RogueArt), a collaboration book project with photographer Jacques Bisceglia. He has read throughout the New York area, the U.S., Japan, and Europe. He is a contributing writer for the Brooklyn Rail.

Lunar Chandelier Press
http://lunarchandelier-lunarchandelier.blogspot.com/

Lunar Chandelier Press, formed in 2009, publishes books of modern, evocative writing. They are inspired by the spirit of the poet- and artist-directed expatriate productions of the 1920s Paris Left Bank and the various contemporary poetry projects of Brooklyn’s Gowanus Canal’s right bank: Belladonna Books, Cabinet, Litmus Press, Portable Press at Yo-Yo Labs, and Ugly Duckling Presse, as well as the venerable Hanging Loose Press, based in downtown Brooklyn. Lunar Chandelier’s first three books debuted in the fall of 2010, with Vyt Bakaitis’s new collection of poems Deliberate Proof; Lynn Behrendt’s long-awaited first book of poems petals, emblems; and Joe Elliot’s new collection of poems Homework.

*Vyt Bakaitis
http://www.eoagh.com

Vyt Bakaitis, a native of Lithuania, has been living in New York City since 1968. A book of his poems, City Country, appeared in 1991 (Black Thistle Press), and con/structs, his book of visual poems and photographs, came out in a limited edition from Arunas K. Photo +Graphics. Bakaitis has also published translations of poetry from several languages, including his anthology Breathing Free: Poems from the Lithuanian. His translations of the poems of Jonas Mekas were published as There Is No Ithaca (Black Thistle Press), with a foreword by Czeslaw Milosz, and as Daybooks (Portable Press at Yo-Yo Labs). Lunar Chandelier Press published Deliberate Proof last year. Poems are forthcoming in the online journal Eoagh.

*Joe Elliot
http://www.fauxpress.com/e/elliot.pdf

Joe Elliot ran a weekly reading series at Biblios Bookstore and Café in NYC for five years, starting in the early ’90s, and helped move the series to the Zinc Bar where it continues. He co-edited two chapbook series, A Musty Bone and Situations, which published authors such as Antje Katcher, Paul Genega, Duncan Nichols, Mitch Highfill, Rich O’Russa, Douglas Rothschild, Shannon Ketch, Lisa Jarnot, Bill Luoma, Kevin Davies, Marcella Durand, Rick Snyder, and many others. He is the author of numerous chapbooks, including You Gotta Go In It’s The Big Game, Poems To Be Centered On Much Much Larger Sheets Of Paper, 15 Clanking Radiators, 14 Knots, Reduced, Half Gross (a collaboration with artist John Koos), and Object Lesson (a collaboration with artist Rich O’Russa). Granary Books published If It Rained Here, a collaboration with artist Julie Harrison. Occupy Books
Wed 7 Dec 2011

Dear Fiends -

What poems and books of poetry - and any of poetry's relevant prose guises, theorhetorical or otherwise - would one read as context and study for the OWS movements? This is a question directed toward teaching a class in the movement or starting a reading group.

It occurs to me Pound's "With Usura" canto (XLV) might be a start (with its sounding at say http://nedjudy.com/stuff/usura.html). But I thought it might be fun to amass such a list, with winter coming and so time to gather for the spring.

Thanks for your help -

As ever,
Sam

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is “Writing What For? Across the Mourning Sky” by Raymond Farr

Thu 8 Dec 2011

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œWriting What For? Across the Mourning Skyâ€ by Raymond Farr

Description:
Executing techniques gleaned from Language poetry and its dada/surrealist roots; each poem is a box canyon of meaninglessness tipping its hat to the absurd. Literary expectations are dashed on the rocks of dire mismeaning, embellishing the nothing that seems an inherent folly, a joke intrinsic to "a turn of phrase." These poems succumb to the glossy experience of recreating the experience of reading these poemsâ€”a train of thought derailed again and again, until what is obvious becomes radiant/radioactive, but not meaning to "mean."

Re: The Unfortunate Truth About the Poetry Foundation: corporate, anti-occupy, and should be boycotted.

Fri 9 Dec 2011

wow, thanks for this jared -- one stop shopping for a massively important, and the below notwithstanding, still under the radar story about 'big biz' poetry -- if that's not an oxymoron everyone should check this out!

On Sun, Dec 4, 2011 at 11:36 PM, Jared Schickling <[redacted]>wrote:

Has anyone missed that the Poetry Foundation is now in the business of slapping handcuffs and lawsuits on poets and performance artists? The story of their incredible, reprehensible treatment of Stephanie Dunn, which provoked an act of civil disobedience by the Croatoan Poetic Cell at the $20,000,000 PF compound in Chicago (and which may or may not have been completely civil, thank goodness), can be found in a number of online places, including the widely read Salon.com. Apparently these nobodies have irritated the PF enough to erect (or lower from the sky) a concrete slab blocking what was formerly public access to their interior gardens.

The Poetry Foundation and its actions, here and elsewhere, are consistently antithetical to the exigencies of the revolutionary poetic act. It is a cultural monolith and economic and political powerhouse that should be boycotted, discredited, discarded. Period.

Here is an exhaustive string of links documenting and addressing Dunn and the CPC's actions, and the PF's harsh, intolerant, vindictive response, all followed by some interesting facts about John Barr:

1. Picture of the PF's "conceptual slab," recently installed to bar access:

2. "Protest at the Poetry Foundation: A Report from Brooks Johnson":

3. A damning article about the Poetry Foundation (and more) by Steve Evans at Third Factory,

"Free Market Verse":

4. Commentary at Montevidayo blog, "'Free (Market) Verse': Steve Evans on the Poetry Foundation and Conservative Politics/Aesthetics":

8. Downloadable issue of Sous les Paves (no. 5/6) with a statement from the Croatoan Poetic Cell:

http://souslespavesonline.wordpress.com/

OTHERWISE, here are some rather damning factoids about John Barr et al, lifted from the comments section at the Montevidayo blog:

1. "The Illinois State's Attorney is looking into allegations of poor "fiscal practices, conflict of interest, nepotism and playing fast and loose with the rules of charitable organizations" (concerning the Poetry Foundation)

2. "Penny Barr, wife of John Barr, who admits she is "not versed in poetry," was paid $23,000 by the Foundation for setting up a poetry contest."

3. "The Poetry Foundation also plans to build a $25 million mansion in the Gold Coast with accommodations for visiting poets of its choice and a stage to host readings on. An ex-trustee accused the Foundation of acting like a "private club" and using Ruth Lilly's money for "personal gratification."

[source: http://chicagopoetry.com/modules.php?op=modload&name=News&file=article&sid=1342]

4. The company Barr founded, Dynergy, frequently likened in business columns to Enron, paid out a $3 million fine for accounting fraud (after Barr left as an executive) and a US Attorney said in a letter "We have become increasingly concerned that Dynegy's 'cooperation' is more apparent than real."

> 5. John Barr donated the maximum to Rudolph Giuliani in early 2007, a month after Giuliani declared his candidacy. Giuliani's accomplishments as mayor of NYC including a smear campaign against contemporary artists and the Brooklyn Museum that displayed them, attempting to defund the institution. Soon after Barr's donation, Giuliani named as his foreign policy adviser Norman Podhoretz right after he published the book World War III which advocated a global war, who in a previous life as a literary editor engaged in critical attacks against Allen Ginsberg and Jack Kerouac.
> 6. Barr's current company is lobbying foreign governments, mostly Spanish speaking countries in the hemisphere, to privatize their natural resources on behalf of his clients.

Help a small press celebrate the holidays!

Fri 9 Dec 2011

As someone who has publishe

Dear friends of Litmus Press & Aufgabe,

As someone who has published or worked directly with Litmus Press, we hope you'll consider giving us a boost during our Winter Fundraising Campaign.

We have just received multi-year support from NYSCA, which is wonderful, though their support of our full-length publications was cut in half. We are also supported by the Leslie Scalapino -- O Books fund, and this support has been crucial, allowing us to hire a part-time staff member to keep things moving.

However, it's the support of individuals through memberships, subscriptions & donations that creates the most solid foundation for the continuation of our programming.

I'm writing to enlist your help spreading the word about our Winter Fundraising Campaign. It will be the support of individual members, subscribers, and donors in the coming years that will support us in our efforts to do more on behalf of our authors, artists, and their work, so this drive is important!

We've just updated our website and will be sending out an email tomorrow morning announcing our Winter Fundraising Campaign. We are only asking that you forward this email (if possible, with a personal appeal to friends and family), and/or post it to your Facebook page, and/or share the link wherever you can. The email will also be posted on the Litmus Press Facebook page, so you can go there and "like" it (and anything else there!), which will give the appeal more visibility.

If you don't usually receive our emails, you may not be on our list -- there is an email list sign up box at the bottom of each page of our website. You can select preferences, so you only receive the announcements you want. If you don't receive our email tomorrow morning please let me know, and I will forward it to you.

To visit our newly updated support page, click http://www.litmuspress.org/support.html

Best wishes for the month, the new year, the poetry, the art, the occupation, & with deep gratitude for your artistic contributions to Litmus Press.

Warmly,
Tracy

The Belladonna* Benefit will showcase a performance by Anne Waldman and Ambrose Bye, live auction by renowned auctioneer Erin Ward ofÂ Star Benefit AuctionsÂ with special assistant Amy King, and a dance performance by theÂ A.O. Movement Collective. The Auction and the Benefit will support Belladonna*s 2012 season of publications and events, which share a theme of caring for the material realities of poets, viewing a publishing project holistically. We're referring to 2012 as The Year of Material Lives, and we plan to host combination readings/dinners with ample time set aside to discuss the economic and social concerns of writers, artists, publishers, and other creators. Moreover, in addition to continuing our commemorative chaplet series, we hope to publish five full-length books of hybrid and experimental work in the coming year including new work by Julie Patton, LaTasha N. Nevada Diggs, R. Erica Doyle and Tonya Foster. Â

"Amy Kingâ€™s poems seem to encompass all that we think of as the 'natural' world ..." Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â Â --John Ashbery (http://www.litmuspress.org/iwanttomakeyousafe.html)

Re: Occupy Books
Fri 9 Dec 2011

Interesting, this.

Back in May, a friend - Silvia Nanclares - asked a similar question regarding the #15M movement and all the occupied public spaces here in Spain.

Many of us answered that question, some web developers joined in, and, a few weeks later, we had the #Bookcamping project up and running.

Here: http://bookcamping.cc

And it's still going strong. We just completed a crowdfunding campaign to guarantee its future, and even "official" media are starting to pay attention to us.

So far, Spanish only, I'm afraid. We're working on that.

Keep the list posted on how this goes - it would be nice to mention it on our blog.

Best,

Kamen

S. Foster Damon & The Waldrops
Fri 9 Dec 2011

I was glad to read Richard Kostelanetz' excerpts re: Brown. My own experience at Brown was equally abysmal; if it wasn't for Damon and the Waldrops, I would have pretty much collapsed. Keith was really instrumental and I remember visiting him and Rosmarie on (I think) Elmgrove Avenue any number of times.

More to the point was an early encounter my freshman year with I. A. Richard; he had come to speak at Brown, and nuisance that I am, I asked him to read my poetry. He said he'd get back to me 'in a few weeks' - instead, I found the poems returned to my mainbox the next morning, fully annotated and full of encouragement. That meant the world to me at the time; his generosity (in the midst of a busy schedule) was amazing.

Friday, December 9
ELEBASH RECITAL HALL
CUNY Graduate Center, 365 Fifth Avenue New York
6pm (sharp) to about 9:30pm

Poet, translator, editor, anthologist, Jerome Rothenberg is joined by friends and collaborators for an exploration of his influential work. Papers on, and celebrations of, Rothenberg's work will be presented by Susan Howe, Homero Aridjis, Carolee Schneemann, Ammiel Alcalay, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Anne Waldman, Bruce Andrews & Sally Silvers, Jeffrey Robinson, Pete Monaco, Charles Morrow, Anne Tardos, George Economou, Rochelle Owens, Al Filreis, Monica de la Torre, Ernesto Livon-Grosman, Nicole Peyrafitte, Lee Ann Brown & Tony Torn, Mark Weiss, George Quasha, Peter Cockelbergh, Ligorano-Reese, Danny Snelson, Diane Rothenberg, Hiro Sato, Ian Tyson, and others.

The evening will end with a reading by Jerome Rothenberg.

Organized and hosted by Pierre Joris and Charles Bernstein.

In conjunction with the event, Steve Clay, of Granary Books, will curate a retrospective exhibit of works by Jerome Rothenberg. Included will be examples of books and magazines with which Rothenberg was directly involved as editor/publisher such as Hawk's Well Press, Alcheringa, Poems from the Floating World, "Some/Thing" and New Wilderness Letter; the remarkable series of anthologies he edited from Technicians of the Sacred to Poems for the Millennium; selections from his more than 100 books and broadsides to an array of his collaborations with artists including Ian Tyson, Susan Bee and Arman. Charlie Morrow will also have an exhibit of his many audio collaborations with Rothenberg.

great post jennifer mainstream anthologies often cause flurries, but it doesnt mean they get remembered beauty is a verb is the start of something - im sure attention to it will only build, however gradually brilliant title, look forward to getting it

A few months ago Sheila Black, Michael Northen, and I published Beauty is a Verb: The New Disability Poets & although we got great reviews from some of my favorite poets, the controversy of the book has been very nonexistent. My argument isn't that there are real racial and gender problems that need to be solved. My point is that the arguments about race and gender are so loud that the civil rights of people with disabilities are consistently ignored. And the problems of this minority remain so severe in comparison to other groups.*

> *First, looking at the Dove anthology itself what interests me is the still glaring lack of attention paid to poets/people with disabilities as a multicultural group. In what appears to be the ultimate inclusive collection Larry Eigner, Vassar Miller, Josephine Miles, Jim Ferris, Paul Guest are all absent and there is no mention of Crip Poetics The only poet in the collection who might identify as 'disabled" is Duncan, and I'm guessing the Duncan poems don't address his vision/vision which was arguably central to his work.*
> I do think that an anthology, such as ours, which for starters is an entirely new phenonemen calls for a little attention. Beauty is a Verb discusses how aphasia is a link to experimental language (Cole), addresses 'crip poetics" which most people have never heard of (Kuppers), speaks to the linguistically complexity of translating English to ASL (Clark), and most of all addresses the disabled body as something that is okay, even sexy and a worthwhile experience.
>
> I wonder if speaking about disability is still a thing that makes people nervous, and they feel afraid of having a voice. Although there is plenty of discussion regarding race from white people, and unlike skin color, most of the able-bodied will have some disability in their lifetime. More importantly, it seems that people still dismiss disability as a category/identity and one that is privileged to the most simple rights like getting into the store or having a job, for gosh sake - not to mention being in the Penguin anthology.
> It also seems true that in the poetry world you have to insult someone directly or indirectly to get attention - which I did a few years ago when I called out Paul Guest for allowing John Ashbery to call him an invalid in his blurb. All hell broke lose & evidently the right to call a person an invalid is something people of which are very attached to.

wish I cd be there. just reading yr essay abt teaching in attack of the difficult poems & stole a few exercises--I assume that's ok--and quoted you on what poetry did long ago then later & now. wish you wd write something abt whether poetry has had it or whether it's morphing into something else, beyond saying it's abt the medium now--maybe you have...? ecopoetry is stirring... thank you for yourself.

Re: The Unfortunate Truth About the Poetry Foundation: corporate, anti-occupy, and should be boycotted.

Fri 9 Dec 2011

Thanks for these links, I've been wondering exactly how Poetry could have gotten so far off base from the vision of Harriet Monroe, and these articles paint a pretty clear picture. Elucidating.

On Sun, Dec 4, 2011 at 11:36 PM, Jared Schickling <[redacted]>wrote:

The story of their incredible, reprehensible treatment of Stephanie Dunn, which provoked an act of civil disobedience by the Croatoan Poetic Cell at the $20,000,000 PF compound in Chicago (and which may or may not have been completely civil, thank goodness), can be found in a number of online places, including the widely read Salon.com. Apparently these nobodies have irritated the PF enough to erect (or lower from the sky) a concrete slab blocking what was formerly public access to their interior gardens.*

Somatic Engagement booklaunch in SF, Dec. 15th

Sat 10 Dec 2011

Somatic Engagement (Chain Links) booklaunch! If you find yourself in SF on December 15th, please join Katherine Sherwood, Georgina Kleege, Amber DiPietra, Denise Leto, Eleni Stecopoulos and Christian Nagler at the Green Arcade bookstore (1680 Market Street), at 7.30.

Somatic Engagement: the politics, poetics and publics of embodiment. Chain Links books, 2001. 128 pages, 12 color plates, $16, order through Small Press Distribution (http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/9781930068513/somatic-engagement.aspx)

Edited by community artist, scholar, and dancer Petra Kuppers (author of Disability Culture and Community Performance), the book opens with Arnieville, a Californian protest camp of disability, homelessness, and poverty activists.

From there, a series of enactments welcome trespass and incursion in the name of survival.

Amy Sara Carroll on the Transborder Immigrant Tool, a GPS phone that uses poetry to lead the disoriented and thirsty to water caches and safety sites in the US-Mexican borderlands.

Devora Neumark on washing Tali Goodfriend?s hands in Lebanese olive oil outside the hotel where Colin Powell speaks to the Jewish National Fund, hands gliding over one another in the middle of an angry public protest.

Christian Nagler on writing an experimental novel while conducting an oral history of agricultural labor practices and migration patterns at the site of the Panamerican Highway in El Salvador.

Georgina Kleege on touch and blindness as she discusses Katherine Sherwood?s paintings of magic and the human brain, paintings that Sherwood began after her stroke ten years ago.

Eleni Stecopoulos on the healing quest as research and the complexities of cultural appropriation.

Amber DiPietra and Denise Leto on the collaborative connections of breath, body, pause, pain, and form.

Somatic Engagement is an exploration of how relation and support play out in breaths, steps, and touch.

Beware of Book on Demand (Human Touch Publishing)

Sat 10 Dec 2011

Just to let you know that there is a publishing company called Book on Demand (Human Touch Publishing) who have an Amazon store and who, without my permission, are selling a print-on-demand version of my ebook "Carrier of the Seed". Iâ€™ve asked them to remove it or else I will seek legal advice. Here is the link to the sales page:

http://www.amazon.com/gp/product/B0068P9DUY/ref=olp_product_details?ie=UTF8&me=&seller=

They also are selling it at another site, here:

http://www.alibris.co.uk/stores/human_touch_publishing/search?mtype&searchtype=author&searchquery=Jeffrey+Side

I canâ€™t find anything about this company. It looks like they poach already published books and ebooks and charging inflated prices for them, so watch out for them in case they try the same thing with any of your already published books.

Has anyone missed that the Poetry Foundation is now in the business of slapping handcuffs and lawsuits on poets and performance artists?Â The story of their incredible, reprehensible treatment of Stephanie Dunn, which provoked an act of civil disobedience by the Croatoan Poetic Cell at the $20,000,000 PF compound in Chicago (and which may or may not have been completely civil, thank goodness), can be found in a number of online places, including the widely read Salon.com.Â Apparently these nobodies have irritated the PF enough to erect (or lower from the sky) a concrete slab blocking what was formerly public access to their interior gardens.Â

5. John Barr donated the maximum to Rudolph Giuliani in early 2007, a month after Giuliani declared his candidacy. Giulianiâ€™s accomplishments as mayor of NYC including a smear campaign against contemporary artists and the Brooklyn Museum that displayed them, attempting to defund the institution. Soon after Barrâ€™s donation, Giuliani named as his foreign policy adviser Norman Podhoretz right after he published the book World War III which advocated a global war, who in a previous life as a literary editor engaged in critical attacks against Allen Ginsberg and Jack Kerouac.

6. Barrâ€™s current company is lobbying foreign governments, mostly Spanish speaking countries in the hemisphere, to privatize their natural resources on behalf of his clients.

7. Robert Pinsky takes credit for selecting Barr for his position.

67. Mark Weiss
for Emily Dickinson's Birthday and Jerry Rothenberg's
Sat 10 Dec 2011

On the occasion of Emily Dickinson's birthday, and a day before Jerome Rothenberg's 80th, "Two Poems, after Emily Dickinson," written when he was about 20. From his collection "Retrievals: Uncollected & New Poems 1955-2010," available (at a discount) at junctionpress.com.

Note the final wicked slant rhyme.

Two Poems, after Emily Dickinson

The last train left at five oâ€™clock,
Somehow we missed the way;
Weâ€™ll have to sit in waiting rooms until eternity.

Tickets form an ark of snow,
Water comes in drops,
While this earth-bound passenger Studies secret maps,

Inquires at the agentâ€™s door
If the next train leaves,
Anxious to reduce delay
To a term of weeks.

When it chanced, we couldnâ€™t tell
That it would always be
This waiting in a busy room
For immortality.

2
The birds attain superior life
The others never find;
I wish my obligations Might dabble with the wind.

Within his strictest tenement Deciduous to rise,

That wing confining aviary
To me were Paradise.

But mapping bounds of heaven,
Topographers will pause
Before they reach that other house,
And justify the jaws.

Essential circumscription,
I find its premise odd,
Which grants necessity of bird,
But contradicts the cat.

Fw: Fwd: We need your support!

Sun 11 Dec 2011

I sent the wrong email yesterday. Mea culpa.

LITMUS PRESS

WINTER FUNDRAISING DRIVE
Thanks for your support! It's what keeps us going.

As we round out our tenth year of publishing, we want to take this opportunity to thank you for being a part of Litmus Press. Without your support, we wouldn't be able to fulfill our mission of publishing innovative, cross-genre writing, poetry, and works in translation.

In 2011, contributions from our community helped support the publication of four new titles: How Phenomena Appear to Unfold, a reprint of Leslie Scalapino's 1989 Poets & Poets collection that includes new and previously unpublished essays and poetic works; Aufgabe #10, featuring French poetry in translation guest edited by Cole Swensen; I Want to Make You Safe, the fourth book of poetry by New York based author Amy King; and O Bon, the third book of poetry by Brandon Shimoda.

For more details,visit our website!

Coming up in 2012

With deep cuts in arts funding, support from our community is more important than ever. In the coming year, support from you will help make the following projects possible: * Aufgabe #11, featuring El Salvadoran poetry and poetics in translation guest-edited by Christian Nagler * Then Go On, a collection of lyric prose pieces byMary Burger * The first full-length publication in English of Sicilian poet Maria Attanasio's work, Amnesia of the Movement of Clouds / Of Red & Black Verse, translated from the Italian by Carla Billitteri * A translation by Jen Hofer of Amé.RICA (Tu valor de cambio), the third book by the Uruguyan poet Virginia Lucas * A digital archive of early and out-of-print issues of Aufgabe * Updating and redesigning the O Books website, promoting the current O Books list, and reprinting select titles, beginning with Plum Stones, Cartoons of No Heaven by Michael McClure * Readings and events in support of our authors and their work, including planning an event of French poetry and poetics featuring writers and translators from Aufgabe #10, and co-sponsoring a reading and discussion with Maria Attanasio and Carla Billitteri in conjunction with the release of Amnesia of the Movement of Clouds / Of Red & Black Verse For more information, or to join our community of supporters, please visit our website.

Contributions at every level help!

Your support is what makes these projects possible. There are a number of ways to contribute to everything we do here at Litmus Press, including: * Make a holiday purchase. Special discounts, gift memberships & subscriptions, and limited signed editions are available through January 1, 2012. * Donate your time and expertise in bookkeeping, strategic planning, or other areas * Support O Books, help us digitize Aufgabe, or buy a new printer by directing your donation. * Double your contribution by asking your employer to make a matching donation. * Make a donation to general programming. No amount is too small! For complete details, please visit our website.

Litmus Press is supported, in part, with grants from the New York State Council on the Arts, a state agency. We are also supported by the Leslie Scalapino - O Books Fund, Litmus Press members, subscribers and individual donors. Litmus Press is a proud member of the Council of Literary Magazines & Presses. All contributions are tax-deductible.

Re: The Unfortunate Truth About the Poetry Foundation: corporate, anti-occupy, and should be boycotted.

Mon 12 Dec 2011

So much depends on perception. I forwarded Jared's email to my sister who was at the poetry reading. She vehemently disagreed with just about everything, but she does tend to have a more "establishment" view of the arts. I do think that poets need to be difficult and cantankerous, and they need to go against the standards of the moneyed establishment, but without being very specific, most people's agendas are not always pure, and perhaps that is impossible.

The Poetry Foundation and its actions, here and elsewhere, are consistently antithetical to the exigencies of the revolutionary poetic act.Â It is a cultural monolith and economic and political powerhouse that should be boycotted, discredited, discarded.Â Period.

Here is an exhaustive string of links documenting and addressing Dunn and the CPCâ€™s actions, and the PFâ€™s harsh, intolerant, vindictive response, all followed by some interesting facts about John Barr:

1.Â Picture of the PFâ€™s â€œconceptual slab,â€ recently installed to bar access:

OTHERWISE, here are some rather damning factoids about John Barr et al, lifted from the comments section at the Montevidayo blog:

1. â€œThe Illinois Stateâ€™s Attorney is looking into allegations of poor â€œfiscal practices, conflict of interest, nepotism and playing fast and loose with the rules of charitable organizationsâ€ (concerning the Poetry Foundation)

2. â€œPenny Barr, wife of John Barr, who admits she is â€œnot versed in poetry,â€ was paid $23,000 by the Foundation for setting up a poetry contest.â€

3. â€œThe Poetry Foundation also plans to build a $25 million mansion in the Gold Coast with accommodations for visiting poets of its choice and a stage to host readings on. An ex-trustee accused the Foundation of acting like a â€œprivate clubâ€ and using Ruth Lillyâ€™s money for â€œpersonal gratification.â€

[source: http://chicagopoetry.com/modules.php?op=modload&name=News&file=article&sid=1342]

4. The company Barr founded, Dynergy, frequently likened in business columns to Enron, paid out a $3 million fine for accounting fraud (after Barr left as an executive) and a US Attorney said in a letter â€œWe have become increasingly concerned that Dynegyâ€™s â€˜cooperationâ€™ is more apparent than real.â€

5. John Barr donated the maximum to Rudolph Giuliani in early 2007, a month after Giuliani declared his candidacy. Giulianiâ€™s accomplishments as mayor of NYC including a smear campaign against contemporary artists and the Brooklyn Museum that displayed them, attempting to defund the institution. Cloud Computing-- New from 3rdness Press/Fifth Planet Press

Just wanted to let folks know that /Cloud Computing/, a new collection from Josh May has launched from 3rdness, an imprint of Fifth Planet Press. Available at SPD. And if you are on the fence and need a blurb to sway you, here you go:

CLOUD COMPUTING supposes the sui generous and then is so bold as to use any means necessary to "compute" said thing/world. The answers are pulled down from clouds, black boxes, and the like, and they seem mostly correct. Any detectable errors seem immediately to fall under Wittgenstein's mantra "The world is all that is the case," or Frank O'Hara's gravestone, "Grace to be born and live as variously as possible," or maybe even Warhol via Cale, "Faces and names, I wish they were the same." If this book of poems were a movie, it would be a blockbuster action flick with lots of pyrotechnics, and you can bet its tagline would be: There is no nexus in the cloud.

Enjoy!

Tan Lin's INSOMNIA AND THE AUNT

Tue 13 Dec 2011

…was published in the spring of 2011 as a limited edition artist's book, with covers designed and letterpress printed by Rebecca Cooling-Mallard and interior composition by Patrick Durgin. As well as gaining notice from, among others, Brooklyn Rail's artist's books columnist, and featuring with Printed Matter, the world's preeminent dealer of publications by artists, Insomnia and the Aunt was then known mainly to an equally "limited edition" of literati. Yet it was nominated for the Asian/Pacific American Librarians Association Award in the summer and enthusiastically lauded in literary journals, such as Constant Critic. Now the book is being re-printed and re-launched as a deluxe paperback book suitable for the trade, libraries, and a general audience of readers. The book uniquely yokes avant-garde risk and biographical intrigue. It is poignant, arch, challenging, and accessible, all at once. Alongside its recent adjunct, the online "Patio and the Index," Insomnia and the Aunt ushers in a new form of essay-narrative-poem: an "ambient novel." In Lin's increasingly influential oeuvre, it extends a project he dubs “ambient stylistics” into the evolving category of literary nonfiction, i.e. “life writing.”

…is an ambient novel composed of black and white photographs, postcards, Google reverse searches, letters, appendices, an index to an imaginary novel, re-runs and footnotes. The aunt in question can’t sleep. She runs a motel in the Pacific Northwest. She likes watching Conan O’Brien late at night. She may be the narrator’s aunt or she may be an emanation of a TV set. Structured like everybody’s scrapbook, and blending fiction with non-fictional events, Insomnia and the Aunt is about identities taken and given up, and about the passions of an immigrant life, rebroadcast as furniture. Ostensibly about a young man’s disintegrating memory of his most fascinating relative, or potentially a conceptualist take on immigrant literature, it is probably just a treatment for a prime-time event that, because no one sleeps in motels, lasts into the late night and daytime slots.

…is one among many works. Tan Lin is the author of Lotion Bullwhip Giraffe, BlipSoak01, Ambience is a Novel with a Logo, Heath (Plagiarism/Outsource), 7 Controlled Vocabularies and Obituary 2004. The Joy of Cooking, and Heath Course Pak. His work has appeared in numerous journals including Conjunctions, Artforum, Cabinet, New York Times Book Review, Art in America, and Purple. His video, theatrical and LCD work have been shown at the Marianne Boesky Gallery, Yale Art Museum, Sophienholm Museum (Copenhagen), Ontological Hysterical Theatre, and as part of the Whitney Museum of American Art’s Soundcheck Series. Lin is the recipient of a Getty Distinguished Scholar Grant for 2004-2005 and a Warhol Foundation/Creative Capital Arts Writing Grant to complete a book-length study of the writings of Andy Warhol. He has taught at the University of Virginia and Cal Arts, and currently teaches creative writing at New Jersey City University.

Sound & Language Performance:
Consider the psychological and phenomenological aspects of the reception and manifestation of sound as a linguistic act, as a revisitable document, as an intangible moment on breath and a long distance transmittable gesture. Ponder the history of the textual document and its relationship with the relatively young sonic document. Encompass methods of transmission and reception, the notable and the mundane, the intentional and unintentional, public and private, seen and heard.

Paal Bjelke Andersen is a Norwegian writer and editor. In his recent * Dugnad* and The Grefsen Address he uses poetry as a tool to analyze the notions of community in the Scandinavian social democratic societies. The Grefsen Address is available for downloading at the Eclipse Archive. From 2002 to 2008 he edited the web magazine* nypoesi*, is one of the organizers of the poetry festival Audiatur in Bergen, edits the small press Attåt and curates a series of readings and talks addressing poetics and politics in Oslo called Folkebiblioteket (The Public Library). All of these initiatives are transnational and -lingual. The last two years he have spend considerable time in Tehran working on a translation of Iranian Language-, conceptual- and visual poets into Norwegian. This reading is made possible through the generosity of NORLA.

Trisha Low is the author of Confessions [of a variety] (Gauss PDF), and her work has appeared in Against Expression: An Anthology of Conceptual Writing (Northwestern University Press, 2011) and Artifice. She is a graduate student in Performance Studies at New York University.

Pavement Saw Press Chapbook contest Deadline 12/31

Thu 15 Dec 2011

Pavement Saw Chapbook Contest: Deadline 12/31
<<<<<<<<<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
Submit electronically, save the hassle of printing out a manuscript and have your funds support poetry not the post office! Directly enter by using our website http://www.pavementsaw.org/pages/chapcontest.htm

$500 and 50 copies of the winning chapbook will be awarded to the winner. In addition to the prize winner, at least one other manuscript will be published under a standard royalty contract (author paid 10% of press run). Everyone is allowed to submit regardless of previous publication history. Every entrant will receive the equivalent cost of the entry fee in Pavement Saw Press titles.

Unlike many publishers whose collections are printed one copy at a time and therefore lack a large circulation, our chapbooks are published in a first edition of 400 copies plus overage. While chapbooks rarely receive exposure, ours have been reviewed in Poets and Writers, Publishers Weekly, The Georgia Review,

Small Press Review and many others. Our previous winners have had subsequent full length books appear from a bevy of publishers including Ahsahta Press, Curbstone Press, Cleveland State University Press, Birds llc, Bear Star Press, BlazeVOX, Shearsman Books, Futurepoem Books, University of Georgia, Tupelo Press, Hanging Loose Press and so on.

Submit up to 32 pages of poetry. Include a signed cover letter with your name, address, phone number, e-mail, publication credits, a brief biography and the title of the chapbook. Include a cover page with your contact information and the chapbook title. Include a second page with the chapbook title only. Do not include your name on any pages inside the manuscript except for the first title page. No need for a contents page. All chapbooks are selected blindly / anonymously. Manuscripts will be considered until December 31st, 2011. Entry fee: $15 for US entries, $18 overseas, $21 electronic (world wide).

If you wish to submit electronically, send $21.00 via paypal to [redacted]. Then e-mail the manuscript as an attachment to the same address and we will send you an e-mail confirmation that your entry is all set. Electronic submissions need to be sent as PDF files or as word (.doc or .docx) files. Other formats are not accepted. The extra cost is to cover the paypal fees as well as the time, labor, ink, and so on, to print out your manuscript. Or use our website http://www.pavementsaw.org/pages/chapcontest.htm

If you wish to send via regular mail, have your envelope postmarked by December 31st and accompany your manuscript with a check in the amount of $15.00 payable to Pavement Saw Press. All contributors to the contest will receive books, chapbooks and journals equal to, or more than, the entry fee. Add $3 (US) for other countries to cover the extra postal charge. Do not include an SASE for notification of results. Do not send the only copy of your work. All manuscripts are recycled and individual comments on the manuscripts cannot be made. This year the editor will be the judge and, as it should be, he promises not to chose former students, former or potential sexual partners, press interns, or people that can make him famous. A decision will be reached in March. Entries should be sent to our address at the bottom of the page.

Chicago School of Poetics registration closes December 30th

Thu 15 Dec 2011

If you've been considering taking part in the Chicago School of Poetics online community, now is the time to register for our January - February session. Registrations for regular online and on location workshops close on December 30th, 2011, so don't miss out, click the link below for more information.

http://www.chicagoschoolofpoetics.com/

And, be sure to check out the improvements we've made to the Weekly Salon based on feedback from our Open House participants:

- We've added more days to the Weekly Salon's schedule.

- The Salon now runs independent of the 8 week structure of our regular workshops. So you can drop into a Weekly Salon workshop whenever your schedule allows.

- And, you can purchase Salon workshops individually to better fit your budget. Also, if you purchase individual Weekly Salon workshops in packages of 5 you'll receive a 20% discount.

- We've also added an optional writing component that features weekly writing prompts and exercises culled from our other online workshops. You can use these to explore the various poetic strategies taught at the school within the open structure of the Salon.

For more information or to register for the Weekly Salon just click the link below.

These are and are not products of thought
Fri 16 Dec 2011

http://vispo.com/aleph/jim/index.htm?n—

These are and are not products of thought.

They are in that they are produced with a program I wrote in JavaScript called Aleph Null.

They are not in that they were generated by Aleph Null and I did not anticipate them. They come as a surprise to me.

Also surprising to me is their sometimes organic and also sexual quality or associations. I wondered why they have these unintended properties.

My 'answer' is that the development and evolution of life involved related dynamic processes of generation. The same process operates over a length of a curve or an area to produce a simple or fundamental organic shape. Related to the sort of thing Darcy Thompson wrote about in On Growth and Form.

Most of these graphics are 1920x1080. Best to go fullscreen via your F11 key or the View>Fullscreen menu option. Many of them thrive in darkness far below the surface of consciousness; dim or turn off the lights. Many of them are best viewed by the light of the moon. There are a total of 165 images.

You can view the captured specimens at http://vispo.com/aleph/jim/index.htm?n— or you can view them in their native interactive habitat at http://vispo.com/aleph/an.htm . However, hunting beautiful ones requires a bit of practice. Like hunting butterflys, beauty, or the snark. Best to follow the instructions at bottom right.

A Hiding Place for My Dough
Sat 17 Dec 2011

"In those days, too, a man's pair of pants was never properly sewn if it lacked the akpa alaehe -- that small shallow pocket that rested right on the right side of his groin and in which the precious pennies and farthings took refuge from the risky banters. A man's pennies needed to be closer to his penis. A man guarded his pennies with his penis, with his life. Even when banks have promised to take over the risks of looking after a man's dough, he still feels uncomfortable that his pennies are far from the daily watch of his penis."

Re: query
Tue 20 Dec 2011

Hi Maria,

I've decided that the best intro to poetics isn't through theory so much (you mention Aristotle and the idea of a cultural studies antho, as examples) as through stylistics. Stylistics as you know is situated somewhere between literature and linguistics.

For third-year undergrad, Paul Simpson's Stylistics: A resource book for students (Routledge 2010) works very well, giving you lots of room to differ from the textbook while establishing a base of knowledge / ways of doing.

For more senior than third year, try The Language and Literature Reader edited by Ronald Carter and Peter Stockwell (Routledge 2008).

If you still want to preserve a connection to theory, try The Routledge Language and Cultural Theory Reader edited by Lucy Burke, Tony Crowley and Alan Girvin (Routledge 2000) if it's still in print.

I could go on for a long time and get quite excited about this thread.

And may your threads me forever red, Maria --

Louis

New book from Shearsman

Wed 21 Dec 2011

Maxine Chernoff WithoutPublished January 2012. Paperback, 86pp, 8.5x5.5ins, £8.95 / $15 ISBN 9781848611962 [Download a sample PDF from this book here.]The series of poems in Maxine Chernoff's Without are elegiac brushstrokes, each somewhat feathery and brushing in more than one direction, which creates tension and unexpected arrivals as well as departures: someone or something is missing. Parts of the world are wavering and parts have disappeared. What remains is treated in the subtle management of the lines without a hint of punctuation, which allows for "waves" of attention, as meaning rises and subsides. The emotional impact is powerful, as are the recognitions, such as "when darkness loses / its waiting mirror / and tuning forks / stand in for solace" and "readers asleep /mouthing their dreams / fears of whispering / become a creed / until life blurs / like any lens /that fails at attention." There's a sense of meaning passing with the solidity and darkness of time.

2 chapbooks and a book I've digitally self-published
Thu 22 Dec 2011

I wrote two chapbooks this year. I finished a book, for all intents and purposes, this year. Having not found a home for any of them, I decided rather than let them linger on my hard drive, I would just put them on Scribd and attempt to just release them digitally, for free, and hopefully people would read them and enjoy them. I (like many others), lost my job this year and so this was the most affordable way for me to self-publish. Beyond that, people can print them out (8.5x11) if they want physical copies, download them, or just read them on Scribd, so there's flexibility. I do hope people will take the time to read them and, if they feel so compelled, contact me if for no other reason than to offer their thoughts & criticisms.

I sail. I swim to you. I know the water. [chapbook]:

What is Left [book]:

Longinus' on great writing, wordsworth's preface, abc of reading & a few don'ts from an imagisteby pound, a selection from stein's lectures in america, spring and all by williams, first surrealist manifesto by breton, cesaire on negritude, fanon selections, celan's meridian speech, lorca's in search of duende, fitterman and place's notes on conceptualisms...I'm thinking of mostly fully formed books or authors in general. id throw in a stein lecture like poetry & grammar

& a couple of interviews, such as ashbery & jose lezama lima (in u of cali press 'selections') oharas personism , a jonathan skinner editorial, a bernstein, a cage, hejinian from language of inquiry marianne moores letter exchange with ford re naming a car; spicer on mars tho i resist the idea in a sense of an anthology - many lit courses just put a selection of novels on the course & the students are expected to read 1 a week - & buy them but in australia at least, its relatively rare for a book of poetry or book of poetics to be put on a course

i think its partly that on one level we think we have to convert the students rather than have a higher expectation

& that we have to give them a comprehensive range rather than 10-12 things - but we can range out from those things

& that we cant expect them to spend the $ - but they do for every other subject - & what a boon to poetry sales, whereas with fiction its prob barely noticed (& there can be things like 'overnight loan' copies in the library) thats a kind of general rant!

but im sure wed all be interested to hear what u come up with

Apostasy and Deconstruction
Tue 27 Dec 2011

"Derrida and Siddhartha" was originally released as a Stoning the Devil piece in 2009. Eventually, an interesting argument accrued to it in the comments box. When transplanted to As/Is, another interesting argument developed at a subtle tangent to the first in the As/Is comments section. The whole of the piece and the two edited arguments is here:

above/ground press 2012 subscriptions + update on forthcoming titles,
Wed 28 Dec 2011

Hey, above/ground press enthusiasts! This is a notice to see who might be interested in subscribing to our 2012 annual subscriptions, $50 (in the United States, $50 US; $75 international) for everything above/ground press makes from now until the end of 2012. Can you believe, 2012 marks nineteen years above/ground?

There are a whole bunch of publications in the works for 2012, including new publications by Rae Armantrout, derek beaulieu, Sarah Mangold, j/j hastain, Kathryn MacLeod, Allison Grayhurst, Lars Palm, Fenn Stewart, kemeny babineau, rob mclennan, a collaboration by Andrew Burke + Phil Hall, and plenty of others. How is it youve stayed away for so long?

You can either send a cheque (payable to rob mclennan) at (new address!) 402 McLeod Street #3, Ottawa ON K2P 1A5 or drop the money on my recently-acquired Paypal button (www.robmclennan.blogspot.com)

And keep checking author and publication updates on the above/ground pressblog as well, including recent new interviews with Dennis Cooley and Camille Martin, a tribute to Robert Kroetsch, and the online appearance of Ross Brighton's above/ground press chapbook as a free pdf as part of the Dusie Kollektiv 5, as well as the occasional online reissue of a number of above/ground press poem broadsides, with recent and forthcoming appearances by Stephanie Bolster, Marilyn Irwin, Amanda Earl and Jamie Bradley.

Re: query

Wed 28 Dec 2011

Dear Maria,

I think that a good intro. to poetics should include something from Roman Jakobson. I've taught graduate classes on linguistics and literature which have highlighted his work and they have been successful. Since I teach at an art school now [with no graduate degrees], I am revising this course into a "linguistics and the arts" course, in which Jakobson will be a prominent source. If you look at the paperback edition of his collected essays on Language and Literature [Harvard Univ. Press], you will find fascinating essays on "Questions of Literary Theory" that treats things like Futurism, Dada, Russian formalism, as well as potentially poetic things like aphasia.

You will also find essays on the grammar of poetry, which treat the poetry of grammar as well. This section treats some Russian modernists, as well as analyses of Baudulaire, Shakespeare, Yeats, Turgenev,as well as "subliminal verbal patterning in poetry."

There is also a collection of essays devoted to Russian modernists [poets, Pasternak, and critics], as well as a section of essays devoted to "semiotic vistas." Here we get Jakobson's take on translation issues; semiotics; the relationship between musicology & linguistics; film, and the relation between visual and auditory signs; as well as an essay on 'William Blake and other poet-painters.'

My experience has been that sophisticated students will become enthralled by Jakobson, as I and my students have.

I think that a course that introduces students to Stein, Cage, Ashbery, Spicer, et al., should also introduce them to Jakobson.

Cartys Poetry Journal, Issue 8, December 2011, Winter Editionby Thomas Carty on Wednesday, 28 December 2011 at 19:59 Late as always, the current issue 8 of Cartys Poetry Journal is now online. Featuring writers from the USA, Lithuania, Argentina, Turkey, India, South Africa and more as well as the usual suspects here in Ireland, the Journal has laso reached about 20% rhyming material, well on target for th 30% content target for the first three years. Of course non-rhyming and haiku are of importance to us, but a special focus of the magazine was to promote rhyming poetry for which our island is famous. Of note is the poems of 86 year old Hal O Leary, a US vet(eran!!!) who writes on war having faught it, akin to David Mc Donald in the last issue of the magazine. Final Call: Pavement Saw Chapbook deadline Sat. 12/31

Thu 29 Dec 2011

Pavement Saw Chapbook Contest: Postmark Deadline 12/31 (or midnight PCT for electronic submissions)

Submit electronically, save the hassle of printing out a manuscript and have your funds support poetry not the post office! Directly enter by using our website http://www.pavementsaw.org/pages/chapcontest.htm

$500 and 50 copies of the winning chapbook will be awarded to the winner. In addition to the prize winner, at least one other manuscript will be published under a standard royalty contract (author paid 10% of press run). Everyone is allowed to submit regardless of previous publication history. Every entrant will receive the equivalent cost of the entry fee in Pavement Saw Press titles.

Unlike many publishers whose collections are printed one copy at a time and therefore lack a large circulation, our chapbooks are published in a first edition of 400 copies plus overage. While chapbooks rarely receive exposure, ours have been reviewed in Poets and Writers, Publishers Weekly, The Georgia Review, Small Press Review and many others. Our previous winners have had subsequent full length books appear from a bevy of publishers including Ahsahta Press, Curbstone Press, Cleveland State University Press, Birds llc, Bear Star Press, BlazeVOX, Shearsman Books, Futurepoem Books, University of Georgia, Tupelo Press, Hanging Loose Press and so on.

Submit up to 32 pages of poetry. Include a signed cover letter with your name, address, phone number, e-mail, publication credits, a brief biography and the title of the chapbook. Include a cover page with your contact information and the chapbook title. Include a second page with the chapbook title only. Do not include your name on any pages inside the manuscript except for the first title page. No need for a contents page. All chapbooks are selected blindly / anonymously. Manuscripts will be considered until December 31st, 2011. Entry fee: $15 for US entries, $18 overseas, $21 electronic (world wide).

If you wish to submit electronically, send $21.00 via paypal to [redacted]. Then e-mail the manuscript as an attachment to the same address and we will send you an e-mail confirmation that your entry is all set. Electronic submissions need to be sent as PDF files or as word (.doc or .docx) files. Other formats are not accepted. The extra cost is to cover the paypal fees as well as the time, labor, ink, and so on, to print out your manuscript. Or use our website http://www.pavementsaw.org/pages/chapcontest.htm

If you wish to send via regular mail, have your envelope postmarked by December 31st and accompany your manuscript with a check in the amount of $15.00 payable to Pavement Saw Press. All contributors to the contest will receive books, chapbooks and journals equal to, or more than, the entry fee. Add $3 (US) for other countries to cover the extra postal charge. Do not include an SASE for notification of results. Do not send the only copy of your work. All manuscripts are recycled and individual comments on the manuscripts cannot be made. This year the editor will be the judge and, as it should be, he promises not to chose former students, former or potential sexual partners, press interns, or people that can make him famous. A decision will be reached in March. Entries should be sent to our address at the bottom of the page.

Roundup Redux + Poetry Project New Year's Day Marathon Reading @ St. Mark's Church

Poetry Project New Year's Day Marathon Reading @ St. Mark's Church

Â
Sunday, January 1, 2012
3:00 pm

There are three things to consider when the New Yearâ€™s Day Poetry Marathon sweeps you into its gracefully uncouth embrace â€” what it is, what it was, and who you will be when itâ€™s over. An untamed gathering of the heartâ€™s secret, wild nobility â€” over 140 poets together revealing not just that a better life could exist, but that it already does, sexy and wise, rancorous and sweet, big hearted and mad as hell. An avenging engine of resistance and eager vehicle of the nascent year. The Marathon measures its success through insurrectionist reframings of the universe, an in-it-together courage that crafts a community out of the riot of lineages and traditions we all emerge from. This collective effort also helps fund as many as 85 additional events every year â€” not to mention The Poetry Project Newsletter, The Recluse and legendary workshops. Itâ€™s our largest fundraiser of the year, and arguably the most inspired ongoing literary event in the city. Read more about â€œthe Marathonâ€ here. The 38th Annual New Yearâ€™s Day Marathon Benefit will feature over 140 Poets & Performers:

am revamping my contemp Am poetry (which used to be chronological) to include ecopoetry, innovative women's poetry, queer theory poetry (which I need to bone up on--no pun intended), spiritual poetry, poetry of disability, & so on--thanks to the conf at Columbia a few yrs ago & talks with Tim Peterson. So I am surrounded by books & winnowing this down is going to be a neat trick or a messy one. This is only tangentially related to what you asked about, Maria, but thought I'd mention it, as people give you wonderful suggestions & you decide which to use. students don't read much these days...

for Carol Novack

http://www.alansondheim.org/blanking.mp4

I was working on this, shot with Foofwa d'Imobilite at Eyebeam, when I heard the news that Carol Novack had died. for many of us, this was unexpected and awful, as if the year couldn't end without just one more tragedy. Foofwa and I had talked about our work together, earlier, about issues of pain, wounding, death; I think this piece, made at the time, is all I could do, I speak through image and sound, these words already lost, resting in peace

thank you Foofwa and Jamie and Jackson at Eyebeam

Call for work

Thu 29 Dec 2011

I'm looking for poets and fiction writers who reside in Chicago to send me work for an upcoming issue of PoetsArtists.

The call is here: http://poetsandartists.com/the-chicago-issue/

Also here:

PoetsArtists invites poets and fiction writers who reside/work in the Chicago area to submit work to our Chicago issue. Send your work along with a short bio to William Allegrezza ([redacted]), the guest editor for literary submissions. Please attach your work as a doc., .txt, .docx, or .rtf file and put CHICAGO in the subject line. If we are interested in publishing your work, we will contact you for a photograph of yourself and for you to approve the layout. (Please note that you do not need to write about Chicago, just live/work in the area.)

Unlikely Stories: Episode IV approaches!

Fri 30 Dec 2011

Hello wonderful readers,

We are very pleased to announce the hiring of two new staffers for /Unlikely Stories: Episode IV/:

Margret Crist is our new Music Director. Margret lives by the Frisco Bay and is training to become a mad scientist one day. One day, while absently reviewing whale songs, she found herself reviewing music for Stereokill.net. Sometimes, she writes haiku about how she hates her job.

The music department will not be greatly revamped from its format in /Unlikely 2.0/, however, Margret will be attending shows in the SF Bay Area and reviewing them at the Unlikely Blog (http://www.unlikelystories.org/blog/), in addition to her work selecting featured musical artists. To facilitate that, she'll have an /Unlikely/ press pass! This is something we find amusing.

We will be changing the way that we present political essays, and to facilitate that, we've hired Joseph Rose as Political Editor. Joseph Rose is a graduate student studying Sociology at Georgia State University. He's into critical discourse analysis and cultural studies. He is a spouse, a parent, and a news junkie. Joseph believes that our current socio-political system is so thoroughly broken that desperate action is needed from all sectors of society, and that civil disobedience, radical self-expression, and other forms of socially condemned behavior are necessary to improve humanity's condition. He joined /Unlikely Stories/ in order to work with the literary/artistic community in promoting social change. We shall send him a press pass as well, just to see if it gets him kicked out of Occupy General Assemblies.

Meanwhile, the videos from the Lafayette, Louisiana read for 100 Thousand Poets for Change and the Nov. 4th Unlikely read in Lafayette at Cité des Arts are up at http://www.youtube.com/user/JonathanPenton. Videos for the Nov. 6th Unlikely read in New Orleans at the Maple Leaf are forthcoming. Jonathan Penton is working on the new global site for 100 Thousand Poets for Change (http://www.100tpc.org/) <http://www.100tpc.org/>, and getting ready to accept submissions for his feature in the 2012 issue of /Big Bridge/ <http://www.bigbridge.org/> (http://www.bigbridge.org/): /Cuyahoga Burning/, on current Ohio literature. Watch this space!

Gabriel Ricard is continuing to post awesome book reviews at the Unlikely Blog, and when /Unlikely Stories: Episode IV/ launches, he'll be doing an in-depth feature on artist and vocalist Jessicka Addams.

Our target release date for the first issue of /Unlikely Stories: Episode IV/ is March 1st. Before then, we'll need a new Art Director, who will handle visual art and film submissions. Interested? Write to [redacted] <mailto:[redacted]>.

Kisses,
Jonathan

Carol Novack 2/19/48 - 12/29/11 and call for work
Fri 30 Dec 2011

Carol Novack died of lung cancer yesterday, 12/29/11, at 8:55 pm. She was a genre-defying writer of lyrical and inventive work who brought together thousands of literary, visual, and musical artists from around the globe in collaboration and exploration as publisher of the wonderful Mad Hatters' Review. She was also my good friend, quite irreplaceable. The editors of the Mad Hatters' Review Blog would like to offer publication of tributes written to Carol or posted with Carol in mind at that website. Please contact acting publisher, Marc Vincenz, with queries at [redacted].

Happy New Year & the murmur and breathing

Sat 31 Dec 2011

the murmur and breathing

http://www.alansondheim.org/radhu.wav of something just outside the potential of a sphere caught in a mesmeric or ectoplasmic field...

i remember the sound, somewhat, a kind of murmuring from a vietnamese oboe, lowered in pitch, the over-recording transformed into a form of breathing, the whole becoming-an-animal like myself, a musing or shuffling, or a jostling, but of notes and spatial magnitudes of unbearable beauty

http://www.alansondheim.org/iamperfect.mp4

a rough patch or rough spot. something rough in the narrative.
uncompromising. something about perfect. i could hardly hear him. the storm...

i remember the cube with the voice announcing perfect, as if it were impossible to speak in the grey dawn, when only bandages held the limbs together, it might have been after sex, or after a war, or an overpowering examination, this untoward chanting of a mantra, i am perfect, i am perfect, when everything, in the cold grey dawn, spilled otherwise

There is a gap forming in how and by what means poetry is preserved. A large part of the gap involves America in relation to Europe, and online in relation to print. I believe these issues are going to become imposing, so I wrote a little piece about it here:

January 2012

January 2012 opened a new year with the smallest possible poem — the single line, the one-breath utterance, poetry reduced to its irreducible minimum. One hundred and sixty-nine messages moved through the list, and its most characteristic thread turned on the monostich, the poem that is only a line long, as if the room, itself shrunk to a fraction of its old size, had found a form that matched its condition. The month was an argument for the sufficiency of the very small.

The largest thread honored the one-line poem. Prompted by a new essay, the room took up the monostich — "the monostich (poem with one line)" — and traded its examples from Dworkin and Ashbery and Padgett, the poem stripped to a single utterance, the least a poem can be and still be a poem. It was a fitting preoccupation for a diminished commons: a celebration of concentration over accumulation, of the perfect small thing over the sprawling large one, the aesthetic of less that the room had arrived at as much by circumstance as by choice.

The quarrel, quiet, was over sufficiency. Is a single line enough to be a poem, or merely a fragment wishing it were one; does concentration to a point constitute mastery or evasion? The room mostly sided with the small, gathering one-liners with evident delight — the monostich as proof that magnitude was never the measure, that a poem could hold its whole charge in a single line, the way the list still held its whole tradition in a few faithful voices.

Around it lay the year's first small keepings — a DVD of Eileen Myles and Hettie Jones and Susan Maurer reading, a note from a long-running little magazine, a poem for the new year, a member's work turning up in a Smolensk exhibition catalogue. The ordinary maintenance of a literary life resumed for another year, the room tending its notices and its archives, small and faithful in the January cold — the reading preserved on a disc, the little magazine still issuing, the member's work surfacing in a catalogue half a world away, each a small proof that the practice went on.

I have set January down exactly as the archive delivered it — the monostich celebrated, the argument over whether one line suffices, and the quiet first keepings of the year — because it was the month the shrunken list found the form that fit it, the poem reduced to a single line and pronounced enough. A room that will open its year gathering one-line poems and insisting that a single utterance can carry the whole charge of the art is a room that has made its peace with smallness and turned it into a creed: that concentration beats accumulation, that the least can be the most, and that a commons reduced to a few faithful voices is, like the monostich, not a fragment of something larger but a complete thing in itself.

January Yew
Mon 2 Jan 2012

Yew: A journal of innovative writing and images by women.

New Year, New Yew! The January issue of Yew is now online at yewjournal.com, showcasing poets Maureen Alsop, Grace Cavalieri and Carolina Ebeid and photographers Jeri Coppola, Katrina Pallop, Petra Whitaker and Venus Zarris. An auspicious beginning for 2012!

(Please note that the individual poet's pages are accessible under the "Home" pull down menu.)

Edited by designer Stephenie Foster and poet Carolyn Guinzio, *Yew*features three writers per month with visual art provided by the writers, their collaborators, other artists or the editors.

Please visit the site, and if you like what you find there, we would be grateful if you would help us by sharing news of this enterprise. Our Facebook page is here: https://www.facebook.com/pages/Yew-Journal/208944442504432

Thanks for your support, and we hope you enjoy this issue of Yew.

Tue 3 Jan 2012

Performance at EYEBEAM, Thursday - Saturday

Performance at EYEBEAM, Project Space, Thursday 5th - Saturday 7th If you're in the vicinity, drop in at Eyebeam, 540 West 21st Street, anytime between 1 and 6, where Eyebeam resident Alan Sondheim will be performing with Foofwa d'Imobilite, and guest performers Azure Carter, Mark Skwarek, and Chris Diasparra. The work ranges over a wide variety of technologies and concerns, ranging from endurance, weight, labor, and Second Life, to dance, choreography, acoustic performance, and mixed reality. This is an informal presentation, not a formal performance. It's free. We hope to see you there. (W. 21st Street near 11th Avenue)

Re: The humble monostich: Dworkin, Ashbery, Padgett, and more

Tue 3 Jan 2012

My favorite monostich is Sappho's, to Eros:

] you burn me [

In English, three short words; in Greek, just two.

In two words Sappho says it all about Eros....

Awesome!

Emergency INDEX: got 2011 performance documentation?

Tue 3 Jan 2012

Ugly Duckling Presse would like to introduce you to Emergency INDEX, an annual print publication documenting new performance in the words of its creators. Because performance transcends disciplinary boundaries, INDEX includes performances of every kind, from any genre, made anywhere in the world for any purpose.

Each document printed in INDEX will include a written description focused on the problems driving the work and the tactics used to address them, an image of the performance, and information about its dates, locations, and creators. An index of terms shared by the varied contributors will serve to connect geographically or stylistically far-flung works.

We are currently seeking documentation of performances created in 2011 to be published in the inaugural volume of INDEX in Spring 2012. We especially welcome political, commercial, scientific, therapeutic, or other works not typically documented as performance.

SUBMISSIONS MUST BE RECEIVED BY JANUARY 10TH AT 5PM EASTERN STANDARD TIME.

PARANORMAL POETICS #2: Debrah Morkun

Wed 4 Jan 2012

Debrah's grandfather was visited in 1966 on the coast of New Jersey by the much-studied extraterrestrial Tiny. She talks about how her grandfather's experience has worked through her dreams, and how she reenacts the dreams to encounter the poems. She also discusses in part two channeling the goddess Sophia, assigning songs by Madonna to the chakras, Projection machine, The Ida Pingala and more.

Go to this link: http://ParanormalPoetics.blogspot.com

Debrah Morkun's latest book THE IDA PINGALA is the number one best seller at Giovanni's Room Bookstore. The first time in the store's 35 year history that a book of poetry has become the number one best seller!

Please enjoy,

Poetry off the Page Symposium at University of Arizona Poetry Center

Wed 4 Jan 2012

Dear Friends,
The University of Arizona Poetry Center in Tucson is pleased to announce the upcoming symposium:

Poetry Off The Page
at the University of Arizona Poetry Center in Tucson
May 18 2012 - May 20 2012

More visceral than conceptual, this year’s symposium will gather poets for whom the stage and all of its demands, such as voice, projection, sound effects, lighting, body movement, acting, props, and image, all help create a new syntactic breadth for the poetic voice. These writers press into new territories in theater, song, film/video, dance, recitation, digital arts, sculpture, book arts and more. Many will be performing, in many cases, original never-seen-before work for the Poetry Center.

Performances, Classes, Panels, and Exhibits by:

Julie Carr & K.J. Holmes
Brent Cunningham
Johanna Drucker
Christine Hume
Douglas Kearney
Ander Monson
Julie Patton
Claudia Rankine & John Lucas
Cecilia Vicuña
Dan Waber
Joshua Marie Wilkinson
The Black Took Collective

And a screening featuring work by:

Kate Greenstreet
Deborah Poe
Sawako Nakayasu
Branding Downing
John Gallaher
Forrest Gander
Eula Biss & John Bresland

Events will take place at the Poetry Center, MOCA Tucson, and The Rogue Theatre. Art exhibits, art installations, and library exhibits will be in display concurrently with the symposium.

Registration, Tickets, and Lodging:

Register for Poetry Off the Page at https://www.uafoundation.org/netcommunity/sslpage.aspx?pid=990

Here are some descriptions of the many events that will take place over the four days:

Black Took Collective: Betraying Blackness A multi-media performance exploring the Black Took Collective’s interrogations of a black unconscious. Using written and aural language, sound, video, and images, the members of the collective enact poetries of inquiry that engage (and challenge) the psyche's making of racial consciousness by conceptualizing unconsciousness. In so doing, the members of BTC will expose their poetic processes and poetries-in-the-making, moving through poetries predicated on the conditions of blackness into meditations on the multiple factors that inspire our imaginations.

Christine Hume: Speech Talks Back An audio show that plays the revoicings, manipulations, arrangements, and displacements of recorded nonpoetic, nonliterary speech, in a performance of audio documentary poetics that refigures poetry's classic oral qualities. As the pieces play, Christine Hume will offer a voiceover of playful theoretical riffs and expanded contexts for understanding.

Christine Hume: Listening Stations Audience members will be invited to lie their heads on pillows imbedded with speakers playing original sonic versions of the work from Christine Hume's Shot, an investigation of night, insomnia and its inextricable dialogue with a selfhood that cannot settle down. From this position, poetry and music enters the mind of the listener, inviting revery, embodiment, terror and that relies on our capacities to "hear things" at night.

Julie Patton: See Here

Cecilia Vicuña: improvisatory oral performance & Gallery Talk Cecilia Vicuña presents her improvisatory oral performance in response to place and time and a walk and conversation with the artist through her site specific installation, specially created for the UA Poetry Center.

Dan Waber: OFF THE PAGENESS workshop A macro and a micro view of contemporary poetic production: Macro: Pecha Kucha Tucson (60 different ways of making poetry off the page today). A way to focus wide-ranging enthusiasms for unusual contemporary poetic practices. Micro: A look at the very fat line between the visual and the textual, in 31 examples. If you see the difference between

no fair princess and no fair

you understand that text has a signifying visual component. A poem on a page in a book is possibly purely textual. A painting of a figure is possibly purely visual. And between these two extremes lives a very wide expanse of exploration which blends the two. The examples we'll see and discuss were selected specifically for how difficult they are to pigeon-hole as either textual or visual.

Brent Cunningham: Poets Theater at The Rogue Theatre Brent Cunningham will present three short plays: The Event, Time's Machinery, and The Gunfight. These works tend to create strict limits and strict tasks for themselves, in one case blacking out a key piece of dramatic information, in another restricting itself to a common aphorism. In addition each play utilizes a different formal strategy for selecting and training its non- professional actors, frequently taking them directly from the audience. Audience members, get ready for your closeup...

K.J. Holmes and Julie Carr: Dance Performance “This is where we are (or take arms against a sea of troubles), an excerpt.” And: Workshop with Julie Carr and K.J. Holmes: Embodying Poetics Words are a map to the body's landscape. Movement writes us back to language. In this class we will play with tone, horizon, scale and transition through writing and movement patterns that will support and open up our senses and perceptions, finding a kinetic base for an embodied poetics.

Douglas Kearney: Talk and Reading with digital projections Through a combination of digital projections of "performative typography" and live performance, Douglas Kearney will present his explorations with MESS. Part talk and part reading, Kearney will mess with notions of poetic distortion, trope-mapping, raw-chopped samples and the carnally-ecstatic soul singer's wail.

Ander Monson: Into the Labyrinth: Guerrilla Writing Monson will guide writers in creating projects networked across multiple websites. Why do our poems have to be so self-contained? With the plethora of spaces that the web offers for users to post text or image or something in between (as in amazon reviews, craigslist ads, comment boards, personal websites, facebook walls, ebay listings, okcupid.com ads, etc.) why not, like the hackers or graffiti artists we are all at heart, make work that asks the reader to bounce from one site to another, even not neglecting the physical codex page that we still love deep inside. We will start projects that require-- nay, invite and compel--our readers to interact with the architecture of the web, essentially a labyrinth. Monson will present some of his own labyrinthine work in this direction and direct writers in writing and remaking these connections.

Claudia Rankine: The Situation series Video essays that speak into national and international moments in contemporary culture. As artists we wanted to address our visually saturated culture by bringing language to the images we consume. The series attempts to juxtaposition temporal memory alongside historical critique through the layering of sound and image. Each film runs close to five minutes.

Situation One is in dialogue with Zinedine Zidane.
Situation Two is in dialogue with 9/11.
Situation Three is in dialogue with Katrina.
Situation Five is in dialogue with Michelle Alexander's "The New Jim Crow".

Undocumented and Here is a new Situation in process that enters the continuing dialogue regarding what it means to be unauthorized and here.

Your Avatar and You Panel
Topics of discussion will include:

- how ebooks are changing or might change poetry publishing, how the internet has altered the traditional publication and distribution models for printed poetry books, what changes to print culture could mean for poets already allied with a long history of interrupting fixed ideas and identities.

- how the website presents one avatar for the self, in the way that books present another avatar for the self. Considering how self publishing means the self publishing the self's work, ideas about how we constantly publish the self …and how the whole authorial persona/avatar/self is self-publishing, a series of decisions (and accidents) in the self and how it is made public.

- what it means to be "published" today. What it means to be "well-published", how what all of us really want is to be read, how most people don't even necessarily want to be widely read, but want to be well read. ..opportunities created by digital outlets have all but solved the problem of how to be published, even how to be well-published (good design imparts credibility), but it has not solved the problem of how to be read, and well-read.

- The problem of distribution. How do I get my work read by the people who can most connect with it? Publishers that use digital technology to help make possible some analog things that current models of publishing don't really support and the problems of digital archiving and archiving the digital.

TRUCK in January, driven by Larissa Shmailo: RESOLUTION / REVOLUTION

Wed 4 Jan 2012

We start the New Year at RESOLUTION / REVOLUTION on Truck with an excerpt from Alfred Corn's Notes from a Child of Paradise (1984); these verses describe the 1968 upheavals at Columbia University and in Paris. Other featured poets this month include Michael T. Young, Annie Pluto, Sarah Sarai, and Larissa Shmailo

We also wish bon voyage to Alfred as he embarks upon his fellowship in Cambridge and new (eagerly awaited) translations of Rilke's Duino Elegies.

Upcoming talks by Jim Andrews in Vancouver and Seattle

Thu 5 Jan 2012

Usually if you experience my work at all, you experience it on my site http://vispo.com . Since 1996 vispo.com has been the thing I've been working on. Vispo.com is what happens to poetry when the 'page' becomes programmable and the borders between media and arts begin to dissolve in binary acid. And, for the past couple of years, I've been more interested in generative art. There's quite a range of types of work on vispo.com. I try not to repeat myself.

However, in January I'm giving three talks. Two in Vancouver BC and one in Seattle. If you're around, I hope you can make at least one of them. Here's info on the talks.

FRIDAY JAN 6, 8-10:30pm, HUGO HOUSE (SEATTLE) I'll be giving a short (10 min) talk at Hugo House in Seattle (1634 11th Ave) at an event organized by people involved in 'electronic literature'. I'm one of about ten people giving a short ten min presentation on a work of e-lit. The event is from 8 to 10:30. I'm up third. The other people presenting are Jason Nelson, John Cayley, Aaron Angello/Erin Costello, Ian Bogost, Marjorie Luesebrink, Mark Marino, Nick Montfort, Stephanie Strickland, Brian Kim Stefans, and Rob Wittig. There's also an exhibit of works of 'electronic literature' associated with this event. The exhibit is on display in the Washington Convention Center. Info at http://eliterature.org/2011/12/e-lit-exhibit-and-performance-at-mla-2012

WEDNESDAY JAN 11, 2:30-4:30 PM, SFU SURREY (VANCOUVER) I'll be giving a talk/presentation at SFU Surrey on quite a bit of my work. SFU Surrey is at 250 -13450 102 Avenue Surrey. The talk is in room 5380 (5th floor). The talk is sponsored by the School of Interactive Arts and Technology at SFU. Info at http://www.sfu.ca/siatclass/IAT805/January_11,_2012.html . See http://www.siat.sfu.ca/contact for directions on how to get to SFU Surrey.

SATURDAY JAN 14, 1-5 PM, SFU HARBOUR CENTER (VANCOUVER) I'll be presenting my most recent work, Aleph Null, to a group of professional JavaScript developers. This is part of an event featuring four other speakers. See http://supervanjs.eventbrite.com to reserve a ticket, for location info, and for info on the other speakers.

All the best of the new year to you!

AMAZING WEAPONS by Marie Buck
Thu 5 Jan 2012

Announcing the second title from Scary Topiary press:

AMAZING WEAPONS by Marie Buck

Buck explores vividly atypical lyric states like armament, dispassion, sarcasm, catamenia, redundancy, and debt in this dark new suite written from post-Fordist Detroit. Exquisite and blunt poems that nimbly chart the emotional life of an administered world.

"I anticipate complete and utter destruction"; "I charge an overdraft fee to each person I meet."

Silkscreened covers and hand-stitched binding. Cover design by Anne Muntges. Edition of 123. $10, postage paid.

Carol Novack 1948-2011
Fri 6 Jan 2012

Carol Novack: A Life Remembered

Carol Novack's work is populated by singular, breathtaking glimpses of the human condition, garnered from within a hair's breadth of the abyss. There are notions in her work of a primordial Übermensch, a shadowy figure hidden within "the collective experiment called mankind." She once said, "I rage against the dark forces within all of us, and the conformity that sickens me." Yet she approached her work and life with humor and verve. She embraced the absurd, the surreal and the mythological, rubbing them up against each other with her own unique rhythm and lyricism.

Proponents of conventional narrative sometimes criticized her visionary work for its lack of cohesion, a missing red thread; yet Carol was not an experimentalist for its own sake. She sought to discover a voice of reason within the hubbub of myths and neon road signs; along the way, she broke convention to re-discover, to re-emerge. In her own words: "I don't believe in rules. I take dictation from the flow of metaphors that surface from my unconscious as I write, think of my writing self as a metaphorist."

Of her 2010 book Giraffes in Hiding: The Mythical Memoirs of Carol Novak (Spuyten Duvyil), American Book Review observed: " Carol poses metafictional questions about who or what controls our narratives, and what kinds of power is or is not available through narrative...If only for an instant, the giraffes go into hiding, and the minnows emerge." PANK Journal enthused: "Whilst reading this unique book, I felt I was deep-sea diving, surrounded by exotic and breathtaking words-as-creatures, but mindful too of the murkiness, sinister and danger that also lurk both under and above water."

In an interview in the Canadian literary journal Metazen, she said she had reached "the overwhelming realization that one must create one's own meaning, the isolated self's confrontation of its own short-lived existence, the significance of being human and humane."

She spurned literary prizes, institutionalized creative writing programs and all forms of elitism, not only in the arts, but in society in general. In her twenty-year career as an appellate and trial lawyer, she gave voice to the silenced and marginalized. "Law," she said, "is a white rabbit that falls into black holes." She told Glasgow poet, Dee Sunshine in an interview, "The battles were almost always up very steep hills, and I mistrusted and disliked the 'justice' system for various reasons." Nonetheless, she took pride in her legal work, particularly her written motions and appellate briefs, and won an important federal constitutional action on behalf of visual artists (Bery v City of New York, et al.).

Born February 19, 1948, she grew up in Bell Harbor, New York, the single child of musicologist Saul Novack, Dean of Arts and Humanities at Queens College, and Phyllis Novack, librarian. Of her childhood, she once said, "I grew up with wonderful music permeating our house like a bouquet of luscious scents."

She completed her BA at the University of Rochester in East Asian Studies, moved to Sydney, Australia where she worked as an editor for the Australian Cosmopolitan, and began publishing her poetry during the seventies. A chapbook, Living Alone Without a Dictionary, was published by the University of Queensland Press, and her work was included in The Penguin Book of Australian Women Poets. She was the recipient of an Australian Council of the Arts writer's grant, remaining in Australia until 1977.

After a traveling in India and Europe, Carol returned to New York City where she received her J.D. from New York Law School in 1983. As an attorney, she worked first in the Criminal Appeals Bureau of the New York Legal Aid Society and later as a solo practitioner, championing the causes of artists and the underprivileged.

She went on to receive her master's degree in social work (community organizing), and teach lyrical fiction writing at The Women's Studio Center in NYC, returning to the serious pursuit of her own writing in 2004. "The muse just suddenly reared her jerky head again," she said.

From the mid-2000s, she began publishing her gender-bending hybrid metafiction- "her little aliens," as she called them-in many journals and anthologies, including: American Letters & Commentaries, Exquisite Corpse, La Petite Zine, LIT, Missippi Review, Notre Dame Review and Caketrain.

In 2005 she founded the Mad Hatters' Review, one of the first online journals with a true multimedia approach, marrying literature, film, art and music in an annual collage of some of the most explosive arts on the web. "I envisioned something real flashy and eccentric, experimental, collaborative, multicultural, playful and even meaningful, in the social change/progressive sense," she told the webzine Web Del Sol. "The name of our annual reflects our view of the world as essentially demented and nonsensical, too frequently a nightmare or 'non-dream' that needs to be exposed to the light for what it is, as well as what it is not. However, we, as artists, can also see another side of this world by voyaging into our own unique terrifying and joyful wonderlands and sharing our visions with others."

Carol curated the successful Mad Hatters' Review reading series at KGB Bar in New York, and performed herself at many venues in New York City and elsewhere. After re-settling in Asheville, North Carolina in 2010, she began a new reading series at The Black College Museum & Arts Center and founded a non-profit arts organization, MadHat, Inc., which now includes the Review; MadHat Press, a print publisher; and an artists retreat at her mountain home in Asheville.

As an editor, Carol was impressed by wordplay, originality, and writing with the courage to confront the political. She published and befriended many authors, poets, artists, and filmmakers including, Harold Jaffe, Andrei Codrescu, Hugh Fox, Alasdair Gray,George Szirtes and Raymond Federman. As a multimedia and spoken-word artist, she collaborated with Sheila E. Murphy and many others, recording a CD, Inventions II: Fictions, Fusions and Poems, with Don C. Meyers and Benjamin Rush Miller in 2009.

Carol's full-length book of hybrid works, metafictions, prose poems, rants, raves and whatnots, Giraffes in Hiding: The Mythical Memoirs of Carol Novack, was released by Spuyten Duyvil Press in 2010.

When Dee Sunshine asked Carol where she would chose to travel via time machine, she said, "Eons of light years from now, towards or back to a cosmos inhabited by wise sentient beings, including cats." And on life after death, she said: "Take away life, take away the breast and breath. Of course, I'm not expecting to meet 'God' before I die. I don't believe in religions or fairy tales except as metaphors of the human experience, the wish to be saved, the wish for happy endings, the absurd trials we set up for ourselves, the meaningful journeys, and always the rules, the rules, the rules. We're a very limited species."

Before her death, Carol was working several new projects, including the novella Felicia's Nose, in collaboration with Tom Bradley. Both Felicia's Nose and a collection of Carol's shorter works are anticipated for publication in the near future.

Mad Hat Arts, Inc., including Mad Hatters' Review, MadHat Press and the Asheville Artists and Writers' Little Mountain Retreat is expected to continue operations under the guidance of Carols' designated successors, with several books forthcoming, including, Primate Fox, the last collection of poetry by the late Hugh Fox.

No doubt Carol saw her own resemblance to the protagonist from her unfinished novella, Felicia's Nose: "Thus, Felicia is neither 'kind,' 'good,' 'haughty,' 'hot,' nor 'pugnacious.' Nor is she not. Like the rest of us, she is wending her way through the minefields of existence, too frequently with tight shoes that pinch her feet and will ultimately grow loose with age..."

Carol died peacefully with her friends at her bedside in the Elizabeth House Hospice in Flat Rock, North Carolina.

Re: The humble monostich: Dworkin, Ashbery, Padgett, and more

Sat 7 Jan 2012

Michael,

A lot of these Greek fragments come from later scholiasts who had often just basic grammatical problems with the quoted fragments. In the case of my Sappho fragment, Sappho uses a non-standard Lesbian dialectical form 'amme' [literally 'us'] instead of the standard Attic form ['me' = English 'me']. See Anne Carson's translations of Sappho's fragments [If Not, Winter, p. 38 (translation) and pp. 365f. (comments) on this particular fragment.

What makes this Sappho fragment so powerful, for me, is that the ambiguity between "you burn me" and "you burn us" seems to make Sappho's assertion not just a personal one but a universal one as well.

In any case, we don't know exactly what she meant, and we haven't known that for something like 2500 years. Nevertheless, these two words continue to ring in our ears, with, I think, enormous meaning, given their slight weight as just two very little words.

I mean, there is all of Freud in these two words! Right?

Can you say the same thing for this Alcaeus fragment, which you cite and which I haven't been able to locate in my Campbell edition of the Greek Lyric Poets, nor in my older Loeb editions?

Can you give a context for this Alcaeus passage?

Thanks,

George

Furniture Press Books: Publishing and Community Endeavors

Sun 8 Jan 2012

New Titles for 2012, and…<http://furniturepressbooks.com/2012/01/04/4-new-titles-for-2012-and/>

2011 was quite a time. Not only did we publish two exciting books, Joshua Ware's* Homage to Homage to Homage to Creeley*, which won the 2010 Furniture Press Poetry Prize, and Ryan Eckes' witty and sophisticated Old News, we also published, with the generous help and talent of Jodi Hoover, three chapbooks, Nicole Mauro's Tea Party Poems, a "fauxlaboration" between Emily Dickinson and Sarah Palin, Anne Ashbaugh's Mythopoesis, and Elizabeth Savage's Jane & Paige, or Sister Goose, Twenty-Four Women & Girls. And if there's not enough room in our basement! The Emergent Poets Series took off with excellent reception. We published Lily Herman's Better than some, not as good as some others. * *We even pulled off an impressive Cruellest Month Poetry & Performance Festival, our 6th, at the Towson Public Library, complemented with a community-wide "poem walk," in which local businesses displayed a range of poems (more than 150 by 23 poets) on their store fronts or within their premises. And then we participated in the global 100,000 Poets for Change event, hosting a day-long open reading (on 33rd street in Baltimore) of poets and aspiring writers from the city and county and recording more than 100 emergent poets for the Onthology/audio <http://onthologyaudio.blogspot.com/2011/10/global-feature-100000-poets-for-change.html> series.

As might be obvious, a publishing project such as Furniture Press Books is not merely about the production of quality books and textual objects. If not for our reading public, the necessary part of the poetry equation, there would be no press. This is why we hold the local, our communities and our neighborhoods, our citizens and neighbors, in the highest esteem. And we want to give the community a chance to collaborate in the meaning-making venture, not merely absorb it. Books are vehicles. The community is the machine. In 2012, we will continue the tradition of community involvement by furthering our relationships with the local and partner with new and exciting organizations.

The 7th Annuel Cruellest Month Poetry & Performance Festival (CruMoPoPerFest<http://crumopoperfest.blogspot.com/>) will be held at the Village Learning Place in Charles Village, Baltimore throughout the month of April (dates/performers/readers to come). This building is the site of an expansive free library, free workshops and events, and a newly established collection of local writers and presses. Partnering with a new organization means expanding our own aesthetics to those outside our small community, and open the way to further inter-community collaboration, which, in our hopes, will foster the talent of emergent as well as established poets.

And, so as not to overlook the overarching goal of the press, great books, we will be publishing a fine collection of poetry of manifest sorts: William Allegrezza and Garin Cycholl’s Aquinas and the Mississippi, Shabnam Piryaei’s A Method for Counting Days, Elizabeth Savage’s Grammar, Magus Magnus’ ReEchoes, and j. j. hastain’s myrrh to re all myth. The Emergent Poets Series will start off with Athena Pappas’ untitled collection. The details I will leave out. For now… But there will be more…

Call for subs to Versal 10: One week left!
Mon 9 Jan 2012

Hello friends,

We're now in our final week of submissions to Versal 10, and I am hoping you can help us spread the word.

Submissions are lower for us this year, but we've had no drop in the quality of those submissions (I'd say the average quality went up), and I'm really excited about the new issue. The drop in numbers, I'm guessing, is at least in part because of our new fee, but definitely because we can't show up in Duotrope search/open market results anymore, which is a bummer, and a circumstance that limits the reach of our call.

So I'm calling on our wider community, those of you who know Versal and like or even love Versal, for help in getting the word out the old way: word of mouth. Can you send the call (below) to the writers and artists you know, have published; post to your Facebook or Twitter or whatnot; forward to your students, colleagues, local listserve...

My many thanks, and looking forward to seeing and meeting many of you at AWP.

Best,
Megan

CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS: VERSAL 10

The Work Office (TWO) is hiring artists for work in the Bronx!
The Work Office (TWO) (Bronx NY)

The Work Office (TWO) is now hiring, in partnership with the Bronx River Art Center!

As part of the “Shifting Communities” exhibition series at the Bronx River Art Center (BRAC) gallery, TWO is hiring artists to create and present assignments with a focus on the Bronx, NY. Applications for TWO employment are being accepted through January 24, 2012. Visit www.theworkoffice.com or BRAC to apply.

The Work Office (TWO) is a multidisciplinary art project disguised as an employment agency. Informed by the Works Progress Administration (WPA) of the Great Depression in the 1930s, TWO is a gesture to “make work” for visual and performing artists, writers, and others by giving them simple, idea-based assignments that explore, document, and improve daily life in New York City. From a temporary, publicly accessible office installed at BRAC, TWO's administrators will hire employees, exhibit work, and distribute Depression-era wages at a Payday Party on February 10.

TWO is accepting applications for assignments that can be presented at BRAC’s gallery. The proposals should explore the relationship between art and civic life and respond to the unique history and/or nature of the Bronx through one of the following TWO assignments:

*build a bridge

*record an oral history with someone who lives or works in the Bronx

*design a poster to promote something *make a mixed CD related to places, people, or experiences in the Bronx

*catalog WPA structures in NY

*document a need for repairs

*give a concert for a plant *make a regional travel guide for a place, neighborhood, or phenomenon in the Bronx

*start an American tradition

*assign yourself

Applications and instructions are available on TWO's website—www.theworkoffice.com—and at BRAC's gallery. A TWO administrator will contact and interview applications of interest by January 26. Interviews will take place on January 27 and 28. Applications are evaluated based on the strength and clarity of the proposed response to one of our assignments, its relationship to the Bronx, and the practicality of realizing it within a week.

Hired employees must be able to complete their assignments during the workweek of February 2–8, drop off work at the BRAC gallery on February 9, and attend a public Payday Party on the evening of Friday, February 10. At the Payday Party, artist/employees will collect their workweek honoraria of $23.50 for their completed assignment, the weekly wage that artists received in the Federal One Project (the arts division of the WPA). The public will be invited to view the week's works and learn about the project. Completed assignments will be publicly exhibited at BRAC's gallery throughout the week of February 11–18 and on TWO's website.

Questions? Write TWO at: [redacted].

Applications must be submitted by 11:59 PM, January 24.

For more information about TWO, visit: www.theworkoffice.com.

BRAC is located @ Bronx Art Space

305 East 140th St. #1A, Bronx, NY 10454

For more information about BRAC, visit: www.bronxriverart.org. Website: http://www.theworkoffice.com

Quasar Saxophone Quartet // Jason Kao Hwang's Local Lingo

January 12, 2012
8PM at Roulette, in Downtown Brooklyn
509 Atlantic Ave (corner of Atlantic and 3rd Ave)
2, 3, 4, 5, C, G, D, M, N, R, B & Q trains and the LIRR

A night of engaging performances from The Canadian saxophone quartet Quasar and New York violinist/composer Jason Kao Hwang.

Canada's Quasar saxophone quartet makes their New York debut, performing two works by Canadian composers Jean-François Laporte (who custom-built unique woodwind instruments for Quasar's performance) and Luc Marcel, along with Iannis Xenakis' Xas, and Within Moments, by New York's tireless and innovative violinist/composer Jason Kao Hwang.

Hwang's own group Local Lingo (w/ Sang Won Park, William Parker, Thomas Buckner, & Joe McPhee) presents Voices of Our Own, featuring the poetry of Lester Afflick, Fay Chiang, Steve Dalachinsky, Patricia Spears Jones and Yuko Otomo.

Marc and Susan,
Thank you for telling us (me) more about Carol. I honestly didn't know that much about her. I knew her only from FB and several exchanges we had via email. She was an extraordinary person as you describe her, and I am fortunate to have known her even slightly.

Carol Novack: A Life Remembered

Carol Novack's work is populated by singular, breathtaking glimpses of the human condition, garnered from within a hair's breadth of the abyss. There are notions in her work of a primordial Übermensch, a shadowy figure hidden within "the collective experiment called mankind." She once said, "I rage against the dark forces within all of us, and the conformity that sickens me." Yet she approached her work and life with humor and verve. She embraced the absurd, the surreal and the mythological, rubbing them up against each other with her own unique rhythm and lyricism.

Proponents of conventional narrative sometimes criticized her visionary work for its lack of cohesion, a missing red thread; yet Carol was not an experimentalist for its own sake. She sought to discover a voice of reason within the hubbub of myths and neon road signs; along the way, she broke convention to re-discover, to re-emerge. In her own words: "I don't believe in rules. I take dictation from the flow of metaphors that surface from my unconscious as I write, think of my writing self as a metaphorist."

Of her 2010 book Giraffes in Hiding: The Mythical Memoirs of Carol Novak (Spuyten Duvyil), American Book Review observed: " Carol poses metafictional questions about who or what controls our narratives, and what kinds of power is or is not available through narrative...If only for an instant, the giraffes go into hiding, and the minnows emerge." PANK Journal enthused: "Whilst reading this unique book, I felt I was deep-sea diving, surrounded by exotic and breathtaking words-as-creatures, but mindful too of the murkiness, sinister and danger that also lurk both under and above water."

In an interview in the Canadian literary journal Metazen, she said she had reached "the overwhelming realization that one must create one's own meaning, the isolated self's confrontation of its own short-lived existence, the significance of being human and humane."

She spurned literary prizes, institutionalized creative writing programs and all forms of elitism, not only in the arts, but in society in general. In her twenty-year career as an appellate and trial lawyer, she gave voice to the silenced and marginalized. "Law," she said, "is a white rabbit that falls into black holes." She told Glasgow poet, Dee Sunshine in an interview, "The battles were almost always up very steep hills, and I mistrusted and disliked the 'justice' system for various reasons." Nonetheless, she took pride in her legal work, particularly her written motions and appellate briefs, and won an important federal constitutional action on behalf of visual artists (Bery v City of New York, et al.).

Born February 19, 1948, she grew up in Bell Harbor, New York, the single child of musicologist Saul Novack, Dean of Arts and Humanities at Queens College, and Phyllis Novack, librarian. Of her childhood, she once said, "I grew up with wonderful music permeating our house like a bouquet of luscious scents."

She completed her BA at the University of Rochester in East Asian Studies, moved to Sydney, Australia where she worked as an editor for the Australian Cosmopolitan, and began publishing her poetry during the seventies. A chapbook, Living Alone Without a Dictionary, was published by the University of Queensland Press, and her work was included in The Penguin Book of Australian Women Poets. She was the recipient of an Australian Council of the Arts writer's grant, remaining in Australia until 1977.

After a traveling in India and Europe, Carol returned to New York City where she received her J.D. from New York Law School in 1983. As an attorney, she worked first in the Criminal Appeals Bureau of the New York Legal Aid Society and later as a solo practitioner, championing the causes of artists and the underprivileged.

She went on to receive her master's degree in social work (community organizing), and teach lyrical fiction writing at The Women's Studio Center in NYC, returning to the serious pursuit of her own writing in 2004. "The muse just suddenly reared her jerky head again," she said.

From the mid-2000s, she began publishing her gender-bending hybrid metafiction- "her little aliens," as she called them-in many journals and anthologies, including: American Letters & Commentaries, Exquisite Corpse, La Petite Zine, LIT, Missippi Review, Notre Dame Review and Caketrain.

In 2005 she founded the Mad Hatters' Review, one of the first online journals with a true multimedia approach, marrying literature, film, art and music in an annual collage of some of the most explosive arts on the web. "I envisioned something real flashy and eccentric, experimental, collaborative, multicultural, playful and even meaningful, in the social change/progressive sense," she told the webzine Web Del Sol. "The name of our annual reflects our view of the world as essentially demented and nonsensical, too frequently a nightmare or 'non-dream' that needs to be exposed to the light for what it is, as well as what it is not. However, we, as artists, can also see another side of this world by voyaging into our own unique terrifying and joyful wonderlands and sharing our visions with others."

Carol curated the successful Mad Hatters' Review reading series at KGB Bar in New York, and performed herself at many venues in New York City and elsewhere. After re-settling in Asheville, North Carolina in 2010, she began a new reading series at The Black College Museum & Arts Center and founded a non-profit arts organization, MadHat, Inc., which now includes the Review; MadHat Press, a print publisher; and an artists retreat at her mountain home in Asheville.

As an editor, Carol was impressed by wordplay, originality, and writing with the courage to confront the political. She published and befriended many authors, poets, artists, and filmmakers including, Harold Jaffe, Andrei Codrescu, Hugh Fox, Alasdair Gray,George Szirtes and Raymond Federman. As a multimedia and spoken-word artist, she collaborated with Sheila E. Murphy and many others, recording a CD, Inventions II: Fictions, Fusions and Poems, with Don C. Meyers and Benjamin Rush Miller in 2009.

Carol's full-length book of hybrid works, metafictions, prose poems, rants, raves and whatnots, Giraffes in Hiding: The Mythical Memoirs of Carol Novack, was released by Spuyten Duyvil Press in 2010.

When Dee Sunshine asked Carol where she would chose to travel via time machine, she said, "Eons of light years from now, towards or back to a cosmos inhabited by wise sentient beings, including cats." And on life after death, she said: "Take away life, take away the breast and breath. Of course, I'm not expecting to meet 'God' before I die. I don't believe in religions or fairy tales except as metaphors of the human experience, the wish to be saved, the wish for happy endings, the absurd trials we set up for ourselves, the meaningful journeys, and always the rules, the rules, the rules. We're a very limited species."

Before her death, Carol was working several new projects, including the novella Felicia's Nose, in collaboration with Tom Bradley. Both Felicia's Nose and a collection of Carol's shorter works are anticipated for publication in the near future.

Mad Hat Arts, Inc., including Mad Hatters' Review, MadHat Press and the Asheville Artists and Writers' Little Mountain Retreat is expected to continue operations under the guidance of Carols' designated successors, with several books forthcoming, including, Primate Fox, the last collection of poetry by the late Hugh Fox.

No doubt Carol saw her own resemblance to the protagonist from her unfinished novella, Felicia's Nose: "Thus, Felicia is neither 'kind,' 'good,' 'haughty,' 'hot,' nor 'pugnacious.' Nor is she not. Like the rest of us, she is wending her way through the minefields of existence, too frequently with tight shoes that pinch her feet and will ultimately grow loose with age..."

Carol died peacefully with her friends at her bedside in the Elizabeth House Hospice in Flat Rock, North Carolina.

Tue 10 Jan 2012

Dear Friends,
The University of Arizona Poetry Center in Tucson is pleased to announce the upcoming symposium:

Poetry Off The Page
at the University of Arizona Poetry Center in Tucson
May 18 2012 - May 20 2012

More visceral than conceptual, this year’s symposium will gather poets for whom the stage and all of its demands, such as voice, projection, sound effects, lighting, body movement, acting, props, and image, all help create a new syntactic breadth for the poetic voice. These writers press into new territories in theater, song, film/video, dance, recitation, digital arts, sculpture, book arts and more. Many will be performing, in many cases, original never-seen-before work for the Poetry Center.

Performances, Classes, Panels, and Exhibits by:

Julie Carr & K.J. Holmes
Brent Cunningham
Johanna Drucker
Christine Hume
Douglas Kearney
Ander Monson
Julie Patton
Claudia Rankine & John Lucas
Cecilia Vicuña
Dan Waber
Joshua Marie Wilkinson
The Black Took Collective Amaranth Borsuk
Danielle Vogel

And a screening featuring work by:

Kate Greenstreet
Deborah Poe
Sawako Nakayasu
Branding Downing
John Gallaher
Forrest Gander
Eula Biss & John Bresland

Events will take place at the Poetry Center, MOCA Tucson, and The Rogue Theatre. Art exhibits, art installations, and library exhibits will be in display concurrently with the symposium.

Registration, Tickets, and Lodging:

Register for Poetry Off the Page at https://www.uafoundation.org/netcommunity/sslpage.aspx?pid=990

Here are some descriptions of the many events that will take place over the four days:

Black Took Collective: Betraying Blackness A multi-media performance exploring the Black Took Collective’s interrogations of a black unconscious. Using written and aural language, sound, video, and images, the members of the collective enact poetries of inquiry that engage (and challenge) the psyche's making of racial consciousness by conceptualizing unconsciousness. In so doing, the members of BTC will expose their poetic processes and poetries-in-the-making, moving through poetries predicated on the conditions of blackness into meditations on the multiple factors that inspire our imaginations.

Christine Hume: Speech Talks Back An audio show that plays the revoicings, manipulations, arrangements, and displacements of recorded nonpoetic, nonliterary speech, in a performance of audio documentary poetics that refigures poetry's classic oral qualities. As the pieces play, Christine Hume will offer a voiceover of playful theoretical riffs and expanded contexts for understanding.

Christine Hume: Listening Stations Audience members will be invited to lie their heads on pillows imbedded with speakers playing original sonic versions of the work from Christine Hume's Shot, an investigation of night, insomnia and its inextricable dialogue with a selfhood that cannot settle down. From this position, poetry and music enters the mind of the listener, inviting revery, embodiment, terror and that relies on our capacities to "hear things" at night.

Julie Patton: See Here

Cecilia Vicuña: improvisatory oral performance & Gallery Talk Cecilia Vicuña presents her improvisatory oral performance in response to place and time and a walk and conversation with the artist through her site specific installation, specially created for the UA Poetry Center.

Dan Waber: OFF THE PAGENESS workshop A macro and a micro view of contemporary poetic production: Macro: Pecha Kucha Tucson (60 different ways of making poetry off the page today). A way to focus wide-ranging enthusiasms for unusual contemporary poetic practices. Micro: A look at the very fat line between the visual and the textual, in 31 examples. If you see the difference between

no

and

you understand that text has a signifying visual component. A poem on a page in a book is possibly purely textual. A painting of a figure is possibly purely visual. And between these two extremes lives a very wide expanse of exploration which blends the two. The examples we'll see and discuss were selected specifically for how difficult they are to pigeon-hole as either textual or visual.

Brent Cunningham: Poets Theater at The Rogue Theatre Brent Cunningham will present three short plays: The Event, Time's Machinery, and The Gunfight. These works tend to create strict limits and strict tasks for themselves, in one case blacking out a key piece of dramatic information, in another restricting itself to a common aphorism. In addition each play utilizes a different formal strategy for selecting and training its non- professional actors, frequently taking them directly from the audience. Audience members, get ready for your closeup...

K.J. Holmes and Julie Carr: Dance Performance “This is where we are (or take arms against a sea of troubles), an excerpt.” And: Workshop with Julie Carr and K.J. Holmes: Embodying Poetics Words are a map to the body's landscape. Movement writes us back to language. In this class we will play with tone, horizon, scale and transition through writing and movement patterns that will support and open up our senses and perceptions, finding a kinetic base for an embodied poetics.

Douglas Kearney: Talk and Reading with digital projections Through a combination of digital projections of "performative typography" and live performance, Douglas Kearney will present his explorations with MESS. Part talk and part reading, Kearney will mess with notions of poetic distortion, trope-mapping, raw-chopped samples and the carnally-ecstatic soul singer's wail.

Ander Monson: Into the Labyrinth: Guerrilla Writing Monson will guide writers in creating projects networked across multiple websites. Why do our poems have to be so self-contained? With the plethora of spaces that the web offers for users to post text or image or something in between (as in amazon reviews, craigslist ads, comment boards, personal websites, facebook walls, ebay listings, okcupid.com ads, etc.) why not, like the hackers or graffiti artists we are all at heart, make work that asks the reader to bounce from one site to another, even not neglecting the physical codex page that we still love deep inside. We will start projects that require-- nay, invite and compel--our readers to interact with the architecture of the web, essentially a labyrinth. Monson will present some of his own labyrinthine work in this direction and direct writers in writing and remaking these connections.

Claudia Rankine: The Situation series Video essays that speak into national and international moments in contemporary culture. As artists we wanted to address our visually saturated culture by bringing language to the images we consume. The series attempts to juxtaposition temporal memory alongside historical critique through the layering of sound and image. Each film runs close to five minutes.

Situation One is in dialogue with Zinedine Zidane.
Situation Two is in dialogue with 9/11.
Situation Three is in dialogue with Katrina.
Situation Five is in dialogue with Michelle Alexander's "The New Jim Crow".

Undocumented and Here is a new Situation in process that enters the continuing dialogue regarding what it means to be unauthorized and here.

Your Avatar and You Panel
Topics of discussion will include:

- how ebooks are changing or might change poetry publishing, how the internet has altered the traditional publication and distribution models for printed poetry books, what changes to print culture could mean for poets already allied with a long history of interrupting fixed ideas and identities.

- how the website presents one avatar for the self, in the way that books present another avatar for the self. Considering how self publishing means the self publishing the self's work, ideas about how we constantly publish the self …and how the whole authorial persona/avatar/self is self-publishing, a series of decisions (and accidents) in the self and how it is made public.

- what it means to be "published" today. What it means to be "well-published", how what all of us really want is to be read, how most people don't even necessarily want to be widely read, but want to be well read. ..opportunities created by digital outlets have all but solved the problem of how to be published, even how to be well-published (good design imparts credibility), but it has not solved the problem of how to be read, and well-read.

- The problem of distribution. How do I get my work read by the people who can most connect with it? Publishers that use digital technology to help make possible some analog things that current models of publishing don't really support and the problems of digital archiving and archiving the digital.

Tullamore Rhymers Club ::: Relaunched in 2012!!!

Tue 10 Jan 2012

http://writingsinrhyme.com/Blog.php?Tullamore_Rhymers_Club_Official_Re-Launch

The Tullamore Rhymers Club were relauched tonight at the home of member Ken Hume. The Rhymers Club is named after the one founded in London at the end of the 19th Century, and its members hope for the promotion of poetry in the area, with particular intrest being poets who write in rhyme.

It is hoped to publish chap books of poetry from the writers group. Meetings are set to be monthly, with informal gatherings in between if needed. New members are encouraged to join who live in the area.

The group was initialy put together in 2010, but efforts to get writers group actually meeting failed for a variety of reasons, from work to venue issues. So as the first new year resolution actually kept, tonight we actually got it together!!!

A report on the night is at the link above. Selections from each writer can be read on past issues of Cartys Poetry Journal.

The frame-up trial of a Colombian poet
Thu 12 Jan 2012

The poet Angye Gaona has been charged formally by the Colombian government prosecutors. She is accused of "Rebellion" and "drug trafficking." The prosecutors have indicated that this frame-up trial will begin on 23 January 2012 at the special criminal court in Cartagena de Indias.

Angye Gaona is completely innocent of these charges! But she is considered a nuisance by the ultra-conservative government because her writings, interviews, and speeches have had a considerable influence on young Colombians. But "crime" and "drug trafficking," no, not at all!

Angye was unexpectedly arrested in January of last year without any written or formal charge, but was released on caution in July after much international pressure. And, now, once again, she is completely innocent of these frame-up charges and professional defamations!

Angye Gaona, in a number of articles and interviews, has passionately defended the cause of Colombian Indians, many of whom are being killed by paramilitary gangs on orders of the land developers. Angye has denounced these mass-killings as "genocide."

Also, Angye has defended the cause of working class people and their unions, who are constantly being repressed by the industrial conglomerates in Colombia, supported by the government and its Yankee sponsor. Indeed, she has denounced the present Colombian government as "a terrorist government."

If nothing is done, her trial may have a dramatic and tragic outcome. Indeed, Colombia is known for its dreadful political trials. At the moment some 7,000 political prisoners serve long sentences in terrible and overcrowded prisons.

Therefore, it is necessary to try to make known to the Colombian judiciary officials that Angye's case is being followed closely worldwide.

At the moment, it is important that the examining judge receives many letters, letters asking for a fair trial. If you want to write such a letter, the address is as follows ...

Al Sr. Juez de Conocimiento, Centro de Servicios Juzgado Único Penal del Circuito Especializado De Cartagena Adjunto Centro Barrio San Diego,
Calle De La Cruz No 9-42,
Antiguo Colegio Panamericano 2º Piso, Cartagena de Indias,
Colombia, South America

Also, you may send a copy of your letter, by e-mail or postal mail, to the ambassador or consul for Colombia in your own country, to increase the pressure.

For your information, I add two links on the case, one in Spanish and the other in French ...

February 28-March 4, 2012

Paige Ackerson-Kielys first collection, In No Ones Land, was chosen by DA Powell and published by Ahsahta Press in 2007. Her second book, My Love is a Dead Arctic Explorer (Ahsahta, 2012) began as a response to Admiral Richard E. Byrds memoir Alone, and is concerned with exploration, leave-taking and thwarted journeys. Paige has also published a chapbook of prose poems, Book About a Candle Burning in a Shed (above/ground 2011) and a letterpress art folio, This Landscape (Argos, 2010). Her poems have appeared widely in journals here and abroad, and have been translated into several languages. She is the recipient of numerous awards and fellowships for her work from such organizations as Poets & Writers, The Jentel Foundation, Vermont Arts Council and others.

Currently Paige lives in West Addison, Vermont where she is employed at a homeless shelter in a neighboring town. In her spare time she co-edits the poetry annual A Handsome Journal, a subsidiary of Black Ocean (Cambridge, MA.) She is working on a second novel, Made to Lie Down in Green Pastures, a third collection of poetry, and a lyrical comic book illustrated with medium format photographs and centered around the life of Kate Marsden, particularly her time spent in Siberian leper colonies. http://www.versefest.ca/poets/paige-ackerson-kiely/

Barry McKinnon was born in 1944 in Calgary Alberta, where he grew up. In 1965, after two years at Mount Royal College, he went to Sir George Williams University in Montreal and took poetry courses with Irving Layton. He graduated in 1967 with a B.A. degree. In 1969, he graduated with an M.A. from the University of British Columbia in Vancouver, and was hired that same year to teach English at the College of New Caledonia in Prince George where he has lived and worked ever since.

Barry McKinnons The the was nominated for the Governor Generals Award for poetry in 1080. Pulp Log was the winner of the Dorothy Livesay Poetry Award for the B.C. Book Prizes in 1991 and Arrhythmia was the winner of the bp Nichol Chapbook Award for the best chapbook published in Canada in English in 1994. His chapbook Surety Disappears was the runner-up for the bp Nichol Award in 2008.

McKinnon's latest trade collections:
In the Millennium. Vancouver: New Star, 2009.
The Centre: Poems 1970-2000. Vancouver: Talonbooks, 2004.

17.Â I Want To Make You Safe,Â Amy King
Litmus Press
â€œâ€¦a lack of hate to push death into.â€ Walt Whitman made us feel safe, calling that â€œdeath is great as life,â€ imparting that if we ever need him, we can find him. Amy Kingâ€™s love is just as wide, her breath more modern. InÂ I Want to Make You Safe, her best book yet, King is both warm and tactically evasive. She goes from conversational to abstract to personal with impressive fluidity, creating absorbing tones and swells in the course of a poem. Her methods will sometimes remind you of great poets like Rae Armantrout or Ange Mlinko, but runnier; she might also remind you of John Ashbery, who blurbs here, claiming King is â€œemerging into rather than out of the busyness of living.â€ He is right, and ultimately, any comparison is reductive. King wavers between obscurity and candor, creating a dissonance that is completely unique, that derives from a singularly productive and skeptical mix of unconditional love and ferocious social conscience: â€œNothing desired is property, / nothing given, given, we lie in glass sheds.â€ Her book is not a self-serving venture, but a collective surge towards â€œa lack of hate to push death into.â€ Read a reviewÂ here.

International Brecht Society Call for Papers

Modern Language Association Convention, Jan. 3-6, 2013, Boston, MA

Presenters must become MLA members by April 1, 2012 to participate in the IBS convention sessions (www.mla.org)

1) Brecht and Celan

The session aims to uncover the profound affinities between the two poets by challenging certain myths about them: Celan‘s poetry is inaccessible, far removed from concrete material and political space, residing instead in some realm of pure language; Brecht’s poetry is derivative of his dramas, overtly political and deliberately anti-aesthetical in language. Yet there is a common ground. Celan was a careful reader of Brecht’s poetry and much less hermetic and interested in constructs of pure language than one might assume, while there is in Brecht’s poetry a layer of subtle, poetic language. In addition to a linguistic and aesthetic kinship between Brecht and Celan, there are also significant thematic overlaps, such as the concept of kindness, the invocation of a non-metaphysical yet sacred presence of an “other,” etc.

Send 200 word abstracts by March 9 to: Marc Silberman ([redacted])

2) Brecht – Müller – Poetry – Language

Collaborative session sponsored by the IBS and MLA Division of 20th-Century German Literature

There are many connections between Bertolt Brecht and Heiner Müller: Müller emulated Brecht as a role model, he extended his work through adaptations or with alternative projects, and as a young lyric poet he also positioned himself vis-à-vis this mentor. We seek papers that examine how Müller’s poetry “translates” Brecht’s poetic language as a mode of textual expression / expansion. Brecht advised those who read his poetry that one should “not forget his main work was in the theater”; this holds equally for Müller. If we take the advice seriously, it suggests that as poets both were attracted to a spoken German that had for centuries drifted apart from the written language. Beyond thematic connections, here we suggest a new way to focus on Müller’s continuation of Brecht’s work.

i just like them as english ..

the 'you' in sappho cd now be (the larger) freud i suppose, as cd crazy

i dont know the meaning of the abbreviations campbell gives, tho he refers to Lobel

it is fragment 229 in greek lyrics 1, p325

it is part of the loeb classical library -

In the case of my Sappho fragment, Sappho uses a non-standard Lesbian dialectical form 'amme' [literally 'us'] instead of the standard Attic form ['me' = English 'me']. See Anne Carson's translations of Sappho's fragments [If Not, Winter, p. 38 (translation) and pp. 365f. (comments) on this particular fragment.*

My favorite monostich is Sappho's, to Eros:

] you burn me [

In English, three short words; in Greek, just two.

In two words Sappho says it all about Eros....

Why PennSound is going dark today
Wed 18 Jan 2012

UbuWeb will blackout on Weds, January 18th for 24 hours to Protest SOPA & PIPA. If SOPA passes, you can kiss UbuWeb goodbye. Remember, the web won't be this way forever. Donâ€™t bookmark. Download. Download. Download. Everything on Ubu is downloadable. Hard drives are cheap. Grab what you need. Donâ€™t trust the cloud. Stop SOPA. â€“ Kenneth Goldsmith

A Monster's Notes
Wed 18 Jan 2012

A Monster's Notes, Laurie Sheck's hybrid work centered around the un-named 'monster' in Mary Shelley's Frankenstein, is now available in paperback. Susan Howe: "In this expansive and minutely detailed narrative tour de force, Laurie Sheck has brilliantly revivified the Shelley-Clairmont circle with its attendant governesses, poets, monsters, explorers, overreachers, and spectral entities." Kimiko Hahn: "A bold and elegant revision of the classic tale...intellectually thrilling, stunningly original" (Bomb Magazine) Kirkus (starred review):Utterly astonishing and not to be missed."

Old News | For August
Even Abe Lincoln | Shutterbugs

Philip Brooks grew up in the Chicago suburb of Highland Park "as an aspiring melancholiac. To that end," he attended the Iowa Writers' Workshop as a fiction writer. Several of his stories appeared in Gordon Lish's "defunct but really swell" THE QUARTERLY, others in WILLOW SPRINGS and THE KENYON REVIEW. Some of his poems have appeared in recent postings at Elimae.com and Wigleaf.com. He lives in Ohio with his wife and son.

Spread the word. Far and wide,

William Slaughter

we are their teachers... they mimic and learn what we say and do...

Subject: Jazz Talmud

Dear all,

A quick word about my first poetry collection, "Jazz Talmud" published by Sheep Meadow Press last week.

It's now out and I'll be performing at the publication party/concert with a jazz/klez collective this Thursday in the East Village -

Info about the gig:
http://sixthstreetsynagogue.org/special-events/#jt011912,
and more info about the book is here: http://bit.ly/jtinff1.

Regards!

A lot of these Greek fragments come from later scholiasts who had often just basic grammatical problems with the quoted fragments. In the case of my Sappho fragment=2C Sappho uses a non-standard Lesbian *dialectical form 'amme' [literally 'us'] instead of the standard Attic form ['me' =3D English 'me']. See Anne Carson's translations of Sappho's fragments [If Not=2C Winter=2C p. 38 (translation) and pp. 365f. (comments) on this particular fragment.*

=20
What makes this Sappho fragment so powerful=2C for me=2C is that the ambiguity between "you burn me" and "you burn us" seems to make Sappho's assertion not just a personal one but a universal one as well.
=20
In any case=2C we don't know exactly what she meant=2C and we haven't known that for something like 2500 years. Nevertheless=2C these two words continue to ring in our ears=2C with=2C I think=2C enormous meaning=
=2C
given their slight weight as just two very little words.
=20
I mean=2C there is all of Freud in these two words! Right?
=20
Can you say the same thing for this Alcaeus fragment=2C which you cite and which I haven't been able to locate in my Campbell edition of the Greek Lyric Poets=2C nor in my older Loeb editions?
=20
Can you give a context for this Alcaeus passage?
=20
Thanks=2C

In English=2C three short words=3B in Greek=2C just two.

In two words Sappho says it all about Eros....

International Brecht Society Call for Papers

Modern Language Association Convention, Jan. 3-6, 2013, Boston, MA

Presenters must become MLA members by April 1, 2012 to participate in the IBS convention sessions (www.mla.org)

1) Brecht and Celan

The session aims to uncover the profound affinities between the two poets by challenging certain myths about them: Celan=91s poetry is inaccessible, far removed from concrete material and political space, residing instead in some realm of pure language; Brecht=92s poetry is derivative of his dramas, overtly political and deliberately anti-aesthetical in language. Yet there is a common ground. Celan was a careful reader of Brecht=92s poetry and muc= h
less hermetic and interested in constructs of pure language than one might assume, while there is in Brecht=92s poetry a layer of subtle, poetic language. In addition to a linguistic and aesthetic kinship between Brecht and Celan, there are also significant thematic overlaps, such as the concept of kindness, the invocation of a non-metaphysical yet sacred presence of an =93other,=94 etc.

Send 200 word abstracts by March 9 to: Marc Silberman ([redacted])

2) Brecht =96 M=FCller =96 Poetry =96 Language

Collaborative session sponsored by the IBS and MLA Division of 20th-Century German Literature

There are many connections between Bertolt Brecht and Heiner M=FCller: M=FC=
ller
emulated Brecht as a role model, he extended his work through adaptations or with alternative projects, and as a young lyric poet he also positioned himself vis-=E0-vis this mentor. We seek papers that examine how M=FCller= =92s poetry =93translates=94 Brecht=92s poetic language as a mode of textual expression / expansion. Brecht advised those who read his poetry that one should =93not forget his main work was in the theater=94; this holds equall= y

for M=FCller. If we take the advice seriously, it suggests that as poets both were attracted to a spoken German that had for centuries drifted apart from the written language. Beyond thematic connections, here we suggest a new way to focus on M=FCller=92s continuation of Brecht=92s work.

Four Examples of What I'm Talking About Poems by Philip Brooks

Old News | For August
Even Abe Lincoln | Shutterbugs

Philip Brooks grew up in the Chicago suburb of Highland Park "as an aspiring melancholiac. To that end," he attended the Iowa Writers' Workshop as a fiction writer. Several of his stories appeared in Gordon Lish's "defunct but really swell" THE QUARTERLY, others in WILLOW SPRINGS and THE KENYON REVIEW. Some of his poems have appeared in recent postings at Elimae.com and Wigleaf.com. He lives in Ohio with his wife and son.

Dear all,

A quick word about my first poetry collection, "Jazz Talmud" published by Sheep Meadow Press last week.

It's now out and I'll be performing at the publication party/concert with a jazz/klez collective this Thursday in the East Village -

Info about the gig:
http://sixthstreetsynagogue.org/special-events/#jt011912,
and more info about the book is here: http://bit.ly/jtinff1.

*A lot of these Greek fragments come from later scholiasts who had often just basic grammatical problems with the quoted fragments. In the case of my Sappho fragment=2C Sappho uses a non-standard Lesbian dialectical form 'amme' [literally 'us'] instead of the standard Attic form ['me' =3D English 'me']. See Anne Carson's translations of Sappho's fragments [If Not=2C Winter=2C p. 38 (translation) and pp. 365f. (comments) on this particular fragment.*
=20
What makes this Sappho fragment so powerful=2C for me=2C is that the ambiguity between "you burn me" and "you burn us" seems to make Sappho's assertion not just a personal one but a universal one as well.
=20
In any case=2C we don't know exactly what she meant=2C and we haven't known that for something like 2500 years. Nevertheless=2C these two words continue to ring in our ears=2C with=2C I think=2C enormous meaning=
=2C
given their slight weight as just two very little words.
=20
I mean=2C there is all of Freud in these two words! Right?
=20
Can you say the same thing for this Alcaeus fragment=2C which you cite and which I haven't been able to locate in my Campbell edition of the Greek Lyric Poets=2C nor in my older Loeb editions?
=20
Can you give a context for this Alcaeus passage?
=20
Thanks=2C

In English=2C three short words=3B in Greek=2C just two.

Modern Language Association Convention, Jan. 3-6, 2013, Boston, MA

Presenters must become MLA members by April 1, 2012 to participate in the IBS convention sessions (www.mla.org)

1) Brecht and Celan

The session aims to uncover the profound affinities between the two poets by challenging certain myths about them: Celan=91s poetry is inaccessible, far removed from concrete material and political space, residing instead in some realm of pure language; Brecht=92s poetry is derivative of his dramas, overtly political and deliberately anti-aesthetical in language. Yet there is a common ground. Celan was a careful reader of Brecht=92s poetry and muc= h less hermetic and interested in constructs of pure language than one might assume, while there is in Brecht=92s poetry a layer of subtle, poetic language. In addition to a linguistic and aesthetic kinship between Brecht and Celan, there are also significant thematic overlaps, such as the concept of kindness, the invocation of a non-metaphysical yet sacred presence of an =93other,=94 etc.

*Send 200 word abstracts by March 9 to: Marc Silberman ([redacted]
)*

2) Brecht =96 M=FCller =96 Poetry =96 Language

Collaborative session sponsored by the IBS and MLA Division of 20th-Century German Literature

*There are many connections between Bertolt Brecht and Heiner M=FCller: M=FC=
ller
emulated Brecht as a role model, he extended his work through adaptations or with alternative projects, and as a young lyric poet he also positioned* *himself vis-=E0-vis this mentor. We seek papers that examine how M=FCller= =92s poetry =93translates=94 Brecht=92s poetic language as a mode of textual expression / expansion. Brecht advised those who read his poetry that one should =93not forget his main work was in the theater=94; this holds equall= y

for M=FCller. If we take the advice seriously, it suggests that as poets both were attracted to a spoken German that had for centuries drifted apart from the written language. Beyond thematic connections, here we suggest a new way to focus on M=FCller=92s continuation of Brecht=92s work.*

INTERSECTIONS / CROSS SECTIONS 2012: OCCUPATIONS

Keynotes: Brian Holmes, Continental Drift and Sarah Sharma, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill

"Occupy but better yet, self manage…. The former option is basically passive—the latter is active and yields tasks and opportunities to contribute…. To occupy buildings, especially institutions like universities or media, isn't just a matter of call it, or tweet it, and they will come. It is a matter of go get them, inform them, inspire them, enlist them, empower them, and they will come." — Michael Albert, "Occupy to Self Manage"

The unfolding events at Occupy Wall Street and elsewhere present possibilities for new politics, and new forms of learning from, living with and engaging each other. Occupations are attempts to build the social compositions that are the precondition for action. They are the working through of a problem that politics-as-usual works to suppress—the massive exploitation that is capitalism and the emergence of politics adequate to address it. At this stage, occupations are the connection of people, ideas and machines—the cumulation of assemblages that might build something. What happens next depends on what is being built now. We invite graduate students from all related disciplines to submit proposals for academic, artistic and activist presentations and workshops that explore and otherwise critically engage occupations.

Please send a 250-word abstract by February 1 to [redacted] or [redacted]. Proposals should list
paper/panel title, name, institutional affiliation and contact details.

Workshop facilitators: Please provide a timeline indicating the duration and one or two general learning objectives of your session, along with space and technical requirements.

Artists: If sending creative works by email, please limit attachment size to 5 MB or less, or direct us to a URL. Include viewing instructions, comments and titles if applicable. If submitting creative works by post, please mail the proposal, a copy of the work and viewing instructions to the following address:

Leaving academia: is it possible?
Sun 22 Jan 2012

Hello, everyone,

I'm starting a last-minute job search very much in earnest, and would truly appreciate some back-channel advice about where I could go, including outside of academia, with 20+ years of rather stellar teaching experience. I've been at my current school as a "part time associate teaching professor" for 17 years. I've done academic service on the faculty senate, task force committees, as an MFA thesis adviser, as a B.A. program adviser, and as a mentor for novice online teachers. My student and peer evaluations have always been superior. Below is a brief list of the courses I created and teach/have taught; I alternate a few of them every other semester. I teach, and have published, both poetry and fiction, and am the recipient of a Fulbright Specialist grant, among other awards. Believe me, I am deeply appreciative of any time and advice that can be spared, and am of course absolutely willing to offer whatever help I can in return.

Sincerely,
Sharon Mesmer

Greetings, beautiful eyesores and frightful eyecandies! Please consider sending work to:

The first issue of /Unlikely Stories: Episode IV/ is slated for March 1st. Complete guidelines are at http://www.unlikelystories.org/mission.shtml

*/Cuyahoga Burning /at Big Bridge 2012 *will be an on-line anthology of current Ohio literature guest-edited by Jonathan Penton, part of the sixteenth issue of Big Bridge. (Big Bridge is an annual literary publication at http://www.bigbridge.org/ , edited by Michael Rothenberg.) /Cuyahoga Burning/ will feature poetry, fiction, creative non-fiction, literary criticism, and a few select visuals that meet one of the following criteria: 1. The author /currently /lives in Ohio, 2. The piece is obviously about Ohio, and Ohio is an important part of the piece's structure, or 3. if literary criticism, focuses on the work or author as a part of Ohio. Length is not a factor. File formats aren't an interesting topic of discussion. MLA guidelines are bad. Please send submissions to [redacted] before April 1st.

Please feel free to forward this announcement as you deem appropriate and wise.

ACTION POEM

1

On screen men discover that their mothers are imposters, that their worlds unreal.

Substitution is eerie.

(We discover this again.)

2

America has a lucid dream.

Shes falling from level to collapsing level in someone elses (whose?) terrain, through floorboards, off bridges, firing desperately.

Someone says, Dream bigger, handing us an RPG.

Wesleyan published Rae Armantrouts most recent poetry collection, Money Shot, in January of 2011. Armantrouts previous book, Versed (Wesleyan, 2009), received the Pulitzer Prize and the National Book Critics Circle Award. It was a finalist for the National Book Award. Next Life (Wesleyan, 2007), was chosen as one of the 100 Notable Books of 2007 by The New York Times. Other recent books include Collected Prose (Singing Horse, 2007), Up to Speed (Wesleyan, 2004), The Pretext (Green Integer, 2001), and Veil: New and Selected Poems (Wesleyan University Press, 2001). Her poems have been included in anthologies such as American Hybrid (Norton, 2009), Postmodern American Poetry: A Norton Anthology (1993), American Women Poets in the 21st Century: Where Language Meets the Lyric Tradition (Wesleyan, 2002), The Oxford Book of American Poetry (Oxford, 2006) and The Best American Poetry of 1988, 2001, 2002, 2004, 2007 and 2008. Armantrout received an award in poetry from the Foundation for Contemporary Arts in 2007 and a Guggenheim Fellowship in 2008. She is Professor of Poetry and Poetics at the University of California, San Diego. Writing in Poetry magazine, Ange Mlinko has said, I would trade the bulk of contemporary anecdotal free verse for more incisive, chilling poetry like Armantrouts. The poems gathered here are from a manuscript called Just Saying due out in 2013.

Rae Armantrout reads in Ottawa on Saturday, March 3, 2012 as part of Ottawas second annual VERSeFest poetry festival.

summary of the American avant-garde
Mon 23 Jan 2012

The poetry site modernpoetry.org.uk is being archived by the British Library. There's a piece on there, written by Great Works editor Peter Philpott, that seems like a somewhat official European pronouncement on the American poetry avant-garde:

http://modernpoetry.org.uk/pag2.html

Among those dealt with: myself, Ron Silliman, Kent Johnson, Reginald Shepherd, Peter Burger. And the issue at hand is not just the avant-garde but the "post" avant-garde: post-avant. It seems as definitive to me as anything written in the States...

Doggerel for the Masses by Kent Johnson

Mon 23 Jan 2012

In the 1980s Kathy Acker changed her name to Marjorie Lord and moved to Massapequa, NY. Her entire wardrobe consisted of outfits she'd lifted from her neighbors' clotheslines. Once, she forced a window in search of a burgundy pants suit. As part of her work release program, she reorganized the card catalogue at the local library, thus ensuring that each author was properly denominated.

Brion Gysin submitted poems under the name of "W.S. Merwin" to Antaeus, Poetry and the Paris review, all of which were accepted. The actual Merwin was so pleased by the work that he claimed it for his own, publishing the poems in his collection "Opening the Hand."

Willem de Kooning was an inveterate prank caller. (These were the days before caller ID.) Robert Rauschenberg, who famously could not take a joke, was one of his frequent targets, and Rauschenberg responded by making weekly trips to the Dutch master's house in East Hampton where he left bags of burning dog excrement on the porch.

Craig Dworkin might have said "Signing a text that one hasn't written will surely become less remarkable, and the next frontier of propriety will materialize when conceptual writing antagonizes the institutions of poetry by signing for others under texts that they have not written." Whether he meant it remains to be seen.

Just out from BlazeVox: Doggerel for the Masses: A Post-Scandal BlazeVox Booke by "Kent Johnson."

Donate to Woodland Pattern / Jan 28th Marathon Reading

hi poetics friends....please think about making a donation to woodland pattern book center in milwaukee, hands down one of the most AMAZING independent book stores in the country.

i'll be reading as part of the poetry marathon on january 28th and am looking for sponsors (as are many other wonderful poets). details below. for those living close to milwaukee, there are still a few late night reading slots left.

happy new year,
jen karmin

Woodland Pattern Book Center was founded as a non-profit organization in Milwaukee, Wisconsin's Riverwest neighborhood by Anne Kingsbury and Karl Gartung in 1979. The center houses a bookstore with over 25,000 small press titles, in addition to an art gallery where they present exhibitions, artist talks, readings, experimental films, concerts, and writing workshops.

http://www.woodlandpattern.org

Every year, on the last Saturday of January, over 125 poets, writers, and performers show their support for Woodland Pattern by participating in its Annual Poetry Marathon & Benefit. All proceeds raised from this event help Woodland Pattern continue its literary programming.

Woodland Pattern is a nonprofit organization, all donations are fully tax deductible. Individuals can now sponsor readers online through the new â€œpledge a readerâ€ giving form.

Pledges can be made here, both small and large.

Dana Teen Lomax's DISCLOSURE
Tue 24 Jan 2012

We'd like to bring to your attention: The latest Black Radish Books publication is Dana Teen Lomax's DISCLOSURE.

In the age of data mining and identity theft, Dana Teen Lomax's DISCLOSURE has been called "the new memoir." Recently anthologized in Against Expression: An Anthology of Cultural Writing (Northwestern University Press, 2011), this work offers a critical interrogation of 21st century American society that will challenge and amuse. Composed solely of the found documents of everyday life, DISCLOSURE is documentary poetics as never seen before.

Wed 25 Jan 2012

This piece is called "There is Nothing Outside the Net": Internet Affirmations in the Twenty-First Century. It is meant to follow up the Argotist piece "Composite Ideologies" and the floater/archive.org piece "Benjamin's Desktop." The subject is the theoretical underpinnings of the Net and Net Theory, as regards a chiasmus inherent in it between Romanticism, Modernism, Post-Modernism, and Deconstructionism. The piece is on Red Room:

new from above/ground press: Into the Blind World, by Barry McKinnon

Thu 26 Jan 2012

Into the Blind World
by Barry McKinnon
$4

> into the blind world
> the new life the essential tremor /refusal > of diminishment

I see in a double space conjunction & irony, that part blind Im made to see. it is not Dantes forest exactly. More so a sense

/a kind of open door is beginning /closing dark turning
- light I didnt expect.

old flesh renews, that the dim eye makes almost nothing matter. looks to what I find ahead.

I believe -

fear kept me speaking, or all would cease to be. so I spoke & the forest flew by & city lights distorted the cold stars of love and dark the beginning, a journey, a descent

the ghost of myself still alive, to address the infected world, to stall & cease advance, to the forest one fears to enter

sad desire/ without a mask to journey solely at night dark to the armies circling themselves the forest of knives invisible to those who never make it or recognize desire: one heart to pull the other retract - that the gap maintains its depth & distance to hell the hidden road & the river one dares

Afterword

This poem/fragment is based on a selection of lines sent to me by Arianwen Goronwy Roberts, a young student, poet, and artist who I jokingly referred to as Virgil one night when she soberly drove me home after a drunken literary event in the fall of 2009. I got Arianwen curious to read Dantes Divine Comedy & at some other drunken literary event asked her to send me the Dante lines or sections that she liked or stood out for whatever reason. This she did from an on-line translation (http://www.readprint.cm/work -7/inferno-dante-alighieri: The Divine Comedy: Hell - no translator given). Within those stanzas, verses, and narrative fragments I could see certain words/phrasings and images that prompted my own translation and improvised responses.

Ive made no dramatic attempt to describe sinners being dipped upside down in hot tar or include any of the other dark & menacing monsters contained in Dantes hell - or developed the relationship between Dante and Virgil, his poet/guide through hell. Instead, I took only words, phrases or images from Arianwens choices that I could then reconfigure without, I decided, any presumption to condense the narrative in Book One, or make any literal reference to snakes, lizards, and lions etc. (though somehow a lone fox trotted in).

The ending does not wholly contain the sanguine possibility Dante recognized in Canto xxxiv a return to the bright world- to look once more upon the stars. More so, I believe it when the poet Robert Creeley writes - the darkness surrounds us - yet within it we must live and experience whatever range we are given or decide.

When the writing stalled, I also took lines/ideas from Arianwens poem the forest of knives image, Mateusz Patrykas poem for his line the ghost of myself, Cecil Giscombes email - these days the sisters incoherent, unrequited, incomplete and Robert Creeleys line happy in hell sources that kept me going for awhile longer on the hidden road.

Otherwise, all else is missing.

It would be nice if you provided a summary of the link. It may even add to the number of us who click through to check it out.

I'm guilty of it too, but I DO at least tell folks a little bit about the link and why it is of interest to this particular group.

Just a blurb in the subject heading seems kind of rude to me.

new from above/ground press: rob mclennan's Sextet: six poems from Songs for little sleep,

Fri 27 Jan 2012

Sextet: six poems from Songs for little sleep
by rob mclennan
$4

Vancouver, specifically for Wayde Compton,

An uneasy mist
rises from this calligraphy of recollection
-- Mina Loy, The Lost Lunar Baedecker: Poems

What is this, beauty. Failed attempts at, something. Stated aims, a viaduct. Specific questions, abandoned. Linger. Exploding at the bedrock, crust. Backwash, a church. A Union, Prior. Streets. A common grave. Or is it, grace.

Impossibilities, suffer. Excised, but not divide, subtract. A family path of clothespins, buttons.

You aren't front lawn, sophisticate. Subsets claim. A learning made of kitchens, home. A Georgian demolition, sweep. A lack of rumoured slums.

Estate of longing, else. State, desired looks. Wood sliced into beam, a streetscape. What aren't we seeing.

If less abstracted, tell me. A community suffers, scattered. Brow to leaning brow.

Attempts are not, but statements. Lone survivor, speaks dead language. Restorations. Memory, buffers. Erodes into allotted land. A formless quilt, afforded. Question, its effects.

Mortgage is, but this. Your murdered laughter.

What are we, looking? The look of elsewhere, less. All that glitters. Little controversies, pass the stupid buck. Strathcona is, a name. The trees for city, same. The house but not, paved over. Why did you, did? Could further, else. A glaze.

Of, the shores. What oxidized. Go. Here, not only. Long, into the east.

Re: POETICS Digest poets looking for jobs
Fri 27 Jan 2012

A lot of poets seem to be looking for jobs now!

hi Sharon and all,

A lot of poets seem to be looking for jobs now!

I have resigned a tenured full time position (in the boonies in central Japan) as associate professor in order to be .....unemployed! But I need to start looking for another job in the near future after finishing these last few months of the school year (end of March in Japan).

Like Sharon, I have a lot of teaching experience and my courses have been very favorably evaluated. At my current university I created and taught courses in American poetry, American and British poetry, and comparative poetry (Japanese poetry and other countries' poetry), and also taught a graduate course in American poetry at a university in Tokyo (which I had to give up due to workload/commute though enjoyed it very much and they asked me to stay on). I also teach other courses in my current position at a national school of education including courses in pedagogy, and gender studies, and others for the American and British studies division.

I've just finished my seventh poetry collection of lineated, prose poetry and hybrid work so I'm looking for a poetry book publisher as well as a new job:-) if anybody would like to discuss either of those topics offlist, i'm available via janenakagawa at yahoo dot com.

Sharon, best of luck!

span-o (the small press action network - ottawa) presents:

the ottawa
small press book fair

spring 2012 edition
will be happening Saturday, June 30, 2012
in room 203 of the Jack Purcell Community Centre
(on Elgin, at 320 JackPurcell Lane).

contact rob at [redacted] to sign up for a table, etc.

"once upon a time, way way back in October 1994, rob mclennan & James Spyker invented a two-day event called the ottawa small press book fair, and held the first one at the National Archives of Canada..." Spyker moved to Toronto soon after our original event, but the fair continues, thanks in part to the help of generous volunteers, various writers and publishers, and the public for coming out to participate with alla their love and their dollars.

General info:
the ottawa small press book fair
noon to 5pm (opens at 11:00 for exhibitors)

admission free to the public.

$20 for exhibitors, full tables
$10 for half-tables
(payable to rob mclennan [NOTE NEW ADDRESS], c/o 402 McLeod St #3, Ottawa
ON K2P 1A6;

send by June 15 if you would like to appear in the exhibitor catalogue.

note: for the sake of increased demand, we are now offering half tables. for catalog, exhibitors should send name of press,address, email, web address, contact person, type of publications, list of publications (with price), if submissions are being considered & any other pertinent info, including upcoming ottawa-area events (if any).

& don't forget the pre-fair reading usually held the night before, info tba! also due to the increased demand for table space, exhibitors are asked to confirm far earlier than usual. i.e. -- before, say, the day of the fair.

the fair usually contains exhibitors with poetry books, novels,cookbooks, posters, t-shirts, graphic novels, comic books, magazines, scraps of paper, gum-ball machines with poems, 2x4s with text, etc, including (at previous events) Bywords, Dusty Owl, Chaudiere Books, above/ground press, Room 302 Books, The Puritan, The Ottawa Arts Review, Buschek Books, The Grunge Papers, Broken Jaw Press, BookThug, Proper Tales Press, and others. happens twice a year, founded in 1994 by rob mclennan & James Spyker. now run by rob mclennan thru span-o. questions, [redacted]

free things can be mailed for fair distribution to the same address. we are unable to sell things for folk who cant make it, sorry. also, always looking for volunteers to poster, move tables, that sort of thing. let meknow if anyone able to do anything. thanks. for more information, bother rob mclennan.if you're able/willing to distribute posters/fliers for the fair, send me an email at [redacted] and for information on this or other small press book fairs across Canada, be sure to check out http://www.smallpressbookfair.blogspot.com/

Sun 29 Jan 2012

Sounds like the makings of a sweet new school! Now if there's another recently resigned poet who happens to have a small building in a neighborhood that needs poetry (i.e., everywhere) we're good to go. Just got to remember the core economic rule of poetry:* one-by-one*. And also, of course, that the economy of poetry works like no other. In fact I think the new school should have a course in that radical and magical economics. Onward! Mairéad

150. Deborah A. Meadows job for poets, maybe?
Sun 29 Jan 2012

This position on my campus is usually held by someone with a strong writing/composition background. I copy and paste the notice I received here:

Dear Colleagues

The Office of Academic Programs has extended the internal search for a Director of the Learning Resource Center.

The Director reports to the Director of Academic Support and Learning Services in the Office of Academic Programs and works with learning resource center staff, academic departments, student affairs professionals, and community advisory committees to design, implement, lead, and evaluate a comprehensive successful, dynamic, and evolving high quality learning experience. The university encourages and supports opportunities for the Director to be engaged in teaching and scholarship related to student learning. The job is full time (but may include teaching), academic year or 12 month position. Compensation includes a stipend.

Detailed information about the position is available at http://academic.csupomona.edu/faculty/positions.aspx

Please encourage eligible faculty members to apply.

If you have any questions about the position, please contact Allison Douglas-Chicoye (tel.:[redacted], e-mail: [redacted]).

Thank you for your assistance.

Crossing 14th Street at Second Avenue, my friend John and I spot a Nathanâ€™s, famous for its Coney Island hotdogs, with a sign above the door â€“ â€œ2 for $2".
We go in and order the bargain meal . . .
sauerkraut and mustard no extra charge.

On the way out

â€œitâ€™s really disgusting.â€

The taste of hotdog still in my mouth,
I remember the film from high school biology about Pepsi Cola rotting your stomach, which, even after fifty years, kept me from having a soda.

FROM THE CANCER WARD

From the cancer ward
the poet sends love songs to those outside,
hoping to draw them in.
Fear, an unexpected visitor, bumps against his bed and makes the words flow faster while the doctors think

itâ€™s their medicine hooked into his writing arm thatâ€™s keeping him alive.

(Published: Poetry in Performance CCNY - Volume 39, 2011)
Â

EMPTY

On the beach where the touch of your hand once told me more about love than words could ever convey I press a conch shell to my ear and listen for instructions on how to live without you but all I hear is the hollow sound of wind trapped in an empty space.

(Published: Mobius, Volume XXIX - 2011)

NEW YEARâ€™S EVEÂ â€“ MEXICO CITY

It really isnâ€™t safe to wander after sundown, though half the post-siesta fun is finding dark addresses where chefs earn guidebook stars.
Tonight in Zona Rosa without a reservation, the divorce decree Iâ€™ve carried from New York still inside my purse, I let my teenage son lead me through the shadows beyond the crowded restaurants, my spirits falling faster than the ball in Times Square while I consider the merits of tacos to go.

At last, an open door: balloons and candles promise to restore my festive mood.
Not a spot for locals, this place is more a gathering of tribes.
Passports at the hat check, weâ€™re greeted in language approximating English.
The menu, too, invokes a taste of home â€“ sauces on the side. Midnight the waiters chime champagne!

Then, baile! A mariachi band appears; my son, to everyoneâ€™s delight, dances with a chair.

Babble, bubbles, fiesta in my brain,
I make divorce confetti and fling it in the air.
Hugs and kisses all around,
we say farewell as if weâ€™ll meet again, share balloons and candlelight,
the streets of Mexico City safe at night.

Publication Announcement: RECONFIGURATIONS / VOLUME FIVE / Disappearance

Sun 29 Jan 2012

Reconfigurations 5 is packed with dialogue & figuration, craft & critique, difference & innovation, song & vision. Forty-five poems (eight of which are image/texts), two fictions, one portfolio of thirty-three drawings, five articles/essays, and one wiki-conversation (with contributions from twenty-five writers/scholars). All submissions and works accepted for publication were reviewed by the editorial board and/or by other external reviewers.

Reconfigurations is an open-access, annual, independently managed, peer-reviewed journal for poetics and poetry & literature and culture that aims to build bridges among different communities.

Our work here turns upon generative contradictions. We are both outside of established institutional hierarchies of process and production (we are online in the form of a blog) and we are the epitome of such systems (we are peer-reviewed). We seek to gather and present both creative and scholarly texts—a judiciously selected diversity of genres/modes and forms of discourse. We exist as a dynamic space for readers and writers invested in tradition and innovation. Such dedication to both/and, such inclusion of opposition, is required by our project of reconfiguration.

Patty Oldenburg Archive: New York City Art World in the Sixties and Seventies

Mon 30 Jan 2012

We are pleased to offer for sale the Patty [Oldenburg] Mucha Archive

New York City Art World in the Sixties & Seventies

The Patty Mucha Archive features correspondence, manuscripts, artworks, documents and ephemera from a wild index of artists, poets, dancers and performers active in the era of Pop Art, Happenings, E.A.T., Yippies and Punk including: Olga Adorno, David Bradshaw, Joe Brainard, Gregory Corso, Jean Dupuy, Bob Dylan, Kenward Elmslie, Deborah Hay, Richard Hell, Jasper Johns, Ray Johnson, Ruth Kligman, Billy Klüver, Frosty Myers, Claes Oldenburg, Robert Rauschenberg, Clarice Rivers, Larry Rivers, Lucas Samaras, Carolee Schneemann and Andy Warhol to name a few.

Patty Mucha was married to Claes Oldenburg from 1960 to 1970. Not only was she Oldenburg's muse for his main performance ensemble but collaborator for all of his early sewn sculptures. Her contribution to the invention of soft sculpture was the result of quickly needing to produce large sculptures for Oldenburg's first exhibition at the Green Gallery in 1962. She appeared in his Ray Gun Theater, which they produced in 1962, and collaborated in sewing costumes and constructing objects and sets for his Happenings and installations. She appeared in Oldenburg films made by Rudy Wurlitzer and Robert Breer as well as in films by Jean Dupuy, Rudy Burckhardt, Andy Warhol and Red Grooms. She also participated in the Happenings of Jim Dine, Robert Whitman, Dick Higgins, Roy Lichtenstein, Andy Warhol, Alex Hay, Steve Paxton, Simone Forti, and Sally Gross.

The prospectus offering the archive may be viewed here:

Certain Circuits Magazine: February 2012 Issue + Call for Submissions (Collaborative and Cross-Genre Encouraged)

Tue 31 Jan 2012

*Certain Circuits Magazine *
www.certaincircuits.org

We are pleased to bring you the February 2012 issue. It's our one year anniversary, and we're thrilled to celebrate it with so many talented subscribers.

Founded by artists, Certain Circuits publishes poetry, experimental prose, art, and new media. We are especially interested in documenting multimedia collaborative work between artists.

To date we have published 196 posts from artists and collaborators in 13 online issues, and we received a Kickstarter Grant to print the 78 page perfect bound volume 1.1.

We have held readings, screenings, and exhibitions from our artists at the Rotunda, the Ellen Powell Tiberino Museum, National Mechanics, and Eris Temple Artspace.

We are fan supported, and we have received fiscal sponsorship for our first print issue from our partner organization, the Community Cultural Exchange (CCE).

Call for Submissions
*
*
Collaborative and cross genre submissions are encouraged.

We are currently accepting submissions for several online issues in 2012.

Accepted work will be eligible for Certain Circuits 2.1 slated to be published 2012 (pending funding).

For full guidelines, visit http://certaincircuits.tumblr.com/contributions.

Please note: It is impossible to get into one of our print issues without first being accepted as part of one of our multimedia issues online.

We will publish multimedia issues on a rolling basis.

We strongly encourage collaborative works between artists. Our next multimedia issues will publish MARCH 1 and APRIL 1.

*Note to all 2011 Contributors: *

All work that has been accepted in 2011 and published online is also under consideration to be printed in volume 2.1 (pending funding).

We must postpone our announcement of contributors to 2.1 while we work toward funding the issue.

We will supply all our contributors with an e-book of the issue, and we will conduct fundraising to supply contributors with a physical copy.

We will notify our 2011 contributors directly if work has been accepted for 2.1.

~~~~~Apostrophe, Odes, Ekphrasis, Oh My!

For as long as we can remember, poets have addressed the sun and moon, distant lovers and heroes, while also separately singing odes to the gods. The Surrealist painter Leonora Carrington once said, "We learn about the soul, and we have to listen to the soul." Just as some poets use music for inspiration, ekphrasis is not simply a description of an art work, but influenced by the art work and, sometimes, the artist's life. Carrington's own paintings evidence her own efforts towards querying the world she inhabited beyond the limits of perception; her life also reveals many lively, unconventional turns that inspire and provide unexpected permissions, something poets often require -- consciously or not.

In the course of this workshop, we will look at a the work and lives of a variety of artists, as well as poets, and consider how ekphrasis can extend beyond mere description of the visual arts but may also be combined with address (apostrophe) or incorporate the ode as a means to reflect appreciation, and content from, an artist's work.

Call for Submission: Lightning'd Press
Tue 31 Jan 2012

The first issue of Lightning'd Press will be published online at the end of February 2012. We are open for submissions. To get an idea of what kinds of work we want to publish in lieu of reading our archives, please read this essay by the poet Peter O'Leary regarding Apocalypticism in poetry (http://humanities.uchicago.edu/orgs/review/55-3%20OLeary.pdf). Our goal is to publish poems online that we feel speak to the ideas of Apocalypticism. At the end of 2012, we will be hand-sewing a limited edition printed version of the poems we have published online throughout the year. We would like to work towards being able to release print editions quarterly in the future because the book as art is what, in our opinion, will be the future incarnation of printed books in general.

For more information, and submission guidelines, please visit us at: http://lightningdpress.weebly.com

Thanks!

February 2012

200 messages · Tue 31 Jan 2012 – Tue 28 Feb 2012

February 2012 turned the small room toward the poem that answers something outside itself — an image, an affliction, a wound — and toward the possibility that a poem might be a kind of repair. Two hundred messages moved through the list, and its currents ran to ekphrasis and to healing: verse written to a painting, verse written from the far side of addiction, the visual poem that is itself a picture. The month treated poetry less as self-expression than as response, the art turned outward to meet a world that needed answering.

The largest thread went looking for the poem that speaks to a picture. A member asked the room for recommendations in ekphrasis, the ancient mode in which a poem takes a visual work as its occasion — the word laid alongside the image, each trying to complete what the other cannot say — and the responses came back personal, one poet recalling how "I began the poem at the Met as I was looking at" a particular painting, the verse born in the act of looking. Beside it ran an example of visual poetry with lettristic elements, the poem that dissolves the line between text and picture entirely, becoming the thing it might otherwise describe. The eye and the word kept trading places all month, the poem now answering a canvas, now turning into one.

The quarrel, gentler than most, was about what a poem is for. A thread on recovery poetry took up verse written in and about the struggle out of addiction — poetry as testimony and as tool, the made thing pressed into the service of a life being rebuilt — and the room considered, without cynicism, whether a poem could actually help, whether the art has any therapeutic power or only the appearance of one. It was the useful and the beautiful weighed against each other in the plainest human terms.

Around the edges the room kept its usual small keepings — a call for submissions, translations into Farsi, a performance announced at a media-arts space. The infrastructure of a literary life carried on beneath the two large questions, the ordinary business of a community that still, at two hundred voices, had somewhere to send its work and someone to read it.

I have set February down exactly as the archive delivered it — the search for ekphrasis, the visual poem that becomes its own image, and the poetry written out of recovery — because it was the month the list considered poetry as response and as repair: the poem that answers a painting, the poem that answers an addiction. A room that will spend its February wondering how a poem meets an image and whether a poem can help a person heal is a room testing the oldest hope about the art, that it is not merely self-regard set to music but a way of answering the world, and occasionally, in the answering, of mending something in it.

Subject: Recovery Poetry

I wonder if anyone on here knows of any folks who publish poetry specifically on the topic of recovery.

Thanks!

Here's a video of a talk I did
Tue 31 Jan 2012

JIM ANDREWS AT SFU VANCOUVER
http://surrey.sfu.ca/webcasts

Here's a video/webcast of a talk I did on 1/11/2012 in Vancouver Canada (where I now live) at Simon Fraser University. They invited me to give a 2 hour talk on my work for the people in the Interactive Arts and Technology program.

I'm the only person you can hear, in the video, which is too bad. And the video of the computer screen is sometimes out of joint with what I was actually doing, but I guess it's better than nothing.

You can easily register for free to view the talk.

Re: POETICS Digest - conference

Tue 31 Jan 2012

Let me add to Jane Nakagawa's resume that she has a volume out from Ahadada Books (her second? third?) and that we have PLENTY of copies available via http:www.ahadadabooks.com and SPD. In fact, if anyone would like to come to Tokyo to take a few copies off our hands (after first holding forth at the Writing Conference in Kyoto of course!)it would be a blessing as our storage space is limited due to our growing collection of marionettes and our roomy, and totally chic, Meikai International Puppet Theater which has also been written up in the Japan Times http://www.japantimes.co.jp/text/fl20111016x3.html. :-) Jess of Japan

MONIKA WEISS AND ALAN SONDHEIM: EYEBEAM PERFORMANCE THIS SATURDAY

Tue 31 Jan 2012

MONIKA WEISS AND ALAN SONDHEIM: EYEBEAM PERFORMANCE THIS SATURDAY

Alan Sondheim & Monika Weiss -- Enunciation
EYEBEAM Art + Technology Center, 540 W 21st St. New York Saturday, February 4, 1-6PM, Eyebeam Project Space http://eyebeam.org/events/alan-sondheim-monika-weiss [eyebeam.org]

Feb 04, 2012
Hours:
1:00PM-6:00PM
Free

Eyebeam Resident Alan Sondheim and transdiscipinary artist Monika Weiss will perform Enunciation, a dual live video projection and sound environment in the Eyebeam Project Space on Saturday, February 4, 1-6PM. Enunciation explores the notions of language, document, trace, mourning and history. Inhabiting a prolonged interval of time, Weiss and Sonfheim perform and record their respective process, which is both independent from one another and interconnected, an exchange tracing issues of mourning, lamentation, ecstasy, and the processes of writing. This experimental collaboration is a result of a longstanding friendship and intellectual exchange between the two New York artists.

February Yew
Wed 1 Feb 2012

Yew: A journal of innovative writing and images by women.

It’s February, and a beautiful new issue of Yew is now online, featuring visual poetry by Ruth Bavetta, new work from Anne Gorrick with photographs by Venus Zarris, and poems by Marcela Sulak featuring Laura Terry’s paintings. The cover image of the Monument of the People’s Heroes in Shanghai is by Rosebud Ben-Oni.

Readers of Yew may have noticed that our bio page is unconventional. Please note that further information about our writers and artists can be found on the “ISSUE DETAILS” page.

Edited by designer Stephenie Foster and poet Carolyn Guinzio, Yew features three writers per month with visual art provided by the writers, their collaborators, other artists or the editors.

Please visit the site, and if you like what you find there, we would be grateful if you would help us by sharing news of this enterprise. Our Facebook page is here: https://www.facebook.com/pages/Yew-Journal/208944442504432

Our complete guidelines are here: http://yewjournal.com/guidelines.html

Thanks for your support, and we hope you enjoy this issue of Yew.

all best,

Patti Smith featured in the Janet Hamill Archive

Wed 1 Feb 2012

Patti Smith featured in the Janet Hamill Archive

The Janet Hamill Archive offers a rare glimpse into the life and work of singer/songwriter, poet and artist Patti Smith as seen through the letters, manuscripts, photographs and documents collected by Janet Hamill during her and Patti's 40-year-long friendship.

In 2011 Patti was awarded the prestigious Polar Music Prize, considered the “Nobel Prize for Music.” The citation read: “By devoting her life to art in all its forms, Patti Smith has demonstrated how much rock’n’roll there is in poetry and how much poetry there is in rock’n’roll. Patti Smith is a Rimbaud with Marshall amps. She has transformed the way an entire generation looks, thinks and dreams. With her inimitable soul of an artist, Patti Smith proves over and over again that people have the power.”

To the best of our knowledge, this collection contains the largest and most important gathering of unique Patti Smith archival material ever to appear on the market and includes over a thousand pages of manuscripts and typescripts relating to her National Book Award-winning memoir "Just Kids"; over 200 pages of correspondence with Janet dating from 1970–2005; original photographs, artwork, posters, broadsides, ephemera and a wonderful early drawing by Patti of her and Janet, created in 1966. Additionally, the archive contains extensive material that documents the life and work of New York poet Janet Hamill.

Certain Circuits: Invitation to Print 2.1 Campaign
Wed 1 Feb 2012

We invite you to check out our recent video and appeal. This is your chance not only to pre-order our limited edition issue 2.1 but to help sponsor our contributing writers and artists through your support. We're even sending out pre-invitations to our April launch party. To watch our video, please click here: http://kck.st/ymOS0g

Founded by artists, Certain Circuits publishes poetry, experimental prose, art, and new media. We are especially interested in documenting multimedia collaborative and cross-genre work between artists.

It's our one year anniversary, and we're thrilled to celebrate it with our second print issue volume 2.1 featuring a limited edition run of artwork and texts from our nearly 200 multimedia posts. We are excited to announce that contributors from 2.1 hail from Korea, India, England, Ireland, and the United States. We have held readings, screenings, and exhibitions from our artists. We are fan supported, and we cannot continue without your support. Please consider a special reward: the chance to sponsor one of our artists by providing him or her with a contributors' copy, a tangible representation of the work that has only thus far been rendered digitally. Visit us at www.certaincircuits.org

For the link, please click here: http://kck.st/ymOS0g

We are proud to announce that our cover artist for 2.1 is Kevin Von Holtermann.

Here's a video/webcast of a talk I did on 1/11/2012 in Vancouver Canada (where I now live) at Simon Fraser University. They invited me to give a 2 hour talk on my work for the people in the Interactive Arts and Technology program.

I'm the only person you can hear, in the video, which is too bad. And the video of the computer screen is sometimes out of joint with what I was actually doing, but I guess it's better than nothing.

You can easily register for free to view the talk.

New Truck driver for February seeking contributions
Thu 2 Feb 2012

Wind-swept hair, the vast open road, infinite possibility.

Poets (like truckers)... they're the backbone of our economy.

What I'd like to do for my stint in the driver's seat of TRUCK for the month of February... is to step away from the stereotypes of (truck driving) and poetics... We all have an idea of what a truck driver's like, what a poet's like... but I'll bet there's so much more.

Everyone has the idea of a big, overweight, burly poet who'd really rough and raw, but I'm here to invite one and all within the tri-state area reach and beyond to climb up into the cab and prove that's not the case. I'm betting that many of you just wanted to be poets. You wanted the freedom. Or you lost your way and didn't know what else to do.

I read a recent survey that said a shortage of poets suggests an improving economy. But back years ago, when many of us hit the road, poets made up one of the largest occupations in the world. there were millions and millions of us. That's a lot of poets in mobile purgatory--a lot of people many others might never really see, except maybe through their rear-view mirror.

I invite you to add to this picture of poet culture. Our task is before us-- to portray "the integrity" of the poetic life.

Please send me something I can post. Help me ease the hours on end of driving toward nothing in the middle of nowhere. I want to read a lot of poetry.

Thanks.

G. E. Schwartz

Reminder: Bonnie MacAllister & Rachel Udell's show opens Saturday in NYC

Thu 2 Feb 2012

For the postcard and a map: http://www.artcat.com/exhibits/16091 et al Projects is pleased to announce a two person exhibition featuring work by the artists :

Bonnie MacAllister and Rachel Blythe Udell

JOUISSANCE :: PLAY

OPENING SATURDAY FEBRUARY 4th (7-10PM)

ON VIEW FEBRUARY 4th thru MARCH 17

JOUISSANCE :: PLAY presents a jubilee of countercultural relics, traditions, and taboo through this multi-disciplinary installation. The interrelated works of these artists revels in interconnectivity, and explores the ways in which we seek to expose the unnaturalness of human isolation.

Moving through the exhibition we are at first removed as foreign guests in this new environment but quickly become privy to and interact with its ever complex movements.

We at et al Projects are thrilled to be working with these artists and sincerely urge you to come experience these works in person.

et al Projects is currently located in the Harlem neighborhood of Manhattan and is easily accessible from the A/C/D/B lines right off the 145th Street stop. Right around the corner from City College and next door to Azucarera Gallery.

Gallery hours are Friday-Monday 10AM-6PM (and by appointment)

The Last Collaboration released by Furtherfield.org
Fri 3 Feb 2012

This is an experimental strategy for a poetry and mixed media book that tells a difficult story.

Furtherfield.org is a new media laboratory in London, UK with an active online presence. Part of its mission statement involves promoting social justice.

Furtherfield's announcement:

The Last Collaboration By Edward Picot

"The United States loses more American lives to patient safety incidents every six months than it did in the entire Vietnam War." Edward Picot introduces The Last Collaboration an art documentary book by artists and poets Martha Deed and Millie Niss.

This work is a construction of Millie’s hospital experiences in the last hospital she ever visited. The story is told through Millie’s notes, emails, the daily diary she sent home, her posts on her Sporkworld blog, her mother's log, and Millie's medical records.

These primary, often raw, documents are framed with medical notes and clinical guidelines as well as the outcomes of two NYS Department of Health investigations of Millie's care.

Millie wanted her story told. She wanted an autopsy performed if she died. Because of the autopsy, we have the story.

Boog City 70

70th. Yes, that's right, 70th issue.
Come advertise and share the experience, then stay for the magic.
Or something like that.

Deadlines

—Space Reservations-Email to reserve ad space

Fri. April 6-Ads in
Fri. April 15-Distribute

This is a quick note to see if you'd like to advertise and reach our readership. (Donations are also cool, way cool.)

We'll be distributing 2,250 copies of the issue throughout the East Village and other parts of lower Manhattan; Williamsburg and Greenpoint, Brooklyn; and at Boog City events.

Advertise your small press's newest publications, your own titles or upcoming readings, or maybe salute an author you feel people should be reading, with a few suggested books to buy. And musical acts, advertise your new albums, indie labels your new releases.

Take advantage of our indie discount ad rate. We are once again offering a 50% discount on our 1/8-page ads, cutting them from $80 to $40. The discount rate also applies to larger ads.

Subject: NEH Summer Institute - Contemporary African American Literature
To: [redacted]

Dear Colleagues,

It is with great pleasure that I announce the NEH Summer Institute, “Contemporary African American Literature,” which will take place at The Pennsylvania State University, University Park, Pennsylvania*, between July 8 and July 28, 2012. The *Africana Research Center  and the Department of African American Studies will co-host the institute. Institute faculty will include Trudier Harris, Maryemma Graham, Dana Williams, Howard Rambsy, Eve Dunbar, L.H. Stallings, Evie Shockley, and Greg Carr. Participation is supported by a generous grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. Participants receive a stipend to assist in defraying the cost of travel, food, lodging, books and supplies related to the institute. Transportation to off-site program activities related to the institute will be provided as part of the grant. We invite applications from those of you who wish to participate. Complete application information is available at http://arc.psu.edu/neh-institute/. The deadline for applications is March 1, 2012.

Enunciation explores the notions of language, document, trace, mourning and history. Inhabiting a prolonged interval of time, Weiss and Sonfheim perform and record their respective process, which is both independent from one another and interconnected, an exchange tracing issues of mourning, lamentation, ecstasy, and the processes of writing. This experimental collaboration is a result of a longstanding friendship and intellectual exchange between the two New York artists.*

The piece/pieces here (a single long poem, or 220 separate poems? both at once? each alternately?) sit (move) somewhere (sometime) between a series of otoacoustic emissions (hair cells in the cochlea of the inner ear, moving in response to waves generated in the fluid of the ear by two frequencies simultaneously, often create a third tone) and a series of deferred actions ("our psychic mechanism has come into being by a process of stratification: the material present in the form of memory traces being subjected from time to time to a rearrangement in accordance with fresh circumstances—to a retranscription," Sigmund Freud to Wilhelm Fleiss, December 6, 1896).

It/they wait for your inner/outer ear/voice to hear/remember/complete the next extension of their incompleteness.

46. Jim Andrews

Andrews in Paris at Sorbonne in June

Sun 5 Feb 2012

I'm a bit surprised and more than a little delighted that I'll be showing Aleph Null (http://vispo.com/aleph) in Paris at the Sorbonne at the &Now conference on innovative writing (http://andnowfestival.com) in June. And three kind scholars will be giving presentations on Aleph Null. Thanks to Leo Flores, Saemmer Alexandra, and Mark Marino for their interest in Aleph Null.

I'm delighted that my scholar friends and the people organizing the conference are interested in Aleph Null and in seeing it in a context of innovative writing; after all, it is a visual piece, is more evidently a work of programmerly visual art rather than of writing. But they are right that it's useful to see it in a writerly context. My site is a writing site; writing is what I've been doing for thirty years. The whole vispo.com site involves many approaches to writing and its involvement with other arts and media. And Aleph Null is indeed primarily a written thing; I wrote it in JavaScript. The only parts that weren't written in JavaScript or HTML 5 are the two logos, which I created in Photoshop, an image-making program. O ya and also the 192 screen shots and the icons thereof. But they're documentation of Aleph Null.

Poets are now also writers of zeroes and ones--but in the secret codes of art! You are the code breaker--some imagination required!

PANSY MAURER ALVAREZ JOE ROSS

Thursday February 9, 2012, 7:00 p.m.

Berkeley Books of Paris, 8 rue Casimir Delavigne, 75006 Paris, Métro Odéon

JANE COPE is a Midwestern transplant to Paris where she is currently at work on a narrative sequence.

KIT FRYATT lectures in English in Mater Dei Institute of Education, Dublin, and organizes the activities of the Irish Centre for Poetry Studies. Extracurricularly, she runs the Wurm im Apfel reading series and the associated Wurm Press. She is also the Curator for the Red Jasper Press in Dublin. Kit won the Stinging Fly prize for the best individual piece of writing in The Stinging Fly magazine in 2009. Her work has appeared in Poetry Ireland Review, The Shop, The Argotist Online, Digital Behemoth and elsewhere, and she has performed at many poetry festivals including Electric Picnic, the Flat Lake Festival and Hunters Moon Festival (Ireland).

PANSY MAURER-ALVAREZ has lived in Europe since 1973. Her poetry appears in anthologies & numerous magazines internationally. A chapbook, Ant-Small and Amorous, with French translations by Anne Talvaz, recently came out from Corrupt Press, Paris. Her other collections are: Dolores: The Alpine Years and When the Body Says It’s Leaving (both from Hanging Loose Press, Brooklyn); and an artist’s collaboration, Lovers Eternally Nearing (Editions Thomas Howeg, Zurich). She is a Contributing Editor for the British magazine Tears in the Fence.

JOE ROSS is the author of twelve books of poetry, most recently Wordlick (Green Integer Press, 2011) and Strata (Dusie Press, 2008). He has also published Fractured // Connections . . . , bilingual Italian/English (La Camera Verde Press) and EQUATIONS = equals (Green Integer Press, 2004). Former Literary Editor of the arts bi-monthly The Washington Review from 1991-1997, and co-founder of both the In Your Ear reading series in Washington, D.C. and the Beyond the Page reading series in San Diego, CA, he received a National Endowment for the Arts Fellowship Award for his poetry in 1997 and is the three time winner of the Gertrude Stein Poetry Award in 2003, 2005, and 2006. He presently resides in Paris.

Poem as Book Review in Paste Magazine
Tue 7 Feb 2012

Hello!

Some fun news on the poetry front:

A few weeks ago, Paste magazine asked me to review a new book about Phish shows -- Mr. Miner's Phish Thoughts: An Anthology By A Fan For The Fans. The kicker, Paste asked me to write it as a poem.

A book review as a poem. I was like, um...

One of the most difficult things I've ever written, but also the most exciting:
http://www.pastemagazine.com/articles/2012/02/mr-miners-phish-thoughts-an-anthology-by-a-fan-for.html

How'd I do?

can anyone help me with a quote from j s mill - better yet with a recent citation in a contemporary poetics context?

i cited him in my research by paraphrase - my source treated the original quote as one very well known & i tht id remember it but no .. my paraphrase is:

life-writing is seen; Indigenous life-writing is overseen im guessing the original might be - something is heard; something else is overheard??

have looked through lists of quotes by jsm to no avail, hoping someone else actually knows him

thanks

An Táin - An Irish legend retold again in rhyme

Wed 8 Feb 2012

As part of a project for the Cruachain Ai interpretive centre in Roscommon Ireland, a series of poetry videos / cinepoetry is in preparation, the first trial of which is now online at Youtube. The poem I wrote, and features a reading by Celtic heritage activist Carmel Diviney and music by Daniel O Connor.

As a beta video, there is a bit of interference in the reading, but what the hell. Tell me what you think of it...

The Puppet Theater and the Computer Screen and Poetry and Art

Wed 8 Feb 2012

Since establishing my international puppet theater here in Japan, I've begun to think seriously about the differences between the art that takes place on the computer screen and the art that takes place on and about the boards of my

International Puppet Theater. My puppets are marionettes--hand-carved--that stand around a foot and a half tall. They do exhibit that wonderful, balanced pre or post-human "grace" that Kleist speaks of in his essay on the puppet theater. When manipulated correctly they seem uncannily alive and earn that "presence" that Benjamin writes of. In fact I think that's where the difference lies: there is a human hand at work in puppetry animating the aesthetic object in real time. We see the dance, see/hear the poetry, smell the linden wood of the puppets, heightened to a higher degree because one step above the all-too-human poet/puppeteer. I would say that because of this, a masked, or marionettic poetry recitation in which the poet manipulates the aesthetic object, would be even superior to the poet her or himself giving a "live" reading before an audience. The computer screen factors out "presence" and flattens performance--substituting techne for the living, the improvisational and the inspired--and techne alone is not nearly enough. The puppet theater with its unique qualities, brings the uncanny--the "presence"-- back to poetry in the manner of performance it offers to the audience. Jess

FlashPoint Presents Carlo Parcelli's "THE CANAANITE GOSPEL: A Meditation on Empire"

Thu 9 Feb 2012

"THE CANAANITE GOSPEL: A Meditation on Empire"

Available from Country Valley Press/FlashPoint for $11.95

http://web.mac.com/countryvalley

email: [redacted] OR [redacted]

The Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John report two stories of what happened after Jesus of Nazareth died. One story went on to conquer the Western World. The Canaanite Gospel proclaims the rejected story -- in a multitude of voices low and high, imperial and insurrectionary -- Roman, Galilean, Jebusite, Greek -- familiar names among them, like Lazarus, Herod Antipas, Mary Magdala, Barabbas -- but telling most unfamiliar tales. Ferocious, hilarious, deeply and richly imagine, The Canaanite Gospel projects a world as new and undiscovered as it is also disturbingly recognizable.

“Culled from First Century Texts and drawn from dozens of biblical and secular sources, these 88 monologues tell a revisionist tale of what transpired in Judea, Easter Week/Passover 33 AD and beyond during the reign of the Roman Emperor Tiberius.

“In the classical argots of Petronius, Rabelais, Chaucer, Shakespeare, Lenny Bruce, Guy Ritchie, James Joyce, David Jones, Cockney and the world's myriad cryptolects, The Canaanite Gospel strips bare the New Testament canard of the Resurrection of Yeshu of Nazareth and pokes a stick in the eye of the Synoptic Gospels.”

Portions of THE CANAANITE GOSPEL appear in the current FlashPoint at http://www.flashpointmag.com as well as at http://www.carloparcelli.com/

Call for Featured Readers Long Island, NY

Thu 9 Feb 2012

I'm currently scheduling the rest of the Poets In Nassau 2012 schedule.

Featured readers have 25 minutes plus an encore after an open mic to read anything they choose to read.

The group is entirely voluntary and asks for no donations, so we cannot offer money to readers. However, readers can sell their books or really anything else they would like to sell.

I cannot offer you any sort of transportation either. I am willing to give you directions even though I have a terrible sense of direction, as does MapQuest, but I do love maps.

Please visit http://poetsinnassau.blogspot.com for the venues and dates. If you see a venue and a date with TBA that interests you, please email me.

Thanks,
Christina

Texts and Textiles Conference

Thu 9 Feb 2012

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Lucy Razzall <[redacted] <mailto:[redacted]>>
Date: Thu, Feb 9, 2012 at 3:50 PM
Subject: CFP: Texts and Textiles
To: [redacted] <mailto:[redacted]>

TEXTS AND TEXTILES

a conference organised by the Centre for Material Texts, University of Cambridge to be held 11-12 September 2012 at Jesus College, Cambridge

The shared origin of 'text' and 'textile' in the Latin 'texere', 'to weave', is a critical commonplace. Many of the terms we use to describe our interactions with words are derived from this common linguistic root, and numerous other expressions associated with reading and writing are drawn from the rich vocabulary of cloth. Textiles are one of the most ubiquitous components of material culture, and they are also integral to the material history of texts. Paper was originally made from cotton rags, and in many different cultural and historical settings texts come covered, wrapped, bound, or decorated with textiles. And across the domestic, public, religious, and political spheres, textiles are often the material forms in which texts are produced, consumed, and circulated.

In the light of the CMT's current research theme on 'the material text in material culture', we invite papers which consider any of the many dimensions of the relationship between texts and textiles. There are no historical, geographical, or disciplinary limitations. Areas to be addressed could include:

the shared language of texts and textiles - construction and deconstruction: to weave, spin, stitch, knit, stitch, suture, tie up or together, piece, tailor, gather, fashion, fabricate, mesh, trim, stretch, wrap, unfold, unpick - challenges and problem-solving: knots, tangles, holes; to lose the thread, iron out creases, unravel, cut, keep on tenterhooks - pieces and fragments: rags, patches, patchwork, scraps, strands, threads, rhapsodies, patterns, seams, loose ends, layers

the stuff of books
- bookbindings and covers
- incunabula - 'swaddling clothes'
- medieval girdle books, book chemises
- paper and paper-making
- cutting, sewing, and stitching in and on books
- scrapbooks, albums, collages
- book ribbons and bookmarks
- carpet pages
- textiles in illustrations, frontispieces, title pages

textile texts - needlework and words: tapestry, embroidery, samplers, quilts, hangings, carpets, banners - the needle and the pen - printed textiles - sacred/religious texts and textiles - love-tokens, keepsakes, charms, and relics - cushions, badges, handkerchiefs, flags, scarves, uniforms, livery and other textual/textile ephemera - professional and amateur work - relationships and networks of gifts, patronage, exchange - pattern books, sample books, costume books

Proposals of up to 25O words for 20-minute papers should be sent to Jason Scott-Warren ([redacted] <mailto:[redacted]>) and Lucy Razzall ([redacted] <mailto:[redacted]>) by 30 April 2012.

Re: The Puppet Theater and the Computer Screen and Poetry and Art

Fri 10 Feb 2012

Jesse,

A very interesting and relevant essay. But marionettes also have techne involved. The movement of human "like" objects pulled by strings follow laws of physics as geometry. Similar uncanny effects were created about twenty years ago when for the first time watched the street dance we called robotics before some of its movements became mainstream. I also experience Leger's paintings the same way.

For me your essay sustains the dichotomy between machine and human whereas the conflict the computer --therefore purely digital works- creates is between what we call "real" and virtual, in other words, object and image. In my view, digital art -as movies, photography, and even T.V.-- require an understand the nature of images.

Ciao,

Murat

My puppets are marionettes--hand-carved--that stand around a foot and a half tall. They do exhibit that wonderful, balanced pre or post-human "grace" that Kleist speaks of in his essay on the puppet theater. When manipulated correctly they seem uncannily alive and earn that "presence" that Benjamin writes of. In fact I think that's where the difference lies: there is a human hand at work in puppetry animating the aesthetic object in real time. We see the dance, see/hear the poetry, smell the linden wood of the puppets, heightened to a higher degree because one step above the all-too-human poet/puppeteer. I would say that because of this, a masked, or marionettic poetry recitation in which the poet manipulates the aesthetic object, would be even superior to the poet her or himself giving a "live" reading before an audience. The computer screen factors out "presence" and flattens performance--substituting techne for the living, the improvisational and the inspired--and techne alone is not nearly enough. The puppet theater with its unique qualities, brings the uncanny--the "presence"-- back to poetry in the manner of performance it offers to the audience. Jess*

Excerpts from Impossible Books
The Crawdad Cantos
by Stephen Brockwell $4

from The Evangelical Handbook for Engineers

A Primer for Drainage

What is the first article and axiom of our discipline?
That God made the Earth, the sun and moon, the stars and everything that lives in and on his chosen sphere.
Therefore, no calculus of planetary orbits disproves his dominion, no quantum mechanical uncertainty casts doubt on his eternity, unlike the life of a cat in a box.
The testimony of experts does not negate his Testament.
He is the universal pendulum, the platinum-iridium bar, the krypton-86 emission in a vacuum, the beam of light from which a tiny moment measures out our microcosmic span.
Among time and distances, he is the absolute constant,
the being that lets being be and every culvert, aqueduct, conduit, sluice, grate, trench and duct merely drains the ephemeral projection of his eternal tears.

The Tenants

These barren rooms dead poets lived in, the rooms that stank of fish and low tide, leaking gas and cordite; rooms for body baggers and touts pimping death in a black dress sheer as crepe and twice as toxic as the lavender cocktails they toast each other with once their mark has been selected and the dirty deed done, daily quota filled, ghost ships dispatched from a shadowy harbor, all the mates recruited for that voyage that never ends; rooms no one enters, not even the landlord, everything prearranged long before arrival, long after departure; nothing ever changes, not even the faces inside or the stains they leave behind on the walls.

Thanks Murat! That's a Compliment Coming from You--Jess

Sun 12 Feb 2012

A very interesting and relevant essay. But marionettes also have techne involved.

[Given: In the service of the "presence" of the unique performance of the marionettes, and the puppet master, albeit not in the same manner, and to the same degree as the "flattening" effect of the screen in computer art. This is one of Kleist's points. Techne--or virtuosity--is displaced by the physics (and the inevitability) of marionettic movement. Physics and Geometry are not in themselves techne, as you seem to hint, but are abstractions based on what we seem to understand of natural laws. On the other hand, the conscious working out of geometrical theorems or phyics equations, would allow the expression of various degrees of virtuosity, and would be occasions for a display of techne. The center of gravity of the puppet body is achieved through the construction of the marionette but is not in itself a display of techne--the inevitability of the sophisticated (albeit artless) movement of the marionette supersedes the skill (techne) of the puppet master, to ultimately achieve the uncanny. On the other hand, computer art dispenses with presence and the uncanny and relies on a presentation of skill and indeed is often accompanied by a narrative which emphasises and even enumerates the skills involved in its production. Q.E.D. Techne takes all.

Your example of the robotic dancer shows me that you are not following the argument. Look at Kleist's essay.]

You said: The movement of human "like" objects pulled by strings follow laws of physics as geometry.

Leger's paintings the same way. [I'm glad to see that you experience the uncanny in Leger.]

You said: For me your essay sustains the dichotomy between machine and human

[That was my point, and in fact I assert the superiority of the marionettic over computer art because it provides presence and its co-efficient uncanniness, whereas computer art only provides us with various displays and narratives concerning techne--skill--virtuosity.]

whereas the conflict the computer --therefore purely digital works- creates is between what we call "real" and virtual, in other words, object and image.

[That's another ball of wax, as they say.]

In my view, digital art -as movies, photography, and even T.V.-- require an understand the nature of images.

[Please clarify this: "require an understand"???]

Ciao,

Murat

I'm pleased that Iranian poet Rahi (Mohammad Mostaghimi) has translated another poem of mine into Farsi; this is the fifth poem of mine to appear in the Persian on his blog in Iran. The English and Persian of "My first hurricane" appear at the link below.

Re: Visual Poetry With Lettristic Elements from Jesse Glass
Sun 12 Feb 2012

Regarding the "Visual Poetry with Lettristic Elements," I join Murat with lots of questions. As a person closely associated with French Lettrism, my first question has to do with understanding the term Lettristic, which I have not seen used before (usually you are or you are not, but not "-ic"); I hope to hear more, perhaps back-channel, from Jesse Glass. That said, it should be stated that visual poetry has long since become an accepted form of the intermedia, blurring the lines between poetry and painting. The language of this poetry moved away from Roman alphabets via Lettrism and Hypergraphics, and often is no longer "readable" in a traditional sense. For some current examples in an allied movement, see Angelo Merante's work (recently via facebook postings). However, I am like Murat unsure what the Lettristic elements of Jesse's works are.

Rodrigo Toscano's "Deck of Deeds"

Sun 12 Feb 2012

I am happy to announce that my new book is just hot off the press.

Deck of Deeds

http://counterpathpress.org/deck-of-deedsrodrigo-toscano

Yrs,

Rodrigo Toscano

Toscanoâ€™s political satire composes its dramatis personae from a throng of refugees, drug addicts, collaborators, financiers, servants, sociolinguists, combatants, psychologists, colleagues, spies, and authors. The major and minor arcana in the divinatory art of our immediate future, they betray the dirty secret that our Republic of Letters is no sanctuary from the celebrity narcissism and predatory conduct of global finance capital. In these mordant portraits, Toscano takes no prisoners, aiming equally at â€œmotivational vocabularists" and lawmakers drunk â€œon ready-made anti-immigrant rhetoric,â€ as well as trust-fund poets whose â€œclass-erasing alibisâ€ fuel the cultureâ€™s bogus meritocracy.

â€”Roberto Tejada

Sparkly dark disco energyâ€”fracked out the back of a vision of individual agency spawned and stunted by the specialist bureaucracies of capital. Backroom politics, business travel, particle physics are cross-extracted here in mini-fables, jargons recharging jargons. An American-values flipbook, or a realism themepark that keeps bubble-nucleating itself in the tax loophole, the black hole, the motel bar, the soft lipid origin of life. Deck of Deeds catalogues our most secret value valves.

Re: Texts and Textiles Conference
Sun 12 Feb 2012

Maria,

The root of the word content (tent) also comes from the same place "tentere." In India, "tantra" ("weaving," "music") also means "content," pointing to the different concepts of content in the West and in the East. In the West, it is something *con*tained, limited. In the East, meaning is process, movement.

Ciao,

a conference organised by the Centre for Material Texts, University of Cambridge to be held 11-12 September 2012 at Jesus College, Cambridge

The shared origin of 'text' and 'textile' in the Latin 'texere', 'to weave', is a critical commonplace. Many of the terms we use to describe our interactions with words are derived from this common linguistic root, and numerous other expressions associated with reading and writing are drawn from the rich vocabulary of cloth. Textiles are one of the most ubiquitous components of material culture, and they are also integral to the material history of texts. Paper was originally made from cotton rags, and in many different cultural and historical settings texts come covered, wrapped, bound, or decorated with textiles. And across the domestic, public, religious, and political spheres, textiles are often the material forms in which texts are produced, consumed, and circulated.

In the light of the CMT's current research theme on 'the material text in material culture', we invite papers which consider any of the many dimensions of the relationship between texts and textiles. There are no historical, geographical, or disciplinary limitations. Areas to be addressed could include:

the shared language of texts and textiles - construction and deconstruction: to weave, spin, stitch, knit, stitch, suture, tie up or together, piece, tailor, gather, fashion, fabricate, mesh, trim, stretch, wrap, unfold, unpick - challenges and problem-solving: knots, tangles, holes; to lose the thread, iron out creases, unravel, cut, keep on tenterhooks - pieces and fragments: rags, patches, patchwork, scraps, strands, threads, rhapsodies, patterns, seams, loose ends, layers

the stuff of books
- bookbindings and covers
- incunabula - 'swaddling clothes'
- medieval girdle books, book chemises
- paper and paper-making
- cutting, sewing, and stitching in and on books
- scrapbooks, albums, collages
- book ribbons and bookmarks
- carpet pages
- textiles in illustrations, frontispieces, title pages

textile texts - needlework and words: tapestry, embroidery, samplers, quilts, hangings, carpets, banners - the needle and the pen - printed textiles - sacred/religious texts and textiles - love-tokens, keepsakes, charms, and relics - cushions, badges, handkerchiefs, flags, scarves, uniforms, livery and other textual/textile ephemera - professional and amateur work - relationships and networks of gifts, patronage, exchange - pattern books, sample books, costume books

New LRL e-editions from Sarah Mangold & Hugo García Manríquez

Sun 12 Feb 2012

LRL e-editions <http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/> is pleased to announce the publication of Hugo García Manríquez's Painting Is Finite<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/?page_id=64&Go=view> and Sarah Mangold's* I Meant To Be Transparent*<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/sarah-mangold-i-meant-to-be-transparent>
two books which, in taking their cues from other mediums, turn the language of the portrait inside out:

Painting Is Finite <http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/?page_id=64&Go=view> In Painting Is Finite<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/?page_id=64&Go=view>, Hugo García Manríquez traces the edge of elemental life via elemental form. First published in Spanish under the title, Los Materiales (Mexico City: Fonda Editorial Tierra Adentro, 2008), this volume presents Manríquez's first English-language collection. In these poems, memory is a verb: it "behaves in both directions / the result that it casts / the present, that is, mobility" so that "nothing that preceded you / has prepared you for the experience / 'the return of painting.'" In such a return, we confront the incommensurable as a material surface, likened here to the written: "history is the only matter excreted by / that which dies," and thus "Newspapers seek volunteers for the shadow on the front page." This poetry inhabits the edges as a vocation, urging us into relation with the materials.

I Meant To Be Transparent<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/sarah-mangold-i-meant-to-be-transparent> "It was more like an impressionist portrait than an identification photo" writes Sarah Mangold in I Meant To Be Transparent<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/sarah-mangold-i-meant-to-be-transparent>, a book woven through the writing of early 20th century literary innovator Dorthy Richardson and the contours of contemporary poetics.

Taking her title from a line in Robert Duncan's Ground Work, Mangold's attempted transparency slips original language between filmic jump cuts that mirror Richardson's own prose and a near pre-raphaelite interleaving of fore and backgound — bringing the silenced, the skirted, the sidelined into view. By troubling the implications of linguistic transparency, Mangold challenges the literary portrait in a world in which "men and women are taught from the beginning to speak "his"" and likewise suspending the space before "feeling fades into thought –" In this hovering between, Mangold brings into focus the woman at the edge of the party with "Lots of big big revolution behind my eyes" and the ways in which the failure to be see-through becomes it's own revelation.

FROM NOW ON, ALL PROFITS FROM THE SALE OF PRINT-ON-DEMAND BOOKS IN THIS SERIES WILL BE DONATED TO A DIFFERENT SMALL PRESS EACH YEAR. First up: Chax Press <http://www.chax.org/>. Denise Riley's Time Lived, Without Its Flow

Mon 13 Feb 2012

Now published:Denise Riley: Time Lived, Without Its FlowThis essay reflects on how perceptions of time may be altered after the sudden death of a child, and why inhabiting this sharply new temporality stops one’s habitual modes of telling. Neither tearful memoir nor testament of hope, the essay charts a vivid experience of such a suspended time and discovers an unsuspected intimacy between time and language. Although a life inside this ‘arrested’ time resists being described, it is neither exceptional or pathological; to outlive one’s child is historically common enough. But, because of this felt suspension of the usual flow of time which enables narration, it leaves few literary traces. Published by Capsule Editions as an 80-page pocket book, this is the first in a series of stand-alone literary essays by leading contemporary thinkers and writers.Order it here: http://capsuleeditions.com/denise-riley-time-lived-without-its-flow/£8 plus postage ISBN 978-0-9571395-0-3 About the author: Denise Riley is a poet and philosopher. Her non-fiction includes ‘Am I That Name?’: Feminism and the Category of ‘Women’ in History (Macmillan, 1988), The Words of Selves:

Identification, Solidarity, Irony (Stanford University Press, 2000), Impersonal Passion: Language as Affect (Duke University Press, 2005) and, with Jean-Jacques Lecercle, The Force of Language (Palgrave, 2004). Information on Larry Eigner/ Brooklyn Sublet

Hi all,

I am doing research on a biography of Larry Eigner. I am looking for anyone who might want to share stories or be interviewed who knew Eigner.

I am also looking for people to exchange ideas with -- specifically about how Eigner's work coincided with Hart Crane's and ee cummings, the Black Mountain Poets, and how Eigner's work did or did not inform so-called L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poetry.

If any one has any stories, articles, or thoughts to share - please backchannel me.

ALSO:

I am looking for someone to sublet my Greenpoint Brooklyn apartment for two weeks in late July-early August. It's a really nice (small) three bedroom with a yard across the street from Triple Canopy! It comes with two well behaved cats. Price very negotiable.

Mudlark/Clifford Hunt/Typewriter Poem
Tue 14 Feb 2012

New and On View: Mudlark Poster No. 99 (2012)

A Typewriter Poem by Clifford Hunt

Clifford Hunt's poem, "Oh Summer, Look," comes, he says, "out of my love of short works, old typewriters, and Courier font." For the last several years, he says, "I have been printing short poems in large Courier and placing them in the old Royal Typewriter that lives on our front porch." Several of Hunt's typewriter poems, including this one, have been published in the Half Moon Bay Review (California).

What strikes me about the poems, beyond their beauty, is their kind. If Walter Benjamin were alive and rewriting his famous essay, "Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction" (1936), in and for our age, the age of electronic reproduction, I have to think he would attach what he so rightly called "the aura" to "Oh Summer, Look," coming out of the old Royal typewriter on Clifford Hunt's front porch. Visual Poetry With Lettristic Elements from Jesse Glass

Dear all,
I am finalising my bachelorpaper on Visual Poetry. Definition, situation within literature and the arts and how to study it. And would welcome all supporting material of this thesis. I have found literature, Bohn & Dencker to corroborate the support of visual poetry into intermedia, but I have found also - especially within Dutch & French literature - voices that see it as a not serious 'spielerei'.
So all (yet un)published work to support an intermedial approach are very welcome. Perhaps via backchannel.
My paper will be in Dutch, but I would want to work on an English MA paper elaborating more in that topic and its modernist routs.
Thanks.

As a person closely associated with French Lettrism, my first question has to do with understanding the term Lettristic, which I have not seen used before (usually you are or you are not, but not "-ic"); I hope to hear more, perhaps back-channel, from Jesse Glass. That said, it should be stated that visual poetry has long since become an accepted form of the intermedia, blurring the lines between poetry and painting. The language of this poetry moved away from Roman alphabets via Lettrism and Hypergraphics, and often is no longer "readable" in a traditional sense.
For some current examples in an allied movement, see Angelo Merante's work (recently via facebook postings). However, I am like Murat unsure what the Lettristic elements of Jesse's works are.

Re: Thanks Murat! That's a Compliment Coming from You--Jess

Wed 15 Feb 2012

Jesse,

I had not read Kleist essay for many years, so I looked it up again. You are right. I misunderstood your direction. But, in the essay, Kleist talks of the soul involved in the "simple movements" of the marionetteer, either a direct line or an ellipse. The ellipse reminds me of the ellipsoid my movements in the city made when I was a child in my memoir/essay "Istanbul Noir." You replace, if I follow you correctly, the soul with the uncanny which are not exactly the same thing, at least to me.

The way Kleist describes the "innocent" movement of the puppets against the boards reminds me very much of Robert Bresson's idea of non-actors, "mechanical and free. (You should read my recent poem *The Spiritual Life of Replicants *which came out recently. You may find it provocative along the same lines.)

I agree with you, in a lot of digital art there is a desire to remove the human element in its creation as much as possible. Of course, we will be accused of misunderstanding that work which to some extent is true. I hate the complexity of digital works, the theoretically infinite possibilities it open before us -as opposed to the marionetteers simple gestures of the soul.

Ciao,
Murat

This is one of Kleist's points. Techne--or virtuosity--is displaced by the physics (and the inevitability) of marionettic movement. Physics and Geometry are not in themselves techne, as you seem to hint, but are abstractions based on what we seem to understand of natural laws. On the other hand, the conscious working out of geometrical theorems or phyics equations, would allow the expression of various degrees of virtuosity, and would be occasions for a display of techne. The center of gravity of the puppet body is achieved through the construction of the marionette but is not in itself a display of techne--the inevitability of the sophisticated (albeit artless) movement of the marionette supersedes the skill (techne) of the* puppet master, to ultimately achieve the uncanny. On the other hand, computer art dispenses with presence and the uncanny and relies on a presentation of skill and indeed is often accompanied by a narrative which emphasises and even enumerates the skills involved in its production. Q.E.D. Techne takes all.

Your example of the robotic dancer shows me that you are not following the argument. Look at Kleist's essay.]

You said: The movement of human "like" objects pulled by strings follow laws of physics as geometry.

Leger's paintings the same way. [I'm glad to see that you experience the uncanny in Leger.]

You said: For me your essay sustains the dichotomy between machine and human

[That was my point, and in fact I assert the superiority of the marionettic over computer art because it provides presence and its co-efficient uncanniness, whereas computer art only provides us with various displays and narratives concerning techne--skill--virtuosity.]

whereas the conflict the computer --therefore purely digital works- creates is between what we call "real" and virtual, in other words, object and image.

[That's another ball of wax, as they say.]

In my view, digital art -as movies, photography, and even T.V.-- require an understand the nature of images.

My puppets are marionettes--hand-carved--that stand around a foot and a half tall. They do exhibit that wonderful, balanced pre or post-human "grace" that Kleist speaks of in his essay on the puppet theater. When manipulated correctly they seem uncannily alive and earn that "presence" that Benjamin writes of. In fact I think that's where the difference lies: there is a human hand at work in puppetry animating the aesthetic object in real time. We see the dance, see/hear the poetry, smell the linden wood of the puppets, heightened to a higher degree because one step above the all-too-human poet/puppeteer. I would say that because of this, a masked, or marionettic poetry recitation in which the poet manipulates the aesthetic object, would be even superior to the poet her or himself giving a "live" reading before an audience. The computer screen factors out "presence" and flattens performance--substituting techne for the living, the improvisational and the inspired--and techne alone is not nearly enough. The puppet theater with its unique qualities, brings the uncanny--the "presence"-- back to poetry in the manner of performance it offers to the audience. Jess*

Tendencies 2/15: Kate Bornstein, Camille Roy, Kaplan Harris

Wed 15 Feb 2012

Join us for Tendencies TONIGHT at the GC

TENDENCIES: Poetics & Practice
Kate Bornstein, Kaplan Page Harris, Camille Roy

Wednesday, February 15 at 7 PM in the Martin E. Segal Theatre, CUNY Graduate Center, 365 Fifth Avenue, NYC

What are the new poetics and the new manifestos? What do authors actually do when they write, and what can be learned from their investigations? This series of talks, titled in honor of Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick, explores the relationship between queer writing/artmaking process, pedagogy, and the manifesto.

Kate Bornstein is a performance artist, college & high school lecturer, and advocate for teens, freaks, and other outlaws. She has written several award-winning books in the field of Women and Gender Studies, including Gender Outlaw and My Gender Workbook (an updated edition is forthcoming in 2012). Her 2006 book, Hello, Cruel World is an underground best seller. May 1st sees the release of her first memoir, A Queer and Pleasant Danger, from Beacon Press. She has earned two citations of honor from the New York City Council and garnered praise from civil rights groups around the globe.

Kaplan Harris is writing a history of Bay Area poetry & activism in the wake of the New Left. His recent work is found in American Literature, Contemporary Literature, Jacket, Jacket2, Open Letter, Paideuma, The Poetry Project Newsletter, Postmodern Culture, and Wild Orchids. He is also editing, with Peter Baker & Rod Smith, The Selected Letters of Robert Creeley for the University of California Press. He lives in Buffalo, NY.

Camille Roy is a writer and performer. Her most recent book is Sherwood Forest, from Futurepoem. Earlier books include Cheap Speech, a play, from Leroy, and Craquer, a fictional autobiography from 2nd Story Books, as well as Swarm (two novellas, Black Star Series), among others. She co-edited Biting The Error: Writers Explore Narrative (CoachHouse 2005, re-issued 2010). Roy has taught creative writing at San Francisco State University, California State University SummerArts, and Naropa.

Cecilia Vicuña's "documentary poem" Kon Kon -- a magical act of ritual and memory, history and ecological witness filmed in her native Chile -- will receive its West Coast debut screening, sponsored by the Poetry Center and Roxie Theater.

KON KON (HD video, 54 min., Chile, 2010)
In this documentary poem, Cecilia Vicuña returns to Con Cón, the birthplace of her art in Chile, where the sea is dying and an ancient tradition is being destroyed. Con Cón is located at the mouth of the Aconcagua River whose source is the glacier of Aconcagua, the tallest mountain in the Western hemisphere. Named for the oldest deity of the Andes, the god Kon, it may have been a sacred oracle site for millennia, associated with the most renowned oracle site in the Americas: Pachacamac, on the coast of Peru.

The word Con (Kon) alludes to the sanctity of the cycle of water-from glacier to ocean to cloud-a circularity intensified by the repetition: Con Cón. In the sacred Valle del Aconcagua, the "bailes chinos" created a powerful mystical sound: the "sonido rajado" (torn sound), a multiphonic music of the pre-Columbian Andes. Based on dissonance, the "bailes chinos" are ritual dances dedicated to increasing the life-force. Continuously performed throughout colonial times, the dance is now dying along with the sea.

Exploring the forgotten meaning of the ancient names, the artist recovers an erased cultural memory. In this hybrid work, part poem, part documentary, Cecilia Vicuña creates new bridges between the ancestral and the avant-garde.

The filmmaker will be present to talk with the audience
 We are not able to offer free admission for Poetry Center members or SFSU*

students to this special event. Discounted tickets (senior and SFSU students) are available only at the Roxie Theater.

CECILIA VICUñA's works have for some forty years gravitated between the written word, in multiple languages (she has translated numerous works of poetry from Native South American languages, via Spanish, into English; and her own written/spoken work has been polylingual) and visual media, involving, "earth-works," installation, a great deal of art made with thread and fabric (often involving the Native quipu tradition), drawing and painting, printed works and book arts, film and video, and live intermedia performance. All of her work has a deep ethical-ecological concern at its heart. She has been active internationally as an artist for over four decades. Among recent publications, she coedited The Oxford Book of Latin American Poetry, surveying 500 years of multi-lingual work, presented in original languages with translations into English.
Her very first book, Saboramí, a bilingual multi-media work of poetry originally published in Britain where the author was living, two months after the September 11, 1973 military coup in Chile, was just re-created, with a new afterword by Vicuña, by ChainLinks (Oakland and Philadelphia).

A Typewriter Poem by Clifford Hunt

Clifford Hunt's poem, "Oh Summer, Look," comes, he says, "out of my love of short works, old typewriters, and Courier font." For the last several years, he says, "I have been printing short poems in large Courier and placing them in the old Royal Typewriter that lives on our front porch." Several of Hunt's typewriter poems, including this one, have been published in the Half Moon Bay Review (California).

What strikes me about the poems, beyond their beauty, is their kind. If Walter Benjamin were alive and rewriting his famous essay, "Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction" (1936), in and for our age, the age of electronic reproduction, I have to think he would attach what he so rightly called "the aura" to "Oh Summer, Look," coming out of the old Royal typewriter on Clifford Hunt's front porch. WS

Spread the word. Far and wide,

William Slaughter

Vernissage: Friday, February 17th, 2012, 18:00 - 21:00

The fifth in a series of seven poetic responses, curated by rob mclennan, the first was Pearl Pirie's "The Walls of Jerusalem - Selected Poems and Process Notes," a response to Leslie Hossack's Cities of Stone - People of Dust," the second was Amanda Earl's "In the Tempo of Now - Selected Poems," a response to John Hewett Hallum's show of photographs, "MOMENT(O)," the third, Monty Reid's "So is the Madness of Humans," a response to Rob Macinnis' show of photographs, "The Farm Family Project," and the fourth, Sandra Ridley's "Shadow Lines," a response to Pedro Isztin's show of photographs, "Study of Structure and Form," all of which are still available here.

http://www.spao.ca/projects/callandresponse.html

The final two responses will be by Claudia Coutu Radmore and rob mclennan, with a reading of all the writers (with slides of their corresponding shows) is currently being scheduled for June 22, 2012. Stay tuned!

Toronto poets Camille Martin and Mark Goldstein bring lyricism to BIG NIGHT

Sat 18 Feb 2012

Bob Pohl published an article about Mark Goldstein and me before our reading for BIG NIGHT in Buffalo:

http://blogs.buffalonews.com/gusto/2012/01/toronto-poets-camille-martin-and-mark-goldstein-bring-lyricism-to-big-night.html

Interesting that he picked up that we both started out as musicians since musicality in poetry is important to both Mark and me.

Cheers!

New from LRL e-editions: Beverly Dahlen's First Three Books

Sun 19 Feb 2012

Beverly Dahlen,<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/beverly-dahlen-the-first-three-books> *The First Three Books<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/beverly-dahlen-the-first-three-books> *

LRL e-editions is thrilled to bring Beverly Dahlen's first three books<http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/catalog/beverly-dahlen-the-first-three-books> back to print in a single volume: Out of the Third (Momo's Press, 1974), A Letter at Easter: To George Stanley (Effie's Press, 1976), and The Egyptian Poems (Hipparchia Press, 1983). Also included are Robert Duncan's afterword to the Hipparchia edition, as well as a new interview with Dahlen about her early work. With these long out-of-print publications newly accessible, readers can mine the formative explorations that open onto Dahlen's life work, A Reading. According to Duncan in his afterword: "The creative field addressed, worked, and kept at work in Out of the Third, A Letter at Easter, and the present set of Egyptian poems sets into motion resonant elements in my own poetic consciousness so that I hear new harmonics. She has deepened my apprehension of the oracular voice in Poetry..."

FROM NOW ON, ALL PROFITS FROM THE SALE OF PRINT-ON-DEMAND BOOKS IN THIS SERIES WILL BE DONATED TO A DIFFERENT SMALL PRESS EACH YEAR. First up: Chax Press <http://www.chax.org/>. So, any purchase of a print-on-demand title from this series during 2011-2012 will have the added benefit of helping to support the efforts of Chax!

Please visit the LRL e-editons site at http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks/<http://www.littleredleaves.com/> to download or purchase this title. And as always, you can contact us at [redacted] for information about reviewing these books or adopting any of our titles for a class.

Poetry Reading for Collected Poems of Gil Ott

Mon 20 Feb 2012

Coming up this week:

A Poetry Reading in honor of

Collected Poems of Gil Ott

Edited by Tim Peterson, Greg Laynor, and Eli Goldblatt

Published by Chax Press

3-4:30 PM

Sunday, February 26

Painted Bride Art Center

230 Vine Street

Philadelphia, PA

Please come celebrate the poetry and life of Gil Ott, a poet who published over a dozen books and a community arts activist who worked with homeless and disabled writers for over twenty years. The founding editor of the literary journal Paper Air as well as the original publisher of Singing Horse Press, Gil influenced many poets in Philadelphia, across America, and in the English-speaking world. From 1981 to 1995, he worked at the Painted Bride Arts Center, first conducting a capital campaign and assisting its founder Gerry Givnish, and later creating an extensive network of community-based arts and educational collaborations. From the mid 90's until his death in 2004, he served as the Director of Development for Liberty Resources, Philadelphia's Center for Independent Living, which advocates for the rights of people with disabilities.

Gerry Givnish will introduce. Julia Blumenreich, Gil's widow, will read her suite of poems that sparked Wendy Osterweil to make Reforesting: An Homage to Gil Ott, an exhibition currently on display in the gallery. Poets will then read from the new Collected Poems. Readers include Julia, CA Conrad, Eli Goldblatt, Jena Osman, Bob Perelman, Tim Peterson, Ron Silliman, Brian Teare, Heather Thomas.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

RIM/WAVE

text by DAVID GIANNINI & woodcuts by FRANKLIN FELDMAN

ISBN: 978-1-935835-05-9

Perfect Bound, $18.00

Publication Date: January 2012

8 x 10 inches, 140 pages

PROSE POETRY/ART/POETRY

Rim is a man who works and thinks mainly with his body, a thinking farmhand, someone who labors physically and sees through things to a deeper level or core at times making spiritual sense also. Rim is a story, a prosepoem, and a metaphysical investigation as one occasion. The sense of poetry in the prose comes through both constant juxtaposition of images and rhythmic qualities created through line-breaks and word-savorings. Rim breaks down usual notions of inside/outside, linear/non-linear, and creates a way of felling human â€œplaceâ€ in a larger animate continuum. This book is one of storied life and of collage. Each part of the story is interrupted or disrupted by sudden insertions of words (in boldface) from the separate books and authors listed in the Glossolalia (a pun on Glossary) to effect a â€œspeaking in tonguesâ€ throughout the work. This book asks the reader to follow a story and simultaneously allow insistent â€œvoicesâ€ to break in. Any presumed parallels to the disease of schizophrenia should be immediately thrown out. The book may be read alone or read aloud by at least two people.

This volume also includes the first publication of To the Wave, Poetry at Seacoasts, a complete book in honor of ocean and what sense of things the author has found on and around various coastal beaches in the United States, including experiences of things both easily observed and not readily seen. It is a lyrical, metaphysical and loving exploration made of notes, aphorisms, collages, poems and prosepoem sections building (as waves do) toward final destinations. The title also indicates a way of bowing â€œto the waveâ€ that is the next and the next physical presence within great ocean, but also â€œto the waveâ€ that is the ultimate, imagined, engulfing totality anyone may feel and find.

DAVID GIANNINIâ€™s most recently published collections of poetry include AZ Two (Adastra Press), a â€œFeatured Bookâ€ in the 2009 Massachusetts Poetry Festival; Within Eternity (Feral Press/Prehensile Pencil, 2011); and How Else? (Longhouse Publishers). His awards include: Massachusetts Artists

Fellowship Awards, The Osa and Lee Mays Award for Poetry, an award for prosepoetry from the University of Florida, and a 2009 Finalist Award from the Naugatuck Review. He has been a gravedigger, beekeeper, and taught at Williams College, The University of Massachusetts, and Berkshire Community College, among others; and he has worked as a psychiatric case manager. Span of Thread, a full-length collection of prose poems is due out from Cervena Barva Press in 2012.

FRANKLIN FELDMAN has worked in all forms of graphic artâ€”intaglio, relief, serigraph, and lithography.

Indian Mountain Press has published a number of his limited edition and one-of-a-kind artist books. His books are in the rare book collections of Harvard (The Houghton Library), Yale (The Sterling Library), Columbia (Rare Book and Manuscript Library), Brown (The John Hay Library),

Princeton University Library, the Jewish Theological Seminary (Rare Book Division), and the Dance

Collection and Jewish Division of The New York Public Library. His prints are in public collections, including the British Museum and the Victoria & Albert Museum.

Available directly from Small Press Distribution, 1341 Seventh St., Berkeley, CA 94710, 800-869-7553, www.spdbooks.org.

Quale Press publishes mainly experimental fiction, short collections of what might be called prose poetry, and progressive poetry.

Boog City's Kurt Cobain Features
Mon 20 Feb 2012

hi all,

Today would have been Kurt Cobain's 45th birthday.

10 years ago, on what would have been Kurt Cobain's 35th birthday, we did our first Classic Albums Live show, with 13 indie music acts performing Nirvana's

Nevermind album live at The Knitting Factory. In conjunction with that event, the second issue of Boog City featured some great Cobain-related content. Here's a link to the online pdf (full bib below this note):

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc02.pdf

Two years later, we performed Nirvana's In Utero live at the C-Note. In conjunction with that event we put out the third Boog Reader pamphlet, For Kurt on His 37th Birthday. Here's a link to the online pdf (full bib below this note):

BR3: For Kurt on His 37th Birthday

At 2:06 a.m. on Feb. 17, 2004 I emailed 51 poets asking them for Nirvana acrostics by 3 p.m. that same day, three days before what would have been Kurt Cobain's 37th birthday and a live performance of Nirvana's In Utero Boog was putting on. These 13 writers met the call:

Todd Colby, Sean Cole, Shanna Compton, Jordan Davis, Erica Kaufman, Aaron Kiely, Thurston Moore, Lee Ranaldo, Tony Rubin, Alan Semerdjian, Jill Stengel, Edwin Torres, Dana Ward, Ian Wilder, and Stephanie Young.

Flying Guillotine Press
http://www.flyingguillotinepress.blogspot.com/

Flying Guillotine Press publishes hand bound poetry chapbooks. Tony Mancus and Sommer Browning founded it in 2008.

Jane Carver
http://www.myspace.com/janeortruncarver

Jane Carver is an artist and musician living in Brooklyn. Her works include I've Been Away, Mutter, and Muse-Sick: The Corso Suite.

Serena Chopra
http://www.coloradopoetscenter.org/poets/chopra_serena/drift.html

Serena Chopra's chapbook, Penumbra, is just out from Flying Guillotine Press. She has an M.F.A. from the University of Colorado at Boulder. She has recent publications in The Denver Quarterly, Fact-Simile, Pax Americana, and Umbrella Factory. She has worked with The New Press and is a 2010 Kundiman Fellow. She lives, works, writes, dances, and generally arts around in her native land of Denver.

Philip Metres
http://www.philipmetres.com

Philip Metres' most recent chapbook is Abu Ghraib Arias (Flying Guillotine Press). He is the author of numerous books, including To See the Earth (Cleveland State University), Come Together: Imagine Peace (Bottom Dog Press), and Behind the Lines: War Resistance Poetry on the American Homefront, Since 1941 (University of Iowa Press). His work has appeared in Best American Poetry, and it has garnered an NEA, a Watson Fellowship, two Ohio Arts Council Grants, and The Cleveland Arts Prize in 2010. He teaches literature and creative writing at John Carroll University in Cleveland.

Morgan Lucas Schuldt
http://www.morganlucasschuldt.blogspot.com

Morgan Lucas Schuldt's (1978-2012) most recent chapbook is (as vanish, unespecially) from Flying Guillotine Press. He is the author of Verge, a collection of poems published by Free Verse Editions, and two other chapbooks —Otherhow (Kitchen Press) and L=u=N=G=U=A=G=E (Scantily Clad Press). He was the cofounder of CUE, a journal of prose poems, and CUE Editions, a poetry press.

Boog City
http://www.boogcity.com/

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 21st year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women's writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea's ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB's, The Knitting Factory, and The Sidewalk Café. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

Welcome Boog City's New Poetry Editor
Thu 23 Feb 2012

Hi all,

Boog City's pleased to welcome onboard our new poetry editor, small press poetry luminary Buck Downs. I've known Buck and his work for years and I'm real excited to see where he takes the paper's poetry section from the upcoming 70th issue and into the future.

Buck's latest books are Black Peppermint and New Material (both available at http://buckdowns.com/). He sends poetry postcards across the country and around the world every month, and posts occasional essays at http://www.bucksmonthly.com/.

And a hearty thanks to Joanna Fuhrman, who just completed her second term as poetry editor and is moving on to other endeavors, including serving as co-poetry editor at Ping•Pong (http://www.henrymiller.org/ping_pong.html).

best,
David

Call for Submissions: THE LIT PUB

About:Â The Lit Pub is an independent publishing company specializing in literary hybridity. We're interested in the genre-blurring that occurs when authors experiment with traditional and established forms of fiction, poetry, and non-fiction. We also serve our fellow publishers (and book lovers) by recommending at least one book a day on our blog.Â

Submissions: Our open reading period for book manuscripts will be this summer. In the meantime, consider submitting a heartfelt, personalized recommendation for the last great book you read and loved. We also seek recommendations for individual issues of literary magazines, and we're also interested in exclusive author interviews. Direct all submissions to The Lit Pub'sÂ SubmishmashÂ account (http://thelitpub.submishmash.com/submit). Â

Sunday, February 26

Painted Bride Art Center

230 Vine Street

Philadelphia, PA

Please come celebrate the poetry and life of Gil Ott, a poet who published over a dozen books and a community arts activist who worked with homeless and disabled writers for over twenty years. The founding editor of the literary journal Paper Air as well as the original publisher of Singing Horse Press, Gil influenced many poets in Philadelphia, across America, and in the English-speaking world. From 1981 to 1995, he worked at the Painted Bride Arts Center, first conducting a capital campaign and assisting its founder Gerry Givnish, and later creating an extensive network of community-based arts and educational collaborations. From the mid 90¹s until his death in 2004, he served as the Director of Development for Liberty Resources, Philadelphia¹s Center for Independent Living, which advocates for the rights of people with disabilities.

Gerry Givnish will introduce. Julia Blumenreich, Gil¹s widow, will read her suite of poems that sparked Wendy Osterweil to make Reforesting: An Homage to Gil Ott, an exhibition currently on display in the gallery. Poets will then read from the new Collected Poems. Readers include Julia, CA Conrad, Eli Goldblatt, Jena Osman, Bob Perelman, Tim Peterson, Ron Silliman, Brian Teare, Heather Thomas.

PEN American Roundup - "Poetry, Not Just a Book"

Fri 24 Feb 2012

Poetry is not just a book anymore. Beyond online journals, poems happily interact with film and video, music, dance, and, well, weâ€™re here today to celebrate all the ways we can see and hear a poem!

AWP Chicago

Anyone out there need to part with/dump/sell a registration for AWP nest week in Chicago? See tale of woe below, and please help if you can--Thanks-

As I was preparing for my trip to Chicago next week for AWP, I went to the website to print out a conference schedule, and read that registration for the conference is closed, and that no on-site registration will be permitted. I am sure you are getting no small number of e-mail on this (!), but I find myself in a truly precarious position.

As you can see from the e-mail below, I was told that I would be able to register on-site, which made sense for me as I am only going to attend for one day. That one day, however, is crucial. I am a college professor and my trip is being paid for my my university. I have already spent over $1,000.000 non-refundable dollars on airfare and hotel reservations, all of which would be reimbursed by university if, and only if, I am a conference attendee. Indeed, by policy, I must provide a conference registration receipt in order to get my travel money. But again, as I said, the money I have spent on airfare and hotel is non-refundable.

In short, then, if I do not attend the AWP conference, I will lose well over $1,000.00 of my own money.

Is there any way that I can still register--just for one day? I desperately need to register for the AWP conference for Thursday, March 1, 2012. I will pre-register. I will register on-site. I will do anything I can in order to make this happen. Indeed, even though I am very interested in attending the conference, I will pay the registration fee and not even attend, if I can simply get a receipt saying I paid. I would rather eat the registration fee and miss the conference, that be out over $1,000.00 of my own dollars.

"The Deeds and Sufferings of Light" Texts by Joel Weishaus with Photographs by Patrick Nagatani

Sat 25 Feb 2012

In 1991, the Albuquerque Museum presented an exhibition titled, "The Nuclear Enchantment of New Mexico." It consisted of forty 17" x 22" color photographs by Patrick Nagatani, and forty poster-size prose poems by Joel Weishaus. The theme of the project was New Mexico's extensive nuclear weapons infrastructure, which began with the designing and building of the first nuclear devices at Los Alamos, the first of which was tested in the air over southern New Mexico, and two of which destroyed the cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

After the museum show, the project split up, with Nagatani naming his photographs, "Nuclear Enchantment, " and Weishaus naming his texts, "The Deeds and Sufferings of Light."

Last year, The University of New Mexico Art Museum presented "Desire For Magic: Patrick Nagatani 1978-2008," which included twelve of Nagatani's "Nuclear Enchantment" photographs and twelve of Weishaus' corresponding texts. The museum also published a beautifully designed book of the same title, which includes the twelve pictures and texts.

Meanwhile, Weishaus placed "The Deeds and Sufferings of Light" in his on-line archive at Virginia Tech's Center for Digital Discourse and Culture. And now, for the first time in twenty years, the forty pictures, as 250x200 jpegs, have been linked to the forty texts [and paratexts]; thus, the original project is whole again:

ON THE ROAD with BOB HOLMAN on LINK TV
Sun 26 Feb 2012

Dear Friends: I am excited to announce the first travel/poetry series airing on LINK TV. The show, ON THE ROAD WITH BOB HOLMAN follows the popular slam poet as he discovers the roots of spoken-word while traveling the globe. Along the way, he gets passionately immersed in the Endangered Language crisis. Imagine Anthony Bourdain's "No Reservation," but focused on languages!

I produced the show with my friend, Beatriz Seigner, and it has been showing on LINK TV and on their website.

Episode one: http://www.linktv.org/programs/on-the-road-episode-1 Episode two: http://www.linktv.org/programs/on-the-road-episode-2 Episode three: http://www.linktv.org/programs/on-the-road-episode-3

After watching the show, please add comments on LINK TV's site.

Also, checkout the show's site at http://rattapallax.com/blog/on_the_road/

Lastly, join Bob and me for a screening, performance and party to celebrate the show on Feb. 29, 2012 at 7pm at the Bowery Poetry Club, 308 Bowery (Between Houston and Bleecker), New York City. Also, catch us at AWP Conference in Chicago on Saturday, March 3 at 4:30pm.

Hope to see you soon!

Cheers

EXHIBIT X FICTION presents poet, scholar, and novelist

STEVE MCCAFFERY

Monday February 27
8:00pm
Hallwalls Cinema
341 Delaware Avenue
Buffalo, NY

Free and Open to the Public

BIO Steve McCaffery, the David Gray Chair of Poetry and Letters at the University at Buffalo, has been twice nominated for the Governor General's Award and is the author of over 35 books and chapbooks of poetry and criticism. This Exhibit X reading celebrates the re-release of McCaffery's 1984 _Panopticon_ by BookThug Press, a novel hailed by Charles Bernstein as "the exemplary 'antiabsorptive' work" and William McPheron as an "extraordinary act of revolution and charity." Taking its inspiration from Jeremy Bentham's "Panopticon Papers," McCaffery's _Panopticon_ is a tour de force of formal innovation, theoretical comment, and narrative critique.

Join us for this celebratory reading!

Mildred Lockwood Lacey Small Press in the Archive: JULIA Bloch 2/28

Mon 27 Feb 2012

The Spring 2012 Mildred Lockwood Lacey Small Press in the Archive Lecture Series launches tomorrow:

Tuesday, February 28th at 1:00PM

Julia Bloch, Assistant Professor at Bard College MAT

"Epistolary Revision"

Bloch will be working with two instances of correspondence from postwar women poets in The Poetry Collection: Lorine Niedecker and Bernadette Mayer. Recently acquired letters from Niedecker to Kenneth Cox, which date from 1966 to 1970, discuss Niedecker's late long poem "Paean to Place." Letters from Mayer to Clark Coolidge contain two versions of a "dream narrative." In both cases, Bloch is interested in the revision function of the letter form.

Julia Bloch is Assistant Professor of literature at Bard College, where she teaches graduate students in the master of arts in teaching program inCalifornia's Central Valley. She holds a BA from Carleton College, an MFA from Mills College, and a PhD from the University of Pennsylvania, where she received a Mellon Graduate Research Fellowship and co-coordinated theModernism and Twentieth-Century Studies group. She specializes in twentieth-century poetry and poetics, gender studies, and issues of sound in postwar poetry. An article on gender and modernist genealogy is forthcoming in the Journal of Modern Literature; she has published essays, book reviews, and poetry in How2, New Review of Literature, Aufgabe, P-Queue, Women’s Studies Quarterly, and elsewhere. She also serves as co-editor of the poetics journal *Jacket2.

Between Page and Screen release and AWP

Mon 27 Feb 2012

I'm very excited to announce the publication of Between Page and Screen, my book of augmented reality poems created in collaboration with programmer Brad Bouse. A merging of the artist's book and e-poetry traditions inspired by both digital and concrete poetry, the pages of the book contain no text. When it is opened before a webcam at http://www.betweenpageandscreen.com, however, the poems leap off the page in 3-dimensional space, and the reader sees herself holding the words in her hands. The poems comprise a series of letters between two lovers, P&S, pushing at the boundaries of their relationship, and a series of concrete poems that play off the etymologies of "page" and "screen." Ultimately, the poems do not exist on either platform, but in the space between them opened up by the reader.

The first 250 copies are signed and numbered, and the book is available now directly from Siglio Press (http://www.sigliopress.com/books/bps.htm--with a 25% discount using the code SPINTO). (It will be available from DAP and Amazon in April).

It will also be for sale at the AWP bookfair and at the Siglio / Ugly Duckling Presse off-site reading on Friday night, where I will be performing from/with the book.

Details on the offsite with Danielle Dutton, Jill Magi, and Erica Baum are here: https://www.facebook.com/events/208796685885254/

Of the book, Christian Bök says: "Between Page and Screen has reinvented visual poetry. . . . Such a book heralds the virtual reality of our own poetic future, when everyone can read a book while watching it play on television, each hologram standing in its cone of light, hovering above the open page."

And Marjorie Perloff says: “Page, don’t cage me!” declares one of the lovers in this remarkable “first of a kind” interactive print-screen book. Between Page and Screen . . . mysteriously opens up a new world with the click on the computer screen, chronicling the misfortunes and misunderstandings of two star-crossed lovers, whose puns and paragrams resonate with a physical as well as semantic presence. Here, as Samuel Beckett said of Finnegans Wake, “form is meaning and meaning is form.

Thanks! And feel free to backchannel me with any questions.

Forwarding this from Peter Anastas, author of the Olson memoir, From Gloucester Out. He's asking us to:

"Sign this petition and forward it to friends, poets, Olson and Gloucester lovers, who live outside of the city. We are fighting hard to save Olson's neighborhood from the development of a luxury resort hotel at the Birdseye site, proposed by billionaire Jim Davis, owner of New Balance shoes. If the Fort goes, so will the rest of the waterfront. Can you imagine a high-end hotel in this iconic working class, ethnic neighborhood? Olson would be turning over in his grave."

seventeen seconds: a journal of poetry and poetics comes out as the natural extension of the eight issues of Poetics.ca edited by rob mclennan and Stephen Brockwell. Highlighting the diversity of voice, style, practice and politic, seventeen seconds continues the resolve to provide a forum for dialogue on contemporary poetics, with a focus on Canadian writing. Over the past two decades, the amount of critical writing published in print literary journals on Canadian poetry, specifically, seems to have decreased dramatically, but slowly returned through a number of online journals. seventeen seconds simply wishes to help strengthen the dialogue and the ongoing conversation about writing through publishing new writing, and conversation about new writing. One More Time With Feeling!: VIDA’s 2011 Count is Hot Off The Press.

Tue 28 Feb 2012

One More Time With Feeling!: VIDAâ€™s 2011 Count is Hot Off
The Press.
Â
In 2010, our organization, VIDA: Women In Literary Arts, took on a seemingly simple project: to count the rates of publication between women and men in many of our writing worldâ€™s most respected literary outlets.Â

We decided to count as what we frequently heard people say about gender discrimination in the publishing world was entirely anecdotal (one of our favorite examples: the Established Male Novelistâ€™s comment to his reading audience that all is well with gender issues in publishing as he personally works out next to a Famous Woman Writer at his gym).Â
So we counted. We made some very attractive pie charts to illustrate some very disturbing numbers.
And then we released the information, frankly wondering if anyone would pay attention to our discoveries.
Pay attention, they did.
Immediately, the literary community went into hyper drive responding to the information VIDA had gathered: furious debates over The Count took place in comment boxes, both nationally and internationally; women writers are discriminated against and should be righteously indignant; women writers are whiners and should simply write better books; women writers should write about more â€œimportantâ€ subjects; women writersâ€™ subjects are just as important as male writersâ€™, dammit!; women writersâ€™ subject matter isnâ€™t inherently different than menâ€™s, itâ€™s just reviewed differently; women writers should submit more work to magazines; male writers should submit less; editors should actively solicit more work from women writersâ€¦ VIDAâ€™s Count produced scores of responses, from editors at the most prestigious magazines to undergraduate writing studentsâ€™ blogsâ€”all wanting a share in a conversation that it appears many believe is necessary and long overdue.
So this year weâ€™ve done it again. We hope VIDAâ€™s Count will go on annually until that glorious time when it is no longer needed.
Hereâ€™s the short version: the publication numbers donâ€™t look markedly different than last yearâ€™s. But we at VIDA arenâ€™t discouraged by this fact--we know that significant cultural change takes time.

We also know that this is a conversation thatâ€™s not going away; when we talk to other writers, when we talk to our writing students, we know things are in the process of changing for the better, that our literary cultureâ€™s consciousness has been raised. And we believe weâ€™ve begun to see hopeful signs. Yes, many literary outlets still produced their phallocentric Best Books list this year. But notice how careful most of them were to create some context for their listsâ€™ inherent subjectivity. Â The word â€œBestâ€ now has a permanent asterisk next to it, no matter where you line up in our writing communityâ€™s gender debate. And to acknowledge your bias is one step toward opening your mind.
Weâ€™ve come a long way since Publishersâ€™ Weekly breezily dismissed the total absence of women in their top ten list of 2009.Â
But we at VIDA know thereâ€™s more work to do and weâ€™re committed to creating more opportunities for women writers in the future.
We welcome you to VIDA and hope youâ€™ll join the conversation.

March 2012 turned the room toward a gap in the record — the poets a whole category of readers could not find, because the canon had never bothered to gather them. Two hundred messages moved through the list, and its largest thread was a plain confession of ignorance that became, in the room's hands, a small act of recovery: a hunt for the intersex and transgender poets that no anthology had thought to name. The month asked, once again, who the tradition forgets, and set about, in its small way, remembering.

The largest thread began with an admission. A teacher wrote that a student had asked for intersex or transgender poets and confessed "I didn't have any names at my fingertips" — the honest blank where a whole body of work should have been catalogued and was not — and asked the room to fill it. The commons did what it does best in such moments, pooling its scattered knowledge to assemble, by hand, the list the institutions had never compiled: recovery not as theory but as practical mutual aid, names traded until the blank began to fill.

The quarrel, such as it was, ran through Stein. A call for papers on Gertrude Stein kept the great queer modernist in view — the mother of so much of the room's lineage, whose own sexuality and syntax had scrambled the categories a century before — while a thread on the semantics of the parts of speech worried how grammar itself encodes value, whether a noun is somehow guilty and an adjective merely neutral. Gender, grammar, and the canon turned out to be one tangled question: who and what the language is built to hold.

Around it the room kept its stranger small business — an invitation to wear a page from a concrete-poetry book, the poem made wearable, and a query into a website of postmodern poetry. The avant-garde impulse to blur the line between the text and the body ran quietly through the month, the same impulse, at bottom, as the search for the poets whose bodies the canon had never known how to name.

I have set March down exactly as the archive delivered it — the blank where the transgender poets should have been, the recovery of them by hand, Stein kept in view, and grammar itself put on trial — because it was the month the list confronted a specific hole in the record and treated it not as an embarrassment to hide but as work to be done. A room that will answer a teacher's honest blank by assembling, together, the names its anthologies never gathered is a room living out its oldest and best conviction: that the canon forgets on purpose, that the language itself has its exclusions built in, and that the remedy is always the same patient labor of saying the missing names until they are missing no longer.

— Kristen M. Fabians

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is "Outside Voices: An Email Correspondence" by Jake Berry and Jeffrey Side

Wed 29 Feb 2012

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œOutside Voices: An Email Correspondenceâ€ by Jake Berry and Jeffrey Side

Description:

This 18-month transatlantic email correspondence between Jake Berry and Jeffrey Side ranges across and intertwines a variety of topics that include: poetry and music; film and TV; the changes in culture over the past few decades; the differences in regional U.S. and U.K. accents; the difficulty of reaching the famous in order to interview them; the songwriter as poet and vice versa.

Available as a free ebook here:

Looms* soon to loom*

Wed 29 Feb 2012

Shearsman Books rocks my world — again! Like my previous collection (Sonnets), Looms will appear from Shearsman, a UK literary press that publishes about sixty new titles per year.

Unless predictions of Doomsday 2012 come true, Looms will loom on the horizon in fall 2012.

Cheers!

A dog ate the tuning fork . . .
Wed 29 Feb 2012

To learn the fate of the dog that ate the tuning fork, go to 17 Seconds: A Journal of Poetry and Poetics http://www.ottawater.com/seventeenseconds/pdfs/fourthissue.pdf

. . . the dog's tale is among my six poems published there:

“Snipe Hunt” “Frittering Buttress” “Twin Cicadas” “Marble Petals” “Sleeves Hold Up the Coat”
“The Sea Hag’s Last Stand”

Also in the issue, edited by rob mclennan, are works critical and poetic by Gary Barwin, Marcus McCann, Pattie McCarthy, rob mclennan, Sean Moreland, and Monty Reid.

Cheers!

March YEW

Thu 1 Mar 2012

Yew: A journal of innovative writing and images by women.

It’s March, and a new issue of Yew is online, featuring poetry by Michaela A. Gabriel, Carol Szamatowicz and Deborah Poe with visual contributions from Doro Boehme, Deborah Poe and Stephenie Foster.

Readers of Yew may have noticed that our bio page is unconventional. Please note that further information about our writers and artists can be found on the “ISSUE DETAILS” page.

Edited by designer Stephenie Foster and poet Carolyn Guinzio, *Yew*features three writers per month with visual art provided by the writers, their collaborators, other artists or the editors.

Please visit the site, and if you like what you find there, we would be grateful if you would help us by sharing news of this enterprise. Our Facebook page is here: https://www.facebook.com/pages/Yew-Journal/208944442504432

Our complete guidelines are here: http://yewjournal.com/guidelines.html

Thanks for your support, and we hope you enjoy this issue of Yew.

Call for Submissions

We are currently accepting submissions for several online issues in 2012.

Accepted work will be eligible for Certain Circuits 3.1 slated to be published in early 2013.

For full guidelines, visit http://certaincircuits.tumblr.com/contributions.

We strongly encourage collaborative works between artists. Our next multimedia issues will publish on APRIL 1 and MAY 1. Authors will be notified of acceptance before the 20th of the month.

It is impossible to get into one of our print issues without first being accepted as part of one of our multimedia issues online. Acceptance into our print issues is by invitation.

Project Update #2: Certain Circuits Magazine Volume 2.1 by certaincircuits

Project Update #2: 28 days to go... <http://www.kickstarter.com/projects/bmacallister/certain-circuits-magazine-volume-21/posts/184151?ref=email&show_token=21542aea54dc8451> Posted by certaincircuits [image: Like]<http://www.kickstarter.com/projects/bmacallister/certain-circuits-magazine-volume-21/posts/184151?ref=email&show_token=21542aea54dc8451#modal_dialog:facebook-like-dialog>

Dear friends,

Because of your generosity, we are 65% funded, and there are only 28 days to go! We hope that you will tell your friends and colleagues about this project and share it because it is our collective dream that it will be funded. Remember, that Kickstarter grants do not get funded unless they reach 100%, and we very much want to deliver our sponsors the rewards they have ordered. Our last Kickstarter grant was funded so we are optimistic, but please keep sharing and liking on the social media networks below and beyond.

Our launch party is May 5 at the Flying Carpet Cafe and Bar in the Francisville section of Philadelphia (near the Art Museum). The event will feature the opening of a month long exhibition featuring our artists, including cover artist Kevin Von Holtermann, Aja Beech, Richardson Comly, warren longmire, Jody McGrath, and Janice Sloane, among others. You will be entertained by film and video work as well as live performances from our contributors and several of our supporters. So please put this evening in your calendars, and save the date. Become a fan of the Flying Carpet on Facebook: www.facebook.com/FLYPHL

Our latest online issue is up: certaincircuits.org (The image below is a screen capture of our latest artists.) Thank you again for your tremendous generosity, and we encourage you to submit to future issues.

Frederica

A Sequence of Poems

by Stephen Knauth

"Frederica is based on the life of a young Indiana woman who lost her fiance in the First World War. She married soon after but her husband, also a veteran of the war, died suddenly of pneumonia, leaving her to raise three children during the Depression. In 1939, she was legally declared insane and committed to Evansville State Hospital. In subsequent years she was released to live with her grown children but ultimately she was recommitted to the same asylum and died there in 1957. The story is drawn, in part, from medical records, hometown newspaper articles, and oral/aural family history. Frederica is my grandmother." SK

Stephen Knauth's latest collection of poetry is The River I Know You By from Four Way Books. His poems have appeared in North American Review, Virginia Quarterly Review, Prairie Schooner, Poetry Daily, The Cortland Review, and others.

6th Annual Buffalo Small Press Book Fair - March 24, 2012
Mon 5 Mar 2012

2012 Buffalo Small Press Book Fair

Saturday, March 24, 12-6pm

Karpeles Manuscript Library Museum, Porter Hall

453 Porter Ave

Buffalo, NY 14201

The time has come again! The 6th annual Buffalo Small Press Book Fair is on the way! The Buffalo Small Press Book Fair is a regional one day event that brings booksellers, authors, bookmakers, zinesters, small presses, artists, poets, and other cultural workers (and enthusiasts) together in a venue where they can share ideas, showcase their art, and peddle their wares.

The 2012 event will take place on Saturday, March 24th at the Karpeles Manuscript Library Museum from noon to 6pm. Remember this event is FREE and open to the public!

New for this year, the return of Open Readings concurrent with the fair, a visit from Drive By Press, and even more workshops and presentations! Check the schedule for all the details:

www.buffalosmallpress.org/schedule<http://www.buffalosmallpress.org/schedule>

The book fair needs your support as well - costs have gone up, and this year there's a Kickstarter Campaign to offset some of the expenses. Please consider giving to keep this event alive! If you give, you receive amazing handmade rewards in return.

reminder: the ottawa small press book fair, spring 2012 edition: Saturday, June 30, 2012

---

span-o (the small press action network - ottawa) presents:

the ottawa
small press
book fair

spring 2012 edition
will be happening Saturday, June 30, 2012
in room 203 of the Jack Purcell Community Centre
(on Elgin, at 320 JackPurcell Lane).

contact rob at [redacted] to sign up for a table, etc.

"once upon a time, way way back in October 1994, rob mclennan & James Spyker invented a two-day event called the ottawa small press book fair, and held the first one at the National Archives of Canada..." Spyker moved to Toronto soon after our original event, but the fair continues, thanks in part to the help of generous volunteers, various writers and publishers, and the public for coming out to participate with alla their love and their dollars.

General info:
the ottawa small press book fair
noon to 5pm (opens at 11:00 for exhibitors)

admission free to the public.

$20 for exhibitors, full tables
$10 for half-tables
(payable to rob mclennan [NOTE NEW ADDRESS], c/o 402 McLeod St #3, Ottawa
ON K2P 1A6;

send by June 15 if you would like to appear in the exhibitor catalogue.

note: for the sake of increased demand, we are now offering half tables. for catalog, exhibitors should send name of press,address, email, web address, contact person, type of publications, list of publications (with price), if submissions are being considered & any other pertinent info, including upcoming ottawa-area events (if any).

& don't forget the pre-fair reading usually held the night before at The Carleton Tavern, Parkdale Market also, due to the increased demand for table space, exhibitors are asked to confirm far earlier than usual. i.e. -- before, say, the day of the fair.

the fair usually contains exhibitors with poetry books, novels,cookbooks, posters, t-shirts, graphic novels, comic books, magazines, scraps of paper, gum-ball machines with poems, 2x4s with text, etc, including (at previous events) Bywords, Dusty Owl, Chaudiere Books, above/ground press, Room 302 Books, The Puritan, The Ottawa Arts Review, Buschek Books, The Grunge Papers,

Broken Jaw Press, BookThug, Proper Tales Press, and others. happens twice a year, founded in 1994 by rob mclennan & James Spyker. now run by rob mclennan thru span-o. questions, [redacted]

free things can be mailed for fair distribution to the same address. we are unable to sell things for folk who cant make it, sorry. also, always looking for volunteers to poster, move tables, that sort of thing. let meknow if anyone able to do anything. thanks. for more information, bother rob mclennan.if you're able/willing to distribute posters/fliers for the fair, send me an email at [redacted] and for information on this or other small press book fairs across Canada, be sure to check out http://www.smallpressbookfair.blogspot.com/

SAVE the DATE: Friday, March 16 (((PHILLY)))

Mon 5 Mar 2012

Hello!

Join DEMASK PRESS for the release of Jacob Russell's new chapbook, Chronic, Chronos, Kairos.

JACOB RUSSELL + RYAN ECKES + PAUL SIEGELL

Friday, March 16, 2012, 7PM @ Higher Grounds (631 N. 3rd St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania)

facebook invite: https://www.facebook.com/events/354878151202712/

JACOB RUSSELL was born in Chicago a long time ago. He arrived in Philly on a Vespa motor scooter in 1964 and never found the exit. He’s been wandering the streets of Philly every since searching for Found Things. Spirit Stick says: “Found Things may be given shelter, but lose all their powers if possessed.”

Spirit Stick says: “Found Things can never be lost–were you to discard all Things you claim to own–that they be Found & granted their freedom, we might yet save ourselves from self-destruction.” For links to Jacob’s published writing, check out his blog, Jacob Russell’s Barking Dog: http://jacobrussellsbarkingdog.blogspot.com/.

RYAN ECKES was born in Philadelphia in 1979. He's the author of Old News (Furniture Press 2011) and when i come here (Plan B Press 2007). More of his poetry can be found on his blog (http://ryaneckes.blogspot.com/) and in various magazines.

PAUL SIEGELL is the author of three books of poetry: wild life rifle fire (Otoliths Books, 2010), jambandbootleg (A-Head Publishing, 2009) and Poemergency Room (Otoliths Books, 2008). Paul is a senior editor at Painted Bride Quarterly, and has contributed to American Poetry Review, Black Warrior Review, Paste Magazine and many other fine journals. Kindly find more of Paul’s work at ReVeLeR @ eYeLeVeL (http://paulsiegell.blogspot.com/)

NPF Conference on Poetry & Poetics of the 1980s
Mon 5 Mar 2012

Dear Friends of the National Poetry Foundation,

As the March 15 deadline for paper and panel proposals draws near, I wonder if I could ask for your help in spreading the news about our conference to friends, students, and other potential participants who may not have seen the call that first went out just before the Buffalo MSA in October.

www.nationalpoetryfoundation.wordpress.com/2011/10/03/poetry-poetics-of-the-1980s-call-for-proposals/

We recognize that there has been a real "boom" in conference offerings in recent years and that it is getting difficult to choose among the many tempting alternatives.

Still, we hope you'll agree that the legacy of the Orono conferences is one well worth continuing, and that the blend of scholarly papers and poetry readings, along with the bookfair and the many opportunities to meet and talk intensively with other poets and scholars, makes for a distinctive experience that only rolls around once every four years.

International scholars traveling from outside the U.S., graduate students, and independent scholars and artists are encouraged to inquire about reduced, and in some cases fully waived, registration rates. We can also offer tips on how best to get to Orono by plane, bus, or car.

On behalf of fellow organizing committee members Carla Billitteri and Benjamin Friedlander, please accept our warm best wishes and high hopes for seeing many of you here in late June,

Steve

Call for Papers - "Poetry of the Eighties"

Poetry & Poetics of the 1980s - Call for Proposals<http://nationalpoetryfoundation.wordpress.com/2011/10/03/poetry-poetics-of-the-1980s-call-for-proposals/>

Poetry & Poetics of the 1980s - Call for Proposals

National Poetry Foundation, University of Maine
June 27-July 1, 2012

Direct 300-500 word proposals for 20 minute papers
to [redacted]

The Editorial Collective of the National Poetry Foundation invites paper and panel proposals for the next in our sequence of "decade" conferences, to be devoted to The Poetry and Poetics of the 1980s, American and international, and to be held from Wednesday to Sunday, June 27-July 1, 2012, on the flagship campus of the University of Maine System in Orono, Maine.

The NPF welcomes paper and panel proposals on any and all aspects of poetic practice in the decade of the 1980s. What emerged? What changed? What happened just out of frame? What connections brought poetry into dialog with other fields? What social and political contexts mattered most? What of the present can be traced back to that moment? What poets, poetic formations, tendencies in poetics warrant our continued attention? What accidents of reception might we now revisit and perhaps repair?

Prospective participants are encouraged to draw on the full range of archival resources in conceiving their projects, including the digital audio, digital video, and digital facsimile holdings now widely available on-line.

As with previous NPF conferences, the scholarly presentations and panels will be amply supplemented by a variety of poetry readings, including plenary readings by notable figures associated with the decade being explored.

Paper proposals consisting of a title and a brief (300-500 word) abstract should be directed to the NPF Editorial Collective at [redacted]. Panel proposals should include, in addition, a brief rationale for the envisioned grouping. Proposals for alternative forms of intellectual practice/presentation, such as roundtables or seminars, will be read with interest.

The deadline for proposals has been extended to March 15, 2012.

Visit our website<http://www.nationalpoetryfoundation.org/news/index.php/article/2008/06/22/70s_conference_reports> and blog<http://npfconferences.wordpress.com/> for information about previous NPF conferences. COMMON TIME BY CHRIS PUSATERI NOW AVAILABLE

Common Time
by Chris Pusateri
Normal, IL: Steerage Press, 2012
106p
ISBN: 0983632626 ISBN-13: 9780983632627
Price: $9.99 (paper)
www.steeragepress.com

Originally conceived as three discrete books, Common Time takes pianist Glenn Gould's notion of the two-take as its procedural centerpiece, soldering together sections from each of the three finished versions and combining them to make one final work. But unlike Gould's idea of an authoritative masterwork built from multiple versions of an original piece, Chris Pusateri turns the telescope backwards, making of this brokenness a meditation on what it means to compose, to couple, to comprehend.

Common Time is a 'collection' in the best sense, a self-consciously accretive book; here, meanings precipitate out of the nonsense detritus of the working day and observations tighten into aphorism. Pusateri's method exposes the paths that obstruct meaning and those that allow it to accrue: 'There is a grid within/what we utter,/within phonemes, associations form/and dissolve like flies on bison.' A humane, wise, and wicked smart book."

– CATHERINE WAGNER

"Taking his cue from Glenn Gould's 'two take' recording process, Chris Pusateri's Common Time deftly scores and splices the linguistic year… [and] reminds us [that] 'to read is to be not informed, but devoted.'"

– SARAH MANGOLD

CONTINUOUS FRIEZE BORDERING RED BY MICHELLE NAKA PIERCE NOW AVAILABLE
Tue 6 Mar 2012

Continuous Frieze Bordering Red
by Michelle Naka Pierce Bronx, NY: Fordham University Press
96p

ISBN-10: 0823243052 ISBN-13: 978-0823243051
$19 (paper)

Continuous Frieze Bordering Red documents the migratory patterns of an Other, as she travels between countries, languages, seasons, and shifting identities. A narrative on hybridity, the text explores [dis]location as a cultural swerve while it interrogates Rothko's red: his bricked-in, water-damaged windows [floating borders], which reflect unstable cultural borders to the hybrid. A person of mixed race [hybrid, mongrel, mutt] traverses these "invisible" cultural borders repeatedly. Border identity comes with flux, instability, and vibrational pulls. An Other is marked as someone who does not belong. She is always a foreigner: when traveling and when at "home." She is cast aside, bracketed from the dominant culture. She is [neither][nor][both]. She exists in a liminal space: in place and displaced simultaneously. That is, her identity and body are peripatetic, which is reflected in the continuous horizontal frieze. The reader must literally cross the borders of each page in order to navigate each line of text, leaving the reader in constant motion as well. The poem also functions as an ekphrasis of Rothko's Seagram murals: Rothko writes that the paintings make the observers "feel that they are trapped in a room where all the doors and windows are bricked up." The hybrid is confined and isolated. Even though the Other is estranged from herself and desires a sense of cultural belonging, she ultimately wants to "acknowledge this scar tissue and proceed" so that she is not held to false measures of "purity." Continuous Frieze Bordering Red attempts to move away from pejorative definitions of "hybrid" and embrace the monstrous self.

"Interruptions mingle with saturations, private intensities with social commentary, lyric aperï¿½us with skeptical suspicion-this multi-track work by Michelle Naka Pierce correlates many streams of insight and produces elegant and self-assured results." -RACHEL BLAU DUPLESSIS

Born in Japan, Michelle Naka Pierce is Associate Professor of Writing & Poetics and Director of the Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics at Naropa University. Among her most recent publications are She: A Blueprint and Beloved Integer. Her work has appeared in journals such as American Letters & Commentary, Trickhouse, Mandorla, Rain Taxi, and Teachers and Writers.

Denise Riley Reading - University of Sheffield, Thursday 15th March

Tue 6 Mar 2012

Dear all (and with apologies for cross-posting),

I'm really delighted to say that Denise Riley is to read and talk at the University of Sheffield. Details as follows:

Poetry Reading - Denise Riley

Where: Tapestry Room, Firth Hall, Western Bank, Sheffield

When:

7pm Thursday 15th March 2012

Denise Riley (born 1948, Carlisle) is an English poet and philosopher who began to be published in the 1970s. Her poetry is remarkable for its paradoxical interrogation of selfhood within the lyric mode. Her critical writings on motherhood, women in history, identity, and philosophy of language, are recognised as an important contribution to Feminism and Contemporary Philosophy. She was, until recently, Professor of Literature with Philosophy at the University of East Anglia and is currently A. D. White Professor at Cornell University. She was formerly Writer in Residence at Tate Gallery London, and has held fellowships at Brown University and at Birkbeck, University of London.

Few Female Bylines in Major Magazines:Â Losing the count
By Erin Siegal @ Columbia Journalism Review

For those unfamiliar with â€œThe Count,â€ as VIDA calls it, the numbers are shocking. At The Atlantic, women wrote 64 articles in 2011, while men wrote 184. The overall percentage of female bylines dropped 1.5 percent from last year, when the numbers were 52 to 158.

At The New Yorker, whose byline disparity was covered by CJR in 2005, men wrote 449 articles in 2010, while women wrote 163â€”or 26.63 percent of the total. In 2011, that percentage slid to 26.44 percent. At Harperâ€™s, the number fell to 16.66 percent from 21 percent. Female bylines in the New York Review of Books comprised a mere 12.5 percent of the total in 2011, down from 14.6 percent in 2010. Womenâ€™s bylines in the London Review of Books dropped to 13.88 percent from 17.74 percent in 2010. The Boston Review also slipped from 34.96 percent to 31.41 percent. Even progressive magazines like The Nation arenâ€™t gender-equal; in 2011, just 28.71 percent of Nation articles were written by women.* Continued here - http://www.cjr.org/behind_the_news/few_female_bylines_in_major_ma.php

"I have sometimes thought, indeed, that the sole avenue and means of a reconstructed sociology depended, primarily, on a new birth, elevation, expansion, invigoration of woman, affording, for races to come ... Great, great, indeed, far greater than they know, is the sphere of women. But doubtless the question of such new sociology all goes together, includes many varied and complex influences and premises, and the man as well as the woman, and the woman as well as the man. The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œSonglinesâ€ by Iain Britton

Description:

These poems touch on the experimental, the alternative, and rely on space and imagery for impact, and should be treated as living entities. Each poem should take the reader on a journey. They are multilayered and many everyday themes interconnect them, and the use of mnemonics adds a strengthening dimension to the symbolism.

Over the past few days, VIDA's 2011 Count has been ma
Dear Friends,

Over the past few days, VIDA's 2011 Count has been making big news in many major media outlets. If you haven't seen VIDA's breakdown of the rates of publication between male and female writers for 2011, please find the link here:

http://vidaweb.wpg1.info/the-count

As you see, the numbers are not great for women writers, nationally or internationally. But VIDA has a strong vision for future programming that will address what the poet Eleanor Wilner referred to as "the Great Silence." We at VIDA are deeply committed to making sure that in future more women writers' voices are valued and enjoyed by readers around the world. We do this for our daughters. We do this for our mothers. We do this for the many people--both men and women--who care about women's voices.

We are writing to ask you to consider making a tax-deductible donation to VIDA today.

A donation of $25-$500 makes you a "V.I.P." (VIDA Inclined Person). Donations of $500 plus make you one of VIDA's "Literary Heroes." With your permission, we'll be pleased to thank you for your generosity on our website. Your donation will allow us to pursue the fellowships, publications and mentoring workshops we mean to provide for those many writers who need our support and encouragement.

Because VIDA is a volunteer-run, non-profit organization, you can be certain that your entire donation will go directly to programming that grows and sustains the work of women writers at every age and stage of their literary lives.

Here's the link to our website's donation page. There you can donate safely and quickly by using your credit card or PayPal account:

http://www.vidaweb.org/donate-now

Thank you in advance for your goodwill and support. It means much to those of us who are actively trying to move this important conversation forward. You have our gratitude.

Sincerely,

The VIDA Executive and Directors' Board

at CUNY Graduate Center

in Room 9206/9207

365 Fifth Avenue, NYC

This series of talks on queer poetics, titled in honor of Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick, explores the relationship between queer writing/artmaking process, pedagogy, and the manifesto.

Jonathan Goldberg is Arts and Sciences Distinguished Professor in the Department of English at Emory University, where he also is Director of Studies in Sexualities. He recently edited Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick's THE WEATHER IN PROUST, published by Duke University Press. His most recent book is THE SEEDS OF THINGS, published by Fordham University Press. A monograph on Alfred Hitchcock's STRANGERS ON A TRAIN is forthcoming from Arsenal Pulp Press.

Byron Kim was born in La Jolla, California in 1961 and received a B.A. in English at Yale in 1983. Kim's large painting installation called "Synecdoche," which depicts human skin color was included in the 1993 Whitney Biennial. Kim is represented in New York by James Cohan Gallery and in Seoul by PKM. He presented solo exhibitions at both galleries in 2012. Among the awards Kim has received are The Louise Nevelson Award in Art from the American Academy of Arts and Letters (1993), the Louis Comfort Tiffany Foundation Award (1994), the New York Foundation for the Arts Grant (1994), the National Endowment for the Arts Award (1995), the Joan Mitchell Foundation Grant (1997), and the Alpert Award in the Arts (2008).

Michael Moon is the author of Darger's Resources, out from Duke Press in March 2012, as well as Disseminating Whitman (1991) and A Small Boy and Others: Imitation and Initiation in American Culture from Henry James to Andy Warhol (1998). The editor of the Norton Critical Edition of Leaves of Grass, he teaches American Studies and Queer Studies at Emory University.

St. Patrick's Day event

Thu 8 Mar 2012

A CELEBRATION OF WORD AND MUSIC, for

St. Patrick's Day,
Saturday, March 17th, 2012
10:30 a.m.

CLOQUET PUBLIC LIBRARY,
320 Fourteenth Street,
Cloquet, Minnesota,
U.S.A., 55720 - 2051

St. Patrick's Day will be celebrated with a literary reading and traditional Irish music at the Cloquet Public Library at 10:30 a.m., Saturday, March 17th. American-Irish author and Cloquet native Séamas Cain will read from his recently published poetry-novel “The Dangerous Islands.” The reading will be accompanied by music performed on the Celtic harp and penny whistle by Mary Hagen and Linda Crumpton.

All proceeds from the sale of “The Dangerous Islands” at this event will go to support the Programming Department at the Cloquet Public Library.

Séamas Cain is a poet, playwright, conceptual artist, performance artist, and theater director, who has written about Ireland for many years. Born in Cloquet, he has been active in Irish artistic and political circles since his first involvements in Northern Ireland in the 1960s. The Northern Ireland conflict, known as “The Troubles,” was an early focus of his essays, pamphlets, and manifestos. In an essay written in Northern Ireland in 1968, Cain expressed his understanding of the struggle of the Irish Civil Rights Movement as a hope to create a non-violent and humanist movement against the tyranny of the British Establishment while deploring the “mindless violence” of the paramilitaries.

Ireland's struggles form the backdrop of his most recent work, “The Dangerous Islands.” “The Dangerous Islands” is an unconventional novel that combines aspects of various genres, including poetry and play script, in conveying the experience of a young Irish-American man from 1965 to 1998.

Francis M. Carroll, author of “The Fires of Autumn : The Cloquet-Moose Lake Disaster of 1918” and “Crossroads in Time : A History of Carlton County, Minnesota,” has written that Cain's novel “invites the reader into a kaleidoscope of colors, sounds and images. The experience is both intensely personal and cosmic. Séamas Cain's work comes out of the world of ancient Celtic sagas, out of the séances of William Butler Yeats, out of T.S. Eliot's desert wastelands, and especially out of James Joyce's play with language. He takes the reader to mysterious islands, as well as dangerous islands.”

Mr. Cain has been the recipient of grants from the IMRAM Festival in Ireland, the Minnesota State Arts Board, the McKnight Foundation, and the Arrowhead Regional Arts Council, among other organizations. He describes his novel as “a non-Classic coming-of-age tale. It is a story of self-education and self-development, with convictions and disillusionment. But it resists all pigeonholing, for it is also a novel of ideas ranging across literature, philosophy and politics.”

“The Dangerous Islands” has been published in Ireland by The Red Jasper Press, an independent publishing house under the curatorship of Dr. Kit Fryatt, lecturer in English at the Mater Dei Institute of Education, a part of Dublin City University. Dr. Fryatt organizes activities of the Irish Centre for Poetry Studies, in which Mr. Cain has contributed. The book's preface has been written by American-Irish poet Sheila E. Murphy.

Mary Hagen has been a local harper for many years. Linda Crumpton is a member of a Celtic music group that performs regularly at Carmody's Irish Pub in Duluth, Minnesota. Both musicians are Cloquet residents.

Copies of “The Dangerous Islands” are available through Berkeley Books of Paris, France; Housmans Bookshop in London, England; Boekie Woekie of Amsterdam, The Netherlands; The Loft Bookshop and Gregory Carr Books in Dublin; Magers & Quinn in Minneapolis, Minnesota; and the UMD Bookstores in Duluth. Thu 8 Mar 2012

Dear friends:

Ron Silliman will be visiting the Writers House on Monday/Tuesday, March 19 and 20 as our second Kelly Writers House Fellow of 2012. (The first was Karen Finley in mid-February; the third will be John Barth in late April.)

Ron will give a reading at 6:30 PM on Monday, March 19, in the Arts Cafe (main program room) of the Writers House at 3805 Locust Walk here in Philadelphia.

I will interview Ron and moderate a discussion with him the next morning, Tuesday March 20, starting at 10 AM. The program will begin with a brunch and continue with the one-hour discussion.

Both events will be webcast live: http://writing.upenn.edu/wh/multimedia/tv/ . (The Tuesday program's webcast begins at 10:30 AM eastern time. The Monday evening reading begins exactly on time at 6:30 PM eastern time.)

There are a few seats left at each of the two events. RSVP to [redacted] to reserve seats. Or call [redacted].

Millay Colony Weekend Workshop in NYC with Rachel Levitsky & Christian Hawkey

Fri 9 Mar 2012

Millay Colony Weekend Workshop in NYC with Rachel Levitsky and Christian Hawkey: April 14& 15; Performance/Documentation on April 28

Christian Hawkey and RachelLevitsky, co-founders of the Officeof Recuperative Strategies (OoRS) will share their research into strategiesthat intervene and repurpose the brutality of techno-capitalism's obsessionwith speed, newness, able-bodiedness, originality, and innovation. Our focus asa class will be to encourage a memory-based politics that draws on poeticthought to invent new fields of vitality, desire, and dwelling. A wide range ofrecuperative strategies and media will be supported in this workshop (bring allideas and projects in process!), including such practice-based interventions asarchive investigation, field-research and recording, digital sampling, and therealignment of author/reader, subject/object positions. Writers of all genresare welcome. Participants will be sent an advance list of links to existingrecuperative strategies and supportive texts. The workshop will documentresearch and creative production and will conclude with a performance!

+The Office of Recuperative Strategies (OoRS) is a mobile organization that explores ways to affirm and promote the cultural reuse, perversification, reanimation, revivication and reparation of extinct, endangered, correctable cultural phenomena.++

Christian Hawkey has written two full-length poetrycollections (The Book of Funnels and Citizen Of, both from Wave Books), fourchapbooks, and the cross-genre book Ventrakl (2010, Ugly Duckling Presse). In2006 he received a Creative Capital Innovative Literature Award. In 2008 he wasa DAAD Artist-in-Berlin Fellow. He translates contemporary German poetry, andwith the German poet Uljana Wolf he translates the Austrian writer IlseAichinger. His own work has been translated into over a dozen languages.

Rachel Levitsky is the author of Neighbor (Ugly DucklingPresse, 2009), Under the Sun (Futurepoem Books, 2002), and DEARLY (A+BendPress, 1999). Her book The Story of My Accident Is Ours is forthcoming fromFuture Poem Books. In 1999, Rachel started Belladonna* as a reading series atthe Bluestockings Women's Bookstore. She is now a founding member of theBelladonna* Collaborative.

This is a Millay Colony Weekend Workshop at Trisha Brown Studios in Manhattan. These two-day/eight-hourworkshops offer intensive sessions with some of the most exciting teachingartists around.

Weekend Workshop Schedule: We will begin each four-hour class at 10:00with coffee, tea and a lot of ideas about a lively, focused, smart writing andart practice. Total workhop time is eight hours or sixteen hours for a doubleclass. Lunch is served at each class and the day ends at 3:00 PM.

Weekend Fees: $350 for the full three dates.

To Apply: Send a letter of introduction including a brief bio with a $50 deposit.Also include a work sample (10 pages of writing or links to online work).Applicants will be accepted on a first-come first-serve basis.

Belladonna Hosts Juliana Spahr & tc tolbert: April 3, NYC*

Mon 12 Mar 2012

Juliana Spahr, tc tolbert Poem. Body. Planet. Need.
April 3, 7pm
Â
How can we, as poets, take care of ourselves, our creative work, and the larger planetary body on which we depend? Juliana Spahr and tc tolbert read from new work and discuss. This event is part of the 2011-2012 Belladonna* Material Lives season which calls attention to the material life of the artist, as person, who, in addition to being creator/conspirator to a body of work, possesses a physical body, and real financial, medical and social needs. Bring questions and desire.
Â
Juliana Spahr is the author of Well Then There Now (Black Sparrow Press, 2011); This Connection of Everyone with Lungs (University of California Press, 2005); Fuck Youâ€"Alohaâ€"I Love You(Wesleyan University Press, 2001); and Response (Sun & Moon Press, 1996), winner of the National Poetry Series Award.
Â
TC Tolbert is a genderqueer, feminist poet and teacher committed to social justice. S/he is a member of Movement Salon, a compositional improvisation group in Tucson, and is the Interview Curator forTrickhouse, an online multi-genre publication. TCâ€™s chapbook, territories of folding, was recently published by Kore Press. His manuscript, Gephyromania, is forthcoming from Ahsahta Press. His poems can be found in Volt, The Pinch, Drunken Boat, Shampoo, A Trunk of Delirium, jubilat, andEOAGH. S/he is the creator of Made for Flight, a youth empowerment project that utilizes creative writing and kite building to commemorate murdered transgender people and dismantle homophobia and transphobia.

Cheryl Pallant's newest poetry collection, Continental Drifts, is now out from BlazeVox Books.

http://www.blazevox.org/index.php/Shop/Poetry/continental-drifts-by-cheryl-pallant-286/

"Like tectonic plates drifting apart and colliding, Cheryl Pallant’s language in Continental Drifts shatters into microcosmic worlds and re-coalesces into new contours, expressing desire afresh. The ceaseless motion of destruction and re-alignment, of fertility and quiescence, is also the engine that propels speech into meanings yet just as soon incinerates them. In Pallant’s exquisitely musical streams of thought, forces in different realms coincide"... Camille Martin new from above/ground press: Shikibu Shuffle, a collaboration between Andrew Burke and Phil Hall

Wed 14 Mar 2012

Shikibu Shuffle
Andrew Burke and Phil Hall
$4

published in Ottawa by above/ground press March 2012
a/g subscribers receive a complimentary copy

Happy fate brought a poet from Perth Western Australia and a poet from Perth Ontario Canada together in 2009.

Then Andrew had a heart attack and was queued up for life-saving surgery.

With nothing to do but wait, kept alive by sprays and medical potions to distract himself Andrew agreed to work with Phil on a collaboration.

Andrew suggested the Japanese court poet Murasaki Shikibu ([redacted]); her 5-line form might be a place to start.

Phil was thinking of Ornette Coleman: two quartets facing each other and going at it (1960).

We wrote in 5s back and forth, then shuffled our silence-inducing cacophony into 10s, then improvised from there...

Andrew's operation was bumped once, and then happened. He's fine.

The shuffle served its purpose, and now surprises and delights them both.

Andrew Burke was born in Victoria, but raised in Western Australia. Since the mid-Sixties, he has published nine collections of poetry. His most recent book of poems is QWERTY- take my word for it (Mulla Mulla Press, 2011). He has also published short stories, a novel, and criticism. He has lectured at universities in Australia and China. Readers may read his daily musings at http://hispirits.blogspot.com/

Phil Hall is the 2011 winner of the Governor General's Award for Poetry in English for his book Killdeer (BookThug). Other recent titles are The Little Seamstress (Pedlar Press, 2010) and White Porcupine (Bookthug, 2007). He is a member of the Writers' Union of Canada. Everything escapes him.

Cave Canem Loft -- Thursday, 29 March 2012 @ 7 PM

Wed 14 Mar 2012

Celebrate the launch of Cave Canem fellow Opal Palmer Adisa's latest collection, Painting Away Regrets (Peepal Tree Press), in a rare New York appearance. Alice Walker has described her work as â€œsolid, visceral, important stories written with integrity and love.â€ Joining her will be Cave Canem fellows R. Erica Doyle and Dareel Alejandro Holnes and special guest, Jacqueline Bishop. Book signing & reception to follow.Â

Place: Cave Canem Loft, 20 Jay Street, Suite 310-A, Brooklyn, NY
Date: Â Thursday, 29 March 2012
Time: 7:00 PM

$5-10 suggested donation. Wheelchair accessible.

Hosted by LaTasha N. Nevada Diggs and Metta SÃ¡ma

Bios:

An award-winning poet and prose writer OPAL PALMER ADISA has fourteen titles to her credit, which includes It Begins With Tears (1997), Caribbean Erotic and I Name Me Name (Peepal Tree Press). She has been a resident artist in internationally acclaimed residencies such as El Gounda (Egypt), Sacatar Institute (Brazil) and Tryon Center, (North Carolina) and Headlines Center for the Arts (California, USA). Opal Palmer Adisaâ€™s work has been reviewed by Ishmael Reed, Al Young, and Alice Walker (Color Purple), who described her work as â€œsolid, visceral, important stories written with integrity and love.â€ Following in the tradition of the African "griot" Opal Palmer Adisa, an accomplished storyteller, commands the mastery and extraordinary talent of storytelling, exemplary of her predecessors. Through her imaginative characterizations of people, places and things, she is able to transport her listeners to the very wonderlands she creates.

The River's Song is JACQUELINE BISHOPâ€™s first novel. She is also the author of two collections of poems, Fauna and Snapshots from Istanbul. Her non-fiction books are My Mother Who Is Me: Life Stories from Jamaican Women in New York and Writers Who Paint/Painters Who Write: Three Jamaican Artists. An accomplished visual artist with exhibitions in Belgium, Morocco, USA and Italy, Ms. Bishop was a 2008-2009 Fulbright Fellow to Morocco; the 2009-2010 UNESCO/Fulbright Fellow; and is a full time Master Teacher in the Liberal Studies Program at New York University.

R. ERICA DOYLEâ€™s work has appeared in Best American Poetry, Best Black Womenâ€™s Erotica, Our Caribbean: A Gathering of Gay and Lesbian Writing from the Antilles, among others. She has received grants from the Hurston/Wright Foundation, the Astraea Lesbian Writers Fund. She was a New York Foundation for the Arts Poetry Fellow and a fellow of Cave Canem. Her debut poetry collection, proxy, is forthcoming from Belladonna* Books in 2013.Â

DARREL ALEJANDRO HOLNES is a poet, performer, and playwright. His work has been featured in TIME Magazine, The Caribbean Writer, and the Best American Poetry blog. He has a degree in creative writing from the University of Michigan. He is the recipient of the Bread Loaf Writers Conference scholarship and is a Cave Canem fellow. More information about his performance work with Preston Witt can be found atÂ darrelandpreston.com.--Â soliciting e-contribution : remediating the social (please circulate further)

Wed 14 Mar 2012

I have a hystory of making work out of materials sourced from multiple contributors.

During the past three years I have been performing live texts using projected text-image sequences as a springboard for interdisciplinary improvised performance. In essence these are lo-fi pieces that combine various approaches to textual enactment and reenactment through interpretation, tonal semantics, commentary, extended vocalization, song . . . somewhat exploring the borderlands between a lecture, a paper, a talk, a poem and a graphic score. Those who have witnessed any of this work will also know that i do not stand to one side of the projections but stand in them, and that i incrementally incorporate documentation into each successive version, to the extent that i do what the fabulous photographer Jo Spence urged; i put myself in the picture. The writing gets all over my body. The resultant highly embodied work gradually includes interventions by others and the status of variant documentation of the work being made becomes part of the emergent and ongoing text.

I am making a piece of work for the ELMCIP conference Remediating the Social and i need your help to make it. My title is remediating the social and I want the perspectives presented by the piece, as i explore what remediating the social might mean, to be as radically inclusive as possible. Hence I am seeking massively multiple contributions of material.

I will credit everybody who participates, in every instantiation of the work produced (i hope in the end to include aspects of this piece in an electronic book too). Something approximating this call for contributions will accompany every version of the work, listing all those who contributed to its making (unless people self-identify as wishing not to be listed).

Here's how you can help (please feel free to contribute one or the other or both):

1. email me an image (a sourced photo or a photo you take, or a drawing you make or an animated gif you assemble . .) that says something (for you) about the concept and or your understanding of the meaning and interpretation and/or experience of remediation

2. tweet me @friedpudding (if you have a twitter account and if you do not have a twitter account then email me a short text (no more than 140 characters)) offering your thoughts on / critiques of / aspirations for . . . the social

- IF you have more to say than can be constrained by 140 characters then please send me a sequence of texts and i will deal with them in those units

N.B. I am circulating this invitation widely and it is expected that many contributions will be critical . . do not be concerned about being critical, jaded, cynical, silly, obstructive . . . DO use multiple languages and languages other than English if you so wish . .

Deadline: March 31st. I hope to begin making the work during April and will continue during the summer. I might circulate a second call, but i'm hoping that I can get enough contributions to begin to work with asap.

I will subsequently work with whatever materials i receive to develop a live presentation for the conference in Glasgow. I will be sharing this as work in progress at the UCF ELMCIP seminar - Arnolfini Bristol, on Friday May 4 and show the work at the Edinburgh College of Art, October 31 - November 2, 2012.

THANK YOU so much, in advance hugely looking forwards,

cris

Pamela Lu Reading in Chicago

Wed 14 Mar 2012

---

*Kenning Editions happily welcomes Pamela Lu to Chicago, for a rare visit to the Midwest, reading from her novel /Ambient Parking Lot/ (2011). * Sunday, April 22nd, 4:00 PM at the Logan Square Comfort Station, 2579 N. Milwaukee Avenue. The event is free and the venue is ADA accessible.

Ambient Parking Lot is a 187-page book about one band's quest to capture the world's most perfect ambient noise in a parking lot. Wait, don't go away! It's great ... I swear. It's dizzying, really, and hilarious. ---Cooper Berkmoyer, /San Francisco Bay Guardian / Lu's book looks at the cerebral struggle of artmaking and of ambient music: as struggle between the problems of the language of the individual and the language of the collective. ---Devin King, /Make Magazine / The Ambient Parkers' yen for recognition seems to be a residual effect of their desire to create something that matters, but what their message or the content of that matter might be is always skirted over or slides into something new. In this way, Lu captures---and mocks as well, perhaps, but lovingly---the existential pretenses of artistic endeavors. In the end, Lu suggests that despite the absurdities and shifting metamorphoses inherent in human effort, the greatest grace and sense of humanity comes from attending, from recognizing that the deathly silence we fear is in fact fully populated and alive once we quiet ourselves. By the novel's end, ambience takes on new meaning, and doesn't require our torturously theorized amplifications but graces us when we quietly acknowledge it. ---Sueyeun Juliette Less, /The Constant Critic/

What I love about Lu's work is her sharp wit, subtle delivery and deadpan hilarity, which you have to slow down and listen for in order to fully appreciate. Thus, parked, I listened. ---Jai Arun Ravine, /Lantern Reviews / Part fiction, part earnest mockumentary, /Ambient Parking Lot/ <http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/9780976736431/ambient-parking-lot.aspx> follows a band of musicians as they wander the parking structures of urban downtown and greater suburbia in quest of the ultimate ambient* *noise, one that promises to embody their historical moment and deliver them up to the heights of their self-important artistry. Along the way, they make sporadic forays into lyric while contending with doubts, delusions, miscalculations, mutinies, and minor triumphs. This saga peers into the wreckage of a post 9/11 landscape and embraces the comedy and poignancy of failed utopia.

/Ambient Parking Lot/ is the much anticipated second book by Pamela Lu. Portions of this book were previously published in /Chicago Review/ and /Harper's/. She is also the author of/ Pamela: A Novel /and /The Private Listener/, a chapbook from Corollary Press. /Pamela: A Novel /is on the decade's bestsellers list from Small Press Distribution, and has been taught in a number of literature and creative writing classes. Her writing also appears in the anthologies /Bay Poetics/ and /Biting the Error/, and has been published in periodicals such as /1913/, /Antennae/, /Call/, /Chain/, and /Fascicle/. She lives and works in the San Francisco Bay Area.

On Pamela Lu's previous novel---"/Pamela: A Novel/ is one of the finest books to emerge from the ardent, experimental writing scene in the Bay Area . . . Lu builds a social space and founds a society."---/The Stranger/ / "Reading the word 'I' in this novel becomes a mystical experience---an invitation to connect to the 'I' in all of us . . . This is a work of 'precision,' as Robert Musil would say, 'in matters of the soul.' It extends the novel's capacity to think."---/Rain Taxi Review of Books/ / "Lu, in her debut, . . . [creates] a precise and humorous elegy to the self, and to its self-subversions . . . This is a book of extraordinary philosophical subtlety and clarity, one that manages to tell a beautiful story in spite of itself."---/Publishers Weekly/

Comfort Station <http://http//www.comfortstationlogansquare.com/> is a turn-of-the-century structure turned multidisciplinary arts space in the heart of Chicago's Logan Square. Originally a resting place for tired travelers, it now plays host to artists from all walks of life, and to anyone with an interesting idea. As the only structure of its kind still standing along the entire boulevard system, Comfort Station represents the preservation of a neighborhood rich in history, while playing host to exhibitions and events that promote its present culture.

In Chicago, shoppers can find Ambient Parking Lot at Saki <http://sakistore.net/>and Quimby's <http://www.quimbys.com/>.

Thanks, Murat! If you're interested, I've now updated that post with two items. The second one says the pond will now be renamed; the probably more interesting one mentions a the case of equipping the word "Negro" (originally an adjective with a small n, then a noun with a capital n) with a brand new adjective: "Negroic."

But oh yes I do wish the Democrats had started saying "Publican Party" back in the 1940s, when the idea was proposed. Nobody reads the King James Bible now, but seventy years ago people would have gotten the allusion: "thieves and publicans."

CEREBUS THE BARBARIAN MESSIAH: ESSAYS ON THE EPIC GRAPHIC SATIRE OF DAVE SIM AND GERHARD
Edited by Eric Hoffman

About the Book In December 1977, struggling Canadian comic book artist Dave Sim self-published the first issue of Cerebus the Aardvark, and Conan the Barbarian satire featuring a foul-tempered, sword-wielding creature trapped in a human world. Over the next 26 years, Sim, and later collaborator Gerhard, produced an epic 6,000-page graphic novel, the longest-running English language comic series by a single creative team. They revolutionized the comics medium by showing other artists that they too could forgo major publishers, paving the way for such successes as Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles and Bone. This in-depth work, the first collection of critical essays on Cerebus, provides a multifaceted approach to Sim and Gerhardï¿½s complex and entertaining oeuvre, including their innovative use of the comic medium, storytelling and satiric techniques, technical and visual sophistication, and Simï¿½s use of the comic as commentary on gender and religion. About the Author Eric Hoffman, a poet and essayist, is the author of six books and lives in Connecticut.

Prisonhouse of Age

Something has to be said about age and ageism, which is so pervasive in our culture, that we're held down, tied up, unable to move. I'm told I look good for my age; that I play like a much younger person. In a performance I hear that a dancer, who died at 68, was in the middle of the end of her life. A friend says that his uncle dying at the age of 72, is quite old. Grandfathers and grandmothers on tv always look to retirement and playing with the kids. Television ads are increasingly aimed towards drugging us, those over 60 say, because of a variety of ailments we don't have. We're frightened of falling and not getting up. We're no longer mid-career artists, but a dying generation. We're waiting for the end. Friends say that now we're waiting for us to die off, that every day brings news of new deaths and again this isn't true. The rhetoric is hurtful and isn't meant to be hurtful. The rhetoric is made out of bits and pieces of the 'natural' progression from birth to death. We're the AARP generation. We're the baby boomers are are demanding to suck social welfare dry. We don't do anything. We're not worth listening to. We're hippies and repeat the 60s. We just love listening to 60s music which formed us. We're part of the social welfare state. Some of us who fought in Vietnam are an embarrassment. Some of us who didn't are an embarrassment. On tv we're told that 'all we have is our stories.'

If this happened to anyone at any age, the result would be unbearable. We're not taken seriously. We're all waiting for us to pass away. We have to prove ourselves repeatedly. We're the result of hidden prejudice. We're on the way to dementia. We're on the way to Alzheimer's. We're told our short-term memory isn't what it used to be. In the most well-meaning areas of popular culture, we're forgetful. Our bones are weak and ready to fracture. We have to exercise more. Our family has to be everything. We're not eligible for grants and for jobs. We're eligible to die and the sooner we do that, the less the embarrassment. In fact embarrassment is the key to everything; we embarrass others. If we're sexual it's a joke. If we remarry it's a joke. If we refuse our assigned place in the family it's a joke.

I first ran into ageism at the age of 30, applying for a job as editor of an art mag in Los Angeles. I've always been sensitive to it because I've always been told I look and act 'younger than my age.' Now the violence of age, an assigned number, a number we can't do anything about - almost but not quite like the color of our skin - is foregrounded. I get turned down for jobs because of it, illegal but of course there are always ways around it.

My own feeling? If I can't do something now, just as if I couldn't do something at 20, then so be it; I don't belong where doing that thing is impossible. But otherwise, leave me alone, judge me on what I make, what I say, and leave goddamn age out of it. Don't call me a generation and don't tell me my best days are behind me. Don't tell me I'm in my golden years.

This may all seem minor, idiotic, to you. You have no idea, at least in the US, how pervasive this is. There are pockets of resistance - Eyebeam for example, where I was resident until a week or two ago, is a healthy exception. But almost everywhere, the codes are in place, they're suffocating. I'm offered seats on the subway - because of age, not because I need them. People condescent, smile at me, since apparently I'm no longer sexual, have no desires, know my place. I'm told I'm a child again, that the elderly are child-like. I'm told I'm living on borrowed time. I'm told there's not much time left. I'm told I should be grateful. I'm told I have a loving family. I'm told my grandchildren are my future. I'm told my children are my future. I'm told I have no future.

I'm told about generations, that I'm of this or that generation, that it's now the turn of a new generation. I'm told what our generation thinks and I can't recognize that. I'm told repeatedly that we were born before the digital age, that we think differently. The fact this isn't true, none of this is true, with people I know and I'm sure millions of people in this country, is irrelevant. I'm lectured _to._ I'm talked _to._ I'm taken out of the realm of instrumental thinking, consigned to a real which is a total mirage, told to act my age and behave myself. People don't tell me to retire, but they assume I'm headed that way. My theoretical work is assumed dated, somewhere back probably with existentialism or Bateson. My mind is supposedly elderly. Am I repeating myself? Did I forget something here? Should I send a birthday gift? Should I ask a grandson or daughter to drive for me, since I'm constantly running off the road? Should I start preparing for the end? Should I become a consumer of culture, preferably old tv shows and books, instead of a producer? It's remarkable how well I look for my age! It's remarkable I haven't had any major medical problems yet, but wait, they're just around the corner. Do I have enough money to do nothing? Should I do nothing? Should I worry about my IRA?

I don't expect this to change, not even with radicalism on the rise among people I know. But I do want to say this - that when you see someone, at any age, turning towards senility or depression, you might ask yourself what happened to that person, how is that person perceived - by his or her family or friends, by others in the community, by granting organizations or hiring committees. You might look at studies of enforced helplessness, you might think for a moment how age, like race, manifests itself today - age more violently than ever, since we're assumed to be non-productive, eating away at the very foundations of civil digital society, of whatever's left of the commons, of the fabric of the sentient city.

What I'm talking about is being called a 'geezer' or 'old geezer' or 'old man' with all the nastiness that implies. This isn't true of everyone, of course, but it's miserable enough, that it's true across the board. In the culture industry, such as it is, you either become blue-chip and/or elder- statesman or woman, or you sink into oblivion. If I go into a gallery, I'm immediately sized up in a certain way that parallels the not-so-subtle hatreds against race in the 1930s. I recognize the violence of that parallel itself, but there's no other way to describe it. Lyotard called this kind of situation the differend, and there's been writing on and off about the stigma that's applicable. We carry a sign on our foreheads, a sign not of our own making or choosing, but one imposed on us culturally. Whatever we do or accomplish is under or within the sign. Whatever we say is already signed, assigned.

I'm sick of this, and this rant, so to speak, is nothing more than an expression of that sickness. And I'm well aware that nothing will be done about it, although things _can_ be done about it. I'm tired of ageist remarks being 'let slip' accompanied by apologies. We have no slogans like "we're here and we're queer." We're speechless. We're kept speechless. We're irrelevant, just as this protest is irrelevant.

In the _foreground_ there are all the inadvertent and well-meaning comments, advertising, stereotypes in the media. In the _background_ there are concrete decisions being made against us, but 'benevolently' for us. In the background, Foucauldian power violates the commons. In the back- ground, the Occupiers don't see age as a problem. In the background, they're waiting for our deaths, forgetfulnesses, incapacities, hostels - they're waiting for our silencing. The _they_ is the Heideggarian They, the They of doxa, the They of the obdurate, idiotic inert. The they is always well-meaning; the They knows what's best for us.

On and on: This would kill _anyone,_ this misreading, misrecognition, deprivation, fun-house mirror. Some people can ignore it altogether, most of us can't. We live within a social order of _continuous violation._ And there's no way out.

- Alan

Diane Simmons' short fiction collection, Little America, winner of the 2010 Ohio State University prize for fiction, was published by the Ohio State University Press in June. Her short story, "Yukon River," was a runner-up for the 2010 Missouri Review Editor's Prize. Other short fiction has appeared in numerous journals such as Beloit Fiction Review, Blood Orange Review, and Northwest Review. Her novel, Dreams Like Thunder, won the Oregon Book Award for Fiction. Her novel, Let the Bastards Freeze in the Dark, was published by Simon and Schuster.

In addition, she has published critical biographies on Maxine Hong Kingston and Jamaica Kincaid. Her book, Narcissism of Empire, examined popular British Imperial writing. She holds a BA in History from the University of Oregon, an MA in Creative Writing from the City College of New York, and a Ph.D. in English from the City University of New York.

Read more about Diane Simmons at Dianesimmons.net<http://dianesimmons.net/>.

Burt Kimmelman's seventh collection of poems, The Way We Live (Dos Madres Press, 2011) appeared a few months ago. For over a decade he was Senior Editor of the now defunct Poetry New York: A Journal of Poetry and Translation.

In addition to his poetry, he has published five critical books, two of them monographs including The "Winter Mind": William Bronk and American Letters (Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 1998), and more than eighty articles on medieval, modern, and contemporary poetry. "Taking Dinner to My Mother," a poem from his collection, As If Free (Talisman House, 2009), was featured on NPR's The Writer's Almanac<http://writersalmanac.publicradio.org/index.php?date=2010/04/20>.

Recent interviews of Kimmelman are available online: with Tom Fink in Jacket2<http://jacketmagazine.com/40/iv-kimmelman-ivb-fink.shtml> (text), and with George Spencer at Poetry Thin Air<http://vimeo.com/27710442> (video). OT: Call for Papers: Edited Collection: Primary Stein (Abstracts by May 15, 2012)

Call for Papers: Edited Collection: Primary Stein (Abstracts by May 15, 2012) full name / name of organization:Â
Janet Boyd, Fairleigh
Dickinson University and Sharon Kirsch, Arizona State University contact email:Â [redacted] Abstracts due: May 15, 2012
(500-700 words with CV and short bio)
Â
The overwhelming success of Gertrude Steinâ€™s The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas finally confirmed Steinâ€™s celebrity status in the United States in 1933. Yet she lamented that she had become known less as an important author than as the host of a Parisian salon in which famous writers and European painters gathered amidst her collection of modern art. Her earlier, more challenging writing continued to go unnoticed and unpublished despite the wide public appeal of the autobiography and the success of Virgil Thomsonâ€™s production of Steinâ€™s opera Four Saints in Three Acts in 1934. Her growing popularity in the United States induced the reluctant Stein to return for a lecture tour through which she would introduce her more obscure work to an American audienceâ€”even if it meant having to explain it to them.

As she tells us, she â€œwant[ed] readers not collectors. . . she want[ed] her books read not ownedâ€ (Autobiography 301).
Â
Even so, few scholars took serious interest in Stein before the mid-twentieth century, and, even then, the criticism that emerged tended to make Stein herself the main subject. In the later 1970s and throughout the 1980s, Steinâ€™s writing began to receive attention from a variety of scholars: those who sought to align her literary aims with the Cubist painters; feminists who read her work as a challenge to patriarchal language; and critics who examined Steinâ€™s writing as a more general subversion of the process of signification. In the 1990s, Stein criticism turned its focus to how her writing engages issues of American national and/or cultural identity. As Lisa Ruddick observes, â€œwork in a cultural studies mode. . . moved the conversation about Steinâ€™s artistic innovations beyond a sense of her offering a challenge to patriarchy in the abstractâ€ and into â€œlarger cultural fieldsâ€”fields defined by discourses of race and ethnicityâ€ (Modern Fiction Studies 648). Â Â
Â
Most recently, Stein the celebrity has re-emerged. Her life has again become the focus of scholarly inquiry in articles, books and exhibits: Steinâ€™s politics, Steinâ€™s friendships, Stein the collector, and Stein the visual icon. Popular interest in Stein has of late generated The Steins Collect museum exhibit, a childrenâ€™s book celebrating her writing, a novel told from the perspective of Stein and Toklasâ€™s Vietnamese cook, and Stein as a character in the Woody Allen film Midnight in Paris. In addition, Seeing Gertrude Stein, the companion book to the current exhibit of the same name, creates a cultural and visual portrait of Stein, rendering â€œa richly complex womanâ€ whose â€œcontradictions ran deepâ€ (7). No doubt, these recent examinations enrich and complicate our understanding of Stein and of how we might read her work, as she implores us to do.

Â
Here, in response to these current trends, we seek to assemble a collection of essays that turns the lens back on Steinâ€™s writing, in and across all genres in which she wrote. We are interested in scholarly essays that take Steinâ€™s primary works as their core analytical focus. We do not suggest jettisoning contextual approaches, but we do encourage inquiry into the writing itself, in all its historical trajectories and discursive iterations. Essays might ask what it is we learn from the tensions produced in Steinâ€™s work in order to expand fields of inquiry and transform the ways we can read, write about, and teach her writing.
Â
The editors are pleased to report that this project has already received attention from a scholarly press. Please send abstracts of 500-700 words (final essays to range from 4,000-8,000 words), brief bios, and CVs to Janet Boyd ([redacted]) and/or Sharon Kirsch ([redacted]) by May 15,

POETRY READING AT THE POETRY PROJECT MARCH 28TH AT 8 PM

Thu 15 Mar 2012

Dear friends and colleagues,

I will be reading at the Poetry Project on Wednesday, March 28th at 8 PM from /This Constellation Is A Name: Collected Poems 1965-2010/ just published by Nightboat

Books.

Some advance notice on /This Constellation Is A Name/:

"Full-throated praise for this remarkable accomplishment, a generous tome of over a half century's life and astute consciousness in poetry. Michael Heller is one of our best poets and thinkers who has carried Oppen's dictum that poetry embodies "precise information on existence" forward. His erudition and scope astound: Jewish mysticism finds company with Baudelaire and TibetHis modes are various and true, and constellate fully realized an experimental/ philosophical/profound Lyric. ---Anne Waldman

"To conceive otherwise," says Michael Heller, is the poet's essential task, to which he has apprenticed himself for nearly fifty years. No matter if the poem is brief or extended, the line long or short, the setting Manhattan or the Colorado Rockies, a lost Bialystok or an imagined Tibet---what arises from the page is an action of mind, an asking, questing trajectory, tracked with uncanny surety by movement of the poetic line. This is no language-locked adventure, but an impassioned, ethical /listening/ to the mind---and the world---at work in words. ---Susan Tichy

Reading with me will be Kristin Prevallet the author of /I, Afterlife:An Essay/ and other volumes.

The Poetry Project is located in St. Mark's Church at the corner of 2nd Avenue and East Tenth Street in Manhattan (call [redacted] for more information).

Apropos of Gertrude in Woody Allen's new movie "Midnight In Paris" did anyone catch the line spoken by the Hemingway character saying to the writer protagonist: "Don't give your manuscript to a writer. If it's good I'll hate it because I'm envious. If it's bad I'll hate it because it's bad. You should give it to Gertrude Stein."

The shocking not-so-sub sub-text is that Stein was not a writer. A consummate reader perhaps, but (at least in Hemingway's mind, if not Woody Allen's) not a writer. Pretty bizarre for me--since I grew up loving Stein and denigrating Hemingway.

A student asked if I knew of any intersex or transgender poets and I must confess I didn't have any names at my fingertips.
Can anyone out there post (or back-channel) names that come to mind?
Thanks in advance.

Gregory Betts: 3/21 University at Buffalo, Poetics+ Small Press in the Archive Lecture Series
Sun 18 Mar 2012

Small Press in the Archive Lecture Series presents

Wednesday @ 3:00 pm
"Material Matters: Textual Intersections Between the Avant-Garde and the Archive" Gregory Betts
420 Capen, The Poetry Collection, University at Buffalo

Gregory Betts is the author of *Avant-Garde Canadian Literature: The Early Manifestations *(University of Toronto Press, 2012, in press). He has edited four books of early Canadian experimental writing, each of which emerged from extensive unpublished materials discovered in archives across Canada. He is also an experimental poet and has published five books of poetry. His 2009 book The Others Raisd in Me (Pedlar Press) extracts 150 new poems from Shakespeare's Sonnet 150 through the "plunderverse" method. He is an Associate Professor of English at Brock University in St. Catharines, Ontario, where he also serves as the Director of the Centre for Canadian Studies.

Small Press in the Archive Lecture Series dedicates itself to the study of poetry outside the traditional literary historical plot. The lectures inthis series draw on materials in The Poetry Collection, at SUNY Buffalo in order to explore community/discourse formations, the status of ephemera and the making of genre, the conditions of literary production, transatlantic cross-pollinations in and between specific magazines, the careers of poets, the role of book art, and how the little magazine functions in the making of the avant-garde.

hello to Burt et al--maybe some of you will want to go on after hearing Kurt and Diane S-- Geoffrey O'Brien and I are reading & some terrific musicians are playing at Douglass St. Studios in Gowanus, Brooklyn, also Sat Mar 24 but at 9--so run over if you are so inclined. Musicians include Noah Preminger, Derek Beckvold, Eric Lane, Matt Plummer, Bob Johnson--saxes, trombone, keyboard, drums. Geoffrey is the editor of Library of America and has published many books of poetry, fiction, and non-fiction. I do stuff, too.

Resinations

Javant Biarujia

72 pages

Cover design by Sheila E. Murphy

Otoliths, 2012

ISBN: 978-0-9872010-1-0

$13.95 + p&h

URL:
http://www.lulu.com/shop/javant-biarujia/resinations/paperback/product-18929536.html

Javant Biarujia's latest collection, "Resinations", takes the reader on a roller-coaster ride through, mostly, Western (pop) art, culture and politics, from Kant to Dorothy Lamour, the Inquisition to "Leave It to Beaver", Tallahassee to Drancy, and much more. Resinations, itself a neologism, is echoic of resonations — every pun is intended in this collection — as well as resignation, at once an Eastern concept and a Western reality for many an employee. In sixty-four numerologically significant "pantoums" (Biarujia's idea of such at any rate), in which "all pastiche and no parono- / masia makes the past a dull Lautréamont" ("Labdanum"), he mirrors the world back at us, always startling, distinctive, original. His poetry is at times complex and multilayered, but it is always rich, witty and meaningful, what Charles Bernstein has called "quixotically alluring," and Gig Ryan, "fun and mock bawdiness." Or, as Biarujia himself says: "through levity to levitation."

"A subversive master craftsman, [Biarujia] propels the language through a cultural and political labyrinth"— Jaya Savige

"This is a poetry that leads the reader not only in and down but also, through re-sounding, across, crossing boundaries, making unthought of connections, exploring the fertile errata of translation. Biarujia sends out sounds that skip from language to language in a series of transformations/ interactions" — Geraldine McKenzie

"['Calques'] is a compelling, stimulating, intricately wrought, sometimes hauntingly beautiful and often very funny book, written in styles at once globalised and hermetic, archaic and futuristic" — Chris Edwards

"Decadence and postmodernism collide and combine in texts which are inimitably Biarujia" —Kris Hemensley

INTERVIEW

The Art of Fiction No. 216 Bret Easton Ellis â€œAmerican Psycho came out of a place of severe alienation and loneliness and self-loathing. I was pursuing a lifeâ€”you could call it the Gentlemanâ€™s Quarterly way of livingâ€”that I knew was bullshit, and yet I couldnâ€™t seem to help it. American Psycho is a book about becoming the man you feel you have to be, the man who is cool, slick, handsome, effortlessly moving through the world, modeling suits in Esquire, having babes on his arm. Itâ€™s about lifestyle being sold as life, a lifestyle that never seemed to include passion, creativity, curiosity, romance, pain.â€ [5]Read an excerpt â€º Links: 5. http://www.theparisreview.org/interviews/6127/the-art-of-fiction-no-216-bret-easton-ellis

INTERVIEW

The Art of Screenwriting No. 3 Terry Southern â€œI donâ€™t know why, but I always feel a kind of necessity to write things that are beyond acceptance, that are too offensive or something. For people to read them and say, Ha-ha-ha, very funny. No, we canâ€™t print that. I mean, even The Realist has turned down stuff of mine. Iâ€™ve got a piece there now that they turned down a couple years ago. Itâ€™s about Frank Oâ€™Hara, and itâ€™s very weirdâ€”not obscene, but it violates a lot of taboos. Thatâ€™s the whole history of writing, really, trying to emancipate images and language. Itâ€™s not just a question of four-letter wordsâ€”you can get away with thatâ€”but of attitude.â€ [6]Read an excerpt â€º Links: 6. http://www.theparisreview.org/interviews/6126/the-art-of-screenwriting-no-3-terry-southern

FICTION

Wings Lorrie Moore
â€œWalking the dog, she once watched as an excavatorâ€™s mandibled head was released and fell to the ground; the headless neck then leaned down and began to nudge it, as if trying to find out whether it might still be alive. Of course there was an operator, but after that it was hard to think of a creature like that as a machine. When a wall was knocked down and its quiet secrets sent scattering, the lines between things seemed up for grabs.â€

PORTFOLIO

Prabuddha Dasgupta
Geoff Dyer
â€œIn Prabuddha Dasguptaâ€™s photographic series Longing there is a powerful suggestion of travel, of journeys that have merged into a single journey. There is evidence of arrival and departure, but the main sense is of transit, of looking back on what has been left, or forward to what is to come. The photographs are rarely in the moment.
The present tense flickers and is gone.â€

FICTION

The Chair
David Means
â€œThose mornings, with Gunner upstairs asleepâ€”the soft sea-hiss snooze of his breath coming through the baby monitorâ€”I sometimes had that deep, sensual foreboding that came when I thought too much about the short term and the way Gunnerâ€™s days, still fresh and new, his life just starting, stood logarithmically in relation to my own thirty years. A day was one small fragment of my life, and a day for him was a much larger piece of the pie. One day now is a big hunk of his five years on earth, I used to think, I think.â€

POETRY

Five Poems Frederick Seidel
from â€œNightâ€

The city sleeps with the lights on.
The insomniac wants it to be morning.
The quadruple amputee asks the night nurse what time it is.
The woman is asking for her mother,
But the mother is exhausted and asleep and long since dead.
The nun screams to stop the charging rhino
And sits bolt upright in bed
Attached to a catheter.

NYC, 3/28 @ 7pm: Berssenbrugge, Pierce and Choffel read

Tue 20 Mar 2012

Hello all,

Please join us for a very exciting evening on Wednesday, March 28, at 7:00 pm: the launch of our Poets Out Loud Prize books! The reading will take place on the 12th Floor Lounge, Fordham University, Lincoln Center, located at 113 West 60th Street, New York, NY.

Come and enjoy readings from Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge (POL Prize judge), Julie Choffel (winner of 2011 POL Prize), and Michelle Naka Pierce (winner of 2011 POL Editor’s Prize).

Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge was born in Beijing in 1947 and grew up in Massachusetts. Among her books are The Heat Bird (Burning Deck, 1983), Empathy (Station Hill, 1989), Sphericity (Kelsey Street, 1993), Endocrinology (Kelsey Street, 1997) (an artist book with Kiki Smith), Four Year Old Girl (Kelsey Street, 1998), and Nest (Kelsey Street, 2003). I Love Artists: New Selected and Poems was published by University of California Press in 2006.

Julie Choffel grew up in Austin, Texas. A graduate of the MFA Program for Poets and Writers at the University of Massachusetts–Amherst, she has also studied geography, rhetoric, and plant ecology. Her poems have been published in Denver Quarterly, Fairy Tale Review, Make/shift, American Letters & Commentary, and elsewhere; and she is the author of Figures in a Surplus, a chapbook. She teaches creative writing in Connecticut, where she lives with her husband and their daughter.

Born in Japan, Michelle Naka Pierce is the author of seven titles, including She, A Blueprint (2011) and Beloved Integer (2007). Awarded the Poets Out Loud Editor's Prize, Continuous Frieze Bordering Red (Fordham, 2012) documents the migratory patterns of the hybrid as she travels the floating borders in Rothko's Seagram murals. She is associate professor and director of the Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics at Naropa University in Boulder, CO.

RECEPTION & BOOK SIGNING to follow

FREE and open to the public

DIRECTIONS :
A, B, C, D & 1 trains to Columbus Circle. Exit at 60th Street & Broadway and walk one block west . Upon entering the glass doors of the Lincoln Center Campus, inform the security desk that you are attending the "Poets Out Loud" and continue up to the 12th floor.

glossodelia: A performance by Gary Hill & George Quasha

Saturday, March 31, 2012 <http://www.henryart.org/calendar?date=2012-03-31>, 2:00 - 3:30 PM

Henry Auditorium of the Henry Art Gallery in Seattle

http://www.henryart.org/events/show/573

A performance by Gary Hill & George Quasha for multiple cameras, microphones, video projectors, computers, electronic drums (Roland Octapad), Serge Modular, assorted effect boxes, Kinect, software programs Max/MSP/jitter, Process and others all manifesting towards self-reorienting language/sounds/rhythms/images ("axials"), paper and acrylics, and human bodies on the verge.

/What are glossodelia?/ To answer this question beyond the literal meaning of the word---"revealing tongues"---Gary Hill and George Quasha enter into a state of co-performative inquiry by way of what they use for language. This includes just about anything that can be generated in real (and hyperreal) time, such as sound, image, word, gesture, and a range of semi-definable electronic phenomena ("electronic linguistics"). What they generate through various instruments ("psychotropic languaging vehicles") becomes a field of strange attractors ("dynamical lingualia") with a pull toward possible language realities ("lingualities"). They have called it "a pulsational conversation with stepped-up intensity in which Real Time is invited to show its other side."

Come early, stay late! Our wonderful exhibition guides will be offering free guided tours of /glossodelic attractors/ <http://henryart.org/exhibitions/show/1166> before and after the program. Tours will meet in the south gallery at 1pm and 4pm.

Re: Call for Papers: Edited Collection: Primary Stein
Tue 20 Mar 2012

Thanks for that, Crisman. I've read similar critiques, also pointing out that the Stein character doesn't speak with a woman once...

And Allen's view of writers as caricatures, whew. Beyond that, I was most disturbed to see Owen Wilson "transformed" into Allen himself. Who was this bumbling, shoulder shrugging "I don't get it [life]" absurdity and why is he so popular??

Perhaps I'm too unforgiving and oblivious to the "unapologetic conceit," but I found the thing boring and predictable, when it could have been so much more.

Apropos of Gertrude in Woody Allen's new movie "Midnight In Paris" did anyone catch the line spoken by the Hemingway character saying to the writer protagonist: "Don't give your manuscript to a writer. If it's good I'll hate it because I'm envious. If it's bad I'll hate it because it's bad. You should give it to Gertrude Stein."

The shocking not-so-sub sub-text is that Stein was not a writer. A consummate reader perhaps, but (at least in Hemingway's mind, if not Woody Allen's) not a writer. Pretty bizarre for me--since I grew up loving Stein and denigrating Hemingway.

Joan Retallack, although not transgender, has written some amazing ones. Has anyone else heard them? Have they been published yet?

I'd be interested, too, in hearing anyone's suggestions

Second Annual All Poetry is Small Press Poetry Reading! Kick-off the 2012 Buffalo Small Press Book Fair with a poetry reading by small press Publisher/poets mIEKAL aND, Karen Randall & Kyle Schlesinger.

mIEKAL aND lives outside the constraints of academia in the most lush and rural part of the unglaciated Driftless area of southwest Wisconsin. Choosing to focus on creating wilderness and abundance surrounded by the perfect setting for limitless imagination his course of action includes demonstrating alternatives to inbred aesthetics, delighting in the play of DIY culture, and making art and writing that is both anarchic and noisy. aND is the author of numerous books, many available via Xexoxial Editions. After many years working in the realms of digital poetry and video, he has surrendered his role as author and focused exclusively on interactions that allow the author to be reconfigured by the mysteries of the collaborative process, including books with Maria Damon, Sheila Murphy and Geof Huth. Anyone wanting to tap into his stream can find him on Facebook or at Xexoxial Editions

Proprietrix of Propolis Press, Karen Pava Randall has collaborated with Rosmarie Waldrop, Elizabeth Willis, and Nancy Kuhl (among others) & recently launched the Least Weasel chapbook series. She has taught letterpress printing at the Naropa Summer Writing Program and the Centers for Book Arts in Minneapolis, New York, and San Francisco. She is currently experimenting with gum bichromate photography and working on an artist’s book with Lee Ann Brown. Propolis Press andLeast Weasel Chapbooks

Kyle Schlesinger is a poet who writes and lectures on typography and artists’ books. His recent books of poetry include: Commonplace (Cuneiform, 2011); Bad Words to the Radio and Other Poems (Least Weasel, 2011); Picture Day (Electio Editions, 2011); What You Will (NewLightsPress, 2012) and Seeing Things (Chax Press, 2012). In 2010 he curated and authored a catalog entitled Poems & Pictures: A Renaissance in the Art of the Book that traveled from New York, to Houston, to Buffalo, to Chicago. He is proprietor of Cuneiform Press and co-director of the Graduate Program in Publishing at UHV. Cuneiform Press.

Long Poem Mysteriously Appears in the Sumptuous Mist of Collaboration
Tue 20 Mar 2012

Perhaps of interest to a few folks:

mIEKAL aND about his Collaboration Workshop::

Long Poem Mysteriously Appears in the Sumptuous Mist of Collaboration

You heard somewhere that there will be a workshop of live spontaneous collaboration with a little-known post-avant-farmer poet from the outskirts of nowhere and come to the gathering having no expectations of what collaboration could possibly mean or how the author as sole intellect is surrendered to the greater multi-lingual spirit of sound and language and typography dancing unrestrained into the night. Once there, with the curious and inspired contributions of all gathered, a mysterious linguistic object arises as the time passes and the interactions overcome the barriers to unleashing creativity. BRING laptops, pencils, typewriters, iPhones, whatever communication device rocks your world.

Since the year 1999, mIEKAL aND has abandoned the world of the Author in exchange for the exciting and glamorous life of collaborations which dissolve the boundaries between identity, gender and the mysterious abstractions of the afterlife of thought.

Jane Carver is an artist and musician living in Brooklyn. Her works include I've Been Away, Mutter, and Muse-Sick: The Corso Suite.

Serena Chopra
http://www.coloradopoetscenter.org/poets/chopra_serena/drift.html

Serena Chopra's chapbook, Penumbra, is just out from Flying Guillotine Press. She has an M.F.A. from the University of Colorado at Boulder. She has recent publications in The Denver Quarterly, Fact-Simile, Pax Americana, and Umbrella Factory. She has worked with The New Press and is a 2010 Kundiman Fellow. She lives, works, writes, dances, and generally arts around in her native land of Denver.

Philip Metres
http://www.philipmetres.com

Philip Metres' most recent chapbook is Abu Ghraib Arias (Flying Guillotine Press). He is the author of numerous books, including To See the Earth (Cleveland State University), Come Together: Imagine Peace (Bottom Dog Press), and Behind the Lines: War Resistance Poetry on the American Homefront, Since 1941 (University of Iowa Press). His work has appeared in Best American Poetry, and it has garnered an NEA, a Watson Fellowship, two Ohio Arts Council Grants, and The Cleveland Arts Prize in 2010. He teaches literature and creative writing at John Carroll University in Cleveland.

Morgan Lucas Schuldt
http://www.morganlucasschuldt.blogspot.com

Morgan Lucas Schuldt's (1978-2012) most recent chapbook is (as vanish, unespecially) from Flying Guillotine Press. He is the author of Verge, a collection of poems published by Free Verse Editions, and two other chapbooks —Otherhow (Kitchen Press) and L=u=N=G=U=A=G=E (Scantily Clad Press). He was the cofounder of CUE, a journal of prose poems, and CUE Editions, a poetry press.

Boog City
http://www.boogcity.com/

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 21st year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women's writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea's ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB's, The Knitting Factory, and The Sidewalk Café. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

The Star-Spangled Banner, a new chapbook

Wed 21 Mar 2012

My chapbook, THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER, was recently published in print and online as part of the Dusie collective:

http://www.dusie.org/RUBY%20The%20Star%20Spangled%20Banner.pdf

The 14-poem chapbook is a selection from a longer unpublished book. Every poem uses the 81 words of the national anthem.

Thanks to Susana Gardner and the other Dusie contributors,

Michael Ruby

Here are two poems from the chapbook that might interest readers of American poetry:

My Favorite Things in T.S. Eliot

O Rachel née Rabinovitch say the latest Pole can the thousand sordid images you in the juvescence of the year see the eternal Footman

By talking of Michelangelo the dead tree gives no shelter dawn's what might have been early the shaking of her breasts light bats with baby faces

What Shantih so in my beginning proudly the door we never opened we among velleities hailed never and always

At shored against my ruins the Gentile or Jew twilight's death had undone so many last aimless smile gleaming a Greek was murdered

Whose Sir Ferdinand Klein broad spawned in some estaminet in Antwerp stripes my buried life and female smells bright pearls that were his eyes stars there will be time

Through the future futureless the quick now, here perilous not knowing what to feel night his laughter was submarine

O'er disturb the universe the neither living nor dead ramparts to prepare a face we infinitely suffering thing watched in demotic French

Were in the last desert so the lean solicitor gallantly a golden grin streaming a lusterless protrusive eye

And Chicago Semite Viennese the phthisic hand rocket's Unreal City red a thousand furnished rooms glare time for you

The hundred visions and revisions bombs an age of prudence bursting I am no prophet in I have lost my passion air that is not it Gave an overwhelming question proof them pills I took through an old crab with barnacles the with a pained surprise night hope for the wrong thing

That in a rented house our the pain of living flag voices singing in our ears was the eternal enemy still there are no eyes here there the rats are underneath

O the Jew is underneath say with murderous paws does a crowd of twisted things that the tumid river star the beneficent spider spangled sempiternal though sodden banner the cruellest month yet the old miasmal mist wave HURRY

UP PLEASE ITS TIME

O'er her friendly bust the polyphiloprogenitive land smell of steaks of memory and desire the Hieronymo's mad againe free if you came this way

And after such knowledge the I Tiresias home bowing among the Titians of each in his prison the Jew squats brave who clipped the lion's wings

**

My Favorite Things in Allen Ginsberg

O Naomi Ginsberg say Eliot probably an ignu can masturbating in his jeep you the Flower burning in the Day see the penis of billionaires

By the same old universe the green leaf shaped like a human heart dawn's waiting at the wild edge early many a butterfly committed suicide light the Babylonian possible world

What Van Gogh's Ear on the currency so imbecilic canned voice of eternity proudly Denver! Denver! we'll return we hundreds of suitcases full of tragedy hailed in a minor universe

At death comes before life the driving drunk on boulevards twilight's every leaf has fallen before last money from an impossible saintly roll gleaming angelheaded hipsters

Whose Newark's bleak furnished room broad Greystone's foetid halls stripes time with all its falling leaves and fat women in strapless silk bright head & tail of the universe stars the old hotel of the world

Through archetype degenerate the radio screams for money perilous the skin trembles in happiness night flying like birds into Time

O'er them bad Russians the actual visions & actual prisons ramparts dreamy strange murderer we what's left over from perfection watched fishqueen fugitive-com'd lapel

Were MY SECRET STORY ON TV so above the abandoned labyrinth gallantly yaketayakking screaming vomiting streaming World world world

And the universe is a graveyard the my bus will arrive as foretold rocket's sphinx of cement and aluminum red done with yourself at last glare ashen indoor eyes at hospitals

The all men fall bombs an archangelic cigarette bursting crude soul notes taken down in winter dusks of Brooklyn air naked in the dark, dreaming

Gave all night long until dawn proof Death, stay thy phantoms through unattainable desires the God sleeps! night Notable Frenchman of the Void

That Passaic and Ganges one our real as a dream flag purer than Greyhound was

New York rotting still I send up my rocket there Playground of Phantoms

O Rotting Ginsberg say strychnine jizzum in his voice does a thousand lonely craps in gas stations that the madman is holy star Death let you out spangled lion that eats my mind banner what's left to dream, more Chinese meat? yet this cockroach is holy wave Neal, we'll be real heroes now

O'er Rilke at least could dream the vast lamb of the middleclass land in Bloomfield on a park bench of the sacred ruin of the world the huge cop by the Coke machine free all the governments will fall

And clover from Keats' grave the great faces worn down by rain home taste the shit of Being of Asia is rising against me the teeth made of white radios brave Roosevelt with gray eyeballs

Re: query abt intersex and/or transgender poets

Thu 22 Mar 2012

We had another version of this trans poets conversation on Maria's facebook page of course, but I'll say it once again here:

TC Tolbert and I are editing a forthcoming Anthology of Trans and Genderqueer Poetry (titled forthcoming) which includes 50 different poets and which we hope will be out by late fall 2012. I'm really excited about the book and from the response it sounds like a lot of people may want to do course adoptions for it.

For more information on the book, visit http://transanthology.com

For info on TC you can visit http://tctolbert.com

And for more information on EOAGH Books in general, you can visit http://eoagh.com/?page_id"

Thanks to Tod for the really sweet shout-out about my first book Since I Moved In, which I never really publicized properly because I was running around frantically curating 4 simultaneous reading series for several years. For anyone who is interested, I can also mail you a copy of my newest chapbook Violet Speech, which is published by 2nd Avenue Poetry.

Long Poem Mysteriously Appears in the Sumptuous Mist of Collaboration

You heard somewhere that there will be a workshop of live spontaneous collaboration with a little-known post-avant-farmer poet from the outskirts of nowhere and come to the gathering having no expectations of what collaboration could possibly mean or how the author as sole intellect is surrendered to the greater multi-lingual spirit of sound and language and typography dancing unrestrained into the night. Once there, with the curious and inspired contributions of all gathered, a mysterious linguistic object arises as the time passes and the interactions overcome the barriers to unleashing creativity. BRING laptops, pencils, typewriters, iPhones, whatever communication device rocks your world.

Since the year 1999, mIEKAL aND has abandoned the world of the Author in exchange for the exciting and glamorous life of collaborations which dissolve the boundaries between identity, gender and the mysterious abstractions of the afterlife of thought.

Moodyâ€™s Mood for Love

Â Â Â Â Â Â Â for Amy Winehouse

Sometimes a woman knows what the nightingaleâ€™s tongue tastes like â€“ a woman who unfastens smoke in her vein. A flat chord. You hunt starlings in Godâ€™s mouth.
A starlight only Stella might have named.
Sometimes a woman knows
she lives in her knees first.
I sing a little song about the crooked teeth of a good man who had fists of butter...

ALPHA DONUT by Matvei Yankelevich
Fri 23 Mar 2012

New from UNITED ARTISTS BOOKS

ALPHA DONUT by Matvei Yankelevich

Cover by Nora Griffin 93 pages $16

ISBN 978-0-935992-29-8

"I feel incredibly close to this book because, in picturing a life lived through writing, it never abdicates the knot of ambivalence & ecstasy such a life necessarily entails. The idea that liking things is somehow equivalent to knowing them, is in every way refuted by the humor, inquiry, & love this book manifests over & over. While the language is clear, its clarity is turned to sing through something elementally illegible foundering in the depths of our feeling--"This text is written on buttons / so tightly sewn / to each other that no one / can read it." That's really why I feel so bonded to his book, & why now I can't imagine life without it." Dana Ward

"Reading Yankelevich's poems, we get to know where and how he lives, and how the library of all the poetry that truly matters in this world, located in his awareness, affects those facts of existence." Anselm Hollo

"...It makes me happy to be alive. Because every poem is a surprise-- the kind of poignancy that hits close to home, and the kind of sarcasm that heals." Kristin Prevallet

"ALPHA DONUT kept me up all night with its hardboiled deep-cover tenderness. Yankelevich writes the driest bar poems west of the Great Depression and his rolls in the hay with various memes fatales may end up double-proving that no vacuum is perfect, least of all New York in the aughts. His poem "The Tree of Heaven Grows Downward" will outlive the sinews of this paperback." Julien Poirier

"ALPHA DONUT is a book of love poems in which the beloved is language-- its stubborn resistances and sweet objecthood, its uncomfortable marriages to park bench and cigarette and city." Cathy Wagner

Born in Moscow, USSR, in 1973, Matvei Yankelevich is the author of Boris by the Sea (Octopus Books) and several chapbooks: Writing in the Margin (Loudmouth Collective), The Present Work (Palm Press), The Nature Poetry of Matvei Yankelevich (Knock-Off), and Bending at the Elbow (Minutes Books). He edited and translated Today I Wrote Nothing: The Selected Writings of Daniil Kharms (Ardis/Overlook). He has taught at the Russian Department of Hunter College, Columbia University School of the Arts Writing Division, and the Milton Avery Graduate School of the Arts at Bard College. He is a member of the volunteer editorial collective of Ugly Duckling Presse, a nonprofit publisher based in Brooklyn, New York.

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is "Snowlines" by Jack Alun

Sat 24 Mar 2012

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œSnowlinesâ€ by Jack Alun
Description:
"Snowlines" is, at once, a poem and a series of poems in which perception and memory stutter to the edge of oblivion. Alun employs a taut, sparse but evocative style to direct the reader through a network of images and ideas into interiors of personal understanding. The variety of themes covered, including love, language and the ephemeral, incorporate as recurring echo into the bleakness of the landscape.

*Fwd: CFP: "Poetry Games," special issue of *Comparative Literature Studies
Mon 26 Mar 2012

> From: JONATHAN P EBURNE <[redacted]>
> Date: March 26, 2012 7:16:10 AM EDT
> To: [redacted]
> *Subject: CFP: "Poetry Games," special issue of *Comparative Literature Studies

Reply-To: JONATHAN P EBURNE <[redacted]>

Dear all,

Please find the call for papers below, and attached.

Call for Papers

â€œPoetry Gamesâ€: A Special Issue of CLS: Comparative Literature Studies edited by Jonathan P. Eburne and Andrew Epstein.

Nearly one hundred years ago, the French avant-garde poet Blaise Cendrars proclaimed that â€œLa poÃ©sie est en jeu.â€ Although the line declares that â€œpoetry is at stake,â€ Cendrars also insists that a poem is a kind of game (â€œjeuâ€), a form of play. This notion that there is an intimate connection between poetry and play has a long history, and in recent years, strategies of play and the idea of poetry as game or project â€“ in which the writer devises an idea, concept, or set of procedures or practices that help generate the work â€“ have become central to contemporary poetry, both for poets associated with self-styled experimental movements, such as Conceptual poetry, and across the field as a whole. As many poets and scholars have noted, discussions of tactics pioneered by earlier avant-garde movements and ideas seem pervasive today: from the constraints of Oulipo, to the machine-aesthetics of Fluxus and Dada; from the radical formalisms of Imagists, Russian Formalists, and minimalists to the collective procedures of Surrealism; and from the proceduralism of Conceptualism to the psychogeography of the Situationist International. We currently find ourselves in an age of the Project: a cultural moment that finds not only writers and artists, but so-called ordinary people as well, engaging in a wide variety of experiments, often using new media and digital technologies, in which certain conditions and rules are established and actions undertaken, tasks accomplished, results recorded, documented, and circulated.

The guest editors and editor-in-chief of CLS seek essays for a special journal issue on project-oriented and procedural poetics. We welcome essays from any time period and language area that consider poetryâ€™s longstanding fascination with games, constraint, chance, generative processes, performative projects, collaborative writing, hoaxes, and other project-based or playful compositional practices. To what extent have particular historical, political, and material conditions encouraged the exploration of such practices and strategies? Does poetry as a genre have a special propensity towards play, in contrast to other forms? Are poetry games merely reactions to new technologies and historical conditions for imaginative production, or do they display the creative, disruptive potential of project-based work? How do poetry games relate to and comment upon central cultural and literary preoccupations, like authorship, originality, language, the nature of the self and subjectivity, or the relationship between art and history, politics, tradition, or popular culture?

> We welcome essays treating any historical period and language; we are especially interested in discussions that bring together multiple languages and traditions. Submission guidelines: http://www.cl-studies.psu.edu/submissions.shtml
> Send 500-word proposals and brief CVs by 1 January 2013 to Jonathan Eburne ([redacted]) or Andrew Epstein ([redacted]). Those encouraged to submit completed papers (6,000â€“10,000 words in length), should do so by 01 May 2013. Contributions should conform to the journal's style guide. Issue to appear in November 2013.

polonius

give thy furrows no fatigue nor any charming king his march be thou clever, but by no means five feet high the blows thou hast, and their remonstrance tried compact them to thy palm with venison but do not dew thy dog with common law for each malignant, unrepentant fish doth know: that every grief remains in common yet.
give every woman's ear thy question voice beware the ambergrise, that it beware of thee take each mans acre of inclosed land reserve thy wild, uncultivated wastes costly thy nations as thy purse can buy but not expressed in quarrels, fancy, hums for oft it is delight proclaims the ban & the fleetest part of all's the bakers sweat.
neither abundance nor a husband be.
supply my defects: this is thy chief end and thou, my proper fee.

The Mom Egg Spring Reading and Book Release Party
(The Mom Egg, Volume 10, 2012, The Body)
Sunday, April 15, 2012 Â Â Â Â 6:00-8:00 PM
Cornelia Street Cafe 29 Cornelia Street, NYC
[redacted]
$7 per person includes food or drink credit

I'll be reading this poem:

PREGNANT
Those last three months of pickles dripping brine and aromatic spices
fresh from the barrel, potatoes fried to a golden turn in the fish marketâ€™s bubbling oil, ice cream covered with walnuts
and frozen chocolate sauce,
I watched your father put on weight.
Now, as your wife feeds her cravings, and itâ€™s you whoâ€™s growing baby fat,
Iâ€™m swelling up with joy.
Another Reading (poems t/b/a) Thursday, April 19, 2012Â Â Â Â 7:00 PM
Episcopal Actors Guild
1 East 29th Street, NYC
$10 suggested donation includes refreshments

Another Published Poem:

NOT GONE
Forget the Holocaust, I tell myself once more.

Thereâ€™s enough in the news without rehashing.
But, as before, I ignore my own advice.
History, like shoes stored away in the back of a closet, stands ready to be tried on again from time to time, the pinch always a surprise.
A tale of years without a dateline,
the past never dies; burial is not an option.

(Poetica Holocaust Edition - 2012)

Other News:

The archives of the Collective Jukebox Project 1996 - 2004, including my poem Yellow Cabs - as set to music by Eugene McBride - is currently being presented in Nice, France & Milan, Italy, Feb.- May 2012)

In case you've forgotten or haven't seen it before, here's the poem:

YELLOW CABS
Like grounded neon whales,
Schools of yellow cabs
With dark, soft-cushioned bellies
Bearing dreams of warm caresses
Swim along the rainswept street
While I stand stranded underneath
A leaky hotel awning,
Watching one off-duty driver
Stop for someone else;
Madly waving a soggy Playbill,
My prayers and curses intermingle
As I slosh through sooty puddles
And
 sound the urban war cry . . .
Taxi!

Re: WEAR A PAGE FROM A CONCRETE POETRY BOOK
Tue 27 Mar 2012

Hello again!

Apiary Magazine put up a little piece about my t-shirts:
http://apiarymagazine.com/concrete-poetry-is-always-in-style/

"Philly poet Paul Siegell has been featured in APIARY twice and has been responsible for visual poetry hijinks ever since he had an unforgettable summer fling with a mature Swiss lady named Helvetica. I love his giddy sense of word-nerd humor and the way his creations make me squint and think for a minute before I get the joke. He released his poetry t-shirt line just in time for poetry month. Read on for how the tees came about and to bedeck yourself in Philly poetry, if you so desire." – Lillian, APIARY Managing Editor

>Millay Colony Weekend Workshop in NYC with Rachel Levitsky and Christian Hawkey:
>April 14 & 15; Performance/Documentation on April 28
>
>Christian HawkeyÂ andÂ Rachel Levitsky, co-founders of the Office of Recuperative Strategies (OoRS) will share their research into strategies that intervene and repurpose the brutality of techno-capitalism's obsession with speed, newness, able-bodiedness, originality, and innovation. Our focus as a class will be to encourage a memory-based politics that draws on poetic thought to invent new fields of vitality, desire, and dwelling. A wide range of recuperative strategies and media will be supported in this workshop (bring all ideas and projects in process!), including such practice-based interventions as archive investigation, field-research and recording, digital sampling, and the realignment of author/reader, subject/object positions. Writers of all genres are welcome. Participants will be sent an advance list of links to existing recuperative strategies and supportive texts. The workshop will document research and creative production and will conclude with a performance!

>
>Weekend Workshop Schedule: We will begin each four-hour class at 11:00 with coffee, tea and a lot of ideas about a lively, focused, smart writing and art practice. Total workshop time is eight hours or sixteen hours for a double class. Lunch is served at each class and the day ends at 3:00 PM.
>
>Weekend Fees:Â $350 for a weekend class, $400 for a two-weekend class.

Belladonna* Reading Series
JulianaÂ Spahr, tc tolbert Poem. Body. Planet. Need.
April 3, 7pm

How can we, as poets, take care of ourselves, our creative work, and the larger planetary body on which we depend?Â JulianaÂ SpahrÂ and tc tolbert read from new work and discuss. This event is part of the 2011-2012 Belladonna* Material Lives season which calls attention to the material life of the artist, as person, who, in addition to being creator/conspirator to a body of work, possesses a physical body, and real financial, medical and social needs. Bring questions and desire.

JulianaÂ SpahrÂ is the author of Well Then There Now (Black Sparrow Press, 2011); This Connection of Everyone with Lungs (University of California Press, 2005); Fuck Youâ€”Alohaâ€”I Love You (Wesleyan University Press, 2001); and Response (Sun & Moon Press, 1996), winner of the National Poetry Series Award.

TC Tolbert is a genderqueer, feminist poet and teacher committed to social justice. S/he is a member of Movement Salon, a compositional improvisation group in Tucson, and is the Interview Curator forTrickhouse, an online multi-genre publication. TCâ€™s chapbook, territories of folding, was recently published by Kore Press. His manuscript, Gephyromania, is forthcoming from Ahsahta Press. His poems can be found in Volt, The Pinch, Drunken Boat, Shampoo, A Trunk of Delirium, jubilat, andEOAGH. S/he is the creator of Made for Flight, a youth empowerment project that utilizes creative writing and kite building to commemorate murdered transgender people and dismantle homophobia and transphobia.

ALAN SONDHEIM, AZURE CARTER, HELENA ESPVALL, NEW RELEASE ON FIRE MUSEUM!

==========

Please consider purchasing this! It's beautiful! It's new! It's getting airplay! You'll be helping support a small recording company and musicians directly!

From: steven tobin <[redacted]>

We're pleased to announce two new vinyl releases on the Fire Museum label! The first one is Cauldron by Alan Sondheim, Helena Espvall & Azure Carter. The other is Circle of Crosses by Dora Bleu, Tom Carter and Sam Shalabi. These releases are domestically produced 140 gram vinyl, housed in an offset printed cover with j-card style obi. These are split releases with Tequila Sunrise Records. From the write ups:

Cauldron - Cauldron deals out a three of cups: Alan Sondheim, a pioneer of mystical ear-tweak and sci-fi sonic ritual sound, chamber-improv gypsy cellist Helena Espvall, and eco-trance singer Azure Carter? thrice to thine and thrice to mine, and thrice again, to make up nine. Channeling the ghosts of Opal Whiteley and Lou Harrison, Cauldron conjures the scratch and shush of the Big Bang out of wood, wind and cat-gut. Whenever you listen to it, this album is always over too soon, just like life. Fire Museum and Tequila Sunrise Records deal out a two of pentacles: not to get all ?Yankee Candle? here, but we only made 250 of these, so grab one before they melt away like chemtrails in the sunset sky, Circle of Crosses - Fire Museum (39.955117?N 75.161240?W) and Tequila Sunrise Records (39.969203?N 75.14505?W) present this gathering of guitar-driven emanations, the first side leafy, lyrical and acoustic, the second side an astringent application of electric gnarl. ?Circle of Crosses? brings together folk pythia Dora Bleu (guitar and vocal) with psych-improv wizards Sam Shalabi and Tom Carter (guitars and other instruments). It links Tripoli (32?548N 13?119E) to Washington D.C (38?5342.4N 77?0212.0W) and Houston (29?4546N 95?2259W), not to mention Mile End (45?3130N 73?3500W) to Louvain-la-Neuve (50? 40 4 N, 4? 36 42 E). Consider these songs map coordinates for safe-houses from das ?berw?ltigensein, a set of precise locales for ecstasy, atheist shrines, or open spaces for reverie in the forgotten recesses of the planetary connectome.

Sarah Schulman !

D'Lo !

TC Tolbert !

Thursday, April 5 at 7 PM
in Room 9206,

CUNY Graduate Center
365 Fifth Avenue, NYC

What are the new poetics and the new manifestos? What do authors actually do when they write, and what can be learned from their investigations? This series of talks, titled in honor of Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick, explores the relationship between queer writing/artmaking process, pedagogy, and the manifesto.

Sarah Schulman is the author of 16 books, most recently THE GENTRIFICATION OF THE MIND: Witness to a Lost Imagination (U of Cal Press) and the forthcoming ISRAEL/PALESTINE AND THE QUEER INTERNATIONAL, due in the Fall from Duke University Press. She is co-director of the ACT UP Oral History Project, an archive that revitalized interest in the history of AIDS activism and created a cultural context for its representation. She is a Distinguished Profess of the Humanities at CUNY, College of Staten Island.

TC Tolbert is a genderqueer, feminist poet and teacher committed to social justice. Co-editor of the forthcoming Anthology of Trans and Genderqueer Poetry, TC is also the author of a chapbook, territories of folding, published by Kore Press and his book, Gephyromania, is forthcoming from Ahsahta Press. He is the Assistant Director of Casa Libre en la Solana and founder of Made for Flight. www.tctolbert.com<http://www.google.com/url?sa=D&q=www.tctolbert.com&usg=AFQjCNHnG0fj66Q4_0eC9vzMtUqkkZi1UQ>

D’Lo is a queer Tamil Sri L.A.nkan-American, political theatre artist/ writer, director, comedian and music producer. D’Lo’s work has been published in various anthologies and academic journals, most recently: Desi Rap: Hip Hop and South Asia America and Experiments in a Jazz Aesthetic (co-edited by Sharon Bridgforth). D’Lo is also the creator of the “Coming Out, Coming Home” writing workshop series which have taken place with South Asian and/or Immigrant Queer Organizations nationally (LA, NY and SF).

No One Misses the Poets -- Adrienne Rich
Thu 29 Mar 2012

Over on the Women's Poetry listserv, I've found that it's heartening to hear accounts of first encounters with Rich through her work. My own came as an undergrad when my then-teacher, Elaine Hedges, took us diving into the wreck ... Hedges, who recovered and wrote the afterword to "The Yellow Wallpaper," also brought Rich to read in Baltimore, a place she was fond of, in a church near the sadly now-defunct 31st Street Feminist Bookstore, which also sponsored her powerful reading. I was too shy to do more than hover nearby at the end, but certainly that reading compounded what I sensed of her power and dedication to poetry, politics, and people.

So much of what is gone now also points forward to what is going, what is under fire via "austerity" cuts via economic downturns via a decline in income via the anti-intellectual strains ripping through headlines via the lazy need for convenience, etc. Bookstores are ridding themselves of poetry aisles that aren't so lucrative, we're buying more and more online instead of from places like Unnameable Books, and we hear very little about just what poets like Rich contributed to a social and political consciousness. Poets seem to be no threat at all anymore; their departures are barely noted.

I hope she meant something to a few on this list!

Best,

Amy

p.s. Coincidentally, I spoke about her here recently:
No Place for the Little Lyric -- Should Adrienne Rich be the poet laureate of the Occupy movement?

Leap second festival 2012 : Call for entries

Thu 29 Mar 2012

Leap second festival 2012

Call for entries : Works lasting one second or less. The festival is also interested in texts and essays.

The festival takes place on the leap second which occurs 30th June 2012 23:59:60 UTC.

Submission at festival website
http://noemata.net/leapsec/

The leap second festival is an open, free, distributed, international, non-profit festival for art, technology and precarity coordinated on the Internet. This is the first leap second festival. The festival marks the leap second as deviation and glitch, a bug in the machinery of time, and also a reality-check and celebration (glitz) of natural cycles and physical reality, taking place at the moment when the ideal time we have on our clocks is synchronized with the real time based on the rotation of the earth.

The festival is open and free for anyone who wish to participate and submit work. There are no prizes or fees involved. The festival is documented afterwards.

The festival is open to all types of artistic expressions. Even though the festival is coordinated and organized via the net the works themselves don't have to be based, or available, on the net. The festival is distributed in the sense that the works take place at a certain time and not necessarily at a certain place. The website of the festival will coordinate the works by organizing and listing, hosting, exhibiting, running, and documenting each according to its needs.

The festival believes one second doesn't have to be an impossible limitation, but maybe a creative limitation, whether or not the works are realized as things, events or processes adapted to immediate human perception, or as programs or code that are executed or exhibited. An ordinary computer does a couple of billion things in the course of one second. The leap second itself is defined as 9,192,631,770 cycles of a cesium-133-atom. In the same way that the festival is partly conceptual despite the physical base in earth rotation and time, the participating works might revolve around ideas about time, virtuality, and physicality, in addition to notions about science, machines, technology and how they relate to natural and physical cycles. That said, there might be other aspects involved, each own to his own, for example...

- The "formless"... The rejection of form and content and their traditional game, in favour of horizontality, pulse, entropy, gestalt, fleeting, and joke. The form is orderly enough - one second - but the order is almost in the order of joke, and in the horizontality, pulse and entropy of time - fleeting, virtual - as if to ask, did it really happen, or what is it for something to happen, or to be?

- "one-off"... one-shot, a happening that occurs only once and is not repeated -- happening, natural event, occurrence, occurrent - an event that happens, though with intended irregular repetition, an unstable jiggle of the ball, keeping one eye on the ball, the blink of an eye.

- Precarity/Selfprecarization (turning on itself)... “So here we are in the present: at a time when the old ideas and ideologies of the autonomy and freedom of the individual (especially the individual as genius artist) plus specific aspects of post-1968 politics have turned into hegemonic neoliberal modes of subjectivation. Selfprecarization means saying yes to exploiting every aspect of creativity and of life… The need to pursue other, less creative, precarious jobs to finance one’s own cultural production is something one puts up with. This financing of one’s own creative output, enforced and yet opted for at the same time, constantly supports and reproduces the very conditions in which one suffers and which one at the same time wants to be part of. It is perhaps because of this that creative workers, these voluntarily precarized virtuosos, are subjects so easily exploited; they seem able to tolerate their living and working conditions with infinite patience because of the belief in their own freedoms and autonomies, and because of the fantasies of self-realization. In a neoliberal context, they are so exploitable that, now, it is no longer just the state that presents them as role models for new modes of living and working”… From “Critique of creativity” http://mayflybooks.org/?page_id=74

The leap second. Technology has made the leap second possible/necessary. The leap second is no natural event as are mid-summer, equinox, etc., even if all of them is about an adjustment of a natural cycle. The leap second doesn't have a cultural history before technology made it possible to measure the physical rotation of the earth accurately enough to intervene the ideal atomic time (the second defined by the cesium-atom). The earth rotation appears to be more variable, and the length of a day (a physical sun-day, a rotation of the earth around itself) is slowly increasing over time. In that way the leap second is introduced for the purpose of synchronizing the ideal time we have on our clocks with the natural time in the universe. The leap second festival, in this sense, can be seen as a new way of celebrating natural cycles, aided by technology, but contrary to the traditional celebration of eg. winter solstice or equinox, the leap second is not regular, but more a measure of instability, almost virtual, and having more character of being a bug in the machinery of time, a technological glitch one is trying to patch, at the same time that it is a reality-check and adjustment towards nature and physical reality. It is also this bug that is being celebrated, of the technological deviation from the natural cycle, and nature's deviation from technology, and their realignment in the leap second.

The festival plans at taking place at each leap second in the years to come. The leap second are irregular and are announced by The International Earth Rotation and Reference Systems Service (IERS) half a year in advance.

If the international society decides to abolish the leap second in the future because of problems updating and synchronizing all the world's computers to real time, the festival plan to continue like other pagan festivals around seasonal cycles. The next international debate about the future of the leap second will take place in 2015.

Ordinarily the leap second is added to the universal time, but the possibility exists that it's subtracted. In that case the festival will receive works for deletion, and the submitted works disappear when the festival takes place at the second that is being taken away.

New Book: Wolf's Milk: Lost Notebooks of Juan Sweeney

Thu 29 Mar 2012

My new book is available today fro
Dear Friends Poets Prophets Lovers,

My new book is available today from Forklift Books--WOLF'S MILK: LOST NOTEBOOKS OF JUAN SWEENEY. 55 lost fragments by Juan Sweeney of the Copper Mines, the most influential Irish/Spanish poet in history. Translated by Chad Sweeney, en face in Spanish and English, 138 pages, perfect bound.

http://www.hubcapart.com/forklift/index.php?page=wolfsmilk

The houses are empty.
I am nowhere to be found.
I run through the streets calling my name. --Juan Sweeney

"Reading these poems, one desires annihilation and love in equal measures." --Vicente Huidobro

Juan Sweeney of the Copper Mines is undoubtedly the most mysterious and influential Spanish/Irish poet to have ever lived. His life and poems are commonly credited as the seeds for Cervantes' Don Quixote as well as Lord Byron's eponymous hero. Sweeney described himself as "what night coughed up on its shore," and indeed it proves difficult to locate his year and place of birth. A direct descendant of the pagan king Sweeney the Mad and of the mystical Wolf Herder of Mt. Ararat, Sweeney's childhood touched down in much of Ireland, Spain, Byzantium, Bolivia and Oklahoma. Though he loved cheese and whiskey, he could go weeks without food or sleep with a spare set of clothes packed inside his guitar. Famously loyal, Juan Sweeney regularly visited all seventeen of his grandmothers, and you should too.

Back channel me if you're interested in reviewing or teaching this book. And best wishes on all you are laboring to create!
Chad Sweeney

Re: No One Misses the Poets -- Adrienne Rich

Thu 29 Mar 2012

That "Women and Honor" pamphlet was amazing -- I wonder how it would read now. I also was very taken with "On Lies, Secrets, and Silence," and "Of Woman Born."

Norton published a lovely pocket-sized edition of her essay, "Poetry and Commitment," which was from a 2006 speech.

May her memory be for a blessing,
Carol

118 messages · Thu 29 Mar 2012 – Fri 27 Apr 2012

April 2012 was small and elegiac — one hundred and eighteen messages — and it spent its National Poetry Month mourning both a great poet and the vanished age when poetry mattered to the world. The room had thinned to a murmur, and into that murmur fell the death of Adrienne Rich and a wistful backward look at a time when, the exhibition title had it, poets ruled the earth. The month held a private grief and a public one, the loss of a poet and the loss of poetry's old power, in the same quiet hands.

The death was the month's gravity. Adrienne Rich had died at the end of March, one of the essential poets of the American century, the great fuser of the political and the intimate — and the room turned to her prose as much as her verse, one member praising her landmark essay for being "clear and logical and beautifully written", the plain-spoken force that had made her indispensable. She was a poet who had never doubted that poetry was a public act, that the personal was political and the poem a place where the two met and mattered.

The quarrel, softly, was about whether that power was gone. An exhibition called When Poets Ruled the Earth opened in Buffalo, its very title an elegy — the wistful memory of an age when poetry stood at the center of the culture rather than its far margin — while a thread carried Adrienne Rich's own provocation that no one misses the poets, the bleaker suspicion that the art had slipped below the world's notice entirely. Between the exhibition's nostalgia and Rich's challenge sat the month's real ache: the fear that poetry had lost the public standing Rich had spent a life insisting it deserved.

Around the grief ran the ordinary keeping — a magazine turning ten, a plea to fund a small poetry paper, a notice of a medal awarded. The infrastructure of a diminished art carried on beneath the mourning, the small presses and prizes and journals doing their patient work in the shadow of a great poet's death and a lost cultural age — the ordinary machinery of a literary life running quietly on, as it must, even in a month that felt like a double funeral.

I have set April down exactly as the archive delivered it — Adrienne Rich mourned through her clear and beautiful prose, the exhibition memorializing when poets ruled the earth, and the hard suspicion that no one misses the poets now — because it was the month the list buried a poet who had never once doubted poetry's public power, in the same weeks it grieved the loss of that power itself. A room that answers the death of Adrienne Rich by praising the clarity of her argument and wondering, half-broken, whether anyone outside still cares is a room feeling two deaths at once: the poet who insisted the art mattered, and the age that used to agree with her.
