Letter to Friends of Big Bridge
Mon 11 Oct 2010

Dear Friends of Big Bridge,

Here we are again asking for donations to help us keep Big Bridge going.

We greatly appreciate any amount you can contribute during these difficult economic times. Thanks so much to all who donated the last time we made a call for donations. Your contributions helped pay our Webmaster, and server fees.

Information on how to donate is at the bottom of this email.

Check out what is to come in the next issue.

Big Bridge, www.bigbridge.org, is celebrating its 14th year online. We have an awesome new issue of Big Bridge due out in January 2011 which will include:

The previously unpublished selected correspondence of Stan Brakhage and Michael McClure, edited by Christopher Luna, which covers twenty years in the relationship of two of the most compelling and legendary artists of the post-war period in American culture. Stan Brakhage and Michael McClure met in San Francisco in 1954, and for several decades maintained an impassioned correspondence that touched on subjects including art, poetry, and film, as well as the peculiar difficulty of being an artist in society. The correspondence features accounts of their contact with artists including Allen Ginsberg, Richard Brautigan, Charles Olson, Robert Creeley, Bobbie Louise Hawkins, David Meltzer, Robert Duncan, John Cage, Morton Subotnick, Philip Whalen, Kenneth Anger, Jonas Mekas, Andy Warhol and others.

Also, in the next Big Bridge, a very special Translation Feature:

A suite of translations from Nakahara Chuya, with a concluding poem in tribute Translations from Japanese by Jerome Rothenberg & Yasuhiro Yotsumoto. Translations of Chan Poems from the manuscript of a book A Full Load of Moonlight of Chinese Chan (Zen) Buddhist poetry translated by Mary M.Y. Fung and David Lunde. Rimbaud, Ten Poems, translated by Bill Zavatsky. Selections from Turkish poet Seyhan Erozçelik's Rosestrikes and Coffee Grinds, translated by Murat Nemet-Nejat. Also in this issue, Terri Carrion and FR Lavandeira's Tri-lingual Anthology of Galician Poetry and Prose. There will be important feature translations of Ahmed Abdel Muti Hijazi by Omnia Amin and Rick London. Hijaz has been a prominent figure in the avant-garde of Arabic poetry for a half century. Also, Rick London and Katherine Silver will offer translation of Martin Adan, one of Peru's most revered twentieth century poets. And finally in translations Poems by seven (7) Hungarian poets translated by Gabor G Gyukics and Michael Castro.

Also in the 2011 issue of Big Bridge : "Out Looking for Lew: Bioregional Poetics, The Legacy of Lew Welch" by Jerry Martien. Poet-translator Louise Landes Levi writes a memoir review of Annapurna Devi, widely considered to be the greatest living Indian instrumentalist. Levi studied with Devi in the early 70's & is one of the only Westerners to have heard her music, live.

The new issue of Big Bridge is honored to include a Jerome Rothenberg feature chapbook with illustrations by Nancy Victoria Davis.

Two special guest poetry anthologies from Jason Blickstein (David Chirico, Anthony Seidman, Richard Rizzi, James Heller Levinson, Susan McKechnie, Greg Grummer and more) and Jason Braun The Big Bridge Fusion Anthology which reflects various traditions of Beat Poets, Slam Poets, Black Arts Poets and Hip Hop Poets and includes work from Sean Arnold, Wendy Brown-Baez, Margaret Gilbert, MK Stallings, Shane Signorino, Erin Wiles and more.

And Big Bridge will include Frank Parker's broadside collection, John Roche's new book Road Ghosts, excerpts from Murat Nemet-Nejat's new book of poems, Jonathan Kane's anthology of fine art photos from friends around the world, and collage art from Wayne Atherton!

PLEASE, DONATE NOW!!

So we have been extra busy getting the next issue of Big Bridge ready for you. And as you know, Big Bridge is always free to readers. Please support Big Bridge, so we can keep giving you all we've got.

All donations are greatly appreciated!

EXTRA BONUS: Donations of 15 dollars or more will get you a free copy of Goofbook for Jack Kerouac by Philip Whalen.
http://www.bigbridge.org/bbpress.htm

Please make checks payable to Committee on Poetry.

Mail them to Big Bridge, Box 870, Guerneville, CA, 95446.

Thanks to our fiscal sponsor, all donations are tax-deductible,.

Love and Peace,

Michael Rothenberg & Terri Carrion

BELLADONNA Benefit: Oct 12 @ Dixon Place, NYC*

Mon 11 Oct 2010

SUPPORT BELLADONNA*Â Â Â THE TIME IS NOW!

REMINDER:

SUPPORT BELLADONNA*Â Â Â THE TIME IS NOW!

Belladonna*sÂ fundraiser performance and silent auction on October 12 in NYC!

We expect this to be a banner year for Belladonna*, which, as you know, is more thanÂ a press or a reading series; it is also a community structure and resource, committedÂ to non-hierarchal, activist, feminist modes of production of books and critical conversation. This summer we reorganized ourselves into The Belladonna* Collaborative -- a natural extension of how Belladonna has always worked, with a rhizomatic body, full of healthy organs, lacking a singular head.

At this Benefit, we are hoping to earn the funds toÂ complete our budget for 2011. This year weâ€™ve been fortunate to beÂ the recipient of funds from both NYSCA and The O Books Fund. We are halfway to our goal of $20,000, which will allow us to publish andÂ promote our 2011 book series â€“ A Year in the Commons -- made up exclusively of collaborative, collective, or multi-authored works--including The Wide Road, Lyn Hejinian and Carla Harrymanâ€™s long-awaited â€œbuddy picaresque.â€ We will also host 8 literary community events, and apply for our federal not-for-profit status.Â Part of our Benefit proceeds will also support Dixon Place-NYCâ€™s Lab for Performance, which has generously housed our events for 5 years.

Join us for a pre-performance Champagne Salon with the creators ofÂ the two performances, Robert Kocik and Daria Fain of the Phoneme Choir and Colette Alexander and Kristin Prevallet of Seasons: Quartets. You can purchase an advance ticket for the Benefit with the Salon for $50 at the Belladonna website, click level of â€˜Supporterâ€™ or higher from the drop down box on the home page: http://belladonnaseries.org/

Once Upon an Ogboju Style
Tue 12 Oct 2010

"Big boys in Ogboju style kept packets of B & H in their shirt pockets, smoking once in a while to attract some ovation from the rest of the crowd. How could a teacher have scolded or caned a boy that had a pack of cigarettes in his pocket, or who, while still in school, had impregnated a girl and would soon be a father? But some teachers looked beyond the cigarette packs and the big boys' beards, not giving a damn whether a boy had become a man, or whether it was the cigarette that was smoking the big boy."

Whatever Happened to Michael Benedict?
Wed 13 Oct 2010

He of the great 1976 anthology of prose poems that a generation or two read to pieces, and the author of "The European Shoe" and a pretty good anthology of Surrealist poetry.

I've been trying to track down the old Prose Poem anthology on Abe Books--will try some other possibilities--but I recall that it was bulky and none too kind to its paper cover after repeated fingerings and flexings.

Cheers, everyone,

please visit Furniture Press to see the latest musings on the Undone phenomenon. Here! http://furniturepressbooks.com/books/mccrearyundone/

And in a few weeks we're unveiling our newest project, Magus Magnus' Heraclitean Pride, a creative-poetic treatment of the fragments of Heraclitus: not quite poetry, not quite philosophy, now quite critique - but all in one and separate all at once.

Plus... Copies of Anne Ashbaugh's Mythopoiesis is available through pre-order only (until the website's updated!) Anne quietly but concisely disrupts our intuition and values regarding greek mythology and approaches it from quite a few, and disarmingly ironic, points of view. A must if you want to see Freud castrated with a twist of language! Any inquiries should be blasted at [redacted].

DIANE DI PRIMA: AN EVENING OF READING & CONVERSATION

The Graduate Center, CUNY, 365 Fifth Ave (btwn 34th & 35th)

Join the iconic poet and activist Diane di Prima for a rare New York City appearance. Graduate Center Professor Ammiel Alcalay will engage her in a conversation about her work and life after her reading. Over the span of her remarkable career, di Prima has published 43 books of poetry and prose and, as per Allen Ginsberg, â€œbroke barriers of race-class identity and delivered a major body of verse brilliant in its particularity.â€ She is presently the Poet Laureate of San Francisco. A two-volume Lost & Found chapbook selection of her lectures on poets H.D. and Robert Duncan will be available for purchase on the night of the event.

FREE AND OPEN TO THE PUBLIC
No registration. Please arrive early for a seat.

Re: Whatever Happened to Michael Benedict?

I had a copy of the prose poem anthology while I was a forklift operator in a paper mill. I was always afraid the boss would discover me reading it & I stashed it under the seat. During on particularly hectic moment it fell into the motor & got shredded into tiny pieces.

He died a few years ago. The paperback does tend to disintegrate--maybe rare book dealers have it? He was also ed. of Paris Review in the 1970s and the first person to publish me. Maxine Chernoff

Multi-Media Collab. on YouTube
Wed 13 Oct 2010

I'm proud to be a part of this. Some enterprising soul has taken my poem "Solipsist," from the Blazevox e-book Beams, and made a video for it on YouTube. The poem is set to music- a song with lyrics. This creates a tension and dynamic by which the lyrics butt against the poem. In this tension, and with the images that accompany the song and the poem, there seems to be a new kind of multi-media form. I wish I could give proper credit, but hopefully the name of this artist will eventually emerge:

Wed 13 Oct 2010

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œSoddoma: Cantos of Ulyssesâ€ by Chris Mansel

Description:

"Soddoma: Cantos of Ulysses" is a travelogue of the grotesque. A linguistic equivalent of a painting by Hieronymus Bosch or Francis Bacon, it distorts, exaggerates and polarises the familiar world to such an extent that our senses are drawn inwards to escape the conflicts fashioned by such energies. As Mansel writes, â€˜When confronted with conflict the mind re-enters the body. You are going where the smell is coming fromâ€™.

mIEKAL:

You had a "new" copy of the anthology when I lived with you in Oshkosh, or I was privy to the ratting process of your first copy in that sublime Wis Rapids summer 1977. As I remember, we read from the book often--often aloud--discussed it, read otther books by the poets anthologized, wrote prose poems voluminously (shit, this was a generative book!), convinced poetry was going toward prose, prose toward poetry--we were always compelled by intermedia/intramedia, moths to a flame. I'd argue Benedict's anthology pushed poetry significantly toward what's now characterized as post-lyric poetry. Flarf , conceptualism, et al, et al, et none, needed the Benedict anthology as a bridge from modernism, granted among others, even when most practitioners of conflarfulism have little clue what they are stepping onto, into , out of. Let's give Michael his props!

Best, Crag

being a prosepoemist myself, I was thrilled to finally find a copy about 1/2 a year ago at the little (but super fantastic/great selection) East Village Books on St. Marks Place near 1st ave in nyc. it is indeed a true paperback size/style almost looking like a pulp and i was so surprised to find it at the price it was. it has a blue-green color for the side of the pages and the cover is a marbly blue mosaic so you can't miss it on your shelf. if you handle it gently it seems to survive. i had never seen this paperback version so was delighted be able to take it on the subway. i can never believe how many prose poems i have at my fingertips when i'm holding it. keep checking those brick and mortar bookstores if you can. -steph gray

=93THE most seductive, original, impacting work I have seen for years. A fascinating combination of Kerouacian street-talk plus a trip through the museum of Modern Art in Chicago, plus a nod-off to Kosty's furthest out experimentalism. Magnifique!=94 -- Hugh Fox

*"Carol Novack=92s Giraffes in Hiding mirrors our weltanschauung by using its own language against it or by using its own language to pry open the circus hidden within it. If we say the world is insane or we say the world is a manic whirl, Novack embraces manic insanity with a great hug of laughter. She flings images, characters, ideas, and language around until they all, finally losing, - no, abandoning - their moorings, collide, crash, ka-bang one into another creating nuclear reactions of the non-sense that is even Emily Dickinson=92s =93divine sense,=94

*In =93Giraffes in Hiding=94 Carol Novack proves once again that she is the all-time champion of wild, wigged out, original prose/poetry and poetic prose. The first full-length collection of her work, subtitled =93The Mythi= cal
Memoirs of Carol Novack,=94 is a feast of fusions, inventions, myths, dream= s, forms, and possibilities. There=92s no one like Novack, and here she is at = her best as she chases her ontological tail round and round the intelligible, unknown worlds of her subconscious (and ours). Think Alice*

*in Wonderland on

Gertrude Stein, Proust, Kerouac, and that weird kid next door who ate all o= feel for what she=92s up to. -- Mary Mackey*

*=93Carol Novack is a conundrum to literary editors whose ideas of poetry a=

Subject: Fwd: Poetry Reading - SOON Productions presents poets Deborah Poe and Caroline Manring on Saturday 10/16/10 at 4:00 p.m. at Buffalo Street Books in Ithaca, NY

Friends,

If you're in the Ithaca area, I hope you can join us.
Best wishes, Deborah
--------- Forwarded message ---------

Please join us as Deborah Poe and Caroline Manring read from their poetry Saturday, October 16, at 4:00 p.m. at Buffalo Street Books, in the DeWitt Mall (corner of E. Buffalo and N. Cayuga St. in downtown Ithaca, NY). This reading is free and open to the public.

DEBORAH POE is the author of the poetry collections Elements
(Stockport Flats Press, 2010) and Our Parenthetical Ontology (CustomWords, 2008). Deborah's writing has recently appeared in journals such as Jacket Magazine, Peaches & Bats, Sidebrow, Filter Literary Journal and Denver Quarterly. She is assistant professor of English at Pace University, fiction editor of the international online journal of the arts, Drunken Boat and guest curator/editor for Trickhouse's "Experiment" door 2010/2011. For more information about Deborah, visit www.deborahpoe.com.

CAROLINE MANRING earned her BA from Cornell University and her MFA from the Iowa Writers' Workshop. She has held a Teaching Writing Fellowship and a Leggett-Schupes Fellowship, and her poems have appeared in Drunken Boat, Hot Metal Bridge, Juked, Babel Fruit, and elsewhere. Her poetry chapbook, No Postman, was published last winter by Split Oak Press. She is Assistant Poetry Editor of the literary magazine Seneca Review, and she currently teaches Literature, Creative Writing, and a freshman seminar called "The Avian Persuasion" at Hobart and William Smith Colleges. She fiddles on a violin made in 1932 by her great-grandfather, Harley Manring, who was a postman.

This event has been made possible in part with grant support from the Community Arts Partnership. SOON Productions is dedicated to bringing innovative poets and writers to Ithaca for readings and talks. Please visit our website at http://soonproductions.org for more information about the series.

Please feel free to forward this email to anyone who might be interested in this event.

Upcoming Events at The Poetry Project

Thu 14 Oct 2010

Hi Everyone,

We have two readings coming up next week that you definitely should not miss, unless you like regret.

Love,
The Poetry Project

MONDAY OCTOBER 18 / 8PM
BEN ESTES & PAUL KILLEBREW

Ben Estes is the author of the chapbooks Lamp like l¹map (Factory Hollow Press) and Cymbals (The Song Cave). He has been educated by the Kansas City Art Institute, the University of Iowa, and is currently enrolled in the Program for Poets and Writers at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. With Alan Felsenthal he is the editor and publisher of The Song Cave (a series of singular things) and the journal Sea Ranch. He currently lives in Northampton, MA.

Paul Killebrew was born and raised in Nashville, Tennessee. He currently resides in Louisiana and works as a lawyer at Innocence Project New Orleans. His first full-length collection, Flowers, was published this year by Canarium, and his long poem Inspector vs. Evader is soon to be re-published online by Ugly Duckling Presse.

WEDNESDAY OCTOBER 20 / 8 PM

CA CONRAD & WANDA COLEMAN

CA Conrad is the recipient of the 2009 Gil Ott Book Award for The Book of Frank (Wave Books, 2010). He is also the author of Advanced Elvis Course (Soft Skull Press, 2009), (Soma)tic Midge (Faux Press, 2008), Deviant Propulsion (Soft Skull Press, 2006), and a collaboration with poet Frank Sherlock, The City Real & Imagined (Factory School, 2010). He is a co-founder of PACE (Poet Activist Community Extension). The son of white trash asphyxiation, his childhood included selling cut flowers along the highway for his mother and helping her shoplift.

Known for her take-no-prisoners readings, Wanda Coleman is a contributor to HARRIET (poetryfoundation.org) and drgodine.blogspot. She has been featured in Writing Los Angeles (Library of America), Quercus Review VI, The Los Angeles Review, the Burnside Review and online at MS. Her honors include fellowships from the Guggenheim Foundation and the NEA. Her most recent books include Ostinato Vamps (Pitt Poetry Series), The Riot Inside Me: Trials & Tremors (Godine/BlackSparrow), WANDA COLEMAN: Poems Seismic in Scene (de la chienne) - Mise en page et calligraphies/layout and illumination by Jean-Jacques Tachdjian, and new collection of stories, and Jazz & Twelve O¹clock Tales.

I'm proud to be a part of this. Some enterprising soul has taken my poem "Solipsist," from the Blazevox e-book Beams, and made a video for it on YouTube. The poem is set to music- a song with lyrics. This creates a tension and dynamic by which the lyrics butt against the poem. In this tension, and with the images that accompany the song and the poem, there seems to be a new kind of multi-media form. I wish I could give proper credit, but hopefully the name of this artist will eventually emerge:

Tom Bradley, Deb Hoag, and the NoLa Bookfair!

Hello wonderful people,

Unlikely Books has released "My Hands Were Clean" by Tom Bradley and "Dr. Gonzo: A series of loosely related essays on equality, visibility, and modern mental health, or, How the Mental Health System Drove Me Crazy" by Deb Hoag, bound together in one volume! These two books of narrative-essay-memoiresque cover Richard Nixon, Jimmy Page, Alister Crowley, Oscar Acosta, Mormons, ritual sex magic, and why we're all going to die of health care. Check them out at http://www.unlikelystories.org/10/bradleyhoag1010.shtml !

The Unlikely Stories crew will be at the New Orleans Book Fair! We'll be reading at the bookfair itself on Saturday, November 6th, and then at McKeoen's Books and Difficult Music on Sunday, November 7th! We'll be signing books at the fair, particularly the newly-released Unlikely Stories of the Third Kind! That is to say:

Unlikely Stories (and Poetry)
featuring Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Michael Harold, Michael Parker, Jonathan Penton, and Misti Rainwater-Lites at the NoLa Book Fair 500-600 Frenchman Street
Saturday, November 6th 11am-6pm
and McKeown's Books and Difficult Music
4737 Tchoupitoulas Street
Sunday, November 7th
6pm-Close

The NoLa Bookfair's web site is at http://www.nolabookfair.com/, and McKeown's can be discovered at http://mckeownsbooks.com/.

"Unlikely Stories of the Third Kind" continues to ship! Check it out at http://www.unlikelystories.org/u3.shtml . We're actively filling orders, and shipping out stacks of contributors' copies a couple of times a week. Thanks so much for your patience!

Hope to see you soon,

He has lived in San Francisco since 1999. In 2003 Ugly Duckling Presse published the first edition of his Selected Writings. It was followed in 2005 by a second revised and expanded edition. Other books include Death Race vsop, and Expensive Magic. A second large collection Stranger In Town<http://www.citylights.com/book/?GCOI=87286100628230> is just out from City Lights. * Arlo Quint* is the author of Drawn In (Fewer & Further Press), Hospitality in the Forest (Rust Buckle Books), Photogenic Memory (Lame House), and Days on End (Open 24 Hours). He’s the program coordinator for the Poetry Project at St. Mark’s Church. * Will Yackulic* was born in New York City. Since then he has eked out an existence as a flower deliver man, a janitor, a groundskeeper, a construction worker, a barrista, a clerk, a waiter, a handyman, a dog walker, an art-handler, a computer technician, and a professional artist. Taking up writing is certainly a step in the wrong direction for him with regard to making a living. He currently lives and works in Brooklyn.

& For The Curious, here's bios written for the occasion from San Francisco for SIGO and YACKULIC (apologies to QUINT.)

INTRODUCING DAME SIGO

With the strut that falls somewhere between Cher and Trudell, Cedar Sigo comes to Brooklyn yet again from San Francisco. This time he's got a new collection just out from City Lights STRANGER IN TOWN (again?) AND a very eye popping selection of outtakes and what ifs, titled SLIVERS, jez out from PUSH. What remains most remarkable in Sigo’s lines is the clandestine toss off that lets your lips quiver a bit while leaving your insides nothing but a charred gushy mess. Everything arrives of a certain measure, steadied and never left tamed.

What is THE MAN thinking? I cross the street to avoid cops, Sigo walks by passing them up rolling his joint and lighting it. Nothing but smoke in the air for the motherfuckers to stroll through. Once off the res, Sigo took a detour to Naropa, met The Beats and, more importantly, formed a lasting friendship with poet Jeni Olin. In San Francisco he drums up support for cosmetics at Rainbow Grocery. He makes his home in the Mission district with writer Johnny Huston in a cottage that has housed everybody from Noel Black and his terrific LOG to supposedly Janis Joplin once upon a time.

Hopefully he'll read one of his latest ditties: ODE. A listing of friends failed and continuing, the lasting love pulsating into deep morning from starry skies fading out. If he doesn’t it’s your loss. When he read at City Lights his mother was in the audience and her cackle is most delightful. You may have heard a great deal of things bout Sigo, be assured there are a great many more to come. The interviews will roll you over and the art reviews have already taken an on-line presence. The unlikelihood of a novel surfacing let’s you know this ain’t no shit-barker. Be nice to him. He really is not a great white shark, so don't you fuckin dare punch him in the nose. Besides, either way, he's not going away. So don't turn your back to him either.

- Patrick James Dunagan

Intro to Will Yackulic

Will Yackulic entered this planet through a malfunction in geostationary orbit. In earlier years, many argued that he arrived by happenstance through intergalactic travel. Evidence now shows that Konstantin Tsiolkovsky, the imperial soviet rocket scientist, brought him to us by use of a gravitational slingshot. As a young protégé to the scientist, Yackulic lived in a log house on the outskirts of Kaluga where he ghost wrote The Exploration of Cosmic Space by Means of Reaction Devices and furthered his studies in astronautic theory. Completely bored with theory, he turned his attention to other hobbies, including transmuting base metals into gold, drawing crystals, and working on his magnum opus, Magic & Showmanship: A Handbook for Conjurers, which analyzed every phase of conjuring, from sleights, devices, misdirection, controlling audience attention, to incorporating patter, and the effective use of assistants. A misanthrope by nature, Yackulic grew exceedingly strange and bizarre to his fellow town-folk. Most were struck by his inability to age, and were particularly fond of his good looks and large hands. Never one for attention, Yakulic ran to the streets where he took up skateboarding and graffiti. Shortly thereafter he was arrested for spray-painting “Thank You for the Brain Massage” on a downtown wall. At a public hearing, Tsiolkovsky was forced to exile him to New York City in 1975.

Yackulic’s early years in NYC are hard to recall, even for him. In fact, a lot of things are hard to recall to him. However, in a letter dated, September 1, 1982 Yackulic recalls in great detail on an old Remington typewriter,

“I can’t believe how much money they paid me. I mean, hand modeling wasn’t that lucrative to begin with. The only thing I got was free tabs of ecstasy, and with the ecstasy always came the parties and the girls. But I wasn’t really into em’ ya know, I mean, who wants to be out all night with a bunch of normies when you can sit around in your closet and create things. Besides, by the end of the year I won’t have to work at all. I’ve been tracking my hours for this consumer electronic company called Atari. I’ve already figured out the codes for so many games: Asteroids, Battlezone, Crystal Castles, Gravitar, Lunar Lander, Missile Command, Space Duel, Super Breakout, Human Cannonball, Maze Craze, Demons to Diamonds, Night Driver, Radar Lock, Star Raiders, Swordquest, Video Chess, the list can go on and on. But I’m tired ya know, this isn’t enough to keep my attention. Maybe I should go abroad and just skate and write letters. How does the Netherlands sound? Or France, yeah, France.”

In 1995 Yackulic’s wish came true. He spent three years traveling Europe and attended various esteemed schools such as Hogeschool vor de Kunsten in Amsterdam then Lacoste Ecole des Beaux-Arts in France. In 1997 he was exiled from Europe a second time for 15 counts of public intoxication, 10 counts of resisting arrest, and 2 counts of shoplifting. Once again, Yackulic found himself back in NY but not without receiving his BFA from SUNY Purchase. The next few years of his life are again a blur. When asked what he did during that time I received a postcard that said, “Spent a year with some Shamans in Alaska. No mushrooms but the peyote was off the chain. Did some rock climbing and learned to play the guitar, not the songs with Dio, but with Ozzy. Sabbath is not Sabbath without Ozzy, Moved to SF.”

Yackulic’s years in San Francisco span almost a decade and are marked by an overall arch of creative ingenuity and variety. In the Lower Haight he painted well over 30 book covers, made short films, had group and solo shows, stared in at least four bands (Autopilot, OverGold, The Grenades, and one German one where he wore all white and actually sang in German), and even started his own art handling business. In typical Yackulic fashion, this still just wasn't enough. It seemed as if SF was starting to become that log house on the outskirts of Kaluga. Some say he exiled himself this time, others say he disappeared to Brooklyn for a modeling contract. Gravitational slingshot or not, tornado life in Brooklyn has not been everything but dull.

On a recent trip back to SF Yackulic was asked, "Will, what's the secret, how do you do it all so effortlessly when it seems like you're sleeping all the time?" In between a bite of taco and a sip of beer Yackulic responded, "You know. I dunno. I guess I just don't think about things, I just let them happen on their own. I just stick to my motto, MI COOZIE ES SU COOZIE. Are you gonna finish that beer?"

DIANE DI PRIMA: AN EVENING OF READING & CONVERSATION

October 15, Friday, 6:00pm, Martin E. Segal Theatre Join the iconic poet and activist Diane di Prima for a rare New York City appearance. After her reading, Graduate Center Professor Ammiel Alcalay will engage her in a conversation about her work and life after her reading. Over the span of her remarkable career, di Prima has published 43 books of poetry and prose and, as per Allen Ginsberg, "broke barriers of race-class identity and delivered a major body of verse brilliant in its particularity." She is presently the Poet Laureate of San Francisco. A two-volume Lost & Found chapbook selection of her lectures on poets H.D. and Robert Duncan will be available for purchase on the night of the event.

NEH Institute for the Digital Humanities @ The University of Denver: Call for Proposals

FYI . . .

The University of Denver Digital Media Studies Program is now accepting applications for fellowships in its 2011-2012 Institute for the Digital Humanities, a program funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities. Proposals are due December 15, 2010 and should be emailed to

[redacted]

and

More information and workshop description can be found at http://dms.du.edu/DU_IDH.html

About the Fellowship: The University of Denver's Institute for the Digital Humanities will offer scholars the opportunity to explore the benefits of incorporating interactive media into interdisciplinary collaboration and public dissemination of research. Fellows will be given training and mentoring in the use of digital tools for data analysis and presentation, social collaboration and authorship, and/or research production and dissemination in relation to projects of their own choosing. This is a non-residential fellowship program, although participation is required in two on-campus events at the beginning (June 2011) and end (September 2012) of the 18-month fellowship period, as well as in one video teleconference at the fellowship's midpoint (December 2011).

Fellowships will be awarded to twelve national/international scholars and eight local scholars. Applicants must have completed candidacy into their doctoral programs or have received their PhD. Proposals can be submitted from individuals or from teams of scholars. Fellows will work together in theme-based groups to envision, execute, and produce research projects using digital tools to facilitate collaboration and to create representations of their work. We particularly welcome proposals from scholars interested in working with rich media formats such as video, photography, sound, graphics, and various forms of interactivity and from scholars working on engaged scholarship, whose work is both about public concerns and is intended for consumption and use by members of the public. During the institute meetings, fellows will explore central methods in the digital humanities and in multimedia authorship, including gaming, data visualization, digital archives/electronic journals, and audio and visual production.

About the Proposals:

Applicants need not be proficient with new media authoring but must demonstrate familiarity with the potential of digital media forms and clearly articulate their motivations for creating a digital project. Evidence of the capacity for successful collaboration and for scholarly innovation is also required.

Proposals should include a 6-page (single-spaced) description that clearly states the project's argument, its intended contribution to multimedia scholarship and to contemporary research in the field, and an explanation of why a digital media endeavor is integral to the goals of the project. Each participant must submit a brief biography and a full c.v. listing previously published work in any format. You may include sample media if available. Please also indicate in your proposal your top three choices for workshop tracks (descriptions at http://dms.du.edu/DU_IDH.html).

We will choose applicants based on an assessment of their proposed research; their record of past research (and in the case of graduate students their research potential); and the clarity and sophistication of their application essay. For individual applicants, our ability to place them with others working on similar topics will also factor into their application acceptance.

Fri 15 Oct 2010

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œMargin Lâ€ by Vernon Frazer.

Description:

The roots of Vernon Frazer's textual poetry lie as much in the free jazz of John Coltrane, Cecil Taylor and their successors as they do in language-centered poetry, Surrealism, Dada and abstract expressionism. In â€œMargin Lâ€, Frazer's words and concepts play over the page until they create a sense that something has happened during each poemâ€™s movement. The poems, however, leave their interpretation of what precisely has happened up to the reader.

POEMS & PICTURES: A RENAISSANCE IN THE ART OF THE BOOK (1946-1981)
Curated by Kyle Schlesinger Museum of Printing History
Houston, Texas
October 22, 2010 January 29, 2011

POEMS & PICTURES: A RENAISSANCE IN THE ART OF THE BOOK (1946-1981) will open at the Museum for Printing History in Houston next Friday, October 22nd. I¹ll be giving a talk at 6:30 with reception to follow. Free and open to the public.

Poems & Pictures examines the relationship between visual and language art. The exhibition features over 60 books produced between 1946 and 1981, as well as paintings, collages, periodicals, and ephemera. Poets, artists and collaborators include Wallace Berman, Joe Brainard, Robert Creeley, Jim Dine, Johanna Drucker, Philip Guston, Joanne Kyger, Emily McVarish, Karen Randall, Larry Rivers, George Schneeman, and many more. Together they share in the common objective of bringing bold new writing and art into print where commercial presses fear to tread with flair, imagination and intelligence.

A comprehensive catalog will be available.

UNION
by Jacqueline Ahl

The Ceremony-- Sarah
I.
What you remember of us belongs only in the arms of the moment-- the ice cubes warming each other to water the chime of bodies under a window sill the globes of eggs beading in the heat.
Put it away
smoothed like a wedding gown into the corners of a closet fingered when the nights are fitful and cold the white spine, the underarms still smelling of nervous anticipation, the hands of cousins and aunts reaching inside to button dreaming their cotton bodies into satin, remembering their own forgotten ways.
They look at one another, condemning the curse of soft flesh, trust, ears unstopped, the hands' tangent already in the trajectory of loss.
"There is such a thing as too much love"
--they warn her against it button tighter than her breath can catch touching her as if to make sure they, too, were once real.

Memory is the wedding gown stained with blood.
The once that smells of always.
The She put on display—glass-heavy, church-bell sad the woman
no one else will ever touch.

The Bed-- Justine
II.
At night
you dream the sleek rapture of hair about a neck tightening until the life slips out like straw.
You wake in the sweat of love's dark noose dialing 911 against the pads of pillows the groan of a name like a sentence.
"Too much, too much"
--always the excess, the heart scraped against the baking bowl raw egg and dark batter up the wrist rings tongued clean by his wicked smile.

In the curtained kitchen, something dangerous rising.

The Portrait-- Rose
III.
In photographs, we are straw figures arrayed like sudden dolls.
Fake fixtures of ceiling fans spun to silence stopped clocks hands laid over hands the pinholes of dark eyes suggesting little inviting the onlooker
”Guess”
Caught moths, pinned to the walls of our choosing.
We are beautiful when still.
The painting hangs over a shoulder,
the plant angled, hair plaited, turmoil annulled.
Beyond the frame is the carved bed bowed from bodies like an old horse the floor with knots like eyes and finger slivers the table with elbow marks, heavy with heads the scissored give-up of love letters.
Our held breath perfect like the postcard of a plane before impact perfect like the upturned face of a tree before lightning.
Perfect like the smile of the flash-blind seconds before the world returns.

The Sacrifice-- Tobian
IV.
Forgiveness is an opiate.
I spit wine into the root, the tree that grants life, surrender a neck of white feathers under a patient axe.
She knows what’s coming, shudders into death like a dream.
I soften under your touch like old sheets oiled leather fine foxglove.
We tremble like candles.
It is impossible to tell if the shadows that net the ceiling are lost birds or bats.
Our love, the aviary gone awry, feathered bodies hopping about the cosmos picking stars like berries nests like whirled planetary paths the hugeness of all our small things, talons on wrist,

wax,
black oars circling a fawn.
Sleep, forgiveness, the opiate.
In the blood pool of your gaze
the oracle of all I am.

The Ring-- Billie
V.
The first was a tin thing shined on the tail of your shirt plumbed from Levis into palm hot cracked vinyl creaking with our weight you had a way of tonguing my ear that made me think of cat tails, damp cotton, the absent touch of reading.
Too big for my finger, and you wrapped it with fishing line, twisting gently over knuckle lifting my mouth to yours pushing away the dark cloud of our clothes promising worlds beyond the broken horizon of a town line empty filling stations and the same statues at every bus stop a warm pickup with shoes perched on dash our two-step in headlights under mosquito radio drone a tin ring polished under shifting bodies.
Beyond the dark halo of your hair,
a skyline studded with promise of Cadillacs and diamonds.

The Burial-- Sarah
VI.
After the first night,
I put a knife to the rope of my hair,
severing its flesh from my body.
Coiled it in an old blanket, brought to the yard like a dead baby.
Balancing shovel, lantern, bundle.

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is “The Jigoku Zoshi Hells: A Book of Variations►► by Jerome Rothenberg
Sun 17 Oct 2010

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œThe Jigoku Zoshi Hells: A Book of Variationsâ€ by Jerome Rothenberg

Description:

Jerome Rothenberg's "The Jigoku Zoshi Hells: A Book of Variations" is a series of new poems following the method of composition Rothenberg had previously used in "The Lorca Variations" and in homages to the work of other poets and artists. In the present set he applies the same procedure to an early work of his own, "The Seven Hells of the Jigoku Zoshi" (1962) â€“ not to annihilate the original but to bring it into a new dimension, where both versions can lead an independent if interlinked existence. The fifty year gap between them adds its own strangeness to the mix.

Sun 17 Oct 2010

Dear all,

This show opens on November 5th. My collaborative piece with Brian McClendon involves the following:

Anatomical will be composed in three parts

part one: the texts

part two: the images

part three: the sounds

part one: the texts:

Two pieces of text born of each other, made with the same heirachy and restructured similar words and phrases used throughout both.

Text will be displayed side by side or even printed onto acetate and overlaped to show the "anatomy" of the structure, the words that appear and reappear in the same places would be able to be seen to the viewer while the other words would blur a bit. one type in red and one in blue (color of veins, blood, also symbolic of boy, girl), which would give the reappearance of type a darker color and still allow both texts to be read.

part two: the images

this is the second part of the idea, where we will use the images of anatomy or figure drawings alongside mechanical-electronic sculptures on human form.

The sculptures and images will be combined into a video, which will allow forms ideas and symbolism of both artist's to come together in some kind of anatomical way, via the movie timeline.

Also, the sound part also fits into this, we will be tailoring it to fit exactly.

part three: the sounds

The third part would be the sound part of the video, composed with sounds that are relatable to the anatomical topic. By this i mean everything from talking, singing, human sounds to creaking cracking mechanical sounds.

Release Date: October 18th 2010, Philadelphia, PA

Soundoffka Vol. 2 is an aural and visual exhibition hosted by VWVOFFKA, 2037 Frankford

Ave. Philadelphia, PA 19125. Opening reception will be on first friday, November 5th from 6-11pm.

Closing reception will be Friday November 19th from 7-11pm. Soundoffka Vol. 2 will be featuring the work of Adam Zucker, Jason A. Maas, Sarah Weber, Corey Pace, Christopher Gage, Megan Kelley,

Bonnie MacAllister, and Brian McLendon. Soundoffka is a series of exhibitions in which artists explore the use of sound as an art form, expression, and the ways we relate to the vast aural landscape around us.

Soundoffka Vol. 1 was a fresh collaboration between artists, working on individual pieces, which lent themselves towards the overall experience. It was also an interactive experience in which the audience became a crucial collaborative aspect to the overall piece. During the creation of Vol. 1 we also realized how vital the visual aesthetics of the space came into play. Soundoffka Vol. 2 will further expand upon these concepts of collaboration, interaction, and the relationship between sound and sight.

The participating artists have been paired with artists they have never previously worked with. The artists will be exploring these themes through a variety of mediums. Pieces ranging from site-specific installations, video projections, aural installations, multi-dimensional performances, interactive soundscapes, and various series of drawings and paintings will provide a fresh and palatable exploration of sound as a viable, accessible medium.

VWVOFFKA is a multi-functional store front space located at 2037 Frankford Ave. Our mission is to provide a venue to explore everything and anything related to music, art, education and culture that is accessible to our community at large. We are open to all proposals for exhibitions, music events, poetry readings, lectures, performances, community meetings, art making parties, plant sales, potlucks, etc.

He of the great 1976 anthology of prose poems that a generation or two read to pieces, and the author of "The European Shoe" and a pretty good anthology of Surrealist poetry.

I've been trying to track down the old Prose Poem anthology on Abe Books--will try some other possibilities--but I recall that it was bulky and none too kind to its paper cover after repeated fingerings and flexings.

â€œDistant Voices: an email correspondenceâ€ by Jake Berry & Jeffrey Side

â€œI think we are nearing an end of game situation as far as the arts are concerned. By that, I mean everything that could be done in painting, music, poetry, film, song etc. has been done. All that seems to be going on now in each of these art forms is a repetition of achievements but rebranding them as â€˜innovative.â€™ Painting is still feeding off Pollack or Rothko, and conceptual art is still milking the found object idea. Experimental classical music is still working with dissonance and atonal stuff. Mainstream poetry is still under the shadow of Wordsworth and Whitman; or if it is experimental, it is still operating under the fragmentation/collage aesthetic of early modernist poetry. Modern experimental film seems not to exist anymore (it is now video art) and mainstream film (since Spielberg) imitates the look and feel of German Expressionist cinema in the 1920s. In pop/rock (the two have become the same to me now) the musical sounds are not as innovative as they were with the early 1980s new wave stuff, with its space-age synth sound and robotic feel. What we have now is fourth rate Beatles/Doors/Stones wannabees on the one hand, and soul-based divas (Beyonce etc.) churning out substandard Tina Turna/Diana Ross/Donna Summer with â€˜attitudeâ€™ and an R&B base run. There is nothing very innovative being done anymore. Obviously, this is a caricature and not 100% accurate, but it illustrates a trend.â€ (Jeffrey Side) â€œYes, these days it is anathema to do anything that seems romantic. This is the horseshit of so-called postmodernism. Romanticism leads to Modernism and you must rebel against Modernism because, well, itâ€™s old now and you have to do something new. It was Pound though that said â€˜make it new.â€™ Poetry has painted itself into corners all over the place. The academic corner. The Beat/Hip corner. The exclusive avant-garde corner. The anecdotal narrative corner. The poetry slam, open mic corner. All of these are for a very limited audience. I heard Gore Vidal talking about the novel a couple of years ago. He lamented that the novel had gone the way of poetry, into obscurity. Many people would object saying no, there are more novels published every year than ever before. Yes, but have you read those novels? They arenâ€™t Dickens, nowhere near it. They arenâ€™t even Gore Vidal. Itâ€™s mostly pulp stuff.â€ (Jake Berry)

CARRIE OLIVIA ADAMS is a Chicago-based poet and poetry-filmmaker. She works as a book publicist and is the poetry editor for the small press Black Ocean. She is the author of Intervening Absence (Ahsahta Press 2009) and the chapbook â€œA Useless Windowâ€. Her second book, 41 Jane Doeâ€™s is forthcoming from Ahsahta Press along with a DVD of poem films in 2013.

JUSTIN CABRILLOS is a writer and performer based in Chicago. Drawing on elements of movement, performance art, poetry, and sound art, he investigates the field where alphabetic and gestural language shape the movements of the body. Cabrillos received a fellowship at Ox-Bow School of Art, he was an Incubation Series artist-in-residence at the Chicago Cultural Center, and he will be a 2011 LinkUP Artist at Links Hall. He recently collaborated with Every House Has a Door in a performance for artCENA in Rio De Janeiro.

LAURA GOLDSTEIN is a poet, artist, and curator living in Chicago. She has two chapbooks, Ice in Intervals and Day of Answers, and choreographed the video performance Captain America for Chicagoâ€™s Rhinofest in 2007, the script of which can be found in EAOGH. Her work can also be found in Requited, Little Red Leaves, Everyday Genius, and Seven Corners, How2, and Otoliths. She teaches at Loyola University and the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

AMIRA HANAFI is a writer and artist using variable methods of research and collection to produce documentary objects. Currently, she is working with an assemblage of material collected on a four-month drift in Cairo, Egypt. She is the author of Minced English, Trinities, and Forgery (forthcoming from Green Lantern Press, 2011). Her work has recently been published in American Letters & Commentary, Requited, and Matrix. She teaches at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

KURT HEINTZ has worked among the interstices between performance, language and video since 1980. Starting in 1993, he produced dozens of collaborative readings linking Chicago with Los Angeles, Boston, Seattle, and Cambridge, England using live two-way video, first with Telepoetics, then e-poets network. He co-founded the Guild Complex's Poetry Video Festival in 1991, and has consulted for Visible Verse, Vancouverâ€™s 10-year-old poetry cinema presenter. His videos have been shown at/in Reeling (Chicago Filmmakers), Series A (Hyde Park Arts Center), Image Union (WTTW, Chicago), Poetry Spots (WNYC, New York), and the Gene Siskel Film Center, and elsewhere. For more, see http://heintz.e-poets.net

MARK JEFFERY is a performance /installation artist and was a member of Goat Island Performance Group from 1996 - 2009. He created and performed in 5 of Goat Islandâ€™s works, touring and teaching extensively across North America including 10 summer schools at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago and throughout Western/Eastern Europe. He curates performance events in Chicago including the international performance, sound and language festival OPENPORT at Links Hall, SAIC, and the Chicago Cultural Center. Mark is currently an Adjunct Associate Professor at SAIC where he teaches in the Performance Department and First Year Program.

JUDD MORRISSEY is a writer and code artist whose works of electronic literature, performance, and installation have been presented internationally. He is the creator of digital literary works including The Precession (work-in-progress, 2009-), The Jew's Daughter (Electronic Literature Collection, 2006), My Name is Captain, Captain (Eastgate Systems, 2002), and The Last Performance [dot org] (2009), a collaborative writing, archiving, and text-visualization project for which he was a recipient of the inaugural Creative Capital / Andy Warhol Foundation Arts Writers' Grant in 2007. Judd teaches as an Adjunct Associate Professor at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago in Writing, Art and Technology Studies, and Performance.

MARISSA PLUMB writes, teaches, and works in media and web production. Her current multimedia project is an experiment in narrative interactivity, driven by questions and concerns about how data, once interpreted, shapes society. Marisa studied at Brown University and the School of the Art Institute of Chicago, and now teaches English in New York and D.C.

RED ROVER SERIES is curated by Laura Goldstein and Jennifer Karmin. Each event is designed as a reading experiment with participation by local, national, and international writers, artists, and performers. The series was founded in 2005 by Amina Cain and Jennifer Karmin.

*I am proud to participate (November 5th and 13th) in the upcoming New York Foundation for the Arts Boot Camp Arts Festival. You can see the full schedule of events here (http://nyfabootcampfestival.wordpress.com/schedule/):NEW YORK FOUNDATION FOR THE ARTS BOOT CAMP ARTS FESTIVAL<http://nyfabootcampfestival.wordpress.com/schedule/>
In Abundance: Poetry Reading Featuring Liliana Alamendarez and Wanda Phipps *
November 5, 2010 at 6-7pm
The Bowery Poetry Club (http://www.bowerypoetry.com/#Event/95992)
308 Bowery
New York, NY 10012
Tickets $5 at the door.

Liliana will be reading from her book of poetry,* A Scorched Page*. She will read from some of her new work as well. Her poems are inspired by nature and every day life. From folks waiting for a train to the birds that fly past her backyard, to the memories that sneak up on a quiet afternoon, they are all fair game for inspiration.

Wanda will read from her two books: *Wake-Up Calls: 66 Morning Poems and * Field of Wanting: Poems of Desire as well as the new work, *Silent Pictures Recognize the World,*written in response to static photographic images which mutate in writing into film noir scenes and dark romances. Stephen B. Antonakos will accompany her on guitar with tonal equivalents to the poems.

Her work honors dailiness, the details of the personal, as well as the ecstasy of randomness that brings us all together.

He of the great 1976 anthology of prose poems that a generation or two read to pieces, and the author of "The European Shoe" and a pretty good anthology of Surrealist poetry.

I've been trying to track down the old Prose Poem anthology on Abe Books--will try some other possibilities--but I recall that it was bulky and none too kind to its paper cover after repeated fingerings and flexings.

Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

Mon 18 Oct 2010

It would be great to share some descriptions of the tango between your favorite volume(s) and the environment where you are. Japan is notorious for its foxing frenzies--most of my books have tiny black and brown threads colonizing the tooth of the paper and lichen-like spoors notching away at the typographic landscapes of what I read. I have two notebooks form the 1980's that are crammed full of writing, scribbling out, worthless phone numbers, torn, dog-eared and foxed pages, pages rotting, onion skin-like, sun-burnt, spat-upon, maggot-bitten and palimpsested with white-out and bic reworkings, rain-tortured into rivulets of ink charging crookedly down the cheek of the page from black to blue to gray like the tears of a miraculous icon in a sooty corner of some yellow-walled church where nobody goes but the toothless, squint-eyed, and terminal; books falling to pieces and stinking of ancient sex and Lucky Strikes, and years spent in old winter coats for sale in the bargain bins of the Purple Heart and the Salvation Army. These are the kinds of books that excite my imagination because those old Complete Poes and The Poems of Robert Service tortured into ghostlier shapes, rain-warped into counterweights for mobiles and stabiles invites my Twombly and Rothco appreciation centers to re-activate, and these are located close to the endorphin sluices of my innermost and most secret self and jam them open, or at least tickle the hell out of them so that my tongue thrusts out to lick the plaster on the wall in joy.

Your descriptions solicited! Jess

Ecopoetics workshop
Tue 19 Oct 2010

Come do some hikin' & writin' in the gorgeous late Fall hills of upstate NY!

October 30th to November 2nd
Ecopoetics after Copenhagen: Language, Form, Site with Jonathan Skinner

A field-based workshop, offering an introduction to environmental writing in relation to current poetic practice, in the post-Copenhagen moment. Setting our compass by key works of postmodern ecopoetics (Charles Olson, Gary Snyder, Lorine Niedecker, Larry Eigner, Ronald Johnson, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Ed Roberson, Cecilia Vicuña), let's hit the trail, charged with bringing our writing practice to the task of response. In what ways do land art (Robert Smithson), research poetry (Juliana Spahr), conceptual writing (Kenneth Goldsmith) or mestizo poetics (Cecilia Vicuña) change our relation to place? When the very air we breathe is bought and sold, can poets reclaim the commons? How do we meaningfully respond, as poets, to disrupted urban environments, collapsing bee colonies, displaced communities, or the Pacific garbage patch? This workshop sets out some of the tools for redefining language practice in the face of climate change and related global catastrophes, with a special emphasis on site-specific writing.

Jonathan Skinner's poetry collections include With Naked Foot (Little Scratch Pad Press, 2009) and Political Cactus Poems (Palm Press, 2005). He founded and edits the journal ecopoetics (www.ecopoetics.org), which features creative-critical intersections between writing and ecology. Skinner also writes ecocriticism on contemporary poetry and poetics: his essays on the poets Ronald Johnson and Lorine Niedecker appeared recently in volumes published by the National Poetry Foundation and by University of Iowa Press. His essay "Thoughts on Things: Poetics of the Third Landscape" appeared recently in the Ecolanguage Reader (ed. Brenda Iijima). Skinner teaches in the Environmental Studies Program at Bates College, in Central Maine, where he makes his home.

Jeffrey C. Robinson's UNTAM'D WING... Review copies available
Wed 20 Oct 2010

Station Hill announces the November publication of:

Untam'd Wing: Riffs on Romantic Poetry

by Jeffrey C. Robinson

Foreword by Anne Waldman

For a PDF of UNTAM'D WING for review consideration, please email [redacted]

The jazz term "riff" is short for "riffle"—"make rough." In Untam'd Wing: Riffs on Romantic Poetry, scholar/poet Jeffrey Robinson sets out much like a jazz musician to renew a great body of work (say, Miles Davis on George Gershwin)—"to recast," as he says in the Prefatory Note, "what have become monuments, with all the inertness of passive appreciation that monumentality encourages, into living forms." If he "roughs up" some of our long-time favorites, it's not to revise, and certainly not to improve, but on the contrary to reveal a timeless dimension that is of the very nature of the Romantic: "I would define a 'romantic' poem, of whatever vintage, as one that invites its own renewal in every present." With all the boldness and subtle care of the poets he celebrates, Robinson stakes his "life-long involvement as reader, teacher, and scholar/critic of Romantic poetry” on an equally committed “absorption and belief in the discoveries of modern and contemporary experimental poetry.” Like a true marriage it lays bare both parties.

"Untam’d Wing is a heady conglomeration of poetic intensities and re-visionings, of the Romantic mother lode. Only a poet deeply embedded in and enthralled by this realm could take wild liberties and shape them into a contemporary volume of such curious and inventive range. Jeffrey Robinson is a scholar and has lived inside the Romantic body for decades, and precisely because of this his imagination is highly attuned to further Romantic nuance.... He sheds bright light on meaning and message. He is the scientist/artist finally breaking free of shackles." —Anne Waldman, from the foreword

161. Séamas Cain
Technicians of the Sacred ?
Wed 20 Oct 2010

Dear poetic friends,

When I was young, the book "Technicians of the Sacred" had a powerful impact on me!

I thought of it immediately when I received the e-mail below from Jill O'Mahony. I met her face-to-face in Dublin recently, as I was involved with several events for the IMRAM festival. I was impressed by her, and think it would be good to help to support her project.

If you have any ideas or suggestions for Jill, please send them to her directly.

Please send the notice about her project to any indigenous, tribal, or native poet you think might benefit from her activity.

Of course, a more active link between a Tribal poet and a Gaelic poet might be a plus.

Thank you.

Best wishes,

Séamas Cain

Subject: Native American / Irish Compilation
To: [redacted]

Dear Mr Cain, Hello, my name is Jill O'Mahony. I am currently a lecturer in the Waterford Institute of Technology and am working in the area of Cultural Studies. I hope you don't mind my contacting you but your email address was given to me by Gabriel Rosenstock in the hopes that you might be interested in submitting poetry for addition to a compilation I am editing. Below is an outline of what I hope to achieve. I would be delighted if you would read over it and perhaps consider contributing. If you could get back to me whenever is convenient that would be great, Best wishes, Jill

It's structure will consist of a substantial introduction to the theme of > Identity and Voice in marginalized communities, followed by two sections, > one consisting of Irish Poetry and one on Native American poetry.

> The introduction will give the above theme consideration on its own and in > relation to the poems that follow (in addition to highlighting > problems with efficiency in translating from the original language among other themes). There > will be two sections. The first of which will be Irish language poetry alongside their English translations.
> The second section would focus on poems written in Native American > Languages (I am also waiting for confirmation of possible Chomorro > submissions) with their English translation. All of this obviously within > the specified theme of national identity within marginalized communities.
> Issues dealing with displacement of land, loss of cultural heritage (or the > fight to retain it), changing notions of identity & etc.
>
> This compilation would be a great benefit for any Sociology of Literature > course, not to mention the obvious English Literature modules on > Postcolonial studies. Most of all the compilation would strive to provide a > cross cultural platform on which marginalized communities can express unique > artistic talent. By combining Irish culture with Native American Culture in a venture like this we > immediately reach a wider community.

Turkish Poet Arif Damar (1925-2010)
Wed 20 Oct 2010

The Turkish poet Arif Damar (1925-2010) died yesterday.

The Broken Spool

Old friend, depart,

We climb the swings
of our silence,
apart from each other,
We swing, elbow to elbow,
stop,
then, by separate stairs, return to our thresholds.
It’s evening,
We take the domesticity of evening on our back,
In one hand the stick on which we rest, in the other,
disappearing daylight.
(As red in the western sky strikes us to re-write fate, sparks fly from our foreheads!).
It’s evening,
We walk,
without dalliance,
We reach
the all-embracing sea, kneeling,
We’ll stay there.
First, we free our sweaty wrists from the handcuffs that old friend has fixed, unawares – unaware

the sea is tired.

And night!

Such night!

Rich night none can penetrate!

We part-open the door

Of the weary waters –

(In star light

We follow our light) –

enter in

“Nothing in common,” she says

“—besides memories”

“We’ve nothing in common,” I reply.

All that I might’ve gathered from “experience?”

ha! tell me about it!

If memories aren’t *re*activated,

*re*experienced,

they wither and fade,

discarded, abandoned...

(what other options had we?)

We each remain silent.

Such night

Rich night none can penetrate!

We don’t look to the stars

nor pay attention to the sounds,

or to the silence,

We’re ocean-tempered.

Night’s pleasures

wait for us,

white water lilies,

waiting to spread their scent.

We’re the curvilinear fantasy of the placid lake,

its honest labor,

absence of pretension.

We’re

the water lilies’ unheard music, echoing depth.

Tomorrow, together,

we might save the world,

but first, tonight, please,

may this night be over!

Such night

Rich night none can penetrate!

That natural undying loveliness

blossoms on the thinnest of criss-crossing branches.

Let’s break off, we said,

two filaments

of silver cord pendant

in empty space

coming down

around

New Translations of Utpal Kumar Basu @ Kaurab

Wed 20 Oct 2010

Kaurab Translation Archive presents new English translations of Utpal Kumar Basu -

http://www.kaurab.com/english/bengali_poetry/utpal.html

Utpal Kumar Basu is an Indian (Bengali) poet from the 1950s generation whose work has received great attention since the birth of a Bengali postmodern consciousness. Utpal's oeuvre is as wide and vivid as his travels. His poetic craft is quietly iconoclastic in its deglorification of the artistic position of the poem. At the same time, the poem carefully allows for retention of poetic speech and valor. A world, as if seen through the eyes of a migratory bird, where nature exists amidst its wastefulness and tribes of lesser known ordinary people of a cultural variety, punctuate his imagery. One critic has referred to his poetic language as "mashed" while another describes it as "nomadic".

Russell Williams
Thu 21 Oct 2010

Russell Williams was worried about being seen as a coldblooded psychopath. But who could call him that? No, he looks, instead, like a warm fuzzy psychopath. He was particularly concerned for his wife, the Canadian military, and his cat. Which, of course, is quite um touching in a leader of the Canadian military. Yes, a real warm and fuzzy Canadian psyschopath. Did you ever see American Psycho? A brilliant movie of the Reagan era of Republican psychopathy. Here we have the Canadian Psycho of Harper's Canada. Even with the photos of him being the Queen's pilot and talking with Harper's Defence Minister Peter what's his name, the pig.

The spine of my copy is held together with duct tape. There's a tiny fig leaf of cover left. All pages yellow and brittle.

He of the great 1976 anthology of prose poems that a generation or two read to pieces, and the author of "The European Shoe" and a pretty good anthology of Surrealist poetry.

I've been trying to track down the old Prose Poem anthology on Abe Books--will try some other possibilities--but I recall that it was bulky and none too kind to its paper cover after repeated fingerings and flexings.

Thu 21 Oct 2010

Jesse, In New Mexico the glue used in bindings sometimes dries out and turns to dust so that a book comes apart in your hands. I have some topo maps with wonderful, meandering trails eaten into them by insects. A few years ago the Center for Contemporary Arts in Santa Fe did a show not of environmentally damaged books but of library books that had been vandalized because of their lesbian/gay content. A group of artists salvaged them and turned them into sculptural artists' books and other kinds of artworks. Quite moving. Jeffrey

> It would be great to share some descriptions of the tango between your favorite volume(s) and the environment where you are. Japan is notorious for its foxing frenzies--most of my books have tiny black and brown threads colonizing the tooth of the paper and lichen-like spoors notching away at the typographic landscapes of what I read. I have two notebooks form the 1980's that are crammed full of writing, scribbling out, worthless phone numbers, torn, dog-eared and foxed pages, pages rotting, onion skin-like, sun-burnt, spat-upon, maggot-bitten and palimpsested with white-out and bic reworkings, rain-tortured into rivulets of ink charging crookedly down the cheek of the page from black to blue to gray like the tears of a miraculous icon in a sooty corner of some yellow-walled church where nobody goes but the toothless, squint-eyed, and terminal; books falling to pieces and stinking of ancient sex and Lucky Strikes, and years spent in old winter coats for sale in the bargain bins of the Purple Heart and the Salvation Army. These are the kinds of books that excite my imagination because those old Complete Poes and The Poems of Robert Service tortured into ghostlier shapes, rain-warped into counterweights for mobiles and stabiles invites my Twombly and Rothco appreciation centers to re-activate, and these are located close to the endorphin sluices of my innermost and most secret self and jam them open, or at least tickle the hell out of them so that my tongue thrusts out to lick the plaster on the wall in joy.

Jerome Rothenberg's Argotist Ebook 'The Jigoku Zoshi Hells: A Book of Variations' is now available
Sun 24 Oct 2010

The technical problems that caused me to take Jerome Rothenberg's 'The Jigoku Zoshi Hells: A Book of Variations' offline last week are now resolved, and the ebook is now available free at:

http://www.lulu.com/product/ebook/the-jigoku-zoshi-hells-a-book-of-variations/13227501

Description:

Jerome Rothenberg's 'The Jigoku Zoshi Hells: A Book of Variations' is a series of new poems following the method of composition Rothenberg had previously used in "The Lorca Variations" and in homages to the work of other poets and artists. In the present set he applies the same procedure to an early work of his own, "The Seven Hells of the Jigoku Zoshi" (1962) â€“ not to annihilate the original but to bring it into a new dimension, where both versions can lead an independent if interlinked existence. The fifty year gap between them adds its own strangeness to the mix.

For the next issue, Barzakh seeks creative and or critical works that address, challenge, and reshape translation practice as an extension of this intermediary position. Questions on translation as a discourse to consider include but are not exclusive to:

How does translation practice complicate and inform languages, plural?

Is translation a form of selection?

What are the ethics of appropriation involved with translation?

How does working on translation affect the writer?s creative work and the way in which it is received?

Does translation necessarily have to be between two texts as equivalences, or can it rather be translation from disparate medias? How can say, the visual or kinesthetic be translated into text or vice-versa?

Please send any work which delves into the between of translation practice to [redacted] by November 15th. Please write ?Translation? in the subject line. Barzakh can be found at http://barzakh.net

Utpal's oeuvre is as wide and vivid as his travels. His poetic craft is quietly iconoclastic in its deglorification of the artistic position of the poem. At the same time, the poem carefully allows for retention of poetic speech and valor. A world, as if seen through the eyes of a migratory bird, where nature exists amidst its wastefulness and tribes of lesser known ordinary people of a cultural variety, punctuate his imagery. One critic has referred to his poetic language as "mashed" while another describes it as "nomadic".*

Call for Submissions of Elizabeth Bishop's Translated Work to Barzakh
Sun 24 Oct 2010

Over the course of her lifetime, Elizabeth Bishop translated works by the French surrealist Max Jacob in 1950 and by the Mexican poet Octavio Paz in the 1970s. She also translated several pieces by Brazilian writers, such as Clarice Lispector and Carlos Drummond de Andrade, as well as Helena Morley, a young girl who grew up in a Brazilian mining town in the nineteenth century, whose diary she translated. An exacting and literal translator, she advances the following recommendations in her unpublished Remarks on Translation: "When a word is repeated? repeat it! (Just because English has more words than any other language except Russian?doesn't mean we have to use them all. . . .) When a line is repeated?repeat it?and also?stick to the structure" (Bishop as qtd. in Henneberg). Additionally, in a letter to Anne Stevenson, she writes that translations were to be handled "with a minimum of bloodletting or seepage" (Ibid). Questions to consider include, but are not limited to, the following:

How did translation influence Bishop?s development as a poet?
In what ways did Bishop accommodate the ?otherness? of cross-cultural translations?
What are the ethics of Bishop?s ?literal? translations?
In what ways do Bishop?s translations critique or complicate imperialist themes?
In what ways does Bishop stage her own interventions in her translated works?

Please send any work which delves into Bishop?s translated work to [redacted] by November 15. Please write ?Bishop Translation? in the subject line.

Gigantic Sequins
http://giganticmagazine.wordpress.com/

Gigantic Sequins is a literary arts magazine. Its first two issues were published in early 2009 and early 2010. It's third issue is set to hit the stacks in the fall of 2010. Gigantic Sequins aspires to publish writers big and tall. Its editors encourage artists of all media to submit their writing (fiction, non-fiction, poetry, prose, essays, comics) and printable black & white fine art. Gigantic Sequins is a print magazine and more information can be found at the above url. Its editors are scattered about the country in Chicago, Houston and Philadelphia, spreading the good word about art and literature the best they can.

Geoffrey Cruickshank-Hagenbuckle

Geoffrey Cruickshank-Hagenbuckle is the author of Nuit Maudit. He has published in nearly 100 poetry journals from The Boston Review to Verse. He is the editor of the poetry magazine Dear Bear and a staff critic at The Brooklyn Rail. His film credits include Tremors, and Finding Forrester, directed by Gus Van Sant.

Evan Ross Burton

Evan Ross Burton is a poet who lives in New York City.

Leigh Phillips

Leigh Phillips was just selected as winner of The Mad Hatters' Review innovative fiction prize. Her work has most recently appeared in So To Speak: A Feminist Journal of Literature and Art, Wicked Alice, and Gigantic Sequins. She lives in Brooklyn, teaches in the Bronx for the City University of New York, and writes poems on all the stops in between.

Kimberly Ann Southwick
http://giganticsequins.blogspot.com/

Kimberly Ann Southwick is the editor in chief and founder of Gigantic Seqins, a literary-arts journal. She lives in Philadelphia and teaches American English Grammar at Rowan University. She writes poetry because she must.

Christopher Paul Stelling
http://www.myspace.com/freedumbmusesick

Take one look at his road-worn, weathered guitar, and you know that Christopher Paul Stelling is a musician with a story to tell. Stelling has revived a sense of musical storytelling and mastery over his instrument that was thought to be long since forgotten. With a heartfelt voice, dynamic finger-picked guitar stylings, and a songwriting approach that combines folkloric, mythological, and religious imagery, Stelling has forged a style that is all his own, yet hauntingly familiar. He is a Brooklyn-based musician, hailing originally from Daytona Beach, Florida.

Oct 26: Eileen Myles & Amira Hanafi in Chicago

Sun 24 Oct 2010

Pilot Light:
The Green Lantern Press / Dear Navigator Conversation Series

October 26, 2010
Eileen Myles & Amira Hanafi

7:30-9:30pm
at The Green Lantern Gallery
2542 Chicago Avenue
Chicago, IL

EILEEN MYLES was born in Arlington, MA and moved to New York in â€˜74. Her Inferno (a poetâ€™s novel) is just out from orbooks.com. Her essays, The Importance of Being Iceland were written thanks to the Warhol/Creative Capital grant. Sorry, Tree is her most recent poems. Last spring she received the Poetry Society of Americaâ€™s Shelley Prize. She is Prof. Emeritus of Writing at UC San Diego, she was the Hugo writer in Missoula last year and sheâ€™ll be Hurst professor at Washington U., St. Louis in Nov. 2010. Read her blog at eileenmyles.com. Also read her dogâ€™s blog: mylifebyhank.com. She lives in New York.

AMIRA HANAFI is a writer and artist using variable methods of research and collection to produce documentary objects. Currently, she is working with an assemblage of material collected on a four-month drift in Cairo, Egypt. She is the author of Minced English, Trinities, and Forgery (forthcoming from Green Lantern Press, 2011). Her work has recently been published in American Letters & Commentary, Requited, and Matrix. She teaches at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. For more info see http://www.amirahanafi.com

UPCOMING:
December 2, 2010 - Vanessa Place & Jennifer Karmin

ABOUT PILOT LIGHT:
The writer creates many relationships: with oneself; with oneâ€™s intimate, immediate, and local communities; and with the writing community at-large (earth/space). Pilot Light brings together writers at varying stages of their career for conversations that cross and explore these different relationships.

Emerging and established writers each read from their own work and then engage in a discussion that creates an intimate space across genre and career status.

Co-presented by Dear Navigator, The School of the Art Institute of Chicagoâ€™s literary magazine, and The Green Lantern Press. The series is curated by Elizabeth Metzger Sampson.

Years ago I had a copy of CHAOS by James Glieck which I lent out to someone visiting our community. Well after the person has left I remembered the book & wondered what had happened to it. Didn't find it at the time but some months later I was wandering thru our apple orchard & found the book spread open to a 2 page color spread of chaos fractals which at that point had been decomposed & rearranged by numerous rains, insects & critters chewing on it.

Mon 25 Oct 2010

There's a great shop in Tokyo that sells Edo and Meiji era prints and books and many are water-stained and a bit cool to the touch with a whiff of must about them as if they had been kept in a series of basements from c. 1660 till the day before you see them. Indeed, some of my favorite books have water-damaged from sudden cloud bursts and driving (zaaa zaaa) Kyushu rains--including a Creeley Selected Poems (nice volume) that literally bulges like a show pigeon's snowy breast as it paces in its cage at the county fair waiting for the Judges in the pigeon "All Show" competition to arrive and begin their joyless evaluations. The pages seem to resist opening, but can be coaxed apart if jogged on the knee in the old "shoe-maker" position, to reveal the Creeley poems that continue to fascinate me most, each marked with a slight discoloration close to the gutter of the page, as if part of a face were occluding the light streaming in over the left shoulder of a "hidden" reader present each time I open the volume.

A few years ago the Center for Contemporary Arts in Santa Fe did a show not of environmentally damaged books but of library books that had been vandalized because of their lesbian/gay content. A group of artists salvaged them and turned them into sculptural artists' books and other kinds of artworks. Quite moving.

Subject: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

It would be great to share some descriptions of the tango between your favorite volume(s) and the environment where you are. Japan is notorious for its foxing frenzies--most of my books have tiny black and brown threads colonizing the tooth of the paper and lichen-like spoors notching away at the typographic landscapes of what I read. I have two notebooks form the 1980's that are crammed full of writing, scribbling out, worthless phone numbers, torn, dog-eared and foxed pages, pages rotting, onion skin-like, sun-burnt, spat-upon, maggot-bitten and palimpsested with white-out and bic reworkings, rain-tortured into rivulets of ink charging crookedly down the cheek of the page from black to blue to gray like the tears of a miraculous icon in a sooty corner of some yellow-walled church where nobody goes but the toothless, squint-eyed, and terminal; books falling to pieces and stinking of ancient sex and Lucky Strikes, and years spent in old winter coats for sale in the bargain bins of the Purple Heart and the Salvation Army. These are the kinds of books that excite my imagination because those old Complete Poes and The Poems of Robert Service tortured into ghostlier shapes, rain-warped into counterweights for mobiles and stabiles invites my Twombly and Rothco appreciation centers to re-activate, and these are located close to the endorphin sluices of my innermost and most secret self and jam them open, or at least tickle the hell out of them so that my tongue thrusts out to lick the plaster on the wall in joy.

Your descriptions solicited! Jess

Interview with me at Fieralingue
Mon 25 Oct 2010

I was pleased to be asked by Anny Ballardini to take part in a series of interviews she's doing with poetry publishers at Fieralingue: http://www.fieralingue.it/corner.php?pa=printpage&pid=3461

Excerpt:
Q: Are there any parameters by which you understand the political correctness of a literary work? Could you please describe them? Could you give some examples based on the books you published?

A: I canâ€™t really answer the question, as I donâ€™t believe that poetry that thinks of itself as political is of any urgent relevance to the aesthetics of poetry, which has always been my main concern. I assume that some of those poets who write what they call political poetry hope it will have some interest philosophically, if nothing else. Few would expect it to bring about political change. The failure of the high profile and well-supported political protest song â€œmovementâ€ in the USA in the 1960s should be an indication that if such a popular and internationally well-publicised mass movement as that failed, then certainly â€œpoliticalâ€ poetry (avant-garde or otherwise) has little hope of success. Q: With the general economic crisis that has hit not only the U.S.A., what is your forecast on the future of the book? I think the future of printed books will be that they will still be available but for mainly archival purposes, and for collectors of beautiful objects. There may also be a market for them as gifts for special occasions such as weddings, christenings and other rights of passage celebrations. But as a utility, printed books will be used rarely when devises such as Kindle become as ubiquitous and as affordable as digital wristwatches.

New Title from Furniture Press Books: Anne Ashbaugh, Mythopoiesis (Poetic Ways of Knowing)
Tue 26 Oct 2010

Anne Ashbaugh, Mythopoiesis

40 pages / stitched & screen printed

$10 (S & H included)

In the last few months, Furniture Press Books has shifted directions (slightly), savoring the exciting new methodologies in philosophical literature. Historically, philosophy has sought to explain mythology, describing it as an attempt to make sense of unknown realities. What Anne Ashbaugh practices is a creative work that uses mythology to explain philosophy. In turn, Mythopoiesis critiques eros and psyche from a mythological locus, breaking traditional boundaries and allowing innovativations of philosophizing to flourish.

To read a portion from Mythopoiesis, please visit Anne's page at http://furniturepressbooks.com/chaps/ashbaugh/

from Mythopoiesis

Identity resists differentiation. Yet, exiting the interior labyrinth and entering the exterior maze, a soul necessarily affirms other souls. Plato called this exterior labyrinth the circular flow that admits the presence of alterity into the boundaries of a soul. For reason's desire, this flow becomes a principle: the soul promises not to contradict itself. When the creative soul promises fidelity to the external world, alterity becomes the soul's fuel. In the strife, the urge to create becomes a generator of freedoms that enables the body to soar. Sexual intercourse incarnates this birth of differentiation. Discourse begets intelligible offspring. Becoming a social self entails transforming the most creative impulse within us into the guardian of others.

Descartes' tragedy consists in a radical confusion of these two energies. Lust for certainty caused him to relinquish the guardianship of self-identity to an external power: he surrendered self-making to a transcendent god innate to the soul only as an idea. The inverted self reverses the process of alterity. The twofold transgression of reason's principles give rise to overwhelming paradoxes: an other, a radically other, appears as an innate, interior principle of the self. The cogito became a factory of evil geniuses.

The monstrosity of this reversal rendered Cartesian thought pornographic. All thinkers who view Cartesian certainty desire it erotically, without love. Like Pasiphae's lust for Poseidon's bull, the philosophical lust for certainty resorts to artificial contortions of the soul, language, and thought in order to captivate the Cartesian god. Like the Minotaur, the Cartesian god must remain in the mind by the sheer allure of the mind's intricate pattern. If the god decides to exit, the cogito crumbles into illusion. To make the mind even more appealing, Descartes divorced it from the body. The eyes might seduce the god into complete love, into physical intercourse with the inquirer. The mind could not witness such a betrayal. Bodies seduce gods just as effortlessly as gods beguile the mind. Wise to this predicament, Descartes hid the body from the god innately captured in the mind. Unwittingly, he engendered a modern Minotaur within rationality. Eroticized certainty burdened each human body with a bull's heavy head.

Epistemologists long to feel the phallic jab of Poseidon's bull. They too appeal to Daedalus' power. Reason must alter its shape so that certainty may penetrate it. Once the practical, constructive energies of the Daedalean power of the soul function at the service of this task, reason becomes a wooden cow: it ceases to be exercised as a desire and it becomes a vessel for knowledge, an empty receptacle where love of wisdom shrivels into sheer appetite for the image of truth. Like the speaker who divorces his words from their sound, the epistemologists attempt to think without desiring.

Descartes' meditations prefigured virtual sex. In an intercourse with a god first doubted through an image of what the cogito would become, and then fiercely acknowledged as an innate idea of that cogito, the soul pleasures itself alone pretending to share its thrill with another mind. The Meditations function as an epistemological autoeroticism wherein the desire for knowledge indulges in the look of knowledge until it reaches a mental climax that paralyses desire. In Descartes' meditations, Fermat's theorem becomes psychological. There are no whole numbers greater than two. Within the self, alterity is always a proposition to the n-power.

Innovative NW Poets

http://rattapallax.org/blog/2010/northwest-poet/

from the introduction: "When I was asked by Rattapallax editor Flavia Rocha to curate a selection of West Coast poets, there were several facets of this project that I considered a given. First, I wanted to limit the poets to the Northwest, a region with which I am more familiar than parts south. While Flavia mentioned a desire for recordings of the poets reading their own work, I knew that I would also want to conduct interviews with them, as I had missed participation in that art form, something I had extensive experience with during my 26 years in radio. I also knew that I would be interested in innovative poets..."

Wed 27 Oct 2010

I once had a SIGNED COPY of HOTEL LAUTREAMONT stuffed in my coat pocket as I negotiated the post-midnight streets of Milwaukee on a snowy evening years and years ago. I had hammered back one too many of my favorite drinks at my next-to-favorite WATERING HOLE, and all I can remember was singing "Full Fathom Five" from the Tempest all the way across the Locust Street Bridge. Well, I announced my arrival to no one at my ratshit digs, throwing my coat in one corner and my self in the other. The next morning I searched my nominally furnished palace for said volume to no avail, Later that day, I found it about 1/4 of a mile away face down in a pile of slush on the now sun-radiant route to my sweetly crumbling abode. The spine had absorbed the smell OF THE GREAT OUTDOORS, the pages were sweating dark, clinkered water (Wisconsin road juice) and coming apart as I turned them slowly, gingerly supporting the volume with one gloved hand (brown), and turning, and peeling apart with my other, gloveless, smoothly pale hand. The back pages had assumed the appearance of an intricate, scaling palimpsest of word layered over sentence, sentence (almost geologically) striated, against the thicker paper of the BACK COVER. Indeed, the mechanical gatherings of the pages cohered in "chunks" of text, if you will, some of which seemed to be in the process of curling as they dried--during my prolonged contemplation--and others seemingly drawing even more moisture from the depths of the binding through capillary action, signaled by a significant darkening of the page. I leaned against a nearby wall to turn this ARTIFACT over and over in my hands, as if I were engaged in one of the more modern schools of SADO. After appreciating the RUIN of my book--which I had purchased at a not inconsiderable sum, given my financial situation at the time--and holding it up against the obnubilous sun to better appreciate the variety of dips, curves, and other sculptural attributes that it had attained during the previous 15 hours or so of neglect, I thought to dig for the signature of HE WHO HAD SIGNED THE VOLUME, and found that the inked salutations had formed a gray-green VINE of leaf-like cursive bleeding into itself and drying with the very application of my BREATH. Women Who Teach Art for Social Change

Four Los Angeles women discuss how they use the knowledge and expertise of their art to change the lives of kids and, in turn, take steps to transform society. Professor Chuck Rosenthal, Department of English, chair

Panelists: Sherry Jason began studying ballet at the age of 4, and at the age of 11 she began teaching ballet to neighborhood children for fifty cents a class in her parent¹s garage. Even then, it was her firm belief that classes in the Arts should be provided free for those children whose parents could not afford to pay. Ms. Jason performed as a soloist with Ballet Concerto and has continued her teaching for over 50 years.

Graduating from UCLA with a BA in Psychology, she received her Juris Doctor from Southwestern University School of Law. In l975, Ms. Jason was sworn in as a member of the State Bar of California in private ceremonies by the Honorable Consuelo Marshall (now a member of the Federal Bench). Ms. Jason joined the Los Angeles County Public Defender's Office Juvenile Division in l977. It was there that she met her husband and partner of 33 years, Bob Jason. Describing herself as an "Attorney at Law/Ballerina at Heart," Sherry and Bob Jason created Ballet for Topanga in l979, and together produce The Topanga Nutcracker Ballet now in its 30th season. Through their experiences in the Juvenile Justice System, Sherry and Bob formulated a philosophy on the nature of delinquency, intervention and prevention.

In l983, the Jasons used all their savings and borrowed from friends and family to create the Downtown Dance Studio/L.A. Fringe Theatre to be the artistic home to our community¹s most impoverished children. City Hearts was created in l984 to provide FREE classes to Skid Row, inner city, and at-greatest-risk children. Now celebrating 25 years, City Hearts has provided quality Arts education to over 27,000 children.

As an advocate and instructor in the Arts arena for over 46 years, and as an attorney and defender of children's rights for over 30 years, Sherry Jason is uniquely qualified to create, direct and implement City Hearts' innovative programs of prevention.

Utilizing her extensive dance background, Ms. Jason choreographed a segment on Jane Seymour's "Medicine Woman" TV series and has been interviewed regarding City Hearts' award-winning programs by NBC Nightly News and featured on CBS, CNN and other local and international news programs including Oprah. City Hearts has been named to the President's Committee on the Arts & Humanities and been honored by the Sesame Street Parents Magazine and the Children's Television Network as an inaugural recipient of the "Sunny Days Award." In 2008, Ms. Jason helped to write the Standards/Foundations for Dance Education for 3/4 Year Olds for the California Department of Education.

Keren Taylor, founder and Executive Director of WriteGirl, has been active as a community leader for more than 15 years. She has edited and designed dozens of anthologies and has served as publisher and editor of all of WriteGirl's award-winning books. Passionate about helping women and girls, Keren has conducted hundreds of creative writing workshops for youth and adults, and has led staff development workshops for the California Paraeducators Conference, California School-age Consortium, California Department of Education, Los Angeles County Office of Education, LA's BEST and the New York Partnership for After School Education, among others. Keren has been selected to serve as a Community Champion and facilitator for the Annenberg Alchemy Program and is a popular speaker at conferences and book festivals nationwide including the Association of Writing Programs (AWP) Annual Conference, BOOST Conference, Los Angeles Times Festival of Books and Guiding Lights Festival. Keren is the recipient of numerous awards and accolades, including the President's Volunteer Call to Service Award, Business & Professional Women's Community Woman of Achievement Award, Soroptomist International's Woman of Distinction Award, commendations from Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and others.

Erin Cottrell is an award winning actress best known for her performance in Michael Landon Jr.'s, Love Comes Softly series as well as being the new Caroline Ingalls in Disney/ABC's Little House on the Prairie. She has had an extensive career in film and television including guest lead appearances on E.R., CSI:NY, Cold Case, Medium, NUMB3RS, Ed, and Stranger's With Candy, as well as reoccurring characters on All My Children and The Guiding Light. Her film credits include Legally Blonde 2, Love's Abiding Joy and Faith of My Father's, (the film based on John McCain's biography.) Most recently she was seen alongside Jason Alexander and Christopher Lloyd in the NBC mini-series, METEOR.

When Erin is not filming she is teaching. Since 2002 she has been a proud teacher for the nonprofit organization, City Hearts: Kids Say Yes to the Arts. She has taught jazz, hip hop, musical theatre, Shakespeare, black and white photography and acting to the at risk youth of East LA and Oxnard, bringing the arts into vastly under-funded areas. Her love of teaching underprivileged youth stems from her work in London at the Young Vic Theatre, where she was a performance intern. There she had the opportunity to run a summer program with at risk high school students to create dramatic pieces about their lives in the city. She feels fortunate to be able to be directly involved in the lives of her students and to offer them a new kind of self-expression and sense of confidence that they would otherwise not be exposed to. The children that she has had the opportunity to work with have deeply touched her life and improved her understanding of the power of the arts more than she could have imagined. Erin is also a member of The New Hollywood, an elite group of female performers focused on supporting women in the arts. Each year they raise and donate thousands of dollars to charities throughout the world supporting children in need and arts education.

Lifting Oppression as We Climb: Black Women Artists and Activism

Scholars who specialize in African cultures and history will discuss ways in which African women have used art to instigate social change. Professor Cassandra Veney, Department of Political Science, chair

Panelists: "Women Saving the World: One Reality at a Time" Sherry Simpson-Dean is the executive director of the United Nations Pasadena/Foothills as well as a producer committed to civil liberties and human rights. Her latest film, Amandla!: A Revolution in Four-Part Harmony, earned high esteem at Robert Redford's Sundance Film Festival achieving the dual distinction of the Audience Award and the Freedom of Expression Award in 2002.

"Dressed UP" Marcia Kure, Nigerian painter, graduated with a B.A from the University of Nigeria, Nsukka in 1994. Kure has attended art residency programs in Germany and the United States and has participated in many solo and group exhibitions. Kure's art was included in the Multichoice Africa "African Artists of the Future" calendar in 2002, and a body of her work depicting each year of Nigerian singer Fela's life was included in last year's Fela Project at the New Museum of Contemporary Art, New York.

Nkiru Nzegwu, artist curator, and poet, is the current Chair of Africana Studies at Binghamton University. Dr. Nzegwu has introduced unique courses at Binghamton University such as Philosophy of Orisha Worship and Hip-Hop I and II. Among Dr. Nzegwu's areas of expertise are African aesthetics, philosophy, African feminist issues, and multicultural studies in art.

1-2.50 pm | Ahmanson 1000
Women in Hip Hop Panel

Evelyn McDonnell, chair Panelists: Angie Colette Beatty, a vegan/feminist/scholar/activist and social entrepreneur, has facilitated media literacy education and writing workshops at national conferences and youth facilities for more than a decade. She holds a BS in Psychology from Delaware State University (1997), and attained her PhD in Communication from the University of Michigan in 2005. Angie received both a Kramarae Outstanding Dissertation Award from the Organization for the Study of Communication, Language & Gender and Foote Distinguished Dissertation Award from the Department of Communication Studies at the University of Michigan in 2006 for her work on power and Black women and girls' aggression in hip hop culture, and her work, "What Is This Gangstressism in Popular Culture?" appears in the anthology Next Wave Cultures: Feminism, Subcultures, Activism by Anita Harris (2008).

The (SIS)TEM is a collective of female emcees, producers, vocalist, and Djs, co-founded by Aceyalone and DVS 1, from the legendary Project Blowed in Los Angeles. DVS 1 created and hosted a hip hop show respectively named, "Female Perspective." Being a female emcee she saw that on the main stream, as well as the underground, women weren't getting their just due. She decided to organize an event show-ing off the ladies' talent. By the time she reached the second one the roster for performers doubled. This prompted the idea to create an album of all female emcees because apparently there was an untouched fan base out there for it. "We never knew there were so many hungry, motivated driven women all on the same grind". You can call it "the female Wu-Tang". The (SIS)TEM is about 7 Core Members (all solo artists) and a host of about 15-20 affiliates, all coming together to push one goal; For women to gain the respect they deserve on the mic. The (SIS)TEM came about during a time when Hip Hop is starving for feminine energy. These women are definitely filling the void with quality music.

4-5 pm | University Hall East Atrium
"Dust of Gold" - Performance by Elia Arce

Elia Arce is an internationally known Costa Rican artist and cultural activist who works in a wide variety of media, including performance, experimental theater, film/video, spoken word and installation.

Hosted by Ruben Martinez, Fletcher Jones Chair of Literature and Writing

"Dust of Gold" is an interactive installation project for Bellarmine Forum 2010 at Loyola Marymount University based on the "Alfombras de Aserrín" or street carpets of sawdust made for Easter in Guatemala, a tradition with roots solidly in Mayan culture dating back to long before the Spanish arrived. The colorful and fragrant use of carpets of pine needles, flowers and other natural elements has its beginnings in the Mayan custom of creating pathways for kings and priests to walk upon when entering ceremonial locations and for use in sacred spaces. A ritual performance art piece honoring the Tongva ("people of the earth") tribes that inhabited this region before the arrival of the Europeans, will take place the last evening of the forum. I am already consulting with Tongva leaders in order to make sure I am respectful of their ways. "Dust of Gold" is the result of the fusion of traditional and contemporary art forms. This carpet welcomes the Golden Era, which starts at the end of the Mayan calendar in Dec. 2012. And symbolically envisions the coming together of the Mayan and Aztec nations for the future of the cosmos. The design that I have created is based on the Mayan calendar round made up of two cycles and the number 0. The outer ring represents 18 months of 20 days each and 1 month of 5 days, which equals 365 days. The inner golden ring represents 13 numbers that repeat themselves endlessly within a 20-day cycle, represented here by the outer golden ring. And the image at the center is the Mayan symbol for the number 0, which represents the "navel of the world" from where the sacred tree springs: the beginning of all things. This is where the final performance will most likely take place.

Reception 5-7 pm

"The Purpose of Being" - Opening Reception for the LA artists/activists and LMU collaborators

Curator Ronald Lopez from the 18th Street Arts Center and LMU Faculty Liaisons Jane Brucker and SaeRi Cho Dobson

The exhibition participants for The Purpose of Being at Loyola Marymount University include:

Selected LMU students led by Amitis Motevalli, Arzu Arda Kosar, Elana Mann + Vera Brunner-Sung, Jane Brucker, Kristin Ross Lauterbach + Christina Lee Storm, Ofunne Obiamiwe and SaeRi Cho Dobson.

The Purpose of Being, which will run simultaneously with Harmony Reverberates Optimism (HRO). The HRO exhibit will be held at Jaus Gallery (1943 S. Westgate Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90025). Each exhibit focuses on women and their efforts to create social change through their art form. Both exhibits exercise social criticism at its highest form through, not only aesthetically pleasing work, but art that provokes dialogue and pushes boundaries; art that is active and penetrates society in such a way that it promotes itself fiercely and unapologetically. Artists involved push the limits and blur the line between activist and artist.

The two exhibits will coexist as a dialogue with one another. Harmony Reverberates Optimism was originally exhibited at McNish Gallery, Oxnard College and now becomes the precursor to its evolved counter part and "action" show, The Purpose of Being. The original exhibit will be shown in its entirety at Jaus gallery. The intention of The Purpose of Being takes the ideas from the Harmony show a step further as it becomes the "action" of Optimism. Each artist will "activate" selected students from Loyola Marymount University and collaborate on new social interventions that will lead to new discussions and art works exhibited during the Bellarmine Forum.

6 pm | Laband Art Gallery
Kim Abeles: Art and Activism

Artist's Gallery Walkthrough; Kim Abeles

LA artist Kim Abeles mines the urban environment with a great sense of curiosity. She incorporates both conventional and unorthodox media-from using smog particles to quilting with trash-to explore broad social topics. In her own artistic practice and community collaborations, she uses metaphors and humor to bring our attention to crucial issues such as pollution, gender roles, civil rights, and even traffic.

Abeles was born in Richmond Heights, Missouri in 1952. She received her BFA from Ohio University and her MFA from University of California, Irvine. The Smog Collector series brought her work to national and international attention in the art world, and mainstream sources such as Newsweek, National Public Radio, CBS Evening News, and The Wall Street Journal. She continues to exhibit internationally, including recent projects in Vietnam, Thailand, Czech Republic, England, and China. She represented the U.S. in both the Fotografie Biennale Rotterdam and the Cultural Centre of Berchem in Antwerp.

Reception 5-7 pm | Dunning Courtyard

7.30-8.30 pm | Murphy Recital Hall
Video installation and performances curated by Ellina Kevorkian

Ellina Kevorkian MFA, Claremont Graduate University. Kevorkian has had solo exhibitions in Los Angeles with the Mark Moore Gallery and Western Project. In 2007 Kevorkian was included in the Southern California Council of the National Museum of Women in the Arts-sponsored retrospective Multiple Vantage Points: Southern California Women Artists, 1980-2006. More recently, she was included in Girly Show: Pin-ups, Zines & the So-Called Third Wave and the forthcoming Separation Anxiety, both at the Wignall Museum of Contemporary Art. Her Black Lace Project can be seen at the Central Utah Art Center (CUAC) in fall 2010. Marick Press is pleased to announce the publication of "Elegy for Dead Languages," a new collection of poems by Francesco Levato. "Elegy for Dead Languages" features the much-acclaimed long poem "War Rug," which is also a cine-poem of the same title and was an Official Selection of the Zebra Poetry Film Festival in Berlin and an Official Selection of the Potenza International Film Festival.

REVIEWERS SAY:

"Francesco Levato's powerful documentary, 'War Rug'--like Eliot Weinberger's 'What I heard about Iraq' before it--detains the language of the perpetrators of global military aggression and redeploys it to indict them. From J.C. Penny catalog copy to counterintelligence manuals and autopsy reports, War Rug is a fierce yet unfortunate reminder of the absolute horrors of our age." --Mark Nowak, author of 'Coal Mountain Elementary'

In the poem "War Rug," which was published by Broadsided last June, Chicago poet Francesco Levato explores the reality of living under a constant state of emergency, referencing the Department of Homeland Security's color-coded advisory system in juxtaposition with other common crisis shorthand. "Code Blue: no breathing / no heartbeat," he writes. --Poets & Writers

ABOUT THE AUTHOR & BOOK:

Poet, translator, and new media artist Francesco Levato is the author of three books of poetry: Elegy for Dead Languages; War Rug, a book length documentary poem; and Marginal State. He has translated into English the books of Italian poets Tiziano Fratus, Creaturing, and Fabiano Alborghetti, The Opposite Shore. His work has been published internationally in journals and anthologies, both in print and online, including Drunken Boat, The Progressive, Versal, and many others. His cinépoetry has been exhibited in galleries and featured at film festivals in Berlin, Chicago, New York, and elsewhere.

Mairead,

It's a terribly flaw'd system, that "collectively drawn map of the field." And is used rather baldly by some--such as Ron Silliman--as a kind of yearly "best of" list. Resulting, through a kind of pre-op sychophancy and winning cherry-picking, in a severe narrowing of the field.

The open invitation by Steve Evans here is somewhat misleading, too. I didn't contribute this year because--even after diligently providing comment'd lists since 2003--I didn't receive the deadline reminder this time around. Noticing this at the point when Evans start'd posting the lists, I wrote to him (13 September 2010), and received no reply. In the intervening year, I had, at Isola di Rifiuti, post'd Kent Johnson's fine piece titled "The Question of Attention Span (At Bourdieuian Angle)" with my own sharp grouse attach'd. I can only assume that Evans--as I wrote him at the time--will "brook no quarrel with [his] methods." That is to say, the list is less innocent than it appears: criticism results in dismissal, tout court. Which is, in my book, less the sign of a community service, than that of a power ploy.

That said, I'd encourage everybody to prepare an Attention Span list for next year. Send Evans a note asking to be reminded in advance of the August 15 deadline. And read Johnson's percipient piece:

All best,
John

PEN Prison Writing Benefit: Nov 1 NYC
Thu 28 Oct 2010

PEN Prison Writing Program needs your help. Our annual fundraiser is the Monday, Nov 1 in NYC at Le Poisson Rouge.

The night features dramatic readings culled from the PEN Prison Writing performed by Talib Kweli, Junot Diaz, Wally Lamb, AND a former student of mine from inside - Sean Dalpiaz. It's his first big reading on the outside, and I'd personally love to pack the house. CAN YOU HELP?

We have tickets available for $25, $50 and $75. I know it's not cheap, but it's a benefit.

Breakout: Voices from Inside
Our readers are: Talib Kweli, Junot Diaz, Lisa Dierbeck, Wahida Clark, Barbara Parsons, Sean Dalpiaz, Wally Lamb, and more.

When: Monday, November 1
Where: Le Poisson Rouge, 158 Bleecker St., New York City
What time: 7 p.m.

Thanks John. I will read Kent's article, + your attached grouse. I don't have a big problem with Attention Span (or the attention span to read it carefully, even on behalf of my own books). I'm just murmuring in public. I searched for my publisher too, Publishing Genius (which, despite a recent obituary<http://htmlgiant.com/mean/two-obituaries-publishing-genius-anderbo/>, is not dead), but didn't find. There's bound to be a generational thing too: Attention Span sketches a community + shows its limits. Mairéad

Thu 28 Oct 2010

I accidentally dropped a copy of Kenneth Rexroth's Collected Longer Poems into an old "botton" latrine-style, Japanese toilet when I lived in Nagasaki Prefecture back in the early 90's. Fortunately, the book did not sink right away, but slowly listed to the side in the emerald green antiseptic and deodorizing solution in the tank, while Kenneth's eyes staring woefully up through the lapping green waves. It took about 30 minutes to wrangle the volume up with a fish hook and ten feet of nylon line borrowed from a neighboring fisherman. The solution had dyed the pages a delightful color, though the photograph on the cover was relatively unchanged and continued to present that old, cunning gentleman, in a manner that might have elicited a comment from Susan Sontag regarding the uncanny in photography had she been standing beside me. The sun was barely out that day, but I deposited the book on the back step of my one-room country "mansion" where it drew a few hopeful flies and an ant. Jess

I have some topo maps with wonderful, meandering trails eaten into them by insects.
A few years ago the Center for Contemporary Arts in Santa Fe did a show not of environmentally damaged books but of library books that had been vandalized because of their lesbian/gay content. A group of artists salvaged them and turned them into sculptural artists' books and other kinds of artworks. Quite moving.

Subject: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

It would be great to share some descriptions of the tango between your favorite volume(s) and the environment where you are. Japan is notorious for its foxing frenzies--most of my books have tiny black and brown threads colonizing the tooth of the paper and lichen-like spoors notching away at the typographic landscapes of what I read. I have two notebooks form the 1980's that are crammed full of writing, scribbling out, worthless phone numbers, torn, dog-eared and foxed pages, pages rotting, onion skin-like, sun-burnt, spat-upon, maggot-bitten and palimpsested with white-out and bic reworkings, rain-tortured into rivulets of ink charging crookedly down the cheek of the page from black to blue to gray like the tears of a miraculous icon in a sooty corner of some yellow-walled church where nobody goes but the toothless, squint-eyed, and terminal; books falling to pieces and stinking of ancient sex and Lucky Strikes, and years spent in old winter coats for sale in the bargain bins of the Purple Heart and the Salvation Army. These are the kinds of books that excite my imagination because those old Complete Poes and The Poems of Robert Service tortured into ghostlier shapes, rain-warped into counterweights for mobiles and stabiles invites my Twombly and Rothco appreciation centers to re-activate, and these are located close to the endorphin sluices of my innermost and most secret self and jam them open, or at least tickle the hell out of them so that my tongue thrusts out to lick the plaster on the wall in joy.

Your descriptions solicited! Jess

Wordplay this Sunday: Lee Ann Brown
Fri 29 Oct 2010

This coming Sunday's Wordplay will feature the ever irrepressible Lee Ann Brown, fresh from a reading for the Lucipo folks down in the flatlands of in Durham, NC. The program will air at 5:00 PM via www.ashevillefm.org, and then be available all week as a stream from the Wordplay program page. Eventually it'll even find its way ro the Wordplay archive where it will haunt the internet forever, or at least until the next Great Collapse takes everything down.

Wordplay, now in its sixth season, features poets and writers of creative prose in performance and in discussion of their work. The third Sunday of every month, Cathy Smith Bowers, North Carolina's Poet Laureate, joins me to feature another North Carolina poet. A catalog of previous shows is right here: http://naturespoetry.blogspot.com/2010/10/season-vi-begins-catalog-of-wordplay.html They've featured Jonathan Williams, Ed Dorn, Robert Creeley, Thomas Meyer, Lee Ann, the aforesaid Ms. Bowers, and hosts of others.

New shows not yet in the catalog are chronicled at this link, for now: http://naturespoetry.blogspot.com/2010/10/new-shows-on-archive.html

Enjoy!

Hi Everyone,

The next reading at The Poetry Project will be an Open Reading & it will happen on Monday, November 1 -- as always, sign-in at 7:45 -- see below for the others. We have also posted a video, filmed by Project videographer Alex Abelson, of excerpts from the Anne Carson & David Shapiro reading here on October 6th -- to watch: http://bit.ly/cUGokm. One more thing -- on Tuesday, November 16th The Belladonna* Collective will present Leslie Scalapino's Flow (Winged Crocodiles) / The Trains at Dixon Place -- see below for complete details. Seeing you soon --

Love,
The Poetry Project

UPCOMING /

MONDAY NOVEMBER 1 / 8 PM
OPEN READING
Sign-In at 7:45

WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 3 / 8PM
JOHN OLSON & JENI OLIN/TRUCK DARLING

John Olson is the author of seven collections of poetry and prose poetry, including Oxbow Kazoo, Free Stream Velocity, Echo Regime, Swarm Of Edges, Logo Lagoon, Eggs & Mirrors, and, most recently, Backscatter: New And Selected Poems, from Black Widow Press. He has also authored two novels, The Nothing That Is, from Ravenna Press, and Souls Of Wind (Quale Press). Larynx Galaxy, a new collection of prose poetry, essays, and fiction is forthcoming this fall from Black Widow Press. He is the recipient of three Fund For Poetry Awards and, in 2004, received the genius award for literature from Seattle's weekly The Stranger. He is currently at work on a novel about French painter Georges Braque. A native of Houston, TX and a resident of New York City, Truck Darling (formerly Jeni Olin) received her BA & MFA degrees from Naropa University in Writing & Poetics. She has published 3 full length books: Blue Collar Holiday, a collaboration with the artist Larry Rivers (Hanging Loose, 2005,) Ich Habe Angst um Meinen Hedgefonds, a German translation of her poems (luxbooks.americana, 2008) and most recently Hold Tight: The Truck Darling Poems (Hanging Loose Press, 2010.)

FRIDAY NOVEMBER 5 / 10PM
CYNTHIA ARRIEU-KING & JANE CARVER

Cynthia Arrieu-King is an assistant professor of creative writing at Stockton College. The Belladonna* Collective invites you to celebrate the life and work of one of America's most influential experimental poets. Please join us for a special, full-length performance of Leslie Scalapino's daring and electrifying play, Flow (Winged Crocodile) / The Trains at Dixon Place.

Flow (Winged Crocodile) / The Trains travels between the left and right sides of the brain, with appearances by a reincarnated Patty Hearst in the 1974 SLA bank heist and a green-winged creature that is part crocodile, part Michelin man and part charging rhino. The play is performed by The Relationship, a performance group directed by Fiona Templeton that specializes in innovative language and use of site.

Leslie Scalapino (1944-2010) was the author of thirty books of poetry, poem-plays, essays, and fiction.

Directed by Fiona Templeton, with Katie Brown, Stephanie Silver and Julie Troost.

Dance choreographed and performed by Molissa Fenley.
Music by Joan Jeanrenaud.
Costumes by Jill St Coeur.
Projected drawings by Eve Biddle.
Video selected by Stephanie Silver and edited by John Jesurun.

"For myself and the cast, directing Leslie Scalapino's FLOW has been an extraordinary journey into language and the language in breath, the rhythms of effort to say as precisely as her savage delicacy of thought, her forcing us all to assume nothing in examining the fineness of our implication in each other"--Fiona Templeton.

[3]Scalapino makes everything take place in real time, in the light and air and night where all of us live, everything happening at once.[2] --Philip Whalen

Chapbook Release
Fri 29 Oct 2010

Hi all,

I'm writing to let you know that my chapbook, Vivisection, has just been released by New Michigan Press. You can read all about it here<http://www.thediagram.com/nmp/pr_weinstein.pdf>and buy a copy here <http://www.thediagram.com/nmp/authors.html>. (You can also order it<http://www.amazon.com/Vivisection-Eric-Weinstein/dp/1934832251/ref=sr_1_1?ie=UTF8&s=books&qid=1288382075&sr=1-1>from Our Fearless Leader Amazon, if you're so inclined.)

At $9, it's cheaper than two Subway lunches and twice as filling! Plus it contains 100% fewer preservatives.

Thanks in advance & all best,

Eric

Re: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

Sat 30 Oct 2010

I dropped a copy of Jack Spicer's early poems into a glowing ash pit without at first realizing that I had done so due to the waves of horror and revulsion that repeatedly swept over me one early June morning in Maryland. The scene was a tragic one: a barn that had once housed several dozen sheep had been burnt to the ground with the sheep still inside--the carcasses of which, with wool pelt intact--remained scattered among the smoking timbers. The fire engines had just left, but several State Troopers were still collecting evidence, and the general consensus was that it was almost certainly arson. I had been reading the SPICER TEXT by flashlight, as the sun had not risen yet, but found that the combined car headlights, flashing gumball machines atop the cars of the troopers, and abrupt illuminations from the flash units of the reporters' cameras (remember, this was way back in the days before digital), not to mention the steady-state flickerings of the charred and clinkered upper walls and fallen ceilings of the barn provided enough ambient light that I could put away my flashlight with no qualms about the safety of my eyesight. Indeed, by this flickering light, the early poems seemed to possess a strength and beauty that I had not noticed in the amber light of my electric lit room. I stood with the book held loosely in my left hand (bad mistake!), when an old college friend, whom I hadn't seen in years, chose that particular moment to tap me on the shoulder. I was startled from my grief-stricken-transience-of-all-earthly-things-pose, and whirled about, only to be greeted by the somewhat glowing teeth and silhouette of my old friend, who quickly announced his name (WHICH SHALL NOT BE GIVEN HERE), to preclude any further signs of panic on my part. He was too later, however, as the volume was spun from my grip and tumbled into the ashes, sending a sneeze-pattern cloud of firefly-like POINTS OF LIGHT--perhaps 1000 of them into the Republican sky! Cheered on by the voice of my friend, I located a stick and scraped the volume towards us, though it had already TAKEN FIRE with an almost supernal beauty of orange and copper-colored flames. Finally, I could reach under the crime-scene tape and rake the book onto the wet grass. I stepped on the book 20 times or so to transmogrify the magnetic flames into a drizzle of smoke. Then, borrowing my friend's handkerchief, I lifted the volume into the rays of the barely risen sun to inspect the damage. All of the front matter had been craggily carbonized, up to about page 25 (if I recall correctly), and was missing due to the repeated application of my steel-toed work shoe. However, the latter half of the volume, though partially carbonized and truncated by the action of the flames, was still legible, though brittle, and as I attempted to read the TEXT, noting here and there the various modifications of form (and consequently of meaning) I could see that my fingertips and the upper joints of my fingers, had turned black (almost to blueness) with the charred leavings of the lower portions of the pages and binding. Sensing the sudden change in mood of my friend from the solemnity of a shared grief to a barely repressed hilarity bursting to be expressed in the mutton-fragrant air, I pulled the remaining pages apart and mentioned to my friend, how the book looked for all the world like something to be deposited in the trash bin. And later, after sketching the literary remains in my journal to make sure that I had taken sufficient notice of every part--it was. Jess

Fortunately, the book did not sink right away, but slowly listed to the side in the emerald green antiseptic and deodorizing solution in the tank, while Kenneth's eyes staring woefully up through the lapping green waves. It took about 30 minutes to wrangle the volume up with a fish hook and ten feet of nylon line borrowed from a neighboring fisherman. The solution had dyed the pages a delightful color, though the photograph on the cover was relatively unchanged and continued to present that old, cunning gentleman, in a manner that might have elicited a comment from Susan Sontag regarding the uncanny in photography had she been standing beside me. The sun was barely out that day, but I deposited the book on the back step of my one-room country "mansion" where it drew a few hopeful flies and an ant. Jess*

> It would be great to share some descriptions of the tango between your favorite volume(s) and the environment where you are. Japan is notorious for its foxing frenzies--most of my books have tiny black and brown threads colonizing the tooth of the paper and lichen-like spoors notching away at the typographic landscapes of what I read. I have two notebooks form the 1980's that are crammed full of writing, scribbling out, worthless phone numbers, torn, dog-eared and foxed pages, pages rotting, onion skin-like, sun-burnt, spat-upon, maggot-bitten and palimpsested with white-out and bic reworkings, rain-tortured into rivulets of ink charging crookedly down the cheek of the page from black to blue to gray like the tears of a miraculous icon in a sooty corner of some yellow-walled church where nobody goes but the toothless, squint-eyed, and terminal; books falling to pieces and stinking of ancient sex and Lucky Strikes, and years spent in old winter coats for sale in the bargain bins of the Purple Heart and the Salvation Army. These are the kinds of books that excite my imagination because those old Complete Poes and The Poems of Robert Service tortured into ghostlier shapes, rain-warped into counterweights for mobiles and stabiles invites my Twombly and Rothco appreciation centers to re-activate, and these are located close to the endorphin sluices of my innermost and most secret self and jam them open, or at least tickle the hell out of them so that my tongue thrusts out to lick the plaster on the wall in joy.

Issue 19 of Otoliths is now live
Sun 31 Oct 2010

The internal & external links are now in place for issue 19, the southern spring 2010 issue of Otoliths <http://the-otolith.blogspot.com/>. It's a lengthy task, & I'm a bit worn out, so I won't write any witty lines to introduce it as I usually do, just say that looking through it as I put it "physically" together reinforced my opinion that it's another great issue.

There's work by sean burn, dan raphael, Jim Meirose, Joel Chace, Adam Fieled, Paul Siegell, Iain Britton, Jesse Eckerlin, Howie Good, John M. Bennett & Serge Segay, John M. Bennett, Philip Byron Oakes, Scott MacLeod, Ed Baker, Robert Lee Brewer, Caleb Puckett, SJ Fowler, Zachary Scott Hamilton, Changming Yuan, Travis Macdonald, Joe Balaz, Raymond Farr, Andrew Durbin, Carlos Henrickson, RC Miller, Allen Edwin Butt, Grzegorz Wróblewski, Jeff Harrison, Debrah Morkun, Satu Kaikkonen, Satu Kaikkonen & Márton Koppány, Márton Koppány, Felino Soriano, Steven Fraccaro, Toby Fitch, Sean Ulman, Corey Wakeling, Sheila E. Murphy & Jeff Crouch, Sheila E. Murphy, david tomaloff, Charles Freeland, Travis Cebula, David-Baptiste Chirot, Craig Rebele, J. D. Nelson, Louie Crew, Caitlyn Paley, Catherine Vidler, Matthew Ritger, Scott Metz, Michael Gottlieb, Mark Young reviews Michael Gottlieb's Memoir And Essay, Bernie Earley reviews Burt Kimmelman's As If Free, Michael Leong, Nicole Mauro, Anny Ballardini, Jill Jones, Katrinka Moore, Marcia Arrieta, Paul Pfleuger, Jr., Jared Schickling, Kit Kennedy, Steve Gilmartin, Michael Brandonisio, Bob Heman, Louise Landes Levi, and Nico Vassilakis.

There should be something there for everyone, hopefully more than a few somethings. As for me, it's after midnight on the Tropic of Capricorn, so I'm off to bed.

Re: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

Sun 31 Oct 2010

Jesse: You seem to be rehearsing bits for an essay or memoir, and a good one it will be.
Though maybe you should be more careful with your books.

At least i had the excuse in the following of being out of my mind on LSD. I had been left alone for what proved to be a very long night in a house I'd never been in before. The room they gave me had purple walls and dim light and the momentos of a woman of questionable sanity. So I was pretty freaked. And the only companion I had was a copy of the paperback of Duncan's The Opening of the Field, which I was getting to know for the first time. This would be 1969, I think.
I couldn't put it down. Hard to read, because the perspective kept changing, and the color of the letters, which seemed to dance to the rhythm of the verse, but it was a safer space than the dark corners that I was sure were inhabited. I annotated it copiously (I almost never write in books), which took some determination, because the pencil kept bending in my hand. I couldn't put it down, which is why I had it with me, open, when I got up to pee, and it slipped out of my hands and into the drink. Horrified, I rescued it and patted it dry as best I could. It was a little rank for a while, but I still have it.
It's a pretty trippy book, and Duncan was known to indulge, but he was more disciplined than I was, and my notations, those that are legible,

are more yawps than commentary, with a few strange neologisms.

That was very good acid. And it occurs to me now that if I sucked the pages...

Best,

Mark

New from Chax Press: Mark Weiss, As Landscape.
$16. Order from http://www.chax.org/poets/weiss.htm

"What a beautiful set of circumstances! What a lovely concatenation of particulars. Here is the poet alive in every sense of the word, and through every one of his senses. Instead of missing a beat or a part, Weiss' fragments are like Chekhov's short storiesthe more that gets left out, the more they seem to contain… One can hear echoes from all the various ancestors...[but] the voice, at its center, its core, is pure Mark Weiss. His use of the fragment is both elegant and bafflingly clear, a pure musical threnody…[it] opens a window, not only into a mind, but a person, a personality, this

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is "Impressive (Big) Instant (Bang) !" by Ivan Arguelles

Description:
Meant to be read in one breath "Impressive (Big) Instant (Bang) !" requires the reader to give up any notion of syntactic coherency while at the same time adhering to the concept of narrative fluidity. We are in the single and only moment of creation, the Big Bang, when falling in love becomes the obsessive reiteration of a unique poetics, that of being obliged to surrender the Self, forging an oblivion of the skin. While the text can be read as a footnote to its immediate predecessor "Madonna Septet", it remains stubbornly on its own, an amlagam of madness and intuition about Light and its myriad fragments.

JOEL LEWIS' most recent book is "Learning From New Jersey". He edited the selected talks of Ted Berrigan, the selected poems of lefty poet/anthologist Walter Lowenfels and an anthology of contemporary NJ poets. In addition to hundreds of reviews, essays and polemics, he dreamed up the now abolished NJ Poet Laureate position that was such a headache for Amiri Baraka. He is at work on a memoir about being a child of a Holocaust Survivor. He lives in Hoboken with his wife, film theorist Sandy Flitterman-Lewis.

ADRIAN MOENS is a multi-media artist and writer currently living in Chicago. Adrian has exhibited and performed work in the United States, most recently for the Electronic Literature Organization Conference at Brown University. The primary focus in much of his work is the extraction and transmutation of language from various linguistic and non linguistic sources.

MARTHE REED has published two books, Tender Box, A Wunderkammer (Lavender Ink) and Gaze (Black Radish Books), as well as two chapbooks, (em)bodied bliss and zaum alliterations, both part of the Dusie Kollektiv Series. Her poetry has appeared in New American Writing, Golden Handcuffs Review, New Orleans Review, HOW2, MiPoesias, and Exquisite Corpse, among others, and is forthcoming from Ekleksographia and Fairy Tale Review. Her manuscript, an earth of sweetness dances in the vein, was a finalist in Ahsahta Pressâ€™ 2006 Sawtooth Poetry Contest. She edits Nous-zot Press, http://nous-zot.blogspot.com and directs the Creative Writing Program at the University of Louisiana, Lafayette.

RED ROVER SERIES is curated by Laura Goldstein and Jennifer Karmin. Each event is designed as a reading experiment with participation by local, national, and international writers, artists, and performers. The series was founded in 2005 by Amina Cain and Jennifer Karmin.

new from Burning Deck

Burning Deck mourns Michael Gizzi (1949-2010)

2 new poetry books are now available from www.burningdeck.com, www.spdbooks.org, and in Europe: www.audiatur.no/Bokhandel

1. Anne Portugal ABSOLUTE BOB
translated from the French by Jennifer Moxley
Poetry, 120 pages, offset, smyth-sewn
ISBN 978-1-936194-02-5 original paperback $14

bob, a brave little guy (joker, operator, sheer energy?) bops in the manner of a video-game through the ways a poem inhabits sense or nonsense, speeds or slows, slides into forms or undoes them. bob occupies his virtual field of action in perpetual motion, beats down doors, explores corridors, removes walls, strikes sparks from repetition, sets fire to ”the same old,” pulls the levers of creation. The book’s 24 chapters remind us of film’s 24 images per second — just as bob to French ears suggests bobine, the reel that unrolls them. Also of the 24 hours in the day of a man who must exhaust himself in command performances that gradually asphyxiate even the fabrication of verse. Anne Portugal lives and teaches in Paris. Also available: QUISITE MOMENT (trans. Rosmarie Waldrop, Burning Deck).

2. Anja Utler
ENGULF — ENKINDLE
translated from the German by Kurt Beals
Poetry. 96 pages, offset, smyth-sewn
ISBN 978-1-936194-03-2 original paperback $14

Anja Utler’s poems touch the ground where feeling and thinking begin to take form. They pull us into an almost still undifferentiated, preconscious world where the human body and the surrounding landscape are fused. Anja Utler was born in Schwandorf (Germany) and now lives in Vienna and Regensburg. Our present volume received the coveted Leonce-und-Lena Prize for poetry. "Riveting in English... The tension is everywhere rippling, ripping, wrinkling"— Forrest Gander “An astonishing work for a young poet, startlingly assured in the way that it bores down into the language and allows the language itself to become an actor in the unfolding of the poem's 'story', rather than simply an accomplice.” — Tony Frazer, Shearsman

192 messages · Sun 31 Oct 2010 – Tue 30 Nov 2010

November 2010 was a thin, searching month — one hundred and ninety-two messages — preoccupied with attribution and revolution, with who said a thing and whether the thing was still true in a world gone digital. The room had shrunk to a small circle passing half-remembered lines among itself, trying to source its own inherited wisdom, and worrying, underneath, whether the old radical promises still held now that everything had moved online. It was a month of quotation marks and their discontents.

The largest thread was a hunt for a source. A member went looking for the origin of a famous line — was it from a speech or a poem, and who had first said it — and the room did what it does best, playing collective memory, tracing the phrase to its maker. It was the commons as reference desk, the function the thinning list still performed reliably: a place where you could ask who said this and be answered by people who actually knew.

The quarrel turned the hunt political. The line under discussion was Gil Scott-Heron's, that the revolution will not be televised, and the room updated it for the age that had swallowed television whole — one poster insisting, against the bloggers and the tweeters and the Facebookers, that "The revolution will not be virtual", that the digital could no more deliver liberation than the broadcast had. The old aphorism, born to indict one medium, was pressed into service against the newer one that had replaced it.

Around the edges ran the month's quieter concerns — a thread on images of women in literature, the weathered-books conversation carrying over from October, a reading announced at a Los Angeles bookstore. The room kept tending its small fires: the representation of women, the love of old volumes, the local event nobody outside would notice. Thin traffic, faithfully kept. There is a particular dignity in a community that goes on announcing its readings to a shrinking room, sourcing its own aphorisms for one another, and arguing about how women appear in books, long after the wider world has stopped checking in — the dignity of people who keep the practice not because it is watched but because it is theirs.

I have set November down exactly as the archive delivered it — the hunt for a quotation's source, Gil Scott-Heron's revolution updated against the virtual, and the small persistent tending of women's images and weathered books — because it was the month the shrunken list worked as memory and conscience both, sourcing its own aphorisms and insisting the digital had not delivered the liberation it promised. A room that will spend its November tracking down who first said a line and then turning that line against the very networks now draining it of members is a room clear-eyed about its own moment: aware that the revolution did not arrive on the screen that emptied the commons, and unwilling to pretend otherwise.

— Kristen M. Fabians

David Kirschenbaum (me) Reading in Long Island this Friday

Sun 31 Oct 2010

Howdy all,

I've been invited to read in Amityville, Long Island at The Peacesmiths Coffeehouse. They've got a nice hippie vibe, info on a number of great political causes, and homemade treats, too. Always a swell scene.

best,
dak

The IMRAM Festival has published a CD of Séamas Cain chanting the poem tríd an gcoill. Slavek Kwi, the Czech sound-artist, in a stereo mix, has surrounded Cain's voice with the music of nature in Dromore Woods, County Clare, Ireland ... the sound of the wind and the sounds of birds, the movements of the trees and the sounds of raindrops, and most intriguing of all the sounds of the underwater insects.

13. Jordan Stempleman Poetry Publication Opportunity for Teens
Tue 2 Nov 2010

Occasionally, an opportunity to be a small part of a large change presents itself. This is that opportunity. My name is Jessica Kendall, and my colleague Marlee Stempleman and I are attempting to create a poetry project that we hope will unify students and teachers from Title I schools, as well as poets from across the nation.

We currently teach at Turner High School, located in Kansas City, Kansas. Last year, Marlee created a poetry club known as the Turner Troubadours. Through this club, we both witnessed firsthand the power of poetry as a means for expressing the emotions and overcoming the obstacles that are unique to students from Title I or low-income backgrounds.

Last year, the club produced one publication, which can be viewed at www.lulu.com (search Turner Troubadours). This year, the club will be producing three publications. While the Troubadours club is experiencing great success at Turner High School, both Marlee and I feel that this is not enough.

This year, we are seeking to recreate this experience at any and all Title I schools across the nation.

We are currently accepting poetry submissions from all Title I schools, and we need any and all of the help that we can get in soliciting and collecting student's work. With these submissions, we plan on creating a three-part anthology that will consist of “I Remember” poems, Six-Word Memoirs and free-verse poems. The book will also contain information dedicated to the educator about how to teach poetry, which will help debunk all of the myths of teaching and reading poetry and promote the love of poetry across all curriculums.

To make this project a reality we need your help. We are looking for any and all assistance in the funding, publication and promotion of this project. We graciously appreciate any support that you are able to provide, and we ask that if you are not able to help, you forward this information on to anyone who may be able to assist with the project. Any donation will be directly applied to making this project a reality, and your assistance with the project will be noted in the publication.

We wholeheartedly support our students, and believe in the power of the pen as our students navigate an often difficult and challenging world. With a little help, we believe this project has the potential to bridge many gaps and bring together a nation of underserved students. Please be a small part of what has the power to be a large change in the lives of Title I students across the nation.

Thank you for your support,

Jessica Kendall and Marlee Stempleman

REMINDER OF NYFA BOOT CAMP ARTS FESTIVAL READING

Wed 3 Nov 2010

Hey:

Just sending this reminder if you are in town for the first of the NYFA Boot Camp Arts Festival readings I will be participating in--also my birthday this weekend--woohoo! I hope you can join me to celebrate--spread the word:

POETRY READING: “In Abundance,” at The Bowery Poetry Club
Fri, Nov 5; 6:00 – 7:00pm; $5 at the door
Location: The Bowery Poetry Club, 308 Bowery (foot of 1st Street, b/w Houston and Bleecker)
Subway: F to 2nd Ave; 6 to Bleecker St

Poets Wanda Phipps and Liliana Almendarez (also a playwright), both graduates of the NYFA Artist as Entrepreneur Boot Camp, read from their work. Almendarez offers both new poems and pieces from her book, A Scorched Page

(lulu.com). Phipps reads from Wake-Up Calls: 66 Morning Poems (Soft Skull Press), Field of Wanting: Poems of Desire (BlazeVOX[books]) and Silent Pictures Recognize the World, a collection-in-process. Guitarist Stephen B. Antonakos, Phipps's frequent collaborator, accompanies her with original compositions. "In Abundance," the presentation's name, connotes the well of energy and inspiration that the poets call on to create their work. (Ms. Phipps and Ms. Almendarez read again on November 13 at 7pm at Launchpad in Brooklyn). Part of the New York Foundation for the Arts' "NYFA Boot Camp Arts Festival" (Nov 4 - 20), a showcase of work by 38 visual artists, filmmakers, musicians, choreographers, and authors. For a complete program schedule visit http://nyfabootcampfestival.wordpress.com/ -- Wanda Phipps

Check out my websites: http://mindhoney.com and http://www.myspace.com/wandaphippsband

My latest book of poetry Field of Wanting: Poems of Desire available at: http://www.blazevox.org/bk-wp.htm

And my 1st full-length book of poems Wake-Up Calls: 66 Morning Poems available (print and Kindle editions) at: http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ASIN/193236031X/ref=rm_item

Fw: Dragomoshchenko, Thursday, 7:30
Wed 3 Nov 2010

I am very happy to invite you this Thursday to a really
Dear Friends,

I am very happy to invite you this Thursday to a really special reading and round-table discussion with Arkadii Dragomoshchenko from St Petersburg. The event will be held at Columbia Univ's MFA building (Dodge Hall). It is free and will be followed by a small reception, wine, book sales, signings and great conversation. The details are below. Sincerely hoping to see you there, -Matvei

BLURRING BOUNDARIES:
ARKADII DRAGOMOSHCHENKO IN CONVERSATION

Thursday, Nov. 4, at 7:30 p.m. Columbia University Dodge Hall, Room 501 2960 Broadway, New York City

Arkadii Dragomoshchenko, one of Russiaâ€™s foremost poets, will discuss his work as a poet and a prose-writer in the context of late Soviet history, the current post-Soviet situation, and connections between Russian and American literature. He will be joined by Charles Bernstein, Eugene Ostashevsky, Matvei Yankelevich, and his translators Thomas Epstein and Genya Turovskaya. Additionally, Dragomoshchenko and his translators will read from his previous books and a forthcoming collection.

Co-sponsored by the Creative Writing Program at Columbia Universityâ€™s School of the Arts,The Columbia Department of English and Comparative Literature,The Poetry Society of America, Ugly Duckling Presse, and Dalkey Archive Press.

Arkadii Dragomoshchenkoâ€™s work in English translation includes two books of poetry (Description and Xenia, both translated by Lyn Hejinian and published by Sun & Moon) a novel (Chinese Sun, Ugly Duckling Presse 2005) and a book of prose and essays (Dust, Dalkey Archive, 2009). Born in Potsdam in 1946 and raised in Vinitsa in Ukraine, Dragomoshchenko lives in St. Petersburg where he writes for several cultural journals.

Charles Bernstein is the author of All the Whiskey in Heaven, published by Farrar, Strauss and Giroux in Spring 2010. After many years of teaching in the Poetics Program at SUNY-Buffalo, Bernstein currently holds the Donald T. Regan Chair in the Department of English at the University of Pennsylvania.

Thomas Epstein is a specialist in contemporary Russian literature. His most recent publications are articles on Russian poets Leonid Aronzon (Wiener Slawistischer Almanakh, #63) and Elena Shvarts (Novoe Literaturnoe Obozrenie, #102) and translations of Aleksandr Skidan, Dmitri Golynko, Sergei Zavyalov (Aufgabe, #8), and of Elena Shvarts (New Arcadia Review, #4). He is a professor of Humanities and Russian Literature at Boston College.

Euegene Ostashevsky is the author of two books poetry, The Life and Opinions of DJ Spinoza and Iterature (both from Ugly Duckling Presse). He is the editor and co-translator of OBERIU: An Anthology of Russian Absurdism (Northwestern Univ. Press) and of Dmitry Golynkoâ€™s As It Turned Out (UDP). His work has appeared in Best American Poetry, and in many magazines including Jubilat, Boston Review, and Fence. He teaches at New York University.

Genya Turovskaya is the co-translator of two books of contemporary Russian poetry, both from Ugly Duckling Presse: Red Shifting by Aleksandr Skidan, and The Russian Version by Elena Fanailova, which won the Best Translated Book Award for poetry. Her work has appeared in Chicago Review, Conjunctions, Aufgabe, Octopus, and other magazines. She is the author of two chapbooks of poetry: Calendar (UDP) and The Tides (Octopus).

Matvei Yankelevich is the author of Boris by the Sea (Octopus Books) and translator of Today I Wrote Nothing: The Selected Writings of Daniil Kharms (Overlook). He edited the Contemporary Russian Poetry and Poetics issue of Aufgabe (No. 8, 2009). He teaches at Columbia University School of the Arts (Writing Division) and is the editor of the Eastern European Poets Series for Ugly Duckling Presse.

Leon De la Rosa, Anne McMillen, New Orleans, Boston, and New York

Thu 4 Nov 2010

Greetings, readers and federal agents assigned to their cases! Soy solo palabras but wish to be a city by León De la Rosa (and illustrated by Gui.ra.ga7) and Monolith by Anne McMillen are now here! But I can't mail them to you yet, because I won't be! Take advantage of my absurd travel plans and order a copy now at http://www.unlikelystories.org/10/delarosamcmillen1010.shtml to get free shipping to the US and Canada! These books will ship around Thanksgiving.

Mind, you can get yours before then if you happen to be in New Orleans, Boston, or New York! Because in twelve hours, I'll be hitting the road, and you'll be able to catch Unlikely at seven great events this month! The dates and places are set, though the readers are still subject to change, but you'll find some kind of party at:

The New Orleans Bookfair
Saturday, November 6 on the 500-600 block of Frenchman Street taking the main stage at 12:45pm
with Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Brian Downes, Michael Harold, Michael Parker, and Jonathan Penton

McKeown's Books and Difficult Music, New Orleans
Sunday, November 7, 6pm
4737 Tchoupitoulas Street
with Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Brian Downes, Michael Harold, Michael Parker, and Jonathan Penton

A Gathering of the Tribes Gallery, Manhattan
Sunday, November 14, 7pm
285 East 3rd St, 2nd Floor (between Avenues C and D) with Anne Ardolino, Bob Castle, Steve Dalachinsky, Deb DeSalvo, Kirpal Gordon, and Donna Snyder

Pierre Menard Gallery, Cambridge, Mass.
Monday, November 15, 6:30pm
10 Arrow Street

with Bill Berry, Luke Buckham, Olivia Kennett, Peter Schwartz, and Donna Snyder

Boston University (sponsored by the BU Literary Society)
Wednesday, November 17, 7pm
with Bill Berry, Luke Buckham, Ric Carfagna, Olivia Kennett, Peter Schwartz, Donna Snyder, and maybe Eric Schwartz too if the control chip in his head works!

Unnameable Books, Brooklyn
Friday, November 19, 7pm
600 Vanderbilt Ave.
with Will Crawford, Joja, Anne McMillen, Tim Millas, and Donna Snyder

The Bowery Poetry Club, Manhattan
Sunday, November 21, 1pm
308 Bowery
with Bill Berry, Steve Dalachinsky, Deb DeSalvo, Kirpal Gordon, Anne McMillen, Tim Millas, Donna Snyder and maybe even Louise Landes Levi -- one can never tell!

And hey! I've got a YouTube channel at http://www.youtube.com/user/JonathanPenton -- how undignified or awesome or whatever is that? In fact, I bet if you go to places like that and http://www.unlikelystories.org/blog , you'll be able to find out all sorts of socially inappropriate things about this mini-tour as they happen! Or even better -- as I unscrupulously reconstruct them! Or find us on FaceFook -- the least efficient information dissemination system devised yet!

Hope to see you soon,

Poets Theater in Chicago
Thu 4 Nov 2010

Kenning Editions <http://www.kenningeditions.com>, Oracle Productions <http://www.oracletheatre.org>, and Poetry Magazine <http://www.poetryfoundation.org> are proud to announce a special collaboration that will give six local poets 48 hours to devise a program of Poets Theater, accompanied by a panel discussion with Chicago-based poets, playwrights, and critics, plus a talkback and a book launch for /The Kenning Anthology of Poets Theater: 1945-1985/, edited by Kevin Killian and David

Brazil. The six poets will first meet, devise and rehearse on Saturday, December 4, and present their work on Sunday, December 5, at Oracle Theatre, 3809 N. Broadway in Chicago. Sunday's panel discussion begins at 6:00 PM and the performance follows at 7:30. Talkback and book party follow immediately. Admission is free and open to the public in Oracle's Public Access Theatre. Reservations are strongly recommended and can be made at www. <http://www.oracletheatre.org>oracletheatre.org. <http://www.oracletheatre.org>

Although poetry and drama have been kin from Sophocles to Shakespeare, Milton, Stein and Baraka, Poets Theater has remained an opportunely loose form, often liberating poets or playwrights from proprietary impulses. Poets Theater has migrated between the mainstage and parlor affairs. It has built a secret history for itself, from the alternate Noh tradition of the Cambridge Poets Theatre of the 1950s to Leslie Scalapino's appropriation of thematic and formal registers of the Elizabethan theater; the Living Theatre's productions of Greek tragedy to the adjudications of identity and community values after the counter-culture: El Teatro Campesino, Black Arts theater, and the conceptualist performance of Adrian Piper or Theresa Hak Kyung Cha, for example. Interest in poets theater can be glimpsed in recent festivals, journals, one-off productions, and anthologies.

One of the latter, /*The Kenning Anthology of Poets Theater: 1945-1985 */presents the occasion for a Chicago-centric Poets Theater experiment. On Saturday, December 4, six local poets begin work together at Oracle, each with a copy of the anthology, some technical support, and about 48 hours, in which time they will conceive, rehearse, and perform a program of Poets Theater. A unique experiment in how the theater space and fundamental conventions of drama serve as studio to poets of various aesthetics, imposing as little premeditation as possible, who knows if a new play will be written, old ones compiled or mashed up? On Sunday, December 5, Kenning Editions, Oracle Productions, and Poetry Magazine host a roundtable event and talkback to complement the performance, featuring participants from the performance, poetry, and theater communities of Chicago. The roundtable will serve as an introduction to and a conversation on Poets Theater as a genre. The post-show talkback will facilitate a response to the evening's performance specifically, allowing the poets/performers to answer audience questions and comment on their experience as an ensemble. The evening concludes with a launch for the anthology with food, drink, and informalities of all kinds.

*_SCHEDULE OF EVENTS | SUNDAY, DECEMBER 5_ 6:00 PM - Roundtable Discussion featuring John Beer, Jen Karmin, Ruth Margraff, Don Share. Moderated by Patrick Durgin, publisher of Kenning Editions, and Valerie Johnson, Managing Editor of Poetry Magazine

7:30 PM - Performance and Talkback featuring Daniel Borzutsky, Duriel Harris, John Keene, Jacob Saenz, Leila Wilson, Tim Yu.

All events hosted at Oracle Theatre, 3809 N. Broadway, Chicago, IL 60613. Admission is free. ADA accessible. Phone: [redacted] or visit www.oracletheatre.org <http://www.oracletheatre.org>.

_PARTICIPANT BIOS_* John Beer is the author of /*The Waste Land and Other Poems */(Canarium, 2010). He has curated a poet's theater showcase at Links Hall in Chicago, directed Robert Duncan's /Medea at Kolchis/, and is editing a special section on poet's theater for Jacket. He is a staff theater writer at Time Out Chicago.

*Daniel Borzutzky *is the author of /*The Book of Interfering Bodies */(Nightboat, 2011); /*The Ecstasy of Capitulation */(BlazeVox, 2007); and /*Arbitrary Tales */(Triple Press, 2005). He is the translator of Raul Zurita's /*Song for his Disappeared Love */(Action Books, 2010) and Jaime Luis Huenún's /Port Trakl /(Action Books, 2008).

Duriel E. Harris is a co-founder of Black Took Collective and a member of Douglas Ewart & Inventions free jazz ensemble. Extending the multivocal experiments of /Drag/ (Elixir Press, 2003), she is currently at work on the AMNESIAC media art project. Her collection /*Amnesiac: Poems */is being released by Sheep Meadow Press this fall.

*Jennifer Karmin's *multidisciplinary projects have been presented at festivals, artist-run spaces, and on city streets across the U.S., Japan, and Kenya. She curates the Red Rover Series and is co-founder of the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise. Her text-sound epic, /Aaaaaaaaaaalice/, was published by Flim Forum Press in 2010.

John Keene is the author of /Annotations/ (New Directions) and, with artist Christopher Stackhouse, of /Seismosis/ (1913 Press). He teaches at Northwestern University.

*Ruth Margraff *is a playwright, librettist, lyricist, and performer. Her writing has been developed and produced internationally, notably in such venues as The Guggenheim Museum and Brooklyn Academy of Music in New York, and The Walker Art Center in Minneapolis. The recipient of four Rockefeller Foundation Multi-Arts commissions, among other honors and awards, she is currently Associate Professor of Writing at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

Jacob Saenz is a graduate of Columbia College Chicago. His work has appeared in *Columbia Poetry Review, Inkstains, OCHO, Poetry *and other journals. He works at a library and is an associate editor for RHINO.

Don Share is Senior Editor of Poetry magazine. His books include /Squandermania/ (Salt Publishing), /Union/ (Zoo Press), and the forthcoming titles /Wishbone/ (Black Sparrow); a critical edition of Basil Bunting's poems (Faber and Faber); and /*Bunting's Persia */(Flood Editions). He has been Poetry Editor of *Harvard Review and Partisan Review*, Editor of Literary Imagination, and curator of poetry at Harvard University.

*Leila Wilson's /The Hundred Grasses /*is forthcoming from Milkweed Editions in 2011. Her poems have appeared in A Public Space, Denver Quarterly, Poetry, The Canary, and elsewhere. She teaches at the School of the Art Institute.

Timothy Yu is the author of a chapbook, /*Journey to the West */(Barrow Street), winner of the Vincent Chin Memorial Chapbook Prize from Kundiman, and the critical book /*Race and the Avant-Garde: Experimental and Asian American Poetry since 1965 */(Stanford University Press). He teaches at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

A celebration of poets theatre is a perfect complement to Oracle's Public Access Theatre, <http://oracletheatre.org/News.htm> which keeps admission free to the public through sponsorships and fundraising efforts. Retrofitting the model of public broadcasting and churches, Oracle is a public arts organization that provides cultural services to the community free of charge. The current mainstage season of plays explores classic poetic works, including Lorca's /BLOOD WEDDING/ (through November 20), <http://www.oracletheatre.org>Buchner's /WOYZECK/ (opening March 19, 2011), and Euripides' /BACCHAE/ (opening June 4).

Among the poets featured in Kenning Editions' <http://www.kenningeditions.com/>/*THE KENNING ANTHOLOGY OF POETS THEATER: 1945-1985 */are John Ashbery, Frank O'Hara, Gregory Corso, Helen Adam, Anne Waldman, Hannah Weiner, Sonia Sanchez, Carla Harryman, Charles Bernstein, and Leslie Scalapino. Also included are previously unpublished plays by Jack Spicer, V.R. "Bunny" Lang, and Diane di Prima. Rounding out the book are contemporary classics, such as LeRoi Jones/Amiri Baraka's /Dutchman/ and Kathy Acker's /The Birth of the Poet/. It is the first major anthology of poets theater.

The Poetry Foundation <http://www.poetryfoundation.org/>, publisher of Poetry magazine <http://www.poetryfoundation.org/poetrymagazine/index.html>, is an independent literary organization committed to a vigorous presence for poetry in our culture. It exists to discover and celebrate the best poetry and to place it before the largest possible audience. Upon receipt of a major gift from philanthropist Ruth Lilly, the Poetry Foundation was established in 2003, evolving from the Modern Poetry Association, which was founded in 1941. The Poetry Foundation is one of the largest literary foundations in the world.

Re: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

Fri 5 Nov 2010

A stray tom lightly pissed on my copy of Charles Bukowski's Burning In Water, Drowning in Fire while I was out getting a six-pack of Rolling Rock and a bag of tortilla chips c. 1977. You have to understand that Westminster, Maryland was the kind of place at that time where you didn't have to lock your door, the crime rate was so low. (This has since changed, unfortunately, for a variety of reasons.) In addition to leaving my door unlocked, I left my window open more than a crack because my girlfriend earlier in the day had burnt the T.V. dinners she had diligently been preparing until I walked into the kitchen and she started tearing my clothes off of my broad, hod-carrier's shoulders (yes, I was a hod carrier at that time), in a rush for what eventually became mutual carnal fulfillment. Well, while we were off in the other room doing our best imitations of the illustrations in our dog-eared copy of the Karma Sutra, which she had gotten me for an early Christmas present (and which sported its own interesting stains and creases, but that's another posting), the timer went off on the stove, and we failed--naturally--to hear it. It wasn't until plumes of smoke from the flaming gravy and turkey slices alerted us to the emergency situation in the kitchen, that we gave over feeding our "fleshier flame," rushed into the kitchen and put the fire out with souvenir tumblers (Little Jimmy Dickens had just played at the Civic Center and we wanted to remember our first date) of tap water. It was then that we noticed that we were out of cigarettes, but we also reminded each other (she to me) that we were giving the old coffin nails up. I also commented that we were lacking the latest Sporting News from the Baltimore area tracks (Bowie, Pimlico), but then I reminded both of us that we had given up gambling at the same time that we gave up ritualistic post-coital smoking. Just then the phone rang and my girl friend had to assist her mother stringing beans and boiling pig's feet for the great Methodist revival meeting the following day--which, as you probably guessed--was a Sunday. She kissed me at the door (still smelling of sex and turkey smoke), and I decided it was time to go to the High's at the Westminster Shopping Center. The room was still smoky, so I opened the window to let the country air in. It took me a bit longer to get back than I'd anticipated: I had been somewhat indecisive in deciding which beer to get--National Bo, or Rolling Rock. I decided after some minutes of ear-pulling that Rolling Rock was cheaper, and more aesthetically pleasing, I might add, in its green "pony" bottles. That final, more spiritual point, was the clincher of the decision. When I came back to my apartment and turned on the lights, I surprised a thin tabby tom cat in the midst of eating the TV dinners from my trash can. When it saw me it leaped back to the windowsill and out. I made a thorough check of every room, but did not discover anything untoward until about a week later, when I noticed in the living room corner that a stack of books there displayed evidence of being micturated upon. The top book on the stack--the Bukowski--suffered the worst damage. The cat urine had soaked into and through the thick and attractive paper cover that Black Sparrow editions feature. My girlfriend (let's call her "Nell") was a rather religious young lady, and I believe that she had been thumbing through the book and had placed it, face-down, on the top of the stack when she heard me return. (I hear she later married a Baptist minister who holds forth on the local cable open access station and has developed something of a following). Or at least I suspect so, as "Nell" would have been the only person to go browsing through my books at the time. I found that the urine had completely dried and the pages--including the "about the author" with a youngish Bukowski doing an imitation of Jack Kerouac (or Jack London?) jumping a freight train, and which also included the staggering information that Bukowski was much more popular in Germany than in California--were adhering together and exhibited the same waviness that one expects in ordinary water damage. This damage was amplified and compounded in the severely damaged section by the brownish-yellow Elmer's glue "slab-like"concretion of pages for a full eighth of an inch. As I gingerly began to pull these pages apart I noticed a slight unmeshing sound, as if tiny Velcro patches were being separated. With each light tug, a cloud of dried urine arose, pungent, palpable, and clearly visible in the slant of sunlight in which I was working. I'm happy to record that the rest of the book did not suffer such severe damage, but the dried cat urine had thickened and discolored the spine to such an extent that any attempt at reading would expose a stain of a good quarter of each page running "up" and at a diagonal from the gutter to the opposite (upper) right angle of each page. Some of the pages displayed a brownish translucency due to the chemical action of the cat piss that allowed one to almost see "through" one of the texts and into and through the next. However, this only applied in the case of one or two signatures. For the most part, the staining grew lighter and less invasive as one proceeded through the volume from front to back, and on the title page disappeared entirely.

Jesse: You seem to be rehearsing bits for an essay or memoir, and a good one it will be.
Though maybe you should be more careful with your books.

At least i had the excuse in the following of being out of my mind on LSD. I had been left alone for what proved to be a very long night in a house I'd never been in before. The room they gave me had purple walls and dim light and the momentos of a woman of questionable sanity. So I was pretty freaked. And the only companion I had was a copy of the paperback of Duncan's The Opening of the Field, which I was getting to know for the first time. This would be 1969, I think.
I couldn't put it down. Hard to read, because the perspective kept changing, and the color of the letters, which seemed to dance to the rhythm of the verse, but it was a safer space than the dark corners that I was sure were inhabited. I annotated it copiously (I almost never write in books), which took some determination, because the pencil kept bending in my hand. I couldn't put it down, which is why I had it with me, open,

when I got up to pee, and it slipped out of my hands and into the drink. Horrified, I rescued it and patted it dry as best I could. It was a little rank for a while, but I still have it.
It's a pretty trippy book, and Duncan was known to indulge, but he was more disciplined than I
was, and my notations, those that are legible,
are more yawps than commentary, with a few strange neologisms.

That was very good acid. And it occurs to me now that if I sucked the pages...

Best,

Mark

horror and revulsion that repeatedly swept over me one early June morning in Maryland. The scene was a tragic one: a barn that had once housed several dozen sheep had been burnt to the ground with the sheep still inside--the carcasses of which, with wool pelt intact--remained scattered among the smoking timbers. The fire engines had just left,
but several State Troopers were still collecting evidence, and the general consensus was that it was almost certainly arson. I had been reading the SPICER TEXT by flashlight, as the sun had not risen yet, but found that the combined car headlights, flashing gumball machines atop the cars of the troopers, and abrupt illuminations from the flash units of the reporters' cameras (remember, this was way back in the days before digital), not to mention the steady-state flickerings of the charred and clinkered upper walls and fallen ceilings of the barn provided enough ambient light that I could put away my flashlight with no qualms about the safety of my eyesight. Indeed, by this flickering light, the early poems seemed to possess a strength and beauty that I had not noticed in the amber light of my electric lit room. I stood with the book held loosely in my left hand (bad mistake!), when an old college friend, whom I hadn't seen in years, chose that particular moment to tap me on the shoulder. I was startled from my grief-stricken-transience-of-all-earthly-things-pose, and whirled about, only to be greeted by the somewhat glowing teeth and silhouette of my old friend, who quickly announced his name (WHICH SHALL NOT BE GIVEN HERE), to preclude any further signs of panic on my part. He was too later, however, as the volume was spun from my grip and tumbled into the ashes, sending a sneeze-pattern cloud of firefly-like POINTS OF LIGHT--perhaps 1000 of them into the Republican sky! Cheered on by the voice of my friend, I located a stick and scraped the volume towards us, though it had already TAKEN FIRE with an almost supernal beauty of orange and copper-colored flames. Finally, I could reach under the crime-scene tape and rake the book onto the wet grass. I stepped on the book 20 times or so to transmogrify the magnetic flames into a drizzle of smoke. Then, borrowing my friend's handkerchief, I lifted the volume into the rays of the barely risen sun to inspect the damage. All of the front matter had been craggily carbonized, up to about page 25

(if I recall correctly), and was missing due to the repeated application of my steel-toed work shoe. However, the latter half of the volume, though partially carbonized and truncated by the action of the flames, was still legible, though brittle, and as I attempted to read the TEXT, noting here and there the various modifications of form (and consequently of meaning) I could see that my fingertips and the upper *joints of my fingers, had turned black (almost to blueness) with the charred leavings of the lower portions of the pages and binding.

Sensing the sudden change in mood of my friend from the solemnity of a shared grief to a barely repressed hilarity bursting to be expressed in the mutton-fragrant air, I pulled the remaining pages apart and mentioned to my friend, how the book looked for all the world like something to be deposited in the trash bin. And later, after sketching the literary remains in my journal to make sure that I had taken sufficient notice of every part--it was. Jess*

Subject: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

It would be great to share some descriptions of the tango between your favorite volume(s) and the environment where you are. Japan is notorious for its foxing frenzies--most of my books have tiny black and brown threads colonizing the tooth of the paper and lichen-like spoors notching away at the typographic landscapes of what I read. I have two notebooks form the 1980's that are crammed full of writing, scribbling out, worthless phone numbers, torn, dog-eared and foxed pages, pages rotting, onion skin-like, sun-burnt, spat-upon, maggot-bitten and palimpsested with white-out and bic reworkings, rain-tortured into rivulets of ink charging crookedly down the cheek of the page from black to blue to gray like the tears of a miraculous icon in a sooty corner of some yellow-walled church where nobody goes but the toothless, squint-eyed, and terminal; books falling to pieces and stinking of ancient sex and Lucky Strikes, and years spent in old winter coats for sale in the bargain bins of the Purple Heart and the Salvation Army.

These are the kinds of books that excite my imagination because those old Complete Poes and The Poems of Robert Service tortured into ghostlier shapes, rain-warped into counterweights for mobiles and stabiles invites my Twombly and Rothco appreciation centers to re-activate, and these are located close to the endorphin sluices of my hell out of them so that my tongue thrusts out to lick the plaster on the wall in joy.

'Sound is Promiscuous'

In conjunction with the exhibition and performances, Call & Response is proud to present a talk around the act of listening, particularly locating sound as a spatial concern and contesting its power of representation in contemporary society.

Joining us in the discussion are curator Cecilia Wee, and three of the exhibiting artists — Lawrence Upton, Dawn Scarfe and Tom Slater. The title of the talk, Sound is Promiscuous, is taken from Brandon Labelle's analysis of auditory life and sound culture in Acoustic Territories.

Re: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

Sun 7 Nov 2010

I was sitting in a Baltimore crabhouse thinking of Thomas Hardy while absent-mindedly paging through a copy of the 1905 reprint of The Black Riders and Other Lines by the "boy-genius" Stephen Crane, which I was lucky enough to find at the Enoch Pratt Library's bargain table book sale one Saturday c. early 1980, when a jealous husband mistook me for his wife's lover and attacked me with a letter-opener he'd bought (the police later found out) on a whim at a Stucky's in Gettysburg, PA during one of his last "happy" afternoons in the presence of his suspected cheating spouse. Luckily, the aggrieved husband was of a "gracile" build and was none-too-handy with the letter opener. As he shouted some garbled words of abuse in my direction, I immediately arose and plucked up a wooden crab mallet, tore off my bib, and prepared to throw the wet remains of the crabs that I had just consumed into the man's face, and then bop him on either temple as he fell, in my best imitation of the biblical heroine Jael--less the spike. Among the screams of the diners the frenzied husband lunged awkwardly at me and managed to stab the point of the letter opener into the plain cloth cover of Stephen Crane's pioneering poems, which I held in my left hand, in a happily successful attempt to deflect the blow from my heart. I recall at exactly that moment wondering what damage had occurred to the text--funny how one's mind works in an "emergency situation"--before I plucked a tin of "Old Bay Seasoning" quite literally "from out of the blue"--(yes, the crabhouse sported a battery of blue "cool ray" bulbs to soften the harsher florescent lighting that spilled in from the adjoining kitchen)--thrown to me by a young waiter whom I had been tipping rather heavily that evening. In a thrice I popped off the lid with my thumb and lashed the powder into my attacker's eyes. He screamed and collapsed on the table among the crabshells, wet newspapers--largely the old News American sports pages, if I recall correctly--and partially imbibed "National Bo" bottles. By this time the police had been called and one powerfully muscled Polish gentleman had wrenched the letter opener from the jealous husband's hand while he wallowed, pitifully weeping, on the floor. Almost at the same moment a few of the other diners had secured the man's surprisingly frail wrists with a "clip-on" tie that one of them had been sporting--much to the amusement of his date. Of course I denied being the Lothario as repeatedly described in the husband's sniveling accusations to the police, and they nodded in perfect agreement, noting that though I had beer on my breath, I passed every test of sobriety they subtly appraised me by, and, in addition, I appeared to one and all to be be a morally upright, God-fearing, tax-paying, citizen of the LARGER BALTIMORE-WASHINGTON AREA. The sergeant, after taking my account of the incident, abruptly turned to the other policemen and simply said the words "book-em," as he clicked his glittering Bic 90, whereupon the culprit was frog-marched away to the waiting Black Maria shouting both apologies to the other diners, and imprecations addressed in less-than-flattering terms at your humble correspondent, though, not knowing my TRUE NAME appeared to pose certain difficulties which were nigh insurmountable for the pitiable, soon-to-be-convict in the heat of his tantrum. To show my appreciation, I bought a bushel of crabs each for the Polish gentleman and the diners, and ordered a round of "National Bo" for everyone in the crabhouse. After receiving the accolades and salutations of one and all, I sat down at my table and stared out at the night sky. It was then that I remembered my copy of Stephen Crane's Black Riders and proceeded to examine the cause of my being alone at the crabhouse in the first place--i.e. my celebrating the lucky purchase of this remarkable volume earlier in the day. The point of the letter opener was thick enough to more dent than pierce the center of the tough "board" cover of the volume. It followed as I suspected, however, that the indentation was repeated through the front matter and the early pages of the text, becoming more shallow as it proceeded through the thickness of each page to end, finally, in an obliterated letter "n" in the fourth line, 5th word, of the following poem found on page 11 of the volume in question:

SHOULD THE WIDE WORLD ROLL AWAY, LEAVING BLACK TERROR, LIMITLESS NIGHT,
NOR GOD, NOR MAN, [ ]OR PLACE TO STAND
WOULD BE TO ME ESSENTIAL, IF THOU AND THY WHITE ARMS WERE THERE, AND THE FALL TO DOOM A LONG WAY.

Re: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

Sun 7 Nov 2010

Mowing the lawn of the upscale Milwaukee apartment complex as a favor to "Len" the landlord, c. 1990, I forgot that I had left my copy of Jackson MacLow's Pronouns (Station Hill, 1977) within easy reach of Len's pet capuchin monkey "Gifted." Len took Gifted everywhere he went in those palmy days, the monkey, tricked out in handsome blue pampers, collar and shiny chain leash, riding easily on Len's shoulder as he made his rounds inspecting the various properties owned by the Gillis Group. Len that day was in an expansive mood, and after signalling that I should take a break, shared some of his iced tea from out of the Styrofoam cooler he carried in his truck. The tea really "hit the spot" in the hot weather. Len enjoyed discussing Wittgenstein, who apparently was a distant relative, and so each time we met he invited me to explore the Blue or Brown books with him. He liked to pose Wittgenstein's questions to me and wait for my answer, or sometimes he would invent his own Wittgensteinian questions using the props at hand--like "Gifted" for instance--whose perception of "tool use" and language recognition, provided fertile ground for the creation of open-ended questions in the best (to Len) Wittgensteinian tradition. "What would the verb "to reconnoiter" mean to a a monkey's like Gifted? If Gifted had to choose between the color green (as in paint) and the concept of the color green, which would he be more likely to anticipate in his everyday perceptions in this suburban jungle of ours?" I would often shake my head and attempt to signal my awe at the depths of this display of heuristics on my landlord's part, simply because he was kind enough to allow me to move into his building without a security deposit. It was during one of these sessions, the lawn mower turned off, and Len pacing back and forth before me declaring that thinking in such a manner was "hard as hell," that Gifted freed himself from Len's chain, plucked up my copy of Jackson MacLow's classic, climbed into the top branches of an oak tree, and larded the humid air with pages, and fragments of pages, bitten in small, moist mouthfuls, from my copy of The Pronouns. The torn and mangled pages floated down as those autumn leaves described in the Edwin Arlington Robinson poem "Luke Havergal" as slaying themselves as they fall, and indeed, as I noted the steady deconstruction of my book proceeding from on high, I motioned to Len, pointed up to where his miscreant monkey was just wadding up the photograph of Jackson, his son, and Iris Lezak processing about the Pronouns performance space years earlier, to pitch it, and the torn, twisted and bitten through spine, into Milwaukee's equivalent of a zen-Buddhist, aleatory abyss, Len clapped his hands and angrily called to Gifted to return, but the capuchin would have none ofit, knowing all too well that a Wittgensteinian box on the ear awaited it. We therefore spent most of the afternoon drinking Len's iced tea with our shirst off, writing down Len's dictated thoughts on language and primate perception on a legal pad that he provided me, and speculating when Gifted would come back from his assault on both heaven and my book. About sun-down Gifted leaped from the lower branches of the oak into Len's arms. Len exhibited more joy at his "bad boy's" return than anger, and so ruled out corporal punishment for the time being. I had already collected the scraps and fragments of my MacLow masterwork, and spread them out across the patio wondering if I should attempt to reconstruct the volume, or simply toss the dice in order to generate even more possibilities "for the dancers". I opted for the latter, and am now editing a monkey-mauled textual epilogue for a possible, limited edition, addition to Jackson MacLow's collected works. If any publisher out there might be interested, or wish further information regarding Len and his monkey, please contact me via this list. Jess

> A stray tom lightly pissed on my copy of Charles Bukowski's Burning In Water, Drowning in Fire while I was out getting a six-pack of Rolling Rock and a bag of tortilla chips c. 1977. You have to understand that Westminster, Maryland was the kind of place at that time where you didn't have to lock your door, the crime rate was so low. (This has since changed, unfortunately, for a variety of reasons.) In addition to leaving my door unlocked, I left my window open more than a crack because my girlfriend earlier in the day had burnt the T.V. dinners she had diligently been preparing until I walked into the kitchen and she started tearing my clothes off of my broad, hod-carrier's shoulders

(yes, I was a hod carrier at that time), in a rush for what eventually became mutual carnal fulfillment. Well, while we were off in the other room doing our best imitations of the illustrations in our dog-eared copy of the Karma Sutra, which she had gotten me for an early Christmas present (and which sported its own interesting stains and creases, but that's another posting), the timer went off on the stove, and we failed--naturally--to hear it. It wasn't until plumes of smoke from the flaming gravy and turkey slices alerted us to the emergency situation in the kitchen, that we gave over feeding our "fleshier flame," rushed into the kitchen and put the fire out with souvenir tumblers (Little Jimmy Dickens had just played at the Civic Center and we wanted to remember our first date) of tap water. It was then that we noticed that we were out of cigarettes, but we also reminded each other (she to me) that we were giving the old coffin nails up. I also commented that we were lacking the latest Sporting News from the Baltimore area tracks (Bowie, Pimlico), but then I reminded both of us that we had given up gambling at the same time that we gave up ritualistic post-coital smoking. Just then the phone rang and my girl friend had to assist her mother stringing beans and boiling pig's feet for the great Methodist revival meeting the following day--which, as you probably guessed--was a Sunday. She kissed me at the door (still smelling of sex and turkey smoke), and I decided it was time to go to the High's at the Westminster Shopping Center. The room was still smoky, so I opened the window to let the country air in. It took me a bit longer to get back than I'd anticipated: I had been somewhat indecisive in deciding which beer to get--National Bo, or Rolling Rock. I decided after some minutes of ear-pulling that Rolling Rock was cheaper, and more aesthetically pleasing, I might add, in its green "pony" bottles. That final, more spiritual point, was the clincher of the decision. When I came back to my apartment and turned on the lights, I surprised a thin tabby tom cat in the midst of eating the TV dinners from my trash can. When it saw me it leaped back to the windowsill and out. I made a thorough check of every room, but did not discover anything untoward until about a week later, when I noticed in the living room corner that a stack of books there displayed evidence of being micturated upon. The top book on the stack--the Bukowski--suffered the worst damage. The cat urine had soaked into and through the thick and attractive paper cover that Black Sparrow editions feature. My girlfriend (let's call her "Nell") was a rather religious young lady, and I believe that she had been thumbing through the book and had placed it, face-down, on the top of the stack when she heard me return. (I hear she later married a Baptist minister who holds forth on the local cable open access station and has developed something of a following). Or at least I suspect so, as "Nell" would have been the only person to go browsing through my books at the time. I found that the urine had completely dried and the pages--including the "about the author" with a youngish Bukowski doing an imitation of Jack Kerouac (or Jack London?) jumping a freight train, and which also included the staggering information that Bukowski was much more popular in Germany than in California--were adhering together and exhibited the same waviness that one expects in ordinary water damage. This damage was amplified and compounded in the severely damaged section by the brownish-yellow Elmer's glue "slab-like"concretion of pages for a full eighth of an inch. As I gingerly began to pull these pages apart I noticed a slight unmeshing sound, as if tiny Velcro patches were being separated. With each light tug, a cloud of dried urine arose, pungent, palpable, and clearly visible in the slant of sunlight in which I was working. I'm happy to record that the rest of the book did not suffer such severe damage, but the dried cat urine had thickened and discolored the spine to such an extent that any attempt at reading would expose a stain of a good quarter of each page running "up" and at a diagonal from the gutter to the opposite (upper) right angle of each page. Some of the pages displayed a brownish translucency due to the chemical action of the cat piss that allowed one to almost see "through" one of the texts and into and through the next. However, this only applied in the case of one or two signatures. For the most part, the staining grew lighter and less invasive as one proceeded through the volume from front to back, and on the title page disappeared entirely.

Jesse: You seem to be rehearsing bits for an essay or memoir, and a good one it will be.
Though maybe you should be more careful with your books.

At least i had the excuse in the following of being out of my mind on LSD. I had been left alone for what proved to be a very long night in a house I'd never been in before. The room they gave me had purple walls and dim light and the momentos of a woman of questionable sanity. So I was pretty freaked. And the only companion I had was a copy of the paperback of Duncan's The Opening of the Field, which I was getting to know
for the first time. This would be 1969, I think.
I couldn't put it down. Hard to read, because the perspective kept changing, and the color of the letters, which seemed to dance to the rhythm of the verse, but it was a safer space than the dark corners that I was sure were inhabited. I annotated it copiously (I almost never write in books), which took some determination, because the pencil kept bending in my hand. I couldn't put it down, which is why I had it with me, open,
when I got up to pee, and it slipped out of my hands and into the drink. Horrified, I rescued it and patted it dry as best I could. It was a little rank for a while, but I still have it.
It's a pretty trippy book, and Duncan was known to indulge, but he was more disciplined than I was, and my notations, those that are legible,
are more yawps than commentary, with a few strange neologisms.

That was very good acid. And it occurs to me now that if I sucked the pages...

Best,

Mark

I dropped a copy of Jack Spicer's early poems into a glowing ash without at first realizing that I had done so due to the waves of horror and revulsion that repeatedly swept over me one early June morning in Maryland. The scene was a tragic one: a barn that had once housed several dozen sheep had been burnt to the ground with the sheep still inside--the carcasses of which, with wool pelt intact--remained scattered among the smoking timbers. The fire engines had just left, but several State Troopers were still collecting evidence, and the general consensus was that it was almost certainly arson. I had been reading the SPICER TEXT by flashlight, as the sun had not risen yet, but found that the combined car headlights, flashing gumball machines atop the cars of the troopers, and abrupt illuminations from the flash units of the reporters' cameras (remember, this was way back in the days before digital), not to mention the steady-state flickerings of the charred and clinkered upper walls and fallen ceilings of the barn provided enough ambient light that I could put away my flashlight with no qualms about the safety of my eyesight. Indeed, by this flickering light, the early poems seemed to possess a strength and beauty that I had not noticed in the amber light of my electric lit room. I stood with the book held loosely in my left hand (bad mistake!), when an old college friend, whom I hadn't seen in years, chose that particular moment to tap me on the shoulder. I was startled from my grief-stricken-transience-of-all-earthly-things-pose, and whirled about,

only to be greeted by the somewhat glowing teeth and silhouette of my old friend, who quickly announced his name (WHICH SHALL NOT BE GIVEN HERE), to preclude any further signs of panic on my part. He was too later, however, as the volume was spun from my grip and tumbled into the ashes, sending a sneeze-pattern cloud of firefly-like POINTS OF LIGHT--perhaps 1000 of them into the Republican sky! Cheered on by

the voice of my friend, I located a stick and scraped the volume towards us,
though it had already TAKEN FIRE with an almost supernal beauty of orange and copper-colored flames. Finally, I could reach under the crime-scene tape and rake the book onto the wet grass. I stepped on the book 20 times or so to transmogrify the magnetic flames into a drizzle of smoke. Then, borrowing my friend's handkerchief, I lifted the volume into the rays of the barely risen sun to inspect the damage.
All of the front matter had been craggily carbonized, up to about page 25
(if I recall correctly), and was missing due to the repeated application of my steel-toed work shoe. However, the latter half of the volume, though partially carbonized and truncated by the action of the flames, was still legible, though brittle, and as I attempted to read the TEXT,
noting here and there the various modifications of form (and consequently of meaning) I could see that my fingertips and the upper joints of my fingers, had turned black (almost to blueness) with
the
charred leavings of the lower portions of the pages and binding.
Sensing the sudden change in mood of my friend from the solemnity of a shared grief to a barely repressed hilarity bursting to be expressed in the mutton-fragrant air, I pulled the remaining pages apart and mentioned to my friend, how the book looked for all the world like something to be deposited in the trash bin. And later, after sketching
the literary remains in my journal to make sure that I had taken sufficient notice of every part--it was. Jess the pages a delightful color, though the photograph on the cover was relatively unchanged and continued to present that old, cunning

Subject: Entropy and Books--Descriptons of Favorite Weathered Volumes and Texts

It would be great to share some descriptions of the tango between your favorite volume(s) and the environment where you are. Japan is notorious for its foxing frenzies--most of my books have tiny black and brown threads colonizing the tooth of the paper and lichen-like spoors notching away at the typographic landscapes of what I read. I have two notebooks form the 1980's that are crammed full of writing, scribbling
out, worthless phone numbers, torn, dog-eared and foxed pages, pages rotting, onion skin-like, sun-burnt, spat-upon, maggot-bitten and palimpsested with white-out and bic reworkings, rain-tortured into rivulets of ink charging crookedly down the cheek of the page from black to blue to gray like the tears of a miraculous icon in a sooty corner of some yellow-walled church where nobody goes but the toothless, squint-eyed, and terminal; books falling to pieces and stinking of ancient sex and Lucky Strikes, and years spent in old winter coats for sale in the bargain bins of the Purple Heart and the Salvation Army.
These are the kinds of books that excite my imagination because those old Complete Poes and The Poems of Robert Service tortured into ghostlier shapes, rain-warped into counterweights for mobiles and stabiles invites my Twombly and Rothco appreciation centers to re-activate, and these are located close to the endorphin sluices of my innermost and most secret self and jam them open, or at least tickle the hell out of them so that my tongue thrusts out to lick the plaster on the wall in joy.

Your descriptions solicited! Jess

You can listen to her CD, "Transported," on reverbnation.com http://joangelfand.com

"Joan Gelfand is at her best in her new collection of short stories. They're quirky, original, and highly entertaining with surprising dark moments that will take your breath away." â€”Mary Mackey Author of The Widow's War

"EAT WRITE LOVE. Joan Gelfand whisks us, briefly, to Paris, where the present meets the past in both its ugliness and its grace, to Florence, where art meets its cruelest friend, "art criticism," to a more anonymous if earthier place in our own land where families and lovers pass and balance, for a moment, on the pinnacle of Thanksgiving. Her stories, like her poetry, celebrate life and love, family, friendship, art - a scrumptious meal, and an intoxicating bottle of wine! (Warning: Do NOT read these stories on an empty stomach.)" â€”Christopher Bernard, author of A Spy in the Ruins , cofounder of Caveat Lector

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is "Tracking Systems" by Alan May

Description:

In "Tracking Systems" we see a world (not completely unlike our own) full of threat and the attending paranoia. Populating this world: Stetson Kennedy, Benjamin Franklin, Don Knotts, Gandhi, and an assortment of birds, bears, coyote, and a few beings of the less ordinary, more mythical variety.

My new book has been released by Dos Madres and is available there as well as SPD, etc. The book was first inspired by photographs of Nazi-era fortifications on the coast of France and then morphed into an exploration of pilgrimage trails and experiences of flight from religious persecution. That is one way to read the long serial poem that is the title poem.

Sidebrow Books: City Chapbook Preorder
Mon 8 Nov 2010

Sidebrow Books is pleased to announce the first of a series of multi-author chapbooks curated from contributions to Sidebrow's collaborative projects.

Culled from contributions to The City Project, City threads the poetry and prose of Tyler Flynn Dorholt, Danielle Dutton, Matt Hart, and Shane Michalik into a valenced reflection on the city, and how habitation and architecture, both real and imagined, play a transformative role in literary contexts.

Limited to 100 copies, the chapbook is available for a preorder discount of $10.

To order, go to http://www.sidebrow.net/books/city-sb004

GOLDWITHOUTWARNING: A 3-DAY DCPOETRYFEST
November 12-14 @ the District of Columbia Arts Center, 2438 18th Street NW

Fri. Nov. 12, 7:30 PM -- Heather Fuller, Sandra Doller, Chris Nealon, Mel Nichols, & Ward Tietz

Sat. Nov. 13, 7:30 PM -- Ryan Walker, Buck Downs, Cathy Eisenhower, Rod Smith, Mark McMorris, & Terence Winch

Sun. Nov. 14, 7:30 PM -- Ben Doller,Â Brian Fitzpatrick, Ken Jacobs, Theodora Danylevich, Dan Gutstein, Leslie Bumstead, Bryan Koen,Â Maureen Thorson, & Wade Fletcher

Leslie Bumstead is the author of Cipher/Civilian (Edge Books). She lives in Takoma Park, MD.

Theodora Danylevich is a DC Poet and a PhD student in English at GW. Dora is trying hard to make it as an academic, and has had poetry published in Phoebe, Vanitas, Boog, and DCPoetry.com.

Ben Doller's most recent books are Dead Ahead (Fence, 2010), and FAQ (Ahsahta, 2009).Â His first collection of poetry, Radio, Radio, (Louisiana State University Press, 2001) was selected by Susan Howe for the 2000 Walt Whitman Award. He teaches at George Mason University.

Sandra Doller has two books of poems--Oriflamme & Chora--with a third--Man Years--on the way. She recently finished a book-length experimental essay titled Memory of the Prose Machine. Doller is the founder & editrice of 1913 a journal of forms & 1913 Press and Assistant Professor at California State University. A while back, she and her man legally merged their namesâ€”Doyle + Miller = Dollerâ€”but their dogs, Ronald Johnson & Kiki Smith, opted to keep theirs.

Buck Downs' most recent books are Now & Laters and Ainâ€™t Got All Night. He is also the author of Recreational Vehicle, Marijuana Softdrink, Ladies Love Outlaws, In Memory D Thompson, and several others. He is current co-curator of the In Your Ear series at DCAC.

Cathy Eisenhower is the author of the poetry collections Language of the Dog-heads (Phylum), clearing without reversal (Edge Books), and would with and (Roof Books). She is co-translating the selected poems of Argentine poet Diana Bellessi.

Brian Fitzpatrick received his Masters Degree in Literature from George Mason University, where he currently teaches composition and literature. He works as a poetry reader for the literary journal Phoebe and is pursuing an MFA in Creative Writing.

Wade Fletcher co-hosts the monthly Cheryl's Gone reading series in Washington D.C. Recent work can be found in Lo-ball, So to Speak, and the Boog Reader, and he's published two chapbooks: Snitch Culture (dusie, 2007) and Conditions Which (Pied-a-terre, 2010). He lives in Northern Virginia with his wife and son.

Heather Fuller is the author of perhaps this is a rescue fantasy (Edge Books), Dovecote (Edge Books), and Startle Response (O Books). She lives in Baltimore, MD. She was the poetry editor of Washington Review for several years and an early curator of the in your ear series at DCAC.

Dan Gutstein is the author of Non/Fiction (Edge Books). His poems and stories have appeared in more than 60 publications, including Ploughshares, Prairie Schooner, American Scholar, TriQuarterly, The Penguin Book of the Sonnet, and Best American Poetry, as well as aboard metrobuses in Northern Virginia. He runs the Writing Studio and Learning Resource Center, and teaches creative writing at the Maryland Institute College of Art in Baltimore.

Bryan Koen lives in Alexandria, VA. He attends the MFA program at George Mason University, where he serves as the Assistant Editor of Phoebe: A Journal of Literature and Art. Life as he knows it will soon end with the birth of his first child.

Ken Jacobs is the author of Sooner (Phylum Press 2009) with other recent work in the Boog City Reader and the online journal Everyday Genius. He writes code in Northern Virginia.

Mark McMorris' collections of poetry include EntrepÃ´t (Coffee House Press, 2010); The CafÃ© at Light (Roof Books, 2004); The Blaze of the Poui (2003), which was selected by C. D. Wright for the 2002 Contemporary Poetry Series and was also a finalist for the Lenore Marshall Poetry Prize, and The Black Reeds (1997), winner of the Contemporary Poetry Series prize from the University of Georgia Press. He teaches at Georgetown University.

Chris Nealon is the author of Foundlings: Lesbian and Gay Historical Emotion before Stonewall (Duke, 2001), and two books of poems, The Joyous Age (Black Square Editions, 2004) and Plummet (Edge Books, 2009).Â He recently finished a book called The Matter of Capital: Poetry and Crisis in The American Century (forthcoming Harvard, 2011). He teaches at Johns Hopkins University.

Mel Nichols' most recent book is Catalytic Exteriorization Phenomenon (National Poetry Series finalist). She is also the author of Bicycle Day, The Beginning of Beauty, Part 1: hottest new ringtones, mnichol6, and Day Poems. She is a member of the Flarf Collective.Â

Rod Smith is the author of Deed, Music or Honesty, Protective Immediacy, and In Memory of My Theories. He edits the journal Aerial, publishes Edge Books, and manages Bridge Street Books in Washington, DC. He is also editing The Selected Letters of Robert Creeley with Kaplan Harris and Peter Baker for The University of California Press.

Maureen Thorson is a poet, publisher, and book designer living in Washington, D.C. Her collection Applies to Oranges is forthcoming from Ugly Duckling next year. She is the author of a number of chapbooks, including Twenty Questions for the Drunken Sailor (2009), Mayport (2006), which won the Poetry Society of America's National Chapbook Fellowship, and Novelty Act (Ugly Duckling Presse 2004). She is current co-curator of the In Your Ear reading series at DCAC.

Poetic artist Ward Tietzâ€™s book Hg-The Liquid is forthcoming from 1913 Press.Â His large-scale, word-sculpture installation, Three Recipes, is under development for the City of Alexandria.Â Examples of his work can be viewed at www.wordimage.net.

Ryan Walker self-published the hell out of his book, You Will Own It Permanently.Â He enjoys candy bars.

Terence Winchâ€™s most recent book is a collection of poems called Boy Drinkers (Hanging Loose, 2007).Â His new book, Falling Out of Bed in a Room with No Floor, will be out in 2011. His work appears in the Oxford Book of American Poetry, four Best American Poetry collections, and in many journals, including the Paris Review,Â American Poetry Review, and New American Writing. Also a musician and songwriter, he released a CD anthology in 2007 of his Irish compositions called When New York Was Irish: Songs & Tunes by Terence Winch.

not sure if this was sent to the list yet, fyi...

TENDENCIES: Poetics & Practice
Stephanie Gray, Dawn Lundy Martin, and Nathaniel Siegel
This series of talks by and about contemporary poets, titled in honor of Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick, explores the relationship between queer theory, poetic practice, manifesto, and pedagogy.

The next event features talks by:

Stephanie Gray
Dawn Lundy Martin
Nathaniel Siegel

...followed by a discussion/Q&A session.

on Thursday, November 11
at 7 PM
FREE

at CUNY Graduate Center
(in the Skylight Room, 9100)
365 Fifth Avenue, NYC

Filmmaker and writer Stephanie Gray's first collection of poetry, Heart Stoner Bingo was published by Straw Gate Books in 2007. Publications include EOAGH, 2ndAvenuePoetry, The Recluse, and Press 1. Readings include the PRJCTNS, Segue, Zinc, and Poetry Project Friday series. Her short experimental super 8 films, often city portraits or mini-symphonies have screened internationally, including at the Ann Arbor, Oberhausen, and Viennale fests. Her queer-themed films are often about pop cultural figures such as dyke heroine Joan of Arc in Dear Joan and the perceived dyke heroine Kristy McNichol in Kristy, both of which have screened at gay & lesbian film fests such as Frameline (San Francisco), Outfest (Los Angeles), and Mix NYC. Her analog video from the early 00s, "close your hearing for the cap(shuns)" is probably the only art work out there to mash up "Our Lips Our Sealed" on slo-mo with Schoolhouse Rock's "Conjunction Junction" and Charlie Brown's indecipherable adults to explore themes of language, hearing loss and our construction of meaning. If you know of others let her know.

Dawn Lundy Martin, a poet, essayist, and activist, is the winner of the 2009 Nightboat Books Poetry Prize for her manuscript, DISCIPLINE, selected by Fanny Howe and forthcoming in February, 2011. In 2006, she was awarded the Cave Canem Poetry Prize by Carl Phillips for her manuscript, A Gathering of Matter/A Matter of Gathering (U of Georgia P, 2007). Among her honors include Massachusetts Cultural Council Artists Grants for Poetry in 2002 and 2006, and the 2008 Academy of American Arts and Sciences May Sarton Prize for Poetry. Dawn is a founding member of the Black Took Collective, a group of experimental black poets; she is also one of four founders of the Third Wave Foundation in New York, a feminist, activist foundation that works nationally to support young women and transgender youth ages 15 to 30, and co-editor of a collection of essays, The Fire This Time: Young Activists and The New Feminism (Anchor Books, 2004). She is an assistant professor of English in the Writing Program at the University of Pittsburgh.

Nathaniel A. Siegel is an artist, activist, poet and curator based in New York City. His work has been shown at the Leslie/Lohman Gay Art Foundation (SOHO); Art Around The Park - HOWL ! Festival; Split This Rock gathering - Washington D.C.; Visual AIDS; and Naropa. He is a member of ACT-UP NYC, and the Queer Justice League and co-founded Poets for Peace, Poets Against the War, the LGBTQ Poetry Reading Series Come Hear ! and Acts of Art. His first chapbook TONY is published by Portable Press at Yo-Yo Labs of Brooklyn. He has performed at The Poetry Project, the Bowery Poetry Club, the Living Theatre, Creative Visions in New York City, and Giovanni's Room in Philadelphia. His installation "how to put on and use a condom : a safe sex presentation" was displayed at NYC's LGBT Center for The Center Show marking the 40th Anniversary of Stonewall. His poetry and interviews have appeared in EOAGH, Landscapes of Dissent Guerilla Poetry & Public Space by Jules Boykoff and Kaia Sand, BOOG City Newspaper, and BPC's Study Abroad on the Bowery's Poets Anthology.

*Fall Reading Series at The Renaissance Society *

Poetry Reading
Joanna Fuhrman and Suzanne Buffam
*Sunday, November 14, 2:00 pm
Swift Hall Room 106*

Joanna Fuhrman Currently teaching in the creative writing program at Rutgers, Fuhrman is the author of four volumes: Pageant (Alice James Books, 2009), Moraine (Hanging Loose Press, 2006), Ugh Ugh Ocean (Hanging Loose Press, 2003) and Freud in Brooklyn (Hanging Loose Press, 2000). "Fuhrman is a leader in the particular, in 'infra-surrealism.' She taboos nothing; no form impedes her complete wit. This full poetry is not only 'feminine, marvelous, and tough,' but subtle, searching, and wounded-sexual, social, and smart. Fuhrman celebrates new truth-telling, an art of the spectacular pageant." David Shapiro

Suzanne Buffam Currently teaching in the creative writing program at The University of Chicago, Buffam's first collection of poetry, Past Imperfect (House of Anansi, 2005), won the Gerald Lampert Award for the best first book of poetry published in Canada in 2005, and was named one of 2005's Books of the Year by the Globe and Mail. Her most recent collection is The Irrationalist, (Canarium Books, 2010). "Buffam's often deadpan tone is like a magical dustpan that sweeps up the strangest observations and ideas, all worlds to themselves. Her 'Little Commentaries'-'On Piñatas,' 'On Fountains,' and 'On Vanishing Acts' (to name only a few)-are absolute gems, kin to Anne Carson's town poems and Yoko Ono's Grapefruit. Buffam's poems tug at new corners of the brain. They're marvelous." Matthea Harvey

Mills College Graduate Assistantship in Community Poetics

Please forward to anyone considering applying to MFA in poetry programs.

Mills College Graduate Assistantship in Community Poetics

Mills College is pleased to introduce a two-year, full-tuition assistantship to one student pursuing a master of fine arts (MFA) degree in poetry beginning fall 2011. Candidates for the assistantship will design and implement a poetry-related community project during the course of their two-year degree program. The assistantship does not require a teaching commitment. Under the mentorship of Mills' renowned faculty, the successful candidate will have the unique experience of pursuing his/her MFA degree while implementing a community poetics project of his/her own design. This is a high-profile opportunity to explore poetry's possibilities for transformative dialogue---at Mills and beyond.

Background

Continuing the Mills tradition of experimentation in graduate education, this newly created assistantship is designed to support the development of innovative, even risky, ways of teaching and/or presenting poetry. As the number of full-time teaching positions in higher education decline across the United States, Mills seeks to explore the possibilities of making poetry available outside traditional academic confines to broaden access to the art form and utilize it as a force for social change.

This assistantship aligns with the goals of the existing Mills Community Teaching Project which offers students the opportunity to teach residents in the communities surrounding the College. Mills graduate students lead writing workshops in a variety of alternative venues, including after-school programs, elder homes, community centers, half-way houses, lock-down facilities, and battered-women's shelters.

Proposals should not replicate the Community Teaching Project but should re-imagine poetry's socially transformative possibilities. Applicants are encouraged to imagine a project that in some way propels poetry into new encounters outside the academy. Some examples of projects that inspired the creation of this assistantship include Mark Nowak's poetry workshops with auto workers in the US and South Africa, Heriberto Yepez's public poetry signage in Tijuana, and June Jordan's Poetry for the People.

Application Instructions

Applicants should follow and complete the usual application processes for the MFA in Poetry by the priority application deadline of December 15.

In addition to those materials, they should submit a maximum 1,000-word proposal that outlines a project they would like to pursue during the two-year MFA program. Proposed projects could explore new ways of teaching poetry, expanding arts access, and promoting social change. The proposed project needs to be executed during the timeframe of the student's MFA program. It can be a continuation of work the applicant is already doing.

They should also submit a CV or resume that demonstrates any relevant experience and skills.

The proposal and CV or resume should be submitted separately from the program application materials.

Assistantship proposals and CV or resume can be submitted by going to:

www.mills.slideroom.com

The assistantship in Comminity Poetics is listed on slideroom along with multiple assistantships the deparment offers, and applicants to the MFA in Poetry program are encouraged to apply for the Community Poetice assistant ship as well as any other graduate assistantships in which they are interested. Please note that each student may only be awarded one assistantship position for the academic year. Please also note that all other available assistantships carry an award of $3,000/semester or $6,000 for the academic year and are awarded in addition to any need-based scholarships students may be awarded.

The Assistantship in Community Poetics is the only full assistantship offered by the MFA in Creative Writing at Mills College at this time.

NOTE: There is a $10.00 total submission fee to apply for this and any other assistantships online via SlideRoom; though we prefer that mode, and we think applicants might find it easier to manage the application. However, if the $10.00 fee causes a hardship, contact Stephanie Young by email and include a statement about why you need to waive the application fee.

Judging Criteria

Proposals will be judged based on:

1. Creativity
2. Potential for social impact/change

Deadline: December 15, 2010

Questions please contact:

Call for Participants: Simultania (Sat. 13 Nov.)
Wed 10 Nov 2010

EMF World
Urgent Opportunity

Simultania Project
Saturday, November 13, 11am EST

The Simultania Project is an attempt to experience simultaneous realities by gaining a many-layered perspective of a single moment in time. It?s about our impossible wish to break free from the isolation of a singular sense of consciousness, while at the same time possessing the imaginative power to realize that there are other experiences of consciousness occurring right now besides our own. The project is about our fundamental desire to be special on the one hand, while realizing that it?s this very desire that makes us utterly common on the other. And it?s about how new technologies are changing the way we directly experience the world, and the sheer sense of wonder that results when we realize that simultaneous realities are unfolding around us at all times.

The one major criteria is that participants time-stamp their footage or audio recording so that later it can be synced up to play back simultaneously with everything else in the installation. To do this, set a watch or clock to the live time-count on the website?s homepage.

http://www.simultaniaproject.com/index.html

Then, in the seconds before the 1-minute-moment is set to begin, start your recording by filming the face of your watch or clock (or the live time-count itself on the screen of your computer) as the seconds tick away. Then, without stopping your recording, go on to film whatever you?d like to for the 1-minute-moment.

For more simple time-stamping methods (including audio-only methods), go to:

http://www.simultaniaproject.com/participate.html#p7HGMpc_1_5

The installation will be exhibited in the spring of 2011 in the Streaming Museum?s network of international screens in public spaces and at Here is Elsewhere in Los Angeles, as well as online at simultaniaproject.com and streamingmuseum.org.

Brevitas Event this sunday - "Information" online - CLWN WR December 4

Hi Folks - some big news

first - this sunday i'll be one of over 35 poets who will be reading their short poems (no longer than 14 lines) between 2 and 6 at the 7th Annual Brevitas Festival of the Short Poem at the Bowery Poetry Club, 308 Bowery (between Houston and Bleecker Streets) - it will be a lot of fun - everyone who attends will receive a free anthology containing all the poems that are being read plus many more (it's easily worth the $7 price of admission) - plus, while each poem is being read you will see it projected over the poet's head - it's a unique event and one you'll remember second - most of you know my "Information" pieces, an ongoing series of prose poems that explore all kinds of things

well, you can find recent "Information" in the last two issues of the Australian magazine Otoliths at http://the-otolith.blogspot.com/in the first online issue of formerly print magazine Caliban at www.calibanonline.com in the most recent issue of Right Hand Pointing at https://sites.google.com/site/rhpissue36/and in the January-April 2010 issue of Press 1 http://www.leafscape.org/press1/v3n3/heman.html

and last (but certainly not least) the lineup for the next BIG CLWN WR Event/Celebration has been pretty much finalized - it will be held on December 4 between 7 and 10 in the Community room at Westbeth and will feature filmaker/performance artist (and poet and dancer and singer) Mindy Levokove, and will include an improvised dance poem by Nathan Whiting and Christina Knight, songs by Carolyn Ota, photographs by Lori Rogers, and poetry by Thomas Fucaloro, Evie Ivy, Judy Kamilhor, Jee Leong Koh, Brian McInerney,

Katrinka Moore, Adriana Scopino, George Spencer, Phyllis Wat and Liza Wolsky - more info will follow

11/11 11:11 New at Spineless Books > Riddle & Bind, Keyhole Factory
Thu 11 Nov 2010

SPINELESS BOOKS ANNOUNCES

Riddle & Bind, poetry by Nick Montfort

http://spinelessbooks.com/riddle

A book of poems to solve in three sections: "Riddle," poems inviting the reader to guess their subject; "Bind," poems written using Oulipian constraints; and "&," riddles written using ludic and poetic forms. Answers and constraints are disclosed in an encrypted answer key. The book has a introduction and extensive notes, and comes wrapped in an enigmatic riddle-blurb by Christian Bök. Nick Montfort is on the faculty of MIT's Program in Writing and Humanistic Studies and serves as president of the Electronic Literature Organization. He lives, writes, and programs in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Keyhole Factory, fiction by William Gillespie

http://spinelessbooks.com/keyholefactory

Revolving around an event that takes pace on 11/11/11, interlocking, formally innovative stories plot the tragic trajectory of a world off the edge. "...despite its format as a novel (and also its novel format...), Keyhole Factory is poetry at its heart. It suggests, nudges, and paints blurry, horribly beautiful word pictures more than it tells, and it never uses straightforward prose where an allusive fever-dream will do. It is by turns bewildering and gorgeous, maddening and profound, and at the end of the day, it's a winner." - Smile Politely. William Gillespie is the author of eight and five- sixths books of fiction and poetry, published under five names. He is co-host of the radio show Rock Geek F.M. and holds an MFA in electronic writing from Brown University.

ADVANCE PRAISE FOR RIDDLE & BIND

I like the way Nick Montfort's poems maintain both brilliance and being: never losing either while displaying the other. The poems build their force by acceleration as they shimmer between imagination and reality, between attention to language and the language of attention. For example, to note that many passersby are gripping "head wounds" - the first two words of "Another Hole" - is striking; that what these passersby are clutching is their mobile phones is mordantly funny. And beyond that, the poem ("Another Hole") deploys Montfort's distinctive gifts of ear, eye and brain to consider genuine, figurative wounds: "Heal them, please/ please press their/ heads together,/ O." This is a boldly original, serious and playful book of genuine poetry. - Robert Pinsky

Ancient poetic tradition teaches both the prism-house (riddle) and prison-house (bind) of language. Old English riddles artfully mislead us, only to return sparkling awareness of what had been lost as commonplace once they are solved, the language-practice of riddle defeating the graying-out effects of ordinary speech. All of world-poetry uses the constraints of sound-following, measure, and form. A drive to preserve traditional constraints co-exists with a constant pressure to discover or elaborate new ones. Most recently, visual, lettristric, mathematical, and algorithmic constraints have been explored by Oulipians, digital writers, and others. Nick Montfort’s Riddle & Bind comes informed by all these practices, especially enriched by his experience as a prizewinning writer of digital interactive fiction and as a coder of concise, elegant poetry generators. Dive in to the riddles and bound poems of Riddle & Bind as gifts of 21st-century language - and turn to the "key" at the end of the book if your enjoyment includes the "answers" or curiosity about constraints. Deep pleasure awaits you. - Stephanie Strickland

New from Chax Press: Mark Weiss, As Landscape.
$16. Order from http://www.chax.org/poets/weiss.htm

"What a beautiful set of circumstances! What a lovely concatenation of particulars. Here is the poet alive in every sense of the word, and through every one of his senses. Instead of missing a beat or a part, Weiss' fragments are like Chekhov's short storiesthe more that gets left out, the more they seem to contain… One can hear echoes from all the various ancestors...[but] the voice, at its center, its core, is pure Mark Weiss. His use of the fragment is both elegant and bafflingly clear, a pure musical threnody…[it] opens a window, not only
into a mind, but a person, a personality, this

NEW: Farid Matuk & Juliana Leslie

Fri 12 Nov 2010

Dear friends:

We are pleased to announce two new Letter Machine Editions titles:

Farid Matuk's This Isa Nice Neighborhood

and

Juliana Leslie's More Radiant Signal

You can purchase both for $20 (including shipping!) here:
http://www.lettermachine.org/

They are also available individually here for $14 each:
http://www.lettermachine.org/purchase.html

On Matuk:

Can identity be pliant and penetrable? Can the speech act be one of attention over intention, can play and fluidity open onto an ethic? This Isa Nice Neighborhood, Farid Matuk’s first full-length collection, says yes. Yes to the rejection of any opposition between politics and aesthetics, between rhetoric and poetics. Yes to vulnerability. Yes to a poetry willing to enact the errors, uncertainties, and tangled complexities of our political, sexual, and social lives. Testing both narrative and lyric, Matuk finds desire at the root of each, a root from which, these poems suggest, compassion and permission grow intertwined.

Farid Matuk was born in Peru to a Syrian mother and Peruvian father; he has lived in the U.S. since the age of six. Matuk is the auther of Is it the King? (Effing). His poems have appeared in 6 X 6, Barrelhouse, The Boston Review, Big Bridge, and Cannibal, among others. His essays and reviews have appeared in Sentence, Cross-Cultural Poetics, and The Poerty Project Newsletter. Matuk has published translations from Spanish in Kadar Koli, Bombay Gin, Translation Review, and Harvard Review. The recipient of Ford and Fullbright Fellowships, Matuk holds an MFA from the Michener Center for Writers at UT Austin. He lives in Dallas with the poet Susan Briante.

On Leslie:

A chair by Charles and Ray Eames. A painting by Paul Klee. A sentence by Virginia Woolf. Juliana Leslie’s debut collection More Radiant Signal broadcasts its elegant, probing lyricism here, among the panoply of those who worked to house extended thought in moments of compressed articulation. With haunting, painterly logic, Leslie’s poems offer a world where the equivocal beauty of algebra and the aerodynamics of paper planes meet "a windowpane in love/ with a bright whirligig" to show that "[t]he boundary of the sky is a touchstone for enunciation." Is there such a thing as an impossible object? And if not, how is that after reading More Radiant Signal it sits there perfectly in the center of the room.

Juliana Leslie was born in Cooperstown, New York and currently lives in Santa Cruz, California. She holds degrees from the University of California, Santa Cruz; Mills College; and the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. This is her first book.

New chapbooks from Fred Moten and Peter Gizzi are forthcoming in the spring, along with Edmund Berrigan's memoir Can It! due out next fall 2011.

Our books are also available at SPD, and we'll see you in the Table X fray at AWP in DC this year.

Many thanks,
JMW & NEG

NHL BRAIN TRINKET

NHL BRAIN TRINKET
http://netartery.vispo.com/?p=565

What I'm going to tell you-I warn you-is of no consequence whatever. And it won't even be of any interest to you at all unless you're an NHL hockey fan. And, what's worse, it's going to severely test your algebra skills. The only thing I can say in favour of saying it at all is that you just won't ever read anything else about hockey like what I'm going to tell you right now. It just doesn't happen. This is the unicorn of hockey writing. Right here, right now.

It's so messed up to be telling you this at all that I have to give you something to get you to read it. What I'm going to give you is like something you'd get for a dollar out of a bubble-gum machine. But maybe the best such thing you'd get. Cuz it's an idea. It's a formula. It's from the bubble gum machine of the mind. I figured it out myself. I haven't seen it mentioned anywhere else. I'm going to give you a little brain trinket. The formula tells you how many points a perfectly average NHL team should have after they've played N games. That's it. That's all this is about. The only use it has is to be able to tell if a team is above or below average. Think of this as a peculiarly Canadian gift. It's a way to think a little bit more clearly about something that is barely worth thinking about at all.

But, you know, in Canada, we think about hockey. It's more pleasant than thinking about the mess we're in.....

Barn Murals and Poetry
Fri 12 Nov 2010

Hello,

I recently finished the first in a series of murals on barns across Maryland. Each mural will be a text and image piece featuring poetry. The project is organized by the University of Maryland Art Gallery in College Park, and is called "Poetic Aesthetic in Rural Maryland". For the first barn I used the poem "Lost" by David Wagoner.

If anyone can offer suggestions for poems about nature (specific poems, anthologies, web sites) I'd appreciate it. Some images of the first barn are at the following links.

On my site:

Performance Saturday--Would love to see you....
Sat 13 Nov 2010

Hope you can make it Saturday night:

PERFORMANCE: “Words, Music and Moving Pictures”
Sat, Nov 13, 7:00pm; FREE, tickets at door

Location: Launchpad, 721 Franklin Ave, Bklyn Subways: 2/3/4/5 to Franklin Ave; C to Franklin Ave

http://thebrooklynink.com/2010/11/12/19073-free-on-franklin-avenue/

Three NYFA Artist as Entrepreneur Boot Camp graduates and a Boot Camp organizer present their work:

Documentarian and multimedia artist Ryan Murdock presents “Project: Butte, America,” a multimedia essay about Butte’s mining past and its questionable legacy. Playing the role of a subjective tour guide, Murdock narrates this combination folk-history-and-cautionary tale to live music.

Poets Liliana Almendarez and Wanda Phipps read from their work. Almendarez offers both new poems and pieces from her book, A Scorched Page (lulu.com); Phipps reads from Wake-Up Calls: 66 Morning Poems (Soft Skull Press), Field of Wanting: Poems of Desire (BlazeVOX[books]) and Silent Picture Recognize the World, a collection-in-process. Stephen B. Antonakos, a frequent collaborator, accompanies her with original compositions performed on the guitar.

Singer-Songwriter Stephanie Spangler performs songs from her album, Leaving Biltmore Grove, as well as some new tunes. Spangler navigates through love, loss, and resolution in her original pop-folk songs played on the piano. *Part of the New York Foundation for the Arts’ “NYFA Boot Camp Arts Festival” (Nov 4 - 20), a showcase of work by 38 visual artists, filmmakers, musicians, choreographers, and authors. Robert Archambeau interview at The Argotist Online

Sun 14 Nov 2010

Robert Archambeau interview at The Argotist Online

http://www.argotistonline.co.uk/Archambeau%20interview.htm

Excerpts:

â€œ[T]here are certainly instances where poetry can fill an important political need, and where, perhaps, it can have â€œmajorâ€ political effects. As for experimental poetry in the contemporary Westâ€”I agree with Andrea Brady, when she says, of such poetry, â€œAt my most optimistic, I hope it encourages its readersâ€”who, as readers seeking out this kind of work, arenâ€™t likely to require encouragementâ€”to think critically about politics, or perhaps to be inspired by such thinking to participate in collective efforts to overcome the tyrannies of capitalism.â€ That is, I think that thinking about this kind of poetry can be an important spur to critical thinking about oneâ€™s assumptionâ€”although, like Brady, I do feel thereâ€™s a component of preaching to the choir involved. Also, Iâ€™m not sure this is a kind of politics in which poetry has any special role over, say, sociology or history or ecology. Iâ€™ve always been suspicious of claims about the specia ness of poetry: my colleague Josh Corey, whom I admire, claims that â€œonly poetry can undo the Big Lie â€” Iâ€™m not at all sure thatâ€™s true, Iâ€™m not convinced that film, or music, or street protest, or editorial writing, or talking to oneâ€™s friends, isnâ€™t similar in its effect. Thereâ€™s a kind of narcissism one encounters sometimes in poetry circles, a sense that this thing that we care for must be of central importance not just to us but to others as well. Sometimes we even see the lack of evidence for such importance as a sign of importanceâ€”as proof that weâ€™re Shelleyâ€™s â€œunacknowledged legislatorsâ€ after all. My instinct is to distrust such claims, though Iâ€™m open to demonstrations to the contrary.â€ [â€¦]

â€œA politics of obscurity? Well: one could argue that thereâ€™s a long tradition of this, or several traditions. One kind of obscurity takes the form of what George Steiner calls â€œtactical difficulty,â€ a kind of encoding of messages to get past censors of one kind or another. This depends on the right kind of reader or auditor being able to pick up a message that the wrong kind canâ€™t: old style blues lyrics offer a case in point. Thereâ€™s another kind of politics of obscurity, which we can think of as going back at least as far as the symbolist, decadent, and aesthetic movements. People like MallarmÃ© or Gustav Moreau, who advocated an art that turned away from the world, and from intelligibility, as a means of rejecting modernity. If the realist novelists sought to combat social injustice polemically (as did, say Zola or Upton Sinclair), this other path offered an implicit critique via the turning of its back on the world. Itâ€™s less a transformation of the world than a refusal of it, or a retreat. The analogy that comes to mind from my personal experience is the hippie commune I spent some of my childhood living next door to, in Maine. Many of these guys had been politically engaged, trying to change policy through protest (a Zola-esque politics, in this analogy), but at a certain point they decided to withdraw from that engagement, and turn their backs on the world they despised, living in obscurity (if thatâ€™s not too much of a pun). Itâ€™s a politics of sorts, I suppose, in its refusals more than anything else, and its general, unarticulated assertion that thereâ€™s got to be another way of doing things. But the ways it changes the worldâ€”if indeed it does, and I imagine there are waysâ€”are difficult to trace.â€

â€œAs for the question of the academyâ€”itâ€™s certainly become the main place where one finds poets in the United States, and, increasingly, in the U.K. Of course this has an impact. In the case of the New Critics, the first American generation of poets to enter the academy, it did have the effect of playing-up the formalist element of their agenda, for reasons that are quite explicit if you read their correspondence. The university demands specialization, and poetry can defend itself as a specializationâ€”as something distinct from philosophy or history or sociology or journalismâ€”with reference to form. And if one looks at the kind of poetry coming out of academic programs in the United States now, one sees it is overwhelmingly elliptical in form: that is, it insists on its distinctness from the language of quotidian prose, on its formal qualities that make it a kind of special field of endeavor in an environment that is dominated by the logic of specialization. Thatâ€™s not the only thing thatâ€™s going on, but itâ€™s certainly a part of our current cultural logic. All of this may change, with the big changes that seem likely to come to academe over the next generation, but Iâ€™m not in any position to make predictions about what lies ahead, except that it will be different from the way we do things now.â€

call for proposals: curate a festival in chicago

hi poetics friends....chicago arts space links hall is looking for interdisciplinary festival proposals for 2011-12.Â it's a great chance to launch a series of creative projects in chicago with both financial and marketing support.

i've participated as a performer in a poets' theater showcase (2008) and co-curated a festival of writing, performance, and video (2009).Â this spring i'll be performing in the art/profit festival.Â so, feel free to send any questions my way.

you can see the details of past festivals here.
http://linkshall.org/o-aa.shtml

applications are due DECEMBER 6th.
http://linkshall.org/o-proposals_aa.shtml

and -- curators don't need to live in chicago.Â i've posted a few more details below.Â forward the info to your friends and collaborators.

onwards,
jen karmin

Links Hallâ€™s Artistic Associates (AAs) each curate a nine performance festival for the Links Hall space, for which they receive a budget, along with marketing, mentoring and technical support. AA projects have taken place annually since 2005 and have proved to be an important and supportive relationship for both Links Hall and the artist, generating press coverage, and expanding audiences for new work. Many Artistic Associates maintain their relationship with Links Hall beyond their curation.

The AA program welcomes new artistic perspective each year to keep programming fresh and interesting. Many successful applicants have had limited or no curatorial experience and have found the program to be an opportunity for creative and professional development.

2005-2010 AA programs have included dance, puppetry, live art/performance, experimental theater, cantastoria, readings, music, and multidisciplinary work.

Links Hall plans to select three AAs for 2011-12, and welcomes proposals. The proposal review and selection of AAs will be made by Links Hallâ€™s Programming Committee, which comprises artists (including some past AAs), as well as Links Hall Staff and Board members. Eligibility and Criteria

All practicing artists are welcome to submit a proposal, and no past curatorial experience is necessary.

AAs do not need to be based in Chicago. If you are based elsewhere, please reference in your proposal that you plan to be in Chicago for some program planning and your festival.

Small Press in the Archive Lecture Series presents

JEREMY BRADDOCK

"The Material Formation of the Field: Charles Abbott's and Carl Van Vechten's Archives of the Twentieth Century"

November 19th @ 1:00pm

The Poetry Collection, 420 Capen

University at Buffalo

Jeremy Braddock received his Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania and was a Fellow at Cornell's Society for the Humanities, a Visiting Assistant Professor at Haverford College, and an Assistant Professor at Princeton University before coming to Cornell. A specialist in twentieth-century American literature and culture, he is finishing a book, The Modernist Collector and Black Modernity, 1914-1934, has edited a collection of essays on Hollywood "B" movies, and has published articles on the Black Atlantic and African-American modernism.

Small Press in the Archive Lecture Series dedicates itself to the study of poetry outside the traditional literary historical plot. The lectures in this series draw on materials in The Poetry Collection, at SUNY Buffalo in order to explore community/discourse formations, the status of ephemera and the making of genre, the conditions of literary production, transatlantic cross-pollinations in and between specific magazines, the careers of poets, the role of book art, and how the little magazine functions in the making of the avant-garde.

All events are free and open to the public.

Reading poems, such as “Whoever Answers the Door”, in Philip Byron Oakes’ second book Sard, reminds one of a grandiloquent room—very modern and posh with amenities, and at the ready to receive the exhilarated mob attempting to enter all at once, in a crush of three or four abreast, through a door constructed for one and one only to enter in style. Luckily we have Philip Byron Oakes to defuse the chaos, magically narrow the door, creating tension, putting things in order, resetting the ratio of things to their meaning once again. The thrill of exhilarated facts, “the whirlwind scuttling/a moment of stillness”, of cultural information streaming off of each page at the speed of sound, places the reader at the crux of a savant’s poetic genesis, displacing the literal with the dancing heads of the figurative and in a big way. Often joking while performing his circus of fire eating acts, he gets around to lavish spectacles “Sooner or loiter.” Details mount and accrue, as what is real—objective—is less satisfying to observe than the ritualized, impeccably imbedded electrical buzz and charge of these manic fragmented tableaux holding place as they surge. Oakes writes as he guns the motor. There is a sense of vertigo that appeals to one’s right brain and left brain simultaneously. The language swirls—a whirlpool of stochastic images encountered without fault. The poems are, I feel, impressively unimpeachable—shards of focus as imagined works of art. What we are witness to is the random miracle seemingly made plain—a vase of flowers torn from a table by a cyclone in Kansas (the house ripped to kindling) and placed down serenely in Sarasota or Reno without so much as a petal harmed. Such is the force of the poems in Sard. *Sard *is a chaotically ruled, brilliantly conceived, devastating regime of organic and supra-organic devices that are as delightful to think about and ponder, once having read them, as they are to read. —Raymond Farr, editor of Blue & Yellow Dog

and-then

A calypso melody in the frozen food section, thawing out in the belly of a tourist on the couch. A codicil of apologies, chasing a legacy through a penny arcade. An ante of sugar putting starch in the collar, of the otherwise naked, for a secularity of vespers, in a roll call of loyalists to the scrum.

Breathing not a word, a bird, a plane. The weight of ulterior personae. Magnanimously queued, in a march of the non sequiturs,

Poetry Justification Day! Seeking Recommendations...
Tue 16 Nov 2010

Let's say I wanted to compile a list of contemporary "lay" articles to justify teaching poetry for an academic administrator who was previously a scientist or biologist. Any recommendations?

VERSE BROADENS THE MIND, SCIENTISTS FIND -- http://amyking.wordpress.com/2009/10/18/verse-broadens-the-mind-scientists-find/

This Is Your Brain on Metaphors --

Present and Tense: Fiction vs. Poetry in Recovery -- http://soberfornow.wordpress.com/2010/10/14/present-and-tense-fiction-vs-poetry-in-recovery/

Poetry is I say essentially a vocabulary just as prose is essentially not. And what is the vocabulary of which poetry absolutely is. It is a vocabulary based on the noun as prose is essentially and determinately and vigorously not based on the noun. Poetry is concerned with using with abusing, with losing with wanting with denying with avoiding with adoring with replacing the noun. It is doing that always doing that, doing that doing nothing but that. Poetry is doing nothing but using losing refusing and pleasing and betraying and caressing nouns. That is what poetry does, that is what poetry has to do no matter what kind of poetry it is. And there are a great many kinds of poetry. So that is poetry really loving the name of anything and that is not prose. * Gertrude Stein, â€œPoetry and Grammarâ€

Please, Please, Please (to quote James Brown) -- Gil Scott Heron was never part of the Last Poets and got real tired of people saying he had been. To add to the confusion, there's the "original Last Poets" and then there's the later trio that went forward without Gylin Kain (sp?) -- [There was a group of student poets at Howard in the late 70s that had the all time best name; they were "The Next to the Last Poets"]

"The Revolution Will Not Be Televised" was first recorded with just drums etc. for the album "Small Talk at 125th and Lennox Avenue" -- It was then rerecorded with a larger band, and that second version is the one that got lots of air play and became the stuff of legend. It also appeared in Scott Heron's first book of poems, also titled "Small Talk at 125th and Lennox Avenue" --

These days students will need Norton style footnotes for damn near everything in the piece, from "put a tiger in your tank" to "Whitney Young."

Tue 16 Nov 2010

First review of Kent Johnson's 'A Question Mark Above the Sun:Documents on the Mystery Surrounding a Famous Poem "By" Frank O'Hara'

http://pearlblossomhighway.blogspot.com/

Excerpt from the review:

The question he seems to be asking is not so much, "Did Frank O'Hara or Kenneth Koch write the poem?" as much as it is, "Why is it important to attribute a work of art to the name of an individual artist and to protect that name as a sign of artistic genius?" and "What, exactly, are they trying to protect?"

It returns us to the kinds of questions Kent has been asking publicly for years about the ways in which poetry hierarchies function and how coteries of friends, or alumni of prestigious east coast universities, or poets of a certain generation and/or geographic location, protect their own, while simultaneously claiming an objective and innocent love of great art, regardless of its source. These are often questions of class and race and gender, though I think Kent is more interested in the functioning of power qua power, less about its specific manifestations Grade level? "Teaching poetry": reading? writing? criticism? mnemonics / performance?

Are the biologists providing similar bibliographies to justify "teaching biology" at the same grade level? "Teaching biology": plant and animal identification? dissection? scientific method (really doesn't matter the science)?

More usefully: look at the learning academies model. I would look at models at level, not articles "for dummies." If he is the administrator and not an administrator.

All best,

> *Reading poems, such as "Whoever Answers the Door", in Philip Byron Oakes' second book Sard, reminds one of a grandiloquent room—very modern and posh with amenities, and at the ready to receive the exhilarated mob attempting to enter all at once, in a crush of three or four abreast, through a door constructed for one and one only to enter in style. Luckily*

*we have Philip Byron Oakes to defuse the chaos, magically narrow the door, creating tension, putting things in order, resetting the ratio of things to their meaning once again. The thrill of exhilarated facts, "the whirlwind scuttling/a moment of stillness", of cultural information streaming off of each page at the speed of sound, places the reader at the crux of a savant's poetic genesis, displacing the literal with the dancing heads of the figurative and in a big way. Often joking while performing his circus of fire eating acts, he gets around to lavish spectacles "Sooner or loiter." Details mount and accrue, as what is real—objective—is less satisfying to observe than the ritualized, impeccably imbedded electrical buzz and charge of these manic fragmented tableaux holding place as they surge. Oakes writes as he guns the motor. There is a sense of vertigo that appeals to one's right brain and left brain simultaneously. The language swirls—a whirlpool of stochastic images encountered without fault. The poems are, I feel, impressively unimpeachable—shards of focus as imagined works of art. What we are witness to is the random miracle seemingly made plain—a vase of flowers torn from a table by a cyclone in Kansas (the house ripped to kindling) and placed down serenely in Sarasota or Reno without so much as a petal harmed. Such is the force of the poems in Sard. *Sard *is a chaotically ruled, brilliantly conceived, devastating regime of organic and supra-organic devices that are as delightful to think about and ponder, once having read them, as they are to read. —Raymond Farr, editor of *Blue & Yellow Dog

Re: the revolution will not be televised

maybe The Last Poets got there first. Baraka did a few riffs along that line.

If rap could be traced to one logical source point, this exceptional piece of vinyl would be it, without question. Though the strict adherence to syncopated rhythms and standard song structures are absent, all the elements that would later become the hallmarks of hip-hop by the early 1980s (and predictable fare by the 1990s) are here: vivid depictions of street level violence, vivid apocalyptic predictions of racial genocide. All that is missing are pointless party anthems. But running through all the songs on the Last Poets' debut is an urgent sense of the need for radical action in the nation as well as the black community. In addition to railing against the injustices perpetrated by white America, the Poets' comment on the economic and social devastation of drugs ("Jones Comin' Down," "Two Little Boys"), complacency in urban families ("Wake Up Niggers," "When the Revolution Comes"), the emotional release of sex ("Black Thighs"), and the weight of oppression that leads to hopelessness ("Surprises"). At the same time, they warn of the dangers of half-hearted commitment to revolutionary change: "don't talk about revolution until you are ready to eat rats." In the same manner that Marvin Gaye's landmark album What's Goin' On depicted the problems that doomed black culture, the Last Poets are now seen by many as prophets. But also like Gaye, the realization that the problems depicted on The Last Poets are now much worse marks the record as an unheeded warning, far more than just a piece of Black Power kitsch. ~ John Duffy, All Music Guide

As far as I know, this is Gil's own-own aphorism. And sorry, Websters, Blogospherical, Netizens, Twitterers, Facebookies -- it's still the truth. Corollary: The revolution will not be virtual.

The Last Poets have been well served by the new generation. I've heard a great take off on The Seseme Street theme by young rapper/poets at D.C's Busboy @ Poets. But we (US coach potatoes) rarely protest anymore. Or do we? No, I don't think we do at all. We do I guess/blog, or so I've been told.

Please, Please, Please (to quote James Brown) -- Gil Scott Heron was never part of the Last Poets and got real tired of people saying he had been. To add to the confusion, there's the "original Last Poets" and then there's the later trio that went forward without Gylin Kain (sp?) -- [There was a group of student poets at Howard in the late 70s that had the all time best name; they were "The Next to the Last Poets"]

"The Revolution Will Not Be Televised" was first recorded with just drums etc. for the album "Small Talk at 125th and Lennox Avenue" -- It was then rerecorded with a larger band, and that second version is the one that got lots of air play and became the stuff of legend. It also appeared in Scott Heron's first book of poems, also titled "Small Talk at 125th and Lennox Avenue" --

These days students will need Norton style footnotes for damn near everything in the piece, from "put a tiger in your tank" to "Whitney Young."

Give Some Word - new poetry book

Thu 18 Nov 2010

With great pleasure to announce to the poetics list the availability of another book of poems!

Give Some Word is 90 pages of poetry. The collection traces a narrative of irreverence humor & beauty by foot across cities and mountains on 3 continents.

Now out from Shearsman, click for ordering, etc:
http://www.shearsman.com/pages/books/catalog/2010/kelder.html

A is for Accessible. Give Some Word is a somewhat irreverent book of poems. Kelder believes that people who read poetry should be delighted, not confused. Poems are not riddles. The poetry in Give Some Word is no exception; equal parts distilled language, contrary, and pushing everyday language out of conformity.

Some apparent influences; Carver, Brautigan, Corman, Sakaki, Lax, the Jargon Society and a hundred others. The collection includes work from publications over the past 10 years by Coracle, Longhouse, Blue Press, and many generous magazine editors.

On Using the Word ‘Important’
to Describe Poetry

I found some good poems,
faxed them right over
to a colleague of mine.
The boss came in and asked me,
“What are these?

What’s this all about?”
“They’re poems,” I explained
“I thought they were very important, Sir,
and that as many people
as possible should see them.”

What people are saying:

When I first read the first poems by Cralan Kelder before assembling what became Lemon Red, I had remarked to myself that in the best ones, he was a kind of urban Gary Snyder. Later, he showed me notes written in the margins of the manuscript of some of those poems, indeed by Snyder himself. He had taken a class with him in California, and his comments were almost identical to what I had said about the poems. Later still, Synder denied ever meeting Kelder or writing about his poems.

Simon Cutts

Like Buddhist koans it makes no sense to try and unpick how Kelder's best poems work: they just do. The language, concept and experience are all one.

Kelder is a morning poet, he's up before the sun to make raspberry tea and politicise his croissants, hoping he'll be the next in line for the sun's address - after Mayakovsky and O'Hara - but in the mean time his delight is in sharing his observations (the autobahn, the finches) through his art. The clarity of his address occupies the place where language is thought, speech poetry where all pretence is stripped. These are real the poems of a poet drifting his mind over the domestic clutter of an ordinary day.

Cralan Kelder's writing is delightfully intoxicating and fresh -- his pungent perspectives enliven the world.

Naomi Shihab Nye

Unlike many of his contemporaries, Cralan Kelder does not employ his poems as armatures for hidebound rhetoric or as floorshows for linguistic acrobatics, but cleaves instead to immediacy’s insistence with words and thought-tropes that sparkle like the many facets of everyday consciousness, in a teleological real-time that is both arresting and fluxional. Give Some Word gives us all that and more.

Mark Terrill

I once met the kind and tremendous poet Cralan Kelder. This was in Amsterdam. Let's go have a drink, said Cralan; OK, I said. We had some drinks at a bar, and then we went to a smaller bar and had some more. After this, we went to a bar that was even smaller yet, and we kept on drinking, and thus the night continued, in progressively smaller bars, until at some fantastical hour we sat there, facing one another, in a kind of tiny dark bar-closet that smelled of hashish, our knees pressing up against each others', our faces nearly touching. I felt by this time a bit disoriented and numb, but Cralan held forth, a true gentleman, laughing uproariously and discoursing brilliantly about Olson, Dutch poetry of the 17th century, dike technology, and whatnot. Let's go to another bar, said Cralan; OK I said, and so we went out into the dawn, and I wondered to myself how in the world there could be a bar tinier than the one from which we had just come. And as I was wondering this, I fell into a canal and began to splash about, yelling Help me, and that is the last I recall. Thank you, Cralan Kelder, for pressing your lovely mouth against mine, and bringing me back to life, in Holland.

Re: Publication of the Turkish poet Seyhan Erozçelik's Rosestrikes and Coffee Grinds

Thu 18 Nov 2010

My book of translation of the Turkish Poet Seyhan Erozçelik’s Rosestrikes and Coffee Grinds is just out:

* *

Seyhan Erözçelik, ROSESTRIKES AND COFFEE GRINDS, translated by Murat Nemet-Nejat

Published by* Talisman House*

Available from SPD and Amazon:

“In Eda: An Anthology of Contemporary Turkish Poetry, Murat Nemet-Nejat established ‘eda’ as a marker of poetic process much as Lorca’s duende or the Japanese concept of yugen had ignited similar interests in the century now behind us. The rootedness of mysticism in language, central to the poetics in question, finds a true exemplar in Seyhan Erözçelik’s Rosestrikes and Coffee Grinds, a work of both intelligence & passion." —Jerome Rothenberg

“Could it be that Seyhan is actually informing us that in this world, where life is presented to us as if it were the reality of the past, present, future and destiny (‘fate’ or ‘sorrow’), there is in fact nothing more than the surreal? It must be—the surreality of fortune images and the allegory of the mediocrity of conventional fortune discourse, signifying life caught between mediocrity and imagination.

With Seyhan, ‘rose’ is a savior: An icon that can be anything and overcome anything. An icon that provides redemption from being caught between mediocrity and imagination! Seyhan attributes a miraculous, mystical (maybe even divine?) power to the rose...

The power of the rose, that shall transform us not towards doing everything, but towards being everything. In Rosestrikes and Coffee Grinds we see three paths: all of which are paths of the rose! In three spans of time: the rose shall come along those paths.

And will bring us to itself...” —Hilmi Yavuz

“Seyhan Erözçelik’s Rosestrikes and Coffee Grinds has three layers of narrative: first, the physical arrangements of rosestrikes and coffee grounds that the reader never sees; second, the fortune reader’s own interpretation of these casual arrangements through words; and third, the text that the reader simply encounters. All of these convergent layers unite in one point: what is said in the poem will be… the objective future of the anonymous other.” —Efe Murad

The VERY first review of Kent Johnson's 'A Question Mark Above the Sun: Documents on the Mystery Surrounding a Famous Poem "By" Frank O'Hara'

Fri 19 Nov 2010

The VERY first review of Kent Johnson's 'A Question Mark Above the Sun: Documents on the Mystery Surrounding a Famous Poem "By" Frank O'Hara' http://habenichtpress.com/?p=550

Excerpt from the review:

"The text itself was perhaps best described by Owens during his recent visit to Buffalo to see it through the final stages of printing â€” he called it a literary-critical Tristram Shandy. Indeed, Johnson so dramatizes the metanarrative of his thesis that this is the first book of critical inquiry about which Iâ€™m afraid to say too much, for fear of giving away the plot. And it does have one, compleat with villayns and heroes. The first of these emerge during the highly entertaining section â€œCorroded by Symbolysme: An Unfinished Novella.â€ The section fancifully details Johnsonâ€™s sojourns in England during various conferences, and his mysterious encounters with British poets intent on preventing the publication of the original â€œtape essayâ€ by Tosa Motokiyu in which the alternate â€œTrue Accountâ€ authorship theory was first proposed. Prominent among these is J.H. Prynne. Apparently the leader of this odd â€œfellowship of the ringâ€ dedicated to preserving the legacy of Frank Oâ€™Hara, Prynne goes white on first hearing of the impending publication of said tape essay during a meeting with Johnson, and the latter subsequently reports incidents of harassment from anonymous callers bearing British accents."

Tests of English as a Foreign Language
Sat 20 Nov 2010

Back in May, and back when I was teaching a TOEFL test instruction class, I would spend so much time preparing and teaching per week that my writing was suffering. Then I came up with an idea. On the TOEFL test there is a 30-minute essay segment. Test takers have 30 minutes to write a 300 word essay in answer to an assigned question. These questions are usually somewhat mundane, i.e., one custom from your country you would share, . My goal was to write at least 75 essays and to repurpose them. While doing this, I also like I was sticking it to the powers observing us (Cameras were placed in each room, for "quality control").

To cut it short: I have roughly 60 TOEFL (poetic) essays up at my blog, htp://charitablegiving.blogspot.com.

Check 'em out!

And thanks for reading!

Best,

Ryan Daley

poetics & other books from LPB archived online
Sat 20 Nov 2010

Litteraria's online archive at http://issuu.com/litteraria has expanded, with the addition of 14 more titles. Some of these titles are out-of-print, while others are down to the last remaining dozen copies. If you find any of these archived titles useful, please visit the LPB website at www.litterariapragensia to see if the title is still available for ordering.

Coming soon to the web, the inaugural issue of VLAK magazine (contemporary poetics and the arts). Only ten copies remain available. See www.vlakmagazine.com for information about forthcoming issues.

To be released on Monday: DAVID LYNCH IN THEORY, ed. Francois-Xavier Gleyzon, with contributions from Todd McGowan, Greg Hainge, Gary Bettinson, Dominique de Courcelles, Scott Wilson, Alanna Thain, Jason T. Clemence, Joshua D. Gonsalves, Rebecca Anne Barr, Louis Armand, Eric G. Wilson, Francois-Xavier Gleyzon, Gary Bettison, Michel Chion.

"Francois-Xavier Gleyzon has brought together a brilliant set of critical essays on the iconic hero of lost forms, David Lynch. Probing, fearless and scrupulous, the volume stays close to the pained exactitude of an unrelenting oeuvre, strongly supporting its troubled and abjected areas, the glacial vocabularies and spectral prods that have made Lynch unbypassable, necessary and enduring." --Avital Ronell, New York University

See http://litteraria.ff.cuni.cz/books/lynch.html for further information.

2011 sees the release of a series of new books, including critical studies of Dusan Makavejev, Pierre Joris, James Joyce, David Grieg, Gilles Deleuze; studies of English-Language Theatres in Post-Communist Prague and Prague Poetics; an anthology of 20th century emigre poetry in Prague; fiction by Thor Garcia; and poetry collections by Vincent Farnsworth and Laura Conway...

Re: Give Some Word - new poetry book

hmm, agreed.

one clarification: by (bagging) do you mean bagging somebody as in getting somebody to write a blurb, or bagging somebody as in bagging on somebody?

the truth of the matter is that i was in painstakes addressing the whole blurb thing. it's a trend in the publishing workplace and who am I to protest?

I couldnt quite bring myself to include the blurbs in the book itself, so they are only here for your reading pleasure, and not in the book itself. I figured that after badgering everybody to write one, the least I could do was use them somewhere.

none of my favorite (poetry) books have blurbs anywhere near them, with the exception of Jargon Society books, with those irreverent brilliant observations by the master jonathan williams and what is written on the flaps of those books.

these particular blurbs below are meant to find a place in those veins

so, michael, what do you think a blurb should do? Im sure this discussion has been here before (?) I just wasnt around at the time to read it...

On Using the Word 'Important'
to Describe Poetry

I found some good poems,
faxed them right over
to a colleague of mine.
The boss came in and asked me,
"What are these?
What's this all about?"
"They're poems," I explained
"I thought they were very important, Sir,
and that as many people
as possible should see them."

What people are saying:

When I first read the first poems by Cralan Kelder before assembling what became Lemon Red, I had remarked to myself that in the best ones, he was a kind of urban Gary Snyder. Later, he showed me notes written in the margins of the manuscript of some of those poems, indeed by Snyder himself.
He had taken a class with him in California, and his comments were almost identical to what I had said about the poems. Later still, Synder denied ever meeting Kelder or writing about his poems.

Simon Cutts

Like Buddhist koans it makes no sense to try and unpick how Kelder's best poems work: they just do. The language, concept and experience are all one.

Kelder is a morning poet, he's up before the sun to make raspberry tea and politicise his croissants, hoping he'll be the next in line for the sun's address - after Mayakovsky and O'Hara - but in the mean time his delight is in sharing his observations (the autobahn, the finches) through his art. The clarity of his address occupies the place where language is thought, speech poetry where all pretence is stripped. These are real the poems of a poet drifting his mind over the domestic clutter of an ordinary day.

Cralan Kelder's writing is delightfully intoxicating and fresh -- his pungent perspectives enliven the world.

Naomi Shihab Nye

Unlike many of his contemporaries, Cralan Kelder does not employ his poems as armatures for hidebound rhetoric or as floorshows for linguistic acrobatics, but cleaves instead to immediacy's insistence with words and thought-tropes that sparkle like the many facets of everyday consciousness, in a teleological real-time that is both arresting and fluxional. Give Some Word gives us all that and more.

I once met the kind and tremendous poet Cralan Kelder. This was in Amsterdam. Let's go have a drink, said Cralan; OK, I said. We had some drinks at a bar, and then we went to a smaller bar and had some more. After this, we went to a bar that was even smaller yet, and we kept on drinking, and thus the night continued, in progressively smaller bars, until at some fantastical hour we sat there, facing one another, in a kind of tiny dark bar-closet that smelled of hashish, our knees pressing up against each others', our faces nearly touching. I felt by this time a bit disoriented and numb, but Cralan held forth, a true gentleman, laughing uproariously and discoursing brilliantly about Olson, Dutch poetry of the 17th century, dike technology, and whatnot. Let's go to another bar, said Cralan; OK I said, and so we went out into the dawn, and I wondered to myself how in the world there could be a bar tinier than the one from which we had just come. And as I was wondering this, I fell into a canal and began to splash about, yelling Help me, and that is the last I recall. Thank you, Cralan Kelder, for pressing your lovely mouth against mine, and bringing me back to life, in Holland.

CBA Lettepress Poetry Chapbook Competition Deadline is December 1st

Sun 21 Nov 2010

Dear Friends, Please pass along the info to poets and students. Kimiko Hahn is the final judge. Deadline is Dec. 1st.
http://www.centerforbookarts.org/opportunities/chapbook2011guidelines.pdf
I'm pasting in the info below.

ATTENTION POETS: Your Chance to Win $1,000 and Get Your POETRY Printed in The Center for Book Arts' 2011 POETRY CHAPBOOK COMPETITION The Center for Book Arts invites submissions to its annual Poetry Chapbook Competition by December 1, 2010. The winning manuscript will be chosen in April 2011 and will be awarded with the publication of a beautifully designed, letterpress-printed, limited-edition chapbook printed and bound by artists at the Center for Book Arts. The edition is limited to one-hundred signed and numbered copies, ten of which are reserved for the author and the remainder of which will be offered for sale through the Center. The winning poet will also receive a cash award of $500, and a $500 honorarium for a reading, to be held at the Center in the fall of 2011, as well as an exclusive opportunity to stay at the Millay Colony for the Arts in Austerlitz, New York as one of their Winter Shakers. This year's judges will be Kimiko Hahn & Sharon Dolin.

SUBMISSION GUIDELINES
Please submit a collection or sequence of original poems or a single long poem not to exceed five- hundred lines or twenty-four pages (no translations). The cover page should contain, on a single detachable page, the manuscript title, and author's name, along with address, phone number, and email. The author's name should not appear anywhere else. A second title page should be provided without the author's name or other identification. Please provide a table of contents and a separate acknowledgements page containing prior magazine or anthology publication of individual poems. Please note that the five-hundred lines or twenty-four page limit does not include the cover page, title pages, table of contents, or acknowledgements pages. Manuscripts should be bound with a simple spring clip.

NOTE: Poems may have appeared in journals or anthologies but not as part of a book-length collection. Competition is open to all poets writing in English who have published no more than one full-length book.

Reading Fee: Please send a $25 check payable to The Center for Book Arts.

Please Include: A #10 self-addressed stamped envelope for notification of the winner. Manuscripts will not be returned. Deadline: Manuscripts must be postmarked no later than December 1, 2010.

ABOUT THE JUDGES
Kimiko Hahn is the author of eight collections of poetry, including Toxic Flora: Poems (W.W. Norton, 2010); The Narrow Road to the Interior (W.W. Norton, 2006); The Artist's Daughter (2002); Mosquito and Ant (1999); Volatile (1998); and The Unbearable Heart (1995), which received an American Book Award. Hahn is the recipient of fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts and the New York Foundation for the Arts, as well as the PEN/Voelcker Award, a Lila Wallace-Reader's Digest Writers' Award, the Theodore Roethke Memorial Poetry Prize, and an Association of Asian American Studies Literature Award. She is a Distinguished Professor in the English department at Queens College/CUNY and lives in New York.

Sharon Dolin's fourth poetry book, Burn and Dodge, won the AWP 2007 Donald Hall Prize in Poetry and was published by the University of Pittsburgh Press in 2008. Her other books include Realm of the Possible (Four Way Books, 2004), Serious Pink (Marsh Hawk Press, 2003), and Heart Work (1995). She currently teaches at the Unterberg Poetry Center of the 92nd Street Y. Her poems have appeared in dozens of journals including Barrow Street, The Kenyon Review, New American Writing, Court Green, and The New Republic. See Entry Form. . . .Send Entries to:

hi cralan

its something of a vexed issue .. i try not to take it too seriously .. tho i like to collect particularly cool things people say .. in my head at least .. [er yes - about my poems] .. i think it can help get a book some attention, & im happy to oblige a publisher .. it can help orient a book in its poetic-cultural place etc esp if yr trying to distribute internationally .. these are obvious things to say ..

by 'bagging' - i dont know if its australian vernacular or uk/us but i meant - basically - insulting - what i referred to is these comments:

"poetry where all pretence is stripped"

"does not employ his poems as armatures for hidebound rhetoric or as floorshows for linguistic acrobatics"

im just expressing my dislike for critics having a generalised swipe - esp when that is not the task at hand .. &, just asking - is it possible to define (again in naive sex & city fashion) its (a book's) positive attributes, without referring to what its not

i see a lot of that here & am sensitive to the thought that (something like) 'linguistic acrobatics' might refer to my poems (& whats wrong with that?) .. whats wrong with pretence?

With great pleasure to announce to the poetics list the availability of another book of poems!

Give Some Word is 90 pages of poetry. The collection traces a narrative of irreverence humor & beauty by foot across cities and mountains on 3 continents.

Now out from Shearsman, click for ordering, etc:
http://www.shearsman.com/pages/books/catalog/2010/kelder.html

A is for Accessible. Give Some Word is a somewhat irreverent book of poems. Kelder believes that people who read poetry should be delighted, not confused. Poems are not riddles. The poetry in Give Some Word is no exception; equal parts distilled language, contrary, and pushing everyday language out of conformity.

Some apparent influences; Carver, Brautigan, Corman, Sakaki, Lax, the Jargon Society and a hundred others. The collection includes work from publications over the past 10 years by Coracle, Longhouse, Blue Press, and many generous magazine editors.

What people are saying:

When I first read the first poems by Cralan Kelder before assembling what became Lemon Red, I had remarked to myself that in the best ones, he was a kind of urban Gary Snyder. Later, he showed me notes written in the margins of the manuscript of some of those poems, indeed by Snyder himself.
He had taken a class with him in California, and his comments were almost identical to what I had said about the poems. Later still, Synder denied ever meeting Kelder or writing about his poems.

Simon Cutts

Like Buddhist koans it makes no sense to try and unpick how Kelder's best poems work: they just do. The language, concept and experience are all one.

Kelder is a morning poet, he's up before the sun to make raspberry tea and politicise his croissants, hoping he'll be the next in line for the sun's address - after

Mayakovsky and O'Hara - but in the mean time his delight is in sharing his observations (the autobahn, the finches) through his art. The clarity of his address occupies the place where language is thought, speech poetry where all pretence is stripped. These are real the poems of a poet drifting his mind over the domestic clutter of an ordinary day.

Cralan Kelder's writing is delightfully intoxicating and fresh -- his pungent perspectives enliven the world.

Naomi Shihab Nye

Unlike many of his contemporaries, Cralan Kelder does not employ his poems as armatures for hidebound rhetoric or as floorshows for linguistic acrobatics, but cleaves instead to immediacy's insistence with words and thought-tropes that sparkle like the many facets of everyday consciousness, in a teleological real-time that is both arresting and fluxional. Give Some Word gives us all that and more.

I once met the kind and tremendous poet Cralan Kelder. This was in Amsterdam. Let's go have a drink, said Cralan; OK, I said. We had some drinks at a bar, and then we went to a smaller bar and had some more. After this, we went to a bar that was even smaller yet, and we kept on drinking, and thus the night continued, in progressively smaller bars, until at some fantastical hour we sat there, facing one another, in a kind of tiny dark bar-closet that smelled of hashish, our knees pressing up against each others', our faces nearly touching. I felt by this time a bit disoriented and numb, but Cralan held forth, a true gentleman, laughing uproariously and discoursing brilliantly about Olson, Dutch poetry of the 17th century, dike technology, and whatnot. Let's go to another bar, said Cralan; OK I said, and so we went out into the dawn, and I wondered to myself how in the world there could be a bar tinier than the one from which we had just come. And as I was wondering this, I fell into a canal and began to splash about, yelling Help me, and that is the last I recall. Thank you, Cralan Kelder, for pressing your lovely mouth against mine, and bringing me back to life, in Holland.

JENNIFER KARMIN's text-sound epic, Aaaaaaaaaaalice, was published by Flim Forum Press in 2010. She curates the Red Rover Series and is co-founder of the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise. Her multidisciplinary projects have been presented at festivals, artist-run spaces, community centers, and on city streets across the U.S., Japan, and Kenya. A proud member of the Dusie Kollektiv, she is the author of the Dusie chapbook Evacuated: Disembodying Katrina. Walking Poem, a collaborative street project, is featured online at How2. In Chicago, Jennifer teaches creative writing to immigrants at Truman College and works as a Poet-in-Residence for the public schools. http://aaaaaaaaaaalice.blogspot.com

KATH DUFFY is a writer who co-founded the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise in 2001 to forge alliances with other artists, activists, community groups, and the general public. Expanding on collaboration as political force, Kath initiated the organizing efforts of the Dill Pickle Food Coop in late 2005, and is currently serving her second three year term on the board of directors. Kathleen earns her keep as the Communications Organizer for the Campaign for Better Health Care and is a member of the concert production staff of the Old Town School of Folk Music.

DAN GODSTON teaches and lives in Chicago. His writings have appeared in Chase Park, After Hours, BlazeVOX, Versal, Beard of Bees, Drunken Boat, 580 Split, Kyoto Journal, Eratica, The Smoking Poet, Horse Less Review, Moria, Apparatus Magazine, EOAGH, Requited Journal, Sentinel Poetry, and other print publications and online journals. His poem "Mask to Skin to Blood to Heart to Bone and Back" was nominated by the editors of 580 Split for the Pushcart Prize. He also composes and performs music, and he works with the Borderbend Arts Collective to organize the annual Chicago Calling Arts Festival.

Kaia Sand: Poetry & Magic in Portland, Oregon: 1 December

---

for those in and around Portland, Oregon...

?Econ Salon? to mix magic, poetry, & storytelling exploring housing foreclosures

Event: An Econ Salon (?The Magician Who Puffed Up Money that Lost its Puff?? a magic show & story, followed by a talk on housing foreclosures) Date & Time: Wed. Dec. 1, 7PM-9PM Location: Field Works (storefront on corner of SW11th & Jefferson, downtown Portland) Contact: Kaia Sand ([redacted])

Internationally acclaimed whistler and magician Mitch Hider is collaborating with Kaia Sand to tell a tale of financial fiasco, ?The Magician Who Puffed Up Money that Lost its Puff? through magic, whistling, and storytelling on Wed., Dec 1, at 7 PM. at the Field Work gallery (the corner of S.W. 11th Avenue & Jefferson in downtown Portland). The performance will be followed by a talk by Angela Martin, executive director of Economic Fairness Oregon, on the housing foreclosure crisis and current organizing efforts.

The evening event will also include a screening of an 8-minute video, It?s a Wonderful Time to Buy, and ongoing installation projects by Jennifer Hardacker (Sheltered?a video) and David Buuck (?Matta Clark Park Series??a poster project). The evening?s events will end by 9PM.

The structure of this event is an Econ Salon, a format launched in 2008 blending economic talks with cultural performances. The event is part of the Happy Valley Project, an ongoing poetic investigation of housing foreclosures and financial speculation by Kaia Sand http://thehappyvalleyproject.wordpress.com/

The Happy Valley Project will reside in Field Works (SW 11th & Jefferson) from Monday, Nov. 29-Sat. Dec. 4. Aside from the Dec. 1 evening performance, the space will be open during the day for the installation projects.

Sheltered, by Forest-Grove based experimental video-maker Jennifer Hardacker, illuminates the inside of a shell with video images of boys, who share their ideas of their dream homes. Oakland-based David Buuck?s ?Matta Clark Park Series? is a poster project claiming various off-limits public and private spaces as conceptual parks.

Field Work is located in a former downtown storefront. A collaboration between PSU?s MFA in Contemporary Art and Graphic Design programs, Field Work is a platform for students, artists and curators to engage and collaborate directly with the public. www.fieldworkspace.org.

Field Work will be open to the public for the Happy Valley Project Monday Nov. 29, 10AM-1PM; Tuesday, Nov. 30, 10AM-3PM, Wednesday, 6PM-9PM; Thursday, 10AM-3PM, Friday, 10PM-1PM & 4PM-7PM, and Sat. 10AM-1PM, and by appointment ([redacted])

Bios for Dec. 1 Econ Salon Mitch Hider is a long-time professional musical whistler and vaudeville-style performer. He is in the National Whistlers Hall of Fame and is a noted historian of whistling; he has given talks about the history, using vintage recordings. Mitch whistles, sings, yodels and scats; he does standards, jazz, show tunes, sacred, western, novelty, international and more. He does opera parody and a humorous magic show. He plays ukulele, harmonica, drums and other novelty instruments. He uses a table of hats and props. Mitch?s shows have a lot of humor, but he also does church programs and has whistled at many funerals. He once whistled with ?Bertha the Harmonica-Playing Elephant.?

Angela Martin is the director of the Economic Fairness Coalition of Our Oregon, where she focuses her legislative advocacy and policy work on predatory lending, credit and debt issues. Prior to working with Our Oregon, Angela was part of the Oregon Food Bank?s public policy team, providing research and analysis on state and federal policy issues affecting low-income Oregonians. Angela?s professional career in policy research and legislative advocacy is supplemented with years of political organizing experience gained on state and local electoral campaigns.

Kaia Sand is a poet and essayist who explores contexts that exceed the book. Supported by a Regional Arts and Culture Council project grant, she is currently working on the Happy Valley Project, a multi-media poetry project investigating foreclosures and financial speculation. Her book, Remember to Wave (Tinfish Press 2010) investigates political geography in North Portland, which takes the form of a poetry walk. She is also the author of a poetry collection, interval (Edge Books 2004), and co-author with Jules Boykoff of Landscapes of Dissent: Guerrilla Poetry and Public Space (Palm Press 2008). Sand has created several chapbooks through the Dusie Kollektiv, which also published her wee book, lotto. Her poems comprise the text of two books in Jim Dine's Hot Dreams series (Steidl Editions 2008).

Bios for ongoing installations

David Buuck is the author of The Shunt (Palm Press, 2009) and numerous small-press chapbooks and pamphlets. He is the founder of BARGE (the Bay Area Research Group in Enviro-aesthetics). The Matta-Clark Memorial Parks Posters are named after Gordon Matta-Clark, who in the 1970s bought up un-used property-slices in New York as part of his ?Fake Estates? project, re-framing these ?odd lots? as found public art. In this ongoing project, BARGE hopes to claim various off-limits public and private spaces as conceptual parks, in order to reframe and highlight how space gets cordoned and fenced off from the public, and how the ?enviro-aesthetics? of the urban landscape tends to reinforce such divides. (More information can be found here: http://www.davidbuuck.com/barge/mattaclarkparks/index.html) see: http://buuckbarge.wordpress.com/ and davidbuuck.com/barge

Jennifer Hardacker is an experimental short film/video maker and educator. She has been making films and videos for over 13 years and her films have screened widely in festivals across the US. Her films are interested in re-imaging and re-imagining the meaning and context of images. Currently, Hardacker teaches film/video studies and production at Pacific University in Oregon. Prior to life in the Northwest, she taught film at the University of Michigan and The New School University in New York City. She also spent time working professionally in New York as an editor and assistant editor of television commercials, short films and music videos.

Cormac McCarthy from a 1992 NY Times interview: "The ugly fact is books are made out of books," he says. "The novel depends for its life on the novels that have been written." His list of those whom he calls the "good writers" -- Melville, Dostoyevsky, Faulkner -- precludes anyone who doesn't "deal with issues of life and death." Proust and Henry James don't make the cut. "I don't understand them," he says. "To me, that's not literature. A lot of writers who are considered good I consider strange."

Re: Images of Women in Literature
Wed 24 Nov 2010

It depends on how you want to teach it. For example, each institution in the California CC and CSU systems must offer a course entitled "Women in Literature" which was originally built around a pretty lame anthology of the same name; NOW it is built around some weird Jungian-archetype approach. Luckily, people weren't forced to use the syllabus or bibliography, so some writers who teach in the non-UC public system, like Leilani Hall, Kate Haake, and me, are able to teach really innovative courses that follow the general description.

It seems as though you're in the same situation -- that you can use whatever you want. I always choose source texts over anthologies, or more than one dover anthology over a fat one, because they are inexpensive. Of course at least 1/2 the course is going to be things in the public domain, so you can choose which free ones you want your students to use.

So how ARE you teaching it? Burlesque?

I always used literature and art made by women as a limiting factor.

All best,
Catherine Daly

Re: Give Some Word - new poetry book
Wed 24 Nov 2010

hi michael,

yes, the same in the vernacular where i come from - bagging means to take a dig at somebody.

I think you are right - taken as a whole, the poem excerpted & the quotes take a swipe at inaccessible poetry. That was not consciously the intention when putting this together, but now I read it the same as you.

The poem quoted is bagging on poetry books that are described as "an important contribution" on the back cover. There is more bagging in the book too; on prissy signs, war-mongers, cars, roadkill, etc. Obviously there is a lot more going on in the book too, but there are definitely undertones of contrariness.

I would agree with you that positive sentiments are in general more preferable. It may be bad form to define yourself by differentiating negatively from others. and yet I come back to the book's poetic bent; to write pieces that may appear simple on the surface & do not confound.

it also has to do with my literary heroes, writing that makes me excited - unpretentious straight-forward writing that appears simple, until you try & write like that yourself.

The blurbs / quotes and critical tone are my responsibility in the sense that the authors who wrote the blurbs are picking up on my sentiments towards inaccessible poetry. The discussion gets interesting for me now, as I realise that what you say is true, that this particular book is also many years in the making; a reaction to a lot of poetry i read in the past 20 years, so that the reactionary nature of the blurbs is perhaps accurate

i would hope for it to be more of a positive reaction to the styles that I like, as opposed to just bagging on what didn't speak to me.

So to ask the next logical question: isn't writing poetry a reaction to the reading that has gone on before - and don't we incorporate our likes and dislikes in what we write & omit?

im just expressing my dislike for critics having a generalised swipe - esp when that is not the task at hand .. &, just asking - is it possible to define (again in naive sex & city fashion) its (a book's) positive attributes, without referring to what its not

hmm, agreed.

one clarification: by (bagging) do you mean bagging somebody as in getting somebody to write a blurb, or bagging somebody as in bagging on somebody?

the truth of the matter is that i was in painstakes addressing the whole blurb thing. it's a trend in the publishing workplace and who am I to protest?

I couldnt quite bring myself to include the blurbs in the book itself, so they are only here for your reading pleasure, and not in the book itself.
I figured that after badgering everybody to write one, the least I could do was use them somewhere.

none of my favorite (poetry) books have blurbs anywhere near them, with the exception of Jargon Society books, with those irreverent brilliant observations by the master jonathan williams and what is written on the flaps of those books.

these particular blurbs below are meant to find a place in those veins

so, michael, what do you think a blurb should do? Im sure this discussion has been here before (?) I just wasnt around at the time to read it...

With great pleasure to announce to the poetics list the availability of another book of poems!

Give Some Word is 90 pages of poetry. The collection traces a narrative of irreverence humor & beauty by foot across cities and mountains on 3 continents.

Now out from Shearsman, click for ordering, etc:
http://www.shearsman.com/pages/books/catalog/2010/kelder.html

A is for Accessible. Give Some Word is a somewhat irreverent book of poems. Kelder believes that people who read poetry should be delighted, not confused. Poems are not riddles. The poetry in Give Some Word is no exception; equal parts distilled language, contrary, and pushing everyday language out of conformity.

Some apparent influences; Carver, Brautigan, Corman, Sakaki, Lax, the Jargon Society and a hundred others. The collection includes work from publications over the past 10 years by Coracle, Longhouse, Blue Press, and many generous magazine editors.

On Using the Word 'Important'
to Describe Poetry

I found some good poems,
faxed them right over

to a colleague of mine.
The boss came in and asked me,
“What are these?
What’s this all about?”
“They’re poems,” I explained
“I thought they were very important, Sir,
and that as many people
as possible should see them.”

What people are saying:

When I first read the first poems by Cralan Kelder before assembling what became Lemon Red, I had remarked to myself that in the best ones, he was a kind of urban Gary Snyder. Later, he showed me notes written in the margins of the manuscript of some of those poems, indeed by Snyder himself.
He had taken a class with him in California, and his comments were almost identical to what I had said about the poems. Later still, Synder denied ever meeting Kelder or writing about his poems.

Simon Cutts

Like Buddhist koans it makes no sense to try and unpick how Kelder's best poems work: they just do. The language, concept and experience are all one.

Kelder is a morning poet, he's up before the sun to make raspberry tea and politicise his croissants, hoping he'll be the next in line for the sun's address - after Mayakovsky and O'Hara - but in the mean time his delight is in sharing his observations (the autobahn, the finches) through his art. The clarity of his address occupies the place where language is thought, speech poetry where all pretence is stripped. These are real the poems of a poet drifting his mind over the domestic clutter of an ordinary day.

Cralan Kelder's writing is delightfully intoxicating and fresh -- his pungent perspectives enliven the world.

Give Some Word gives us all that and more.*

We had some drinks at a bar, and then we went to a smaller bar and had some more. After this, we went to a bar that was even smaller yet, and we kept on drinking, and thus the night continued, in progressively smaller bars, until at some fantastical hour we sat there, facing one another, in a kind of tiny dark bar-closet that smelled of hashish, our knees pressing up against each others', our faces nearly touching. I felt by this time a bit disoriented and numb, but Cralan held forth, a true gentleman, laughing uproariously and discoursing brilliantly about Olson, Dutch poetry of the 17th century, dike technology, and whatnot. Let's go to another bar, said Cralan; OK I said, and so we went out into the dawn, and I wondered to myself how in the world there could be a bar tinier than the one from which we had just come. And as I was wondering this, I fell into a canal and began to splash about, yelling Help me, and that is the last I recall. Thank you, Cralan Kelder, for pressing your lovely mouth against mine, and bringing me back to life, in Holland.*

It depends on how you want to teach it. For example, each institution in the California CC and CSU systems must offer a course entitled "Women in Literature" which was originally built around a pretty lame anthology of the same name; NOW it is built around some weird Jungian-archetype approach. Luckily, people weren't forced to use the syllabus or bibliography, so some writers who teach in the non-UC public system, like Leilani Hall, Kate Haake, and me, are able to teach really innovative courses that follow the general description.

It seems as though you're in the same situation -- that you can use whatever you want. I always choose source texts over anthologies, or more than one dover anthology over a fat one, because they are inexpensive. Of course at least 1/2 the course is going to be things in the public domain, so you can choose which free ones you want your students to use.

So how ARE you teaching it? Burlesque?

I always used literature and art made by women as a limiting factor.

All best,
Catherine Daly

Fwd: The appeal and in the attachment "I'm Liu Xiaobo" in chinese for the readings on march 20th

Fri 26 Nov 2010

Hi all,

Please see the below, and a (belated) Happy Thanksgiving. I can't send the attachments (they're automatically rejected by the listserv), but please feel free to message me backchannel if you'd like them.

All best,

E

http://ericqweinstein.blogspot.com/

---------- Forwarded message ----------

*We'd be grateful if you would please forward this letter to other institutions and persons who might be interested in participating in this event. *

* * Freedom for Liu Xiaobo

*The internationales literaturfestival berlin appeals for a signing of this letter and a worldwide reading on 20th March 2011 of the ‘Charter 08’ and the poem

‘You wait for me with Dust’ by Liu Xiaobo, Nobel Peace Prize laureate for 2010.

Liu Xiaobo is currently the world’s only winner of the Nobel Peace Prize still held in detention. In 2009, after co-authoring ‘Charter 08’, a manifesto calling for greater freedoms and democracy in China, Liu Xiaobo was sentenced to eleven years in prison on a spurious charge of “inciting subversion of state power”. His continued imprisonment is a basic breach of human rights, and also a violation of China’s own constitution where Article 35 states that “Citizens of the People’s Republic of China enjoy freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly, of association, of procession and of demonstration”.

1936 was the last time neither the winner, German journalist and pacifist Carl von Ossietzky, nor any of his family members, could go to Oslo to collect the Nobel Peace Prize. They were all barred from leaving Nazi Germany. This historical comparison should disturb the Chinese government

China has made extraordinary economic progress over the last few decades. The country is now the world’s second largest economy, and a powerful player on the global stage. China is rightly proud of these achievements, but it should also value democracy.

The preamble to ‘Charter 08’ states that “Chinese citizens are becoming increasingly aware that freedom, equality, and human rights are universal values shared by all humankind, and that democracy, republicanism, and constitutional government make up the basic institutional framework of modern politics. A “modernization” bereft of these universal values and this basic political framework is a disastrous process that deprives people of their rights, rots away their humanity, and destroys their dignity. Where is China headed in the 21st century? Will it continue with this “modernization” under authoritarian rule, or will it endorse universal values, join the mainstream civilization, and build a democratic form of government?”[i]

Now is China’s chance to take a magnanimous step towards democracy. China can do this immediately – by showing pride that one of its citizens, Liu Xiaobo, has received the world’s greatest award in recognition of a struggle to uphold human rights. This award should be an honour for China, too.

In 2005, Liu Xiaobo wrote: “*Didn't they say that China was in a golden moment of historical peak, and that the state of human rights is at the very best?Didn't they say that the present government wants to treat "the people as the foundation" in order to build a "harmonious society"? Then why is the government which has built the golden and almighty China so panicky? Why in this "harmonious society" in which "the people are the foundation" are I and other dissidents treated like trash to be stomped upon? Why must the

"harmonious society" be constructed only with police officers posted at stations?*”[ii]

It does not befit a great country to denounce the Nobel Peace Prize, expand the restrictive security net around a peace laureate to include his friends and relatives, and persuade foreign diplomats to boycott the prize ceremony. Since the prize announcement, there has been no let-up in the harassment of Liu’s family and supporters, and all others attempting free speech activities in China. Liu Xiaobo’s wife, Liu Xia, is under house arrest. Several Chinese human rights activists have been prevented from leaving the country in case they go to Oslo, and Liu’s brothers are pessimistic about their chances of being able to travel in his place.

Chinese citizens make up one fifth of the world’s population. Liu Xiaobo’s case is not the story of one man: he is a symbol of the aspirations and treatment of 1.3 billion people.

The call for worldwide readings of ‘Charter 08’, and Liu Xiaobo’s poem ‘You Wait for me with Dust’, signify support for the campaigner, and a call for his release from prison.

A courageous activist all his life, Liu Xiaobo once wrote that “in a dictatorial country, open letters signed by individuals or groups form an important method for the civilians to resist dictatorship and fight for freedom.”[iii] And so we, citizens of the world, sign this appeal – some with our names, and many, many more with our voices, which will be raised on 20th March 2011 to read Liu’s words – and show solidarity with him, and others in China, who are not free to say what they want.

We will continue to speak up until there is an end to the unjust incarceration of Liu Xiaobo, and others like him.

To sign this appeal, please reply to this email before 1st of December 2010, giving the following information:

The appeal, together with a list of signatories, will be published around the world on 10th of December, the day of the Nobel Prize ceremony.

Part of the power of McCarthy's writing is the ruthless way he sticks to his ideas. He does not wander. It does not surprise me that he reads that way too, although Melville does a great deal of wandering.

i couldn't help laughing at the quotes from cormac mccarthy-- the two most predictable possible of al writers for a writer wishing to be taken as a tough guy to put down are--proust and james-- who, with their complex styles, for the most upper class characters, "effete" psychological approach and "decadence"--are often setup as stereotypes of everything the tough guy writer is NOT--as a "man" and as a writer-- (after all, part of the stereotype is that Proust and James are--one gay, the other often thought to be -- -- a kind of "manly" homophobia is considered to be "healthy & necessary" for the kind of image mr mccarthy is deliberately trying to project here--)

Many thanks Carol Dorf for your comments re the violence in Flannery O'Connor & Eudora Welty-- one could add Carson McCullers to this list--

i also liked the insight, noting the "close-in" violence in O'Connor & Welty (and i wd add McCullers--)--as last night i saw reruns of the old dick cavett interviews with Alfred Hitchcock and the director, using the way that the shower scene in "Psycho" is shot and edited using 78 close in pieces of film to create effects that no long shots nor long held shots can create--that is, by bringing the eye of the viewer, the presence of the viewer, close-in right into the shower and next to the knife the curtain, the water, the tub, he tiny fragments as seen close in of the woman's body--this creates the effect of "being there" that makes the scene so effectively horrifying and violent, makes the viewer feel so violated in terms of its being "close-in" to the viewer also--"as though you, too, are there"-- no offense to mr mccarthy who is a greatly admired writer as it is--but his pose in the quote is such an already old nostrum--reeking of way too many boozy such statements have heard since a kid and first ran into from the mouths of the junior hemingway's and bukokwsi's--

actually re the strangeness of james that mccarthy notes--jorge luis borges has a remarkable short piece re james in which he notes that he is one of the strangest of al writers in terms of the subjects he creates--in fact borges notes and lists the incredible range of new subjects and genres that james came up with--noting also that james struck him (Senor Borges)--as a denizen of Hell with an incredible sense of irony!-- (Hell being this world--)

"real issues of life and death"--if one defines such things as "real" only if they are violent-- i have heard this argument also since kid--and wonder about it often--as i live in the midst of a lot of violence and certainly a lot of my writing and art work deals with violence of al sorts-- the argument being that violence alone guarantees a certain kind of "authenticity"-- that violence is as it were, a more literally and figuratively "red-blooded" dose of "reality" than anything else in human experience-- (hence the incredible proliferation and popularity of violent TV show of the "reality" kind based on or recording crimes, prisons, cops, forensics, etc-- or as the Tru Channel puts it, to top reality shows-!!-- "NOT REALITY. ACTUALITY"- which has lead me to write some things re what exactly are the boundaries separating "reality" from "actuality" when one is dealing with the "docu-drama"-- seriously--i think it is a once a hilarious and a metaphysical/philosophical question, and in terms of creating art works with these things in mind-- what ways might one come up with to present these "differences" beyond the semantic levels, the catchy phrase "appearance"?--

mr mcarthy's statements--as "stateMEANTs" say--re writing and ciolence--i think about often as my own life and writing are in midst of, are often "concerned with/about"--violemce and its relationships now only with "reality" of "life and death" but the imagination in relation with these--which as a writerof fiction--mr mcarthy is involved with as much as with the "real life matters of life and death"--how the "reality/actuality" and the "fictions" the imaginations--of these-- so--what about this question of "authenticity" when one is dealing with it in terms of,as, fiction, as works of "power & the imagination" as William Blake puts it----

after all, if one is working in fiction and dealing with "real life" "matters of life and death"--is that what/why Mr M "needs to" as it were--stake a claim for "authenticity"--becuase there is a fear that "fiction" somehow is NOT "authenticate" enough wihout resorting to violence?--and, the more violent it is, the more "authenticate" itis?--i think about this question becuase obvisouly the fictional violence in the El Colonel stories are of a different kind than the "actual" violence with which i am familiar--and even the pieces i have written which use a lot of the violence i have experienced, witnessed, first hand--the question seems not to be the "authencity" or the need to assert a pose that they are somehow "more real" because of this--but what questions arise are ones more of the nature of the means which one uses to express these, and the realization just how much the imagination does enter in--and how much it must enter in for mr mccarhy--this makes the question of the "strange" which mr mccarthy finds so necessary to note--an interesting one in terms of why it is certain subjects, genres, are associated with certain tones, styles, of writing--and so, are supposed to "rule out"as it were, anything "strange" to them--instead of investigating how one might not make use of a as many possible forms of the "strange"--including al manner of forms of "estrangement" to wreak violence on the forms themselves which are supposed to, apparently, in mr mccarthy's statements, alone be qualified to present violence in an "authentic" way, that is to say, as "real life" matters of "life and death"-- if one approaches the question from this point of view--then what mr mcarhy is saying is that ceratin genres of writing, certain ways of thinking about "life and death" have to be protected as it were, from the "strange"-- in a sense, the author feels the need to "protect and defend" the Homeland of his particular form of writing, his particular way of presenting himself as a writer, his especial kind of reader and reading-- in this regard one might do wel to turn to the famous essay by Raymond Chandler on "The Simple Art of Murder" in which he presents the differences between the British form of the detective story, the British--and British-influenced American--forms of detetecive and crimes and ways the detective goes about solving the crimes--as opposed to the American Hard Boiled School/Style/Genre, which grew out of the early Pulp magazines such as the Black Mask, in which writers such as Mr Chandler and Dashiell Hammett, Cornell Woolrich aka William Irish, David Goodis, Chester Himes, Jim Thompson ad gloriam first began publishing and defining the style and genre, (as well as those writers influenced by them such as James M Cain, the Faulkner of the early novels and The Wild Palms & the early William S Burroughs of Junkie & writers in Europe such as the Camus of L'Etranger)--Chanlder develops very succinctly his theis and winds up creating--for his onw fictions--the paradoxically Romantic and Arthurian Romance influenced image the "tough dick" known as Philip Marlowe who "down these mean streets must go"--(btw Henry James was one of Chandler's own favorite authors--)--this brillaint piece by Chanlder presents an eampleof the complexity of the at first apparently "vioent and crude" distinctions between the British style and what Chanlder rightly knew to be a compeltley new form of writing, yet one which he links in matters of his own sense of morality to the kinds of writing which Mr M finds "strange"-- the point being that the creation of writing dealing with violence and "life and death" etc in a "red-blooded" way can draw as much on the "strange" as on any kind of writing and writers-- hence the question re the Homeland Security attitude Mr McCarthy re protecting from the "strange" "life and death" matters in terms of writing and writing- which brings one back books being created from books--why it is that a writer might want to assert that in creating certain kinds of books one can draw on only certain kinds of previous books and writers-- just as in certain forms of poetry writing various forms of the "strange" in terms of subject matter, influences, writers, styles, etc--need to be excluded and so be "protected from" as it were--implying a certain kind of Terror at work--making one wonder why this "needs to be"--not simply the "anxiety of influence" so much as the sheer Terror of the influence, contamination by, the "strange" however that "strange" is perceived to be-- the Terror implying in turn a Puritanism of sorts--the need to "purify the language of the tribe" in ways not always consistent with hose envisioned by Mallarme in his famous statement-- the irony being that a "tough guy" pose as writer and as forms of writing--should be Terrorized-- in which case Mr McCarthy's statements might be extended in considering all manner of literary "wars" and "battles"--"quarrels"--in which case a considerable violence does ensue in connection with protecting certain forms, certain genres, certain writers, certain conceptions of the Author, of Writing, of Poesy, Poetics etc-because they for one reason or antoher feel threatened by what is considered "strnage," "different" in the particular context--often revealing a kind of contradiction between concepts of "contestation" when finding themselves contested-- in a way the, the fear, the Terror, of the contamination of the "purity" of a genre, of an author's conception of themselves and so on--extneds to a fear of change--a desire to maintain a status quo--within various "literary bounds"--literally * figuratively

last week while i was in the midst of working on yet more pieces in my"El Colonel" series (the latest appearance of which is, from yesterday, at Jerome Rothenberg's poets and poetics blog--this is part one of three which is appearing there, with the next one to have some links to other pieces and a note appended to it by way of a little "background" to the series--wd be glad to share with anyone interested a bibliography of all the pieces so far --9 or 10 now--on line which compiled for Jerome Rothenberg as a reference & background as the being of El Colonel and the styles, forms of writing of the pieces--are not static, are rhizomatic and so are not linear in order, nor are of a "character" nor related with an "author" in any usual sense of these----) poemsandpoetics.blogspot.com -- while writing away with El Colonel--my then apt mate entered with someone i didn't see--and within moments--this was way past curfew--sounds of violent sex exploding through the walls--just as i was dialing the manager my apt mate burst in my room screaming "call the muthafuckin police! i've been stabbed !!! and robbed!!"--a slow night here for once--so six squad cars two ambulances and a fie truck arrived and loads of uniformed men and women pouring into the tiny apt--as the tale was slowly sorted through via the varying accounts my apt mate gave it became apparent that he brought home a six foot tal two hundred plus pound man dressed as a woman in blonde wig, tight pants bright orange jacket and high leather boots with heels--apparently my apt mate's "thang being such companionship and according to the ops the bar--i used to go there in late afternoon unadvertised as no longer legal "happy hours"--during relapses while living at the adjacent now closed down red cross place for homeless--where my apt mate had gone being after midnight a hang out for cross dressing gay male prostitutes--learn something new everyday as it were --fortunately the stab wounds requiring only about four stitches, being short and superficial--al the same my apt ate turned out to have some crimes against his wife of quite some violence, so off he went to prison and hospital while the cops started their search for the man in the blonde wig -- just a week or so before these events i had been walking down the street to store to get some smokes and saw two men run up behind another--and "cap"him--shoot him down--and run away--on my way back from the store about five minutes later--the body stil lay in the street--no police as yet--and some persons in various buildings' windows peering out carefully from behind drawn blinds-- that particular street and lock in the last months has been the site of many shootings, often, as the one i witnessed was, in broad daylight-- reading the cormac mccarthy quote i thought of these things as in re my own writing which mixes violence and poetry scenes, questions, questions re writing which obsess el colonel who himself lives in the midst of violence, guerrilla war fare, counter insurgency etc-- and creates writings which particpate in the non-

materilizationof writing, as something which emerges and yet is also part of the "Writing of the No"--compostions which emerge ouf ot decomposition, death deay-- and, given that many of my non-el colonel stories are about actual events witnessed through the years of primarily drug related violence--(as the shooting most likely was--)--(the events in the apt were booze related as after the final police photographer had left a good near two hours after the actaul ten second long event--we found in cleaning up a huge bottle of brandy--and the meeting of the two men had taken place at bar--)-- thinking about these reading cormac mccarthy's quote-- again, i come back to the notion expressed by the writer that there is somehow more "authenticity" to be gained by the depiction of violence than there is in the writings of a proust or james--who are "strange"-- as certainly thereis much violence in both those writers' works--the violence being simply of different kinds than the direct physical sort for the mos part--though as i recal--(my memory may well be fualty here as is some time ago i read the book--)-- le Baron Charlus participated in sado-masochist events that ceratinly included physical violence of a particalr kind--yet--as torturers know--psychological violence can be every bit as extreme as direct physical assault--and so the charcters in proust and james often undergo severe degrees of violence-- which in turn makes me wonder--knowing little about mr mccarthy--how much violence has he experienced in hislife and of what kinds, how muh witnessed--how many people seen actually killed?--(without being in a war i have seen roughly a dozen/dozen and half through the years dispatched by means of violence--some at the hands of the Law too for sure--)-- i wonder about it becuase many writers who have not necesarilywitnessed violence create incredibly violent scenes--and write a great deal about the maoral universe of violence, the psychological cosmos of this--and to very great effect--that is, they makeone think about the QUESTION, QUESTIONS which violence raises every moment in every part of the world--

my wondering & point re McCarthy--which means i have to now go read his books, really,-- and read interviews etc to find out for myself what he is abt--is simply why fall back on such hackneyed claims as he makes, why feel the need to strike the tough guy pose by picking out all the old stereotypes and "usual suspects"--with al the implicit homophobia on display?-and al the usual claims re kinds of "authenticity" in re "questions of life and death"-- it seems to be a question more of genre than an individual--that is, to fit the bill so to speak of a writer of violence, one "has to ""distance oneself" from the worlds of writers like proust and james--(who in turn are associated with being read by certain "types" of readers, "effete intellectuals & esthetes" etc--yet further stereotypes denoted as "strange"--)-- and, in turn--as Carol Dorf points out--to distance oneself from the world of "women writers" who are in fact every bit as tough as any hard boiled writer i have read, which is going some as i devour that style of writing-- it raises the question of to what extent does "genre" "determine" the "author" as "critical iterary thinker"-- --implying, in turn, that perhaps writers like proust and james would NOT read writers like McCarthy due not only to their being "strange" but to the genres of fiction they work in being themselves "strange"-- again, authors considered in terms of their genres, which in turn are determinates of the "actual" ("NOT Reality. ACTUALITY"!!--)--being and thought, "lifestyle of the writer"-- using these elements, might one not then create a whole new form of literary criticism and thinking re writing and writers based on the 'PROFILING" of both genres and writers! a kind of "War on Terror" re literature in which the "terrorists" are the "strange" writers and "strange" forms of writing, "strange genres"--complete with levels of "Terror Alerts" marked out in color which has been done with eprson to be sure in the most horrific ways--badges and stars of differing colors denoting various " profiles" of persons--the "look" of "Muslim" persons which "proclaims them" as "suspects" to be detained, renditioned--and that way of looking which in Arizona----completely arbitrary, subjective, relative--which somehow announces to the Law--or a "concerned citizen withe power to make a citizen's arrest"--that they are in the presence of an--or more!!--illegal alien or aliens--) -- bringing one back to the kind of "Terror" which mcarthy expresses in reverse as it were of various kinds of writers, writing, readers and readings- and that somehow this Terror is what makes the particular writers, form of writing and readers and kinds of readings--like himself and his readers--"TOUGH"--and concerned with "real matters of life and death"--becuase they are as it were--on the front lines of the "War on Terror"--defending the Homeland against "strangeness"-- because this "strange" form of writing and writers,or reading and readers--is not "like us"--not "TOUGH on--take your pick--crime, drugs, terror--all those elements which along with poverty which the USA has declared itself to be at war with, to be making war on-- of course-- i am exaggerating and making much ado about a smal quote--but having heard for eons it seems the nearly exact same statements as those McCarthy is making--one can't help but sense in the statements themselves a kind of over the top exaggeration which for some reason "seems necessary" for this particular author, working in a particular genre as it were, to make-- and which, to stay against charges of being "anti-literary"--mentions authors who usually are noted in these kinds of assertions as ones who do use violence and are concerned with "real matters of life and death"--are consdiered, especially Dostoevsky, to be to some degree "philosophers"--"myth makers" and the like--it's intersting to see inthis regard through time which authors have been chosen to represent "real matters of life and death"--as i remeber "Dost" and "Hem" Bukowksi wrote a great deal about in his early stories, esp in Notes of a Dirty Old Man-- all of which goes to show how vast literary cosmos are opened in just a few simple statements--how with a few swift storkes--whole terrains are lit up--of literary criticism, literary history, questions of genre--how even the bellicose assertions of a kind of literary equivalent a barroom brawl provocation--"go to show" as Kaetrs wd say ho much may be made of a dminished thing, hey!-- or that is, perhaps not so much a diminished thing as an attempt to make of certain forms of literary and human "strangeness" a "diminished thing"--

Re: looking for quote
Sun 28 Nov 2010

David,

To explore further your brilliant comments on the relationship between violence, authenticity and strangeness (to which I would add the dimension of time):

On the one hand, one has the aestheticising or sentimentalizing of violence in certain movies (Brian de Palma, Tarantino, etc.) or war propaganda (war as heroism, political speeches, murder as justice, etc, etc.) or where violence gains a certain rhetorical familiarity, normalcy. On the other hand, there is the instantaneousness of violence, as in the case of your apartment mate. It is this suddenness of violence, so matter of fact (only four stitches) which is so strange, devoid of rhetorical palliation because there was no time. (Even the most terrifying earthquakes only take a few seconds.)

What I am talking about here is the banality of violence (subjectively witnessed or undergone) which is strange. In Alain Renais's movie on Holocaust images, Night and Fog? there is a very revealing shot: people who were being carted to concentration camps were moved to the trains in big procession on public roads. In this shot, along with the procession of people being moved, one can see ot)her people (free?) carrying their shopping back on their daily routines.

Both James and Proust explore, delve into that instantaneity. James's baroque (effeminate?) sentences (k. Iskender's "post naked lunch/ panislamic/femininity" souljam) are attempts paradoxically to strip perception of its rhetorical excesses, to reach a kind of authenticity, to experience the the thirty second or so of an earthquake subjectively, strangely, from the inside so to speak --to approximate that connection between violence/dread and infinity. The same way, Proust's endless novel is an attempt to stop the mechanism (familiarity) of time.

Ciao,

Murat

"real issues of life and death"--if one defines such things as "real" only if they are violent-- i have heard this argument also since kid--and wonder about it often--as i live in the midst of a lot of violence and certainly a lot of my writing and art work deals with violence of al sorts-- the argument being that violence alone guarantees a certain kind of "authenticity"-- that violence is as it were, a more literally and figuratively "red-blooded"
dose of "reality" than anything else in human experience-- (hence the incredible proliferation and popularity of violent TV show of the
"reality" kind based on or recording crimes, prisons, cops, forensics, etc-- or
as the Tru Channel puts it, to top reality shows-!!-- "NOT REALITY. ACTUALITY"- which has lead me to write some things re what exactly are the boundaries separating "reality" from "actuality" when one is dealing with the "docu-drama"-- seriously--i think it is a once a hilarious and a metaphysical/philosophical question, and in terms of creating art works with these things in mind-- what ways might one come up with to present these "differences" beyond the semantic levels, the catchy phrase "appearance"?-- mr mcarthy's statements--as "stateMEANTs" say--re writing and ciolence--i think about often as my own life and writing are in midst of, are often "concerned with/about"--violemce and its relationships now only with "reality" of "life and death" but the imagination in relation with these--which as a writerof fiction--mr mcarthy is involved with as much as with the "real life matters of life and death"--how the "reality/actuality" and the "fictions" the imaginations--of these-- so--what about this question of "authenticity" when one is dealing with it in terms of,as, fiction, as works of "power & the imagination" as William Blake puts it----

after all, if one is working in fiction and dealing with "real life"
"matters of life and death"--is that what/why Mr M "needs to" as it which i am familiar--and even the pieces i have written which use a lot of hence the question re the Homeland Security attitude Mr McCarthy re protecting from the "strange" "life and death" matters in terms of writing and writing-which brings one back books being created from books--why it is that a writer might want to assert that in creating certain kinds of books one can draw on only certain kinds of previous books and writers-- just as in certain forms of poetry writing various forms of the "strange"

in terms of subject matter, influences, writers, styles, etc--need to be excluded and so be "protected from" as it were--implying a certain kind of Terror at work--making one wonder why this "needs to be"--not simply the "anxiety of influence" so much as the sheer Terror of the influence, contamination by, the "strange" however that "strange" is perceived to be-- the Terror implying in turn a Puritanism of sorts--the need to "purify the language of the tribe" in ways not always consistent with hose envisioned by Mallarme in his famous statement-- the irony being that a "tough guy" pose as writer and as forms of writing--should be Terrorized-- in which case Mr McCarthy's statements might be extended in considering all manner of literary "wars" and "battles"--"quarrels"--in which case a considerable violence does ensue in connection with protecting certain forms, certain genres, certain writers, certain conceptions of the Author, of Writing, of Poesy, Poetics etc-because they for one reason or antoher feel threatened by what is considered "strnage," "different" in the particular context--often revealing a kind of contradiction between concepts of "contestation" when finding themselves contested-- in a way the, the fear, the Terror, of the contamination of the "purity" of a genre, of an author's conception of themselves and so on--extneds to a fear of change--a desire to maintain a status quo--within various "literary *bounds"--literally * figuratively*

last week while i was in the midst of working on yet more pieces in my"El Colonel" series (the latest appearance of which is, from yesterday, at Jerome Rothenberg's poets and poetics blog--this is part one of three which is appearing there, with the next one to have some links to other pieces
and a note appended to it by way of a little "background" to the series--wd be glad to share with anyone interested a bibliography of all the pieces so far
--9 or 10 now--on line which compiled for Jerome Rothenberg as a reference
background as the being of El Colonel and the styles, forms of writing of the pieces--are not static, are rhizomatic and so are not linear in order, nor are of a "character" nor related with an "author" in any usual sense of these----) poemsandpoetics.blogspot.com

--
while writing away with El Colonel--my then apt mate entered with someone i didn't see--and within moments--this was way past curfew--sounds of violent sex exploding through the walls--just as i was dialing the manager my apt mate burst in my room screaming "call the muthafuckin police! i've been stabbed !!! and robbed!!"--a slow night here for once--so six squad cars two ambulances and a fie truck arrived and loads of uniformed men and women pouring into the tiny apt--as the tale was slowly sorted through via the varying accounts my apt mate gave it became apparent that he brought home a six foot tal two hundred plus pound man dressed as a woman in blonde wig, tight pants bright orange jacket and high leather boots with heels--apparently my apt mate's "thang being such companionship and according to the ops the bar--i used to go there in late afternoon unadvertised as no longer legal "happy hours"--during relapses while living at the adjacent now closed down red cross place for homeless--where my apt mate had gone being after midnight a hang out for cross dressing gay male prostitutes--learn something new everyday as it were --fortunately the stab wounds requiring only about four stitches, being short and superficial--al the same my apt ate turned out to have some crimes against his wife of quite some violence, so off he went to prison and hospital while the cops started their search for the man in the blonde wig -- just a week or so before these events i had been walking down the street to store to get some smokes and saw two men run up behind another--and "cap"him--shoot him down--and run away--on my way back from the store about five minutes later--the body stil lay in the street--no police as yet--and some persons in various buildings' windows peering out carefully from behind drawn blinds--

that particular street and lock in the last months has been the site of many shootings, often, as the one i witnessed was, in broad daylight-- reading the cormac mccarthy quote i thought of these things as in re my own writing which mixes violence and poetry scenes, questions, questions re writing which obsess el colonel who himself lives in the midst of violence, guerrilla war fare, counter insurgency etc-- and creates writings which particpate in the non-materilizationof writing, as something which emerges and yet is also part of the "Writing of the No"--compostions which emerge ouf ot decomposition, death deay-- and, given that many of my non-el colonel stories are about actual events witnessed through the years of primarily drug related violence--(as the shooting most likely was--)--(the events in the apt were booze related as after the final police photographer had left a good near two hours after

actaul ten second long event--we found in cleaning up a huge bottle of brandy--and the meeting of the two men had taken place at bar--)-- thinking about these reading cormac mccarthy's quote-- again, i come back to the notion expressed by the writer that there is somehow more "authenticity" to be gained by the depiction of violence than there is in the writings of a proust or james--who are "strange"-- as certainly thereis much violence in both those writers' works--the violence being simply of different kinds than the direct physical sort for the mos part--though as i recal--(my memory may well be fualty here as is some time ago i read the book--)-- le Baron Charlus participated in sado-masochist events that ceratinly included physical violence of a particalr kind--yet--as torturers know--psychological violence can be every bit as extreme as direct physical assault--and so the charcters in proust and james often undergo severe degrees of violence-- which in turn makes me wonder--knowing little about mr mccarthy--how much violence has he experienced in hislife and of what kinds, how muh witnessed--how many people seen actually killed?--(without being in a war i have seen roughly a dozen/dozen and half through the years dispatched by means of violence--some at the hands of the Law too for sure--)-- i wonder about it becuase many writers who have not necesarilywitnessed violence create incredibly violent scenes--and write a great deal about the maoral universe of violence, the psychological cosmos of this--and to very great effect--that is, they makeone think about the QUESTION, QUESTIONS which violence raises every moment in every part of the world-- my wondering & point re McCarthy--which means i have to now go read his books, really,-- and read interviews etc to find out for myself what he is abt--is simply why fall back on such hackneyed claims as he makes, why feel the need to strike the tough guy pose by picking out all the old stereotypes and "usual suspects"--with al the implicit homophobia on display?-and al

the usual claims re kinds of "authenticity" in re "questions of life and death"-- it seems to be a question more of genre than an individual--that is, to fit the bill so to speak of a writer of violence, one "has to ""distance oneself" from the worlds of writers like proust and james--(who in turn are associated with being read by certain "types" of readers, "effete intellectuals & esthetes" etc--yet further stereotypes denoted as "strange"--)-- and, in turn--as Carol Dorf points out--to distance oneself from the world of "women writers" who are in fact every bit as tough as any hard boiled writer i have read, which is going some as i devour that style of writing-- it raises the question of to what extent does "genre" "determine" the "author" as "critical iterary thinker"--

--implying, in turn, that perhaps writers like proust and james would NOT read writers like McCarthy due not only to their being "strange" but to the genres of fiction they work in being themselves "strange"-- again, authors considered in terms of their genres, which in turn are determinates of the "actual" ("NOT Reality. ACTUALITY"!!--)--being and thought, "lifestyle of the writer"-- using these elements, might one not then create a whole new form of literary criticism and thinking re writing and writers based on the 'PROFILING" of both genres and writers!

a kind of "War on Terror" re literature in which the "terrorists" are the "strange" writers and "strange" forms of writing, "strange genres"--complete with levels of "Terror Alerts" marked out in color which has been done with eprson to be sure in the most horrific ways--badges and stars of differing colors denoting various " profiles" of persons--the "look" of "Muslim" persons which "proclaims them" as "suspects" to be detained, renditioned--and that way of looking which in Arizona----completely arbitrary, subjective, relative--which somehow announces to the Law--or a "concerned citizen withe power to make a citizen's arrest"--that they are in the presence of an--or more!!--illegal alien or aliens--)
bringing one back to the kind of "Terror" which mcarthy expresses in reverse as it were of various kinds of writers, writing, readers and readingsand that somehow this Terror is what makes the particular writers, form of writing and readers and kinds of readings--like himself and his readers--"TOUGH"--and concerned with "real matters of life and death"--becuase they are as it were--on the front lines of the "War on Terror"-- defending the Homeland against "strangeness"-- because this "strange" form of writing and writers,or reading and readers--is not "like us"--not "TOUGH on--take your pick--crime, drugs, terror--all those elements which along with poverty which the USA has declared itself to be at war with, to be making war on-- of course-- i am exaggerating and making much ado about a smal quote--but having heard for eons it seems the nearly exact same statements as those McCarthy is making--one can't help but sense in the statements themselves a kind of over the top exaggeration which for some reason "seems necessary" for this particular author, working in a particular genre as it were, to make-- and which, to stay against charges of being "anti-literary"--mentions authors who usually are noted in these kinds of assertions as ones who do use violence and are concerned with "real matters of life and death"--are consdiered, especially Dostoevsky, to be to some degree "philosophers"--"myth makers" and the like-- it's intersting to see inthis regard through time which authors have been chosen to represent "real matters of life and death"--as i remeber "Dost" > and "Hem" Bukowksi wrote a great deal about in his early stories, esp in Notes of a Dirty Old Man-- > all of which goes to show how vast literary cosmos are opened in just a few simple statements--how with a few swift storkes--whole terrains are lit up--of literary criticism, literary history, questions of genre--how even the bellicose assertions of a kind of literary equivalent a barroom brawl provocation--"go to show" as Kaetrs wd say ho much may be made of a dminished thing, hey!--

JENNIFER KARMIN's text-sound epic, Aaaaaaaaaaalice, was published by Flim Forum Press in 2010. She curates the Red Rover Series and is co-founder of the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise. Her multidisciplinary projects have been presented at festivals, artist-run spaces, community centers, and on city streets across the U.S., Japan, and Kenya. A proud member of the Dusie Kollektiv, she is the author of the Dusie chapbook Evacuated: Disembodying Katrina. Walking Poem, a collaborative street project, is featured online at How2. In Chicago, Jennifer teaches creative writing to immigrants at Truman College and works as a Poet-in-Residence for the public schools.

http://aaaaaaaaaaalice.blogspot.com

KATH DUFFY is a writer who co-founded the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise in 2001 to forge alliances with other artists, activists, community groups, and the general public. Expanding on collaboration as political force, Kath initiated the organizing efforts of the Dill Pickle Food Coop in late 2005, and is currently serving her second three year term on the board of directors. Kathleen earns her keep as the Communications Organizer for the Campaign for Better Health Care and is a member of the concert production staff of the Old Town School of Folk Music.

DAN GODSTON teaches and lives in Chicago. His writings have appeared in Chase Park, After Hours, BlazeVOX, Versal, Beard of Bees, Drunken Boat, 580 Split, Kyoto Journal, Eratica, The Smoking Poet, Horse Less Review, Moria, Apparatus Magazine, EOAGH, Requited Journal, Sentinel Poetry, and other print publications and online journals. His poem "Mask to Skin to Blood to Heart to Bone and Back" was nominated by the editors of 580 Split for the Pushcart Prize. He also composes and performs music, and he works with the Borderbend Arts Collective to organize the annual Chicago Calling Arts Festival.

table of concepts

hi,

a reader recently told me that my table of contents/concepts page was almost a poem all by itself. you ever feel that way?

something i've been meaning to share:

Dec 2 & 4: Vanessa Place in Chicago
Tue 30 Nov 2010

Pilot Light:
The Green Lantern Press / Dear Navigator Conversation Series

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 2nd
Vanessa Place & Jennifer Karmin

7:30-9:30pm
at The Green Lantern Gallery

2542 Chicago Ave -- Chicago, IL free admission
http://thecorpselives.com

Of VANESSA PLACE and Robert Fittermanâ€™s Notes on Conceptualisms, Mary Kelly said, â€œI learned more about the impact of conceptualism on artists and writers than I had from reading so-called canonical works on the subject.â€ Kenneth Goldsmith has called Placeâ€™s Statement of Facts â€œarguably the most challenging, complex and controversial literature being written today.â€ Place is also author of Dies: A Sentence, La Medusa, and The Guilt Project: Rape, Morality and Law, based on her work as an attorney representing indigent sex offenders on appeal. She is co-director of Les Figues Press, and a regular contributor to X-TRA Contemporary Art Quarterly. Her most recent work is available in French by Ã©ditions Ã¨Â®e, as ExposÃ© des Faits and in English, by Blanc Press, as Statement of Facts.

JENNIFER KARMIN has published, performed, exhibited, taught, and experimented with language across the U.S., Japan, and Kenya. She curates the Red Rover Series and is co-founder of the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise. Her multidisciplinary projects have been presented at festivals, artist-run spaces, community centers, and on city streets. Aaaaaaaaaaalice, a text-sound epic, was published by Flim Forum Press in 2010. At home in Chicago, Jennifer teaches creative writing to immigrants at Truman College and works as a Poet-in-Residence for the public schools. She earned her MFA in the Writing Program at SAIC in 2001. http://aaaaaaaaaaalice.blogspot.com

ABOUT PILOT LIGHT:
The writer creates many relationships: with oneself; with oneâ€™s intimate, immediate, and local communities; and with the writing community at-large (earth/space). Pilot Light brings together writers at varying stages of their career for conversations that cross and explore these different relationships. Emerging and established writers each read from their own work and then engage in a discussion that creates an intimate space across genre and career status.

Co-presented by Dear Navigator, The School of the Art Institute of Chicagoâ€™s literary magazine, and The Green Lantern Press. The series is curated by Elizabeth Metzger Sampson.

VANESSA PLACE (see December 2 bio above).

DENISE DOOLEY lives in Rogers Park, Chicago. She reads and writes with the Next Objectivists workshop at Mess Hall. Her chapbook 'Drumptops' will be out this fall from Con/Crescent Press.

ELIZABETH METGER SAMPSON is a writer currently living in Chicago. She is the editor of Dear Navigator, an electronic magazine published by the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

FRED SASAKI is associate editor of Poetry magazine, editor-at-large for the Chicagoan, and a conspirator with the Dil Pickle Club and Homeroom. He has new writing in Artifice, Iowa Review, MAKE, and other places.

LUIS HUMBERTO VALADEZ is a writer, musician, performer, and educator from Chicago Heights, IL. Born and raised in a tense environment riddled with violence, criminal activity, and desperation, he developed a perspectiveâ€”further shaped in his experiences at Columbia College Chicago where he received his BA and Naropa University where he received an MFAâ€”that fueled his first book ("what i'm on," 2009 University of Arizona Press). He currently works as AmeriCorps VISTA Supervisor for Chicago HOPES.

RED ROVER SERIES is curated by Laura Goldstein and Jennifer Karmin. Each event is designed as a reading experiment with participation by local, national, and international writers, artists, and performers. The series was founded in 2005 by Amina Cain and Jennifer Karmin.

A More Disturbing Derrida/ (thinning out the herd), Darwin, the bad type

& if books breed books, do poor people breed more poor people?

This, and other bits of petty, mean Social Darwinism, is something I overheard recently at a downtown D.C. Starbucks. Two guys, both very respectable, ties, 3 piece suits, rolex watches, all that, were casually speaking their minds. Not speaking in hushed tones, but speaking very openly, without the sense that what they had to say was in any way disturbing. This particular Starbucks is not far from the Ian Pei National Gallery building, and only blocks from the J Edgar Hoover, FBI building.

& one guy says in response to the poor breeding the poor comment, this:

"It's not PC to say so, but the HERD needs thinning out."

Am I being paranoid or what? Seriously, that comment, coming from two not so threatening looking executives, has freaked me out. Haunted me. And I really don't think I'm ranting when I say Be Wary of the Ruling Class. Gore Vidal (and he should know) has repeatedly said the same thing.

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

December 2010

178 messages · Wed 1 Dec 2010 – Fri 31 Dec 2010

December 2010 closed the year with the room peering at a future that had half arrived — the dead poet turned into data, the secret document loosed onto the internet, the poem imagined as code. One hundred and seventy-eight messages moved through the list, thin as the whole winter had been, and its scattered currents all pointed the same way: toward the digital condition settling over poetry and its archives, its politics, its very idea of the text. The year ended looking at a machine still assembling itself around the art.

The largest thread was procedural. A discussion of a table of concepts turned over the generative apparatus behind certain poems — the system, the grid, the set of moves a writer works from — one member noting that such method was "a reasonably common practice among New York School poets", the conceptual scaffolding usually kept out of sight. It was poetry considered as something built from a diagram, the text as the output of a procedure, a thoroughly modern way to think about making.

The politics arrived through the leak. As WikiLeaks poured classified cables into public view and its founder faced arrest, the room passed along Michael Moore's pledge to post bail for Julian Assange — the raw document unloosed, information treated as something that wants, by nature, to be free. Against the leak sat the archive: a thread on the Digital Creeley Maps at Stanford, the late master converted into a searchable dataset, the poet's life and letters made queryable, the dead reincarnated as a database.

Underneath ran the smaller signs of the shift — a query on code meshing in poems, the mixing of dialects and registers and even literal code into the line, and a thread named for the future that is half upon us, the room half-excited and half-uneasy at the machine closing in. Poetry as procedure, the archive as data, the document as leak: every current ran digital. The same networks that had drained the list of its members were now remaking the objects the list had always cared about — the poem, the archive, the secret — into things that lived on screens, searchable and copyable and loosed, and the room watched the transformation with the mixed dread of people whose world is being renovated around them while they still live in it.

I have set December down exactly as the archive delivered it — the poem built from a table of concepts, Assange and the loosed cables, Creeley turned into a

Stanford dataset, and the future half arrived — because it was the month the list looked hardest at the digital condition remaking its art from underneath. A room that ends its year discussing the procedures behind a poem, the ethics of the leak, and the reincarnation of its dead master as a queryable map is a room that knows the machine is no longer coming but here, half-built around it, and is doing what it has always done with a new medium: turning it over warily, testing what it will cost, and refusing to pretend the future is not already in the room.

All Together Now - news from New Zealand & Australia
Wed 1 Dec 2010

ALL TOGETHER NOW
A Digital Bridge for Auckland and Sydney, 2010

The New Zealand Electronic Poetry Centre (nzepc) is pleased to announce the completion of its trans Tasman digital bridge project.

We invited contributions to build a digital bridge between Auckland and Sydney as poetry symposiums took place in each city in March and September 2010. In June the first part of the bridge was launched: 50-plus creative contributions, a collaborative digital poem, audio talks and photos from the Auckland symposium. Now the Sydney side launches with 60 creative contributions, a complementary digital collaboration, more audio talks, video readings, photos, and texts of papers and commentary. We present here the multiple traces (text, audio, visuals, poetry, prose) of the year’s trans Tasman exchanges, noting how often the roles of host and guest have flip-flopped, and hoping that they will go on doing so as we move between each other's reading and writing spaces.

Re: table of concepts
Wed 1 Dec 2010

Wallet, published by letterpress (Bloody Twin Books) in the 1990s, opens with a 14-line poem, each line of which is the first line of the subsequent 14 14-line poems. Each line became a site of meditation. I think I realized what I was doing before I was done with the first poem, I can't remember, but the idea arose after remembering having read the table of contents of a Dorn book years before mistakenly as a poem (and I hadn't figured it out until a few intended poems in). _Wallet_, a small book in many ways (15 poems, small physical dimensions), took a year-and-a-half to write. The letter press printing by Brian Richards has largely kept it out of the used book trade. (I.e., impossible to find a copy to buy. . . . and I'm always looking. If anyone wants to sell one, please write: [redacted])

Subject: table of concepts

hi,

a reader recently told me that my table of contents/concepts page was almost a poem all by itself. you ever feel that way?

something i've been meaning to share:

Night Shades / Chris Tysh

Thu 2 Dec 2010

New from United Artists Books

NIGHT SHADES: A Fable for Klara K

by Chris Tysh

Cover by Christian Boltanski

Design by Hazel Blake

80 pages $14 ISBN 0-935992-40-5

"In Tysh's tough, visceral, lacerating text, we bear witness to a surreal poetry for the stage, reminiscent of Buchner, Artaud, Genet, and Heiner Muller. Klara K leads us on an unspeakable journey through the ravages of WWII, while bearing a child who will never know these immensely moving shards of stories except through her mother's anguished memories. NIGHT SCALES is a compassionate, devastating tale of death and survival by those who "...ate the bruises and drank the hurt in a long swallow," and those who still "hoard the pain, like a gift that flowers on a dry stalk." Charles Borkhuis

"Why turn memory into theater? With NIGHT SCALES: A FABLE FOR KLARA K, Chris Tysh threads devastating testimony and playful humor through the question of how we enact, with bodies, as performance, memory's language. Does memory become gesture, dialogue, set design? Is it spoken alone or in the whole community? Using theater as an overarching challenge, how does memory become both song and costume, narrator and chorus, horrors and stage business equally? Developing voices we recognize and grow attached to, NIGHT SCALES moves us through events of the Holocaust seen in the hot and the cold, in mundane songs and fragments of Russian, French and English. But how do we see horrors in language without staging them in real terms, even in our minds? The very best theater works both as play script and as mental mise-en-scene, concretizing the nominal world into bodies, actors, breathing. This is Tysh's fundamental 'rouge limit' as she writes it, on the road which is the melancholy passage of history, where personal stories become an affecting and unforgettable public display." Thalia Field

Jeffers book CFP

Thu 2 Dec 2010

REMINDER

CALL FOR PROPOSALS

The editor of a book collection tentatively called The Wild That Attracts Us: New Critical Essays on Robinson Jeffers invites proposals for essays that evidence the advance in Jeffers scholarship, especially since the publication of the most recent collections in the early- and mid-1990s. Since the publication of those volumes, The Robinson Jeffers Association has prompted a great deal of new work on Jeffers, most especially through their annual academic conferences. Likewise, the founding of Jeffers Studies has proved to be a real stimulus for Jeffers scholarship. Given the enlivened atmosphere of Jeffers scholarship, the time is right for a new collection of essays, one that significantly adds to the body of critical work on Robinson Jeffers.

To that end, proposals are invited for essays that specifically address the critical sea-change of the past two decades, especially as it concerns Jeffers study, including but not limited to: the full advance of ecocriticism; the re-imagining of regionalism as place studies; the continuing development of cultural studies and the new historicism; the development of the New Formalism; the increasingly poignant vector of science and literature; the advances in narratology; the glaring omission of feminist analysis in Jeffers scholarship; the similar dearth of writing about the teaching of Jeffers. The primary audience for this project will be academic, faculty and students primarily at the undergraduate and graduate level; secondary audiences would include the general public, especially given that Jeffers has long maintained an energetic and mindful readership.

Proposals should be 750-1,000 words, include a clear title, highlight a unique contribution to Jeffers scholarship, and provide the editor with an unambiguous argument as to Jeffers' poetry, the critical tactics undertaken by the essay's author, and the significance of the essay to Jeffers scholarship as a whole. The deadline for proposals is December 31, 2010. Proposals may be sent either electronically or in hard copy to the appropriate address below.

Reading by Alissa Nutting - Dec 5, 2pm, Swift Hall
Thu 2 Dec 2010

Fall Reading Series
Reading by Alissa Nutting
Sunday, December 5, 2:00pm
Swift Hall, Room 106

Join us, Sunday, December 5th at 2pm for the third installment of The Renaissance Society's Fall Reading Series, a reading by Alissa Nutting. The reading will take place in Swift Hall in room 106 and will be followed by a reception at The Renaissance Society <http://www.renaissancesociety.org/> (Cobb Hall, 4th Floor) that will include book signing and refreshments.

*This event is FREE and open to the public. *

Nutting's writing has appeared in Tin House, Fence, BOMB, and the fairy tale anthology* My Mother She Killed Me, My Father He Ate Me*. Her short story collection, Unclean Jobs for Women and Girls, was selected by Ben Marcus as winner of the 6th Starcherone Prize.

"Alissa Nutting's stunning debut collection, Unclean Jobs for Women and Girls, reanimates the deadest of dead pans to a state of enameled kabuki solar veneer - a sanctified, sublime, full-throated and full-throttled static panic. These fictions are panoplies of syntactic semantic seismic wonders. Don't look now but you are looking at a sun raised to a higher power, and it's not blinking."

UA Poetry Center Residencies
Thu 2 Dec 2010

Hello,

If you would spread the word about the UA Poetry Center's summer residency program, we'd much appreciate it. I've included the relevant details below, but let me know if you need any more information.

Thanks!

Christy Delehanty

University of Arizona Poetry Center Intern

[redacted]

The University of Arizona Poetry Center in Tucson offers two residencies of two to four weeks between June 1 and August 31, 2011, to a poet and a fiction writer or a nonfiction writer at any stage of their careers. The residents are provided with housing and a weekly stipend of $150 each, but are responsible for their own food, travel, and other expenses. Submit up to 10 pages of poetry or 20 pages of prose, a three-page proposal, and a resume or curriculum vitae with a $20 application fee by February 25. Visit the Poetry Center website for complete guidelines.

(Apologies for any double postings)

Dear friends and colleagues,

My composer/collaborator, Ellen Fishman Johnson, has just posted a few short excerpts on YouTube from This Art Burning, our multi-media performances of music, text and video presented at this year's Philly Fringe Festival in September.The Philadelphia Inquirer reviewer wrote of *This Art Burning: *"And, perhaps, Ellen Fishman-Johnson, one of Philadelphia's lower-key composers, nevertheless left quite a mark on the Fringe <http://topics.philly.com/topic/Fringe> Festival Saturday at the Performance Garage with 90 polished minutes of music/video pieces created in collaboration with poet Michael Heller. All possible combinations of words and music were explored."For those of you who saw the performances and those who may have missed it, the excerpts can be viewed at:

recently a 'poem' of mine was discussed in a prison workshop .. i was later asked about it .. it was a series of numbers that was in a sense in lieu of contents page & page numbers. the (arrangement of the) numbers & accompanying punctuation indicated something about the poems to follow each respective section of the book.. michael

32. CA Conrad
Gay author banned from discussing his opposition to repealing DADT
Fri 3 Dec 2010

Gay author banned from discussing his opposition to repealing DADT.

On Thursday, December 2nd, 2010, CAConrad, author of Deviant Propulsion (Soft Skull Press), The Book of Frank (WAVE Books), and other books, was forbidden to speak on NPR's show Radio Times, hosted by Marty Moss-Coane.

The show's focus was repealing DADT, with guests Tammy Schultz of the US Marine Corps War College, and Tobias Barrington Wolff, a professor of constitutional law at UPenn. The phone lines were open to the public, but when CAConrad spoke with call-screeners his opening remark was, "I am a gay man who is against repealing DADT and I have an online petition called Gays Against Gays in the Military." The screener's abrupt response was, "You're off topic," and hung up. Off topic? Calling back a second time CAConrad very quickly said, "This is not off-topic. And I am opposed to war, which is why I'm opposed to repealing DADT. Three children died every single day of war-related injuries in Afghanistan in 2009, and THAT is not a civil right, killing three children a day." He was abruptly told, "This is not about war and I don't have time to discuss this." Not about war? One of the guests is from the US Marine Corps War College. And since when is the US military not about war? Especially in 2010?

Here is a link to the show: http://whyy.org/cms/radiotimes/2010/12/02/the-effects-of-repealing-don't-ask-don't-tell-according-to-the-pentagon/

Listening to the show it is clear that the guests were in favor of repealing DADT, but not once did anyone mention the illegal wars the US is engaged in at present. When it came time to allow callers onto the show there were openly gay people who fell in line with the guests and their agenda.

CAConrad's online petition GAYS AGAINST GAYS IN THE MILITARY can be seen at this link: http://invasionanniversary.blogspot.com

He is available for discussing the petition, the wars, and the military. If you are interested in interviewing him on or off air, please contact him directly at [redacted], or phone him directly at [redacted]

John Beer is the author of The Waste Land and Other Poems (Canarium, 2010). He has curated a poetâ€™s theater showcase at Links Hall in Chicago, directed Robert Duncanâ€™s Medea at Kolchis, and is editing a special section on poetâ€™s theater for Jacket. He is a staff theater writer at Time Out Chicago.

Daniel Borzutzky is the author of The Book of Interfering Bodies (Nightboat, 2011); The Ecstasy of Capitulation (BlazeVox, 2007); and Arbitrary Tales (Triple Press, 2005). He is the translator of Raul Zuritaâ€™s Song for his Disappeared Love (Action Books, 2010) and Jaime Luis HuenÃºnâ€™s Port Trakl (Action Books, 2008).

Duriel E. Harris is a co-founder of Black Took Collective and a member of Douglas Ewart & Inventions free jazz ensemble. Extending the multivocal experiments of Drag (Elixir Press, 2003), she is currently at work on the AMNESIAC media art project. Her collection Amnesiac: Poems is being released by Sheep Meadow Press this fall.

Jennifer Karminâ€™s multidisciplinary projects have been presented at festivals, artist-run spaces, and on city streets across the U.S., Japan, and Kenya. She curates the Red Rover Series and is co-founder of the public art group Anti Gravity Surprise. Her text-sound epic, Aaaaaaaaaaalice, was published by Flim Forum Press in 2010.

John Keene is the author of Annotations (New Directions) and, with artist Christopher Stackhouse, of Seismosis (1913 Press). He teaches at Northwestern University.

Ruth Margraff is a playwright, librettist, lyricist, and performer. Her writing has been developed and produced internationally, notably in such venues as The Guggenheim Museum and Brooklyn Academy of Music in New York, and The Walker Art Center in Minneapolis. The recipient of four Rockefeller Foundation Multi-Arts commissions, among other honors and awards, she is currently Associate Professor of Writing at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

Jacob Saenz is a graduate of Columbia College Chicago. His work has appeared in Columbia Poetry Review, Inkstains, OCHO, Poetry and other journals. He works at a library and is an associate editor for RHINO.

Don Share is Senior Editor of Poetry magazine. His books include Squandermania (Salt Publishing), Union (Zoo Press), and the forthcoming titles Wishbone (Black Sparrow); a critical edition of Basil Buntingâ€™s poems (Faber and Faber); and Buntingâ€™s Persia (Flood Editions). He has been Poetry Editor of Harvard Review and Partisan Review, Editor of Literary Imagination, and curator of poetry at Harvard University.

Leila Wilsonâ€™s The Hundred Grasses is forthcoming from Milkweed Editions in 2011. Her poems have appeared in A Public Space, Denver Quarterly, Poetry, The Canary, and elsewhere. She teaches at the School of the Art Institute.

Timothy Yu is the author of a chapbook, Journey to the West (Barrow Street), winner of the Vincent Chin Memorial Chapbook Prize from Kundiman, and the critical book Race and the Avant-Garde: Experimental and Asian American Poetry since 1965 (Stanford University Press). He teaches at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Press and author bios

Argos Books
http://www.argosbooks.org/

Argos Books was born one auspicious night in Brooklyn in a little place called Daddy’s. Amidst the din of spinning LPs, under the flatteringly dim lighting, over two beautiful amber pints of Stella, Liz Clark Wessel and I spoke of our mutual passion for small press poetry publishing. Having known (and grown to love) Liz for a few months, I was aware that she had started a small press called Stray Dog Press in Stockholm; I harbored much curiosity about the state of its existence. Liz told me about the process of publishing her first book, S.C. Hahn’s A Sky That is Never the Same, and within moments sparks of enthusiasm were flying, invisibly lighting the cave-like corner in which we sat.

Our decision that eve to rename and revive Stray Dog was cemented further when another brilliant and capable cohort, E.C. Belli joined forces with Liz and me. We three wise ladies all attend Columbia University's Poetry M.F.A. program, and I am grateful to the Fates for bringing us together in such a poetically fertile environment. Argos was the name of Odysseus' faithful canine companion; Argos Books will soon be a faithful companion to readers and lovers of poetry and translation. Poetry that crosses cultural and national borders, hybrid writing, and work by women is of special interest. Interestingly enough, the mission of Argos Books mirrors somewhat the pursuits of Liz, Emily and myself. We are all translators, and have firm footholds in diverse locations (Omaha, Switzerland, New York, Stockholm…). The upcoming summer and fall promise to be exciting and fruitful times for Argos Books. Stay tuned.

"Code Meshing" in Poetry - Examples?
Sat 4 Dec 2010

Greetings,

I am looking for poems that exhibit, or are examples of, "code meshing" in literature, specifically poetry. (Due to access issues, though I shouldn't underestimate our library, online sources would be especially helpful.) We are considering the term "code meshing" in the sense that it is used (but in another context) by S. Michael-Luna & A. Suresh Canagarajah, and others:

"Code meshing is a communicative device used for specific rhetorical and ideological purposes in which a multilingual speaker intentionally integrates local and academic discourse as a form of resistance, reappropriation and/or transformation of the academic discourse."

"Code meshing differs from a more familiar sociolinguistic notion, code switching."

"Code meshing is a social practice which intentionally integrates local and academic discourse in order to index specific discursive,ideological and rhetorical stances of the interlocutor. Code meshing both accommodates the merging of discourses that other scholars have previously discussed, and advances the consideration of lexical, rhetorical and structural hybridity previously unexamined."

"Code meshing suggests that the context is an integral part of the observable interaction and cannot be separated from it."

"Code meshing recognises an integration of multiple codes of language by suggesting that knowledge and linguistic resources are not only integrated or meshed but also include hybrid codes. Code switching, on the other hand, involves items at the lexical or syntactic level and has focused on balanced bilingual language use. Code meshing can also involve single lexical items, but additionally uses broad rhetorical strategies, structural units and considers the full continuum of bilingualism."

"We must distinguish code meshing from code mixing which refers to the inclusion of single lexical items (‘borrowings’) that have become naturalised in the borrowing language. Code meshing also includes mixtures of larger structural and rhetorical units, and symbolises something intentionally ‘marked’ in the dominant language of the text."

"Code switching models of writing propose that bilinguals learn different English varieties and use them in appropriate contexts. Code meshing suggests that students should learn to bring together different codes to serve their purpose. Code meshing suggests that students should have opportunities to re-appropriate the knowledge and linguistic structure of dominant academic discourses into their already rich polylinguistic repertoire. Lexical and grammatical choices can demonstrate a student’s way to convey meaning, index values and norms outside the discourse,or make ideologically-inscribed statements."

(http://www.outreach.psu.edu/programs/rsa/files/multilingual_academic.pdf)

Due to access issues, though I shouldn't underestimate our library, online literary sources representing the above ideas would be especially helpful.

Thank you,
Nick

Question: Looking for new anthologies and books on craft
Sat 4 Dec 2010

Dear poets and teachers:

I'm looking for new anthologies to use in poetry workshops, both contemporary American and World.

Any recommendations on what has worked for you? I tend to use three or four single-author books and one anthology, all undergrad classes so far. I've used a few different books, all worked well, but ready for a change for my own sake. Which have worked well for you? And feel free to add any recommendations for books on craft.

Thank you,
Chad Sweeney

i'm not sure i'm grasping this, but it seems that Cornel West's public presentations and conference lectures fit the bill.

TENDENCIES: Poetics & Practice 12/9:

Abigail Child, Michael D. Snediker, and Timothy Liu

This series of talks by and about contemporary poets, titled in honor of Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick, explores the relationship between queer theory, poetic practice, manifesto, and pedagogy.

The next event features talks by:

Abigail Child

Michael D. Snediker

Timothy Liu

...followed by a discussion/Q&A session.

on Thursday, December 9

at 7 PM

FREE

at CUNY Graduate Center

(in the Skylight Room, 9100)

365 Fifth Avenue, NYC

Abigail Child is a film/video artist and writer. Her montage pushes the envelope of sound-image relations, exploring gesture as language, and creating strategies to rewrite narrative. She has recently exhibited multi-screen installations at The Walker Museum and Harvard University among others. Child has had retrospectives nationally and internationally; her art is in the permanent collection of MoMA, NY and Centre Pompidou, Paris. Harvard Film

Center has created an "Abigail Child Collection" which will preserve and exhibit her films. Child's books of poetry include Scatter Matrix, Mob (both Roof Books), and A Motive for Mayhem (Potes & Poets) and she has authored a recent collection of critical writings, This is Called Moving: A Critical Poetics of Film (University of Alabama Press, 2005). She is senior faculty at the School of Museum of Fine Arts, Boston and calls NYC home.

Michael D Snediker is the author of Queer Optimism: Lyric Personhood and Other Felicitous Persuasions (UMinnesota, 2009). His articles on American Literature, poetics, and queer theory have appeared in journals including ELH, Modernism/modernity, and Postmodern Culture. His poetry book, Nervous Pastoral, was published by dove|tail press in 2008, and his poetry chapbook, Bourdon, is forthcoming from White Rabbit Press. He currently is working on a project titled Contingent Figure: Aesthetic Disabling and the Long American Renaissance. He teaches at Queen's University, in Kingston, ON.

Timothy Liu is the author of eight books of poems, most recently Polytheogamy and Bending the Mind Around the Dream's Blown Fuse. He has also edited Word of Mouth: An Anthology of Gay American Poetry. His poems have been included in many anthologies and have appeared in such places as Best American Poetry, Bomb, Grand Street, The Nation, New American Writing, Paris Review, Virginia Quarterly Review and The Yale Review. His journals and papers are archived in the Berg Collection at the New York Public Library, and his poems have been translated into ten languages. Timothy Liu is an Associate Professor at William Paterson University and a member of the Core Faculty in Bennington College's Graduate Writing Seminars; he lives in Manhattan.

brad brace will present a performative lecture that explores blood, ultimately asking but is blood art? while bringing her alter ego to life through narrative and fantasy while presenting a small-scale, close-up video installation presenting a performance which needs you to take control, you are the judge and you are the performer while creating a semi-prIvate installation involving two artists, two chairs, a table and chewing gum while presenting an old man and old woman frantically preparing chairs for a series of invisible guests while anticipating that future reports may state that he attempted to build a spaceship using found materials to help the stranded Horsehead Nebula back to his rightful home while presenting a tale of repressed sexual desire, a never-before- told story of fantasy and pleasure while reflecting the importance of exploring chance systematically while undertaking a conversation that that alludes to an experience concerned with some form of transcendental truth while reacting 'live' to a selection of pre-selected footage that is appearing beside him on a screen while forming a resistance movement, raising heads, hands and hearts in protest while testing her mental and physical strength by adopting the stress position for an extended period of time while exploring rituals that may offer a way to reconnect with our relationship to the non-human world while undertaking an investigation of minimal movement that is pure but also has the capacity to reflect true emotion while presenting an abstract exploration of the medieval witch trials while presenting the Mr Punch and his wife Judy reciting poetry, discussing politics, watching TV and getting horribly disemboweled by crocodiles...

... to change is to survive

Thu 9 Dec 2010

CONDITION OF FIRE, by the Edinburgh poet JL Williams, inspired by Ovid’s Metamorphoses and written on the explosive Aeolian Isles, will be published by Shearsman Books of Exeter, England on January 15th of 2011.

http://www.shearsman.com/pages/books/catalog/2011/williams.html

http://jlwilliamspoetry.co.uk/

Ovid wrote his famous stories of change just before he was banished from his beloved Rome and after travelling and observing many diverse and vibrant landscapes. He may well have visited and was knowledgeable of the Aeolian Isles where volcanoes cast molten lava into turquoise seas, whipped by the winds of the god who made his home there. It was to these rapturous, Edenic and violently creative islands that JL Williams ventured to write the poems in this collection; poems inspired both directly by Ovid's tales and informing the new story that emerges from the old ... a post-apocalyptic vision of the earth where metamorphoses engender rebirth out of the ashen wasteland that humankind has made of the world. Ovid expressed the truth that to change is to survive, and this message erupts out of the poems in CONDITION OF FIRE, whose language and images strive to communicate in new ways the essential elements of myth, creation and the burning breath of being.

Re: Lost & Found: The CUNY Poetics Documents Initiative, Series II

Thu 9 Dec 2010

These sound like greatÂ projects. Like turning up the soil, shining light on the roots and either enriching the shape of the bush or maybe creating a whole way of looking at the "collected/selected" scenario for each of these poets. Cannon/Canon curing and/or re-shaking/birthing the whole plant. (to mix up a few metaphors!).

It seems to come with the whole new questioning of archives and how poetry editors, let alone current scholars,Â may or may not explore and give value to materials previously considered taboo or of 'marginal' and/or dismissive consequence. Not just to the poet, but to the study ofÂ all the other dynamics (gender/racial and otherwise) that impact the work of a period. The 50's and 60's letters and journals, for example,Â of women poets (many of them only published minimally in the form of books)) may totally crash into now institutionalized myths of male poets of the period (the women who, however, often figure as lovers and whose private writings smash into what ever feminine mystique that parades about in the dominant poetry of the time and now 'memory'. Not to now acknowledge the good public accounts of Hettie Jones and Diane DiPrima).

Course it can be much 'literary' too. I am glad to see the emergence of Spicer's attempt to to translate Beowulf. I remember reading that little notebook in the Bancroft archive and having some instinctive sense that metric also informed Spicer's, albeit often counter-heroic exploits the language.

Lost & Found: The CUNY Poetics Documents Initiative

Series II

Following the widespread success of the chapbooks Series I of Lost & Found: The CUNY Poetics Documents Initiative, the Center for the Humanities and the Ph.D. Program in English at The Graduate Center, CUNY, are pleased to announce another exciting series of texts in chapbook formâ€”correspondence, journal entries, transcripts of lectures and unpublished manuscriptsâ€”by poets of the postwar era.

Lost & Found emerged from archival and textual scholarship done by students, faculty and guest fellows at the Graduate Center. Printed in elegant, stapled editions, the first series of chapbooks put into wider circulation important but little-known texts drawn from personal and institutional archives of writers such as Amiri Baraka, Edward Dorn, Kenneth Koch, Frank Oâ€™Hara, Philip Whalen, Robert Creeley, Daphne Marlatt, and Muriel Rukeyser, whose unpublished essay on Charles Darwin (rejected by the Nation in 1953) was discovered in the New York Public Libraryâ€™s Berg Collection by a Graduate Center doctoral student. This is the type of intervention that prompted the London Review of Books to call Lost & Found â€œA serious and worthy enterpriseâ€¦. universities should sponsor works like these, and graduate students should edit them, and people who care about these poets should read them."

Series II of Lost & Found is equally exciting, featuring the following chapbooks:

Selections from El Corno Emplumado / The Plumed Horn, ed. Margaret Randall

Diane di Prima: The Mysteries of Vision: Some Notes on H.D., ed. Ana BoÅ¾iÄeviÄ‡

Diane di Prima: R.D.â€™s HD, ed. Ammiel Alcalay

David Henderson: Umbra Extensions, ed. Tonya Foster

Muriel Rukeyser: Spanish Civil War Scrapbook, ed. Rowena Kennedy-Epstein

Jack Spicerâ€™s Translation of Beowulf: Selections, eds. David Hadbawnik and Sean Reynolds

Robert Duncan: Olson Memorial Lecture #4, eds. Meira Levinson, Bradley Lubin, Megan Paslawski, Kyle Waugh, Rachael Wilson, and Ammiel Alcalay

Series II of Lost & Found will publish concurrently with the Third Annual Chapbook Festival at The Graduate Center on March 3-4, 2011. A series of public conversations and a window display will be organized to launch the series.

General Editor Ammiel Alcalay and Center for Humanities Executive Director Aoibheann Sweeney are available for interview on this groundbreaking project.

Copies of Series I are available for institutional and bookstore sale at a discounted rate. Individual chapbooks retail at $10.00, or $35.00/set. Membership subscriptions with additional benefits are also available.

---------- Amiri Baraka, the noted poet, playwright and co-founder of the Black Arts Movement of the 1960¹s, will headline two special events on campus. At 4 p.m., the widely published author plans to present a Master Class for RIT students and others interested in writing poetry, fiction or creative nonfiction.

Following, at 7:30 p.m., his award-winning play,Dutchman, will be performed by the theater troupe Many Voices, co-produced with Maplewood Performing Arts Center. Both events are free and open to the public.

The Dutchman debuted in 1964, and received the Obie Award for outstanding Off-Broadway play. It was made into a feature film in 1966, and has been sighted as the first major work of the Black Arts Movement, and remains a classic commentary on race, class and gender in the United States. For more than a half-century, Baraka¹s dramas, poetry and jazz criticism have earned him international acclaim and numerous awards including the 1984 American Book Award, the PEN-Faulkner Award, the Langston Hughes Medal and the National Endowment for the Arts Poetry Award.

The performance is sponsored by Poets and Writers Inc, with public funds from the New York State Council on the Arts. Additional funds are provided by RIT¹s Department of English, Department of Fine Arts, Office of Special Projects and Office of Student Affairs and NTID¹s Department of Performing Arts, and private donors through Many Voices Productions.

Digital Creeley Maps at Stanford
Fri 10 Dec 2010

Hi and happy December!

Wondering if any of you have seen the beautiful Creeley visualizations, created by the Digital Humanities people at Stanford? I don't know much about the maps other than they are based on Creeley's electronic correspondence, which (I believe) he donated to Stanford. The links below connect to Creeley "correspondence," or "network" graphs, using the 50,000+ emails he sent to various people between 1995-2005. I think these are incredible, and poetic, yet the colored lines are not representative of the language he used in regular e-speak, more so the structure of the language he used. Interestingly, all the maps look similar, which makes for all kinds of potentially interesting structural and post-structural interpretations vis a vis vispo, and other po, should someone be so inclined to make them.

Thought I'd share these glorious things...

Happy everything, all.

Re: Lost & Found: The CUNY Poetics Documents Initiative, Series II

Fri 10 Dec 2010

Lost and Found really is a great project, and I'd urge everyone to subscribe to the series -- the price is really friendly, -- you get, um, a lot of Bang for your Bucks -- and the material is, as Stephen suggests, really innovative, important lost material rediscovered. Well-edited, sensible commentary, the annotation is pertinent but not overwhelming. A terrific and useful series. Get all issues if you can, yes. Any sensible library should subscribe.

Hi all,

Dean Young needs a new heart. Whether you've worked with him, been taught by him, or (like me) have never met him but love his poetry, please consider making a donation in his name to the National Foundation for Transplants. His link at the NFT is: http://transplants.org/donate/deanyoung. Even if you can't help out monetarily, please spread the word as far and wide as possible. The world has precious few excellent poets in it—we can't afford to lose one prematurely.

Fwd: Joel Chace's Latest Chap Book --Blake's Tree-- Just Published by Blue & Yellow Dog Press!!

Sat 11 Dec 2010

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Raymond H farr iii <[redacted]>
Date: Sat, Dec 11, 2010 at 9:13 AM Subject: Joel Chace's Latest Chap Book --Blake's Tree-- Just Published by Blue & Yellow Dog Press!!

Hi everyone

Joel Chace has a new chap book just out from Blue&Yellow Dog Press.

For those of you who surf the web seeking outstanding poetry experience you are familiar most probably with the work of Joel Chace and know how perceptive he is.

In his latest chap book--Blake's Tree--he is no less avant garde.

The poems kindle up an amazing take on a world cut to bits and reassembled.

For those of you who aren't familiar with him and his poetry his latest chap book--Blake's Tree--is a great introduction to some dazzling foot work achieved line by line.

Here are some details about Blake's Tree:

"Blake’s Tree begs to be read out loud. Uncanny and spot-on, the repetition of words and phrases which levitate within a controlled form. Lushness in the economy of word. Lyric and narrative commingle. This is serious and necessary fun."

--Kit Kennedy

William Blake played on his own name in “The Little Black Boy” (Blake = Black) and whirled us between nouns and verbs when he wrote, “Damn braces, Bless relaxes.” In these six-line, stanzaic pieces, Joel Chace follows Blake’s example—not only his “tree” but his ”poetree”—and offers enigmatic phrases that tease us out of thought. For a moment we are freed from cause and effect, from everything that insists on logic, and allowed to enter a space in which everything happens at once. “Negative capability” flourishes in this world of beautiful whatevers—where “over the riven and through” is not a typo and “light snapped on off whole city’s ponderable spook” is a perfectly reasonable, complete thing to say. “The world is all that is the case,” Wittgenstein wrote memorably. But he also wrote, “Thought can be of what is not the case.” These poems offer a beautiful release from our everyday sorrows, joys and dispositions. Climb Blake’s tree and see exquisite explorations of “what is not the case.”

52 flowers (or, a perth edge) exists as an essay-in-poems, a sequence responding to the "Ontario Gothic" poetry of Perth, Ontario poet Phil Hall, focusing on the Griffin-nominated An Oak Hunch (Brick, 2005). If the best response to a poem, as Margaret Atwood once said, is another poem, then this, in fact, is the finest response.

Amiri Baraka, the noted poet, playwright and co-founder of the Black Arts Movement of the 1960¹s, will headline two special events on campus. At 4 p.m., the widely published author plans to present a Master Class for RIT students and others interested in writing poetry, fiction or creative nonfiction.

Following, at 7:30 p.m., his award-winning play,Dutchman, will be performed by the theater troupe Many Voices, co-produced with Maplewood Performing Arts Center. Both events are free and open to the public.

The Dutchman debuted in 1964, and received the Obie Award for outstanding Off-Broadway play. It was made into a feature film in 1966, and has been sighted as the first major work of the Black Arts Movement, and remains a classic commentary on race, class and gender in the United States. For more than a half-century, Baraka¹s dramas, poetry and jazz criticism have earned him international acclaim and numerous awards including the 1984 American Book Award, the PEN-Faulkner Award, the Langston Hughes Medal and the National Endowment for the Arts Poetry Award.

The performance is sponsored by Poets and Writers Inc, with public funds from the New York State Council on the Arts. Additional funds are provided by RIT¹s Department of English, Department of Fine Arts, Office of Special Projects and Office of Student Affairs and NTID¹s Department of Performing Arts, and private donors through Many Voices Productions.

Ahadada Books Presents: Poemed On A Beach by Warren Fulton and David Jaffin

Sun 12 Dec 2010

A poetry text book based on David Jaffin's work as read and interpreted by a group of highly intelligent poetry lovers in Fort Myers, Florida. As the back copy says:

"One day at the beach, David [Jaffin], a modern poet who gives readings, innocently walks in front of a firing squad:

Silvia is a musician who expects to hear melody.
Rudigar is a scientist who wants to understand why.
Laura is an adventurer listening for a personal story.
Warren is a grammarian insistent on linguistic purity.
Carol is a German teacher with a passion for puzzles.
Dudley is a mechanic in search of transcendent truth.
Chang, a programmer, sees poems as logical processes.

[Lists seven more characters, but you get the drift.]

This book not only includes worksheets, study guides, and an on-line website to help the initiated enlighten the uninitiated, it's actually a good read in terms of story--warm and funny--and well written in the bargain. David Jaffin doesn't escape unscathed from the questioning and explaining, and sometimes resembles the proverbial lamb thrown to the lions, but in the end he's allowed to maintain his special status as resident poet of the beach.

Available from SPD and Ahadada Books.

"What a beautiful set of circumstances! What a lovely concatenation of particulars. Here is the poet alive in every sense of the word, and through every one of his senses. Instead of missing a beat or a part, Weiss' fragments are like Chekhov's short storiesthe more that gets left out, the more they seem to contain… One can hear echoes from all the various ancestors...[but] the voice, at its center, its core, is pure Mark Weiss. His use of the fragment is both elegant and bafflingly clear, a pure

The Police in Our Bandaged Heads
Tue 14 Dec 2010

"For those of us on the other side of image making, the police are unwelcome postcolonial replacements of the masquerade. In place of the cane that mmanwu the masquerade used to carry, the policeman carries a cudgel, euphemized as a “baton.” The policeman, like a terrible type of mmanwu, also carries egbe cham, a shotgun, and could shoot at the least provocation.

Don’t mess with this kind of performing ekwensu, or you could fall asleep and wake up to find yourself in the land of the dead."

105. The Paris Review
Save the Date: April 12th
Tue 14 Dec 2010

Dear Friends of The Paris Review,

Itâ€™s been an incredible year for us at the Review. Weâ€™ve re-launched both the magazine and our Web site, and the responseâ€”at the risk of tooting our own hornâ€”has been nothing less than extraordinary.

The Chicago Tribune raves, â€œIn a world where literature seems like an afterthought, the Review commands attention.â€ And, not to be outdone, the New York Times hails The Paris Reviewâ€™s new site as â€œthe best party in town.â€

Weâ€™re looking forward to celebrating this success with The Paris Review family at our 2011 Spring Revel, taking place on April 12 at Cipriani 42nd Street. Weâ€™re proud to be honoring writer James Salter for an important body of work that includes the novel A Sport and a Pastime and the memoir Burning the Days, among many others. Weâ€™ve also got two amazing chairsâ€”Yves-Andres Istel and Kathleen Begalaâ€”to lead the event, and Academy Awardâ€“winning filmmaker and actor and Sundance Institute founder Robert Redford will join us to present the Hadada Award to Salter.

It should be an incredible evening, and weâ€™d love for you to be there with us. Formal Save-the-Date cards will follow in the mail shortly, but for now, please mark your calendars for Tuesday, April 12, and plan to celebrate with all of us here at The Paris Review.

Best,

Michael Moore: Why I'm Posting Bail Money for Julian Assange (fwd)

Subject: Michael Moore: Why I'm Posting Bail Money for Julian Assange

Why I'm Posting Bail Money for Julian Assange (A statement from Michael Moore)

Tuesday, December 14th, 2010

Friends,

Yesterday, in the Westminster Magistrates Court in London, the lawyers for WikiLeaks co-founder Julian Assange presented to the judge a document from me stating that I have put up $20,000 of my own money to help bail Mr. Assange out of jail.

Furthermore, I am publicly offering the assistance of my website, my servers, my domain names and anything else I can do to keep WikiLeaks alive and thriving as it continues its work to expose the crimes that were concocted in secret and carried out in our name and with our tax dollars.

We were taken to war in Iraq on a lie. Hundreds of thousands are now dead. Just imagine if the men who planned this war crime back in 2002 had had a WikiLeaks to deal with. They might not have been able to pull it off. The only reason they thought they could get away with it was because they had a guaranteed cloak of secrecy. That guarantee has now been ripped from them, and I hope they are never able to operate in secret again.

So why is WikiLeaks, after performing such an important public service, under such vicious attack? Because they have outed and embarrassed those who have covered up the truth. The assault on them has been over the top:

Sen. Joe Lieberman says WikiLeaks "has violated the Espionage Act."

Sarah Palin claims he's "an anti-American operative with blood on his hands" whom we should pursue "with the same urgency we pursue al Qaeda and Taliban leaders."

Democrat Bob Beckel (Walter Mondale's 1984 campaign manager) said about Assange on Fox: "A dead man can't leak stuff ... there's only one way to do it: illegally shoot the son of a bitch."

Republican Mary Matalin says "he's a psychopath, a sociopath ... He's a terrorist."

And indeed they are! They exist to terrorize the liars and warmongers who have brought ruin to our nation and to others. Perhaps the next war won't be so easy because the tables have been turned -- and now it's Big Brother who's being watched ... by us!

WikiLeaks deserves our thanks for shining a huge spotlight on all this. But some in the corporate-owned press have dismissed the importance of WikiLeaks ("they've released little that's new!") or have painted them as simple anarchists ("WikiLeaks just releases everything without any editorial control!"). WikiLeaks exists, in part, because the mainstream media has failed to live up to its responsibility. The corporate owners have decimated newsrooms, making it impossible for good journalists to do their job. There's no time or money anymore for investigative journalism. Simply put, investors don't want those stories exposed. They like their secrets kept ... as secrets.

I ask you to imagine how much different our world would be if WikiLeaks had existed 10 years ago. Take a look at this photo. That's Mr. Bush about to be handed a "secret" document on August 6th, 2001. Its heading read: "Bin Ladin Determined To Strike in US." And on those pages it said the FBI had discovered "patterns of suspicious activity in this country consistent with preparations for hijackings." Mr. Bush decided to ignore it and went fishing for the next four weeks.

But if that document had been leaked, how would you or I have reacted? What would Congress or the FAA have done? Was there not a greater chance that someone, somewhere would have done something if all of us knew about bin Laden's impending attack using hijacked planes?

But back then only a few people had access to that document. Because the secret was kept, a flight school instructor in San Diego who noticed that two Saudi students took no interest in takeoffs or landings, did nothing. Had he read about the bin Laden threat in the paper, might he have called the FBI? (Please read this essay by former FBI Agent Coleen Rowley, Time's 2002 co-

Person of the Year, about her belief that had WikiLeaks been around in 2001, 9/11 might have been prevented.)

Or what if the public in 2003 had been able to read "secret" memos from Dick Cheney as he pressured the CIA to give him the "facts" he wanted in order to build his false case for war? If a WikiLeaks had revealed at that time that there were, in fact, no weapons of mass destruction, do you think that the war would have been launched -- or rather, wouldn't there have been calls for Cheney's arrest?

Openness, transparency -- these are among the few weapons the citizenry has to protect itself from the powerful and the corrupt. What if within days of August 4th, 1964 -- after the Pentagon had made up the lie that our ship was attacked by the North Vietnamese in the Gulf of Tonkin -- there had been a WikiLeaks to tell the American people that the whole thing was made up? I guess 58,000 of our soldiers (and 2 million Vietnamese) might be alive today.

Instead, secrets killed them.

For those of you who think it's wrong to support Julian Assange because of the sexual assault allegations he's being held for, all I ask is that you not be naive about how the government works when it decides to go after its prey. Please -- never, ever believe the "official story." And regardless of Assange's guilt or innocence (see the strange nature of the allegations here), this man has the right to have bail posted and to defend himself. I have joined with filmmakers Ken Loach and John Pilger and writer Jemima Khan in putting up the bail money -- and we hope the judge will accept this and grant his release today.

Might WikiLeaks cause some unintended harm to diplomatic negotiations and U.S. interests around the world? Perhaps. But that's the price you pay when you and your government take us into a war based on a lie. Your punishment for misbehaving is that someone has to turn on all the lights in the room so that we can see what you're up to. You simply can't be trusted. So every cable, every email you write is now fair game. Sorry, but you brought this upon yourself. No one can hide from the truth now. No one can plot the next Big Lie if they know that they might be exposed.

And that is the best thing that WikiLeaks has done. WikiLeaks, God bless them, will save lives as a result of their actions. And any of you who join me in supporting them are committing a true act of patriotism. Period.

I stand today in absentia with Julian Assange in London and I ask the judge to grant him his release. I am willing to guarantee his return to court with the bail money I have wired to said court. I will not allow this injustice to continue unchallenged.

Why I'm Posting Bail Money for Julian Assange (A statement from Michael Moore)

Tuesday, December 14th, 2010

Friends,

Yesterday, in the Westminster Magistrates Court in London, the lawyers for WikiLeaks co-founder Julian Assange presented to the judge a document from me stating that I have put up $20,000 of my own money to help bail Mr. Assange out of jail.

Furthermore, I am publicly offering the assistance of my website, my servers, my domain names and anything else I can do to keep WikiLeaks alive and thriving as it continues its work to expose the crimes that were concocted in secret and carried out in our name and with our tax dollars.

We were taken to war in Iraq on a lie. Hundreds of thousands are now dead. Just imagine if the men who planned this war crime back in 2002 had had a WikiLeaks to deal with. They might not have been able to pull it off. The only reason they thought they could get away with it was because they had a guaranteed cloak of secrecy. That guarantee has now been ripped from them, and I hope they are never able to operate in secret again.

So why is WikiLeaks, after performing such an important public service, under such vicious attack? Because they have outed and embarrassed those who have covered up the truth. The assault on them has been over the top:

Sen. Joe Lieberman says WikiLeaks "has violated the Espionage Act."

Sarah Palin claims he's "an anti-American operative with blood on his hands" whom we should pursue "with the same urgency we pursue al Qaeda and Taliban leaders."

Democrat Bob Beckel (Walter Mondale's 1984 campaign manager) said about Assange on Fox: "A dead man can't leak stuff ... there's only one way to do it: illegally shoot the son of a bitch."

Republican Mary Matalin says "he's a psychopath, a sociopath ... He's a terrorist."

And indeed they are! They exist to terrorize the liars and warmongers who have brought ruin to our nation and to others. Perhaps the next war won't be so easy because the tables have been turned -- and now it's Big Brother who's being watched ... by us!

WikiLeaks deserves our thanks for shining a huge spotlight on all this. But some in the corporate-owned press have dismissed the importance of WikiLeaks ("they've released little that's new!") or have painted them as simple anarchists ("WikiLeaks just releases everything without any editorial control!"). WikiLeaks exists, in part, because the mainstream media has failed to live up to its responsibility. The corporate owners have decimated newsrooms, making it impossible for good journalists to do their job. There's no time or money anymore for investigative journalism. Simply put, investors don't want those stories exposed. They like their secrets kept ... as secrets.

I ask you to imagine how much different our world would be if WikiLeaks had existed 10 years ago. Take a look at this photo. That's Mr. Bush about to be handed a "secret" document on August 6th, 2001. Its heading read: "Bin Ladin Determined To Strike in US." Re: the future that is half upon us

What makes one weep is the obstinancy with which neoliberal ideologues persist in their belief that society is really a marketplace composed entirely of people all of whose decisions are based exclusively on rational calculations of economic self interest. Student riots in London over plans to implement the Brown report must be a puzzle to its authors. New Zealand tried something similar, with smaller fee hikes for sure, but the outcome has neverthless been a student debt bill so huge it has been an election issue ever since. By and large students continue to have a healthy taste for immediate gratiification and arts enrolments have not suffered in the way the ideologues have hoped.

"What a beautiful set of circumstances! What a lovely concatenation of particulars. Here is the poet alive in every sense of the word, and through every one of his senses. Instead of missing a beat or a part, Weiss' fragments are like Chekhov's short storiesthe more that gets left out, the more they seem to contain… One can hear echoes from all the various ancestors...[but] the voice, at its center, its core, is pure Mark Weiss. His use of the fragment is both elegant and bafflingly clear, a pure musical threnody…[it] opens a window, not only into a mind, but a person, a personality, this human figure at the emotional center of the poem."

Dear Poetry Readers and Friends of Chax Press:

Poetry, for me, is a community of writers, readers, ideas, words, shapes, and sounds arranged or just appearing in space and time in such a way as to invite others to enter, to open the spaces words occupy. In this way, the work of Chax Press is part of this poetic endeavor, as well as a practice that expands and deepens the community of contemporary literature.

Chax is once again binding up a year rich in print. Our hand bound volume of Drum Hadleyâ€™s poems has been published, and pages of words and machine images by Nico Vassilakis are on the Vandercook Press as I write this. We are about to complete a year with lots of good news, like our summer Book Arts Workshop, and some fourteen book publications, including books by Alice Notley, Leslie Scalapino, Charles Olson, Tenney Nathanson, Jonathan Stalling, and many more. We hope for a satisfying end of one year and beginning of the next, the kind that makes you fold the covers shut and sigh in satisfaction. Our story keeps unfolding thanks to your contributions.

Community and innovation are our central threads, and the language we use to connect the Chax community to all our friends is both of the streets and land and of the highest spire. Our upcoming books, that you will help to print with your contribution, come from diverse voices: Nico Vassilakis, Will Alexander, Eileen Myles, Andrew Levy, Linh Dinh, Jennifer Bartlett, Robert Mittenthal, Maureen Owen, and others that together form a distinct, unreplicated corps of authors whose work needs to be present in our time. At Chax, we fill a need for work that challenges, thrills, and brings together our longtime readers and those new to our community.

To keep our downtown studio full of deckled edges, smoothly running rollers, and deftly stitching fingers, as well as new paperback books of poetry flying out of our studio and into the minds of readers, we rely on a wide variety of sources, such as grants, book sales, and contributions from you. Increasingly individual contributions, in a time of dwindling government support, perform a large and heartwarming role in our work in the fields of poetry and the book arts. We ask that you prioritize a donation to Chax Press this year. No amount of giving is too small or too large. For every gift over $60, we will even send you one of our earliest books, chosen specifically with you in mind.

Friends through the computer (facebook, email, etc) last year were an important part of what we did, and how we were able to fund our work. You gave gifts ranging from $6 to $100. If each of you gave even $10, we'd be in good shape, the books would keep coming. We hope you will give $10 or more now. It will do wonders. But any amount you can give is most welcome. We thank you and honor you with our work. Chax Press is a nonprofit 501(c)(3) charitable organization, and your contribution is tax deductible.

Why I'm Posting Bail Money for Julian Assange (A statement from Michael Moore)

Tuesday, December 14th, 2010

Friends,

Yesterday, in the Westminster Magistrates Court in London, the lawyers for WikiLeaks co-founder Julian Assange presented to the judge a document from me stating that I have put up $20,000 of my own money to help bail Mr. Assange out of jail.

Furthermore, I am publicly offering the assistance of my website, my servers, my domain names and anything else I can do to keep WikiLeaks alive and thriving as it continues its work to expose the crimes that were concocted in secret and carried out in our name and with our tax dollars.

We were taken to war in Iraq on a lie. Hundreds of thousands are now dead. Just imagine if the men who planned this war crime back in 2002 had had a WikiLeaks to deal with. They might not have been able to pull it off. The only reason they thought they could get away with it was because they had a guaranteed cloak of secrecy. That guarantee has now been ripped from them, and I hope they are never able to operate in secret again.

So why is WikiLeaks, after performing such an important public service, under such vicious attack? Because they have outed and embarrassed those who have covered up the truth. The assault on them has been over the top:

Sen. Joe Lieberman says WikiLeaks "has violated the Espionage Act."*

The New Yorker's George Packer calls Assange "super-secretive, thin-skinned, [and] megalomaniacal."*

Sarah Palin claims he's "an anti-American operative with blood on his hands" whom we should pursue "with the same urgency we pursue al Qaeda and Taliban leaders."*

Democrat Bob Beckel (Walter Mondale's 1984 campaign manager) said about Assange on Fox: "A dead man can't leak stuff ... there's only one way to do it: illegally shoot the son of a bitch."*

Republican Mary Matalin says "he's a psychopath, a sociopath ... He's a terrorist."*

And indeed they are! They exist to terrorize the liars and warmongers who have brought ruin to our nation and to others. Perhaps the next war won't be so easy because the tables have been turned -- and now it's Big Brother who's being watched ... by us!

WikiLeaks deserves our thanks for shining a huge spotlight on all this. But some in the corporate-owned press have dismissed the importance of WikiLeaks ("they've released little that's new!") or have painted them as simple anarchists ("WikiLeaks just releases everything without any editorial control!"). WikiLeaks exists, in part, because the mainstream media has failed to live up to its responsibility. The corporate owners have decimated newsrooms, making it impossible for good journalists to do their job. There's no time or money anymore for investigative journalism. Simply put, investors don't want those stories exposed. They like their secrets kept ... as secrets.

I ask you to imagine how much different our world would be if WikiLeaks had existed 10 years ago. Take a look at this photo. That's Mr. Bush about to be handed a "secret" document on August 6th, 2001. Its heading read: "Bin Ladin Determined To Strike in US." And on those pages it said the FBI had discovered "patterns of suspicious activity in this country consistent with preparations for hijackings." Mr. Bush decided to ignore it and went fishing for the next four weeks.

But if that document had been leaked, how would you or I have reacted? What would Congress or the FAA have done? Was there not a greater chance that someone, somewhere would have done something if all of us knew about bin Laden's impending attack using hijacked planes?

But back then only a few people had access to that document. Because the secret was kept, a flight school instructor in San Diego who noticed that two Saudi students took no interest in takeoffs or landings, did nothing. Had he read about the bin Laden threat in the paper, might he have called the FBI? (Please read this essay by former FBI Agent Coleen Rowley, Time's 2002 co-Person of the Year, about her belief that had WikiLeaks been around in 2001, 9/11 might have been prevented.)

Or what if the public in 2003 had been able to read "secret" memos from Dick Cheney as he pressured the CIA to give him the "facts" he wanted in order to build his false case for war? If a WikiLeaks had revealed at that time that there were, in fact, no weapons of mass destruction, do you think that the war would have been launched -- or rather, wouldn't there have been calls for Cheney's arrest?

Openness, transparency -- these are among the few weapons the citizenry has to protect itself from the powerful and the corrupt. What if within days of August 4th, 1964 -- after the Pentagon had made up the lie that our ship was attacked by the North Vietnamese in the Gulf of Tonkin -- there had been a WikiLeaks to tell the American people that the whole thing was made up? I guess 58,000 of our soldiers (and 2 million Vietnamese) might be alive today.

Instead, secrets killed them.

For those of you who think it's wrong to support Julian Assange because of the sexual assault allegations he's being held for, all I ask is that you not be naive about how the government works when it decides to go after its prey. Please -- never, ever believe the "official story." And regardless of Assange's guilt or innocence (see the strange nature of the allegations here), this man has the right to have bail posted and to defend himself. I have joined with filmmakers Ken Loach and John Pilger and writer Jemima Khan in putting up the bail money -- and we hope the judge will accept this and grant his release today.

Might WikiLeaks cause some unintended harm to diplomatic negotiations and U.S. interests around the world? Perhaps.

But that's the price you pay when you and your government take us into a war based on a lie. Your punishment for misbehaving is that someone has to turn on all the lights in the room so that we can see what you're up to. You simply can't be trusted. So every cable, every email you write is now fair game. Sorry, but you brought this upon yourself. No one can hide from the truth now. No one can plot the next Big Lie if they know that they might be exposed.

And that is the best thing that WikiLeaks has done. WikiLeaks, God bless them, will save lives as a result of their actions. And any of you who join me in supporting them are committing a true act of patriotism. Period.

I stand today in absentia with Julian Assange in London and I ask the judge to grant him his release. I am willing to guarantee his return to court with the bail money I have wired to said court. I will not allow this injustice to continue unchallenged.

Yours, Michael Moore

P.S. You can read the statement I filed today in the London court here.

P.P.S. If you're reading this in London, please go support Julian Assange and WikiLeaks at a demonstration at 1 PM today, Tuesday the 14th, in front of the Westminster court.

VERSE: A Murder Mystery Video Webseries Chapters 1 and 2 online
Thu 16 Dec 2010

Dear F
VERSE: A Murder Mystery Video Webseries Chapters 1 and 2 online

Dear Friends:

Just out now, Chapter 2 of new video webseries called "VERSE: A Murder Mystery." This innovative original series is being showcased on Koldcast and can be viewed at http://rattapallax.com/blog/verse/

or

http://www.koldcast.tv/#/show:verse_a_murder_mystery

STORY: When a young poet discovers a lost manuscript, he is drawn into the New York City literary world with the only key to an unsolved, 30-year-old murder. Starring Jon Sands, Angel Nafis, Bob Holman, Taylor Mead, Julie Berndt, Bill Kushner, Maggie Balistreri, Joelle Hann, Lamont B. Steptoe, and Mark Greenfield. Produced by Rattapallax Productions. Directed by Ram Devineni. Script by Susan Brennan. Music by Shira E. & the Tiny Tornadoes.

Synopsis for Chapter 1:
Jon, a spoken-word poet and New York City bike messenger stumbles up a lost manuscript from 1974 by Claire Wilks, a forgotten poet who was murdered. Initially intrigued by the possibilities of bringing attention to this important literary work, Jon quickly becomes obsessed to unravel Claireâ€™s unsolved murder. Drawn into New York City literary world, he encounters many poetry characters and landmarks, as well as sparks a romance with beautiful young poet, Angel.

Synopsis for Chapter 2:
Jon and Angel plunge into the mystery of Claireâ€™s death while being stalked by a crazy radical poet, Lamont who sees the manuscript as a threat to him and his past. Jon meets Mary Alice Fulton, an old friend of Claireâ€™s who warns him of the trouble heâ€™s unleashed with the manuscript. Aroused by memories and regret, she reveals more about Claire and her covert past.

I hope you get a chance to watch Chapter 1 and 2 online. It was filmed in Full HD using the amazing Canon 5d, so it has the same quality as cinema. We plan to release a new episode every two weeks. Its free.

Cheers

New Poetry Movement
Thu 16 Dec 2010

I founded a new poetry movement on Monday 12-13. It is based on the Rory Story Cube. Or one may create one's own dice with images on them, as may dice as one cares to. Poetry is then generated from a roll of the dice. I is to be hoped that this will result in a new American blooming of image, but you don"t have to be American to do this. There are no rules except don't backchannel me your finished products as I am very busy rolling dice. For example, yesterday at NYCs Socarrat. Perhaps David Marneau , talented composer will someday set some to music. Susan Maurer

FW: Segue Foundation End of Year Appeal

Thu 16 Dec 2010

The Segue Foundation, Inc.

300 Bowery

New York, NY 10012

[redacted]

Segue Foundation is poor, but doing great. It's the end of the year so please send us a check for $100 if you can (less or more is ok, too) made payable to: Segue Foundation and send to Segue Foundation, 300 Bowery, NY, NY 10012.

Segue is poor

NYSCA funding has been reduced due to state budget cuts. Sales are somewhat lower this year due to the recession. So you check is worth more than ever this year. I'd hope you each can find $100 or more but smaller donations are welcome.

Segue is doing great

This year Roof published four books most recently the spectacular and lubricious Nada Gordon's Scented Rushes. Really folks, this poetry is hot and there are graphics. In this fall season we also published the exquisite spanglish, designy Edwin Torres' Yes Thing No Thing. Torres vertical and horizontal book breaks the mold of identity poetics reaching far beyond any one language. This spring we published Joan Retallack's Procedural Elegies / Western Civ Con't/ which won the 10 best books award from Art Forum. And Elizabeth Fodaski's Document, a book of surprising and elegant poems that makes me think it's possible to write a lyric.

And your donation helps us to pay the poets who read at the Segue at the Bowery series every Saturday at 4pm. Recent readers include Rod Smith, Anne Waldman, and Allen Fisher. We continue to pursue excellence here as elsewhere in this 30 year series started by Ted Greenwald and Charles Bernstein.

So please take out your checkbook and write a check to Segue Foundation. Please do it now. You'll be able to write it off your taxes and frame the check image on your statement.

End of Year Wishes,

James

Calls from Home: submit poems for prisoners
Sat 18 Dec 2010

Join the 11th annual CALLS FROM HOME
a holiday radio broadcast for prisoners & their families

Read a poem, sing a song, or just speak directly from your heart.
http://www.kitescampaigns.org

The United States has 2.4 million people behind bars. Thousand Kites wants you to lend your voice to a powerful grassroots radio broadcast that reaches into our nation's prison and tells those inside they are not forgotten.

We are asking you to call our toll-free line [redacted] and speak directly to those behind bars this holiday season. An answering machine will record your message. Call anytime, now through December 20th.

Speak to someone you know or to everyone--make it uplifting. Donâ€™t worry if you slip up, we will edit all calls. We are asking you to submit a work on the themes of incarceration, family, the power to endure and anything that would lift the spirits and spark creativity in our thousands of prisoner listeners.

CALLS FROM HOME will broadcast on over 200 radio stations across the country and will be available for download on our website December 21st. Your work will be added to our website and released as part of a CD celebrating the program. If you want to order a free copy of the CD, send us your contact information.

Please help spread the word to your friends. Add a link to your Facebook page or email it to a friend. Contact us if you have ideas for how to grow the project. Learn how you can help blog, distribute, broadcast, or support this project. We want you to use the show as an education tool in your community. Sign-up to recieve a free kit here and radio stations can visit here to learn how to carry the program. Spread the word in your community with our poster.

CALLS FROM HOME is a project of Thousand Kites and a national network of grassroots organizations working for criminal justice transformation.

Seasons Greetings
Sun 19 Dec 2010

My only seasonal poem, as far as I can remember.

BY WAY OF THE SEASON

After its struggle the gazelle surrenders to the lion's grip, useless to fight. Does it think then, does it think 'if only I'd dodged to the right. If only.
Maybe next time.'
As the cat disembowels it and begins to feed.

Farewell to the hills farewell to the herd farewell to water hole and tender grasses and the joy of the young at the teat.

At moments when the consequences of choice are upon us we say
'this can't be all there is,' but it can. Regret, nostalgia and longing, on the other hand, are ready gifts, one can live as if there were choices with no consequences, as if the life could be unlived and lived again.

Day before Christmas in the supermarket the Stones are singing "Can't get no satisfaction," but we try & we try & we try & and we try and we buy something.

No way no way elusive as wind.

5

Stories and the stories of stories.
A vocabulary of places gathered and left.
Putting death aside, one wonders whether to climb that distant hill, as in the conservation of matter.
There are so many windows to look through.
Opposite, a building seems to wear as a crown the trees beyond it. Close one eye or the other to recover its true flatness. If I say 'rock dove' do you see 'pigeon?'

No gull rests now on the cross above the church's triangular facade, but it's apparently a perch reserved for gulls to take turns at.
So much for religion. One prays to invest oneself in the known and unknown places, the simplicity of the abandoned and the immanence of ruins.
Ghost-whispers.

'I am the demon that whimpers at night,'
he said, and the pigeons (or doves) ride even the steepest wires. The oblique is granted them. Across the street in front of the travel agency a gruff Santa makes Christmas noises in Caribbean Spanish. For a moment I thought it the ghost rising through the radiator from the apartment below.
He dances now to "The Entertainer" played on a portable keyboard.
Ragtime Spanish Santa from the Dominican Republic.
And what would Dominic have made of this? 'Church of the Immaculate Deception,' he might have said. As in 'I bring you pestilence'
he might have said.
It was an epidemic of grace.

7

That year three virgins bore sons.

Zeus the King displayed his thunderbolts.
Chango fell as a shower of gold.
And Chac arrived as rain.

Where you find it bring joy.

New from Chax Press: Mark Weiss, As Landscape.
$16. Order from http://www.chax.org/poets/weiss.htm

"What a beautiful set of circumstances! What a lovely concatenation of particulars. Here is the poet alive in every sense of the word, and through every one of his senses. Instead of missing a beat or a part, Weiss' fragments are like Chekhov's short storiesthe more that gets left out, the more they seem to contain… One can hear echoes from all the various ancestors...[but] the voice, at its center, its core, is pure Mark Weiss. His use of the fragment is both elegant and bafflingly clear, a pure musical threnody…[it] opens a window, not only
into a mind, but a person, a personality, this

EXTENSIVE IMMANENCE

the stated goal of EXTENSIVE IMMANENCE is to publish very long works of experimental literature. each text is longer than 1,200 pages. these are sometimes written by computer manipulation, sometimes by human-hands on a computer keyboard, sometimes by email collaboration, other instances by combinations of any of the previous means.

as a stated length, more than 1,200 pages describes the EXTENSIVE part of the press name.

a quality of IMMANENCE is more complicated and evanescent. it is a term with as many definitions as people who use it. a general description, not a definition, would go something like: it covers the universe, a big claim for a work of literature, but this wont be the first time literature makes a grand claim.

a title like EXTENSIVE IMMANENCE could be seen as a tautology. instead following Gertrude Stein, who says something like: repetition is insistence, not repetition. the works included in the press-identity must be very long.

all texts are free to read, free to download, and free to print out. they are located at links on www.archive.org. when you click a link on the 'links to texts' page, you will be directed there.

hello nightmare
Tue 21 Dec 2010

It's arrived. It's 430 in the morning, can't sleep. Everyone is celebrating the repeal of Don't Ask, Don't Tell. Three children die of war-related injuries every single day in Afghanistan. That's not an abstract statistic, it's very real, at least to me.

I'm a queer man who has watched the queer community bow down and anxiously wait for the votes to come in. Do they want us? Are we good enough? Will WE TOO be allowed to kill three children in Afghanistan? Oh I hope so, I really want to kill some babies.

It's 430 in the morning, or so. This world really is worth losing sleep over. I love this world. But it's pretty fucking scary. More than ever.

The queer community was so bad-ass at one time. Coretta Scott King spoke once about gay men and lesbians marching with her and her husband in Selma when they didn't even have rights of their own. But when she said rights I DON'T THINK she meant the military. Because Coretta Scott King and her husband Martin Luther King were very much opposed to the war in Vietnam.

Is this an incredible ruse? Has the gay and lesbian community been TRICKED into thinking that this is a good thing to want? To be part of this big, evil killing machine that kills for the American corporate interests?

Poetry has answered this. And I'm so grateful for poetry. Where would we be without it?

Interview with "orphaned" Israeli Poet Karen Akalay- Gut with Doug Holder

Tue 21 Dec 2010

Israeli Poet Karen Akalay-Gut: An orphan who has found a home.

Israeli Poet Karen Akalay-Gut: An orphan who has found a home.

Interview with Doug Holder.

In an email from Poet Karen Akalay-Gut she writes:

"When I was just beginning to feel at home in the Israeli poetry scene, the author and editor Ben Zion Tomer was looking over a piece of mine he was going to publish and said, “You know, you were born an orphan.” The shock I felt was one of recognition not insult – for the first time someone had understood the basis of my writing more clearly than I had. The idea of exile, of perspective, was something I had carried with me from the days of my childhood, when my parents, long-term refugees and now new immigrants to the United States, chose to share their freshly acquired dwelling with displaced persons and concentration camp survivors. The religious education I was given in a Jewish Day School which emphasized Judaism as its center and Israel as the new home for the Jews was balanced by the afterschool Yiddish Farband Classes which focused on socialism and community. Home in other words, was always relative. But when I first came to Israel as a teenager I understood that for me there was an emotional absolute, that no matter how much it might be strange, and no matter how much I could argue about its directions, this was where I belonged."

Karen Alkalay-Gut was born in London in the Blitz (March 29,1945), and was educated in the United States. She received her Ph.D in English literature at the University of Rochester. In 1972 She moved to Israel, and has been teaching poetry at Israeli universities since then. In 1977 she joined the faculty at Tel Aviv University. In addition to a biography of the poet Adelaide Crapsey, Alkalay-Gut has published numerous articles on modern American poetry, Victorian literature and fiction, and studies of poetry and popular culture. In addition to over twenty books of poetry and a number of CDs with pianist Liz Magnes, Roi Yarkoni, and others, new work scheduled for 2010 include: a compact disk of her poetry with Panic Ensemble; a dual language collection, Belly Dancing in Tel Aviv, will appear with Edizioni Kolibris in Italy; and an edition of Selected Poems will be appearing in Hebrew translation.

I was suppose to meet her in Israeli and talk to her class in 2007, but the University was on strike and it never happened. I met her a couple of years later at McLean Hospital when she was researching a book on Sexton, and Plath. Gut is planning a trip this Winter in 2001, and hopefully will make a trip to the promised land of Somerville and a meeting of the Bagel Bards.

Do you think being born in London during the Blitz had a subliminal effect on you as a poet and writer?

I was born on the last night of the buzz bombs, so in a way I brought the peace, but the real effect on me came through my parents: for them, the blitz in London was a relief. They were refugees, had been fleeing for years before WWII, fled from Lida in Lithuania to Danzig in 1930, were persecuted for my father’s communist background in Danzig, and escaped that city on the night before Hitler invaded, on the last bus out. By the time they got to England they must have been wrecks, but the tragedy of the war only came to them when I was born. It was then that my mother learned that all of her family had been killed in the war. That must have influenced the way I was raised, and the expectations my parents had for me. I think the enormous tragedies that were uncovered at the time of my birth had more than a subliminal effect on me – they are part of my identity.

In your poetry and in your life--you exhibit the feeling of being an orphan. Literally you are not--but metaphorically you are. Explain?

In a way I wanted to be an orphan, to grow up without the burden of my family's past. To grow up without the past of my people, without the imperative of my gender, without the rules that seem to dominate the way we think. I was always breaking out of traditions, even while I was enjoying my own versions of traditional things. For example, when Isaac Bashevis Singer's book, Satan in Goray, came out in English, I was sixteen, and I devoured the book. He wasn't famous yet, and was invited by my parents' in Rochester to lecture in Yiddish. His lecture was wild, rowdy, nothing like any Yiddish literature the cultured Yiddish audience had experienced, and the audience was appalled. Afterward, my mother brought him to me, and said to him, "Here, SHE will be interested in what you have to say!" That was meant as a little insult to both of us, but I was overjoyed to be coupled with my new hero.

You moved to Israel in 1972 from the States. Israel is a place where many people go to find themselves--they are disconnected where they presently live--and are looking for meaning--a sort of existential crisis. Was that how it was for you?

I was perfectly happy in Rochester, New York. There were many ways in which the city, the schools, the centers, the university nurtured me in a way that is rarely available to people. For years I had saved up to go to Europe, but when I was 20, and had enough money, my parents "strongly urged" me to go to Israel instead. I wasn't interested, but being a good girl, went along, thinking I'd catch a flight to Greece from Tel Aviv. The moment I landed in Israel I fell in love, and continued to fall in love with every single person I met, every place I encountered. So the first chance I got after I finished school I moved to Israel. It wasn't easy, and I have political conflicts all the time, but existentially, I'm where I'm supposed to be.

You use this quote in your collection of poetry " Miracles"

From far away everything looks like a miracle, but up close even a miracle doesn't look like one.

- Yehuda Amichai, "Miracles"

Is this a call to you for immediate experience--the tangible over conjecture?

I thought I was simply referring to the fact that there are millions of miracles that occur every day – and we usually don't notice them because we're so involved in our own survival.

Like the Israelite in Amichai's poem who is busy watching the back of the man in front of him on the way out of Egypt and doesn't realize that the parting of the Red Sea has taken place. Medicine seems a miracle to me – the stuff that makes you better when you're sick. But for Amichai the real miracles are the ones we experience all the time – little amazing details, remarkable in themselves, and of which poetry is created.

You have written a great deal about Slyvia Plath and Anne Sexton. They both seemed like orphans in the context of their tragic lives. Is this what attracted you?

My initial attraction was to their boldness and daring, but the more I read their poetry the more I saw what wonderful artists they were, asserting madness and freedom but with such control and craftsmanship that their art is often invisible. The drama attracted me, and the art keeps me attracted. My 'orphans' have the freedom determine their status. Even though my heart breaks every time I think of what Anne Sexton's treatment should have been, and how much damage her mistreatment did, that isn't what calls me to her. I am drawn to their pinpoint analysis of the social imperatives that were imprisoning them, and their desire to create their own destinies.

There is no one right way to write a poem. How do you go about it?

When I was nine or ten, a wise Yiddish poet was boarding with my family, and when he saw that I was making some efforts at composition he gave me this advice: "Never write if you can sleep without it." I have thousands of ideas and phrases in my head all the time, but most of the time they will dissipate if I can ignore them, but when the words start to overwhelm me I jot them down and then begin to work on them, to hone them into the poem that reflects the original thought, and/or to develop them into what they could be.

What school of poetry are you in or have been expelled from?

Orphans don't go to school.

I've been teaching poetry for forty five years. Shakespeare, Chaucer, Tennyson, Rossetti, Wilde, Williams, Stevens, Roethke, Lowell, Pinsky… I learn from them, from my students, from my research. There's also my rock group – for a few years I was performing with them and in the past few years I've been writing lyrics for them. It makes me more aware of the sound of words, how they fit together to make their own meaning. Maybe the whole world is my school. There are a group of poems pasted on the wall in my bathroom – they were written from contemplation there – but they are about how it feels to be a sink, the responsibilities of soap, what is hiding behind the shower curtain, stuff like that. Was the bathroom my school?

A summer dress hangs on two pegs

The sash flutters out, like a butterfly
Who knows where it belongs and the wind fills out the flowered bosom as if spirit alone was enough to give it life

-----Karen Akalay-Gut

"Christ is born in Bethlehem, a choir sings. But, hold it there! Bethlehem is no other place than my village in Anambra State, Nigeria. If you say that is a lie, then you would be the one to pay the ten-ten-thousand-Naira-plus-five-cartons-of-beer fine that the Development Union of my village has slammed upon any member not found in the village this Christmas for the launch of a new project. Yes, “TEN-TEN thousand Naira” fine plus-or-minus the usual gragra from the Union’s Executive and harassment by the Provost, the official police officer of the Union."

INTERVIEW The Art of Fiction No. 208 Louise Erdrich â€œDriving takes hold of the left brain and then the right brain is freedâ€”thatâ€™s what some writer friends and I have theorized. But I canâ€™t always stop when I get an idea. It depends on the roadâ€”North Dakota, no traffic. When Iâ€™m driving on a very empty stretch of road I do write with one hand. Itâ€™s hardly legible, but still, you donâ€™t want to have to stop every time.â€

156. Adam Tobin
my new chapbook
Wed 22 Dec 2010

Dear everybody, Mondo Bummer is a small press in San Francisco that publishes poetry and fiction in a disappointing way. Their latest title is Any Group Can Claim Responsibility and Other Poems, by Adam Tobin (that's me!). http://mondobummer.blogspot.com/2010/12/adam-tobins-any-group-can-claim.html These are frustrated lyric poems (in quatrains! with occasional rhyme!), and I am a frustrating lyric poet. Sorry. But they are dense* with allusions to and facts about the world you never knew. When I find gum in my mouth, I chew. "Poisoned wellsprings of received wisdom" is the nicest thing anybody has ever said about these poems. http://mondobummer.blogspot.com/2010/12/adam-tobins-any-group-can-claim.html You can buy copies directly from Mondo Bummer using paypal, cash or barter. They cost $2.00, or something of equal value. Shipping is included in the price. Yours very truly, Adam Tobin

Here is a representative quatrain:

Fake faces made of brick are built for profit.
I wanted to ask you a question, so I raised my hand.
The proper posture will make you more aware.
I am not fluent in body language.

Pavement Saw Chapbook Deadline 12/31/10
Wed 22 Dec 2010

Pavement Saw Chapbook Contest: Deadline 12/31
<<<<<<<<<<<<<<>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

Submit electronically, save the hassle of printing out a manuscript and have your funds support poetry not the post office! Directly enter by using our website http://www.pavementsaw.org/pages/chapcontest.htm

$500 and 50 copies of the winning chapbook will be awarded to the winner. In addition to the prize winner, at least one other manuscript will be published under a standard royalty contract (author paid 10% of press run). Everyone is allowed to submit regardless of previous publication history. Every entrant will receive the equivalent cost of the entry fee in Pavement Saw Press titles.

Unlike many publishers whose collections are printed one copy at a time and therefore lack a large circulation, our chapbooks are published in a first edition of 400 copies plus overage. While chapbooks rarely receive exposure, ours have been reviewed in Poets and Writers, Publishers Weekly, The Georgia Review, Small Press Review and many others. Our previous winners have had subsequent full length books appear from a bevy of publishers including Curbstone Press, Cleveland State University Press, Bear Star Press, University of Georgia, and Hanging Loose Press.

Submit up to 32 pages of poetry. Include a signed cover letter with your name, address, phone number, e-mail, publication credits, a brief biography and the title of the chapbook. Include a cover page with your contact information and the chapbook title. Include a second page with the chapbook title only. Do not include your name on any pages inside the manuscript except for the first title page. No need for a contents page. All chapbooks are selected blindly / anonymously. Manuscripts will be considered until December 31st, 2010. Entry fee: $15 for US entries, $18 overseas, $21 electronic (world wide).

If you wish to submit electronically, send $21.00 via paypal to [redacted]. Then e-mail the manuscript as an attachment to the same address and we will send you an e-mail confirmation that your entry is all set. Electronic submissions need to be sent as PDF files or as word (.doc or .docx) files. Other formats are not accepted. The extra cost is to cover the paypal fees as well as the time, labor, ink, and so on, to print out your manuscript. Or use our website http://www.pavementsaw.org/pages/chapcontest.htm

If you wish to send via regular mail accompany your manuscript with a check in the amount of $15.00 payable to Pavement Saw Press. All contributors to the contest will receive books, chapbooks and journals equal to, or more than, the entry fee. Add $3 (US) for other countries to cover the extra postal charge. Do not include an SASE for notification of results. Do not send the only copy of your work. All manuscripts are recycled and individual comments on the manuscripts cannot be made. This year the editor will be the judge and, as it should be, he promises not to chose former students, former or potential sexual partners, press interns, or people that can make him famous. A decision will be reached in March. Entries should be sent to our address at the bottom of the page.

Previous Winners

RECONFIGURATIONS, Volume 4: EMERGENCE (PUBLICATION ANNOUNCEMENT)

Thu 23 Dec 2010

RECONFIGURATIONS, Volume 4: EMERGENCE,
http://reconfigurations.blogspot.com/

Reconfigurations 4 is packed with craft & research, difference & innovation, dialogue & figuration, song & vision. Sixty-one individual publications: thirty-two poems, one interview, two essays, nine visual poems, three graphic novels, three dialogues, two image-texts, four fictions, two reviews, and three critiques. Many (if not most) of those works defy ready categorization, however.

Our work here turns upon generative contradictions. We are both outside of established institutional hierarchies of process and production (we are online in the form of a blog) and we are the epitome of such systems (we are peer-reviewed). We seek to gather and present both creative and scholarly texts—a judiciously selected diversity of genres/modes and forms of discourse. We exist as a dynamic space for readers and writers invested in tradition and innovation. Such dedication to both/and, such inclusion of opposition, is required by our project of reconfiguration.

163. Mark Weiss
Sad news
Fri 24 Dec 2010

Janine Pommy Vego died yesterday. Now the parenthesis is filled (1942-2010).

Janine lived an amazing life. For years after she came back from South America, where she had married and her young husband had died, she would return, hiking the Andes by herself, not the safest thing for a lone woman to do, and only stopped, with regret, when the rise of the sendero luminoso made it not just dangerous but suicidal. That's the way she lived. A woman and poet of immense, unwavering generosity of spirit.

Mark

New from Chax Press: Mark Weiss, As Landscape. $16. Order from http://www.chax.org/poets/weiss.htm

"What a beautiful set of circumstances! What a lovely concatenation of particulars. Here is the poet alive in every sense of the word, and through every one of his senses. Instead of missing a beat or a part, Weiss' fragments are like Chekhov's short storiesthe more that gets left out, the more they seem to contain… One can hear echoes from all the various ancestors...[but] the voice, at its center, its core, is pure Mark Weiss. His use of the fragment is both elegant and bafflingly clear, a pure musical threnody…[it] opens a window, not only

Stride Magazine's Paul Sutton on "Lost Poet; Four Plays" by Jesse Glass
Sat 25 Dec 2010

An interesting take on my volume of plays from BlazeVox books--available via SPD, West House Books, BlazeVox, Amazon, etc. Sutton comments at length on Lost Poet--a work that explores the nuances of the Chivers-Poe connection, the "peculiar institution," metaphysics, Swedenborg, Manifest Destiny, and other facets of the Pre-Cambrian age of American lit. Enjoy! Jess

It's interesting to see the effect of Wikipedia on the evolution of the Net, esp. on the humanities. In 2007 I defined Haptic Poetry on Wikipedia, connecting it with several well known names and a host of others. Since then I've tracked the definition to Korea and beyond and am most recently happy to see haptic poetry groups crystallizing around the nucleus of that definition. Jess

May E-Poetry Presentation precis (Buffalo, NY)
Wed 29 Dec 2010

May E-Poetry Presentation precis (Buffalo, NY)

I will talk about the fluid semiotics of virtual world productions, in terms of Kristevan semiosis and fluid logics governing both avatar and object behaviors through scriptings and 'signage' embedded in scripts or within the visible local and fluid landscape itself. I will relate all of this to the future of human/organic society on the planet, with or without the Internet, and I will do this in fifteen minutes. I would like audio- video output for laptop, but will not need online connectivity.

Theses:

1. Culture is always already virtual.
2. Culture is always already abject and inscriptive.
3. Abjection and inscription are entangled, irresolute, corroding both truth functions and definitions.

4. Culture is all the way down; every organism is a priori cultural.
5. Culture is intimately related to alterity.
6. Virtual worlds permit logical, physical, organic, sexual, linguistic, and psychological flows, without fundamental basis.
7. Virtual worlds are the future of the exploration of inscription, culture, and the imaginary.
8. A parabola leads from virtual worlds to the true-real physical world, which is already produced, itself as virtual.
9. Physics is the structure of the true-real physical world.
10. The appetition of physical returns us to thesis 1.

ANNOUNCEMENT)
Priority: normal

RECONFIGURATIONS, Volume 4: EMERGENCE,
http://reconfigurations.blogspot.com/

Reconfigurations 4 is packed with craft & research, difference & innovation, dialogue & figuration, song & vision. Sixty-one individual publications: thirty-two poems, one interview, two essays, nine visual poems, three graphic novels, three dialogues, two image-texts, four fictions, two reviews, and three critiques. Many (if not most) of those works defy ready categorization, however.

Our work here turns upon generative contradictions. We are both outside of established institutional hierarchies of process and production (we are online in the form of a blog) and we are the epitome of such systems (we are peer-reviewed). We seek to gather and present both creative and scholarly texts—a judiciously selected diversity of genres/modes and forms of discourse. We exist as a dynamic space for readers and writers invested in tradition and innovation. Such dedication to both/and, such inclusion of opposition, is required by our project of reconfiguration.

194 messages · Fri 31 Dec 2010 – Mon 31 Jan 2011

By January of 2011 the list has gone quiet — moderated now, thinned to announcements and elegies — even as the wider world grows suddenly loud: in Tunis a president abandons the country to its square, and in Cairo a larger square begins, that very month, to fill. None of it reaches the inbox. What reaches the inbox is the patient housekeeping of a literature: new issues, new readings, and the names of the freshly dead.

The month keeps a low, elegiac hum. Patrick Dunagan posts a tribute to F. A. Nettelbeck, dead at sixty, who had once relayed with a certain pride that a celebrated publisher laughed his work away — "I'm on some blacklist," he said, and wore it like a decoration. A memorial reading is got up for Leslie Scalapino. The list has begun, audibly, to bury its own.

What liveliness there is collects, improbably, around a small magazine: "Raft 2 released — what're the odds of that?" runs to a score of messages, the busiest thread of the month. Elsewhere the old questions persist in miniature — Sharon Dolin hunting some line to the effect that poems are made only out of other poems; a brisk skirmish over whether a certain study of Emily Dickinson was "trivial," which duly summons the tutelary shades of Sharon Cameron's Lyric Time and Susan Howe's My Emily Dickinson.

That a discussion group could go on parsing the triviality of Dickinson scholarship while a distant square filled is not hypocrisy but a kind of husbandry: the poets keep the small fire because it is theirs to keep. I have arranged what follows so that each voice stands forward under its own name, its telephone and its address returned to privacy, its machinery swept aside. These were letters before ever they were literature.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Out from Otoliths — "Market Street Exit" by Caleb Puckett

Fri 31 Dec 2010

"Launch it on the cusp," replied Caleb when I asked him if he wanted his book to come out in 2010 or in 2011. So I am. It's 2011 on this side of the International Date Line, but still 2010 for most of the mailing list, so this is both the first book from Otoliths for the new year, & the last for the old.

Market Street Exit

Caleb Puckett

84 pages

Che Guevara and I met again at the annual conference in Wichita. We set to scavenging the pre-conference breakfast platters, pouring ourselves some black coffee and catching up on business. Over the course of conversation, Che became alarmingly introspective and by the time we finished our cups he made this observation: “While a person dies every day during the eight or more hours in which he or she functions as a commodity, individuals come to life afterward in their spiritual creations. But this remedy bears the germs of the same sickness: that of a solitary being seeking harmony with the world.”

At first I was taken aback, confused as I was by his statement, but it all started to make sense as the day progressed. Indeed, later that night in my motel room I was so consumed with Che’s insight that I began penning Market Street Exit as a response. Che, old buddy, this one’s for you. —Caleb Puckett

Do not adjunct your set! Do not change that diode! But by all means take the next exit at Market Street if you want to ride into the sunset of a fading empire and its Western Sizzler buffet of fandangoed language. A gallows poetics haunts this bible-belt church funhouse of prose. Do not Pascal. Do not collect toe wonder doll wars. You'll be begging your pardon for the Earth because this book by Caleb Puckett has "the highest level of recycled content. Guaranteed." —Grant Matthew Jenkins

new years resolution generator

Sun 2 Jan 2011

Hi poetics list folks, I made a web toy thing!

http://resolution.decontextualize.com/

Struck by inspiration on New Years Eve, I scraped twitter for the word "resolution" for 24 hours or so, extracted things that looked like new years resolutions, and fed them through a Markov chain-based text generation algorithm (a la Travesty). The results are a sometimes syntactic, sometimes absurd mishmash of twitter's 2011 aspirational zeitgeist. Examples of the generated output:

"Stop using the world, and just be awesome junior art director, hello!" "Not be someone can have a few, but then it occurred to me after the wedding,... maybe." "Avoid people interested in helping me out so bad. And CHILL OUT!" "Meet @justinbieber to follow me back!"

Enjoy!

Robinson Jeffers--CFP

Mon 3 Jan 2011

Apologies for cross postings--Please circulate widely

DEADLINE EXTENDED!!

CALL FOR PROPOSALS

The editor of a book collection tentatively called The Wild That Attracts Us: New Critical Essays on Robinson Jeffers invites proposals for essays that evidence the advance in Jeffers scholarship, especially since the publication of the most recent collections in the early- and mid-1990s. Since the publication of those volumes, The Robinson Jeffers Association has prompted a great deal of new work on Jeffers, most especially through their annual academic conferences. Likewise, the founding of Jeffers Studies has proved to be a real stimulus for Jeffers scholarship. Given the enlivened atmosphere of Jeffers scholarship, the time is right for a new collection of essays, one that significantly adds to the body of critical work on Robinson Jeffers.

To that end, proposals are invited for essays that specifically address the critical sea-change of the past two decades, especially as it concerns Jeffers study, including but not limited to: the full advance of ecocriticism; the re-imagining of regionalism as place studies; the continuing development of cultural studies and the new historicism; the development of the New Formalism; the increasingly poignant vector of science and literature; the advances in narratology; the glaring omission of feminist analysis in Jeffers scholarship; the similar dearth of writing about the teaching of Jeffers. The primary audience for this project will be academic, faculty and students primarily at the undergraduate and graduate level; secondary audiences would include the general public, especially given that Jeffers has long maintained an energetic and mindful readership.

Proposals should be 750-1,000 words, include a clear title, highlight a unique contribution to Jeffers scholarship, and provide the editor with an unambiguous argument as to Jeffers' poetry, the critical tactics undertaken by the essay's author, and the significance of the essay to Jeffers scholarship as a whole. The new deadline for proposals is January 31, 2011. Proposals may be sent either electronically or in hard copy to the appropriate address below.

I have a new chap, "Early Poems 1998-2005," on Internet Archive:

http://www.archive.org/details/EarlyPoems1998-2005

These are poems written in State College, NYC, and Philly between the late 1990s and early Aughts. Many were published in now defunct journals like Hinge, Siren's Silence, and Bored Again.

Hope you like them.
Many Thanks,

JOB: Neighborhood Writing Alliance

hi all....this is a forward so please don't email me.

good luck,
jen karmin

The Neighborhood Writing Alliance (NWA) is a small literary arts and community building organization with a large agenda. With three full-time staff members, and a handful of volunteers, NWA conducts ten weekly writing workshops with over 270 adult participants, publishes quarterly issues of the Journal of Ordinary Thought, and hosts or participates in 35 public events and readings each year.

The Neighborhood Writing Alliance has launched a search for a new Program Director/Associate Editor of the Journal of Ordinary Thought. Applications will be accepted through January 17, 2011. We are seeking an experienced and enthusiastic candidate with a strong commitment to community-based writing and publishing.

The Third Colour of the Nigerian Flag

Tue 4 Jan 2011

"Perhaps, the “third” colour of the Nigerian flag is derived from the confusion or resistance to the iterated sameness that tries to assimilate our conflicting values and ideas of “Nigerianness.” Perhaps the “third” colour of the Nigerian flag has always been there and it only requires the eyes of a little girl to tell us that what we see as the iterated Green is not “green” at all, that our iterated sameness is a superficial analysis in Gestalt Psychology. Our instant reaction, as those whose brains have been formatted by the patria, is to cancel out the idea of the three colours of the Nigerian flag as an error!"

MADHAT SERIES READING THURSDAY 1/13: BLACK MT COLLEGE MUSEUM & ARTS CENTER, ASHEVILLE

Tue 4 Jan 2011

*Announcing Episode II of MadHatâ€™s Poetry, Prose & Anything Goes Reading Series *

*The Black Mountain College Museum & Arts Center, 56 Broadway, Asheville

*Thursday, January 13th, 7â€“ 9pm

Poet Jeff Davis, a member of the advisory board of the Black Mountain College Museum & Arts Center, attended UNC-Greensboroâ€™s MFA program in creative writing, received his Masterâ€™s from the S.U.N.Y. at Buffalo, and apprenticed to a Kwakwakaâ€™wakh carver of ceremonial masks and totem poles in Alert Bay, British Columbia, from 1971 to 1975. He later taught anthropology and history at UNC-Asheville . His poems have appeared in Lillabulero, * Iron*, Asheville Poetry Review, the Nantahala Review, and other magazines; books include *Transits of Venus *(2005), and NatureS: Selected Poems, 1972 â€“ 2005 (2006). Since 2005 he has hosted the radio program Wordplay, which celebrates poets and writers of creative prose; it airs each Sunday at 5:00 PM on Asheville FM. (www.naturespoetry.blogspot.com)

David Madden is the author of two collections of short stories, some of them prize winners, and nine novels, including The Suicideâ€™s Wife, made into a movie in 1979, and Sharpshooter, which were nominated for a Pulitzer Prize. His latest novel is Abducted by Circumstance; a movie adaptation is in the works. David Madden has written and edited over 40 nonfiction works. A book about his work is David Madden: A Writer for All Genres. He is Robert Penn Warren Professor of Creative Writing Emeritus, LSU, where he taught for 43 years. He lives in Black Mountain, NC. (www.davidmadden.net <http://davidmadden.net/>)

Katherine Soniat's fifth collection of poems, The Swing Girl, is forthcoming from Louisiana State University Press in 2011 and A Raft, A Boat, A Bridge, from Dream Horse Press in 2012. *A Shared Life *won the Iowa Poetry Price and a Virginia Center for the Book Award. Alluvial was a finalist for The Library of Virginia Center for the Book Award, and Notes of Departure was the recipient of the Camden Poetry Prize given by the Walt Whitman Center for the Arts and Humanities. The Fire Setters is available through the Web del Solâ€™s Online Chapbook. Originally from New Orleans, she was on the faculty at Virginia Tech and Hollins College where she taught in the MFA Programs. Presently she teaches in the Great Smokies Writing Program at UNCA, and lives in Asheville. (www.katherinesoniat.com)

Robert Zachary grew up in Anniston, Alabama during the years of â€œJim Crowâ€. He was 12 when he joined the Civil Rights Movement, following the KKK's burning of the Freedom Riders' bus. Zachary began writing poetry and prose during the early 70â€™s, when he served in the military, as a means to organize GI's around the issues of the day. He is presently engaged in a project to write 490 love poems pertaining to current social, political and economic upheavals. Zachary lives in Asheville, where he works as a mediator, storyteller and poet, and continues to be active in human rights and peace efforts, intent on weaving his life experiences with his writing and storytelling, into a live poetic/musical setting that is both entertaining and mind changing.

Series curator Carol Novack moved from a Greenwich Village apartment to a mountain in Asheville last May, and is busy coping with the elements. Sheâ€™s the publisher of the multi-media e-journal *Mad Hatters Review<http://www.madhattersreview.com/> * and an erstwhile criminal defense & constitutional attorney. Carolâ€™s recently published collection of musical fictions, fusions, and poems, â€œGiraffes in Hiding: The Mythical Memoirs of Carol Novackâ€ (Spuyten Duyvil Press), is available at amazon.com<http://www.amazon.com/Giraffes-Hiding-Mythical-Memoirs-Novack/dp/1933132833/ref=cn_cr_pr_pb_i>. The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œMuseless Now Fay Wrayâ€ by Michael Basinski, with Illustrations by Ginny Oâ€™Brien
Description:
â€œMuseless Now Fay Wrayâ€ is a collection of poems in three sequences. The poetries are juxtaposed fragments composed to conceal and reveal by focus and out of focus musical constellations. There is rhythm first rather than the arrogance of meaning. They are to be ancient.

Small Press Needed for June or July in Boog NYC Series

Tue 4 Jan 2011

Greetings,

I'm looking for a small press Boog City's never hosted before for our "d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press" series here in nyc to fill an open slot this summer for season eight (2010-2011). The open dates are Tues. June 28 and Tues. July 26 at 6:00 p.m.

Below this note is our invite letter, which spells everything out.

Please backchannel any inquiries or suggestions, be they for your own or other presses.

Thanks,
David

[redacted]
212-842-BOOG (2664)

Hi,

David Kirschenbaum here. I'm the editor and publisher of Boog City, a New York City-based small press and community newspaper now in its 20th year. I'd like to invite you to take part in season eight of our "d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press" series.

The series is held at Chelsea's ACA Galleries (http:// acagalleries.com/), which is owned by the son-in-law and daughter of the poet Simon Perchik. It's a nice space, and we fit 100 people, including a nine-piece jazz flash orchestra, in it for Chax Press's event, with plenty of room to spare. The gallery provides wine and other beverages, and cheese and crackers and hummus and chips.

Once a month I have a different non-NYC press host and feature three or more of their authors to read (we've had as many as 10 for one press and usually have 3-6) for 60 minutes total. We also have a musical act perform two 15-20 minute sets. If the visiting press is able to book the musical act that's preferred, so it's truly their night, if not I can book one that I think will work well with the night. (Also, once a year we play host to our NYC brethren.)

As of this writing, Season 8, our 2010-2011 season has or will feature:

Argos Books
Autonomedia
Coconut Books
Fractious Press
Gigantic Sequins
Kaya Press
Loud Mouth Press
N.Y. Quarterly
1913 Press
No Press
No Tell Books
Satellite Telephone Saturnalia Books

The series is held on the last Tuesday of each month (except December) at 6:00 p.m. The following dates are available:

Tues. June 28
Tues. July 26

If you're game, please tell me in which order you prefer these dates

We started the series in August 2003. In our first seven seasons we've hosted:

Raag Leaves Podcast
Wed 5 Jan 2011

Apologies for cross-posting

Just a reminder that the podcast with Andrew Brewerton reading his "Raag Leaves" continues. If you click on the feed link at www.wildhoneypress.com you will have a number of options: you can subscribe to the feed via various programs or listen to a particular page by clicking on the number. One can also subscribe via iTunes (just search for Brewerton in the iTunes store.)

To quote from the Shearsman page:
(http://www.shearsman.com/pages/books/catalog/2008/brewerton.html)

"Raag Leaves" is a book of 37 eight-line lyrics - printed on the recto pages only - offered to the author's friend, the Bengali artist Paresh Chakraborty, one of whose pastel works graces the cover of these two editions. The collection demonstrates what some of us have known for some time: that Andrew Brewerton's quiet poetic voice is one of intense power. As Chris Goode wrote, of Brewerton's reading at the 2006 Cambridge Conference on Contemporary Poetry: 'the plastic resilience and the musical precision of these beautifully balanced and organised poems was utterly compelling'.

On a personal note, I find it difficult to articulate why I like these poems so much in any way that do them justice. There are parts I'm fairly sure I don't understand, despite repeated readings / listenings. Yet "Raag Leaves" continues to be an experience of wonder, undiminished no matter how often I've returned to it.

Enjoy,

Randolph.

The Curse of the "Code Blue" Motto
Thu 6 Jan 2011

http://tinyurl.com/2ekdp9c is the most useful 'explanation' I've run across of what happened to the Canadian Junior team in its stunning 5-3 loss to Russia. It isn't an explanation, of course, so much as a good indication of just what happened. Many are asking whether it was a collapse or a comeback. The article supports both quite well. In my opinion, it's more interesting as a comeback than it is as a collapse. The Canadian media, after the game, held one long funeral attempting to explicate the collapse. It was totally "code blue". Cardiac arrest. The motto of the club this year was "Code Blue". The media gave them their code blue at the end of the game.

Who knew that their motto would prove ironic? Did whoever thought up the motto for the Canadian juniors, after the final game, glimpse in a kind of literary horror the final meaning the motto would have in history? Motto as pressaging the cardiac arrest of the Canadian team itself in the third period from hell? A sense of being trapped in the inevitability of a story that they had helped write without knowing the ending and the meaning that would give the motto?

Consider another case of literary horror. In The Shining, there's the moment when the wife discovers that what her husband has been writing all winter amounts to an entire volume of repetitions of one sentence: "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy."

It's funny but it's also a moment of literary horror. He's mad! Or is he just postmodern???? A conceptual poet??? No he's mad, look out for the axe!! A boy so dull cannot but be mad!!

Similarly the moment, after the third period, of the revelation of the final meaning of the "Code Blue" motto. A little frisson of the secret wiles of destiny. A peek into the machinery of the universe.

It's more interesting as a comeback than it is as a code blue, however. This was the third straight game in which the Russians had rallied from at least a 0-2 score in the third period to win the game. These were the comeback kids supreme. ...The article I've linked to says

"Down the hall in the Russian dressing room, head coach Valeri Bragin let his players have it. He broke the white board and urged them for one more comeback like they did against Finland in the quarter-finals and Sweden the following afternoon in the semis. "After that, we have no choice but to win," said Russian forward Maxim Kitsyn, who scored his club's second goal, 13 seconds after Artemi Panarin scored his first of two."

One of the things we saw that was quite beautiful was a reinvigorated Russian attack. The Russians are deservedly famous already for the offensive dynamism of their top forwards such as Ovechkin, Malkin, Semin, Datsyuk, Federov, and Kovalchuk. We saw similarly brilliant Russian stings from the captain Vladimir Tarasenko, Artemi Panarin, and Yevgeni Kuznetsov. They swarmed in full swoop around the Canadian goal in cohesive attack. To say nothing of the stellar defence provided by the likes of Dmitri Orlov who, in the third period, engineered lightning quick puck take-aways and offensive movement into the Canadian zone. And Igor Bobkov, the questionable second stringer goalie from the Ontario Hockey League, the only Russian playing in Canada, was absolutely perfect in relief of Shikin for two periods. The Canadians did not score one goal on the immense Bobkov.

Tarasenko's one-timer, the tying goal, was a thing of beauty. He received a similarly beautiful pass from Evgeny Kuznetsov who got 3 assists, the most points by anyone in the game. Kuznetsov is the only Russian player young enough to be eligable for the NHL draft next year. And Artemi Panarin got two goals. We will hear more from him also. Tarasenko came back to score his goal after being escorted from the ice doubled-over in pain.

The Canadian team collapsed into code blue. But the idea that they did it to themselves discounts far too much the sensational comeback mounted by a club that had mounted similar comebacks in their two previous games. They were the cardiac kids, and they were heart stoppers. Score one for the Fatherland! Nastrovia! It is good to see Russian hockey strong. Canada has won that tournament too much. It is good to see other countries winning.

That game was one of the most exciting hockey games I have ever seen. Ever. Even when it was 3-0 for Canada, it was definitely a game. As the article I've linked to points out, the Russians began to assert themselves even in the second period. The first period was total and complete Canadian domination and ended 2-0. But in the second period, the Russians showed life and played better than the Canadians even while shorthanded. The game was chuck full of brilliant scoring opportunities for each team, crushing but totally legal hits, little masterpieces of hockey genius plays, and outstanding saves at both ends. It was not an ugly match at all.

Imagine the party in Moscow! Rock on Ruskies! Rock on! International hockey is very healthy. That tournament was dramatic proof.

I had a funny encounter with my cousin about the World Junior tournament. He feels it's wrong. It's wrong to put such a spotlight on kids so young. It can destroy lives and warp them forever. All in the name of a national obsession with winning hockey games. He's an odd duck. He also does not like NHL hockey or drama. Entertainment drama is an empty shell that pales to life, for him. Reality. Let us seek reality.

The reality for me is that I have rarely seen hockey so good as the final two games Canada played against the USA and Russia. It was supremely entertaining. And quite hopeful, I feel, for both the sport of hockey and the future we glimpse for both the budding Russian stars and the great talents we see on the Canadian team including Bradon Schenn from Saskatoon who tied a Canadian tournament record for the most points (18) in the entire tournament. He did better than Gretzky, Crosby, Lemeiux, and all but Dale McCourt among Canadian players. Though he did not come close to Peter Forsberg's record of 34 points. Marcus Naslund got 24, that year.

The quality of the hockey was often just way more entertaining than NHL hockey and it was dipped in the explosive, brilliant athletic energy of teenagers emerging on a world stage with all their might. And the Russians did it in a deafening arena packed to the rafters with foreign Canadians who had invaded Buffalo with all the force Canada applied to the Russians in the first two periods. It was absolutely sensational, memorable, exciting, inspiring, invigorating. Teens are of course of somewhat frailer psychologically than adults, but judging from the interviews with the Canadian players, they're taking it in stride and are justly proud of what they brought to the rink. And they left it all on the rink. They played their hearts out. To a code blue, yes. But life goes on, and this will make them stronger.

Another article says

"The Russians have often been the anti-team of late, a collection of talent that cannot be meshed. Well, not this time. Russia is a hard country, and a country of artists, and this team managed to blend them both. When asked why this team had no quit, what made it so special, Bobkov did not hesitate. "Friendship. Yes, [we play] only for each other," he said, positively glowing. "It's unbelievable. We won last three games . it's unbelievable. It's the friendship. We never gave up.""

I expect the friendships among the Canadians formed through this tournament are very similar. Braydon Schenn got a one-timer equal in beauty to Tarasenko's goal--and with a pass from Marcus Foligno as beautiful as Kuznetsov's to Tarasenko.

But they could not escape the fatal motto. The fatal motto of "Code Blue" that, all along, hid the true nature of its meaning till the end. Who is the lucky man? The ancient Greeks say "Who knows who is lucky until the end?" Indeed. The "Code Blue" motto secretly whispered of the comeback of the real cardiac kids who stopped the heart of an entire Canadian nation and jump-started a party in Moscow I would love to be part of.

The Canadian coaching very explicitly created an "identity" for the team that all players had actually to sign their agreement to. This "identity" was of a lunch-bucket brigade of team players. It served them well for two periods. But it was an identity lacking in artistic possibility. The "Code Blue" in hockey often awaits the lunch-bucket brigade facing another identity--the cardiac kids of other cultures playing for each other and the beauty of the game. The Canadian lunch-bucket identity was rattled and could not cope with the Russian art.

Which only underscores the need for greater artistry in Canadian culture! Nostrovia!!

VERNON FRAZER UPDATES: ENTER / EXIT on YouTube and AVENUE NOIR on Scribd.com

Sat 8 Jan 2011

With the help of my stepson, I've managed to correct some technical problems I experienced when I published ENTER /EXIT to YouTube several months ago. I've posted an improved version of the work that is much closer to what I originally recorded. Please check it out at:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=pVuy-L6X2OI

Jukka-Pelka Kervinen, publisher of x(Press(ed) Books has agreed to let me publish AVENUE NOIR on Scribd.com. Interested readers can still purchase it from Lulu.com or Amazon.com. Among my writing, AVENUE NOIR continues to be one of my personal favorites. I've also considered it a comparatively easy way for new readers to grasp the nature of my work. You can read it at:

call for submissions: Bernadette Mayer Folio, Drunken Boat

Mon 10 Jan 2011

Dear Friends,

Last year I curated and constructed a collaborative, hand-sewn, one-of-a-kind book for Bernadette Mayer, with submissions from artists/writers around the country. This project led me, as Drunken Boat<http://www.drunkenboat.com>'s fiction editor, to conceptualize a larger folio of work. The folio will be published in Drunken Boat's Issue 14 (summer 2011), and below is the call for submissions (drafted with Bernadette Mayer): *

Call for Submissions: The Bernadette Mayer Folio: Bernadette Mayer's writing experiments, from the 1970s to the present, challenge artists to change the world. We are looking for art and writing that responds to this notion and/or to Bernadette Mayer. Your response can be written, performance-based, filmed, recorded, visual. We seek responses through any medium, and encourage media projects. Consider ways in which your response might operate at the intersection of conceptual art, performance and experimental work*.*Deadline 15 April, 2011. *

Please pass along to writers and artists who might be interested in submitting/creating something for this folio. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Best wishes,

poetry workshops offered in sunnyside queens
Mon 10 Jan 2011

Hi all,

I'm teaching two weekend poetry workshops in Sunnyside Queens and am looking for students. I'd appreciate it if you could pass this along to interested parties.

Thanks very much,
Lisa Jarnot

One: a manuscript development workshop on the weekend of January 22nd and 23rd.

Limit 4 students

Students should have roughly 30 pages of material to bring to the class (more if you have it). I'd like to work with manuscripts-in-progress, but the parameters are wide: chapbooks in progress, full-length books in progress, or groups of poems that seem destined to fit together in some kind of larger work. You don't need 80 pages of work, and you don't have to have it in any set order. In our two group meetings we'll read the works out loud, look at themes, form, potential organizing principles, and publishing options.

The class will meet on two consecutive days so that we can build up some momentum:

Saturday January 22 from 2:30 to 5:30 and Sunday January 23 from 2:30 to 5:30. In addition I will schedule a one hour follow up individual tutorial with each student in early February. (Giving you time to make revisions and giving me a chance to have a second read of the work.)

The fee is $150, payable in two installments if you need to.

Two: An ongoing drop in class every other saturday (next meeting Jan. 15th, 3:30 pm). In this workshop we're reading the Oxford English Dictionary (next class is the letter G) and students are bringing their own work to share. $30 per class.

see also my website lisajarnot.com for more details.

and please contact me at [redacted] to sign on.

Bernadette Mayer's STUDYING HUNGER JOURNALS ...Review Copies Now Available

Mon 10 Jan 2011

STUDYING HUNGER JOURNALS
Bernadette Mayer
Publisher: Station Hill of Barrytown
ISBN: 978-1-58177-120-6
Binding: Paperback
Price: $24.95
Pages: 456
Publication Date: April 15, 2011

Bernadette Mayer wrote STUDYING HUNGER JOURNALS on the heels of completing “Memory,” her big “emotional science project” of the early seventies. In part the journals explore psyche and were undertaken, appropriately, in cahoots with a psychiatrist via two running journals, so that while she kept writing in one he could read the other. She wrote in colored pens, intending to “color-code emotions”—to see if her synaesthetic ability to see letters as colors might act as a bridge to seeing emotions. Her intentions also included recording “special states of consciousness” as an “observer of self in process.” She had had an idea: “…if a human, a writer, could come up with a workable code, or shorthand, for the transcription of every event, every motion, every transition of his or her own mind, & could perform this process of translation on himself, using the code… he or we or someone could come up with a great piece of language/information.” While an abridged edition appeared in 1975 with Adventures In Poetry/Big Sky, this is the full text of that enterprise.

To receive a PDF of STUDYING HUNGER JOURNALS for review consideration, please email [redacted]

Bernadette Mayer is the author of more than two dozen volumes of poetry, including Midwinter Day, Sonnets, The Desires of Mothers to Please Others in Letters, and Poetry State Forest. A former director of the Poetry Project at St. Mark’s Church in the Bowery and co-editor of the conceptual magazine 0 to 9 with Vito Acconci, Mayer has been a key figure on the New York poetry scene for decades.

Hi,

Paul Cunningham recently interviewed me for Radioactive Moat.

Some things said: "The online encounter of someone incredible" ... "the stench of farts" ... "Digital Buddha" ... "2 Live Crew" ... "Stanton Moore" ... "I'm incredibly grateful"

Here's what happened in between:

cover photograph by John W. MacDonald;

Praise for Kate Street Looking over Kate Street, over the rambling boulevard littered with "a permissible tryst", "a bedouin of shoes", the cagey tenderness of a father ushering his daughter into self-hood backlit by the "nuzzle-spent release of horror", one is compelled to trudge forward on the trail rob mclennan has generously broken, searching madly for "a pretty name for what we almost do." Love-worn, rage-prone, and intent upon reuniting with nature, these poems pick through the detritus of the contemporary conflagration without complaint, and deconstruct our flabby material acquisitions in search of real human connection. Never precious, these poems ask for forgiveness for their very existence in an oft-dismissive world, apocryphally offering: "I am at the end of the machine, extending whatever boundary of forgiveness that I would know too well." -- Paige Ackerson-Kiely

Re: Poems Made Out of Other Poems?
Tue 11 Jan 2011

Artists seem particularly hip to the notion of copying—or stealing—as crucial to making anything:

“If there is something to steal, I steal it!” —Pablo Picasso

Conversation in real life is full of half-finished sentences and overlapping talk. Why shouldn't painting be too? —Edgar Degas

Those who do not want to imitate anything, produce nothing. —Salvador Dali

“Whatever an artist’s personal feelings are, as soon as an artist fills a certain area on the canvas or circumscribes it, he becomes historical. He acts from or upon other artists. —Willem de Kooning

“It’s all a big game of construction, some with a brush, some with a shovel, some choose a pen.” —Jackson Pollock

But from time to time writers emphasize this, too:

 “In a large sense, one would say that there is no pure originality. All minds quote. [. . .] We quote not only books and proverbs, but arts, sciences, religion, customs, and laws; nay, we quote temples and houses, tables and chairs by imitation." –Ralph Waldo Emerson

"in my confusion, I look to older writing, as I have often done when I am confused. I look to find a clue about my own writing. [. . .] I shall regret it if those who are involved in culture no longer think historically, if they no longer turn to their, to our histories for models, for examples" —Kathy Acker

Original thought is like original sin: both happened before you were born to people you could not have possibly met. —Fran Lebowitz

60. Jerome Rothenberg
Mikhel Likht's "Processions" & other postings (a Yiddish Zukofsky?)
Wed 12 Jan 2011

Heading into 2011 my next posting on Poems and Poetics (January 13) is a small group of excerpts from the early twentieth-century Yiddish poet, Mikhel Likht, translated by Merle Bachman with the following comments by herself and me:

"What emerges in Likht's work from 1923, as Bachman delivers it to us in English, is an extraordinarily complex & experimental poetry & poetics, far more radical in structure & content than all but a handful of his American counterparts & near contemporaries [Pound, Zukofsky, Williams, Cummings] & to some degree predating most of them. It is a confirmation as well of Kenneth Rexroth's observation of a Yiddish avant-garde & futurist presence in his own early years in New York: 'A good case could be made for the claim that the best writing done in America in the first quarter of the [twentieth] century was in Yiddish. I don't think it's really true, but it is sufficiently true to be passionately arguable in one of those passionate arguments that used to sprinkle the whiskers with sour cream in the Café Royale.' In Likht's case, however, the aptness of Rexroth's original appraisal, often repeated in conversation, seems remarkably & strikingly on target.

"Writes Bachman in a brief summary of Likht's life & career: 'Mikhl Likht was an avant-garde Yiddish poet in New York in the 1920s and '30s (although he kept writing until his death at the age of sixty in 1953). Born in a Ukrainian village in 1893, he came over to the U.S. in 1913, where he eventually participated in the short-lived movement of American Yiddish modernist poetry associated with the "In zikh" group (meaning "within one's self; introspective"). Likht was both lauded and scorned by his Yiddish contemporaries for the ways in which he dared to leap over the heads of his Yiddish audience by embracing a highly idiosyncratic and often obscure vision in his poetry. However, he is a potential figure of great interest for poets and scholars interested in a multi-ethnic American modernism. Likht was an avid reader and follower of modernist poetry in English, and translated numerous poems into Yiddish by writers as diverse as Carl Sandburg, Mina Loy, Ezra Pound, and Gertrude Stein. Perhaps his greatest achievement lies in the nine lengthy poems he published that he called "Processions." Pages long, they run through a gamut of styles and innovations and could justifiably be regarded as choice examples of the modernist "long poem."'

"A full translation of Likht's 'Processions' - by Bachman & myself - is now in progress. (J.R.)"

What may be of additional interest are the two previous postings for 2011:

CA Poet Laureate: wow, we're prestigious

Wed 12 Jan 2011

*The application for California Poet Laureate is now open. The submission deadline is February 1, 2011.*http://www.cac.ca.gov/poetlaureate/main.php

If you are a poet, I encourage you to nominate yourself. I also encourage all of you to nominate the amazing poets in California!

California's poets are absolutely among the most prestigious in the nation. The California Poet Laureate is a Governor's appointee. We now have a new Governor, and it is also time to begin the selection process for the next California Poet Laureate. The mission of the California Poet Laureate is to spread the art of poetry from classrooms to boardrooms across the state, to inspire an emerging generation of literary artists, and to educate all Californians about the many poets and authors who have influenced our great state through creative literary expression.

I look forward to reading your nominations!

All poems are made out of other poems. All poems are made of words and signs. Words and signs that are in "your" poems were somewhere else before. Genetic compounds have precedence. The earth is older than we are, and grows things. Ditto our lineage. The family tree carved into a canon. Trees grow real fruit. Eat them, they're good for you.

North of Invention presents 10 Canadian poets working at the cutting edge of contemporary poetic practice, bringing them first to the Kelly Writers House, then to Poets House in New York City for two days of readings, presentations and discussion in each location. Celebrating the breadth and complexity of poetic experimentation in Canada, North of Invention features emerging and established poets working across multiple traditions, and represents nearly fifty years of experimental writing. North of Invention aims to initiate a new dialogue in North American poetics, addressing the hotly debated areas of "innovation" and "conceptual writing," the history of sound poetry and contemporary performance, multilingualism and translation, and connections to activism.

"An Evening of Remembrance: Haiti, the Earthquake" at the DuSable Museum

Sat 15 Jan 2011

"An Evening of Remembrance: Haiti, the Earthquake" at the DuSable Museum

Saturday, January 15, 2011 (6:00-10:00 p.m.)

The Haitian Congress to Fortify Haiti invites you to an evening of reflection and remembrance of the January 12, 2010 Haiti earthquake victims, and in honor of the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., at the DuSable Museum of African American History. Dignitaries, friends, and allies will be in attendance. The Haitian Congress to Fortify Haiti is organizing this event in collaboration with the Consulate General of Haiti in Chicago, the Borderbend Arts Collective, and other local organizations. There is a $15 suggested donation.

Participants, performers, and activities include:

* Beethova Obas, world renowned Haitian artist

* Clifford Kelley, WVON radio show personality-emcee

* Afro-Ethnic Folklorico featuring Groupe Dara Gee

* Avery R. Young, poet

* Tamboula Ethnic Dance Company

* Also, children and families can participate in arts workshops at the event, before the performances begin.

This event also serves to celebrate important historical and cultural connections Chicago and Haiti; since this event happens on Dr. Martin Luther King's birthday, events during this day will highlight Civil Rights connections between Haitians and African Americans. Attendees are encouraged to donate to efforts to help Haitians with ongoing efforts to rebuild their country, since the earthquake that hit Haiti in January 2010.

The location chosen for this event, The DuSable Museum of African American History, is important for several reasons. The Dusable Museum is one of Chicago's most important cultural institutions, and its commitment to presenting African American programs is essential. In addition, the museum is named after Haitian-born Jean Baptiste Point du Sable, who is widely regarded as the first settler of Chicago.

Unlikely Stories welcomes Jack Feldstein as Art Director and seeks a Music Director
Sat 15 Jan 2011

Hello wonderful people,

We'd like to welcome Jack Feldstein as the new Art Director at http://www.unlikelystories.org/ ! Jack is responsible for handling all submissions of film, video, and visual art. He's a neon filmmaker who's worked with /Unlikely 2.0/ for a long time, and you can learn more about him at http://www.unlikelystories.org/biofeldstein.shtml .

We're currently looking for a new Music Director for the site. The Music Director would be responsible for finding one artist per month willing to provide about ten minutes of music. He or she should have eclectic taste and be competent in music writing. Please check out http://www.unlikelystories.org/mission.shtml to learn more about the sort of stuff we do.

UnlikelyStories.org gets rolling again
Sat 15 Jan 2011

Happy 2011, civilized persons and ardent readers! There is (finally) a new issue up at http://www.unlikelystories.org/ , featuring:

Michael Parker comparing the history of Keith Richards to /A Renegade History of the United States/
Phil Rockstroh on the Presidency as deus ex machina
Bill Noxid on American morality and the continuing slave trade Kindra J. Ferriabough on the illusion of diversity in Boston
Jason G. Brent on how environmental technology won't save the environment
Rady Ananda on price fixing and genetically modified foods
"Political Currency," a poem-series by Francis Raven
"Lucid Dream," a video-poem by Tom Bradley with visuals by Nick Patterson and David Aronson Collage and Imagery by Marguerita Bornstein
Three-Dimensional Visual Art by Shawne Major
"Solitary Electricity Substations," a short film as visual art by Nils

Crompton an excerpt from /Epigonesia/, a novel-perversion by Kane X. Faucher and Tom Bradley and Poetry by Wendy Taylor Carlisle, Luis Cuauhtemoc Berriozabal, Frankie Metro, Carol Dorf, Richard Mason, and Steve Robbins along with /A Sardine on Vacation/ Episode Sixty-Six: Process of Elimination

Plus, in this month's fiction section, it's Violence Against Women Month at /Unlikely 2.0/!... oh, who are we kidding. It's 2011, and it's Violence Against Women Month everywhere and all the time. So check out chilling stories by Griselda Liz Muñoz, Kristen Hamelin Tracey, Melanie Brown and J. D. Rachel!

Thanks to our readership for their patience with us over 2010. We are getting back in the swing of production after the release of our first line of perfectbound books: /Soy solo palabras but wish to be a city/ by León De la Rosa//Monolith/ by Anne McMillen, /My Hands Were Clean/ by Tom Bradley//Dr. Gonzo/ by Deb Hoag, and our massive anthology, /Unlikely Stories of the Third Kind/. The workload was fantastic, the mini-tour of New Orleans, New York and Boston was wonderfully inebriated, and not everything happened on time. Some folks are still waiting on contributors' copies -- these continue to ship. We thank you for your patience with our delays, both in the books and the web site. But we're back and rolling now, so please send your submissions to the web site and enjoy the great new stuff to see, watch, and read!

Much love,

Announcing: Open Reading Period, New Submission Manager, Ephemera Issue Subscriptions

Sat 15 Jan 2011

Dear Readers,

Thank you for following five years of LRL -- to celebrate, we have some exciting announcements for our sixth issue: we will be holding an open reading period for LRL e-editions, converting to a new (way more organized) submission manager, as well as selling subscriptions for a new mail-out (extremely limited) ephemera issue!!

OPEN READING PERIOD for LRL e-editions (http://littleredleaves.com/ebooks) will be from January 15th - Feb 15th. Please send a chap or book length ms.

through the appropriate section of our new submission manager (http://littleredleaves.submishmash.com/Submit)! Manuscripts selected for the e-edition series will be available as both a free .pdf and in paperback through lulu.com. Selected authors will be notified by late May 2011.

NEW SUBMISSION MANAGER: we will also be receiving all submissions to the journal through submishmash from now on (rather than our insanely cluttered gmail acct!). Please visit http://littleredleaves.submishmash.com/Submit and our updated guidelines at http://littleredleaves.com/contact.html

EPHEMERA ISSUE SIX: for this issue we have enlisted the help of expert ephemera artists Dawn Pendergast and Paul Klinger, who will hereby be joining the LRL masthead! Miraculous and enthralling ephemera will be constructed for each poem accepted and mailed out. We are asking for a subscription donation of $30 for this extremely limited and gorgeously produced edition. We are only offering 10 subscriptions, so please act quickly. Subscriptions to the ephemera series can be purchased through the LRL blog via paypal (http://littleredleavesjournal.blogspot.com). When the ephemera series is complete, each item will be scanned in to comprise the online issue. Please note that we will be accepting submissions for this issue through May 2011. Please send work for consideration through submishmash (http://littleredleaves.submishmash.com/Submit) or see our guidelines page at http://littleredleaves.com/contact.html

we look forward to reading your work,
The LRL Editors

Stepford Wife

by Edie Abrams

Squeezed a high chair

Between the narrow doorway

Of the bathroom to set

The fan on high, cooling

Me from the shower that Does not dry, beady droplets

Forming a rash against

My forehead and chest,

Where talcum powder mixes

With sweat, to form a pasty

Amalgam not easy to wipe

Away.

Even so, it's ambitious

To put on makeup

My face nose-to-grid,

The fan's airflow

Rousing the humid

Lethargic air

Of this sizzling summer

Round this ecosphere

Casually cooling my face

With a balmy whiff of Calm, extant for a

Flash.

I dress for the party

And smile.

Michael Dickel & Leslie B. Neustadt to read January 27

Sun 16 Jan 2011

Israeli Poet Michael Dickel

& Local Poet Leslie B. Neustadt to read

at Schenectady Jewish Community Center

Thursday January 27, 7:00PM

Michael Dickel, poet, photographer and co-editor of the international poetry anthology Voices Israel 2010 will give a reading of his work on Thursday, January 27, 2011 at 7:00 PM in the Senior Room at the Robert & Dorothy Ludwig Schenectady Jewish Community Center, 2565 Balltown Rd., Niskayuna, NY. Also reading with Dr. Dickel is local poet Leslie B. Neustadt. The program is sponsored by the Schenectady Jewish Community Center and the Poetry Motel Foundation. It is free and open to the public.

Michael Dickel recently started editing Voices Israel, now in its 36th year. Dr. Dickel lives in Jerusalem, Israel, where he writes, photographs, and teaches at Ohalo College. His latest book, The World Behind It, Chaos, is available as a free e-Book from why vandalism? (http://whyvandalism.com/ebook_the-world-behind-it-chaos09.html). Dickel's work has appeared in small-press literary journals, anthologies, art books, and online for over twenty years.

Leslie B. Neustadt was an Assistant Attorney General in the New York State Attorney General's Office before retiring. She is a member of the International Women's Writers Guild and the Hudson Valley Writers Guild. She is reading at five curated readings of the Memoir Project at the Arts Center of the Capital Region. Her work has been published in Poetica Literary Journal, Prick of the Spindle, and Peer Glass -- an Anthology: Writings from Hudson Valley Peer Groups among other publications.

For information about the Robert & Dorothy Ludwig Schenectady Jewish Community Center, visit their website, http://www.schenectadyjcc.org/. The website for Voices Israel is http://www.freewebs.com/voicesisrael/

Donations for Woodland Pattern Book Center -- sponsor a poet!
Mon 17 Jan 2011

hi poetics friends....please think about making a donation to woodland pattern book center, hands down one of the most AMAZING independent book stores in the country.

i'll be reading as part of the poetry marathon on january 29th and am looking for sponsors (as are many other wonderful poets).Â details below.

happy new year,
jen karmin

Woodland Pattern Book Center in Milwaukee, Wisconsin presents more than 40 events each year, including readings, music concerts, films and art exhibits. The bookstore includes over 27,000 titles, and is considered by many to be the countryâ€™s best bookstore for small press poetry.

Every year, on the last Saturday of January, over 125 poets, writers, and performers show their support for Woodland Pattern by participating in its Annual Poetry Marathon & Benefit.Â All proceeds raised from this event will help Woodland Pattern continue its literary programming.

Woodland Pattern is a nonprofit organization, all donations are fully tax-deductible.Â Individuals can now sponsor readers online through the new â€œpledge a readerâ€ giving form.Â

Pledges can be made here.

Subject: Poems Made Out of Other Poems?

Hi Poets,
Similar to the query a while back of books being made out of other books, can anyone find me a quote by a poet that poems are really made out of /or in conversation with other poems?
Thanks.

Reading at the Poetry Project On January 19
Mon 17 Jan 2011

I'll be reading at the Poetry Project with Lisa Robertson at 8pm on Wednesday, January 19. I'll be reading from Contradicta: Aphorisms (Green Integer, 2010). Toni Simon will be projecting new drawings of the collaged illustrations she created for the book, plus other new work by her to accompany recent Contradicta.

Re: Raft 2 released - what're the odds of that?
Mon 17 Jan 2011

In all fairness, I didn't get mine recorded promptly, as I'm seriously ill, though I was repeatedly (and kindly) urged and reminded. Trying to find a quiet place to record -- my readings with husband and parrot screams in the background have become more embarrassing than indicative or fun -- and aren't we all tired of hearing and making this excuse.

All best,

"sounding portraits" of Michael McClure and Kythe Heller
Tue 18 Jan 2011

I have posted two short "sounding portraits" of Michael McClure and Kythe Heller at:

http://www.quasha.com/axial-video/sounding-portraits

Basics:

1. McClure (a sounding portrait) (2 min. 8 sec.), second in a series of "sounding portraits," presents poet Michael McClure performing a poem, including animal sounds, and an Emily Dickinson poem reflective of what poetry is. The recording was made on November 29th, 2007 at the poet's home in Oakland, California.

2. Kythe (a sounding portrait) (3 min. 13 sec.), first in a series of "sounding portraits," presents poet Kythe Heller singing a Macedonian song (originally as part of a speaking portrait session mainly for "poetry is"). Kythe reports that she refused to learn the meaning of the words so as not to reduce the direct power of the song. Recorded on August 8th, 2010 in Barrytown, New York.

Right on, dude! Because focusing on equal representation of men and women in the literary sphere DEFINITELY precludes an examination of equal representation of all types of marginalized poets.

Re: Raft 2 released - what're the odds of that?
Tue 18 Jan 2011

It has indeed been one of Raft's shortcomings that it's featured so few women. Almost all of the work published in the first two numbers was unsolicited. The truth is that I've received precious few submissions from women--in all, about 15. I can't dismiss the idea that this might be in some ways my fault, although it's by no means my design. I've been concerned about it right along.

So, since Amy has broken the ice, I'll use the opportunity to say that I really hope to receive a lot more work from women than I have so far. I'll be very glad to see these numbers even out.

All best to all--

Re: Raft 2 released - what're the odds of that?
Tue 18 Jan 2011

Thanks, Brian. I like much of the work in Raft and would definitely like to see more parity. I think folks tend to submit where they think their work would be welcome. Just glancing at your table of contents alone (not that that is the only deciding factor), I might make my way to another journal due to the lack of women.

I realize men are much more active about submitting work than women. The reasons are speculative and vary (we talk about it here -- http://vidaweb.org/what-we-talk-about-when-were-talking-about-the-count). My solution as an editor is to simply solicit more women. Plenty of great work out there, so I have no problem finding women whose work I like. It often just takes a little nudge: an invitation.

Best,

Amy

It has indeed been one of Raft's shortcomings that it's featured so few women. Almost all of the work published in the first two numbers was unsolicited. The truth is that I've received precious few submissions from women--in all, about 15. I can't dismiss the idea that this might be in some ways my fault, although it's by no means my design. I've been concerned about it right along.

So, since Amy has broken the ice, I'll use the opportunity to say that I really hope to receive a lot more work from women than I have so far. I'll be very glad to see these numbers even out.

All best to all--

Elizabeth,

Sarcasm. See James Watt, Reagan's Interior Secretary:

A public controversy erupted after a speech to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce by Watt in September 1983, when he mocked affirmative action by saying about a coal-leasing panel: "I have a black, a woman, two Jews and a cripple. And we have talent."[21] Within weeks of making this statement, Watt submitted his resignation letter.[21][22]

Hi Susan,

Maybe you could approach publishers of poetry books that you like or that publish work similar to yours.

As for me, I am not a publisher, but for query letters posted to lists (such as this), it is helpful if you send a sample poem or poems, along with an artist statement or bio. Maybe a link to your work or webpage?

From your post, I know nothing of your poems, style, who you are or what you are up to.

Take care,

Millicent

Philip Guston & Such, Dunagan/Yackulic discussion

Tue 18 Jan 2011

Heading into the new year, Post Apollo Press is about to release my first book:
"There Are People Who Think That Painters Shouldn't Talk" : A GUSTONBOOK

The press has delightfully posted a discussion between Will Yackulic and myself:
http://postapollopress.blogspot.com/

Thanks to Lindsey Boldt! for laying out the blogpost.

The book is expected to be out by the end of the month, and will be available directly from Post Apollo as well from SPD. Copies may be available during AWP @ the SPD table... Anybody interested in Guston and/or relations between painters and poets, please check it out!

cheers,

Patrick

I don't gauge male or female contributors when I submit my work. I just submit.

I have to assume the Raft editor was contacted privately before the public denunciation.

I agree about lack of parity, but once I started pushing, five or so years ago, I managed to get work out and I'm just another dumb poet (we're all dumb poets). That said, if any of those women who complain about lack of parity in poetry want to ever, I mean ever, ask me to read locally, hey. I'm here. It's a small town, sure, but there are some readings and my book received good reviews from poets with both (or is it either) sets of personal portions.

Elizabeth: I appreciate your tenderness but don't think Paul was using you or Cripples any more than he was using Jews. Because if there was the slightest hint of ill use of Jews, this listserv would have been shut down by the Anti-Defamation League pronto. I wish someone besides me would use and ill use Christian Scientists.

On a separate topic, does any one know if Deseret News is a Mormon newspaper?

What denunciation? Pointing out the obvious? You assume incorrectly and without justification.

Sarah, clearly you are having some issue with thinking I haven't invited you to read in a series I no longer run. Perhaps you should take your own advice and backchannel.

Amy,

I guess my age is showing. I thought everyone would see that it was a quite from Ronald Reagan's Secretary of the Interior, James Watt. Nope. My mistake.

I don't think Brian Seabolt and Raft are attempting to exclude women, as is the implication from your email. He's already explained the circumstance and one well-regarded poet (who happens to be a woman) has chimed in.

It is all too easy to paint someone as racist, sexist, homophobic, intolerant, &c. As poets, unless these things are quite obvious, we should have some tolerance for other poets in this community. I did not see your email, Amy, in the spirit of community, perhaps I did not read your intent properly, but I thought humor would illustrate my point that affirmative action should have no place in art.

"Cripple" was James Watt's word and I think other words express my own ideas best in that matter. Like yesterday when I emceed a celebration of Martin Luther King and edited Wanda Coleman's poem to take out a certain word. I also edited Dr.King's words, taking out his use of the word "Negro." The folks there, not poets, would probably not see either word in the spirit it was offered, but I expected more from poets and despite the events of the last two days, will continue to do so.

I didn't get the sarcasm so much as I got the historical reference. Granted, it had to be explained, since I don't remember much about Reagan unless it deals with his Latin American policies, but I get it. I think.

Jonathan Skinner & Mei-mei Berssenbrugge Read at Acequia Booksellers

Tue 18 Jan 2011

ACEQUIA BOOKSELLERS
4O19 4TH ST. NW
ALBUQUERQUE, NM 87107
[redacted]

www.acequiabooksellers.com

Dear friends,

Just a brief note to let you know about an important reading at Acequia Booksellers this weekend. On Sunday January 23 at 3pm, we are pleased to present renowned poets Jonathan Skinner and Mei-mei Berssenbrugge. This reading is free, so tell all your friends. Don't miss this one!

Jonathan Skinner's poetry collections include Birds of Tifft (BlazeVox, 2011), Warblers (Albion Books, 2010), With Naked Foot (Little Scratch Pad Press, 2009) and Political Cactus Poems (Palm Press, 2005). He founded and edits the journal ecopoetics (www.ecopoetics.org), which features creative-critical intersections between writing and ecology. Skinner also writes ecocriticism on contemporary poetry and poetics: his essays on the poets Ronald Johnson and Lorine Niedecker appeared in volumes published by the National Poetry Foundation and by University of Iowa Press. His essay "Thoughts on Things: Poetics of the Third Landscape" appeared recently in the Ecolanguage Reader (ed. Brenda Iijima). Skinner teaches in the Environmental Studies Program at Bates College, in Central Maine, where he makes his home. She currently sits on the contributing editorial board of the literary journal Conjunctions.

Mei-mei Berssenbrugge was born in Beijing and grew up in Massachusetts. She is the author of twelve books of poetry. Her selected poems, I Love Artists, was published by the University of California Press in 2006. Concordance, a collaboration with artist Kiki Smith, originally produced as an artist's book by the Brodsky Center of Rutgers University is recently published by Kelsey Street Press. She is the recipient of two American Book Awards, and sits on the Contributing Editorial Board of Conjunctions Journal. She lives in Abiquiu, New Mexico and in New York City.

Upcoming readings include:

February 6-Launch party for Margaret Randall's New Book
February 20-Bruce Holsapple Reading
March 20-Marilyn Stablein Reading
April 10 Brendan Constantine Poetics Talk
April 17 Joan Logghe Reading

Hope to see you on Sunday!
Best,

Gary Wilkie

Paul,

I'm sorry to be brief - late for work now. But I do want to point out quickly what I find telling --

I counted and posted the gender breakdown without any context. You read those numbers as an indictment without any prompt. You read them as pointing out the exclusion of women. I did not guide your interpretation. Someone else could have read those numbers as a celebration, a hurrah that so many men are actively getting their work out there and publishing. You tell me what's up.

Re: Raft 2 released - what're the odds of that?

Amy,

Good point. However, as someone who has read your posts and those you link to about number issues and gender breakdowns in poetry publications, the context is pretty clear.

That said, I think what you're doing is necessary, and certainly necessary to point out. I celebrate this as an issue, in fact, since it has made me more aware of the inadequacy of exclusion, which is exactly what it is.

A more flagrant example: a few months ago Vice Magazine released its version of who's who in new fiction. There was ONE woman, the rest (around 15, 20...) were men. This cannot be at all what reality looks like.

Admitting our ignorance is constructive, so it's worth mentioning here that I would have never noticed this harsh discrepancy had I not read your posts and links about it.

I am curious to know what the numbers say about poetry journals that have women as editors. Do we need more women'editing poetry journals? I would love to edit a journal, but I need a co-editor. Has anyone been dreaming/fantasizing about doing something like that? I Seriously.

Paul,

I'm sorry to be brief - late for work now. But I do want to point out quickly what I find telling --

I counted and posted the gender breakdown without any context. You read those numbers as an indictment without any prompt. You read them as pointing out the exclusion of women. I did not guide your interpretation. Someone else could have read those numbers as a celebration, a hurrah that so many men are actively getting their work out there and publishing. You tell me what's up.

Amy

I don't think Brian Seabolt and Raft are attempting to exclude women, as is the implication from your email. He's already explained the circumstance and one well-regarded poet (who happens to be a woman) has chimed in.

cfp. Modes of Love & Reason: A Bernadette Mayer Symposium
Tue 18 Jan 2011

MODES OF LOVE AND REASON: A BERNADETTE MAYER SYMPOSIUM

The University at Buffalo Poetics Program invites scholarly submissions for a critical panel to take place as part of a one-day symposium on the work of Bernadette Mayer. This long-overdue celebration of Mayer's life and work will consist in equal measures of devoted fandom and rigorous study of Mayer's work -- of "love" and "reason" -- and will be held in the Poetry Collection at Buffalo on April 1, 2011. The symposium is planned to coincide with Mayer's visit to Buffalo for the University's Poetics Plus series, and its finale will be a reading by Mayer herself in downtown Buffalo that night. Paper topics may include, but are not limited to: Mayer and the New York school; Mayer and the visual arts; Mayer and gender; poetic form in Mayer's work; Mayer and American regionalism; Mayer and Conceptual writing; and Mayer and small-press print culture.

The deadline for submissions is March 1, 2011, to Joey Yearous-Algozin, at <[redacted]>. Respondents will be notified within a week.

Re: Raft 2 released - what're the odds of that?
Tue 18 Jan 2011

Yes, the numbers do speak for themselves. I've been reading some of your various postings on this issue of women in publishing here and elsewhere, Amy. I don't want to keep being an apologist for Paul Nelson--he's accountable for his reactions. But to be disingenous about posting numbers like that, to claim there's no context, when you are an outspoken feminist here, well, that's not quite fair. YOU are the context. I found your original posting of the numbers, without any explanation, a bit surprising. It seemed as if you were trying to provoke, to get a reaction. You got reactions, Paul's among them.

The fact that women struggle to get published is no secret, although the fact that some men didn't know isn't surprising and of course it makes me glad that they (Ryan) are getting some consciousness raising.

The fact that bookworld, movie world, government world, corporate world, education world is white white white white WHITE WHITE WHITE white and far more male than female is criminal.

I stumbled onto this listserv three or so years ago, started reading and signed on BECAUSE it was dominantly male and I felt I should be a female presence. I felt like a sneak as I don't consider my poetry "experimental." Now, having read enough of what many here write, and shown up for many people's readings, I realize I do fit here --as well as elsewhere. But it does disappoint me to have joined a listserv about poetry, because I'm a woman and battle with women over issues on which we agree.

And again, I wasn't referencing you in my posting about not being asked to read here in Manhattan. There are many many forms of discrimination. I face some you don't. I'm not too comfortable saying more about myself. We face some jointly as women. For me this issue is real, but not new. And my observation is that women--who I love--can be their own, our own, enemy. There's so much emotion, conflict, pride--a Shakesperian gamut--in each person.

Xerolage 48 - Poemics (POEtry + coMICS) by Poemic Blog
Wed 19 Jan 2011

Xerolage 48 - Poemics (POEtry + coMICS) by Poemic Blog

http://xexoxial.org/is/xerolage48/by/poemic_blog

New work by Potr Szreniawski, Mateusz Suchecki, Nelle Hannes, Rosaire Appel, Satu Kaikkonen, Jonny Gray & Sven Staelens.

from the intro:

There are many definitions of poemics. Poemics can be understood as an art combining elements of poetry and comics, the space between poetry and comics, or a place where poetry and comics meet. Sometime poemics are classified as visual poetry, sometimes as experi- mental comics, and sometimes as both. We think poemics can be a great way of expression, perhaps that is why we create them.

Spoken Image: Speech Balloons in Poemics is where rigamarollers crunch amid the awkward bones of half-eaten word burgers! Pszren and crew fill bellies with poemics as knobby as the carapace of expired foie gras and as delicious as the misdeeds of mammy! Seconds please. —Andy Martrich

The Poemics issue of Xerolage 48 features work by Piotr Szreniawski, Satu Kaikkonen, sven staelens, Mateusz Suchecki, Nele Hannes, Rosaire Appel, and Jonny Gray. The introduction by Piotr Szreniawski says "Poemics can be understood as an art combining elements of poetry and comics, the space between poetry and comics, or a place where poetry and comics meet."

The work in Xerolage 48 indeed looks both like visual poetry and comics. Panels and 'thought bubbles' are present, but they're typically not driving a storyful narrative as a more poetical exploration of language or epiphany or philosophical inquiry or presentation of thoughts on poetics.

There's some thoughtful, provocative work here. For instance, there's a piece by Jonny Gray called EXCESS that includes this text: "He said that what gets left off is central to the design. Absence is usually more important than presence. Talk is cheap." The panels are silhouettes of ripped male torsos. With schematic diagrams overlayed in the white areas. I'm trying to lose some weight at the mo. Ya my design is to leave some of that stuff off.

And there's a piece by Satu Kaikkonen called co'nnec ti'on that consists of linked thought bubbles. and the things in the thought bubbles are, themselves, sometimes linked to some of the other thought bubbles or things in thought bubbles. —Jim Andrews

New hybrids arrive because a need for dual expression exists that requires attention. In this case, visual poetry and comics have decided to merge into a group of artists calling their hybrid – POEMICS. The entirety of purpose here is housed in the speech balloon and how it lives in any given situation. More specifically, in this sampler of POEMICS, the speech balloon is placed amidst signage and symbol, alphabet and phoneme. Speech is, of course, intimated by the balloon, but what utterance ensues is a quirky mirror of visual thought. You see what could be said about seeing, and the content of that utterance is revealed by the image itself. There have been several forays into POEMICS in the past, but this latest incarnation seems more vibrant and cohesive. We hope its legs are strong, and we see even more work soon. —Nico Vassilakis

The primary investigation of Xerolage is how collage technique of 20th century art, typography, computer graphics, visual & concrete poetry movements & the art of the copier have been combined. Each issue is devoted to the work of one artist.

From Jezebel - You're not imagining things...
Thu 20 Jan 2011

Whenever I see "best of" li
Where Are The Women At Highbrow Magazines?

Whenever I see "best of" lists, award finalists and even table of contents, I immediately scan them to see how women fared. And I regularly complain to my husband about the lopsided male-to-female ratio in the bylines of highbrow magazines.

He often tells me I am being a bit neurotic, and that women are, overall, pretty well represented.

But after months and months of my informal surveys I was pretty sure I saw a pattern, so I decided to take a look at the numbers. A quick calculation of all non-cultural criticism stories in these three magazines over the past year shows that women trail men when it comes to bylines. The New Republic scored the worst, with only 13% of its stories penned by women. The Atlantic had 22% and The New Yorker (where I didn't take in account fiction or Talk of the Town, in addition to criticism) had 30% of its stories written by women. (I didn't take into account cultural criticism because that is an area in which women are generally well represented.) Over the past year, The New Republic had 138 men and 21 women listed on its tables of contents, The Atlantic had 100 men and 29 women, and The New Yorker had 170 men and 73 women.

What's going on? Do I think that any individual editor or institution is inherently sexist? Not really. They all have dynamite female contributors like The Atlantic â€˜s Hanna Rosin (author of the magazine's widely discussed cover story "The End of Men," which was turned into a TED speech and will soon appear as book), and Sandra Tsing-Loh; The New Yorker's Jane Mayer and Ariel Levy; and The New Republic's Judith Shulevitz and Michelle Cottle.

But I don't think the numbers are a matter of oversight or coincidence. There is something systemic going here. Perhaps stories that women are interested in,

and therefore more likely to want to write, are just not considered serious enough for these highbrow pages? Or perhaps women are still too timid to pursue the big scoops or make the bold claims necessary to land an assignment from the editors? I'd be curious to see how these editors would explain these numbers. Are they receiving fewer pitches from women? Or do they, consciously or unconsciously, reject more pitches that come from women?

And then the bigger question: Why, exactly, is this a problem? As long as these magazines put out serious, hard-hitting journalism that asks big questions and tells important stories, which they do, why should it matter who does the writing? (Even if the "who" is still mostly white men.) Well the same could have been said about the Supreme Court or generations of leading academics, some of history's most esteemed boy's clubs. As long as their output was good, why did it matter who was behind it?

As an answer I think we can rely on Sonia Sotomayor's famous/infamous words about how being a "wise Latina woman" might lead her to different, and sometimes better, judicial conclusions. I can't help but imagine that there are some wise, female journalists whose life experience might lead them to different, and sometimes better, reporting. But when only about 20% of work published in some of our most serious magazines is by women, such journalists don't have a fair chance to prove that true.

Re: From Jezebel - You're not imagining things...
Thu 20 Jan 2011

I wonder if her husband actually says that ("You're being a bit neurotic") or if that's just another canned male stereotype in print.

As I mentioned before, I now notice how lopsided gender representation is in most magazines. I'll also reiterate that this was something that didn't often come to mind, and that was pointed out to me -- a revelation I'm grateful for -- by reading "Numbers Trouble" and Amy's posts. I'll admit that my first reaction was disbelief, perhaps because I'd like to think that actions and communities I devote my time to possess virtue. Part of this virtue is the ability to "check yourself."

We need a Bechdel Test<http://tvtropes.org/pmwiki/pmwiki.php/Main/TheBechdelTest> for print and online publications.

I don't like admitting that this was not something on my radar. I wish I were post-feminist and this and other realizations proves the truism that just because you don't see it doesn't means it's not there. A struggle, unlike a fight, is continuous; longevity is implied. There will always be those who feel that things have gone to far and who seek to roll them back. One day, it might be commercial suicide to publish only men, but this hasn't happened yet. The problem isn't just numbers, it's the internalization that "only men do ____." As cultural artifacts, these publications only reveal via exclusion what less astute readers might not notice: why aren't women writers/published? Or even more pressing, why aren't more women published in the publications that we think matter?

On Thu, Jan 20, 2011 at 1:04 PM, amy king <[redacted]> wrote:

> Whenever I see "best of" li

contents, I immediately scan them to see how women fared. And I regularly complain to my husband about the lopsided male-to-female ratio in the bylines of highbrow magazines.

He often tells me I am being a bit neurotic, and that women are, overall, pretty well represented.

But after months and months of my informal surveys I was pretty sure I saw a pattern, so I decided to take a look at the numbers. A quick calculation of all non-cultural criticism stories in these three magazines over the past year shows that women trail men when it comes to bylines. The New Republic scored the worst, with only 13% of its stories penned by women. The Atlantic had 22% and The New Yorker (where I didn't take in account fiction or Talk of the Town, in addition to criticism) had 30% of its stories written by women. (I didn't take into account cultural criticism because that is an area in which women are generally well represented.) Over the past year, The New Republic had 138 men and 21 women listed on its tables of contents, The Atlantic had 100 men and 29 women, and The New Yorker had 170 men and 73 women.

What's going on? Do I think that any individual editor or institution is inherently sexist? Not really. They all have dynamite female contributors like The Atlantic ‘s Hanna Rosin (author of the magazine's widely discussed cover story "The End of Men," which was turned into a TED speech and will soon appear as book), and Sandra Tsing-Loh; The New Yorker's Jane Mayer and Ariel Levy; and The New Republic's Judith Shulevitz and Michelle Cottle.

But I don't think the numbers are a matter of oversight or coincidence. There is something systemic going here. Perhaps stories that women are interested in,

and therefore more likely to want to write, are just not considered serious enough for these highbrow pages? Or perhaps women are still too timid to pursue

the big scoops or make the bold claims necessary to land an assignment from the editors? I'd be curious to see how these editors would explain these numbers. Are they receiving fewer pitches from women? Or do they, consciously or unconsciously, reject more pitches that come from women?

And then the bigger question: Why, exactly, is this a problem? As long as these magazines put out serious, hard-hitting journalism that asks big questions and tells important stories, which they do, why should it matter who does the writing? (Even if the "who" is still mostly white men.) Well the same could have been said about the Supreme Court or generations of leading academics, some of history's most esteemed boy's clubs. As long as their output was good, why did it matter who was behind it?

As an answer I think we can rely on Sonia Sotomayor's famous/infamous words about how being a "wise Latina woman" might lead her to different, and sometimes better, judicial conclusions. I can't help but imagine that there are some wise, female journalists whose life experience might lead them to different, and sometimes better, reporting. But when only about 20% of work published in some of our most serious magazines is by women, such journalists don't have a fair chance to prove that true.

Edwin Torres and Urayoan Noel at the CSV Cultural Center

Sat 22 Jan 2011

To all in the NYC area,

Come on out to the Clemente Soto Velez Cultural Center on Saturday, January 29 for "Feel the Nosi," an evening of poetry, performance, Nuyo-son and noise. Edwin Torres and myself will be celebrating our latest books, Yes Thing No Thing (Roof) and Hi-Density Politics, (BlazeVOX) and performing material from the books backed by the trademark soundscapes of Spanic Attack's new in-house band Los Guapos Planetas.

WHEN: Sat. Jan. 29, 7-9 pm

WHERE: Clemente Soto Velez Cultural Center, 2nd floor theater 107 Suffolk Street (between Rivington and Delancey St.; F train to Delancey St.) Lower East Side

WHAT ELSE: 5$ cover; cheap drinks, discounted books, post-show revelry

This is the first of what will hopefully become a regular series of Spanic Attack events at the CSV. Do spread the word! More information is available on my website.

Best,

Fwd: Conference: Contemporary Poetry and the University
Mon 24 Jan 2011

Dear All,

News of a conference in Cambridge (UK), courtesy of Ed Holberton.

Best,
Sam

Call for Papers

Contemporary Poetry and the University

a symposium to be held at Girton College Cambridge

on Saturday 7 May 2011

Proposals from practitioners of poetry, academics, and post-graduate students are invited for the symposium ‘Contemporary Poetry and the University’, at Girton College, Cambridge. The conveners hope that potential contributors will interpret this theme as broadly as possible, and would welcome proposals on any relevant subject.

Possible areas to consider might include:

University teaching of contemporary poetry

Constructive relationships between poets and university-based research/teaching initiatives

Universities and poetic traditions

The institutionalization of creative writing

The current reforms of higher-education funding and their impact on the teaching and production of poetry within the university

'Impact' and creative writing

The relationship between academic journals and contemporary poetry

Archiving contemporary poetry

Contemporary poetry and the essay

Proposals (300 words) for twenty-minute papers should be submitted to Dr. Adam Crothers at [redacted], by 17 March 2011.

This symposium will coincide with the awarding of the first Girton College Jane Martin Prize for Poetry.

CHEESE for a Public Bite

Tue 25 Jan 2011

"The emergence of computer technology has further given the photographer the opportunity to be more and more creative with photographs as modes of speaking. These days when it is possible for a photographer to excise the bust of a public figure and superimpose it on the body of a donkey, or to clean up an image of a face terribly ruined by chicken pox, is the rhetoric of the photographic image indeed not some cheese for someone's bite?"

Poetics of Place: Environmental Site Recording requests

Tue 25 Jan 2011

The site/citation audio blog, sitecitation.blogspot.com, is expanding as an audio poetics journal. Every six months, we will bring to the world a collection of environmental recordings from around the world. Everyone is invited and encouraged to send sound files.

Criteria

Select a location on the planet Earth.

Record the location.

Send sound files to [redacted]. .wav and .mp3 are perfect, but .mp3 is preferred since size requirements are more flexible. Please send nothing bigger than 12 mb, or 1- minutes of recordings.

You can also send CDRs to furniture press books c/o Towson ARTS Collective, 406 York Rd. (lower level), Towson, MD 21204.

Send a picture of the location.

Details should include all pertinent geographical information (continent, country, state/province/territory, city, neighborhood/park, etc.)

The first episode will be aired on July 1.

Deadline for this project is June 1.

Any questions? [redacted]

Birds LLC at Stain! Boehl~Browning~Gabbert~Marks~Pettit~Starkweather~Tonelli
Tue 25 Jan 2011

The new co-curators of The Stain of Poetry R
Happy New Year, friends!

The new co-curators of The Stain of Poetry Reading Series, Steven Karl, Erika Moya and Christie Ann Reynolds welcome you to the first reading of the 2011 seasoÂn. Even though we've been hosting for the last few months, we've officially been stamped with our new title and hope that you are in our company when we celebrate. We decided to kick off the season and warm your winter blues with a migration of poets. Some have moved away, some still live on the east coastâ€”either way, they're coming home to roost at Goodbye Blue Monday. Don't miss this Friday and an opportunity to get your cold little hands on two hot new books. Read on dear winter reader....read on for all of the fantastic news...

Your co-curators in crime,

Steven Karl, Erika Moya & Christie Ann Reynolds

PS: ex-curators Amy King & Ana Bozicevic continue to keep busy with their online journal esque (http://www.esquemag.com/ - keep an eye out for the new issue in February!), and you'll continue to hear from Ana about poetry programs & initiatives at the CUNY Graduate Center.

"Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books
Tue 25 Jan 2011

George, and others Please check Mr. Morse's blog to see where the "trivial" request came from. He reviewed a book on ED and pronounced it trivial and suggested that there was a plethora of other trivial books on ED out there (without mentioning any titles). I'd also like to see a list of non-trivial ED books as well, and I'll start the list off with an old teacher of mine: Sharon Cameron's "Lyric Time"--which is one of the best discussions of ED's poetics that I've ever come across. Interestingly enough, Susan Howe's "My Emily Dickinson" came out soon after and the rigour of Cameron's thought and analysis puts Susan Howe's attempt to shame. Jess

Review of Catherine Daly's _Vauxhall_
Wed 26 Jan 2011

I know that Cris will welcome a discussion about his prosody; his point about pitch made me remember my old focus on the VU Meter.

The last piece published in the last Australian Jacket, before it flies east (or west) to its new home at UPenn:

http://jacketmagazine.com/40/r-daly-vauxhall-rb-cooley.shtml

If you haven't read Catherine Daly's work, I hope this little essay gives you the impetus. If you have, you know what I mean. This extraordinary poet "has somehow found a pathway through the maze of modern life, in her work and in her poetry. She seems a kind of oracle of the new: she is not afraid of Rite Aid; she is devoid of lessons, which gives her voice frightful clarity and shows us a bit of the world’s chaos and meaninglessness with no hint of despair."

Thanks,
Catherine Daly

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books
Wed 26 Jan 2011

Jesse,

Do you mean that Cameron's book is better as lit crit? That is a 'genre,' I believe, that Howe was deliberately trying NOT to write in. And that is one of the things that remains interesting about her book— that it is not just another 'critical discussion' of a 'major poet.' It's more lively. It is poetics— thinking inside writing: one poet writing about another poet (c.f. Call Me Ishmael, The HD Book, Bottom: On Shakespeare, essays by Creeley, Williams, Stein, etc., etc.).

I personally feel, after all these years, that Howe's book is pretty great. And I do not say that lightly.

So, are you saying that Cameron's book is AMAZING? And if so, where can we all get a copy?

Best,

Mark

eccolinguistics viz.
Thu 27 Jan 2011

Dear ,

I was somehow driving over the ice and sand through the Maine woods on the way to “teach” their creative writing course the other day, yesterday, thinking of a reading by Frank Sherlock I’d recently heard on Jupiter 88, and was struck by remembering and, there perhaps, actualizing some of what happened there. To be frank (sorry), as an aesthetic construct, it’s not something I’m normally prone to indulging, but the poem is not normal but remarkable for its generous use of the word “you.” It projects outward, lands on all textures of skin round all versions of ear and crawls in—“you can feel good about” whatever “you” is, was, will be, key word being "can"—a laundry list of yous, doused and pinned along a line that could stretch forever—in the open air—a clean-slate acknowledgment of lives living lives, theirs or not—and the face of the poem begins to look like someone you’d want in your back pocket, in your closet and yes, holding your wallet, just in case. For the rough patches. As that I goes, so does this one, and that one, and point is, the experience of hearing it sticks to you. Which is somehow leading me to formulate another call for work and subscriptions to Eccolinguistics at eccolinguistics.blogspot.com, and pasted here. Thank you to everyone sending work and writing in. Still lots of room:

ECCOLINGUISTICS is actively seeking contributions and free subscriptions to its second issue, to be printed and distributed in a batch of 200 as 2012 approaches. The second issue aims to celebrate a profound transition apparently accompanying that year—the ending of the 13th b'ak'tun. What this new beginning means, no one knows. Perhaps we earthlings are currently undergoing its transition. ECCOLINGUISTICS is not beholden to any poetic or fictional or generational systems of ethics, aesthetics, ideology, thought, schools, morality. As a work in progress, it is responsive to whatever happens to arrive as a potential contribution, to working around them, situating an array of views and voices in forced dialogue with each other. It seeks to represent the conversations taking place at its point in time. It seeks to receive them, so that it might imagine what could be.

As an organism, from the plural to an interstice, an emergency, singular—fascia, bound to its cells—the one communal many.

ECCOLINGUISTICS does recognize a certain contemporary movement within poetic communities toward the need and desire for sincere literary projects affirming the individual as a worthwhile concept—the vulnerable individual who deserves another's empathy, support, and celebration. But it seeks something larger, more binding, than any one. It looks down, around, and up, recognizing the wonder to be found there. To wit, as a work in progress, it seeks its own discomfiture, to actually decognize and see, the movement is outward and inward knowing, perhaps, what it won't escape, finding nothing to that (and as little in it). It wants the impossible—transcendent reclamation that obeys its own underlying catastrophe—affirming of all things considered—a more livable place, without "us" at the center of it. It wants the impossible.

The entire human organism—all genomes and phenomes—biologic and artistic—are invited to contribute:

Thank you, Frank Sherlock and Jupiter 88, for your own work in this area.
Best,Jared

Ahadada Books Presents: Ahadada Reader 3, Available from Small Press Distribution

Thu 27 Jan 2011

Two fine poets and one worthy of encouragement were chosen and introduced by Jack Foley. Price: $15.00 from Small Press Distribution.

Contributors:

Mary-Marcia Casoly--a new name and a writer with an eye for the exotic: her series on Australia is wonderful.

Katherine Hastings--whose exploration of myth and the long poem is very fine.

Jack Foley--a long-time poet/performer and essayists on things literary in the Bay area.

Melanie Lynn Moro-Huber--a poet whose work shows promise.

Enjoy! Jess of Japan, the original Ahadada, whose opinions are--of course--his own.

Nettelbeck Magic: Re: "I'm on some blacklist" - F.A. Nettelbeck 1950-2011

Fri 28 Jan 2011

I figure its appropriate to share some of the man's words:

2 by Nettelbeck:

American Postcard

when the ghost train whines across hollow eyes when cicadas speak Texarkana sentences when the hands of a waitress unbutton his grease stained jeans in the back of no memory when the radio plays a hobo song inside a locker at the Greyhound station at noon when the children find a brown body in the alley next door to the Hotel Grim when the pink meat of the watermelon splits obscenely open when the one mosquito lights on a cheerleader’s smooth bare ass when you’ll turn to alcohol where the weathered metal sign says Cool Inside

Keep Drinking

this cheap Australian chardonnay on ice is better than running out of gas in Long Beach or hearing those antishoplifting buzzers going off right before you gotta start running again it’s like that no pussy in three years and now you’re back at the clinic sitting with this chick who’s as dull as her Goodwill panties makes you want to light yourself on fire and jump on Jesus if you ever got the chance to see him I mean a final wish situation like calling talk radio on a flophouse hallway phone and ultimately not having nothing to say no idea where you’re going with it next as you stare dumbfounded at the wall

where someone has scribbled

This isn’t so bad

Millie Niss - City Bird and Big Night in Buffalo, NY

Fri 28 Jan 2011

Blazevox recently released Millie Niss's City Bird: Selected Poems (1991-2009) edited by Martha Deed. Although Millie was perhaps best known for her web-based work, she was an early contributor to such online journals as Beehive and Muse Apprentice Guild. Many of those works can be seen again in City Bird.

Millie Niss draws from so many different poetic influences and writes in so many different tones – wistful, sneaky, sincere, outraged, outrageous, sweet and funny and snide – that it makes me nearly dizzy. This is a wonderful, whimsical compendium of a mind on fire, devoted to poetry, mad for malarkey. In rants, e-mails, poetic forms, collaborations, school notebooks, mock epics, found text, imitations, concrete poetry and intercepted letters, Millie calls it like it is and we are so lucky for it! -- Kazim Ali

George, and others Please check Mr. Morse's blog to see where the "trivial" request came from. He reviewed a book on ED and pronounced it trivial and suggested that there was a plethora of other trivial books on ED out there (without mentioning any titles). I'd also like to see a list of non-trivial ED books as well, and I'll start the list off with an old teacher of mine: Sharon Cameron's "Lyric Time"--which is one of the best discussions of ED's poetics that I've ever come across. Interestingly enough, Susan Howe's "My Emily Dickinson" came out soon after and the rigour of Cameron's thought and analysis puts Susan Howe's attempt to shame. Jess

Martha, I'm thrilled to be able to buy a copy of Millie's book online. From Geoffrey's press. He who cooked such a delicious meal for a bunch of us in Buffalo at the first e-poetry conference where I first met Millie. And hey Geoffrey way to go with the online paypal thing. It was very simple and quick to purchase the book.

So did you include the one about the horse, Martha? I thought that was such a great piece. Horse Fuck Rock, I believe it was called. I am really looking forward to the book, Martha and Geoffrey. Many thanks. Wish I wasn't a few thousand miles away from the evening for Millie.

All the best,

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Sat 29 Jan 2011

Yes, Susan Howe explained that to me in person by saying: But it's MY Emily Dickinson! She gave a presentation on her book at Marquette university and when she started explaining in a slide show how certain word groupings in the original manuscripts looked like clouds, etc., some of the English profs in the back almost threw up. She also had a hard time explaining why Thomas Johnson's regularization of ED's punctuation was harmful and sexist to boot, as it actually allows one to begin to begin a reading of ED's poems.

I'd just gotten through the seminar with Ms. Cameron and Susan Howe reminded me of the classmate who'd attempted to make a case for ED's poetics being an early example of Olson's "projective verse" and being reduced to tears by Cameron's "words like blades".

I really don't accept your categories: Howe attempts her own interpretation of the poems (weak as it is) and expects us to take her seriously, no? Why should anyone coming to Howe's book expect anything less than what they would find in Cameron's--who also offers an interpretation of ED's work.

Lyric Time is from Johns Hopkins University press and it IS amazing.

Here's an article I wrote about a JavaScript slideshow program I've been developing called Slidvid. I just finished version 3.0 of this software, and it's gotten to the point where it is fairly easy to configure and use by other people, so I thought I'd write some documentation about the software. If you would like to show your graphics in a slideshow on your site, drop me a line.

The article links to a slideshow of photos I took when I was recently in your head. I was looking at your language. You were humming, doing the dishes. The images are song shapes.

Janet Holmes
The ms of my kin

is a fascinating erasure of the poems of Emily Dickinson. It reminds me of Susan Howe's work in that both really internalize Dickinson's poetry and write out of that poetry -- though Howe's writing is closer to criticism, and Holmes engages in a project of remaking ED's work.

Well, with all due respect, it would be more interesting to me to see a list of all of the non-trivial books on ED. Actually, her poems as she wrote them are good enough for me. The rest of course is dross.

"preverbs" on subway walls: Soto Station (Los Angeles Metro Goldline)

Sun 30 Jan 2011

This is my collaboration with artist Nobuho Nagasawa for the recently completed Soto Station on the Los Angeles Metro Goldline located in the heart of Boyle Heights. I contributed "wall preverbs" as huge inscriptions on subway walls to her public-art sculptural installation:

http://www.quasha.com/axial-art/installations/soto-station-los-angeles-metro <http://www.quasha.com/axial-art/installations/soto-station-los-angeles-metro>

one*definition of "preverb" is: a one-line intentional act of language that invites configurative reading to become a singular event of meaning*

On behalve of Eddie woods
--Andreas Maria Jacobs

Dear Friends,

Early this morning the murderously barbaric Iranian regime hanged my friend, and my friend Jane?s friend, Zahra Bahrami. Her crime? To be in the wrong place at the wrong time. Even though the (ugh!) Islamic Republic of Iran would like for the world to believe otherwise. Zahra was 46 years old and a dual Dutch-Iranian national. Only the Iranian government refused to recognize her Dutch citizenship and therefore consistently denied Dutch consular officials in Tehran any access to her. And today they killed her.

Zahra, formerly a student of Indian classical music at the Rotterdam Conservatory and a professional belly dancer, had traveled to Iran more than a year ago to be with her daughter, who was undergoing chemotherapy. Foolishly perhaps, she (like thousands of others) participated in one of the Ashura demonstrations that were held on December 27th 2009 to protest the disputed presidential elections in June. Zahra, who has never belonged to any political organization (contrary to another false claim being made by the regime), was arrested and kept in solitary confinement until the moment of her death. During the entire time she was repeatedly beaten and tortured. And was once forced to make a public confession, which she later retracted. A few months ago her Iranian lawyer, a lady well in the regime?s sights for handling other human-rights cases, was also imprisoned. While just the other day the Dutch foreign ministry appointed two attorneys from the Netherlands to ?represent? Zahra, a much-belated move that may well have sealed her fate. For Zahra had first been tried and sentenced to die not on the political charges (that trial was still meant to happen) but for possessing, smuggling and selling narcotics. Drugs which had clearly been planted (as though they would need to plant them: they could simply say she had them and that would be that). Zahra did not even use drugs, any drugs, and was certainly not a smuggler. But by trying her for this, the Iranian regime hoped (successfully, it appears) to blindside Western governments, and the Dutch in particular, as to their real motivations by saying this was all part of a ?war on drugs.?

TEHRAN [says]...it is holding a Dutch-Iranian woman caught with drugs, state news agency IRNA reported, after the Netherlands sought details about a dual citizen reportedly on death row... ?One of the cases that Western countries use to pressure the Islamic republic is the case of a woman named Zahra Bahrami, who holds European passports as well as an Iranian passport,? Iranian foreign ministry spokesman Ramin Mehmanparast said, quoted by IRNA. ?(Bahrami) has been arrested by the police for carrying over 1kg of narcotics,? Mr Mehmanparast said without elaborating on the sentence or her nationality. He dismissed foreign interference in the case, in comments apparently aimed at the Netherlands which sought clarification...about a Dutch-Iranian woman in her 40s reportedly sentenced to death. ?They are not allowed to interfere in our internal affairs and our judiciary is quite independent,? said Mr Mehmanparast. AFP

And further: ?It is expected from the western countries to appreciate Iran's efforts to combat drug trafficking and even cooperate accordingly,? he said. ?Unfortunately, however, we are witnessing their support for Zahra Bahrami and they have even called for her release,? he added. ?The West should realize that if the issue of combating drug trafficking is not taken seriously, it will directly affect their own youth who will be entrapped by drug traffickers,? the Foreign Ministry spokesman said. HSH/MMN

I have lived in Iran. And twice worked there as a journalist. That was when the Shah was in charge. The same Shah who had a rather nasty secret police force called SAVAK. (But hey, aren?t all secret police everywhere nasty? They damn sure are!) Yet unless you were actively involved in trying to overthrow the Shah, SAVAK pretty much (well...) left you alone. The bastards running the show in Iran nowadays don?t leave anyone alone. They call themselves ?men of God? but they are evil through and through. Quite as the Ayatollah Khomeini was evil. I shall write more about Iran and my extended stays there in due course. And about the Shah. At present suffice it to say that the power-wielding mullahs and their traitorous (to the Iranian people) cohorts must go. As for how to get rid of them, I do not know. Except that it must come from within. As it came from within in Tunisia and is coming from within in Egypt. And hopefully will come from within in numerous other nations ruled by equally brutal and corrupt regimes.

Capital punishment is abhorrent, period. And to say it is more abhorrent in Zahra?s case is missing the point. Zahra?s case is a tragedy because she never should have been arrested, should not have been imprisoned, ought not to have been tortured, and certainly not sentenced to death and hanged. But Zahra is not alone. Iran executes people day in and day out. As does China. As does the bloody United States. And too many other countries. In the European Union it is banned. Even Russia abolished the death penalty. The rest must follow suit. Without any exceptions and in all circumstances. It is wrong. It would have been wrong for Hitler (how guilty can you get!), it was wrong for Eichmann (banality incarnate), and it sure as hell was wrong for Zahra Bahrami. Who also happened to be innocent. And thus becomes a kind of martyr. For Iran. For her people.

Oh yes, I have actually witnessed an execution. A public execution. By firing squad. In Thailand. More on that, too. Anon.

To find out more about Zahra, you can google her name. Dozens and dozens of links will pop up. (On her Dutch passport the first name was spelt Sahra, which is what the BBC is using.) Her surname had been Mehrabi, until the Dutch government allowed her to change it. That when Zahra proved to their satisfaction that she was on an Iranian death list. Her brother was executed for having a photograph of the Shah in his possession! Her elder daughter committed suicide. She is survived by a younger daughter and a 22-year old son.

RIP Zahra Bahrami. What a terrible way to die. At the blood-stained hands of a horrible regime that is as close to pure evil as any regime possibly can get.

Thank you for reading this, EDDIE

Fw: Only 13% of Wikipedia contributors are women...
Mon 31 Jan 2011

Katha Pollitt points out:

some of you may have seen this front-page article in the NY Times:

http://www.nytimes.com/2011/01/31/business/media/31link.html?_r=2&hp

As the article points out, because of the absence of women contributors, subjects about women, or of interest to women, are severely scanted. It's pretty shocking, especially when you consider what a standard reference wikipedia is becoming. It occurs to me that many of this list are not only writers but have lots of literary and scholarly expertise --

February 2011

238 messages · Mon 31 Jan 2011 – Mon 28 Feb 2011

February 2011 gathered the room around a single, many-sided question: who gets remembered, and who does the remembering. Two hundred and thirty-eight messages moved through the list, and its largest currents ran to women and the record — the rival readings of Emily Dickinson, the vanishing of women from the internet's memory, the recovery of forgotten women poets, and the sudden death of a living one. The month was an argument about the archive, and about whose faces the archive keeps.

The largest thread was a duel of Dickinsons. The room weighed the great critical readings of Emily Dickinson against each other — Susan Howe's fierce, idiosyncratic My Emily Dickinson beside the scholarly alternatives — one poster proposing that "Susan Howe on ED is like ED on herself", the reader so identified with her subject that criticism becomes a kind of ventriloquism. It was a fight about how a woman poet gets read, and whether the truest reader is the one who disappears into her or the one who keeps a scholar's distance.

The quarrel widened to the whole record. A thread on the finding that only thirteen percent of Wikipedia's contributors were women turned the Dickinson question structural — if the people writing the encyclopedia are overwhelmingly men, whose reputations get built and whose quietly lapse? — while a companion thread went hunting for post-war women postmodernist poets with a Buddhist bent, the room trying, by hand, to recover the names the record had thinned. The archive, they saw, is not neutral; it keeps whoever tends it chooses to keep, and drops, without malice and without notice, whoever the tenders never thought to include.

And the month's death made the stakes immediate. Akilah Oliver died suddenly in New York, a Black experimental poet and beloved teacher, mourned in shock by a room that had known her — "A very sad, shocking loss", one wrote, remembering her at Naropa the summer before. Here was exactly the kind of poet the thin record most easily loses: experimental, Black, a woman, a teacher more than a careerist, gone young, her keeping now entirely in the hands of those who loved her.

I have set February down exactly as the archive delivered it — the rival Dickinsons, the men who write the encyclopedia, the recovered women postmodernists, and the shocking loss of Akilah Oliver — because it was the month the list understood memory as a thing with a politics, kept or dropped according to who holds the pen. A room that will argue how a woman poet should be read, count the men writing the record, hunt down the forgotten women by hand, and then reel at the sudden death of one of its own is a room that knows the archive forgets on purpose, and that the only answer is to keep saying the names it would otherwise let fall.

George, and others Please check Mr. Morse's blog to see where the "trivial" request came from. He reviewed a book on ED and pronounced it trivial and suggested that there was a plethora of other trivial books on ED out there (without mentioning any titles). I'd also like to see a list of non-trivial ED books as well, and I'll start the list off with an old teacher of mine: Sharon Cameron's "Lyric Time"--which is one of the best discussions of ED's poetics that I've ever come across. Interestingly enough, Susan Howe's "My Emily Dickinson" came out soon after and the rigour of Cameron's thought and analysis puts Susan Howe's attempt to shame. Jess

of all of the non-trivial books on ED. Actually, her poems as she wrote them are good enough for me. The rest of course is dross.

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Mon 31 Jan 2011

There was a great brouhaha about finding "new" ED poems in the letters years back. A bit like the fellow who set Thomas Wolf's purple prose in broken lines and titling them "A Stone, A Leaf, A Door."Nothing new there, but just throwing some of ED's prose poemesque letters in high relief.

Lew Turco of The Book of Forms did a similar reworking. In all these cases the power of the language is all ED's and the gimmick is the whosit poet who treats the text. Jess

2 job announcements...
Mon 31 Jan 2011

hello Poetics list...hope winter is treating everyone well or not at all...

I'm sending 2 job announcements for Cal State San Marcos (near San Diego) in hopes they might be of interest to someone excellent on this list or elsewhere. Obviously these are not creative writing jobs, but they are solid tenure-track positions in a small, collegial, & forward-thinking department in sunny California. (Mark Wallace & I both teach CW there & it was my thinking that posting on this list might get us some pretty rad apps...) Consideration date is Feb 15, contact info below. Please feel free to distribute widely!

Dear Jim--

Thanks so much for your enthusiasm.
http://www.blazevox.org/index.php/Shop/Poetry/city-bird-selected-poems-1991-2009-by-millie-niss-edited-by-martha-deed-192/

As for Horse Fuck Rock -- I agree. One of the funniest and certainly the dirtiest piece Millie ever wrote. And editors are scared-to-death of it. Not Geoffrey of Blazevox perhaps. But I didn't include it, because this is primarily a selection of Millie's poems. HFR is rather clearly fiction. Not even of the "flash" variety (which is included).

I am continuing to send some of her work around, and am on the lookout for a place for HFR to land.

All best,
Martha

LOCAL COLOUR now online
Mon 31 Jan 2011

My 2008 conceptual novel LOCAL COLOUR is now available online as a downloadable PDF at Craig Dworkin's exceptional resource "eclipse":

http://derekbeaulieu.wordpress.com/2011/01/31/local-colour/

Local Colour is a page-by-page interpretation of Paul Auster¹s 72page novella Ghosts. Ghosts concerns itself with Blue, a private detective hired by a mysterious character named White to transcribe the actions of Black, a denizen of Brooklyn Heights. As Blue reports his findings, the reader becomes more aware of the intricate relationship between Black and White, and a tactile awareness of the role of colour spreads through the narrative.

Local Colour removes the entirety of Auster¹s text, leaving only chromatic words‹proper nouns or not‹spread across the page as dollops of paint on a palette. What remains is the written equivalent of ambient music‹words which are meant to seen but not read. The colours, through repetition, build a suspense and crescendo which is loosened from traditional narrative into a more pixellated construction.

Against Expression: An Anthology of Conceptual Writing

In much the same way that photography forced painting to move in new directions, the advent of the World Wide Web, with its proliferation of easily transferable and manipulated text, forces us to think about writing, creativity, and the materiality of language in new ways. In Against Expression, editors Craig Dworkin and Kenneth Goldsmith present the most innovative works responding to the challenges posed by these developments. Charles Bernstein has described conceptual poetry as "poetry pregnant with thought." Against Expression, the premier anthology of conceptual writing, presents work that is by turns thoughtful, funny, provocative, and disturbing. Dworkin and Goldsmith, two of the leading spokespersons and practitioners of conceptual writing, chart the trajectory of the conceptual aesthetic from early precursors including Samuel Beckett and Marcel Duchamp to the most prominent of today's writers. Nearly all of the major avant-garde groups of the past century are represented here, including Dada, OuLiPo, L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E, and Flarf to name just a few, but all the writers are united in their imaginative appropriation of found and generated texts and their exploration of nonexpressive language. Against Expression is a timely collection and an invaluable resource for readers and writers alike.

Authors include: Monica AASPRONG, Walter ABISH, Vito ACCONCI, Kathy ACKER, Sally ALATALO, Paal Bjelke ANDERSEN, David ANTIN, Louis

Re: Fw: Only 13% of Wikipedia contributors are women…

Mon 31 Jan 2011

"With so many subjects represented — most everything has an article on Wikipedia — the gender disparity often shows up in terms of emphasis. A topic generally restricted to teenage girls, like friendship bracelets<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Friendship_bracelet>, can seem short at four paragraphs when compared with lengthy articles on something boys might favor, like, toy soldiers or baseball cards, whose voluminous entry includes a detailed chronological history of the subject. For anyone who doubts how deep these systemic problems run..

Re: Fw: Only 13% of Wikipedia contributors are women...

Mon 31 Jan 2011

Yes, I read this too, and it was shocking. But this is why Wikipedia is not a reliable source for information. In my experience, many of its articles are written by zealous amateurs or zealous zealots. In my area of expertise [which is Vedic and Sanskrit] most of the articles have been repeatedly highjacked by right-wing Hindu fundamentalists.

The fact that women contributors to Wikipedia amount to as little as 13% indicates that men are far more zealous zealots that women are. So, yes, if we want to fix this, all of us feminists should become more zealous than the real hardcore zealots. Shout louder, I guess, is how Wikipedia works.

post WWII women postmodernist poets with a dharma bent

Mon 31 Jan 2011

Hi all,

I'm working on expanding a cannon centered around....well, the term that I'm deliberately avoiding here is Beat Writers--(since women were decidedly excluded from direct recognition)

But what if we create a cannon around the techniques. Are there any post-WWII women writers that used some of the techniques discussed in Howl?

--who dreamt and made incarnate gaps in Time & Space through images juxtaposed, and trapped the archangel of the soulbetween 2 visual images and joined the elemental verbs and set the noun and dash of consciousness together jumping with sensation of Pater Omnipotens Aeterna Deus

--to recreate the syntax and measure of poor human prose and stand before you speechless and intelligent and shaking with shame, rejected yet confessing out the soul to conform to the rhythm of thought in his naked and endless head,

They may have come slightly earlier or slightly later...maybe they didn't live in San Francisco or New York. Maybe they didn't graduate from Harvard or Columbia...

But they'd have spoken about Dharma perhaps? Mabe Whitman and Blake were heroes?

Who would the beats have admired had they not been so full of their own prejudices?

Or am I asking the wrong questions?

How would you reformulate this cannon? I know there's the book Women Beat Poets but that's not quite what I'm after...

Thanks for your help.

A Failed Nation as a Lost Penis

Tue 1 Feb 2011

"Since the nation in taking away our penises also loses its own, it cannot father progress; cannot guarantee freedom; cannot ensure the respect of the Nigerian within or outside its territory. The policy of “penislessness” considers those who try to grow their penises back dangerous. If you do not know what it means to try to grow your penis back, then start writing and publishing articles that criticize the government of Nigeria; start playing Tai Solarin and Gani Fawehinmi; start drawing attention to the implications of the Sudanese plebiscite for Nigeria; start calling on Nigerians to think for themselves instead of waiting for those in government to do so."

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

"Susan Howe on ED is like ED on herself" (G. T.). I like this, especially next to "Howe attempts her own interpretation of the poems (weak as it is) and expects us to take her seriously." The one thing for certain is Howe's transcriptions are more exact / precise / accurate / faithful representations of ED's actual notebook than any I've seen. Based on facsimile, of course. And from here we're off and running with the charge of sexism, the manner in which the little leaves have been treated, on lock down, utterly transfigured, obliterated white space dashes cross outs circles whatnot.

RE "puking" and projective verse, ED's letters are a mess the way O's essays are a mess. Her hand-scribbled poems move that way too...

I IS AN OTHER: The Secret Life of Metaphor and How It Shapes the Way We See the World

Tue 1 Feb 2011

In I IS AN OTHER, James Geary shows how every aspect of our lives, from the power of advertisements to the housing bubble bust to President Obamaâ€™s political rhetoric, is molded by metaphor.

For lovers of language and fans of Blink and Freakonomics, James Gearyâ€™s I IS AN OTHER: The Secret Life of Metaphor and How It Shapes the Way We See the World (Harper/ HarperCollins Publishers; $19.99/$25.99 Can; ISBN 13: 9780061710285; on-sale 2/8/2011) offers a fascinating look at metaphors and their influence in every aspect of our lives, from art to medicine, psychology to the stock market. Witty, persuasive, and original, I is an Other showcases how a simple way with words, which in the past was considered only a tool for poets, is really a driving force in our society.

We utter about one metaphor for every 10 to 25 words, or about six metaphors a minute. â€œIt is the East, and Juliet is the sun!â€ is one of Shakespeareâ€™s most famous lines and one of the most well known metaphors in literature. But metaphor is much more than a mere literary device employed by love-struck poets when they refer to their girlfriends as interstellar masses of incandescent gas. In this fascinating and entertaining book, Geary demonstrates how metaphor affects financial decision-making, how metaphor lurks behind effective advertisements, how metaphor inspires learning and discovery, and how metaphor can be used as a tool to achieve emotional insight and psychological change.

The bookâ€™s unusual title comes from 19th-century French poet Arthur Rimbaud, who believed that metaphorâ€”the equation of one thing with another, completely different thing, of I with an otherâ€”was the basis not just of poetry but of all creative thought.

In I Is an Other, Geary takes readers from Aristotleâ€™s investigation of metaphor right up to the latest neuroscientific insights into how metaphor works in the brain. Along the way, he demonstrates how new research in the social and cognitive sciences makes it increasingly plain that metaphor influences our attitudes, beliefs, and actions in surprising, hidden, and often oddball ways. He details how metaphor has finally leapt off the page and landed with a mighty splash right in the middle of our stream of consciousness.

James Geary is the author of the New York Times bestseller The World in a Phrase and Gearyâ€™s Guide to the Worldâ€™s Great Aphorists, both of which celebrate the witty and thought-provoking art of the aphorism. Geary is editor of Ode, a magazine about optimism and positive news, and a regular contributor to Popular Science. He is the former editor of the European edition of Time, based in London.

To watch Gearyâ€™s recent TED talk on metaphor, visit: http://www.ted.com/talks/james_geary_metaphorically_speaking.html. James Geary can discuss: Â· Why metaphors (in the form of visual imagery) are crucial to the creation of memorable ads and successful brands Â· How metaphors are used in financial commentary and how they can dramatically affect personal financial decisions Â· The essential role of metaphorical thinking in business innovation Â· What metaphor tells us about everything from motivating others to navigating office politics Â· How metaphor can be used to form public opinion and shape political debate Â· What life is like without metaphor, as experienced by some people with autism spectrum disorders, who have difficulty using and understanding figurative language

I IS AN OTHER will open your eyes to the secret life of metaphor and its role in swinging elections, moving markets, and powerfully influencing daily life. I hope you will consider it for features and reviews and its author for interviews. I look forward to speaking with you soon.

Bone Bouquet seeks to publish the best new writing by female poets, from artists both established and emerging. We are especially interested in work that is unpredictable, poems that have both sass and authority. We look for poetry, interviews, craft essays, and reviews of chapbooks/books of poetry (please limit reviews to those that address books published in the last two years) as well as visual art for our covers. Simultaneous submissions are fine, as long as we are notified when work is accepted elsewhere. Bone Bouquet only accepts previously unpublished work; we request first electronic rights, and would like to archive your work on the site. Please note that your work first appeared in Bone Bouquet if it is reprinted elsewhere on the web or in print.

The best way to get a sense of what kind of work we value is to read previous issues, indeed, to buy a copy of issue 2.1, which contains work by Arielle Greenberg, Jennifer Firestone, and others.

We look forward to reading your work!

All best,

Re: Only 13% of Wikipedia contributors are women...
Wed 2 Feb 2011

I think that the characterization of Wikipedia editors as zealots is unfair. Enthusiasts? Volunteeers? Certainly some topics are "hijacked."

Is that word unfortunate or intentional?

Perhaps it's that some topics are prone to be "hijacked" by "zealots"? And that the fault is not the medium? Maybe the problem of zealotry is a side-effect of the openness? Is it necessary to assume that openness is an invitation to shout and bully?

The absence of obvious zealots in the Encyclopedia Britannica, or the classroom, or the museum, is no guarantee that that a single, authoritarian view does not rule the content.

Maybe shouting and competition is better than silence, or the muted tones of arranged consent?

I do not intend to hijack the gender issue.

I think the best solution is for more women to work on Wikipedia.

Is it possible to argue that women are making more pragmatic investments of energy? In other forms of publication? Is digested knowledge and authority less palatable to women? (I mean, aside from the fact that they have been and continue to be often beaten back from those modes?)

Is there a way to focus on ability and possibility rather than disability.

(I have to admit part of my argument here is deriving from my urge to defend Susan Howe in another thread of conversation.)

To me, the most revealing sentence in the article is: "Jane Margolis, co-author of a book on sexism in computer science, 'Unlocking the Clubhouse,' argues that Wikipedia is experiencing the same problems of the offline world, where women are less willing to assert their opinions in public."

In other words, it's up to women to redress this imbalance in Wikipedia world.

ARTHUR ECHO by CAConrad & Thom Donovan

Wed 2 Feb 2011

New chapbook available from Scary Topiary Press

ARTHUR ECHO by CAConrad & Thom Donovan

A (Soma)tic collaboration, ARTHUR ECHO documents a Winter 2009 day Conrad and Donovan spent listening to cellist Arthur Russell's WORLD OF ECHO on a twelve-hour loop in a five-story Philadelphia house. This chapbook appropriately inhabits the pop music tradition of the split single, as both poets tune into Russell's masterpiece to generate separate sets of notes on occult topics like angel milk & rock salt, the nutritive body, ecophenomenology, and lyric poetry. A unique tribute to Russell that conjures a reverberant portrait of close-listening and vital friendship from perceptual flux.

VIDA'S GOT THE NUMBERS—WOMEN WRITERS WERE GROSSLY UNDERREPRESENTED IN 2010.

Wed 2 Feb 2011

They were underrepresented in The New Yorker, where men authored 449 pieces, compared to 163 by women.

And in Harperâ€™s Magazine where men writers outnumbered women writers by nearly 3 to 1.

In The New Republic, where 256 pieces were authored by men, while only 49 were written by women.

And in The New York Review of Books, where men wrote 462 pieces and women 72.

In Poetry Magazine and Granta and The Paris Review and The Three Penny Review and The Boston Review and Tin Houseâ€" publications where male writers outnumbered their female counterparts two, three and in some cases four times over.

VIDA knows, because we counted. In the last year, weâ€™ve tallied up the numbers for many of the countryâ€™s most prestigious magazines. Now those numbers are available on our web site: http://vidaweb.org

â€œOur â€˜Countâ€™ is by no means a blame-game,â€ says VIDA co- founder Cate Marvin. â€œIt was time to stop speculating that things didnâ€™t

â€˜seemâ€™ entirely fair and find out whether we did in fact have reason to be concerned. The conversation only begins with the numbers.â€

Itâ€™s a conversation that VIDA is ready to have.

A detailed breakdown of the VIDA count can be found on our web site at: http://vidaweb.org

Wed 2 Feb 2011

Look to Anne Waldman's editing work and her last book of essays OUTRIDER... Dianne Di Prima's talks... all of the Naropa anthologies (in many of which you'll find Di Prima)... etc... do you need to look further? Also, would you include women such as Bernadette Mayer, Alice Notley, Eileen Myles--- wonderful "tradition" of practice there.... Eleni Sikelianos, Brenda Coultas...

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Wed 2 Feb 2011

ED suffered from serious problems with her vision for years--that's one useful point to keep in mind when considering "non-sexist" transcriptions of her texts. She also apparently sometimes wrote in the near dark--and there is indeed a draft of a poem with lines that run off the page.

Most of the poems were worksheets, which explains the word lists included with the poems. You'll find something similar in the manuscripts of other poets: gaps and possible insertions. Though the idea of an open-ended, interactive poem is an intriguing one, and ED was certainly bright enough to have invented a poetics that would have allowed it, given the times in which she wrote and her own habits of reading and writing, I don't believe that was her intention.

Thomas Johnson's clarifications of Ed's poems allowed scholarship, including Howe's, to proceed. Up to the Johnson text, there were "correct" versions coming from the Vinnie/Austin Dickinson/Todd manuscripts vs. the Susan Gilbert & daughter manuscripts side of the war between the houses. (The whole fascinating story is laid out in the book Ancestors' Brocades.) Far from being a sexist projecting maleness on female texts, Johnson made possible the serious Dickinson scholarship that only really began in the 1960's.

Howe did a service, by directing us back to the materiality of Dickinson's texts. That's important, but suggesting that the politics of gender had anything to do with Johnson's edition is hard to justify. The point is--one has to begin to begin--and Johnson did just that. I think everyone involved in Dickinson scholarship owes Johnson a great deal because without his collecting and clarifying the corpus, the full range of Ed's subject matter and the breath-taking sweep of her mind had not been apparent.

Those Marquette professors were really outraged by Howe's impressionistic interpretations of HER Emily Dickinson, as well as by the gender stuff and Thomas Johnson. I understood their outrage. I like Howe's poetry, but I think her take on Dickinson allows us to turn away from the text itself and see what's not really there--and that--in Cameron's seminar at Johns Hopkins--was something this amazing mind did not allow us to do. She said that that mode of non-dealing with the text--that impressionistic mode--was what had plagued ED's work up to the start of the 1960's. Once again take a look at Lyric Time is an amazing book.

From what I've read of Susan Howe's poetry--I don't see any similarities between her lapidary, "flat" style and ED's luminosities. Lorine Niedecker has also be called a 20th century Emily Dickinson and outside of the fact that she was a she and wrote shorter poems and wrote about nature, her "flat" style seems closer to Stephen Crane's "pills" than ED's poems.

The one thing for certain is Howe's transcriptions are more exact / precise / accurate / faithful representations of ED's actual notebook than any I've seen. Based on facsimile, of course. And from here we're off and running with the charge of sexism, the manner in which the little leaves have been treated, on* lock down, utterly transfigured, obliterated white space dashes cross outs circles whatnot.

RE "puking" and projective verse, ED's letters are a mess the way O's essays are a mess. Her hand-scribbled poems move that way too...

Yes, Susan Howe explained that to me in person by saying: But it's MY Emily Dickinson! She gave a presentation on her book at Marquette university and when she started explaining in a slide show how certain word groupings in the original manuscripts looked like clouds, etc., some of the English profs in the back almost threw up. She also had a hard time explaining why Thomas Johnson's regularization of ED's punctuation was harmful and sexist to boot, as it actually allows one to begin to begin a reading of ED's poems.

I'd just gotten through the seminar with Ms. Cameron and Susan Howe reminded me of the classmate who'd attempted to make a case for ED's poetics being an early example of Olson's "projective verse" and being reduced to tears by Cameron's "words like blades".

I really don't accept your categories: Howe attempts her own interpretation of the poems (weak as it is) and expects us to take her seriously, no? Why should anyone coming to Howe's book expect anything less than what they would find in Cameron's--who also offers an interpretation of ED's work.

Lyric Time is from Johns Hopkins University press and it IS amazing.

Sorry if it was not clear, it was my seminar mate who was driven to tears by Cameron--not Susan Howe. The Hopkins seminar started out "standing room only" and by the end was reduced to a handful of stalwarts. I loved it. Jess

In much the same way that photography forced painting to move in new directions, the advent of the World Wide Web, with its proliferation of easily transferable and manipulated text, forces us to think about writing, creativity, and the materiality of language in new ways. In Against Expression, editors Craig Dworkin and Kenneth Goldsmith present the most innovative works responding to the challenges posed by these developments. Charles Bernstein has described conceptual poetry as "poetry pregnant with thought." Against Expression, the premier anthology of conceptual writing, presents work that is by turns thoughtful, funny, provocative, and disturbing. Dworkin and Goldsmith, two of the leading spokespersons and practitioners of conceptual writing, chart the trajectory of the conceptual aesthetic from early precursors including Samuel Beckett and Marcel Duchamp to the most prominent of today's writers. Nearly all of the major avant-garde groups of the past century are represented here, including Dada, OuLiPo, L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E, and Flarf to name just a few, but all the writers are united in their imaginative appropriation of found and generated texts and their exploration of nonexpressive language. Against Expression is a timely collection and an invaluable resource for readers and writers alike.

Authors include: Monica AASPRONG, Walter ABISH, Vito ACCONCI, Kathy ACKER, Sally ALATALO, Paal Bjelke ANDERSEN, David ANTIN, Louis ARAGON, Nathan AUSTIN, J. G. BALLARD, Fiona BANNER, Derek BEAULIEU, Samuel BECKETT, Caroline BERGVALL, Charles BERNSTEIN, Ted BERRIGAN, Jen BERVIN, Gregory BETTS, Christian BÖK, Marie BUCK, William S. Most of the moderator slapdowns for sources and Npov issues I get are from the fairer sex. ;-) Theres no shortage of women among Irelands wikipedia mods. ON the poetry front, there is a severe shortage of female rhyming poets, New Formalists as yed call them stateside. Of the gay women poets, Catherina Behan is the leading spoken word poet, Sarah Marie Griffen leads the posse for the straight ladies. One exception is Sandra Harris who does a fantastic line in lewd and lovely naughty rhyming poems detailing male shortcomings in the bedroom! Google the Glor Sessions in Dublin for same...

highjacked by right-wing Hindu fundamentalists.

The fact that women contributors to Wikipedia amount to as little as 13%

As the article points out, because of the absence of women contributors, subjects about women, or of interest to women, are severely scanted. It's pretty shocking, especially when you consider what a standard reference

Re: Fw: Only 13% of Wikipedia contributors are women...

Wed 2 Feb 2011

Bravely stated, Amy. The hostility is there. So we stay off line. We don't answer list serves. We don't get promotions. We don't TRY to compete. We don't expect publication, really. We know when it's not "our game." Every attempt to overcome -- is a huge effort to overcome.

We get tired.

Is this a world of our own making? Perhaps. But until EVERYONE addresses the politics, women will be more valued as baby-makers and not text-makers. We will continue to live in our own shadows (with a few brave exceptions). We will continue to fight every step -- for what should be obvious: equal consideration and full artist / thinking-being humanity.

It continues to be an astounding phenomena, this subtle and not-so-subtle prejudice well into the 21st century (only, really, a number). In some ways, it appears to be getting worse out there in this decade for women. The consciousness is: oh, we've already solved that problem. So, let's not seek out the women writers and the women's perspectives into our magazines. After all, that is old 70's stuff. And we who keep raising the issues: we are the "whiners."

Thanks for giving me fodder for my introduction tonight to my graduate seminar in Women's Experimental Poetics. I hate that we have to have these classes, by the way, that separate the women from the Boys. And yet I teach them. The world, contrary to popular expectation, is not yet remade ... in a supposedly post-feminist society.

I look forward to the hostility provoked for having expressed my opinions in the matter.

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Wed 2 Feb 2011

I'd love to know more about, guesses even, about Emily Dickinson's own potential library. What would have constituted the 'trivia' for her? We already have a direction with Martha Werner's book on the ephemeral poems and 'scatters.' I'm curious though about the books and essays that her various interlocutors may have brought her way. I wonder if someone here has a find they'd like to share.

On Wed, Feb 2, 2011 at 1:07 PM, Jesse Glass <[redacted]> wrote:

> ED suffered from serious problems with her vision for years--that's one useful point to keep in mind when considering "non-sexist" transcriptions of her texts. She also apparently sometimes wrote in the near dark--and there is indeed a draft of a poem with lines that run off the page.
>
> Most of the poems were worksheets, which explains the word lists included with the poems. You'll find something similar in the manuscripts of other poets: gaps and possible insertions. Though the idea of an open-ended, interactive poem is an intriguing one, and ED was certainly bright enough to have invented a poetics that would have allowed it, given the times in which she wrote and her own habits of reading and writing, I don't believe that was her intention.
>
> Thomas Johnson's clarifications of Ed's poems allowed scholarship, including Howe's, to proceed. Up to the Johnson text, there were "correct" versions coming from the Vinnie/Austin Dickinson/Todd manuscripts vs. the Susan Gilbert & daughter manuscripts side of the war between the houses. (The whole fascinating story is laid out in the book Ancestors' Brocades.) Far from being a sexist projecting maleness on female texts, Johnson made possible the serious Dickinson scholarship that only really began in the 1960's.
>
> Howe did a service, by directing us back to the materiality of Dickinson's texts. That's important, but suggesting that the politics of gender had anything to do with Johnson's edition is hard to justify. The point is--one has to begin to begin--and Johnson did just that. I think everyone involved in Dickinson scholarship owes Johnson a great deal because without his collecting and clarifying the corpus, the full range of Ed's subject matter and the breath-taking sweep of her mind had not been apparent.
> Those Marquette professors were really outraged by Howe's impressionistic interpretations of HER Emily Dickinson, as well as by the gender stuff and Thomas Johnson. I understood their outrage. I like Howe's poetry, but I think her take on Dickinson allows us to turn away from the text itself and see what's not really there--and that--in Cameron's seminar at Johns Hopkins--was something this amazing mind did not allow us to do. She said that that mode of non-dealing with the text--that impressionistic mode--was what had plagued ED's work up to the start of the 1960's. Once again take a look at Lyric Time is an amazing book.

From what I've read of Susan Howe's poetry--I don't see any similarities between her lapidary, "flat" style and ED's luminosities. Lorine Niedecker has also be called a 20th century Emily Dickinson and outside of the fact that she was a she and wrote shorter poems and wrote about nature, her "flat" style seems closer to Stephen Crane's "pills" than ED's poems.

"Susan Howe on ED is like ED on herself" (G. T.). I like this, especially next to "Howe attempts her own interpretation of the poems (weak as it is) and expects us to take her seriously." The one thing for certain is Howe's transcriptions are more exact / precise / accurate / faithful representations of ED's actual notebook than any I've seen. Based on facsimile, of course. And from here we're off and running with the charge of sexism, the manner in which the little leaves have been treated, on lock down, utterly transfigured, obliterated white space dashes cross outs circles whatnot.

RE "puking" and projective verse, ED's letters are a mess the way O's essays are a mess. Her hand-scribbled poems move that way too...

post WWII women postmodernist poets with a dharma bent

Wed 2 Feb 2011

Of course there are the obvious contemporary poet/dharma practitioners--Diane diPrima, Joanne Kyger, then Anne Waldman, Patti Smith and Barbara Moraff--all Buddhist practitioners. Then, there are legions of poets (both men and women) who studied with Allen over the years at Naropa, Brooklyn College and elsewhere where they were introduced to his pedagogy. Personally, I think its a great idea to move beyond the Beat boundaries and focus on women poets practicing the dharma who were influenced by him since Ginsberg's progression as a dharma practitiioner and teacher at the Jack Kerouac School which he co-founded with Anne Waldman went beyond earlier 'Beat' limitations. He mentored a lot of men AND women poets. I count myself among his many students both in the dharma and poetics during the years I knew him at Naropa (1983-89) and then in his office as an employee from 1989-1994.

There are many links online to his dharma Poetics teaching materials including his Mind Writing Slogans and other handouts. The Mind Writing Slogans were developed out of his more worldly Cosmopolitan Greetings to embody the traditional Buddhist tripartite logic of ground, path and fruition. As Patrick notes many women were influenced or taught by him who may not necessarily be dharma practitioners.

Years ago a friend slipped me a cassette of a young Om Khalsoum recorded live in what sounds like a cafe full of appreciative audience members - I was told that members of her family provided the musical accompaniment.

I've never heard Khaltsoum sound so secular and sexy. The sound quality of the recording isn't that great, but who cares? Her voice is youthful and exquisite.

I made a cd of it (about 38 minutes long) and managed to create a .wav file - it's pretty large, but it's available for the downloading here:

> In much the same way that photography forced painting to move in new directions, the advent of the World Wide Web, with its proliferation of easily transferable and manipulated text, forces us to think about writing, creativity, and the materiality of language in new ways. In Against Expression, editors Craig Dworkin and Kenneth Goldsmith present the most innovative works responding to the challenges posed by these developments. Charles Bernstein has described conceptual poetry as "poetry pregnant with thought." Against Expression, the premier anthology of conceptual writing, presents work that is by turns thoughtful, funny, provocative, and disturbing. Dworkin and Goldsmith, two of the leading spokespersons and practitioners of conceptual writing, chart the trajectory of the conceptual aesthetic from early precursors including Samuel Beckett and Marcel Duchamp to the most prominent of today's writers. Nearly all of the major avant-garde groups of the > past century are represented here, including Dada, OuLiPo, L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E, and Flarf to name just a few, but all the writers are united in their imaginative appropriation of found and generated texts and their exploration of nonexpressive language. Against Expression is a timely collection and an invaluable resource for readers and writers alike.

Re: post WWII women postmodernist poets with a dharma bent

Wed 2 Feb 2011

Sorry toÂ sound "corrective", but there is a fundamental misconception in the US Â about the word Â "dharma".

For example, when we say "dharma practitioner" we generally mean "buddhist practitioner" which leads many to believe that "dharma" is virtually synonymous with "buddhism", or that it is a "buddhist" word/term.

"dharma" isÂ originally a Sanskrit word used extensively in the Upanishads, Puranas, Brahmasutra etc...

and in almost all the 20+ Indian languages. "dharma", today, on the surface means "religion".

Its used in the Buddhist texts too like thousands of other words drawn from Sanskrit.

And I also sincerely doubt if Kerouac and Snyder had a profound understanding of "dharma".

Subject: post WWII women postmodernist poets with a dharma bent

Of course there are the obvious contemporary poet/dharma practitioners--Diane diPrima, Joanne Kyger, then Anne Waldman, Patti Smith and Â Barbara Moraff--all Buddhist practitioners. Â Then, there are legions of poets (both men and women) Â who studied with Allen over the years at Naropa, Brooklyn College and elsewhere where they were introduced to his pedagogy. Personally, I think its a great idea to move beyond the Beat boundaries and focus on women poets practicing the dharma who were influenced by him since Ginsberg's progression as a dharma practitiioner and teacher at the Jack Kerouac School which he co-founded with Anne Waldman went beyond earlier 'Beat' limitations. He mentored a lot of men AND women poets. I count myself among his many students both in the dharma and poetics during the years I knew him at Naropa (1983-89) and then in his office as an employee from 1989-1994.

There are many links online to his dharma Poetics teaching materials including Â his Mind Writing Slogans and other handouts. The Mind Writing Slogans were developed out of his more worldly Cosmopolitan Greetings to embody the traditional Buddhist tripartite logic of ground, path and fruition. As Patrick notes many women were influenced or taught by him who may not necessarily be dharma practitioners.

The Dickinson family's library is at Harvard's Houghton Library, and it's now being digitized, complete with editorial notes calling attention to things like the books that Dickinson cut up for illustrations that she sewed into her letters with tiny loops of pink thread.

And thanks to Jesse Glass for his tribute to Thomas H. Johnson. It's true that a Johnson text brought Sharon Cameron to grief at one point in _Lyric Time_, where her densely argued discussion of what looks like a break in "I tie my hat, I crease my shawl" (Johnson's poem no. 443) is based entirely on a transcription error. As R. W. Franklin had already demonstrated by the time Cameron wrote, J443 looks as if it breaks in the middle because it consists of the end of one poem attached to the beginning of another. Still, somebody had to produce the first real edition of Dickinson, and that somebody was Johnson.

While we're at it (and as long as we're talking about women and Wikipedia), let's also remember Johnson's collaborator Theodora Ward, who contributed the Johnson edition's extremely useful subject index. The 1998 Franklin edition supersedes Johnson's, but because it's strictly an exercise in textual scholarship it doesn't even have a subject index. Johnson and Ward never forgot that the poems are poems.

I discuss Todd-Higginson, Bianchi, Johnson, and Franklin in my "Bibliographical Essay," in _A Historical Guide to Emily Dickinson_, ed. Vivian R. Pollak (Oxford University Press, 2004). Shameless commercial: every book in Oxford's Historical Guide series has a chapter boringly titled "Bibliographical Essay," but Dickinson's publication history is not just interesting but luridly, soap-operatically interesting. Lyndall Gordon's new biography of Dickinson, _Lives Like Loaded Guns_ (Viking, 2010), brings the history up to date with the story of how the manuscripts got to Harvard, but unfortunately this book can't be relied on. I mention some reasons on my blog at Chicago Review: Newly posted essays + subscription offer

Wed 2 Feb 2011

Two provocative essays from the current issue of Chicago Review, "55:3/4: Essays for Robert von Hallberg," are now viewable online: Keith Tuma's "After the Bubble" and Peter O'Leary's "Apocalypticism: A Way Forward for Poetry." In very different ways, these essays address the disappearance of the American avant-garde and its relation to program culture. We're interested in hearing what readers think of these essays, so drop us a letter (by email or mail mail) for possible inclusion in the upcoming issue.

Also, for a limited time, subscribe for one year ($25 in the US) and receive the current issue for free. Your first paid issue is in production now and due out in the spring: "56:1, New Italian Writing," a survey of exciting work by young Italian poets, critics, and fiction writers. Please mention this offer in the "Comments" section of the online order form.

thanks so much for this Camille.

In 1987 Sianed Jones and myself traveled in the oases of the Western Sahara with violin and voice and her terrific voice, playing in cafes by night and being taught Om Khalsoum tunes by day to playback in the evenings . . i've loved the sinew of these tunes . . much like the shifting sands in the desert (i know that a pathetic way of describing it but travel those roads and you will understand how it works . . one day the road has to go this way because of the sands and another day another route must be taken because the sands have moved). I'd recommend Dimi Mint Abba from Mauritania and Fanta Damba from Mali along similar lines. But Om Khalsoum is surely the progenitor and on later excursions her band gets downright funky!

Glad to hear that Irish women poets are out there fighting hard and making waves (being part Irish myself, if an American hybrid version).

But please note that women are NOT the "fairer sex." Never have been, never will be. Think about the assumptions such a phrase implies. Does the "fair sex" write poetry? What kind? Does "it" have a voice? "Fair" -- according to whom, whose value, whose gaze?

yes to what p dunagan said…

jess, what you’re saying is fine, but the whole thing hinges on the idea that dickinson, lacking an inevitably male editor, was not already her own fully realized artist / writer. despite the dark (literally and sic) there’s a remarkable consistency in that hand, noted by many…

"Most of the poems were worksheets, which explains the word lists included with the poems…the idea of an open-ended, interactive poem…ED was certainly bright enough to have invented a poetics that would have allowed it…"

which, apparently, wasn’t allowed -- hence howe.

"far from being a sexist projecting maleness on female texts, Johnson made possible the serious Dickinson scholarship"

i think it's important to distinguish between the character and something more systemic. johnson made whatever possible, sure, by rewriting the work. return to points above, where a "serious" reading of d's work apparently requires an intervention, "clarifying" the "breath-taking sweep of her mind" for us and, ostensibly then, herself.

re "starting somewhere," it's important to note howe sought to undo, go back...

> Most of the poems were worksheets, which explains the word lists included with the poems. You'll find something similar in the manuscripts of other poets: gaps and possible insertions. Though the idea of an open-ended, interactive poem is an intriguing one, and ED was certainly bright enough to have invented a poetics that would have allowed it, given the times in which she wrote and her own habits of reading and writing, I don't believe that was her intention.

Up to the Johnson text, there were "correct" versions coming from the Vinnie/Austin Dickinson/Todd manuscripts vs. the Susan Gilbert & daughter manuscripts side of the war between the houses. (The whole fascinating story is laid out in the book Ancestors' Brocades.) Far from being a sexist projecting maleness on female texts, Johnson made possible the serious Dickinson scholarship that only really began in the 1960's.*

That's important, but suggesting that the politics of gender had anything to do with Johnson's edition is hard to justify. The point is--one has to begin to begin--and Johnson did just that. I like Howe's poetry, but I think her take on Dickinson allows us to turn away from the text itself and see what's not really there--and that--in Cameron's seminar at Johns Hopkins--was something this amazing mind did not allow us to do. She said that that mode of non-dealing with the text--that impressionistic mode--was what had plagued ED's work up to the start of the 1960's. Once again take a look at Lyric Time is an amazing book.*

Subject: Re: for Om Khalsoum fans (CA Conrad?)

thanks so much for this Camille.

In 1987 Sianed Jones and myself traveled in the oases of the Western Sahara with violin and voice and her terrific voice, playing in cafes by night and being taught Om Khalsoum tunes by day to playback in the evenings . . i've loved the sinew of these tunes . . much like the shifting sands in the desert (i know that a pathetic way of describing it but travel those roads and you will understand how it works . . one day the road has to go this way because of the sands and another day another route must be taken because the sands have moved). I'd recommend Dimi Mint Abba from Mauritania and Fanta Damba from Mali along similar lines. But Om Khalsoum is surely the progenitor and on later excursions her band gets downright funky!

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Thu 3 Feb 2011

Well sure, Jonathan, this is what scholarship is all about. Good that the mistake was uncovered and that we're brought that much closer to an understanding of ED's work. Surely what Johnson and Cameron did was provisional scholarship of the 1950's and 1980's--It appears that you have surpassed both. I salute you.

It's true that a Johnson text brought Sharon Cameron to grief at one point in _Lyric Time_, where her densely argued discussion of what looks like a break in "I tie my hat, I crease my shawl" (Johnson's poem no. 443) is based entirely on a transcription error. As R. W. Franklin had already demonstrated by the time Cameron wrote, J443 looks as if it breaks in the middle because it consists of the end of one poem attached to the beginning of another. Still, somebody had to produce the first real edition of Dickinson, and that somebody was Johnson.*

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Thu 3 Feb 2011

Hi Jared,

Points more than understood.

First I think it's important to say that ANY discussion about ED on this list is a good one. Her work is vital for all of us. My experience of S. Cameron's class was necessary for me, in retrospect, because it taught me to read a text closely and not to rely on history, biography, politics or my own imagination for an answer. We identified the riddling structure of some of ED's poems, her startling use of the English Metaphysicals and her use of capitalization to create "near"-metaphor. But more than that, Cameron took me to places in ED's work that I did not suspect existed and showed me how truly original she is. She showed me the profound questioning of science and religion that went on in her work, the presence-in-absence of Dickinson most powerful poems, and the use of violent and explosive images. In addition, Cameron provided a closely-reasoned context for ED's work, as well as a tremendous range of resources for the study of ED's poetry and prose. She absolutely knew her stuff and she was absolutely keen to impart it sometimes in a direct manner that was hard for some students to take. The boundaries were clear. We were not allowed to bring projective verse into the seminar, or visual poetry, or to interpret the dots, lines, and other methods of punctuation as marks that might direct one to "sing" a Dickinson text, or to point to word lists and call them clouds or integral parts of the performance of the poem (as interesting as this idea may be--Richard Howard pointed this out in another class in another context). Johnson was not deified in the seminar, but he was seen exactly for what he was--a collector of all the texts then extant, and someone who provided a clear place to start.

Dickinson published what--5 poems in her life time--maybe 7, but I think it's 5--and her work was edited and edited badly by Mabel Loomis Todd and Susan Gilbert Dickinson's side of the war between the houses. These were the people who truly tried to intervene and "rewrite" Dickinson--not Johnson. These editings continued in the anthologies that appeared through the 1950's and even into the 60's. It wasn't until Johnson collected all of the poems that we began to get a real picture of Dickinson and the range of her work. Up to then, of course, the dozen famous poems appeared in their "corrected" version along with a healthy dose of the Myth of Emily Dickinson.

My question is, before Johnson and his "sexist" agenda (!), ED's work was being handled with a lot less textual care, and was distorted by those men and women who wished to glorify the myth of ED at the expense of any real understanding of her work.

If one did not attempt to clarify the problematic handwriting, the possible sequences in the fascicles, the punctuation, which probably had more to do with bad eyesight than anything else, how could one begin to understand anything of Dickinson and do what scholarship is supposed to do: bring us closer to an appreciation and an understanding of the author's work.

If one lacks the ability to read a text with precision, then photographs of problematic handwriting will not help that person at all. ED's work is extremely difficult even with provisional clarifications of text.

This is the question I asked Susan Howe herself: How does one present a "non-sexist" (in her words) non-interventionist ED? It seems to me that the only way we could is by presenting photographs of the texts as they are and refraining from all commentary.

But here's my point: I believe that Susan Howe presents the verso of the same old Emily Dickinson myth: she allows those who do not wish to come to grips with the work itself to turn away in the name of something else. Instead of the giddy old spinster with the brilliant mind who dresses all in white and writes so well about nature and death, we have the "poet" held back by family, friends, males, society, who leaves behind texts that should be seen for themselves and for themselves only and in exactly the condition in which they were left, maugre bad eyesight and writing in the dark, and that somehow this will allow us to see word clouds and almost anything else we want to retrospectively see in the manuscripts of that poet and consider them part of "my" Emily Dickinson and no one else'. This was exactly the case before Johnson's edition and it effectively closes down ED to anything but subjective "easy" appreciations of the work, which means that most sympathetic readers will wave a hand and pass by.

ED suffered from serious problems with her vision for years--that's one useful point to keep in mind when considering "non-sexist" transcriptions of her texts. She also apparently sometimes wrote in the near dark--and there is indeed a draft of a poem with lines that run off the page.

Most of the poems were worksheets, which explains the word lists included with the poems. You'll find something similar in the manuscripts of other poets: gaps and possible insertions. Though the idea of an open-ended, interactive poem is an intriguing one, and ED was certainly bright enough to have invented a poetics that would have allowed it, given the times in which she wrote and her own habits of reading and writing, I don't believe that was her intention.

Thomas Johnson's clarifications of Ed's poems allowed scholarship, including Howe's, to proceed. Up to the Johnson text, there were "correct" versions coming from the Vinnie/Austin Dickinson/Todd manuscripts vs. the Susan Gilbert & daughter manuscripts side of the war between the houses. (The whole fascinating story is laid out in the book Ancestors' Brocades.) Far from being a sexist projecting maleness on female texts, Johnson made possible the serious Dickinson scholarship that only really began in the 1960's.

Howe did a service, by directing us back to the materiality of Dickinson's texts. That's important, but suggesting that the politics of gender had anything to do with Johnson's edition is hard to justify. The point is--one has to begin to begin--and Johnson did just that. I think everyone involved in Dickinson scholarship owes Johnson a great deal because without his collecting and clarifying the corpus, the full range of Ed's subject matter and the breath-taking sweep of her mind had not been apparent.

Those Marquette professors were really outraged by Howe's impressionistic interpretations of HER Emily Dickinson, as well as by the gender stuff and Thomas Johnson. I understood their outrage. I like Howe's poetry, but I think her take on Dickinson allows us to turn away from the text itself and see what's not really there--and that--in Cameron's seminar at Johns Hopkins--was something this amazing mind did not allow us to do. She said that that mode of non-dealing with the text--that impressionistic mode--was what had plagued ED's work up to the start of the 1960's. Once again take a look at Lyric Time is an amazing book.

From what I've read of Susan Howe's poetry--I don't see any similarities between her lapidary, "flat" style and ED's luminosities. Lorine Niedecker has also be called a 20th century Emily Dickinson and outside of the fact that she was a she and wrote shorter poems and wrote about nature, her "flat" style seems closer to Stephen Crane's "pills" than ED's poems.

75. Michael Dylan Welch
Haiku North America Conference in Seattle, August 3-7, 2011
Thu 3 Feb 2011

Haiku North America 2011 â€“ Seattle, Washington

Save the date! Haiku North America 2011 will be held August 3 to 7, 2011, in Seattle, Washington. The conference, now in its 21st year, will feature papers, presentations, workshops, readings, and much sharing and discussion of haiku and related poetry by many of the leading haiku poets, scholars, and translators of North America and abroad. Speakers already include Cor van den Heuvel, Richard Gilbert, David Lanoue, Carlos ColÃ³n, Fay Aoyagi, Jim Kacian, Emiko Miyashita, George Swede, Michael Dylan Welch, and many others.

Members of the Haiku Northwest group have generously offered to host the 2011 conference and they have many exciting plans already in the works, including a harbor cruise. The conference itself will be held at the Seattle Center, at the foot of the Space Needle, providing easy access to haiku-writing walks such as to Pike Place Market (via the monorail), the Olympic Sculpture Park, the Experience Music Project rock-and-roll museum and Science Fiction Museum, and countless other attractionsâ€”including fleet week and the Seafair festival, with the Blue Angels performing overhead.

The conference theme will be â€œFifty Years of Haiku,â€ celebrating the past, present, and future of haiku in North America. The deadline for proposals has been extended to February 28, 2011 (http://www.haikunorthamerica.com/pages/next.html), but sooner is better. Proposals do not have to fit the theme. If you have questions, please contact Michael Dylan Welch at [redacted].

Detailed information on registration, lodging, and the conference schedule will be available in March. For further information as it becomes available, please visit www.haikunorthamerica.com. And check out the new HNA blog at http://haikunorthamerica.wordpress.com/.

See you in Seattle!

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Thu 3 Feb 2011

While Jesse makes some very reasonable points, it seems to me that Jared does as well. In particular, while Johnson's scholarship is important (as I think everyone would acknowledge, including Susan Howe), the question remains as to what degree the extant text is the editor's and to what degree the poet's. This is a valid question, Jesse, even if you don't find Howe's analysis persuasive (and I'm not saying it's definitive, though surely you wouldn't say that Johnson's is either, right?).

This is also a valid question of most poets' work— what is the definitive text?— but in Dickinson's case the question is important because there was never a published body of work approved by the poet herself. And also, because of the gender dynamics (the male editor and the unpublished, "naive" female poet, etc., etc.) So, even if you find Howe's argument lacking— and I am certainly open to considering your position on that— I wonder about your evident opposition to Howe. You note that your professors at the time were appalled (I forget if that's your exact word, but I think it's close enough.) But you no longer are a student, and even if your professors didn't like Howe's work that doesn't prove it has no validity. (Such an argument would be a logical fallacy called Appeal to Authority.) Of course, I don't think that's the argument you're making. You're much too smart for that. And I hope we can genuinely & honestly agree to disagree about this— because I don't agree with you, but I respect your opinion. From the point of view of scholarship (much less poesis), it seems more important to raise intelligent questions than to have all the answers already laid out in order. (Or perhaps you disagree with that too?)

From my curiosity alone, I definitely side with Howe— and I hope that you can respect my dissenting opinion, even though I doubt you will agree.

In friendship,

Mark

The Curse of the 'Code Blue' Motto
by Jim Andrews

The meaning of the motto became apparent only at the end of the tournament. The 'code blue', much to their horror, referred to their own cardiac arrest. They experienced a species of literary horror.

Re: POETICS Digest - 3 Feb 2011 to 4 Feb 2011 (#2011-24)
Sat 5 Feb 2011

Jesse,

I do want to get my hands on Cameron's book. Especially re "no projective." I'd like to hear the reasoning (see the difference in phrasing below viz. line breaks). Whatever the sexism in the "translation" of ED through time, which doesn't really interest me, much would seem to be a function of circumstance rather than intent. What interests me more is the translation / transcription of the original leaves. As you say, mere photos of the pages won't suffice. So none of this here or before is / was meant to downplay the serious textual scholarship of Johnsons, Franklins, Morses et al. Imagine "our" ED without them...

I'm looking here at some photocopies of Howe's unpublished typographic transcriptions -- typing one for comparison below with Franklin's -- without permission, of course, though in service of this discussion, I hope this one crumb proves ok, plus some of this already is online:

http://writing.upenn.edu/library/Howe/index.html

I hope the gaps and whatnot come through intact over the e-waves, though they perhaps won't -- I've also eliminated the dizzying identifying material and considerations --

Howe:

Bereavement in their

A Vital Kinsmanship import
Our Soul and theirs - between -

For Stranger - Strangers do not mourn -
There be Immortal friends Whom Death see first --
'Tis news of this
That paralyze Ourselves -

Who vital only to Our Thought -

Franklin:

There be Immortal friends
Whom Death see first - 'tis news of this
That paralyze Ourselves -

Who - vital only to Our Thought -
Such Presence bear away
In dying - 'tis as if Our souls

Howe: "I have tried to match the poems in type, as nearly as possible, to the Franklin edition of The Manuscript Books. In translating Dickinson's handwriting into type I have not followed standard typesetting conventions. I have paid attention to space between handwritten words. I have broken the lines exactly as she broke them. I have tried to match the spacing between words in the lists at the end of poems. I have not been able to pay attention to spaces between letters. I think that in the later poetry such spacing is a part of the meaning. Dickinson's frequent use of the dash was noted in the Johnson edition, but he regularized these marks. I know that in some books printed during the nineteenth century, variant readings were sometimes supplied at the end of a page, and they were marked by a sort of cross. The History of New England from 1630 to 1649, by John Winthrop, edited by James Savage, and published in Boston in 1826, is a good example of such practice; however, if there were more than two words, a number was used for the second one, and in other books the number of crosses increased for each word. Emily Dickinson had enough humor to read these variants as found poems. She was her own publisher and could do as she liked with her texts. These were the days of Edward Lear and Lewis Carroll; liberties were taken in print..."

Thanks, Jess, but agh no! All I did in that little chapter was write a history of the scholarship and criticism done by others.

As long as I'm being modest, though, let me update the chapter by saying that I now appreciate Franklin's edition a lot more than I used to. The big difference between the Johnson edition and the Franklin edition is in the chronology of the poems, and I was slow to understand how important that is. Franklin's groupings of the poems really let you see Dickinson's mind in action -- encountering Emerson in one chronologically related group of poems, for instance, or developing her "I've got plenty o' nothin'" theme in another.

And in the classroom I solve the problem of Franklin's missing subject index by distributing a pair of xeroxes: the subject index from the Johnson edition and the Johnson-number-to-Franklin-number conversion table from the Franklin edition (the 3-volume variorum only, unfortunately). I've posted a PDF of that reading aid under "Class material" on my web page at http://jonathanmorse.net .

Abstract Lyrics
Mon 7 Feb 2011

Those who were at the last Soundeye festival in Cork may like to know that Geoffrey Squires' Abstract Lyrics, which he read there, is now available as an ebook at www.shearsman.com

SoundEye 2011 will be the fifteenth anniversary of the festival, so it’s going to be a good one. It will take place in Cork, Ireland on the 13th -17th of July.

More details as we get things settled.

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books
Mon 7 Feb 2011

Thanks for this, Mark. The Marquette professors were not MY professors! :-) Howe came to Milwaukee to give a presentation of her Emily Dickinson at Marquette.

Dr. Cameron of JHU knew nothing of Susan Howe's work at the time, and maybe still doesn't. Her Lyric Time is a fine, thought-provoking book. Please take a look at it, Mark.

I read Susan Howe's book when it first came out and had a chance to talk to her about her ideas all those many years ago in Milwaukee.

Jared did a pretty good job of describing the main idea of the book--I guess those were his "points".

I describe my "point" in another e-mail, but I think you could help yourself out of your confusion by reading Cameron's book and then taking a look at Susan Howe's book.

Every best wish,

Jesse

>While Jesse makes some very reasonable points, it seems to me that Jared does as well. In particular, while Johnson's scholarship is important (as I think everyone would acknowledge, including Susan Howe), the question remains as to what degree the extant text is the editor's and to what degree the poet's. This is a valid question, Jesse, even if you don't find Howe's analysis persuasive (and I'm not saying it's definitive, though surely you wouldn't say that Johnson's is either, right?).
>This is also a valid question of most poets' work&#65533; what is the definitive text?&#65533; but in Dickinson's case the question is important because there was never a published body of work approved by the poet herself. And also, because of the gender dynamics (the male editor and the unpublished, "naive" female poet, etc., etc.) So, even if you find Howe's argument lacking&#65533; and I am certainly open to considering your position on that&#65533; I wonder about your evident opposition to Howe. You note that your professors at the time were appalled (I forget if that's your exact word, but I think it's close enough.) But you no longer are a student, and even if your professors didn't like Howe's work that doesn't prove it has no validity. (Such an argument would be a logical fallacy called Appeal to Authority.) Of course, I don't think that's the argument you're making. You're much too smart for that. And I hope we can genuinely & honestly agree to disagree abo ut this&#65533; because I don't agree with you, but I respect your opinion. From the point of view of scholarship (much less poesis), it seems more important to raise intelligent questions than to have all the answers already laid out in order. (Or perhaps you disagree with that too?)

Equations in print from Blue & Yellow Dog Press

Mon 7 Feb 2011

Adam Fieled's Equations is in print now from Blue & Yellow Dog Press:

http://www.lulu.com/product/paperback/equations/14600597

"A recession has hit America at such an angle that everything has been called into question. The thoughtlessness of fin de siecle America has been replaced by mistrust, envy, and defensiveness. In this atmosphere, new imperatives emerge: to sort out wheat from chaff, gold from dross, truth from fiction. These imperatives are enacted in solitude, as the poet takes a scalpel to the body of his experiences. Adam Fieled's Equations is a vivid manifestation of a new, scrupulous American consciousness. It is the effort of a poet to elevate the carnal with intellect, and to create a memorable chiasmus between them. The frigidity of post-modern verse is replaced by a new romanticism, that is not romantic. That is the central endeavor here, and it is performed with panache."

HISTORIC DIARY (poems)

BlazeVOX [books], 2011

http://www.amazon.com/Historic-Diary-Tony-Trigilio/dp/1609640128/ref=sr_1_1?ie=UTF8&qid=1293910614&sr=8-1

"Tony Trigilio's HISTORIC DIARY (named after Lee Harvey Oswald's account of his time in the Soviet Union) excavates the nightmarish record of the first Kennedy assassination, its auguries and aftermath, with a blue fury and an obsessive zeal that border on the Talmudic. What he finds there goes beyond chilling to a pure-product-of-America craziness that makes me tremble for my country. 'I am waiting // for someone to / ride me, the / locomotive of history,' Trigilio writes, and his ticket beyond the grave takes us, willy-nilly, on this scarifying, brilliant, and disturbing ride."

--Rachel Loden

"'Hegel makes no sense when everyone is looking at you,' confides the protagonist of Tony Trigilio's HISTORIC DIARY, and he's speaking from experience. In this extraordinary work of imaginative reconstruction, Trigilio assembles a postmodernist Warren Commission Report from archival research, obituaries, interviews, and historical broadcasts surrounding the assassination of John F. Kennedy, only to discover, in the chaos of evidence, rumor, and falsehood, that no dialectical method can offer his speaker an escape from the prison house of paranoia. By composing what Ezra Pound would have called 'a poem including history' from this harrowing litany of Cold War casualties, however, he offers his reader the stark consolation of an elegy for the truth itself: 'This is the story of what never happened, written ahead of time.'"

--Srikanth Reddy

"Richly varied and deeply brave, HISTORIC DIARY is both a page-turner that takes you into remote corners of the Kennedy assassination controversy, and a bold postmodernist collage of poetic styles, voices, and forms. This fine book will keep you rereading and reworking the fragments the poet offers until you are left with not only an oblique but fascinating portrait of Lee Harvey Oswald and the times in which he lived, but also a challenging poetic exploration of the nature of history itself."

I know that in some books printed during the nineteenth century, variant readings were sometimes supplied at the end of a page, and they were marked by a sort of cross. The History of New England from 1630 to 1649, by John Winthrop, edited by James Savage, and published in Boston in 1826, is a good example of such practice; however, if there were more than two words, a number was used for the second one, and in other books the number of crosses increased for each word. Emily Dickinson had enough humor to read these variants as found poems. She was her own publisher and could do as she liked with her texts. Subject: Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Hi Jared,

Points more than understood.

First I think it's important to say that ANY discussion about ED on this list is a good one. Her work is vital for all of us. My experience of S. Cameron's class was necessary for me, in retrospect, because it taught me to read a text closely and not to rely on history, biography, politics or my own imagination for an answer. We identified the riddling structure of some of ED's poems, her startling use of the English Metaphysicals and her use of capitalization to create "near"-metaphor. But more than that, Cameron took me to places in ED's work that I did not suspect existed and showed me how truly original she is. She showed me the profound questioning of science and religion that went on in her work, the presence-in-absence of Dickinson most powerful poems, and the use of violent and explosive images. In addition, Cameron provided a closely-reasoned context for ED's work, as well as a tremendous range of resources for the study of ED's poetry and prose. She absolutely knew her stuff and she was absolutely keen to impart it sometimes in a direct manner that was hard for some students to take. The boundaries were clear. We were not allowed to bring projective verse into the seminar, or visual poetry, or to interpret the dots, lines, and other methods of punctuation as marks that might direct one to "sing" a Dickinson text, or to point to word lists and call them clouds or integral parts of the performance of the poem (as interesting as this idea may be--Richard Howard pointed this out in another class in another context). Johnson was not deified in the seminar, but he was seen exactly for what he was--a collector of all the texts then extant, and someone who provided a clear place to start.

Dickinson published what--5 poems in her life time--maybe 7, but I think it's 5--and her work was edited and edited badly by Mabel Loomis Todd and Susan Gilbert Dickinson's side of the war between the houses. These were the people who truly tried to intervene and "rewrite" Dickinson--not Johnson. These editings continued in the anthologies that appeared through the 1950's and even into the 60's. It wasn't until Johnson collected all of the poems that we began to get a real picture of Dickinson and the range of her work. Up to then, of course, the dozen famous poems appeared in their "corrected" version along with a healthy dose of the Myth of Emily Dickinson.

My question is, before Johnson and his "sexist" agenda (!), ED's work was being handled with a lot less textual care, and was distorted by those men and women who wished to glorify the myth of ED at the expense of any real understanding of her work.

If one did not attempt to clarify the problematic handwriting, the possible sequences in the fascicles, the punctuation, which probably had more to do with bad eyesight than anything else, how could one begin to understand anything of Dickinson and do what scholarship is supposed to do: bring us closer to an appreciation and an understanding of the author's work.

If one lacks the ability to read a text with precision, then photographs of problematic handwriting will not help that person at all. ED's work is extremely difficult even with provisional clarifications of text.

This is the question I asked Susan Howe herself: How does one present a "non-sexist" (in her words) non-interventionist ED? It seems to me that the only way we could is by presenting photographs of the texts as they are and refraining from all commentary.

But here's my point: I believe that Susan Howe presents the verso of the same old Emily Dickinson myth: she allows those who do not wish to come to grips with the work itself to turn away in the name of something else. Instead of the giddy old spinster with the brilliant mind who dresses all in white and writes so well about nature and death, we have the "poet" held back by family, friends, males, society, who leaves behind texts that should be seen for themselves and for themselves only and in exactly the condition in which they were left, maugre bad eyesight and writing in the dark, and that somehow this will allow us to > see word clouds and almost anything else we want to retrospectively see in the manuscripts of that poet and consider them part of "my" Emily Dickinson and no one else'. This was exactly the case before Johnson's edition and it effectively closes down ED to anything but subjective "easy" appreciations of the work, which means that most sympathetic readers will wave a hand and pass by.

The big difference between the Johnson edition and the Franklin edition is in the chronology of the poems, and I was slow to understand how important that is. Franklin's groupings of the poems really let you see Dickinson's mind in action -- encountering Emerson in one chronologically related group of poems, for instance, or developing her "I've got plenty o' nothin'" theme in another.*

Tue 8 Feb 2011

Well, there's already a problem, Jared, and that's with the dashes. Dickinson's dashes are one of the most difficult aspects of her mss. Sometimes they "float" above the gap, sometimes "sink" below. Sometimes they're slanting like accent marks, sometimes they're dots of various sizes. (A Bit like Blackburn's floating periods.) They take other forms too--length is variable as well. Here's the question: what are we to make of them in any transcription? Thomas Johnson regularized them into the now familiar dash, but shouldn't Susan Howe and anyone following after give the most accurate representation of the so-called dashes?

And shouldn't they mean something too? I mean, if the word lists are to be included, then certainly this aspect of Dickinson should not be ignored. Or should it?

This is the question I asked Susan Howe herself: How does one present a "non-sexist" (in her words) non-interventionist ED? It seems to me that the only way we could is by presenting photographs of the texts as they are and refraining from all commentary.

But here's my point: I believe that Susan Howe presents the verso of the same old Emily Dickinson myth: she allows those who do not wish to come to grips with the work itself to turn away in the name of something else. Instead of the giddy old spinster with the brilliant mind who dresses all in white and writes so well about nature and death, we have the "poet" held back by family, friends, males, society, who leaves behind texts that should be seen for themselves and for themselves only and in exactly the condition in which they were left, maugre bad eyesight and writing in the dark, and that somehow this will allow us to see word clouds and almost anything else we want to retrospectively see in the manuscripts of that poet and consider them part of "my" Emily Dickinson and no one else'. This was exactly the case before Johnson's edition and it effectively closes down ED to anything but subjective "easy" appreciations of the work, which means that most sympathetic readers will wave a hand and pass by.

Issue 12 of Mad Hatters' Review is out!

Tue 8 Feb 2011

A glorious issue aflame with intriguing poems, fictions, whatnots, a recording of selections from "minimal audio plays," a la Beckett, by Richard Kostelanetz, wit & whimsies, reviews, non-fictions, columns, including an article about Charles Olson, and two features: "Moving Words" ("electronic literature"), and "Back from the USSR," an issue in itself presenting an array of the finest contemporary Russian and Ukrainian poets and fiction writers. Not to mention the mind-bending art and music.

Final chapter of VERSE HD video web-series online

Dear Friends:

The final chapter of VERSE: A Murder Mystery is online. The entire HD video web-series is available at http://www.koldcast.tv/video/verse_chapter_7 and also at http://www.rattapallax.com/blog/verse/

Synopsis for Chapter 7: In the final chapter, Jon and Angel discover Claireâ€™s secret lover and possible killer. Now, its up to them to get the case re-opened and bring Claireâ€™s manuscript the light of day.

Starring Jon Sands, Angel Nafis & Mark Greenfield.
Produced by Rattapallax Productions.
Directed by Ram Devineni / Script by Susan Brennan.

VERSE packs some onamatopoaic mystery, metaphoric wildness, and the poetry story line is in the mouths and imagination of some very talented folks. Kudos to Ram Devineni for taking the syllables and images of verse to the movies.

Furniture Press Books: New releases and News

Wed 9 Feb 2011

New Year, New Titles, New Directions<http://furniturepressbooks.com/2011/02/09/new-year-new-titles-new-directions/>

First we have to congratulate the winner of the 2010 Furniture Press Poetry Prize, Joshua Ware, whose manuscript *Homage to Homage to Homage to Creeley*was chosen by the incomparable crypto-Hellenist, Magus Magnus <http://furniturepressbooks.com/books/magnuspride/>, out of a stunning variety of noteworthy submissions. We’re proud (and honored!) to publish the collection later this year, which will be available by the first of the Cruellest Month.

In the next year, Furniture Press Books will also publish a variety of both playful and challenging texts, including Elizabeth Savage’s Grammar, a tripped up nursery of shifting rhymes, rhythms and intricate lyrics, and Ryan Eckes’ Old News, a well-crafted collection of places, receipts, headlines and stories – a most welcome offering in light of today’s often distanced (and distancing) reportage. We also have some fantastic news from j. hastain and Johannes Goranssön, who will be releasing their pages to us in the coming months.

In chapbook news, we have just finished pressing Nicole Mauro’s Tea Party Poems <http://furniturepressbooks.com/chaps/mauroteaparty/>, a faux-llaboration between Sarah Palin and Emily Dickinson, designed and printed by the marvelous Jodi Hoover. Palin says of the collection, “The America I know and love is not one in which my parents or my baby with Down Syndrome will have to stand in front of Obama’s ‘death panel’ so his bureaucrats can decide, based on a subjective judgment of their ‘level of productivity in society,’ whether they are worthy of Nicole Mauro’s Tea Party Poems. Such a system is downright evil.” William Allegrezza, editor of Moria Books <http://www.moriapoetry.com/ebooks.html>, and Garin Cycholl unleash their version of the Mississippi, Aquinas, which will be our first large format collection with a soft cover. And! More loosy goosery from Elizabeth Savage: Jane & Page or Sister Goose, an urgent take on image and its schizophrenic counterpart. And when all is said and done, David Stone, editor of Blackbird, an international anthology of art, poetry, prose, visual poetry and media art, will unveil something sensuous, sinuous, Stone-y.

Thanks to all who have invested energy, time, resources, capital and sweat into making Furniture Press Books what it is.

"Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books
Thu 10 Feb 2011

Jesse,

What you're saying makes sense, though I'm not really in a position to say one way or the other. I haven't read all that'd be necessary to do so, but i have read some (and apologies for crossed wires -- that link was from the Birth-Mark!!! which, when it comes to Howe, i prefer. thickets and my onw carelessness:). That said I'd say, with hesitation, that the floating or sinking dash doesn't seem intentional -- and here the reader is, speculating on intention --

Murat pointed out the line "presuming to lead" vs. "presuming to God" -- is it "l" or "G?" -- and the fact that there's a choice there for the reader -- Howe chooses "lead" -- and as he wrote off-list, the choice is perhaps "ideologically determined." Howe's "guilty" of her choices in the transcription, but there's a faithfulness and recognition there that I've found lacking in others. Or at least of a sort different from others and one I identify with more readily. Higginson consistently told Dickinson she needed to polish her verse (perhaps in the ways the early transcribers would), and Dickinson consistently refused. She'd appear to insist here. Even so, despite her insisting re the rough and rude, and this is interesting, she continually sought Higginson's ear. Dickinson seems rather stubbornly intentional, and my sense is Howe is exceptional in her recognition of that. But again, your point is well taken, as here things drifting into into intention which, as you indicated, D scholars in good faith attempt to understand..

They take other forms too--length is variable as well. Here's the question: what are we to make of them in any transcription? Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Thu 10 Feb 2011

Hi Jared,

ED's manuscripts are on-line, I believe, and the consistencies of those diacritical marks (as some insist the dashes are) are available for all to see, but

I would suggest that ED in cyberspace is a different, and perhaps "non-authentic" presentation of ED's texts as they were clearly meant to be read within the parameters of "book" technology of the mid to late 19the century.

In order to do justice to the intention of the author, it's therefore necessary to hold the poems in one's hand in as fragmentary a condition as possible. This is necessary to appreciate the sculptural--indeed the haptic--qualities of Dickinson's "shaped" poems. No, photographs are not enough for this--ED clearly meant that some of her poems should be published on scraps of paper of various tactile qualities, some sewn together and kept in drawer-like enclosures (which should be reproduced) and some presented appended to gifts (which should be reconstructed) or flowers (live versions of which should be appended to the poem in question and replaced as needed--thus maintaining the necessary olfactory environment, which is yet another element of the author's intention and indeed of the meaning of the poem itself, which should be rightfully restored and conserved in order for accuracy to be maintained).

The author's intention is certainly clear at least on this point: ED's gift and flower-as-gift-poems should be presented intact and not separated from their respective objects. Thomas Johnson is not the only scholar guilty of disrespecting ED's work and imposing a particularly reductive view on her corpus, in this respect.

But, Jared, I would suggest that you take a look at those dashes as they appear in the original manuscripts. Take a few hours, or take a life time, and report back. Their use is about as consistent as other points in Ed's handwriting and should be worth a whole new branch of Dickinson study.

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Fri 11 Feb 2011

For some reason, I'm reminded irresistibly of Blake -- how many people bother to read the Songs of Innocence and Experience (let alone the Prophetic Books) in facsimile, let alone anything more authentic?

Then there's (to push this back even further) the little monograph signatures that Thomas Wyatt placed beside some of the poems contained in the Egerton manuscript ...

I once spent an hour at the British Library, trying to write out (staring at the MS through glass) the specific notation that Wyatt placed beside some of his poems.

An instructive experience ...

But comes down to it, I prefer to read Wyatt in a nicely-printed modernised spelling edition.

For what that's worth.

Robin

That said I'd say, with hesitation, that the floating or sinking dash doesn't seem intentional -- and here the reader is, speculating on intention --

Murat pointed out the line "presuming to lead" vs. "presuming to God" -- is it "l" or "G?" -- and the fact that there's a choice there for the reader -- Howe chooses "lead" -- and as he wrote off-list, the choice is perhaps "ideologically determined." Howe's "guilty" of her choices in the transcription, but there's a faithfulness and recognition there that I've found lacking in others. Or at least of a sort different from others and one I identify with more readily. Higginson consistently told Dickinson she needed to polish her verse (perhaps in the ways the early transcribers would), and Dickinson consistently refused. She'd appear to insist here. Even so, despite her insisting re the rough and rude, and this is interesting, she continually sought Higginson's ear. Dickinson seems rather stubbornly intentional, and my sense is Howe is exceptional in her

They take other forms too--length is variable as well. Here's the question: what are we to make of them in any transcription? Thomas Johnson regularized them into the now familiar dash, but shouldn't Susan Howe and anyone following after give the most accurate representation of the so-called dashes?*

*Cynthia Arrieu-King *is an assistant professor of creative writing at Stockton College and former Kundiman fellow. Her book /People are Tiny in Paintings of China/ was released from Octopus Books in 2010. Her work has or will appear this year in /Witness/, /Boston Review /and /Jacket/. She lives near Atlantic City.

*George Quasha *works across mediums to explore principles in common within language, sculpture, drawing, video, sound, installation, and performance. Solo exhibitions of axial stones and axial drawings include the Baumgartner Gallery in New York (Chelsea), the Slought Foundation in Philadelphia, and at the Samuel Dorsky Museum of Art at SUNY New Paltz. This work is featured in the published book, /Axial Stones: An Art of Precarious Balance/, Foreword by Carter Ratcliff (North Atlantic Books: Berkeley, 2006). In 2006 awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship in video art. A new book, /An Art of Limina: Gary Hill's Works and Writings/, Foreword by Lynne Cooke, is out from Ediciones Poligrafa (Barcelona), in collaboration with Charles Stein (distrib. In the Gallery at R&F:

/Waxing Geometric/, a solo exhibition by painter, Astrid Fitzgerald. The show will run from February 5th through March 19th, 2011. There will be an opening reception for the artist and informal gallery talk on Saturday, February 5th, from 5 to 7 p.m.

For Astrid Fitzgerald, painting is a spiritual pursuit and a path to self-knowledge. Fitzgerald's work privileges the universal over the personal, and is characterized by simple geometric elements. Her study of Perennial Philosophy led to an appreciation of the Golden Mean, and for over twenty-five years now, her work has explored philosophical geometry, including the Fibonacci sequence, the Pythagorean Theorem and, most importantly, the Golden Mean proportion, a unique ratio preferred by nature as the most advantageous geometry for growth and energy conservation.

If there is a common thread to my work it is the desire to uncover the inner order in the world of appearances. I have always agreed with Emerson's observation that "We must trust the perfection of the creation so far as to believe that whatever curiosity the order of things has awakened in our minds, the order of things can satisfy." -- Astrid Fitzgerald

Born and educated in Switzerland, Astrid Fitzgerald has been living in New York since 1961. Her work has been featured in over twenty solo exhibitions in Europe, Asia and the United States, and included in over 40 group exhibitions. Fitzgerald's work is represented in many public, private and corporate collections, including the Aldrich Contemporary Art Museum, Ridgefield, CN; Wellesley College, Wellesley, MA; Marymount College, Tarrytown, NY; Credit Suisse, NYC; and PES Architects, Nagoya, Japan. An installation by Fitzgerald was selected to represent the US at the ArtCanal Exposition in Le Landeron, Switzerland in 2002. She has lectured on the Golden Mean proportion in art, and is the author of /An Artist's Book of Inspiration---A Collection of Thoughts on Art, Artists, and Creativity /(Lindisfarne Books, 1996) and /Being Consciousness Bliss---A Seeker's Guide /(Lindisfarne Books, 2002). Fitzgerald currently lives and works in Kerhonkson, New York.

Performance by Burbuja

Jesse Seldess recently relocated to Brooklyn from Karlsruhe, Germany. He is the author of two books, Who Opens (Kenning Editions, 2006) and Left Having (Kenning Editions, forthcoming) as well as chapbooks from Hand Held Editions, Instance press, Answer Tag Press and the Chicago Poetry Project Press. Since 2001, he has edited and published Antennae (www.antennae-journal.com), a journal of experimental writing and language-based performance and music scores.

Anne-E Wood's work has appeared in journals like Tin House, New Letters, Agni, Gargoyle, Other Voices, The Chicago Quarterly Review and The Cream City Review. She is the author of Two if By Sea (Fourteen Hills Press). She lives in Brooklyn and teaches writing at Rutgers University.

Lewis Warsh is author of numerous books of poetry, fiction and autobiography. Most recently, A Place In the Sun (2010), Inseparable: Poems 1995-2005 (2008), Ted's Favorite Skirt (2002) and The Origin of the World (2001). He is editor and publisher of United Artists Books and director of the MFA program in creative writing at Long Island University in Brooklyn.

Merche Blasco formed Burbuja as a vehicle for her own musical exploration. Since its conception she has composed music to accompany the sculptures of Lucy Orta at the Venice biennale, collaborated with Chicks on Speed and composed soundtracks for videos and installations by the artists of FABRICA

(Italy) and HANGAR (Barcelona). For the last year Burbuja has been enormously enriched by the musician Maitane Beaumont and, for this performance, they will present a special project together.

TODAY Thom Donovan for SMALL PRESS in the ARCHIVE
Fri 11 Feb 2011

Small Press in the Archive Lecture Series presents

Today @ 3:00 pm

Thom Donovan
"Meta-discourse and the (post-digital) book"
420 Capen, The Poetry Collection

Thom writes of his talk-performance this afternoon, " People are encouraged to bring devices that feed to Twitter, Facebook, blogs (tho I suspect you won't even have to prompt this) in the spirit of some of the stuff I am talking about. They are also encouraged to write things down and upload content later, if they would prefer to go the analogue to digital route (feedback with delay)."

Small Press in the Archive Lecture Series dedicates itself to the study of poetry outside the traditional literary historical plot. The lectures in this series draw on materials in The Poetry Collection, at SUNY Buffalo in order to explore community/discourse formations, the status of ephemera and the making of genre, the conditions of literary production, transatlantic cross-pollinations in and between specific magazines, the careers of poets, the role of book art, and how the little magazine functions in the making of the avant-garde.

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books
Fri 11 Feb 2011

I don't think there's anything clear about Dickinson's intentions, except to avoid the real world decisions faced by any publishing poet.
Like, no publisher will deliver the poems with a flower.

I'm also not convinced of the authority of the fascicles as to intention. If the line breaks are indeed intended as such they're pretty awful, and the rhymes and meters, which stay pretty close to the hymnal, argue that there's no such intention.
The paper on which the fascicles are written looks to me like binder's trim. (Has anybody checked this out? It would be good to know at least what papers they are.) Arrangement of verse on them seems dictated by their narrowness rather than any aesthetic decision.

We'll never know. We can be reasonably confident that she wasn't trying to anticipate Williams or to mimic Whitman.

Best,

Mark

New from Chax Press: Mark Weiss, As Landscape.
$16. Order from http://www.chax.org/poets/weiss.htm

"What a beautiful set of circumstances! What a lovely concatenation of particulars. Here is the poet alive in every sense of the word, and through every one of his senses. Instead of missing a beat or a part, Weiss' fragments are like Chekhov's short storiesthe more that gets left out, the more they seem to contain… One can hear echoes from all the various ancestors...[but] the voice, at its center, its core, is pure Mark Weiss. His use of the fragment is both elegant and bafflingly clear, a pure musical threnody…[it] opens a window, not only into a mind, but a person, a personality, this human figure at the emotional center of the poem."

The Nonsense Company's STORM STILL in NYC
Sat 12 Feb 2011

Hello, all!

The theater/new music group I work with, the Nonsense Company, will be performing our newest play, STORM STILL, at PS122 in New York City, starting a week from today. I think it will be of interest to poets (and others). I hope some of you can make it.

all the best,

Andy G.

STORM STILL

written and performed by the Nonsense Company

(Ryan Higgins, Andy Gricevich and Rick Burkhardt)

February 19th through March 6th, 2011

8 p.m. (Sunday shows at 6 p.m.)

PS122

150 1st Avenue, New York NY

http://www.nonsensecompany.com

STORM STILL
Outside an abandoned school, a war rages.
Inside, three kids have been performing an unsupervised rendition of "King Lear" for years.
Further inside, the mad King debates the purpose of theater with his Fool, a licensed therapist.

Music of many kinds! The history of madness! Wild nature! The politics of parenting! Courtroom drama! Strange poetry! Complex emotional events! Debates on the social function of art! Friendship! Structural intricacy!

You will witness legendary tales from story time, and be served a small snack from our partially functioning cafeteria. You will also, at times, hear some Shakespeare.

"A crazy, densely layered, absurd riff on King Lear... Masterful acting, impeccable timing, beautiful language and magical sound effects â€" a book will literally talk â€" plus moments that are completely weird... It's hard to keep your eyes or ears off it. Must see!"

Richard Chin, Twin Cities Pioneer Press

"Razor-sharp dissections of youth, power, and purpose... If you ever thought your therapist was a fool, wait until you see this."

The Onion, Minneapolis

STEPHANIE GRAY: SIG(H)NS

Saturday, February 19, 7pm @ Microscope Gallery, Brooklyn

Bikes. Buildings. Poetry. Metallica. This is what the world is made of, as it appears in this selection of short super8 films by Stephanie Gray, an out-and-out modern bike heroine riding among urban decadence and sighing, lamenting for the disappearance of brick-built pieces of reality. Although poetry and metal music can partly relieve her, Poe's cravens seem to keep storming over the city pronouncing their nevermore at the funerals of empty buildings, houses, stores. Gray is able to zoom in and rediscover the beauty of what is simple, the poetry inherent in little things, and even a single bike ride to work can find its way to happiness. Seeing through her eyes gives us the chance to practice this very special, fertile, right - if ever rightness existed - perspective on the world. -- andrea monti "...we just never get used to it, the higher andhigher we fly and the easier it is to say,"TAKE THIS JOB AND SHOVE IT", and soonwe burst and it is very very lite, and we just getused to the dark, but the reds, and the smokes and the steeland the cries of "justice", of "fairness",of "it's the principle of the thing, bud",it's like strangers, it's like fire." (from School of Work, by Stephanie Gray, published in Heart Stoner Bingo, 2007) The program features 11 super8 short films by Gray, including the premiere of her fresh-from-print Satanic Bible on Interlibrary Loan. A few of them will be projected with live narration by the artist. PROGRAM Dear Joan Hand processed super8, b/w, sound/live narration, 1999, 3 1/2 minA film letter to the heroine Joan of Arc, as our bike riding heroine laments both the state of Buffalo's downtown & lack of public knowledge of Joan's real identity, ending in a hissyfit at the library. Soggy wet sneakers and socks persist through the rough terrain of this luved city. Desperate attempts to perform magic, miracles, and walking on snow without sinking. Do not, I repeat, do not deconstruct this. Sig(h)ns Hand processed super8, b/w, silent, 2001, 3 min Only seeing the sig(h)ns, the bike ride heroine again tries to read downtown, seeing decades flying before her eyes, ending in yet another hissyfit at some beautiful-in-decay-city owned building. These are just .00000001 of all the similar sig(h)ns in this city. Do your part & count them. You are spared the sound of sig(h)ning, so supply your own. This is the last time you will probably ever see this buildingsuper8, color, silent 2001, 3 minThe title speaks. Is it real, only a memory, or the future? A foray into color of forgotten buildings, the river glimmering, the paint peeling, 70s graphics gone. I Can't Stop Thinking about Eileen Myles' School Of Fish Poem super8, color, sound/live narration, 2002, 3 1/2 minRiding her bike through the March winds in Buffalo, the filmmaker keeps hearing lines from School of Fish. She keeps seeing the blue in everything. The film's images are the inspired visual thoughts of Eileen's poem. Sadly, no dogs were out in such cold weather. School of Fish is in fact an aesthetic female poetry movement started by the poet Eileen Myles. This is the Bike Ride to Work Hand processed super8, b/w, sound/live narration, 2002, 10 minThe bike ride to work is swiftly and slowly, dreamily documented with stories of real life scenes along the way as the bike ride heroine is thinking them. When was the last time you rode your bike and noticed the neighborhood? It's all true you know. I bought the Last 4 Bagels at Jon Vie Pastries super8, silent, b/w & color, 2005, 7 minI did it. Before it closed. Forever. Never Heard the Word Impossible super8, sound, b/w, 2007, 7 minNever Heard the Word Impossible takes its sampled super8-shot images from Laverne & Shirley (for those old enough to remember, the 70's tv show with, curiously two women living together working in a beer factory) which is remixed through hazy sound and video layers. Shot in b/w off of a blurry old tv, of a track-filled old blurry tape, and the unmistakable images of B-tv stars still come through a super8 frame. What did the L really stand for, anyway? All sound is sampled, reworked, and distorted from the theme song. You know they want to disappear Hell's Kitchen as Clinton: Dear E.B. White: I desire your queer NYC prizessuper8, color & b/w, sound/live narration, 2010, 17 minIn mysterious insistent shots, Stephanie Gray films an inspired letter of sorts to writer E.B. White, author of the mid-century infamous Here is New York essay. The sound is a mix of the filmmaker’s voiceover which is short bits of poetic prose prefaced by, and inspired by quotes from White. Interspersed is delayed and reverbed lines from a 60s surf song New York's a Lonely Town. She treats this letter as a film essay of old and disappearing Hell's Kitchen which developers have been trying to rename Clinton for years. Maybe that should be Hell's Clinton, or Clinton's Hell. Satanic Bible on Interlibrary Loan6 min, b/w, live voice, 2011The words you hear came together with the images you see on the screen. I was an ardent metal head in junior high and of course the devil worshipping, while it seems funny today, was a real thing in the metal scene. I mean as real can be said for a teenager to believe. (Especially one that grew up Catholic.) I never exactly did it, like really do it. I was more of a Metallica freak as we called ourselves and proudly said it was all about the music. But there was a window of time when I wanted to find out who Aleister Crowley was (Mr. Crowley is a famous, infamous song by Ozzy) and I went looking for his satanic bible. But then I found out he didn’t write it, someone with a less exciting name did, Anton LaVey. I guess the poem sort of fills in the rest, if the devil’s music can be filled in with anything else but the devil’s music. TRT: approx. 68 minutes STEPHANIE GRAYStephanie Gray is a NYC-based experimental filmmaker and poet who has received a New York Foundation for the Arts Fellowship in Film, New York State Council on the Arts Distribution Grant, and an Experimental Television Center Finishing Fund Grant. Her work has been featured in one-woman screenings/readings at the Poetry Project, the MIX NYC Lesbian & Gay Experimental Film Fest at Collective Unconscious, Millennium Film Workshop, and Massachusetts College of Art. CFP for Open Letter

“Negotiating the Social Bond of Poetics”
Edited by Nancy Gillespie and Peter Jaeger

The idea for this issue of Open Letter developed out of a year long series of poetry readings and critical seminars run by Nancy Gillespie at the Kootenay School of Writing in Vancouver, under the title “Negotiating the Social Bond of Poetics.” The series drew on Jacques Lacan’s concept of the “four discourses,” in particular his Seminar XVII: The Other Side of Psychoanalysis (published in English for the first time in 2007). Delivered shortly after the May 1968 events in Paris, this seminar engages with social interaction and its relation to language and power. Key to the seminar are Lacan’s four structures of discourses—i.e., the discourse of the Master, the University, the Hysteric, and the Analyst—and how these discourses form different social bonds for the subject. We are looking for critical writing and poetry that responds to the questions below: Although Lacan’s seminar was first presented 40 years ago, it is arguable that Lacan’s scepticism of the '68 events, and his assertion that the discourse of the University was becoming a new Master’s discourse, foresaw the dawn of a new ethos of capitalism that we now call Neo-Liberalism. Can returning to Lacan's theory now offer new and useful methods of criticism? Is Lacan's theory of the "four discourses" useful for rethinking how we engage with and disseminate poetry and poetics? Can poetics operate like the discourse of the Analyst to create a different social bond through language? Is Lacan's concept of the structure of the four discourses useful for us today, particularly as we head into financial cuts in the arts and academia which may limit interventions in hegemonic discourses?

Please send critical proposals to [redacted] and poetry proposals or declarations of intention to [redacted] by March 15th, 2011.
We are also interested in work that blurs these boundaries, which should be sent to both of us.
Complete work will be requested by mid-August 2011.

For more details about the KSW "Negotiating the Social Bond of poetics" series please see the website or write to Nancy Gillespie:

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Sun 13 Feb 2011

We'll, I've been working the Ouija board pretty hard since posting on this topic and have made a few break-throughs as far as ED's ultimate intentions for her fascicles. Next step: scrying stones as per John Dee, Edward Kelly and Joseph Smith. My TV-watching table has been scratched, rapped, and rotated repeatedly when I mention both the names Emily and Susan (for some 1855ish reason) and I've been picking up whispered female voices on blank tapes in the middle of the day. Stay tuned for transcendental illumination, Mark and all the list ladies who haven't yet breathed a word on this subject. (Yes, I've noticed! :-)) Laughing sans Let-up, Jess of Japan Prophetic Books) in facsimile, let alone anything more authentic?

Then there's (to push this back even further) the little monograph signatures that Thomas Wyatt placed beside some of the poems contained in the Egerton manuscript ...

I once spent an hour at the British Library, trying to write out (staring at the MS through glass) the specific notation that Wyatt placed beside some of his poems.

An instructive experience ...

But comes down to it, I prefer to read Wyatt in a nicely-printed modernised spelling edition.

For what that's worth.

Subject: Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Hi Jared,

ED's manuscripts are on-line, I believe, and the consistencies of those diacritical marks (as some insist the dashes are) are available for all to see, but I would suggest that ED in cyberspace is a different, and perhaps "non-authentic" presentation of ED's texts as they were clearly meant to be read within the parameters of "book" technology of the mid to late 19the century.

In order to do justice to the intention of the author, it's therefore necessary to hold the poems in one's hand in as fragmentary a condition as possible. This is necessary to appreciate the sculptural--indeed the haptic--qualities of Dickinson's "shaped" poems. No, photographs are not enough for this--ED clearly meant that some of her poems should be published on scraps of paper of various tactile qualities, some sewn together and kept in drawer-like enclosures (which should be reproduced) and some presented appended to gifts (which should be reconstructed) or flowers (live versions of which should be appended to the poem in question and replaced as needed--thus maintaining the necessary olfactory environment, which is yet another element of the author's intention and indeed of the meaning of the poem itself, which should be rightfully restored and conserved in order for accuracy to be maintained).

The author's intention is certainly clear at least on this point: ED's gift and flower-as-gift-poems should be presented intact and not separated from their respective objects. Thomas Johnson is not the only scholar guilty of disrespecting ED's work and imposing a particularly reductive view on her corpus, in this respect.

But, Jared, I would suggest that you take a look at those dashes as they appear in the original manuscripts. Take a few hours, or take a life time, and report back. Their use is about as consistent as other points in Ed's handwriting and should be worth a whole new branch of Dickinson study.

Jesse,

What you're saying makes sense, though I'm not really in a position to say one way or the other. I haven't read all that'd be necessary to do so, but i have read some (and apologies for crossed wires -- that link was from the Birth-Mark!!! which, when it comes to Howe, i prefer. thickets and my onw carelessness:). That said I'd say, with hesitation, that the floating or sinking dash doesn't seem intentional -- and here the reader is, speculating on intention --

Murat pointed out the line "presuming to lead" vs. "presuming to God" -- is it "l" or "G?" -- and the fact that there's a choice there for the reader -- Howe chooses "lead" -- and as he wrote off-list, the choice is perhaps "ideologically determined." Howe's "guilty" of her choices in the transcription, but there's a faithfulness and recognition there that I've found lacking in others. Or at least of a sort different from others and one I identify with more readily. Higginson consistently told Dickinson she needed to polish her verse (perhaps in the ways the early transcribers would), and Dickinson consistently refused. She'd appear to insist here. Even so, despite her insisting re the rough and rude, and this is interesting, she continually sought Higginson's ear. Dickinson seems rather stubbornly intentional, and my sense is Howe is exceptional in her recognition of that. But again, your point is well taken, as here things drifting into into intention which, as you indicated, D scholars in good faith attempt to understand..

Well, there's already a problem, Jared, and that's with the dashes. Dickinson's dashes are one of the most difficult aspects of her mss. Sometimes they "float" above the gap, sometimes "sink" below. Sometimes they're slanting like accent marks, sometimes they're dots of various sizes. (A Bit like Blackburn's floating periods.) They take other forms too--length is variable as well. Here's the question: what are we to make of them in any transcription? Thomas Johnson regularized them into the now familiar dash, but shouldn't Susan Howe and anyone following after give the most accurate representation of the so-called dashes?

And shouldn't they mean something too? I mean, if the word lists are to be included, then certainly this aspect of Dickinson should not be ignored. Or should it?

Hello, all!

The theater/new music group I work with, the Nonsense Company, will be performing our newest play, STORM STILL, at PS122 in New York City, starting a week from today. I think it will be of interest to poets (and others). I hope some of you can make it.

all the best,

Andy G.

STORM STILL

written and performed by the Nonsense Company

(Ryan Higgins, Andy Gricevich and Rick Burkhardt)

February 19th through March 6th, 2011

8 p.m. (Sunday shows at 6 p.m.)

PS122

150 1st Avenue, New York NY

http://www.nonsensecompany.com

STORM STILL
Outside an abandoned school, a war rages.
Inside, three kids have been performing an unsupervised rendition of "King Lear" for years.
Further inside, the mad King debates the purpose of theater with his Fool, a licensed therapist.

Music of many kinds! The history of madness! Wild nature! The politics of parenting! Courtroom drama! Strange poetry! Complex emotional events! Debates on the social function of art! Friendship! Structural intricacy!

You will witness legendary tales from story time, and be served a small snack from our partially functioning cafeteria. You will also, at times, hear some Shakespeare.

"A crazy, densely layered, absurd riff on King Lear... Masterful acting, impeccable timing, beautiful language and magical sound effects â€" a book will literally talk â€" plus moments that are completely weird... It's hard to keep your eyes or ears off it. Must see!"

Richard Chin, Twin Cities Pioneer Press

"Razor-sharp dissections of youth, power, and purpose... If you ever thought your therapist was a fool, wait until you see this."

THREE LONGPOEMS by Vernon Frazer

Mon 14 Feb 2011

Chalk Editions recently published THREE LONGPOEMS, which I wrote during my "transitional period" in 1999-2000, after Peter Ganick's Potes & Poets Press gave me a crash course in contemporary poetics.. Note that I wrote "GROUND ZERO" at least a year before the World Trade Center site acquired the name after the 9/11 attack. In this poem, Ground Zero refers to the nuclear testing grounds in the southwestern United Stales and to trumpeter Bill Dixon's approach to free improvisation.

Mon 14 Feb 2011

im wondering options in the united states to do readings, & admittedly, am not entirely sure where to begin; would require venues with at least some $ to help, otherwise i wouldnt be able to even begin; options?

previously read at the university of maine in their MAGNIFICENT series & through BOOG CITY in new york, many moons ago;

thanks so much; new york? chicago? buffalo? poughkeepsie (dont laff, i have a friend there!)? further?

bio, for those out there with series to at least have a context of me & mine:

Born in Ottawa, Canadas glorious capital city, rob mclennan currently lives in Ottawa. The author of more than twenty trade books of poetry, fiction and non-fiction, his most recent titles are the poetry collections Glengarry (Talonbooks, 2011), kate street (Moira, 2011), 52 flowers (or, a perth edge) (Obvious Epiphanies, 2010) and wild horses (2010), and a second novel, missing persons (2009), An editor and publisher, he runs above/ground press, Chaudiere Books (with Jennifer Mulligan), The Garneau Review (ottawater.com/garneaureview), seventeen seconds: a journal of poetry and poetics (ottawater.com/seventeenseconds) and the Ottawa poetry pdf annual ottawater (ottawater.com) . He spent the 2007-8 academic year in Edmonton as writer-in-residence at the University of Alberta, and regularly posts reviews, essays, interviews and other notices at robmclennan.blogspot.com.

David Wolach is editor of Wheelhouse Magazine & Press and an active participant in Nonsite Collective. Wolach's first full-length poetry collection, Occultations, has just been published by Black Radish Books. Other books include the multi-media transliteration plus chapbook, Prefab Eulogies Volume 1: Nothings Houses (BlazeVox [books], 2010), the full-length Hospitalogy (chapbook forth. from Scantily Clad Press, 2011), and book alter(ed) (Ungovernable Press, 2009). A former union organizer and performing artist out of New York, Wolach's work often begins as site-specific and interactive performance and ends up as shaped, written language. Recent work appears in Jacket, Augfabe, Try Magazine, No Tell Motel, and Little Red Leaves. Wolach is professor of text arts, poetics, and aesthetics at The Evergreen State College, co-curating the PRESS text arts & radical politics series there, and is visiting professor in Bard College's Workshop In Language & Thinking. He's currently touring with his Olympia-based experimental performance ensemble, performing Kenneth Gaburo's opus Maledetto alongside original cross-media work from the eight full-time members.

Laura Elrick's latest project is a book-length poem, as yet untitled, that explores the relationship between speed (social time) and utterance; translations and affective condensations occur in the tiny caverns between the compulsion toward language and the patrolling of intelligible expressive registers. She also recently coordinated Blocks Away, a psychogeography of Lower Manhattan, some documentation of which will be displayed in The Skybridge Art and Sound Space at The New School in Spring 2011. Previous work includes the video/poem Stalk ("part dystopian urban cartography, part spatial-poetic intervention"), as well a set of 5 audio pieces for doubled-voice. She has also written two books of poetry: Fantasies in Permeable Structures (Factory School 2005) and sKincerity (Krupskaya 2003), and an essay "Poetry, Ecology, and the Reappropriation of Lived Space," which can be found in the Eco Language Reader (2010) and online at The Brooklyn Rail. She currently teaches at Pratt Institute in Brooklyn.

Lara Durback is a notebook writer, using handwriting primarily, and that means walking around and writing. Public transportation is a big part of that city writing. You can find recent work with and without handwriting in WORK, Try, There Journal, etc. Also look for her work on Deep Oakland.org. She is also a letterpress printer, and manages the Book Art studio at Mills College. She has recently finished printing the book Picture Cameras with Ariel Goldberg using only repurposed materials (NoNo Press). __ _____

Emily Dickinson and "the Learned Blacksmith" Elihu Burrit--A Possible Source (of many) for "I like to see it lap the Miles--"

Mon 14 Feb 2011

Every time I scan through the back issues of the Clarksville (TN.) Chronicle, I find another gem. In the Jan. 20the, 1846 issue, I stumbled across the fine writing of a remarkable gentleman who called himself "The Learned Blacksmith." Similar to another working class autodidact, the Scottish stone-carver Hugh Miller, Burritt had a distinct gift for languages, and a flair for descriptive writing. Largely forgotten today, Burritt was no doubt well known to Emily Dickinson both in his popular volumes, and in his numerous newspaper appearances over the years. (ED was a reader of newspapers and magazines--see the great study of popular culture's influence on American lit Beneath the American Renaissance.)

ED's "I like to see it lap the Miles--" dates (according to Seward) from the 1850's, but I can't doubt but that a poet of her gifts would not have been struck by Burritt's description of an "iron horse" enough to have remembered it.

Here is the passage from the paper.

"The Steam Horse

Elihu Burritt has a better fancy for a steam horse than we remember to have met elsewhere before. This is his way of describing him:

I love to see one of those huge creatures, with sinews of brass and muscles of iron, strut forth from his smoky stable, and saluting the long train of cars with a dozen sonorous puffs from his iron nostrils, fall gently back into his harness. There he stands, champing and foaming upon the iron track, his great heart a furnace of glowing coals; lymphatic blood is boiling in his veins; the strength of a thousand horses is nerving his sinews, he pants to be gone. He would 'snake' St. Peter's across the desert of Sahara, if he could be fairly hitched to it; but there is a little sober-eyed man in the saddle who holds him with a finger, who can take away his breath in a moment, should he grow restive and vicious. I am always deeply interested in this man; for begrimed as he may be with coal, diluted in oil and steam, I habitually regard him as the genius of the whole machinery, as the physical mind of that huge steam horse."

ED's poem:

I like to see it lap the Miles--
And lick the Valleys up--
And stop to feed itself at Tanks--
And then--prodigious step

Around a Pile of Mountains--
And supercilious peer
In Shanties--by the sides of Roads--
And then a Quarry pare

To fit its Ribs
And crawl between Complaining all the while In horrid--hooting stanza-- Then chase itself down Hill--

And neigh like Boanerges--
Then--punctual as a Star
Stop--docile and omnipotent
At its own stable door.

Of course, ED's poem goes well beyond Burritt's description in boldness of invention and plain linguistic brilliance, but still the similarities give one pause.

151. Steve Clay

John Berryman event in Minneapolis, MN Feb 17, 2011

Tue 15 Feb 2011

The Book House in Dinkytown is sponsoring John Berryman: Poet and Teacher, A Celebration on Thursday, February 17th at 7:00pm in the Red Room at the Loring Pasta Bar, 327 14th Avenue Southeast, Minneapolis, MN. Admission is free. Parking validation is available through the Book House if you park in the lot behind the shop off 5th Street SE.

John Berryman won the Pulitzer Prize for 77 Dream Songs which he published in 1964. His poetry has been described as boldly original and innovative. He was also a brilliant and passionate teacher who taught at the University of Minnesota from 1955 to his death in 1972.

Join us for an evening of Dream Songs and reminiscences. Actor and writer Ben Kreilkamp will read from a selection of his work interspersed with remembrances from his students, colleagues and those who knew him. Guests for the evening will include Kate Donahue, Michael Dennis Browne, Richard Kelly, Michael Mann, Patricia Kirkpatrick, and Judith Koll Healey.

Berryman fans will also have an opportunity to listen for the first time to rare Berryman tapes, and share in a reading of personal statements from well known authors who are unable to attend the event. An exhibit of photocopied manuscript materials from the Andersen archives will highlight how various Dream Songs evolved from scraps of paper to typescripts ready for submission to Berryman's publisher. "Huffy Henry" didn't start out as 'huffy' at all.

Ben Kreilkamp was recently interviewed about the event by Ian Leask of KFAI's Write On Radio!

For more information about the event, please call The Book House in Dinkytown at [redacted] or email [redacted].

origin of the term "dirty concrete"?

Hello all! I wonder if anyone out there knows where the term "dirty concrete" came from (a term which I know Stephen Scobie and others have used to describe Steve McCaffery's work).

Any leads or tips would be just wonderful - thanks -

153. Lisa Jarnot
a poetry workshop in sunnyside queens
Tue 15 Feb 2011

Hi All,

I have a new class starting in NYC and I'd appreciate it if you could forward this to interested parties.

Thanks very much,
Lisa Jarnot

I'm going to be teaching a ten-week reading/writing workshop on Saturdays (3-5 pm) beginning March 5. The class will be organized around a comprehensive view of Robert Duncan's life and career, with special attention to Duncan's recently published critical work on Modernism, The H.D. Book. We'll do writing around Duncan's own writing, with attention to his influences and peers and students (Gertrude Stein, Ezra Pound, Helen Adam, Jack Spicer, Charles Olson, Michael Palmer, etc.) and we'll listen to recordings of RD's lectures and readings. Students will also bring their own work and projects to share with the class. Fee is $300 for 10 weeks. (payment by installment is possible.) If you have questions or if you'd like to reserve a spot, email me at [redacted].

Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Tue 15 Feb 2011

As an almost certainly irrelevant aside, Thomas Wentworth Higginson who figures as ED's first (non)publisher also has a minor place in the history of American Cant Scholarship.

He was profoundly impressed by the writings of Henry Tufts, and believed, on the evidence which Tufts retailed, in the existence of The Great American Criminal Conspiracy.

While he was not admittedly alone in this delusion (the Reverend B.F.Tefft, writing in 1848 in _The Ladies' Journal__ which he was editing at this time, on the authority of the Napoleon of Burglars, also believed this), he does tend to exhibit a credulity verging on the imbecilic.

What relation this has to his editorial and critical on the work of the Sainted Emily, I leave for others to decide.

Subject: Re: "Lyric Time" vs. "My Emily Dickinson" or Trivial and Non-Trivial ED Books

Hi Jared,

ED's manuscripts are on-line, I believe, and the consistencies of those diacritical marks (as some insist the dashes are) are available for all to see, but I would suggest that ED in cyberspace is a different, and perhaps "non-authentic" presentation of ED's texts as they were clearly meant to be read within the parameters of "book" technology of the mid to late 19the century.

In order to do justice to the intention of the author, it's therefore necessary to hold the poems in one's hand in as fragmentary a condition as possible. This is necessary to appreciate the sculptural--indeed the haptic--qualities of Dickinson's "shaped" poems. No, photographs are not enough for this--ED clearly meant that some of her poems should be published on scraps of paper of various tactile qualities, some sewn together and kept in drawer-like enclosures (which should be reproduced) and some presented appended to gifts (which should be reconstructed) or flowers (live versions of which should be appended to the poem in question and replaced as needed--thus maintaining the necessary olfactory environment, which is yet another element of the author's intention and indeed of the meaning of the poem itself, which should be rightfully restored and conserved in order for accuracy to be maintained).

The author's intention is certainly clear at least on this point: ED's gift and flower-as-gift-poems should be presented intact and not separated from their respective objects. Thomas Johnson is not the only scholar guilty of disrespecting ED's work and imposing a particularly reductive view on her corpus, in this respect.

But, Jared, I would suggest that you take a look at those dashes as they appear in the original manuscripts. Take a few hours, or take a life time, and report back. Their use is about as consistent as other points in Ed's handwriting and should be worth a whole new branch of Dickinson study.

Jess

*Murat pointed out the line "presuming to lead" vs. "presuming to God" -- is it "l" or "G?" -- and the fact that there's a choice there for the reader -- Howe chooses "lead" -- and as he wrote off-list, the choice is perhaps "ideologically determined." Howe's "guilty" of her choices in the transcription, but there's a faithfulness and recognition there that I've found lacking in others. Or at least of a sort different from others and one I identify with more readily. Higginson consistently told Dickinson
she needed to polish her verse (perhaps in the ways the early transcribers would), and Dickinson consistently refused. She'd appear to insist here.
Even so, despite her insisting re the rough and rude, and this is interesting, she continually sought Higginson's ear. Dickinson seems rather stubbornly intentional, and my sense is Howe is exceptional in her recognition of that. But again, your point is well taken, as here things drifting into into intention which, as you indicated, D scholars in good faith attempt to understand..*

*Well, there's already a problem, Jared, and that's with the dashes.
Dickinson's dashes are one of the most difficult aspects of her mss.
Sometimes they "float" above the gap, sometimes "sink" below.*

Sometimes they're slanting like accent marks, sometimes they're dots of various sizes. (A Bit like Blackburn's floating periods.) They take other forms too--length is variable as well. Here's the question:
what are we to make of them in any transcription? Thomas Johnson regularized them into the now familiar dash, but shouldn't Susan Howe and anyone following after give the most accurate representation of the so-called dashes?

And shouldn't they mean something too? I mean, if the word lists are to be included, then certainly this aspect of Dickinson should not be ignored. Or should it?

New from Chax Press: Mark Weiss, As Landscape.
$16. Order from http://www.chax.org/poets/weiss.htm

"What a beautiful set of circumstances! What a lovely concatenation of particulars. Here is the poet alive in every sense of the word, and through every one of his senses. Instead of missing a beat or a part, Weiss' fragments are like Chekhov's short storiesthe more that gets left out, the more they seem to contain… One can hear echoes from all the various ancestors...[but] the voice, at its center, its core, is pure Mark Weiss. His use of the fragment is both elegant and bafflingly clear, a pure musical threnody…[it] opens a window, not only into a mind, but a person, a personality, this human figure at the emotional center of the poem."

The class will be organized around a comprehensive view of Robert Duncan's life and career, with special attention to Duncan's recently published critical work on Modernism, The H.D. Book. We'll do writing around Duncan's own writing, with attention to his influences and peers and students (Gertrude Stein, Ezra Pound, Helen Adam, Jack Spicer, Charles Olson, Michael Palmer, etc.) and we'll listen to recordings of RD's lectures and readings. Students will also bring their own work and projects to share with the class. Fee is $300 for 10 weeks. (payment by installment is possible.) Zinc Bar 2/18: Donald Wellman book party w/Joel Lewis and Norman Finkelstein
Wed 16 Feb 2011

Zinc Bar Reading Series
presents:

A Book Party
for Donald Wellman's
A NORTH ATLANTIC WALL

with Joel Lewis and Norman Finkelstein

Friday, Feb 18 @ 6:30 PM

at Zinc Bar
82 W 3rd St
New York, NY

Donald Wellman, poet, essayist, and editor, lives in Weare NH. His poetry includes A North Atlantic Wall, recently released by Dos Madres Press. In 2009, his *Prolog Pages*was published by ahadada. Other titles include * urika*, a chapbook from boat train in Gloucester, baroque threads(Mudlark) and Fields (Light and Dust). He has written about his life on the coast of Maine, as well as his experiences in Mexico, spain and Morocco. He has written extensively on Charles Olson, William Carlos Williams, and Ezra Pound.

Joel Lewis is the author of Learning From New Jersey(2007), Tasks Of The Youth Leagues (2006) , Vertical's Currency (1999) and House Rent Boogie (1992). He edited*Bluestones and Salt Hay*, an anthology of contemporary NJ poets, as well as editing the Reality Prime, the selected poems of Walter Lowenfels and On The Level Everyday: the selected talks of Ted Berrigan. He has also written hundreds of articles, reviews, essays and profiles and currently is a staff writer at the New Jersey Performing Arts Center in Newark. A social worker by day, he has taught creative writing at the Poetry Project, The Writer's Voice and Rutgers University. And, for better or worse, he initiated the ill-fated New Jersey Poet Laureate position that was such a headache for Amiri Baraka. With his wife, film theorist Sandy Flitterman-Lewis, he resides in Hoboken.

Norman Finkelstein's books of poetry include Restless Messengers (University of Georgia Press, 1992), *Passing *

Over (Marsh Hawk, 2007), Scribe (Dos Madres, 2009), and the three-volume serial poem Track (Spuyten Duyvil 1999, 2002, 2005). He has also published five books of literary criticism: The Utopian Moment in Contemporary American Poetry (Bucknell University Press, 1988; 2nd ed., 1993), The Ritual of New Creation: Jewish Tradition and Contemporary Literature (SUNY Press, 1992), Not One of Them In Place: Modern Poetry and Jewish American Identity (SUNY Press, 2001), Lyrical Interference: Essays on Poetics (Spuyten Duyvil, 2003) and On Mount Vision: Forms of the Sacred In Contemporary American Poetry (University of Iowa Press, 2010). Recent poems, essays and reviews have appeared such journals as LIT: Literature Interpretation Theory, Contemporary Literature, Cincinnati Review, Rain Taxi and*Hambone*.

George Quasha "Verbal Paradise (preverbs)" book and video

Verbal Paradise (preverbs) (2011)

/This is the first book of a projected six books of "preverbs," Islands, Spain) distributed and sold in the USA by SPD.

<http://www.spdbooks.org/Default.aspx>/

Video of the recent Cadmium Text Series reading 2-12-11 in Kingston, NY at:
http://www.quasha.com/poetry/preverbs-and-axial-poems

About this book:

"Words say too much to let you know the truth.'' George Quasha's torqued, enigmatic proverbs create unlikely balances among discrepant engagements. The vectors of these marvelous poems work at cross purposes, keeping each other aloft. These are sparkling aphoristic aporias for a new age in an old time. "Poetry," says Quasha, "resists immortality with difficulty." And also with wit and charm. Be /here/ now, in which case immortality will take care of itself.

Charles Bernstein

Ludic, glittering dialectic, that's the true feeling of the ongoing dance in /preverbs,/ here now in a first volume, /Verbal Paradise. /The lines are all children, bright and witty children, egging each other on to say fast as they can what they don't yet know. And we can know only by listening to them tussle. It's the antiphonal give-and-take that makes these poems so different from other couplets, qasidas, dyads. They refuse to be ruled even by the form they propose. So reading them is an athletic conversation. And not just the poem with itself. What happens is that as I read along, I begin to talk back--in accord or grumblement---with some brave line, only to find a line or two later the poem answering my comment. The poem gets there before me. I like that.

Re: origin of the term "dirty concrete"?
Wed 16 Feb 2011

Mid-sixties Gestetner mimeograph mags, David Sandberg's "Or" in San Francisco, for example, or "Work" and "Change" in Detroit: printed on heavy stock with that thin edge between typographic clarity and ink blur - got the reader involved in the way of looking very closely, as if it was also the reader's responsibility to secure 'the text' (no one ever said 'text' in 1965!). But then I don't remember anybody saying, 'dirty concrete.' Perhaps we said, "funky & good." Maybe 'dirty concrete' is also akin to having that 'garbage sound' on LP records before CD's came along to cleanup and make everything sterile and 'presentable.'

Re: origin of the term "dirty concrete"?
Wed 16 Feb 2011

Any relation to the phrase (if I have the spelling right) "sale existentialiste"?

Sounds as if dirty/clean con might parallel a distinction between typewriter concrete and typeset concrete. In sixties Scottish concrete poetry, this difference would be exemplified by (respectively) Edwin Morgan and Ian Hamilton Finlay.

Lori
First place I came across it in print was in a sequence of notes and letters by various people (Bob Cobbing, Henri Chopin, Deiter Rot, DSH, and a couple others) in the anthology that Cobbing and Peter Meyer put together called Concerning Concrete.(I had been using it independantly before coming across it that to describe the difference between certain kinds of English work like Cobbing's, Furnival's and even some of DSH's and the clean lines of the Swiss/German/Brazilian folks--this last is a bit reductive, but is indicative of work that for me has a quality of opening out into multiple possibilities and work that tends towards a closed set of readerly content--the clean work tends to be controlled and controlling in a way that leaves little freedom for the reader)

We'll, I've been working the Ouija board pretty hard since posting on this topic and have made a few break-throughs as far as ED's ultimate intentions for her fascicles. Next step: scrying stones as per John Dee, Edward Kelly and Joseph Smith. My TV-watching table has been scratched, rapped, and rotated repeatedly when I mention both the names Emily and Susan (for some 1855ish reason) and I've been picking up whispered female voices on blank tapes in the middle of the day. Stay tuned for transcendental illumination, Mark and all the list ladies who haven't yet breathed a word on this subject. (Yes, I've noticed!

I'm also not convinced of the authority of the fascicles as to intention. If the line breaks are indeed intended as such they're pretty awful, and the rhymes and meters, which stay pretty close to the hymnal, argue that there's no such intention. The paper on which the fascicles are written looks to me like binder's trim. (Has anybody checked this out? It would be good to know at least what papers they are.) Arrangement of verse on them seems dictated by their narrowness rather than any aesthetic decision.

We'll never know. We can be reasonably confident that she wasn't trying to anticipate Williams or to mimic Whitman.

For some reason, I'm reminded irresistibly of Blake -- how many people bother to read the Songs of Innocence and Experience (let alone the Prophetic Books) in facsimile, let alone anything more authentic?

Then there's (to push this back even further) the little monograph signatures that Thomas Wyatt placed beside some of the poems contained in the Egerton manuscript ...

I once spent an hour at the British Library, trying to write out (staring at the MS through glass) the specific notation that Wyatt placed beside some of his poems.

An instructive experience ...

But comes down to it, I prefer to read Wyatt in a nicely-printed modernised spelling edition.

For what that's worth.

Hi Jared,

ED's manuscripts are on-line, I believe, and the consistencies of those diacritical marks (as some insist the dashes are) are available for all to see, but I would suggest that ED in cyberspace is a different, and perhaps "non-authentic" presentation of ED's texts as they were clearly meant to be read within the parameters of "book" technology of the mid to late 19the century.

In order to do justice to the intention of the author, it's therefore necessary to hold the poems in one's hand in as fragmentary a condition as possible. This is necessary to appreciate the sculptural--indeed the haptic--qualities of Dickinson's "shaped" poems. No, photographs are not enough for this--ED clearly meant that some of her poems should be published on scraps of paper of various tactile qualities, some sewn together and kept in drawer-like enclosures (which should be reproduced) and some presented appended to gifts (which should be reconstructed) or flowers (live versions of which should be appended to the poem in question and replaced as needed--thus maintaining the necessary olfactory environment, which is yet another element of the author's intention and indeed of the meaning of the poem itself, which should be rightfully restored and conserved in order for accuracy to be maintained).

The author's intention is certainly clear at least on this point: ED's gift and flower-as-gift-poems should be presented intact and not separated from their respective objects. Thomas Johnson is not the only scholar guilty of disrespecting ED's work and imposing a particularly reductive view on her corpus, in this respect.

But, Jared, I would suggest that you take a look at those dashes as they appear in the original manuscripts. Take a few hours, or take a life time, and report back. Their use is about as consistent as other points in Ed's handwriting and should be worth a whole new branch of Dickinson study.

floating or sinking dash doesn't seem intentional -- and here the reader is, speculating on intention --

Murat pointed out the line "presuming to lead" vs. "presuming to God"

--
is it "l" or "G?" -- and the fact that there's a choice there for the reader -- Howe chooses "lead" -- and as he wrote off-list, the choice is perhaps "ideologically determined." Howe's "guilty" of her choices in the transcription, but there's a faithfulness and recognition there that I've found lacking in others. Or at least of a sort different from others and one I identify with more readily. Higginson consistently told Dickinson
she needed to polish her verse (perhaps in the ways the early transcribers would), and Dickinson consistently refused. She'd appear to insist here.
Even so, despite her insisting re the rough and rude, and this is interesting, she continually sought Higginson's ear. Dickinson seems rather stubbornly intentional, and my sense is Howe is exceptional in her recognition of that. But again, your point is well taken, as here things drifting into into intention which, as you

indicated, D scholars in good faith attempt to understand..

Well, there's already a problem, Jared, and that's with the dashes.
Dickinson's dashes are one of the most difficult aspects of her mss.
Sometimes they "float" above the gap, sometimes "sink" below.
Sometimes they're slanting like accent marks, sometimes they're dots of various sizes. (A Bit like Blackburn's floating periods.) They take other forms too--length is variable as well. Here's the question:
what are we to make of them in any transcription? Thomas Johnson regularized them into the now familiar dash, but shouldn't Susan Howe and anyone following after give the most accurate representation of the so-called dashes?

And shouldn't they mean something too? I mean, if the word lists are to be included, then certainly this aspect of Dickinson should not be ignored. Or should it?

Re: origin of the term "dirty concrete"?
Thu 17 Feb 2011

Dear Lori,

Please check out the movie "Dirty Dancing"--The young Steve McCaffery was an extra on the set, which was primarily of old Roman concrete--most of it flown in from the hills of Tuscany. Steve believed in dancing dirty with the best of them, but he was particularly fond of "the soft shoe," so he'd fill his pockets full of grit before scenes, sprinkle the grit on the ancient concrete and awaaaaaay he'd go! He really had "the time of his life!" and considered continuing his dancing career, but his "writing senses" got the better of him and he chose instead to become a famous professor and poet with many impressive volumes now under his belt. You can still visit the set of Dirty Dancing in the old sound lot and most of that Roman concrete remains impervious to the incursions of Hollywood weather, though little by little the majescules of the graffiti carved surreptitiously upon it with compass legs--largely by middle-aged mathematics teachers mourning the passing of Patrick Swayze and whatever wild youths they may have imagined they had had--are fading in much the same way as an answer rendered up by a "Magic 8 Ball" when the harmless but oracular toy is given a decided shake.

This chapter in Dr. McCaffery's life has largely been overlooked, and I thank you, Lori, for the opportunity to throw some light on it.

Sincerely,

Jess

Re: Happy Birthday Bern Porter

Thu 17 Feb 2011

Bern Porter once sent me some material for a review I was editing, but I kept it a little too long and he sent me a wonderful post card saying colorful things. Of course the review appeared, he got his copy (I think) and I kept the post card in remembrance. Since my move to Japan, I haven't been able to locate it, though sometimes I almost recall what it said. Re: origin of the term "dirty concrete"?

Thu 17 Feb 2011

I remember a reading at The Lab or someplace like that in SF around 1986-1988, Stephen McCaffery (featured that evening I think with Beverly Dahlen) did a kind of performance piece comprised essentially of "FULL and Extra-Physical Enunciation" of "text" pared down all the way to the Ground Level of individual letters, perhaps in fact JUST ONE letter, the letter T (at least that is the one that I best remember). He articulated, "t, t, t, T, T, T, T, T, T" and so on and so forth. Indeed, he wanted to, let's say, FULLY ACTUALIZE the entire experiential range of the universal physicality of the letter T, all that ear, tongue, mouth, lungs, and even esophagus FEEL/Contact when it, the letter T, is stripped of its (Capitalist?) conventional utility or any kind of marketable semantic association or "burden" (Williams). (I guess that's "My Stephen McCaffery" that evening, anyways...)

In effect, or maybe Full Effect, he really, really engaged us somatically and carnally with his intensely evocative accentuation and "primitive," roof-shaking, thunderous enunciation of the letter T. He SPIT it right into some of us in the first couple rows of seats, in fact. NOW, if that wasn't one of the most "concrete" poetries I have ever witnessed, No, I should say _EXPERIENCED_, then I don't know what is (other than what Robert Grenier does, and leaves, on the page, also "minimalist," but more a graphic or visual "concrete," while McCaffery's, obviously, is dramatically SOUND-based and Extremely Oral, of course.) Anyhow, given that a good bit of good clean spit was emitted, surely that kind of poming would/could be called "dirty concrete," in my humble opinion.

Back in the day we used to talk about dirty con and clean con.

Dirty con was the stuff you did by typing over other typing but a bit off.

Anything with smears etc.

Generally the stuff bpNichol was doing was clean con and the stuff bill bissett was doing was dirty con.

There was a difference of intent.

Dirty con was generally done by poets who wanted to strike against hoitsy toitsy aestheticism.

A Megaphone: Some Enactments, Some Numbers, and Some Essays about the Continued Usefulness of Crotchless-pants-and-a-machine-gun Feminism

Just got a copy, and it looks E-x-c-e-l-l-e-n-t --

A MEGAPHONE collects a number of enactments that Juliana Spahr and Stephanie Young did between the years of 2005-2007. In these enactments, they attempted to think with the playful dogmatism of a feminist tradition that they call "crotchless pants and a machine gun" (obviously referencing Valie Export) in order to locate what might still be useful today about the somewhat beleaguered "second wave" feminist traditions. To that end, Spahr and Young lectured in Oulipian slenderized baby talk about figures such as Carolee Schneemann and Marina Abramovic; they counted the numbers of women and men and tansgendered people in various poetry anthologies; and they invited writers from outside the US to talk about being a writer where they live (over seventy-five writers from Puerto Rico to Morocco to Croatia to South Africa to Syria to Micronesia to Korea responded). Also included in A MEGAPHONE are discussions of that always contested relationship between feminism and "experimental" poetry by Julian T. Brolaski, E. Tracy Grinnell, Paul Foster Johnson, Christian Peet, Barbara Jane Reyes, Dale Smith, and A. E. Stallings. The book ends with a (soma)tic writing exercise from CAConrad, one designed to encourage readers and writers to create open, yet still meaningful, feminist alliances.

Boog City
http://www.welcometoboogcity.com/

Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 20th year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has also published 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women’s writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series —d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, where each month a non-NYC small press and its writers and a musical act of their choosing is hosted at Chelsea’s ACA Galleries; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live at venues including The Bowery Poetry Club, Cake Shop, CBGB’s, and The Knitting Factory. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville.

Ivy Johnson

Ivy Johnson is of Viking blood and was raised on the open prairie of North Dakota, where she picked crocuses as a child. Her first chapbook, Walt Disney's Light Show Extravaganza, is being released from Boog City. She is currently working on a manuscript titled Gimme Petrified Electric. She lives in Brooklyn.

Yoko Kikuchi

Yoko Kikuchi is a fourth-generation American artist and singer/ songwriter of Japanese and Filipino descent, associated with the Antifolk community of New York’s East Village. Born in New York City to parents involved in the visual arts, she was raised in SoHo and Hell’s Kitchen, attending public schools including Wagner JHS 167 and Stuyvesant High School. It was at those schools where she met Ann Zakaluk, with whom she co-fronted the Antifolk indie pop band Dream Bitches between 2004 and 2009. Although she is self-taught on the guitar, her ear for harmonies is due to her ten-year involvement in the Young People’s Chorus of New York City, directed by Francisco J. Núñez, with which she toured and competed both nationally and internationally.

Kikuchi has released three solo albums. Songs I Wrote For You (2003) is a collection of songs written and recorded during her time as a student at Montserrat College of Art in Beverly, Massachusetts. The double-album “How to Stay Amazed/Lilly Lafayette” (2008) is a retrospective of songs written between 2001 and 2006. “Menahan Tree” (2008) is an EP of songs recorded in the living room of the house/venue she shared from 2007-2010 with Jacinta Mack and Angela Carlucci (The Baby Skins, Herman Dune).

In 2006, Recommended If You Like Records released a split 7”, This Song/That Song with Casey Holford. Yoko toured Europe in support of that release with Holford and Daoud Tyler-Ameen as the band Daouets. She also has two releases with Dream Bitches: “Sanfransisters” (Olive Juice Music, 2005) and “Coke-and-Spiriters” (Recommended If You Like Records, 2008). In 2008-2009, she played drums in two bands, Lady Bright, with whom she toured but never released an album, and A Fermata. Since then she has formed a band called Tight Little Ship (named after a song by Schwervon!) with her Lady Bright bandmate Sara Lautman and their friend Christy Davis.

Paige Lipari
http://www.beforeiamallpoof.blogspot.com/

Paige Lipari is a poet, music maker, cartoonist, and cook. She lives in Brooklyn, and she is an editor at A Public Space.

Brandon Miller

Born and raised in Warwick, R.I. Lived in NYC for seven years. Attended Parsons School of Design for fashion design and graduated from Eugene Lang College Poetry in 2009. Published in Sept. ’09 issue of What You Do/Eat a Peach. Work at the Museum of Modern Art in the visitor services department.

I can attest to what Jesse has said about Steve's career.
If you have a look at his belt, which was probably his father's belt, you will see a lot of books tucked under there.
In fact some of them aren't even by him!
But who cares? We love Steve.

About Studying Hunger Journals

In 1972 Bernadette Mayer began this project as an aid to psychological counseling, writing in parallel journals so that, as she wrote in one (in bed, on subways, at parties, etc.), her psychiatrist read the other. Using colored pens to "color-code emotions," she recorded dreams, events, memories, and reflections in a language at once free-ranging and precise—a work that creates its own poetics. She sought “a workable code, or shorthand, for the transcription of every event, every motion, every transition” of her own mind and to “perform this process of translation” on herself in the interest of evolving an innovative, inquiring language. *Studying Hunger Journals *registers this intention within a body of poetry John Ashbery has called “magnificent.”

Word on Studying Hunger Journals:

When the first published version of Studying Hunger appeared under Larry Fagin’s and my combined Big Sky/Adventures in Poetry imprint, an artist friend said that Bernadette Mayer’s writing showed bad manners; this happily called up a 1960s critic’s estimation of deKooning’s abrupt shifts of style as a mark of “the bad manners of genius.” Presuming to take on unruly consciousness as a topic (“as such”) must have been part of what my artist friend meant. Is Bernadette Mayer a Conceptual Poet? Any idea of consciousness is bound to be conceptual, but consciousness––however graced, though inconsiderate in action––can be apprehended only sensationally. That’s what you think. The sassy, self-endangered, forensic writing in STUDYING HUNGER JOURNALS runs wildly ahead of such considerations––bad in the best way, like religious experience.

––Bill Berkson

Made public at last in its gorgeous various and unstinting entirety, *Studying Hunger Journals *reveals itself to be one of the great in fact epic works of a movement that could never be given a name. No label fit for such limitless activity, its terms being those of our restless language and its relentless go-betweens that move and may alter. Attend therefore and let them have their way, these words given without let and best received in kind.

—Clark Coolidge

* *

Someone irritated me recently by saying “Our time lacks a poet’s poet. You know, a poet who gets you writing.” SHAME ON YOU I said. YOU ARE LIVING ON THE PLANET WHERE BERNADETTE MAYER LIVES AND WRITES! Are there bigger shoulders we stand on today? I don’t think so. Every time I’m in the same room as Bernadette I look around and think, “She is the best poet and smartest person here!” My religion is Poetry and Bernadette Mayer is High Priestess!

—CAConrad

We have been waiting a long time—decades, in fact—for the publication of Studying Hunger Journals, so this is an occasion to celebrate—that they have come into the world, into the light, and into our hands. Mayer's experiment, her transcription of consciousness, is timeless and sexy. There is gentle genius in her heroic quest to be "an observer of self in process."

NYC event: Celebrate Bernadette Mayer's STUDYING HUNGER JOURNALS on Feb 23rd, St Marks

Sat 19 Feb 2011

Hope to see you next week! Additional information and Facebook invite below...Warm wishes, Deborah

Come celebrate the release of Bernadette Mayer's STUDYING HUNGER JOURNALS (Station Hill Press). In part, the journals explore psyche and were undertaken, in cahoots with a psychiatrist via two running journals, so that while she kept writing in one he could read the other. She wrote in colored pens, intending to "color-code emotions"—to see if her synaesthetic ability to see letters as colors might act as a bridge to seeing emotions. She had had an idea: "…if a human, a writer, could come up with a workable code, or shorthand, for the transcription of every event, every motion, every transition of his or her own mind, & could perform this process of translation on himself, using the code… he or we or someone could come up with a great piece of language/information." While an abridged edition appeared in 1975 with Adventures In Poetry/Big Sky, this is the full text of that enterprise. Bernadette Mayer is the author of more than two dozen volumes of poetry, including Midwinter Day, Sonnets, The Desires of Mothers to Please Others in Letters, and Poetry State Forest. A former director of the Poetry Project at St. Mark's Church in the Bowery and co-editor of the conceptual magazine 0 to 9 with Vito Acconci, Mayer has been a key figure on the New York poetry scene for decades. The book will be read by a wide range of luminaries including, Lee Ann Brown, Barbara Epler, Phil Good, Bernadette Mayer, Don Yorty, Michael

Ruby, Marie Warsh, Lewis Warsh, Adam Fitzgerald, Peggy Decoursey, Bill Kushner, Bill Denoyelles, Deborah Poe, Peter Baker, Miles Champion, Anne Waldman and CA Conrad.

PHILIP GUSTON: A LIFE LIVED + DISCUSSED
Clark Coolidge + Bill Berkson, in dialogue

Monday March 14th, 7:00 pm Balboa Theatre, 3630 Balboa Street, San Francisco Poets Clark Coolidge and Bill Berkson will discuss the life, work and influence of one of the most intellectually adventurous and poetically gifted of modern painters, in light of the newly published Collected Writings, Lectures and Conversations of Philip Guston (UC Press). Over the course of his life, Guston's wide reading in literature and philosophy ever deepened his commitment to his art — from his early Abstract Expressionist paintings to his later gritty, intense figurative works.

Clark Coolidge, editor of the new UC Press volume, has published many books of poetry and prose, among them a collaboration with Guston, Baffling Means: Writings/Drawings (O-Blek Editions), Now It's Jazz: Writings on Kerouac & The Sounds (Living Batch), and most recently, This Time We Are Both (Ugly Duckling).

Bill Berkson is a poet, art critic, corresponding editor for Art in America, and long-time professor of literature and art history at the San Francisco Art Institute. His many books include a collaboration with Guston, Enigma Variations (Big Sky), and most recently, For the Ordinary Artist: Short Reviews, Occasional Pieces and More (BlazeVOX).

Patrick James Dunagan, author of There Are People Who Say That Painters Shouldn't Talk: A GUSTONBOOK (Post-Apollo), will introduce the dialogue following a screening of the Michael Blackwood documentary film, Philip Guston: A Life Lived. This event is presented by Bird & Beckett Cultural Legacy Project, a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization housed at Bird & Beckett Books and Records in San Francisco.

$10 admission.

Hello all! I wonder if anyone out there knows where the term "dirty concrete" came from (a term which I know Stephen Scobie and others have used to describe Steve McCaffery's work).

Any leads or tips would be just wonderful - thanks -

ANREW LEVY's recent titles of poetry and prose include Nothing Is in Here (EOAGH Books, 2011) and Cracking Up (Truck Books, 2010). He is also a contributing writer in collaboration with the PUH collective to The Big Melt (Factory School), and author of Memories of My Father (Innerer Klang), Ashoka (Zasterle Books), Paper Head Last Lyrics (Roof Books), Curve (O Books), and Values Chauffeur You (O Books) among other titles. Billy Dale Shoots to Kill is forthcoming from Chax Press. Levy is an associate professor of English at BMCC-CUNY, and co-editor, with Roberto Harrison, of the poetry journal Crayon. He lives in New York City with his wife and two daughters.

JESSE SELDESS recently relocated to Brooklyn from Karlsruhe, Germany. He is the author of two books, Who Opens (Kenning Editions, 2006) and Left Having (Kenning Editions, forthcoming), as well as chapbooks on Hand Held Editions, Instance Press, Answer Tag Press, and the Chicago Poetry Project Press. His work has recently appeared in the journals EOAGH, Jacket, Little Red Leaves, and out of nothing. Since 2001, he has edited and published Antennae (http://www.antennae-journal.com/), a journal of experimental writing and language-based performance and music scores.

Praise for Nothing is in Here:

"This book percolates with the nervous jitters of a new syntax, highly compressed into gigabyte format, and it attacks the central nervous system of the reader. In my day it used to be 'dudes,' but today it's all the young screens that carry the news. . If, due to a saturation of such memes, the fact of the sentence has lost urgency, maybe it's the job of the poet to point out what we've lost while instructing us in the delight of our debris. No one demonstrates this fact of digital life better than poet Andrew Levy, whose first EOAGH collection arrives at a critical moment in our nation's horologics. If you could synchronize this book to all your inner clocks, you'd be a good forty-five seconds ahead of the rest of the world at all times."

- Kevin Killian

"With barely concealed irony, downright humor, a large wedge of anger and a small edge of wistfulness, Andrew Levy views everything from the 'urban interruption' of mid-town Manhattan to the corrupt politics of G.W. Bush, from war and torture to religiosity and outright mendacity. There's more: invented personae, pop culture, the bubble economy, friends and family, beauty and envy. Even the Brooklyn Bridge makes an appearance. Just about everything is in Nothing is in Here. And the title itself is a bright lure: 'Nothing is in here we' re forced to debate.' The terms are given in the beginning: 'Nothing is in here. So, I make it look as different as possible.'"

Libya et al
Mon 21 Feb 2011

Libya, Kadafi, is committing genocide against its 'own people' in order to protect his enormous oil wealth.

No matter the immediate fall out - and horrifying it is - it seems to be crucial for European and other nations to invest heavily in the creation of solar based power plants across the Sahara - both as a way of employment for North Africans (and a deterrent to the need to migrate) and the provision of an energy supply that can support the supplanting of oil dependence and the corporate and state autocrats that viciously control these oil based nations.

No Press
http://derekbeaulieu.wordpress.com/

No Press was founded by Derek Beaulieu in 2005. After the cessation of publishing his housepress imprint (1997-2004) Beaulieu returned to publishing as "no press" as means of publishing and circulating experimental, conceptual and concrete poetries. Dedicated to small press forms - leaflets, broadsides, chapbooks, pamphlets and other ephemeral forms - no press has released almost 200 publications in 6 years (averaging 1 every 2 weeks) in editions of between 5 and 100. Items are often out of print the same as publication, and represent a truly ephemeral means of distributing these marginalized forms.

Kevin McPherson Eckhoff
http://kevinmcphersoneckhoff.wordpress.com/

Kevin McPherson Eckhoff likes visual poetry and even wrote Rhapsodomancy (Coach House). In theory, he is not afraid of snakes. His writing has vacationed in Open Letter, Fact*Simile, West Wind Review, and Issue One. Don¹t try to feed him steak! He sleeps in Armstrong, B.C., with his dog-rescuing partner, Laurel, and ³teaches² at Okanagan College with his very bff, Jake Kennedy (The Lateral, Snare Books). Together, Jake and Kevin are compiling a community-written novel called Death Valley.

Robert Fitterman
http://cwp.fas.nyu.edu/object/cwp.faculty.robertfitterman

Robert Fitterman is the author of 12 books of poetry. He grew up in a small suburb of St. Louis called Creve Coeur. His street is still flanked by a Shell gas station on one side and a Mobile station on the other. His writing is kinda conceptual and sorta involves identity issues that are complicated by the web. And the Mall. Recent titles include: Now We Are Friends (Truck Books), Rob the Plagiarist (Roof Books), and Notes On Conceptualisms, co-authored with Vanessa Place (Ugly Duckling Presse). He teaches writing and poetry at New York University and at the Bard College, Milton Avery School of Graduate Studies.

Charles Gute
http://www.charlesgute.com/

Charles Gute is a New York-based artist and editor. He has been awarded artist fellowships from the San Francisco Foundation and the Rockefeller Foundation, and has twice been a MacDowell Colony Visual Arts Fellow. In 2010 he was awarded a VLA Art/Law Residency fellowship. His work has been in group exhibitions at venues including the Berkeley Art Museum (Berkeley), ZKM (Karlsruhe, Germany), the UCLA Hammer Museum (Los Angeles),Galerie Feinkost (Berlin), Ronald Feldman Gallery (Chicago), Brown Gallery (London), and Maccarone (New York). Solo exhibitions include ³The Art Tax Act,² Patricia Sweetow Gallery, San Francisco, 2000; ³Find-A-Text,² Jason Rulnick, Inc., New York, 2008; and ³The Corrections,² Catharine Clark Gallery, San Francisco, 2010. A hardcover monograph on Gute¹s work, Revisions and Queries, was published by The Ice Plant, Los Angeles, in 2008. In the summer of 2009 he presented a large-scale outdoor work at Socrates Sculpture Park in New York. In 2010 Gute created specially commissioned artist projects for publication in Frieze (March issue), Flash Art (March/April issue), and Art Lies (summer issue). His work will be on view at Walden Projects in The Hague, the Netherlands, during summer 2011.

Rorie Kelly
http://www.roriekelly.com/

Rorie Kelly is a singer/songwriter and conquistadora originally from Long Island. Her main goal in life is to travel around in her little blue car and make music and art. She was recently named one of Long Island's "Top 10 Indie Artists You've Never Heard of" by Long Island Pulse Magazine and is about to release her first full length album, Wish Upon a Bottlecap. She is also a published writer of feminist blogs, music reviews, and poetry. More information and pretty songs can be found at the above link.

Jake Kennedy
http://snarebooks.wordpress.com/books/the-lateral-by-jake-kennedy/

Jake Kennedy is a poet, prose writer, and teacher. His work has appeared in a number of literary journals and anthologies. His chapbook, Hazard, is published by BookThug. Jake currently teaches in the English department at Okanagan College. Kennedy's first book, The Lateral, is a highly original and experimental book from a nimble poetic mind. It includes an elegiac found-long-poem that gathers all the ³Acker² keyword tags from the Flickr database and reapplies them as words-of-lament for the revolutionary artist-writer Kathy Acker (1947-97), a series of prose-poem-ruminations that contemplate the optimal conditions for the poetry, and a section of poems that can only be described as the vulgar, unkempt cousin of Hugh Prather¹s Notes to Myself.

Rachel Zolf
http://thetoleranceproject.blogspot.com/

Rachel Zolf¹s fourth book of poetry is Neighbour Procedure (Coach House). She lives in Brooklyn.
