I don't remember if they called it an institute back then, but I was in an NEH Summer Seminar, the first or second year of the program. (There was a moment in my life I LIKED William Bennett.) It was a 6-week seminar on Friendship as a Theme in Literature, at Kenyon College, run by the professor who was one of a two-editor team to revive the Kenyon Review. It was a great experience, great. Also one of my fellow teachers discovered a firefly grotto in Gambier, and since I was coming from L.A., hadn't seen fireflies since I was eight, it was qua-doubly terrific. The program has expanded since 1984--which is all for the good in terms of canon rethinking. If you know an educator, push her or him to try for this. Five classes A DAY of teaching English--man oh man high school teachers deserve a treat.

p.s. Yes, I see that Aldon's message is for college profs. Even better for THIS listserv. The program for high school teachers I was extolling can be found at the link below, fireflies and all, and my recommendation holds steadfast, or I do, despite flux and mutability. (I have taught in colleges and universities--racked up almost ten years here and there, by the way, but only as adjunct.)

Re: Do you remember? The Sixties?
Tue 20 Nov 2012

For those in the SF Bay Area there is - I believe it is still up "1968" at the Oakland Museum - a good mix of television footage, ephemera, etc. Excellent on the Black Panthers, MLK, Vietnam, Chicago Dem Convention, Bobby Kennedy, etc. Made me 'homesick' for the voice of Walter Cronkite! I don't know if the show is traveling. It should. One could say in 1968 this country had a profound nervous breakdown (as did France & no doubt other places). Nothing substantial went - at least for a short time - 'unpillared' & unexposed. A vision, as well, magnified by substantial intakes of grass & acid. & yes, Alan Ginsberg, wandering through it all & trying to 'manage' a vibrant calm at the center. Yes, i'68 was still an era led by men, an iconography that was just beginning to crumble and struggle towards new definitions. & boy, how for the last 40 years has the right wing been on a vicious rampage to put the genies back in 'the bottle.' As Romney - the 50's poster boy for 'good' - was/is clearly vicious & vengefully 'cold war' nostalgic. Stephen V Stephen V --- On Fri, 11/16/12, Mark Weiss <[redacted]> wrote:

There are a bunch of books, unlike Reed's considered classics once upon a time, that are no longer read except by specialists. What happened to Son of the Middle Border, The Oregon Trail. Two Years Before the Mast? Any others to add?

The winning poet will also receive a cash award of $500, and a $500 honorarium for a reading, to be held at the Center in the fall of 2013, as well as an exclusive opportunity to stay at the Millay Colony for the Arts in Austerlitz, New York as one of their Winter Shakers. This year's judges will be Harryette Mullen & Sharon Dolin.

CFP : kadar koli 8 : "dystranslation"

Mon 26 Nov 2012

kadar koli no. 8: “dystranslation”

After the enthusiastic response to last year’s “violence” issue of kadar koli—featuring contributions from Joyelle McSweeney, Richard Owens, Rob Halpern, Julie Carr, josé felipe alvergue, Maggie Nelson, Diane di Prima, Emily Critchley, Justin Katko, Shin Yu Pai, Gloria Frym, Daniel C. Remein, Dale Smith, Jared Schickling, and Laura Kilbride—the theme of this issue of kadar koli is “dystranslation.” This is our term for translation that presents some kind of difficulty or aporia that forces the translator (or editor, etc.) to make choices—gaps, smudges, mistakes that require interpretation. These translations might demand emendatio, the correction of an unlikely word or phrase in a text, or even divinatio, an extreme form of emendatio, where the editor relies on special insight into what the author really intended, even if the text is more or less legible as presented.

For example, editors and translators over the years have troubled the reading of “pluma” in Horace’s Carmen 4.10, rendering wildly divergent interpretations of the line. The opening of the poem reads:

O crudelis adhuc et Veneris muneribus potens,

inseperata tuae cum veniet pluma superbiae,

Oh you—cruel and, for now, quite well endowed, flush with the gifts of Love—once that ‘pluma’ that you—you in your pride—didn’t foresee arrives,

As Chris Piuma notes, to read it as “pluma” offers the following sense: “once that fledgling mustache you in your pride didn’t foresee arrives… ” But the following alternatives have been suggested as well:

bruma: once those wintery hairs you in your pride didn’t foresee arrives

ruga: once those wrinkles that you—you in your pride—didn’t foresee arrive poena: once the suffering that you—you in your pride—didn’t foresee arrives plaga: once the welting that you—you in your pride—didn't foresee arrives

multa: once the manifold things you in your pride didn't foresee arrive

palma: once the victory prize you in your pride didn't foresee arrives

This issue of kadar koli invites contributors to think through moments of dystranslation, either those they've encountered in reading and research, such as that noted above, or in their own translation work. We are interested in examples from poetry and prose, from whatever time period, language, or location. We will publish a selection of translation examples (with original language specimens, if possible), essays on translation practice, and translations of essays related to this topic. Potential contributors should feel free to interpret dystranslation broadly; any translation or engagement with translation that deviates from normative expectations will be considered (where "normative" is understood as linear, literal, unproblematic, etc.). Dystranslation, by contrast, is creative, experimental, controversial. Instead of eliding difficulties, it highlights and engages with them, blurring (intentionally or not) the lines between poet/writer and translator/editor. We are especially interested in work that pushes at such boundaries, and—while we are not interested in "fake" translation per se, we are intrigued by the question of what constitutes "real" v. "fake" translation—is a translation inherently less worthwhile if it doesn't adhere to some measure of fidelity? What constitutes the difference, and is it possible or desirable to blur that line as well?

Please send inquiries to co-editors David Hadbawnik ([redacted]) and Chris Piuma ([redacted]) immediately; deadline for contributions is February 15th, 2013.

for translation that presents some kind of difficulty or aporia that forces the translator (or editor, etc.) to make choices=97gaps, smudges, mistakes *that require interpretation. These translations might demand emendatio,* *the correction of an unlikely word or phrase in a text, or even divinatio=*
*an extreme form of emendatio, where the editor relies on special insight* into what the author really intended, even if the text is more or less legible as presented.

For example, editors and translators over the years have troubled the *reading of =93pluma=94 in Horace=92s Carmen 4.10, rendering wildly diverg=* ent
interpretations of the line. The opening of the poem reads:

O crudelis adhuc et Veneris muneribus potens,

inseperata tuae cum veniet pluma superbiae,

Oh you=97cruel and, for now, quite well endowed, flush with the gifts of Lo=

*As Chris Piuma notes, to read it as =93pluma=94 offers the following sense:
=93once that fledgling mustache you in your pride didn=92t foresee arrives=
=85 =94
But the following alternatives have been suggested as well:*

bruma*: once those wintery hairs you in your pride didn=92t foresee arrive=

ruga*: once those wrinkles that you=97you in your pride=97didn=92t foresee= arrive*

poena*: once the suffering that you=97you in your pride=97didn=92t foresee

plaga*: once the welting that you=97you in your pride=97didn=92t foresee a= rrives*

multa*: once the manifold things you in your pride didn=92t foresee arrive*

palma*: once the victory prize you in your pride didn=92t foresee arrives*

*This issue of kadar koli invites contributors to think through moments of dystranslation, either those they=92ve encountered in reading and research, such as that noted above, or in their own translation work. We are interested in examples from poetry and prose, from whatever time period, language, or location. We will publish a selection of translation examples (with original language specimens, if possible), essays on translation practice, and translations of essays related to this topic. Potential contributors should feel free to interpret dystranslation broadly; any translation or engagement with translation that deviates from normative expectations will be considered (where =93normative=94 is understood as lin= ear, literal, unproblematic, etc.). Dystranslation, by contrast, is creative, experimental, controversial. Instead of eliding difficulties, it highlights and engages with them, blurring (intentionally or not) the lines between poet/writer and translator/editor. We are especially interested in work that pushes at such boundaries, and=97while we are not interested in =93fak= e=94*

translation per se, we are intrigued by the question of what constitutes =93real=94 v. =93fake=94 translation=97is a translation inherently less wor= thwhile if it doesn=92t adhere to some measure of fidelity? What constitutes the difference, and is it possible or desirable to blur that line as well?

Márton Koppány's art could be said to be the art of the invisible. His decision to abandon Hungarian in favour of English was a political one, but something else can be said to have happened in this transition. His poetry shifts into a language space that is alien, a snow-blinding landscape that is finding itself, built piece by piece through a poetry where language objects - real and linguistic - float with intent, testing the boundaries of language as intuition. —Tony Trehy

In fact, I'm not certain that there is any across-the-board method that can be learned, and then applied, in order to understand Márton Koppány's poems. If and/or when understanding does come, it happens (in my own experience) *wholly *– and as if in a flash – like direct, mind-to-mind transmission. When first seeing Márton's poems Katue came quickly to mind. I do not at all mean that Márton's work reminded me of his. What came to my mind was his statement about plastic poetry: “Plastic poem is the figure of poem itself, in other words, it is an 'apparatus of poem'...” I take this as bare-bones poetry, in the best sense of that term. —Roy Arenella

Conceptual art can be bountiful, spare, even beautiful. With an economy of presentation, Márton Koppány's work uniquely captures, invents, and refashions installations on the page from unexpected sources. His works run the gamut of humor, politics, and philosophy. Each piece offers a genuine gift of perception. With signature purity, works such as "Asemic Volcano", showcase the potency of word-free realities. "Emptiness" is vibrant with lui-meme realization. "One Moment in Three Sections" depicts a tiny triumph. "Old Question" and "Addendum" prepare the viewer for "Still Life No. 2," a final reminder of the inherent interconnectedness among all things. The recombinant majesty of Koppány's genius raises the bar for what is possible in the infinitely expanding universe of visual poetry. —Sheila E. Murphy

108 messages · Fri 30 Nov 2012 – Sat 29 Dec 2012

December 2012 closed the year in mourning for a poet who had made verse and jazz and protest into one inseparable art. One hundred and eight messages moved through the list, thin as the whole late year had been, and its gravity gathered around the death of Jayne Cortez — the great performer of political poetry, whose work had never once stood apart from music or from struggle. The year ended, as so many of the list's years had, by burying one of the originals.

The month's largest weight was Cortez. Word came in the last week of the year that she was gravely ill, the room asked to hold her, and then she was gone — the poet of the surreal, incantatory, jazz-driven line, a founder of her own presses and journals, married to the sculptor Melvin Edwards, a maker for whom the poem was always also a performance and always also a politics. She belonged to no institution and answered to no market; her art was the voice raised in the room, and the room grieved the silencing of it.

The quarrel, quiet beneath the grief, was about how poetry travels across borders and cages. A thread on reading Paul Celan as a postcolonial poet in the South Pacific carried the century's great poet of catastrophe into unexpected geography, while year-end lists of the best books did their small annual work of sorting and saving. Around the edges, a plea to give the ailing poet Wanda Coleman some breathing room reminded the room how many of its powerful outsider voices were mortal and struggling.

The year-end keeping went on beneath the mourning — the best-of lists, the notices, the small announcements of a literary December. But the month belonged to Cortez, whose death made the ordinary business feel small, and whose particular fusion of poem and music and protest was exactly the kind of thing no anthology or algorithm could preserve, living as it had in the voice and the moment, in the breath that shaped the line and the room that received it.

I have set December down exactly as the archive delivered it — the death of Jayne Cortez, Celan carried to the South Pacific, and the year-end lists doing their sorting — because it was the month the list buried a poet whose art had never been separable from her music or her politics, and felt, in the loss, how much of what it loved lived only in performance. A room that ends its year mourning Jayne Cortez, whose poems were inseparable from the voice that spoke them and the struggle they served, is a room reminded that its most vital art is also its most perishable: that the poem raised in the room, sung and fought and embodied, is precisely the poem that dies with the poet, and can be kept afterward only in the memory of those who heard it.

Nice. One of Lionel's poems, by the way--Kinetic Poem--is the epigraph to Chris Funkhouser's book 'Prehistoric Digital Poetry: an archeology of forms', the first book-length history of digital poetry. And here's an extensive piece I created on Lionel's pioneering work: http://vispo.com/kearns

Give Wanda Coleman Some Breathing Room
Fri 30 Nov 2012

Dear SUNistas,

Please consider helping out Wanda Coleman with a donation and by spreading the word. She has huge medical bills and no insurance. See:

http://paulenelson.com/2012/11/29/wanda-coleman-campaign/

In an interview I recorded on November 26, 2000, poet, essayist, activist, literary presence Wanda Coleman talked about the treatment of artists in USAmerica. She lamented the kinds of things poets have to do to make ends meet, activities often antithetical to their art. (Hear that soundbite here.) She never would have envisioned an internet campaign on her behalf, but weâ€™ve started one anyway.

Wanda has beenhospitalized with respiratory problems.Â Her outpatient care will not be covered by insurance, so she is asking for assistance.Â Donation checkscan be sent to: Wanda Coleman, P.O. Box 571, Lancaster, CA 93534. or click here:

1. On L.A. artistic milieu after Watts riots

3. On how writing for Days of Our Lives helped her become a better poet
4. on American Sonnets process
5. (poem) What do to About Billie Holiday

Announcing a new title from Scary Topiary press

FLUSHING MEADOWS by Todd Colby

NYC is rendered all brilliant, "sparkly, and sad" in this new series from Colby. FLUSHING MEADOWS takes place on the edges, F trains, & bedtime pillows of the city, where expansive feelings like longing, desire, & nostalgia are toppled daily by the equally radiant & ridiculous debris of the present.

Saddle-stitched binding and silk-screened covers. Art by Anne Muntges. Edition of 125. $10, ppd.

in this very lyrical & poetic interview, j/j hastain and Lark Fox discuss ceremony, the verb "to winter," wildness & its relationship to non gender conformance, about feeling freest on the edge of things & the importance of rust. I admit that I thought these two were the same person, given the affinity of their creative & life philosophies.

please go to angelhousepress.com & click on essays.

I welcome interviews, rants, manifestos, musings, poetic & artistic statements for our loosely termed essay series. thanks to all who have sent me work so far. i appreciate your support & interest.

Last Chance to Advertise in The Portable Boog Reader 6

Hi,

Later this month we'll be putting out our sixth Portable Boog Reader, our poetry anthology this year featuring work from New York City and Philadelphia poets. The New York City section is a collaborative effort of four editors—Lee Ann Brown, Mariana Ruiz Firmat, Sara Jane Stoner, and me, David Kirschenbaum—while Kimberly Ann Southwick and Michelle Taransky are selecting the work for the Philadelphia section. (Bios for the co-editors follow this note.) In all, 18 different poets will each get their own tabloid page.

To see what previous Portable Boog Readers have looked like, visit:

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc67.pdf

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc61.pdf

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc47.pdf

Advertising in The Portable Boog Reader issue of Boog City means you will reach more than 5,250 readers, poetry lovers, and small press aficionados electronically and throughout the East Village, other targeted areas of lower Manhattan; Williamsburg and Greenpoint, Brooklyn; as well as bonus distribution at Boog City's monthly events, and the annual New Year's Day poetry marathons at The Poetry Project at St. Mark's Church and The Bowery Poetry Club. That's an increase of 16.7% over our regular issues for no additional cost. And, since this issue is an anthology of poetry, that means it will be held onto much longer by our readers as they read through the poems, many holding onto the issue for future readings.

Boog City continues to offer our special Small Press Ad Rates. That means when you advertise with us you will save 50% off of our regular display ad rates, making the adjusted Small Press Ad Rates:

* Full Page $250
* Half-Page $130
* Quarter-Page $70
* Eighth-Page $40

Here is a link to our full rate card:

http://www.boogcity.com/ad_rates.pdf

We look forward to working with you to bring your message to the local arts community to increase awareness and sales of your publications in the New York area.

as ever,
David

University at Buffalo Libraries Special Collections Fellowships
Thu 6 Dec 2012

Dear colleagues,

The University at Buffalo Humanities Institute, in collaboration with the UB Libraries, is offering two fellowships for visiting scholars and graduate students working on their dissertations to use the UB Libraries' outstanding special collections, which include the Poetry Collection, University Archives, Rare Books, the Music Library, the Polish Collection, and the History of Medicine Collection.

Follow this link to find out more about some of the more notable collections in the UB Libraries:
http://humanitiesinstitute.buffalo.edu/fellowshipsresearch/LibraryCollectionsDescriptions.shtml

The fellowships provide stipends to cover the cost of fellows' travel to Buffalo and accommodation and expenses during the time of their stay. In addition to the stipend, Fellows will receive library and parking privileges at UB and are invited to participate in any Humanities Institute events that occur during the time of their visit. If feasible, Fellows are invited to give one public lecture on their research. Fellows are also asked to submit a one page, single-spaced report on the value of having used the collection at UB that will be posted on the Humanities Institute website.

The timing and duration of the Fellows' residence in Buffalo are flexible, though we would anticipate a minimum stay of two weeks. Both graduate students at an advanced stage of dissertation research and more senior scholars are invited to apply.

* The James Joyce Fellowship: The stipend is up to $2,000 for scholars and graduate students whose research is centered on the writings of James Joyce, Modernism, Joyce-related research, research on Sylvia Beach, Modernist publishers, Modernist genetic criticism, Joyce's literary circle, his literary colleagues, or his influences.

* The Charles D. Abbott Library Fellowship: The stipend is up to $4,000 for scholars and graduate students whose research would be enhanced by any of the books, manuscripts or unique documents in the UB Libraries special collections, which include materials from the Poetry Collection, University Archives, Rare Books, the Polish Collection, the Music Library, and the History of Medicine Collection.

Please note that applicants may apply for only one fellowship per academic year.

Selection Criteria and Application Procedure

The deadline for applications for the 2013/2014 academic year is January 15, 2013. Applications must include the following in a single PDF file or portfolio:

* Cover letter; * Brief two- to three-page, single-spaced research proposal, including length and approximate timing of proposed visit; * Current two- to three-page CV that indicates in detail previous and upcoming research support (grants, fellowships, leaves, etc.); * Letter of support from department chair or dissertation director.

Fellows will be selected based on the relevance of UB's special collections to the proposed project, the value of the project to the applicant's field, and the qualifications of the applicant as indicated by research experience and other academic achievement. Applicants must email all application materials as a single PDF file or portfolio by Tuesday, January 15, 2013 to the program administrator at [redacted]<mailto:[redacted]>.

Boog City presents

BoogWork
Our last Tuesdays series now features the new BoogWork series alternating with the 10th season of the levy lives: celebrating the renegade press series. BoogWork will feature two poets reading, a musical act performing, and then one of the poets will give the gathered a poetry workshop (don't forget to bring a pen and paper).

This Thurs., Dec. 13, 6:00 p.m. sharp $5 suggested

reading and workshop from Shafer Hall

and music from Alex Battles

Sidewalk Café
94 Ave. A
NYC

Boog City is excited to host longtime creative collaborators Alex and Shafer in our BoogWork series, when Alex Battles will perform his original songs, some of which were inspired by Shafer's antics, and Shafer will read some poems, many of which were inspired by Alex's music. During the performance, they will collaborate with the audience on a brand-new song about bars, barflies, and bartenders. At the end of the evening, all will be encouraged to join Alex and Shafer in performing the original work.

Here's the facebook link to all of this info:
http://www.facebook.com/events/407517862650982/

Alex Battles Former early high school talk show host Alex Battles once left audiences in stitches with his high-energy brand of comedy and slapdash banter. He rocketed out of the spotlight in his twenties, and when the wreck was excavated, he found himself a bartender and country singer in New York City. His critically acclaimed full-length record Goodbye Almira was released in early 2012. He is the annual host and producer of the long-running Brooklyn Country Music Festival and the creative force behind the CasHank Hootenanny and Jamboree, which Shafer Hall has called "the greatest party of his life."

Shafer Hall http://shaferhall.blogspot.com/ Washed up middle school football star Shafer Hall struck fear in the hearts of a number of Spring Branch ISD quarterbacks when he played defensive tackle for the Memorial Junior High Eagles. An ignominious downfall fraught with whiskey, pills, and tacos finds him occasionally writing poetry while he proprietizes Mongoose Versus Cobra, a bar in Houston, Texas. Never Cry Woof, his full-length collection of poems, was published in 2005. He is a senior editor of Painted Bride Quarterly and Lungfull! Magazine's Minister of Propaganda. He is Alex Battles' favorite living poet.

of fracture
rewriting Factura by Bruce Andrews

by Robin F. Brox & mIEKAL aND

FrEe DoWnLoAd —
http://xexoxial.org/is/of_fracture/by/robin_f_brox_and_mIEKAL_and

Inspired by the December 2012 Fordham University symposium honoring Bruce Andrews, Robin F. Brox and mIEKAL aND have created Of Fracture, a homophonic translation of Andrews's Factura. Published in 1987 by Xexoxial Editions, Factura is a book largely composed of morphemes, phonemes, syllables and neologisms which prompted a rendering that relies on Englishizing the text. The results are textured, staccato pages that proceed, quite literally, as the original text dictated to the ears of each poet-translator.

With any homophonic realization, there is a constant tension between the automatic associations which instantly fill one's head and the deeper body of poetic language lurking in the spaces between words. The results are here, the shifting, unstable tectonics of sound and sense in Of Fracture.

"of fracture is a resounding blast from the past, when syllables roamed free on the page and ears had bounty crops. only now it's even better, with all the echos."

—Charles Bernstein

Robin F. Brox lives in Buffalo, New York. Her work has appeared in Dusie #13, Lungfull! #17, The Buffalo News, and elsewhere. Her first book, Sure Thing, was published by BlazeVOX [books] in 2011. Her next book, POMEGRANATES, is forthcoming from Xexoxial Editions. Her one-woman feminist press, Saucebox, produces handmade chapbooks and broadsides.

mIEKAL aND is the author of numerous books, many available via Xexoxial Editions. After many years working in the realms of digital poetry and video, he has surrendered his role as author and focuses exclusively on interactions that allow the author to be reconfigured by the mysteries of the collaborative process, including books with Maria Damon, Sheila Murphy, Geof Huth & now Robin F. Brox.

Published by Xerox Sutra Editions December 2012. Hard Copies available after Christmas! As always, review copies upon request.

open upon the subterranean plains yet wild yet near
The city is dark

Hidden Bird

Song birds enter the morning the pre-dawn before the fires, you know, when the night floats away like vapor on a lake, or like kisses in the woods.
Songs that even creation might not remember.

Continuous, threaded, as if a cherry pit were stuck in the throat
to produce the trumpet of the branches.
So varies, yet never, changing through all the days, since reptiles fell to earth.

I give up the reason for the sound
I give up the creature of sound and the creator of the creatures and of us and of dawn and air and of vacuum and human inhumanity.
I give up the song.
I give up the place

Drunken Boat on Kickstarter - 50 % of the way there!

Sun 9 Dec 2012

Hi all - Drunken Boat's Kickstarter for Lisa Russ Spaar's "The Hide-and-Seek Muse: Annotations of Contemporary Poetry" is now halfway towards meeting its goal. Would you help us get over the top by making a tax-deductible donation?

http://www.kickstarter.com/projects/1721544611/the-hide-and-seek-muse-annotations-on-contemporary

And the book is available for pre-order here:

http://www.amazon.com/Hide---Seek-Muse-Annotations-Contemporary/dp/0988241609/ref=sr_1_3?s=books&ie=UTF8&qid=1355065433&sr=1-3

For people who are a bit wary of poetry, this is the perfect antidote: the poems are amazing, and so are Lisa Russ Spaar’s short essays in the "Hide-and-Seek Muse". There’s a sense of clarity about everything here (not that things aren’t complex; not that Lisa’s analyses aren’t fascinating constructs themselves, insightful and inspiring, though not intimidating.) I’d think anyone who cares about an inner reality that might be somehow communicated – nailed; set free; amplified; questioned -- would embrace the chance to read poems that elucidate so muchabout the mind and the heart, and to understand better the urges embodied in the process of constructing a poem, which always speaks from its structure of restraint. I loved every minute of reading this book.

Canadian poet Sonnet L'Abbe'

Mon 10 Dec 2012

My entry for poet Sonnet L'Abbe' in The Canadian Enclopedia:

http://www.thecanadianencyclopedia.com/articles/sonnet-labbe

"Sonnet L'Abbe's poetic themes of ethnicity and environmentalism display the influence of her father, a Franco-Ontarian potter, and mother, a Guyanese artist. In addition, L'Abbe's travels in South Korea, Uzbekistan, and the Philippines inspired poetry about the relationship between culture, history, and the natural world. . . ."

Fw: Emily Dickinson's Birthday!

Dear Friends,

There's no better day than today, Emily Dickinson's birthday, to share with you some highlights from your many wonderful responses to my last email asking which poems are important to you this season.

Ron from Oakland, CA wrote "Thanks to the Academy I've spread a greater love of poetry through my UU congregation. I always include a bit of bio taken from your background info on the poets. This month our theme is 'gratitude.' I posted to our website the poem, 'Thanks' by W.S. Merwin and found out several people had used the poem to start their meetings."

Gwenda from Belleview, FL noted that "Sara Teasdale's 'Barter' is one I share with my students. I especially like the idea that 'Life has loveliness to sell'"

And Sara from North Beach, MD, remarked, "A poem that reminds me of this season is 'Falling: The Code' by Li-Young Lee. When I was growing up in Michigan, my parents and grandparents had apple trees in their backyards, and the thud of apples hitting the ground and the smell of fruit starting to decay in the fallen leaves was a regular part of autumn."

Indeed, there is nothing like a "Page/ Of prancing Poetry." Poems help mark our celebrations and joyful life events. We rely on poetry to provide the right words at the right time. And in the stillness of this season, poems can also provide solace. As the winter holidays approach, for those of us who have lost loved ones, the falling snow can seem like, as Henry Wadsworth Longfellow wrote, a "poem of the air" where the "troubled sky reveals the grief it feels." We need the empathetic expression that poetry provides.

The Academy of American Poets works hard to make thousands of poems available to you year round on Poets.org, to deliver them right to your in-box every morning though our Poem-A-Day program, and to inspire many millions of people during National Poetry Month in April to read and write poems. But, as a nonprofit organization, we can only continue our work to promote poetry, distribute poems, and make educational resources available on our website with your help.

Over the next few weeks, we need to raise $10,000, the first half of which will enable us to meet a match offered by the Bloomberg Foundation. Last year many of you helped us reach this goal, and we hope you will do so again by supporting our programs with a special year-end contribution. If you're able to give $50 or more, as a token of our gratitude, we will send you a copy of our Poem in Your Pocket anthology.

I thank you in advance for whatever you might be able to contribute, and for helping to champion poetry.

Gratefully,

Jennifer Benka
Executive Director, Academy of American Poets

Friends of the Poetry Collection Fundraiser, University at Buffalo

Mon 10 Dec 2012

Dear friends,

Having supported modern and contemporary poets and poetry since 1935, the Poetry Collection of the University Libraries, University at Buffalo, The State University of New York seeks your support in creating a new Friends of the Poetry Collection endowment.

Throughout its history, the Poetry Collection has had many different kinds of friends, including the thousands of poets whose books and magazines we purchase every year, the researchers who travel to Buffalo to use our primary resources, and all who care about the historical preservation of poetry.

Last fall, we launched a new fundraising campaign to establish a Friends of the Poetry Collection Society and begin building an endowed Friends of the Poetry Collection Future Fund. The purpose of this fund is to create an additional stream of income to purchase new materials while also supporting special projects such as member events and publications.

We hope that you will please join this year's group of friends by making a donation to the Friends of the Poetry Collection Future Fund. As always, your gift is tax deductible and will help support the research and teaching missions of the Poetry Collection. Each year the collection supports with its materials a wide range of scholarly publications, opens its doors to visiting researchers from around the world, and assists the educational activities of undergraduate and graduate students. Furthermore, the collection hosts numerous lectures, conferences, readings, and other events, making it an active research center for the study of modern and contemporary poetry.

Your support will help us continue serving as the library of record for twentieth- and twenty-first-century poetry in English. To make a donation, please visit library.buffalo.edu/pl/giving.

The Poetry Collection also appreciates gifts of new and used poetry publications. To inquire about making a donation of materials, please contact the curators at [redacted]<mailto:[redacted]>.

Interview with Frank X Gaspar
Mon 10 Dec 2012

Greetings everyone,

Here's my latest interview, this time with the much-beloved poet Frank X Gaspar. Thanks for taking a look at it if you can.

Cheers and happy holidays!

Millicent

http://portuguese-american-journal.com/frank-x-gaspa-a-much-beloved-writer-interview/

There are writers whose work is read; there are those whose work is browsed through at a bookstore, then placed back on a shelf; then, there is Gasparâ€™s work. Books with folded down pages. Passages underlined and highlighted. Gaspar is a writer whose work is shared with friends and complete strangers. His books are announced and posted through links on Twitter and Facebook. He is a writer for whom fans travel great distances to hear and for whom devotees stand in long lines at book fairs just for an autograph; a writer whose books readers buy for themselves, not once but twice, since the binding of the original has been read so many times it has fallen apart. A much-beloved writer, whose books are bought for your father and mother, your best friend. Books to save your own life.

Native Women Language Keepers, Jan 29-Feb 2nd, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor

Tue 11 Dec 2012

Advance Announcement:

Native Women Language Keepers: Indigenous Performance Practices. An Arts-Based Research Symposium with playwright Alanis King.

January 29th to February 1st 2013, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

Aanii! Join us for UM’s sixth arts-based research symposium, a week-long exploration of Native women’s practices as language teachers, activists, and artists. In this week, we're workshopping a play by celebrated Native playwright Alanis King, and we will work in close connection with Miiskwaasinii'ing Nagamojig (The Swamp Singers), a Michigan-based hand-drum group, who will work with King to create a praise song for Daphne Odjig's woodland paintings in the University of Michigan's archives. This symposium will marry the strengths of the University of Michigan's Anishinaabemowin language program, a thriving community of language teachers and learners, with our series of arts-based research symposia, in which we investigate ways of knowing through creative means. In this week, we want to ask questions about the place of performance and women's work in language survivance and revitalization, about decolonizing methodologies and performance, about honoring Native women artists, and about intercultural performance practices. The core guest for the week-long symposium in January 2013 is Alanis King, an Odawa Playwright/Director originally from the Wikwemikong Unceded Indian Reserve, the first Aboriginal woman to graduate from the National Theatre School of Canada.

Every day this week, in the mornings and on Wednesday afternoon, Alanis King is going to workshop her play with symposium fellows and language classes in the Duderstadt Video Performance studio. If interested in participating in this Tuesday-Friday work in Anishinaabe/English, please contact the symposium directors for times.

Open Programs:

Tuesday

Afternoon, 3-5, Central Campus, North Quad, Room 3245, Emilie Monnet

Emilie Monnet is an interdisciplinary artist with Anishnabe and French heritage and a graduate of Ondinnok's First Nations Theatre training program – in partnership with The National Theatre School of Canada (Montreal, 2007). Emilie co-directed and performed Bird Messengers, for which she was awarded the LOGIQ prize for the most outstanding Art/Culture project of 2011. In May 2012, Emilie directed Songs of Mourning, Songs of Life, a musical theatrical show addressing legacies of genocide and the role of art for collective mourning, in collaboration with the Aboriginal women's drum group Odaya and the Rwandan traditional musical ensemble, Komezinganzo. She has two works into development: OKINUM, a one-women interdisciplinary performance inspired by her great great grand-mother, and another theatre collaboration with indigenous artists from the Amazon, Colombia. Emilie's artistic engagement is inspired by years of social activism with indigenous organizations in Canada and Latin America, and community art projects with incarcerated women and Aboriginal youth. Emilie is the founder and Artistic Director of ONISHKA, an arts organization that fosters artistic collaborations between indigenous peoples worldwide while honoring their richness, diversity and resilience (www.onishka.org). She is giving a presentation on ONISHKA's work.

Evening, Central Campus North Quad, Room 2435:
7pm, Formal Symposium Opening with Heid Erdrich

Poet Heid E. Erdrich, a member of the Turtle Mountain Band of Ojibwe, was born in Breckenridge, Minnesota, and raised in nearby Wahpeton, North Dakota, where her Ojibwe mother and German American father taught at the Bureau of Indian Affairs boarding school. Erdrich's poetry often explores themes of indigenous culture, mothering, and the natural world, using the cadence of oral storytelling and a close attention to sound and meter to drive poems rich with sensory and dreamlike imagery. Erdrich is the author of several poetry collections, including Cell Traffic (2012), National Monuments (2008), winner of the Minnesota Book Award; The Mother's Tongue (2005), part of Salt Publishing's award-winning Earthworks Series of Native American and Latin American literature; and Fishing for Myth (1997). In a 2006 review, Twin Cities Daily Planet critic Erin Lynn Marsh described The Mother's Tongue as "an exploration of our culture's relationship with the term 'mother' and of the beginnings of language." With her sister, the writer Louise Erdrich, she founded the Turtle Mountain Writing Workshop. In 2008 the sisters co-founded Birchbark House, a foundation that serves as a clearinghouse for literature engaged with indigenous languages. The sisters describe their vision on the foundation's website: "We foresee a vital return to our Native American languages through the efforts of elders that are already underway. In creating ways to keep their words alive, through books, films, teaching and more, we will keep our languages viable and more, we will allow the means for creative fluency, the hallmark of a fully living language."

Wednesday:

11.45-13.00, Duderstadt Video Performance Studio: Angel Sobotta

Angel Sobotta (Nez Perce), is a Nez Perce language teacher in the tribal headstart, local schools, and at the Lewis Clark State College in Idaho. She is also a writer and documentary filmmaker of projects like, "'Ipsqilaanx heewtnin' weestesne – Walking on Sacred Ground – the Nez Perce Lolo Trail" and "Surviving Lewis and Clark: The Niimiipuu Story" both winning the Aurora and Telly awards respectively. She is also a theater maker with the Lapwai Afterschool Programs, teaching language by adapting legends and directing the youth, including "Niimiipuum Titwaatit – The People's Stories," an anti-bullying project (2012). Angel is a University of Idaho Interdisciplinary Masters student. Her thesis involves an immersion experience for language teachers by adapting the Nez Perce creation story, written in the Nez Perce language, into a stage play. She is giving a presentation on her work.

Evening, 7pm, Central Campus: Marcie Rendon

Marcie Rendon (Anishinaabe) is a theatre maker and writer activist who supports and encourages other writers to write in Ojibwe. Among her projects are a writing residency she facilitated on the White Earth reservation as part of a three-phase Project Hoop Residency to create theater projects at a community level. She will lead this workshop: I have a ten-minute play, Friends...; which was published in Performing Worlds into Being: Native American Women's Theater, edited by Ann Elizabeth Armstrong, Kelli Lyon Johnson, and William A. Wortman; Miami University Press, Oxford, Ohio, 2009, which I would like to work to have translated into Ojibwe for possible production in Winnipeg in 2013. My Ojibwe language abilities are limited so having a group of language experts assist would be one of my goals for our time together. We will have a reading of the script and then work together on translation issues.

Thursday:

Afternoon, 3-5, Central Campus: Virginie Magnat

Virginie Magnat is Assistant Professor of Performance at University of British Columbia, Okanagan. She conducts embodied research on transmission processes among women performers from different cultures, traditions, and generations; and draws from Indigenous epistemologies and methodologies to examine the interrelation of lived experience, embodied knowledge, tradition, creativity, and spirituality. Her essay "Can Research Become Ceremony? Performance Ethnography and Indigenous Epistemologies" appeared in summer 2012 in the Canadian Theatre Review. She will share a workshop called "Sharing Embodied Cultural Knowledge Through Traditional Songs." This session will be practice-based: participants will be invited to share/teach/learn traditional songs from their cultural legacy so that we can get to know each other through our songs.

Thursday, 7pm, Lloyd Hall Common Room Create a new praise song with the Swamp Women, Miiskwaasinii'ing Nagamojig, in Lloyd Hall, among Daphne Odjig's's paintings. Come, sing, drum and be part of the community!

Friday:
On Friday morning, we'll gather for a workshop sharing and process discussion in the Duderstadt Video Performance Studio. 10-1.

In the afternoon, we end our gathering by reflecting on aesthetics, women and performance. 2.30-4.30, Central Campus.

Margaret Noori (Anishinaabe) received an MFA in Creative Writing and a PhD in English and Linguistics from the University of Minnesota. She is Director of the Comprehensive Studies Program and teaches the Anishinaabe Language and American Indian Literature at the University of Michigan. She is also one of the founders of the drum group Miskwaasining Nagamojig, current President of Association for the Study of American Indian Literatures, one of the Clan Mothers who coordinate the annual Native American Literature Symposium, and member of the Anishinaabemowin-Teg Executive Board. Her book Bwaajimowin: A Dialect of Dreams in Anishinaabe Language and Literature is forthcoming from MSU Press and her poetry has recently appeared in the Michigan Quarterly Review, Sing: Poetry from the Indigenous Americas and Cell Traffic by Heid Erdrich. For more information visit www.ojibwe.net where she and her colleagues have created a space for language that is shared by academics and the native community. She will be work-shopping a chapter from a forthcoming book on Anishinaabe narrative traditions which traces the way "oral" traditions are actually "physical" performance traditions which carry thought into space and allow us to exchange our interpretations of the world around as word which becomes stage dialogue, story, lyrics or poetry.

We are happy to welcome non-UM graduate students and faculty to this free week-long program: if you want to join us, please contact us.
With best wishes,

Dec 13: MOODBOARD in Chicago
Wed 12 Dec 2012

MOODBOARD
7-9pm Thursday, December 13th

Featuring:
Chris Cuellar
Kristi McGuire
Anthony Romero
Tracy Jeanne Rosenthal

at the Chicago Cultural Center 5th Floor, Millennium Park Room presented by the Poetry Center of Chicago

This event may consist of 30 or more strangely ordered questions. This event may contain sprawling, poorly organized, deeply principled remarks lasting nearly 48 minutes. This event does not accept requests. This event would not use the word "intense" to describe itself, nor would it use the word "casual." This event will feature readings and performances by 4 non-conspirators from LA or Chicago & will be presented in a setting at once both strange and ceremonious. This event is madly in love with you, and by you, it means ringtones, go to ringtones dot com and click on the picture of the screaming Koala to find out more. This event hates talking about itself, unless it's talking about itself in the third-person. This event takes vulnerability very seriously. This event never had a penny to its name, so it's changing its name. This event really likes the phrase, "I will be your outsider if that's how you need me."

Chris Cuellar (artist, LA) likes to work with writing, sound, performance & digital media. He has earned an MFA in Writing from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago in 2010. An ongoing durational performance called 'Minutes Project' will be currently on display through January at ACRE Projects in Chicago. He has made work for the Austin New Music Co-op in Austin, TX; various galleries in Chicago, including the Hyde Park Arts Center; and Diapason Gallery in Brooklyn. You can visit his website (yoursmountain.com), find him on the Instagram (@firstperson), follow him on the Twitter (@yoursmt) and/or Key Party with him on the Facebook.

Anthony Romero is a performer and writer based in Chicago. His works have been performed nationally, most notably at Links Hall and The Hyde Park Art Center in Chicago. His poetry and criticism have been published by Ugly Duckling Press, Poetry Quarterly, ArtWrit Magazine, and The Huffington Post, among others. He is currently a performer in residence at The Chicago Cultural Center through the generous support of DanceBridge.

Kristi McGuire is an artist, writer, and editor. She analyzes and theorizes the interstitial spaces between and around neoliberalism, bureaucracy, the historicization of 20th-c avant-garde movements, defunct psychoanalytic metaphors,working-class American antagonism, "cultural criticism," experimental feminist poetics,"the artist's publication," hybrid practitioners, deceased choreographers, Gordon Matta-Clark, "the archive" and "the internet." She holds an MA from the University of Chicago and an MA/MFA from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. She teaches at SAIC, is coeditor of Theorizing Visual Studies: Writing across the Discipline (Routledge 2012), and will be a 2013 artist-in-residence at Headlands Center for the Arts.

Tracy Jeanne Rosenthal is a pop culture rubbernecker and NYC traitor to LA. She was a Lambda Literary Fellow, an &Now Festival panelist, and has a BA from Vassar and an MFA from CalArts. Find her writing in GOOD, [PANK], Wanted, and Work magazines, The Collagist, Sang Blue, Floating Bridge Review, or the Writers Among Artists anthology Faggot Dinosaur. Her first chapbook, Close, is forthcoming with Sibling Rivalry Press. There r pix @ tracyjeannerosenthal.com.

Pavement Saw Chapbook Contest: Deadline 12/31 reduced cost this year, $15 mail (US) or $18 electronic, worldwide

Submit electronically, save the hassle of printing out a manuscript and have your funds support poetry not the post office! Directly enter by using our website http://www.pavementsaw.org/pages/chapcontest.htm

$500 and 50 copies of the winning chapbook will be awarded to the winner. In addition to the prize winner, at least one other manuscript will be published under a standard royalty contract (author paid 10% of press run). Everyone is allowed to submit regardless of previous publication history. Every entrant will receive the equivalent cost of the entry fee in Pavement Saw Press titles.

Unlike many publishers whose collections are printed one copy at a time and therefore lack a large circulation, our chapbooks are published in a first edition of 400 copies plus overage. While chapbooks rarely receive exposure, ours have been reviewed in Poets and Writers, Publishers Weekly, The Georgia Review, Small Press Review and many others. Our previous winners have had subsequent full length books appear from a bevy of publishers including Ahsahta Press, Curbstone Press, Cleveland State University Press, Birds llc, Bear Star Press, Shearsman Books, Futurepoem Books, University of Georgia, Tupelo Press, Hanging Loose Press and so on.

Submit up to 32 pages of poetry. Include a signed cover letter with your name, address, phone number, e-mail, publication credits, a brief biography and the title of the chapbook. Include a cover page with your contact information and the chapbook title. Include a second page with the chapbook title only. Do not include your name on any pages inside the manuscript except for the first title page. No need for a contents page. All chapbooks are selected blindly / anonymously. Manuscripts will be considered until December 31st, 2012. Entry fee: $15 for US entries, $18 overseas, $18 electronic (world wide).

If you wish to submit electronically, send $18.00 via paypal to [redacted]. Then e-mail the manuscript as an attachment to the same address and we will send you an e-mail confirmation that your entry is all set. Electronic submissions need to be sent as PDF files or as word (.doc or .docx) files. Other formats are not accepted. The extra cost is to cover the paypal fees as well as the time, labor, ink, and so on, to print out your manuscript. Or use our website http://www.pavementsaw.org/pages/chapcontest.htm

If you wish to send via regular mail, have your envelope postmarked by December 31st and accompany your manuscript with a check in the amount of $15.00 payable to Pavement Saw Press. All contributors to the contest will receive books, chapbooks and journals equal to, or more than, the entry fee. Add $3 (US) for other countries to cover the extra postal charge. Do not include an SASE for notification of results. Do not send the only copy of your work. All manuscripts are recycled and individual comments on the manuscripts cannot be made. This year the editor will be the judge and, as it should be, he promises not to chose former students, former or potential sexual partners, press interns, or people that can make him famous. A decision will be reached in March. Entries should be sent to our address at the bottom of the page.

Pre-release sale for j/j hastain's "myrrh to re all myth" extended!

Sat 15 Dec 2012

Good morning!

j/j's book's been getting lots of attention here and I'm extending the invitation for the pre-release sale until the end of the year, and everyone who orders a copy will receive, as a gift, a hand-made chapbook from our awesome catalogue. (If you already own one or more of our chapbooks, or if you'd like something specific, please get in touch with me after you've ordered so you can choose something personally). j/j also suggested something a little crazy: everyone who orders a copy of the book will get a few strands of hair from j/j's scalp, strands which appear in digitized format on the covers of the book. See it here: http://furniturepressbooks.com/books/hastainmyrrh/

We've also got a big subscriptions call going out at http://furniturepressbooks.com/subscriptions/, and we're choosing a handful of people who contribute $100 or more to be entered into a drawing to receive a lifetime subscription to Furniture Press Books.

We're pushing really hard this year because our big 14 city tour has got to be worth ten years of publishing. We encourage you to support small presses like us—we're the driving force behind promoting and realizing what I think is the best poetry and poetics happening around the country. Don't let the big corporate publishers tell you otherwise!

From everyone in the Furniture Press Books family, we wish you a terrific new year and happy reading.

Cheers!

Christophe Casamassima

A Ghazal for Christmas
Sat 15 Dec 2012

From the East they came, Wise Men, to worship at the crib of the infant Jesus. The Magi, of whom so little is known, and about whom so many traditions abound, are celebrated here in this ghazel.Â Wishing all a very Happy Christmas and a prosperous and productive 2013 for your writing and family!!!

http://www.writingsinrhyme.com/index.php/we-set-from-the-east-a-christmas-ghazel/

The Wise Men â€“ The Magi head for Bethlehem to visit the Infant Jesus

The poem format is chosen as it is from the east, the former Persia and the Arabic nations, and is told from their viewpoint, restating what we already know, but yet giving nothing more away, keeping the mystery of who they were, why they came, and what message they brought back to their own peoples.

Wishing everybody a merry Christmas, if you want to read a random poem by me, click here

LL-L "Literature"

Sun 16 Dec 2012

I remeber when Ron done a few translations of my poems to German and they were posted on the website, I think it would be good if we were to do something like that for each other again, if a person posts a poem that they wrote in their own language, and others could translate to their language.

- Original work remains copyright of the author, and where published along with the translation, must be credited as same - Translation is copyright of the translator, though author has republishing rights, where translator must always be credited.

What do you folk think?

Below are some of the poems from my website in other languages.

Le Flocon de Neige
Aug 13, 2012 ~ Written by TomÃ¡s Ã“ CÃ¡rthaigh ~Â
Dans une tempÃªte de neige, je me suis dÃ©jÃ trouvÃ©

Avec les champs et les arbres tout blancs autour
HabillÃ© de noir sur ce tapis blanc
Jâ€™ai marchÃ© dans la lumiÃ¨re pÃ¢le de la lune Comme je regardais ce charmant monde
Un flocon solitaire sur mon bras atterrit
Je le regardai de prÃ¨s, vit comment il Ã©tait fait,

Unlikely and MadHat
Sun 16 Dec 2012

Greetings, those who call it Sentience and those who don't! There's some very cool new work up at www.UnlikelyStories.org , namely:

Four Paintings by Allison Schulnik
"rhetorical atolls emerging:" An Interconnected Set of Movies and Digital Weirdnesses by Jason Nelson

"Choice and Its Opposite: On Listening to Other People's Music," in which David Brennan gives up control of his music selection for a year.

There's more cool art you should be checking out right now, but first, I want to talk about Joseph Rose, our outgoing Political Editor. For almost a year now, Joseph has been sorting, analyzing, and collecting some fantastic work for /Unlikely Stories: Episode IV/: satires, essays of various sorts, firsthand accounts of political activism, and an amazing selection of short political films. Unfortunately, Joseph's life as a student and parent has become more intensive, and he can no longer execute his /Unlikely/ duties fully, so is stepping down. We'll miss him and his great work.

As for me, I recently spent a few hectic days in New York, during which I read with the fantastic Yuko Otomo and Steve Dalachinsky (and do you know Steve's Unlikely Book at http://unlikelystories.org/unlikely_books/trust_fund_babies_phenomena_of_interference.shtml ?) at Saturn Series Poetry, which has been operating under the direction of Su Polo for /nineteen years/ (see http://www.supolo.com/Saturn_Series_Poetry.html). Su and I also had the great privilege of standing in for the late Carol Novack and the living-in-Japan Tom Bradley, reading from their call-and-reponse novel, /Felicia's Nose/. We celebrated the release of /Felicia's Nose/ (and the late Hugh Fox's poetry book, /Primate Fox/) --published by the newly-organized MadHat Press-- at The Carol Novack Christmas-Hannukah-Kwanzaa-Solstice-and-Atheists-Who-Love-to-Party Tribute Party at A Gathering of the Tribes.//Mitch Corber shot video. I hope I look pretty!

/Felicia's Nose/ and /Primate Fox/ are both now available for purchase as print editions or as $4 e-books, so get over to http://madhat-press.com/ and get some of that! But first check out our mid-month update at http://www.unlikelystories.org/ , for it is smaller than usual, and extra-awesome*.

Does that answer your questions, Doctor,

*Carol /hated/ the colloquialization of the word awesome. We miss her, and resolve to use it constantly this year.

Kat Quinn http://www.katquinnmusic.com/ Singer/songwriter Kat Quinn came to New York a year ago, intent on making a life as a performing songwriter.

Shortly after arriving, her shows began winning praise for her warm, sensitive vocals, easy-going charisma, and sharp, straight from the heart songwriting, with lyrics marked by a winning combination of poetry and plainspoken language. She has an uncanny ability to instantly draw listeners into her singular worldview. She was soon attracting the attention of the City's best musicians, including long time Carly Simon associate, guitarist/producer Peter Calo, who offered to produce an EP for her. They began working together and the result is Quinn's debut, Exhale. The first Asian low-residency MFA Program now accepting applications

Dear all - wanted to let you know about this, if you are interested or could share with your students. It's probably the most vital MFA program I've ever been in contact with, comprised of students from mainland China, India, Singapore, Japan, Australia, the UK and the US. This summer Rae Armantrout will be visiting the residency. Happy holidays - RS

http://www.english.cityu.edu.hk/mfa/html/desciption/

The City University Master of Fine Arts (MFA) in Creative Writing programme is the first low-residency MFA to be established in Asia, and the only one in the world to focus on Asia. Its mission is to provide the best education possible for aspiring creative writers and teachers of creative writing, and to foster an interest in Asian writing in English as well as literature in English concerned with Asian themes. Launched in 2010, this two-year MFA degree is designed to improve and develop practising writers, and is taught by established and well-published authors who have both Asian and international backgrounds and expertise. The MFA is a professional qualification that prepares graduates to work in a range of fields where good writing is required, including cultural and arts administration, the creative industries, editing, and publishing. It is also a widely-acknowledged qualification for teaching creative writing at high schools and universities. The low-residency MFA model offered by City University is designed for intensive and highly effective one-on-one distance mentoring, supplemented by short and intensive writing workshop residencies.

For more information about the program, faculty, and the application process please see:

From: [redacted]

Please pray for Jane Cortez.

Mel Edwards has alerted us within the last hour that Jane is seriously ill and is in intensive care on account what is believed to be a viral infection which has damaged her heart.She has been undergoing tests over the last six weeks but her condition has worsened.

Mel was concerned that as many of Jane's friends and comrade activists as possible such know this, particularly the International Radical Black Book Fair family.We will keep you updated as we receive further information from Mel.

In Peace and with Hope!

Looking for Arsenal/Surrealist Subversion #3 (1976)

Fri 21 Dec 2012

I'm currently researching Harry Crosby and poets influenced by him. I've seen oblique claims that Phillip Lamantia made some statements regarding Crosby in the third release of Black Swan Press's magazine /Arsenal/, but I've not found any extant copies in collections via WorldCat. If anybody here has a lead on where a copy might be found to be perused (and preferably scanned), I'd greatly appreciate the assistance.

Start the new year off right by picking up a standing-order subscription to Cuneiform Press, a publisher of poetry, criticism, and artists' books. This is the best way to ensure that you won't miss any of our exciting new publications in 2013, including works by Johanna Drucker, Sommer Browning, Farid Matuk, Bill Berkson, Mimeo Mimeo #8: The Curators' Choice Issue, and a collection of essays on collaboration in book form that includes contributions from Oliver Brossard, Vincent Katz, Barbara Montefalcone, Constance Lewallen, and others.

[redacted]) with your preferred mail and email address. As a standing-order patron, you'll receive books as they appear with an invoice. Keep what you want, return what you don't, cancel anytime. It's that simple. Standing-order subscriptions are our foundation and we are grateful to the individuals and institutions that have chosen to support us.

Subscribe today and you'll receive a free copy of Bumpers, a collection of public texts composed by a dozen poets specifically for this publication. Printed letterpress in an array of colors on genuine crack'n peel, these large stickers are housed in a durable box. Contributors include David Abel, Bill Berkson, Johanna Drucker, Craig Dworkin, Michael Gizzi, Michael Gottlieb, Ted Greenwald, Dorothea Lasky, Hoa Nguyen, Tom Raworth, Kit Robinson, and Carolee Schneemann. That's a $50 value, yours free if you subscribe today.

Check out this video review of Bumpers from the Journal of Artists' Books: [1]http://vimeo.com/37227917

And don't miss out on our 2012 publications:

TERRACE FENCE by BILL BERKSON While living in Bolinas, poet and critic Bill Berkson produced Terrace Fence, a seminal piece of conceptual photography doubling as a small-town protest gesture in an edition of ten or fewer. Reproduced in the summer of 2012 in an edition of 100, the text was printed letterpress on pure cotton paper and the photographs were reproduced from the original paste-up and tipped in by hand. Each copy has been signed by the author. $20

SPIRIT PHOTOGRAPHY: A FIRESIDE BOOK OF GURUS by ZEPHYRUS IMAGE Spirit Photography: A Fireside Book of Gurus (1973) by Michael Myers and

Holbrook Teter is arguably the greatest book produced by Zephyrus Image. Spirit Photography is essential reading for anyone interested in photography, conceptual art, artistsâ€™ books, and the unique cultural climate of the Bay Area in the '70s. This facsimile was printed letterpress and is faithful to the original in every way, right down to the errata slip. $12

3 by TED GREENWALD (BACK IN PRINT!) Published in 2008, Ted Greenwald's classic, 3, quickly went out of print. Cuneiform press is pleased to announce a second printing (paperback only). Poet Ron Padgett writes: "Ted Greenwald's 3 takes the mind in at least three different directions simultaneously, in hardboiled, richly detailed, well-made poems whose giddy wordplay, pantoum-like interweavings, and nimble jumpcuts create a sort of 21st-century Poet in New York. An inspired challenge and a delight." Cover by Richard Kegler. Paperback. $16.95

MIMEO MIMEO #7: THE LEWIS WARSH ISSUE Mimeo Mimeo #7 is the first magazine ever devoted in its entirety to poet, novelist, publisher, teacher, and collage artist Lewis Warsh. Warsh was born in 1944 in the Bronx, co-founded Angel Hair Magazine and Books with Anne Waldman in 1966, and went on to co-found United Artists Magazine and Books with Bernadette Mayer in 1977. He is the author of over 30 books of poetry, fiction and autobiography, the Director of the MFA program in Creative Writing at Long Island University in Brooklyn, and as youâ€™ll soon discover, so much more. Includes an introduction by Daniel Kane, an interview conducted by Steve Clay, 10 new stories, 5 new poems, dozens of photographs and collages, and an anecdotal bibliography. $20

COMPLETE FRAGMENTS by LARRY FAGIN Complete Fragments is Larry Faginâ€™s first trade edition book of poems since Iâ€™ll Be Seeing You (1978). Cloth and paperback available. Fagin is the author of 14 books of poetry. He is the co-publisher of Adventures in Poetry books, and edits Sal Mimeo, a little magazine. He lives in New York City, where he teaches privately. $16 from Michael Rothenberg, 100TPC: LIFE IN PRISON FOR A POEM- Please sign this petition! Urgent!

Sat 22 Dec 2012

Dear Friends of Big Bridge,

Please find below an extremely important petition, "LIFE IN PRISON FOR A POEM", that Terri and I and Pina Piccolo (100 Thousand Poets for Change-Bologna, Italy) have been working on with friends.

As poets and artists we have a personal stake in seeing this poet released from prison. His persecution is the persecution of all poets and we feel this is something we can't stand by and watch without taking immediate action.

We are very excited by the broad community support we have received thus far and it would be a great honor to have you join us in support of this action by signing the petition and forwarding it to like-minded friends.

Thank you for all you do!

Peace and love,

Michael Rothenberg and Terri Carrion

Qatari poet Mohamed Ibn Al Ajami’s crime consisted of reciting a poem extolling the courage and values of the popular uprisings in Tunisia. For that he's been sentenced to life in prison.

Please join with a remarkable list of prominent poets from around the world and urge the court in Qatar to reconsider.<http://act.rootsaction.org/p/dia/action/public/?action_KEY=7041>

Rather than making itself an instrument for cracking down on dissent, we believe that the Court should uphold Mohamed Ibn Al Ajami’s right to free speech. The poem he recited called for an end to intolerable conditions, a demand that for the past two years has been aired by millions throughout North Africa and the Arab world. * In this spirit, we poets and non-poets who perceive the need for worldwide change at the social, political and ecological level, call on the Court to review the appeal, stop siding with repression and lend its ear to the movements that have sprung up all over the world for dignity, social justice and freedom, virtues that poets all over the world are endeavoring to voice and deliver.*<http://act.rootsaction.org/p/dia/action/public/?action_KEY=7041>

Please sign the petition<http://act.rootsaction.org/p/dia/action/public/?action_KEY=7041> and forward this email widely to like-minded friends.

a text, which I mangled. Azure and I played while Maria spoke and improvised from the text. The

I should say I've been influenced by surbahar and

The Axial Trio has been performing together since 2010, including performances Upstate and in NYC.

Axial music, as distinguished from improvisation as often practiced, is not happy recycling in new arrangements what one already knows too well how to do. Rather, it aims to release our listening habits, expectations, and taste by discovering â€œliving soundâ€ in each instant, unprecedented to the extent possible. It allows that an emerging sound field has its own intelligence, which one follows by listening to the sounds themselves, as they arise. The term â€œaxialâ€ refers to an unknown but felt center within a generative action in a given medium, and it may apply to any kind of art. Here it refers to a somewhat mysterious dynamic center that arises between musicians and calls them to a new integrity of sound in the moment. Our experience is that playing music this way gets "smarter" over time, the sound-field intelligence gets more vivid between us. This is the experience we hope to share in our new performance.

Poems!

An old friend in FL wanted to hear what the parking lot scene at Phish shows sounded like, sooo...

I recorded some audio of me reading an excerpt to one of my Phish parking lot poems and posted it here: http://bit.ly/WRXDjA

"Poems," I said. "Phish Lot sounds a lot like poems!"

The piece I recorded, SET I, is from the book: JAMBANDBOOTLEG.

Dear folks

I've just received a phone from one of her colleagues and friends. Early this morning, the poet and one of the Black Arts Movement's premiere voices, Jayne Cortez, passed on after a sudden illness.

Please keep her in your prayers and meditation as she travels to join other ancestors.

Greetings to my brothers and sisters Denardo Coleman just phoned me to say that we lost out dear sister and spiritual mother Jayne Cortez.

Jayne was an inspiration for all if us. I am deeply and profoundly saddened. It was at John LaRose's book fair in the mid 80's in London where I first heard Jayne's poetry and I was blessed having the opportunity to perform and record with her.

We are all in a state or mourning May God bless you all

131 messages · Sun 30 Dec 2012 – Thu 31 Jan 2013

January 2013 opened the year with a beautiful convergence — the poet imagined as a transmitter, taking dictation from somewhere beyond himself, and the actual history of poems sent across distance as pure encoded light. One hundred and thirty-one messages moved through the list, and its currents ran to transmission of every kind: Jack Spicer's old idea of the poet as a radio, the first poem ever sent by optical telegraph, and the death of a poet-editor who had spent a life relaying other voices. The month was about how a poem gets carried from one mind to another.

The largest thread returned, as the list so often did, to Spicer — the poet who insisted he did not make his poems but received them, tuning himself like a radio to a signal from outside. And beside that metaphor the room set a literal marvel: the news of the first poem transmitted at something near the speed of light, the record that in 1794 a Swedish poet "sent a poem by optical telegraph" to his king, its words encoded in a language of collapsing iron shutters, relayed tower to tower across the countryside. Spicer's Martian dictation and Edelcrantz's shuttered towers were the same dream two centuries apart: the poem as a signal, flung across a distance, decoded at the far end.

The quarrel, quiet, was about where a poem originates. If Spicer was right that the poet only receives, then the true source is always elsewhere — the outside, the dead, the Martians, the signal — and the poet is merely the tower that passes it on. It was the list's oldest mystical intuition, dressed for a new year in the language of transmission and light.

And the month grounded its metaphors in a death. Harvey Shapiro died early in January, the poet and longtime editor who had relayed so many other voices into print through his years at the great newspapers and magazines — a transmitter in the most practical sense, the man who passed poems along to their readers. His death gave the month's talk of signals and towers a human weight: the relay stations, too, are mortal.

I have set January down exactly as the archive delivered it — Spicer's poet-as-radio, the 1794 poem sent by optical telegraph in a language of shutters, and the death of the editor Harvey Shapiro — because it was the month the list opened its year on the mystery of transmission: how a poem travels from its unknown source, through the poet who only receives it, across whatever distance, to the reader at the far end. A room that will hold Spicer's dictation from Mars beside a real poem flung across the countryside as coded light, and then bury an editor who spent his life relaying other people's poems into print, is a room contemplating the deepest thing about its art: that the poem is always a signal passing through, and that every poet, and every editor, is only a tower that keeps it moving for a while before going dark.

Poetry Project Workshop on Writing To/Through Illness & Suffering

Thu 3 Jan 2013

Cathexis/Catharsis: Writing To/Through Illness and Suffering
Poetry workshop taught by Sharon Mesmer
10 weeks beginning Tuesday, February 5 7 > 9pm
$250
The Poetry Project at St. Mark's Church, 131 E. 10th Street, New York
[redacted] | [redacted]

Illness and suffering are usually imaged as sites of trauma, feared as obstacles, rejected by a youth-obsessed culture. But what if these forsaken places could be re-imaged and understood, with the help of poetry, as talismans, thresholds, gateways? What if suffering were a language like any other that could be learned, manipulated and deployed in a powerful new way? In this form-based workshop we will look at how poets encode and stabilize ideas about illness and suffering (their own and that of others) into traditional and novel poetic architectures, enabling readers and writers to find new meanings in these witnessed experiences. We'll begin by looking at Jennifer Nix's essay, "Finding Poetry In Illness," then move on to poems by Anne Sexton, Aracelis Girmay, Joanne Kyger, Robert Lowell, Laynie Browne, Bob Kaufman, Allen Ginsberg, Gary Snyder, Wordsworth, Jane Kenyon, Rainer Maria Rilke and Thomas Hardy. Each week we'll examine and discuss a poem that utilizes a form (the sonnet, the ode, the list poem, the "instruction" poem, the Fibonacci, etc.) and flow and encode our own experiences into the stabilizing mechanism of that form. Guest speakers will include Kristin Prevallet on the mind-body connection to poetry and healing, and Laynie Brown on the poem-as-amulet.

Sharon Mesmer is the author of the poetry collections Annoying Diabetic Bitch (Combo Books 2008), The Virgin Formica (Hanging Loose 2008) and Half Angel, Half Lunch (Hard Press 1998), as well as several fiction collections. A Fulbright Specialist and two-time NYFA fellow in poetry, she teaches creative writing and literature at NYU and the New School.

Free The Portable Boog Reader 6

Fri 4 Jan 2013

Dear Printed Matter lover (yeah, I'm talking to you),

When we started Boog, Rod and I had a simple motto: Get the Word Out. Now, over 21 years later, that motto still holds true.

I love these issues getting into the hands of the folks who've already heard of The Portable Boog Reader and know the names of the poets and want to read more of their work and want to add the issue to their printed matter collections.

But I equally love someone who's never heard of The Portable Boog Reader, knows the name of none of the poets in it, and only owns a Norton Anthology grabbing a copy while in lower Manhattan waiting for their date before a Saturday movie night at the Angelika, picking one up while at Other Music filling a hole in their Elliott Smith collection, clothes shopping at Trash and Vaudeville, eating dinner at Greenpoint's Thai Café, or looking at art in Williamsburg's Sideshow Gallery.

And I need your help getting the PBR, as we lovingly call it, into as many hands as possible.

Yes, the Portable Boog Reader 6: An Anthology of New York City and Philadelphia Poetry will be online Midnight Saturday into Sunday at http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc77.pdf (You can view the cover and list of contributors there now.).

But that won't get it out to as wide an audience as it deserves.

I know you are someone who feels that printed matter matters.

We need your help in getting the word out, to our usual audience and a whole new one, too, bringing poetry to that wider audience, in a publication with a greater circulation than almost all poets will ever experience.

The issue is ready to go to the printer. We need to raise $360 to get it there.

Whatever amount you give, give us that many words to put in our "Thank you to our Donors" section in the issue, and the text could be most anything.

$36=36 words
$18=18 words
and so on.

If we can get just 20 people to give $18 each issue, we'll have the issue on the streets.

You can support the PBR through [redacted] via paypal.com

Thanks for your continued support.

as ever,
David

Drunken Boat#16 Special Folio Issue is Live! Featuring over 130 artists and writers for 2013 & launch in NYC

Tue 8 Jan 2013

RT, Bookmark, Digg! DB#16: http://www.drunkenboat.com/

Celebrate the launch of the new issue in collaboration with Open City & the Asian American Writers Workshop, on Thursday, January 24th, 2013 from 7PM – 10 PM in NYC at:

The Asian American Writers' Workshop
110-112 W. 27 Street, Ste. 600,
New York, NY 10001
Tel: [redacted]
E-mail: [redacted]

Join the contributors and editors from Drunken Boat, one of the world's oldest electronic literary journals, as they celebrate the launch of their 16th issue with special folios on Art, Barry Hannah, Exploration, Fiction, Open City/AAWW, Sound Art/Dissonance, Speculative and Trance Poetics.

Drunken Boat [http://www.drunkenboat.com], international online journal of the arts, celebrates 2013 by announcing Issue#16 and the forthcoming publication of Lisa Russ Spaar's "The Hide-and-Seek Muse: Annotations of Contemporary Poetry," raved about by Ann Beattie & introduced by Nick Flynn [http://www.amazon.com/The-Hide-Seek-Muse-Contemporary/dp/0988241609].

Drunken Boat#16 is an omnibus of folios from a special collaboration with the Asian American Writers Workshop and Open City on Asian American Urbanisms to a retrospective look back at the late Barry Hannah including audio of his final live reading; from Luciano Chessa's eclectic and sensitive curation of Sound Art/Dissonance to refracting the theme of Exploration through a kaleidoscope of media, including Scott Wallace recounting time spent in the deepest recesses of the Amazon, Jason Anthony's lyric exposition of Antarctica, Adriane Colburn's graphical lexicography of landscape, and Adrian Seymour's handycam video of an expedition into Indonesia, some of the work produced for WNPR's "Where We Live." Kristin Prevallet has put together the comprehensive look at the burgeoning field of Trance Poetics, mapping the gaps in one's habitual patterns of awareness with an array of dazzling poems, while Zach Blas & Christopher O'Leary have curated mixed media from a Los Angeles gallery show for the SPECULATIVE folio, a selection that demonstrates how the inviable world is poised for radical reconfiguration. DB#16 also includes Fiction, with short stories ranging from Muhammad Ashfaq to Monika Zobel, and Art including Philip Stearns' sketches of scans of configurations of trimmed cable ties to a video collaboration between the poet Terri Witek and the visual artist Cyriaco Lopes. Exhibiting over 130 artists and writers from around the world, please enjoy Drunken Boat#16 responsibly and irrepressibly.

my 'best of' canadian poetry books 2012 list

is now up at the dusie blog (Switzerland):

For many, year-end means a moment of reflection, and the appearance of lists, lists and more lists. Calling anything a best of is an obvious misnomer, but there are still books that are so good that they're difficult to ignore, and impossible to not recommend. Ive received and picked up numerous poetry books by Canadians and other, and thought it might be worth compiling a list of the Canadian titles that really stuck out, over the past calendar year.

I did a similar list last year as well.

Here are sixteen poetry books that came out in 2012 by Canadian writers that I would consider worthy of further attention, listed in no particular order:

http://dusie.blogspot.ca/2013/01/a-best-of-list-of-2012-canadian-poetry_9.html

1. Jenna Butler, Wells
2. Barbara Langhorst, Restless White Fields
3. Lise Downe, This Way
4. Nelson Ball, In This Thin Rain
5. Erin Moure, The Unmemntioable
6. Natalie Zina Walshots, Doom: Love Poems for Supervillains
7. Marcus McCann, The Hard Return
8. Nicole Markotic, Bent at the Spine
9. Mark Goldstein, Form of Forms
10. Glen Downie, Left for Right

12. Sarah Pinder, Cutting Room

Harvey Shapiro 1924-2013

Wed 9 Jan 2013

With sadness I mark the passing of Harvey Shapiro. The world will not be the same for me in some profound way now.

He's remembered, in my view, beautifully in the Times obit (http://www.nytimes.com/2013/01/08/books/harvey-shapiro-poet-of-new-york-and-beyond-dies-at-88.html) by Margalit Fox, who mentions Hart Crane along with Charles Reznikoff as important influences; but I would wish to stress the latter--Harvey was the master of plain statement (imho).

In case you've not seen the obit I am reproducing one of the poems she included (she made terrific selections, I think)--I regret I did not see this poem before now (it was published in Bomb in 2011), especially because I think it truly is a great poem, one that ascends to greatness with grace, elegance, and a sense of ease.

Here it is:

The Mother of Invention

On my desk are the bills from the living and in my sleep are the bills from the dead.

*“Emptiness is the mother of invention”
says my fortune cookie. July 23, 2010.
Brooklyn. I walk in the slow rain, never less accomplished, never happier.*

Why should I doubt the world has meaning when even in myself I see mysterious purposes.

*A crow drops down for a moment,
black, rabbinical garb, croaking Kaddish.*

Here's another one of Harvey's poems that Fox might have included in the obit (to mark his WWII service--btw, see his role in the genesis of MLK's "Letter from Birmingham Jail"):

Italy, 1996

This Italian earth is special to me because I was here in a war

when I was young and immortal.

I remember the cypresses in the early morning light on the road to the airfield

before the sky filled with toiling planes massing high over Italy for the perilous crossing to Germany. I remember on the way back from the target toasting

my frozen cheese sandwich—frozen by the high altitude—

on the electrically-heated casing of my fifty-caliber machine gun. I remember the taste of life.

B.K.

Kat Quinn http://www.katquinnmusic.com/ Singer/songwriter Kat Quinn came to New York a year ago, intent on making a life as a performing songwriter. Shortly after arriving, her shows began winning praise for her warm, sensitive vocals, easy-going charisma, and sharp, straight from the heart songwriting, with lyrics marked by a winning combination of poetry and plainspoken language. She has an uncanny ability to instantly draw listeners into her singular worldview. She was soon attracting the attention of the City's best musicians, including long time Carly Simon associate, guitarist/producer Peter Calo, who offered to produce an EP for her. They began working together and the result is Quinn's debut, Exhale. Calo called in a line up of A List players to back Quinn on her first effort, including percussionist to the stars Jerry Marotta (Peter Gabriel, Suzanne Vega) and a full string quartet.

37. Chris Stroffolino

Los Angeles Creative Writing Class

Fri 11 Jan 2013

Creative Writing Workshop, with poet, Shakespearean, musician, essayist Chris Stroffolino in a fun, nurturing, non-institutional or graded setting*

8 Three Hour Sessions; 1st 2013 session begins Late February. Dates & times to be determined depending on the needs of the class (I will do out best to accommodate people’s schedules--most likely a weeknight).

Class Size: minimum of 5, maximum of 10

Cost $400: Check, money-order, or cash are all acceptable.

Course Description: Do you have something to say, but don’t quite know what is the best way to communicate it? Do you need to write for the sake of self-knowledge or catharsis, but aren’t sure if you want to make it public? Did a friend, teacher, or other professional writer call your work a ‘mere journal entry?’ or even a ‘song lyric?’ Did they say your poetry rhymed too much, or maybe not enough? Did they say your prose was too poetic? Or had too many ideas & not enough characters? Does writing that they claim is ‘better’ than yours fail to speak to you?

If you’ve answered YES to any of these questions (or even if you think they’re silly), this is the workshop for you. Taking each student’s writing and/or performance pieces as the starting point, this workshop encourages students writing in different genres. Students may work within one genre throughout the entire course, but will be encouraged to explore a way of stylistic options including screenplays, poems, manifestoes, creative-non-fiction, dialogue pieces, performance texts, song lyrics, poem-paintings, videos, texts that redefine or de-define genre, ‘hybrid texts,’ or ‘non-poetry.’ Students will offer critiques of each other’s work to create a dialogue within a ‘unity in diversity’ approach. By the end of the class, students can expect a deeper understanding into the creative process as well as the business of publishing or other ways of making their work public. Note: this class is intended for all levels.

Chris Stroffolino is the author of 7 book of poetry, including Light As A Fetter (2007), Speculative Primitive (2004), Scratch Vocals (2003), Stealer’s Wheel (1999), Cusps (1995), and Oops (1994). He also published 2 books of Literary Criticism, Spin Cycle (2001), and, with David Rosenthal, a critical study of Shakespeare’s 12th Night (2000). He received a PhD in Shakespeare studies and has worked with The Actors Shakespeare Company (Albany, NY) and Cal Shakespeare (Orinda). He has recorded & performed music with Silver Jews, King Khan & Gris Gris, SLVR, Jolie Holland, and done soundtrack and session work for many others. Stroffolino’s music and cultural criticism has appeared in The Radio Survivor, The BigTakeover, Caught In The Carousel, Kitchen Sink, Oakbook, etc. His was a recipient of grants from NYFA, and The Fund For Poetry, and was Distinguished Visiting Poet-in- Residence at St. Mary’s college from 2001-2006. He has also taught at San Francisco Art Institute, Mills College, Rutgers University, NYU, LIU, Laney College, Temple and Drexel. His poetry and prose has been widely anthologized, and translated into Spanish, Bengali, Hungarian, and Dutch. He has also edited literary journals and curated several reading/music/talk/perfformance series,

To Register, contact [redacted] or [redacted]. Spaces are limited. No more than 10 students will be accepted per class. Interested students should submit a note explaining what you hope to learn this session or a 3-5 age sample (or 2 MP3s if working in primarily an audio format).

*I’ve taught these classes in art galleries, cafes, community centers, and at students’ homes.

No grades, but the workshop may culminate in a public/reading performance talk.

I am also available for one-on-one sessions (in person, through phone, or email)

Two new reviews of Camille Martin's LOOMS

Fri 11 Jan 2013

Thanks to Steve Spence’s review of Looms for Stride Magazine. An excerpt:

“[Looms] has a very painterly, noir feel, alienated and penumbral, taut yet expansive. Impressive and addictive.”

And thanks also to rob mclennan for including Looms on his annual Dusie list of best Canadian poetry books. An excerpt from his review::

“These are poems of exploration, not always conscious or concerned about where they might end, allowing for a fearlessness that permeates the entire work.”

Nice to be in such inspiring company as Jonathan Ball, Lise Downe, Erin Moure, Nicole Markotic, and Marcus McCann . . .

Re: Lettrism Performance film 1955!!
Mon 14 Jan 2013

This piece was first shown to me in Paris around 2007 by Eric Monsinjean, a student of lettrist Roland Sabatier. I was crashing at his apartment before flying out. This is in the BBC Around the Word with Orson Welles series, that includes a few other gems. The interview with Isidora Duncan's son is weird as hell, and in the Letterism (sic) piece, Jean Cocteau and Juliette Greco implicate themselves. There is also a shot of Gabriel Pomerand reciting, probably at the club Tabou. But the reaction shot is stolen from a Cocteau film, I think. A lot to decipher here. Still, a priceless picture of the timid (!) Isou reading with articulate Maurice Leamaître. I am still working on the genesis of their inventions.

The DVD is available.

Wed 16 Jan 2013

Poetry Reading Series: "Public/Private"
Sunday, February 3, 2013 / 1:30-3:30 p.m. / Free

â€œFrom the exploding popularity of reality television and celebrity culture to the U.S. government's ever-growing presence in our homes, schools, and community spaces through Patriot Act-sanctioned surveillance, the twenty-first century has seen enormous shifts in cultural and political conceptions of what is considered private and what is considered public, both in the United States and world-wide. We as individuals are losing control over what is seen and what is unseen; known and unknown; public and private. How do these shifts manifest in our daily lives? Who is most affected and why? How do poets address these changes, whether through illuminating, embracing or actively working against them?"Curated by Nina Corwin and documented by audio recordist Kurt Heintz, featured readers include Shevaun Brannigan, CM Burroughs, Tyler Mills, Sandra Marchetti, Carrie McGath, and Naomi Buck Palagi. Please join us for this free event on Sunday, February 3, 2012, from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. at Woman Made Gallery.

After a little hiatus we are back with a new chapbook from Nicholas Alexander Hayes, ThirdSexPot.

from the Preface:

"Many one-hand reads exist as ephemeral artifacts. Some are stunningly brilliant.
Some are poorly written. Some are so poorly and hastily written a type of poetry emerges from their text. This last mode was particularly true of the introduction to Johnny Shearer’s The Male Hustler."

rob's end-of-year list of 2012 Canadian poetry chapbooks;

Fri 18 Jan 2013

My "end-of-year list of 2012 Canadian poetry chapbooks" list is now online at Branta.ca

http://www.gooselane.com/blog/2013/01/an-end-of-year-list-of-2012-canadian-poetry-chapbooks/

For many, year-end means a moment of reflection, and the appearance of lists, lists and more lists. Ive received and picked up numerous poetry chapbooks, and thought it might be worth compiling a list of the Canadian titles that really stuck out, over the past calendar year.

The only really frustrating thing about a list such as this is knowing how woefully incomplete it is, including all the chapbooks that, for whatever reason, I couldnt get my hands on. Consider this a mere fraction of Canadian poetry activity in the realm of small and micro publishing.

Here they are, in no particular order:

1. Marcus McCann, Labradoodle
2. ryan fitzpatrick, 21st Century Monsters
3. Fred Wah, Medallions of Belief
4. Monty Reid, Garden (dec unit)
5. Margaret Christakos, from Tumulttudes: The Chips & Ties Study
6. Jon Paul Fiorentino, The Winnipeg Cold Storage Company
7. Gil McElroy, Ordinary Time: The Merton Lake Propers
8. Douglas Barbour, Recording Dates
9. Marilyn Irwin, little nothings
10. Rachael Simpson, Eiderdown
11. Phil Hall, A Rural Pen
12. Liz Howard, (skullambient)
13. Shannon Maguire, Fruit Machine
14. David Peter Clark, feathereDinosaurs

See the link for write-ups on each of the titles.

Dr Jha "Dear Poet, It is rare occasion when publisher shows interest in publishing poetry. Richard M. For this reason it is my earnest request to send your 3-5 published or unpublished poems on email id [redacted] and make this anthology successful on international level. I know without your generous and creative support the anthology will remain incomplete and representation of Indian English poetry in the international arena will not be justified. I want to clear doubt regarding my earlier call for submission and assure you that it is not essential and compulsion to purchase the copy of anthology and at the same time publisher will not be able to give you a free copy as a contributor if your poem/poems are selected for publication in this anthology of poems. Your any queries and grievances are most welcome. Please ignore the message displayed on the website of the publisher regarding purchasing the copy of the anthology.

One Source of Linguistically Innovative Poetry (and Visual Poetry) in Temperance Literature of the 19th c.

Fri 18 Jan 2013

In going through the old American newspapers of the middle to late 19th century, I've noticed an interesting trend. Much poetry of the Temperance Movement seems to be of what we may call the linguistically innovative variety. Perhaps because the "rules" of polite discourse were bent neigh to bursting by the inroads of demon rum (at least in the perceptions of those who agitated for the acceptance of "Cold Water" over alcohol), that poetic form as well as syntax, spelling, and etc. were loosened up in quite an interesting manner. There was also a freedom displayed in the composing and publishing of what we might now call Visual Poetry--primarily of hour glasses and bottles made up of words--playfully put together, but with the deadly serious intent of creating a nation of teetotalers. Below is an example of a temperance poem that could have been written by Bill Bisset on an overcast day.

Thanks, Jesse! It wasn't just the temperance writers who went in for creative spelling in the 1850s, though. Phonetic orthography was standard procedure for humorists like Josh Billings, Artemus Ward, Petroleum V. Nasby (all of those names are pseudonyms), and the genuinely disturbing and genuinely creative Sut Lovingood (George Washington Harris). Here's an introduction to the prose, with a link.

And here's Artemus Ward's (Charles Farrar Browne) report on a visit to a Shaker family.

Of course, we're a fan of Sut's, but this isn't dialect humor we're talking about. And funny spelling doesn't a linguistically innovative poem make. There's a real difference between Sut L. and the rest you mention, and the anonymous author of the poem I posted--can you spot it? Jess

Much poetry of the Temperance Movement seems to be of what we may call the linguistically innovative variety. Perhaps because the "rules" of polite discourse were bent neigh to bursting by the inroads of demon rum (at least in the perceptions of those who agitated for the acceptance of "Cold Water" over alcohol), that poetic form as well as syntax, spelling, and etc. were loosened up in quite an interesting manner. There was also a freedom displayed in the composing and publishing of what we might now call Visual Poetry--primarily of hour glasses and bottles made up of words--playfully put together, but with the deadly serious intent of creating a nation of teetotalers. Below is an example of a temperance* poem that could have been written by Bill Bisset on an overcast day.

Woodland Pattern Archives and the Tragedy of Big and Little Ray

Mon 21 Jan 2013

This is exciting news indeed! I've been a fan of Woodland Pattern since 1980. I used to call it Church and set up chairs for readings so I could get in free. Some of the happiest memories of my stay in Milwaukee are centered right there with Karl and Anne and the many others who made that Bookcenter hum. Woodland Pattern is located on Locust Street in the boho area of River West. A Grocery Co-Op was right up the street, and Big Ray's Tap was right there too. The Tragedy of Big and Little Ray and the Tap is of Euripidean proportions and needs to be told someday in story or song. While poetry and new music could be had at Woodland Pattern, free bar food and 25 cent water glasses of Miller made it handy to buy a round for everybody and be everybody's pal at Big Ray's. Then there was gap-toothed Tiny Mo the accordion player on Polka Nights. Though there were lots of new and exciting forms of language going on at Woodland Pattern, Big Ray's was the only place I ever heard the word "overneath" used in conversation. In short, one could have it all on Locust Street, and to be young there was very heaven. Jess

Invest in the Arts with a 21st Century Works Projects Administration

Invest in the Arts with a 21st Century Works Projects Administration Please fund the arts in this country by putting musicians, artists, writers, actors, and directors to work on large large arts, drama, media, and literacy projects. No society has ever flourished that did not value its artists. The federal funding available for art-making is scant and available only every other year to a to small amount of artists. Institute a significant amount of arts projects immediately. Create a 21st Century Works Projects Administration and put artists to work!

Hyacinth Girl Press http://www.hyacinthgirlpress.com Hyacinth Girl Press is a micro-press founded in 2011 that publishes poetry chapbooks. They specialize in handmade books of smaller press runs. They consider themselves a feminist press and are particularly interested in manuscripts dealing with topics such as radical spiritual experiences, creation/interpretation of myth through a feminist lens, and science. They think outer space, in particular, is pretty darn cool. Hyacinth Girl Press is edited by Margaret Bashaar and designed/laid out by Sarah Reck.

Margaret Bashaar http://www.margaretbashaar.wordpress.com Margaret Bashaar's second chapbook, Letters from Room 27 of the Grand Midway Hotel, was released by Blood Pudding Press in 2011. Her poetry has also appeared in or is forthcoming from journals such as Caketrain, Copper Nickel, Menacing Hedge, New South, and RHINO, among others. She edits Hyacinth Girl Press and lives in Pittsburgh with her husband, her son, and far too many typewriters.

Sarah Kain Gutowski http://www.mimsyandoutgrabe.blogspot.com Sarah Kain Gutowski's poems have been published in Epiphany, So to Speak: A Feminist Journal, The Gettysburg Review, The Southern Review, The Threepenny Review, and Verse Daily. She keeps a record of her writing life, experience in academia, and motherhood at the above url.

Crystal J. Hoffman http://www.crystaljeanhoffman.com Crystal J. Hoffman was raised by a biker and a truck driver in the woods outside of a dead mining town. This explains why her most important accomplishments to date are having been reprimanded for climbing trees on three continents and nearly freeing a monkey within one week of assuming her first full-time teaching post. Her poems have appeared in or are forthcoming in Arsenic Lobster, Redactions: Poetry and Poetics, Strange Horizons, Whiskey Island, and WomenArts Quarterly. She cofounded and directed the TypewriterGirls Poetry Cabaret with Hyacinth Girl Press editor Margaret Bashaar for five years and spent the past year inducing the Cabaret Voltaire spirit in the Middle East while teaching creative writing at the American University of Beirut.

mindtroll
http://www.mindtroll.terribleinformation.org mindtroll united in the dank fogs of the Gowanus Canal sometime in early 2010. Since then, they have upset and excited many people with their potent sound blend.

Niina Pollari
https://twitter.com/heartbarf
Niina Pollari wrote two chapbooks, Book Four (Hyacinth Girl Press) and Fabulous Essential (Birds of Lace). A full-length translation of the work of Tytti Heikkinen is due out from Action Books in spring 2013.

Sarah Reck http://www.SarahReck.com Sarah Reck's short stories have appeared in Elephant Tree and The Tributary. She is co-founding and managing editor of Litterbox Magazine (on hiatus), and blogs at the above url. She lives in New York City and works as a web publicist for a major publishing house.

J. Hope Stein

http://www.poetrycrush.com
J. Hope Stein is the author of [Talking Doll] (Dancing Girl Press), [Mary] (Hyacinth Girl Press), and Corner Office (H_ngm_n Bks). She is the editor of Poetry Crush.

Boog City http://www.boogcity.com Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 22nd year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has put out approximately 200 publications, including 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines and a newspaper, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women's writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates three regular performance series—d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, featuring a non-NYC small press, its writers, and a musical act; the new BoogWork series, which features two poets reading, followed by a musical performance, and then the featured poet giving the gathered a poetry workshop; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; Sleater- Kinney's, Dig Me Out; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville. All of these series are hosted at Sidewalk Cafe.

Recent matter.

An index or stubby shadow of duration.

Imperfect knowledge was a lot to go on.

A cross-section unveils the upward slope to a pyramid’s interior chamber. That kind of thing.

As a philosophic question, it always relates to us.
We make exceptions for scale, enlarge epistemology.

Incidental music to its larger theme.

Is it more limber or various than mathematics, or solitary in its indivisible function? A Levitated Mass?

A large team was to dying before replacements are exhausted as particles themselves.

Transposed: the blur simultaneous to Hammurabi’s edict for built structure in typical practice.

How the latest descriptors fool around with something inherent.

"ModPo" open for enrollment - offered again starting 9/7/13 (free & open to anyone)

Fri 25 Jan 2013

[enroll in ModPo for fall '13:
https://www.coursera.org/course/modernpoetry]

Dear friends and colleagues:

"ModPo" is an entirely free, non-credit, online 10-week version of the 14-week course on modern and contemporary American poetry I've been teaching for thirty years, mostly here at Penn in Philadelphia, mostly here in the Kelly Writers House.

The course makes use of audio recordings of the poets reading the poems we discuss, as well as other materials and resources we've assembled through PennSound, Jacket2, PoemTalk and the programs of the Kelly Writers House over the years.

The course was offered last fall, with 36,000 people enrolled from 129 different countries. An overview of that experience, including links to reviews of and articles about the course, is available here:

https://jacket2.org/commentary/modpo-overview

As of today, we are taking enrollments for the second running of ModPo - starting Saturday, September 7, and finishing 10 weeks plus two days later, on Monday, November 18. One can enroll here:

https://www.coursera.org/course/modernpoetry

- providing merely an email address and name (no other information is requested). As I say, it is entirely free and entirely open. (Entirely open: for instance, a number of people with disabilities took the course last time, with little to no difficulty; and people in remote places with slow and far-flung connections were still able to keep up; participants ranged from 15 to 95 years old; etc.)

A 20-minute video introduction to the course can be found on YouTube here: http://youtu.be/HsE6f0hbHwI .

If you know of teachers, poets, students and friends who might like to give this introduction to modern & contemporary poetry a try, please forward this message to them and encourage them to enroll.

Best wishes,

- Al

Native Women Language Keepers: Indigenous Performance Practices, Ann Arbor, MI, next week

Fri 25 Jan 2013

Please consider joining us for some of these events if you are around the Mid-West next week!

Native Women Language Keepers: Indigenous Performance Practices. An Arts-Based Research Symposium with playwright Alanis King* * January 28th to February 1st 2013, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor*

Aanii! Join us for UM's sixth arts-based research symposium, a week-long exploration of Native women's practices as language teachers, activists, and artists. In this week, we're workshopping a play by celebrated Native playwright Alanis King, and we will work in close connection with Miiskwaasinii'ing Nagamojig (The Swamp Singers), a Michigan-based hand-drum group, to create a praise song for Daphne Odjig's woodland paintings in the University of Michigan's archives. This symposium will marry the strengths of the University of Michigan's Anishinaabemowin language program, a thriving community of language teachers and learners, with our series of arts-based research symposia, in which we investigate ways of knowing through creative means. In this week, we want to ask questions about the place of performance and women's work in language survivance and revitalization, about decolonizing methodologies and performance, about honoring Native women artists, and about intercultural performance practices.

*Pre-conference events:

Sunday 27th*

2pm, Native Campus Community Meet-and-Greet with Alanis King, CSP Conference Room, Angell Hall, Main Campus

Monday 28th

11.30 to 1, Angell Hall 3222 Presentation by Alanis King, an Odawa Playwright/Director originally from the Wikwemikong Unceded Indian Reserve, the first Aboriginal woman to graduate from the National Theatre School of Canada, to English and Ojibwa language undergraduate students.

*Tuesday 29th

Symposium Start:* Afternoon, 2pm, Duderstadt Center Video Studio, North Campus *Emilie Monnet *is an interdisciplinary artist with Anishnabe and French heritage and a graduate of Ondinnok's First Nations Theatre training program – in partnership with The National Theatre School of Canada

(Montreal, 2007). Emilie co-directed and performed Bird Messengers, for which she was awarded the LOGIQ prize for the most outstanding Art/Culture project of 2011. In May 2012, Emilie directed Songs of Mourning, Songs of Life, a musical theatrical show addressing legacies of genocide and the role of art for collective mourning, in collaboration with the Aboriginal women's drum group Odaya and the Rwandan traditional musical ensemble, Komezinganzo. She has two works in development: OKINUM, a one-women interdisciplinary performance inspired by her great great grand-mother, and another theatre collaboration with indigenous artists from the Amazon, Colombia. Emilie's artistic engagement is inspired by years of social activism with indigenous organizations in Canada and Latin America, and community art projects with incarcerated women and Aboriginal youth. Emilie is the founder and Artistic Director of ONISHKA, an arts organization that fosters artistic collaborations between indigenous peoples worldwide while honoring their richness, diversity and resilience (www.onishka.org).

Evening, Central Campus North Quad, Room 2435:
7pm, Formal Symposium Opening with Heid Erdrich

Poet Heid E. Erdrich, a member of the Turtle Mountain Band of Ojibwe, was born in Breckenridge, Minnesota, and raised in nearby Wahpeton, North Dakota, where her Ojibwe mother and German American father taught at the Bureau of Indian Affairs boarding school. Erdrich's poetry often explores themes of indigenous culture, mothering, and the natural world, using the cadence of oral storytelling and a close attention to sound and meter to drive poems rich with sensory and dreamlike imagery. Erdrich is the author of several poetry collections, including Cell Traffic (2012), National Monuments (2008), winner of the Minnesota Book Award; The Mother's Tongue (2005), part of Salt Publishing's award-winning Earthworks Series of Native American and Latin American literature; and Fishing for Myth (1997). In a 2006 review, Twin Cities Daily Planet critic Erin Lynn Marsh described The Mother's Tongue as "an exploration of our culture's relationship with the term 'mother' and of the beginnings of language." With her sister, the writer Louise Erdrich, she founded the Turtle Mountain Writing Workshop. In 2008 the sisters co-founded Birchbark House, an organization that promotes literature written in indigenous languages. The sisters describe their vision on the foundation's website: "We foresee a vital return to our Native American languages through the efforts of elders that are already underway. In creating ways to keep their words alive, through books, films, teaching and more, we will keep our languages viable and more, we will allow the means for creative fluency, the hallmark of a fully living language."

Wednesday 30th

11:45 a.m. – 12:45 p.m. *Marcie Rendon *workshop. Duderstadt Center Video Studio, North Campus. Marcie Rendon (Anishinaabe) is a theatre maker and writer activist who supports and encourages other writers to write in Ojibwe. Among her projects are a writing residency she facilitated on the White Earth reservation as part of a three-phase Project Hoop Residency to create theater projects at a community level. She will lead a ten-minute play, Friends, which was published in Performing Worlds into Being: Native American Women's Theater, and which she and the group will translate into Ojibwe for possible production in Winnipeg in 2013. We will have a reading of the script and then work together on translation issues. With 298 and 323, in Duderstadt

6:00 p.m. – 7:00 p.m. *Angel Sobotta *Presentation. CSP Conference Room, Angell Hall Angel Sobotta (Nez Perce), is a Nez Perce language teacher in the tribal headstart, local schools, and at the Lewis Clark State College in Idaho. She is also a writer and documentary filmmaker of projects like, "'Ipsqilaanx heewtnin' weestesne – Walking on Sacred Ground – the Nez Perce Lolo Trail" and "Surviving Lewis and Clark: The Niimiipuu Story" both winning the Aurora and Telly awards respectively. She is also a theater maker with the Lapwai Afterschool Programs, teaching language by adapting legends and directing the youth, including "Niimiipuum Titwaatit – The People's Stories," an anti-bullying project (2012). Angel is a University of Idaho Interdisciplinary Masters student. Her thesis involves an immersion experience for language teachers by adapting the Nez Perce creation story, written in the Nez Perce language, into a stage play.

Thursday 31st

3:30 p.m. – 5:00 p.m. *Virginie Magnat *workshop, Duderstadt Center Video Studio, North Campus Virginie Magnat is Assistant Professor of Performance at University of British Columbia, Okanagan. She conducts embodied research on transmission processes among women performers from different cultures, traditions, and generations; and draws from Indigenous epistemologies and methodologies to examine the interrelation of lived experience, embodied knowledge, tradition, creativity, and spirituality. Her essay "Can Research Become Ceremony? Performance Ethnography and Indigenous Epistemologies" appeared in summer 2012 in the Canadian Theatre Review. She will share a workshop called "Sharing Embodied Cultural Knowledge Through Traditional Songs." In this session, participants will be invited to share/teach/learn traditional songs from their cultural legacy so that we can get to know each other through our songs.

6.00 -8.30 Swamp Women/ Miiskwaasinii'ing Nagamojig workshop, Duderstadt Center Video Studio, North Campus Create a new praise song with the Swamp Women, Miiskwaasinii'ing Nagamojig, among Daphne Odjig's's paintings. Come, sing, drum and be part of the community!

Friday 1st of February

On Friday morning, we'll gather for a workshop sharing and video recording in the Duderstadt Center Video Studio. 10-1.

Margaret Noori (Anishinaabe) received an MFA in Creative Writing and a PhD in English and Linguistics from the University of Minnesota. She is Director of the Comprehensive Studies Program and teaches the Anishinaabe Language and American Indian Literature at the University of Michigan. She is also one of the founders of the drum group Miskwaasining Nagamojig, current President of Association for the Study of American Indian Literatures, one of the Clan Mothers who coordinate the annual Native American Literature Symposium, and member of the Anishinaabemowin-Teg Executive Board. Her book Bwaajimowin: A Dialect of Dreams in Anishinaabe Language and Literature is forthcoming from MSU Press and her poetry has recently appeared in the Michigan Quarterly Review, Sing: Poetry from the Indigenous Americas and Cell Traffic by Heid Erdrich. For more information visit www.ojibwe.net where she and her colleagues have created a space for language that is shared by academics and the native community. She will be work-shopping a chapter from a forthcoming book on Anishinaabe narrative traditions which traces the way "oral" traditions are actually "physical" performance traditions which carry thought into space and allow us to exchange our interpretations of the world around as word which becomes stage dialogue, story, lyrics or poetry.

Seeking a new Political Editor for Unlikely Stories: Episode IV

Sun 27 Jan 2013

Wanted: The correct applicant for the unlikeliest job in Web-literature, the Political Editor for /Unlikely Stories: Episode IV/.

/Unlikely Stories/, which has run more-or-less continuously since 1998, began incorporating sociopolitical content into its regular publication schedule in 2004. You remember 2004—a few unpleasantries were occurring, but at the same time, the U.S. Treasury Department, led by the Bush Administration, discovered that it /couldn’t/outlaw translations of literature from Iran, Lybia, and Cuba—the outrage against them was too great. We at /Unlikely/(then called /Unlikely 2.0/dove into cultural commentary, and it’s been an integral part of our site since.

In 2012 we launched /Unlikely Stories: Episode IV/, and reduced our focus on sociopolitical analyses, instead (mostly) shifting to firsthand accounts of activism. These firsthand accounts, available all over the ‘Net and covering a broad range of activities and philosophies, are now a core element of our monthly content. Political Editor Joseph Rose made the transition smooth and effective, but he must now commit to other things, and we seek his replacement.

The candidate should:

1. Care about the arts and their role in society. This is a political position at an arts magazine. It exists because we at /Unlikely/feel that the line between arts and politics should be a lot blurrier than it typically is. 2. Be prepared to commit up to twenty hours a month to reading political and activist content on the web, finding appropriate discussions, and requesting permission to reprint them at /Unlikely./ 3. Have the social skills necessary to request reprint rights, and care about Copyright and proper attribution, even if no one else on the Web does. See http://www.templetons.com/brad/copymyths.html and http://unlikelystories.org/05/hadley0805.shtml. 4. Understand that, while the Political Editor is a fully autonomous editor who has broad control of their "fiefdom," /Unlikely/'s political segments are deliberately woven with its art criticism segments, and this job therefore requires regularly working with /Unlikely/'s Editor-in-Chief, Jonathan Penton. And he's batshit.

The candidate should consider:

1. What do you feel is meant by "activism?" How do your own political assumptions come into play? Do you find /Unlikely/'s political opinions to be roughly compatible with your own? Are there changes you'd like to see? 2. What sort of work would you like to bring to the department? Would you like to blog? Videoblog? Compile sets of related essays? Compile sets of essays in which the authors disagree?

If this sounds like it would bring you enjoyment and enrichment, sue your parents for malpractice, verify that you've seen our submission guidelines at http://www.unlikelystories.org/mission.shtml, and introduce yourself to "us" at [redacted].

And, no, it doesn't pay. I run /Unlikely /at a loss, always have. If you have some sort of wack-ass lit-career plan for which this job sounds helpful, well, I'm happy to work with you on it.

I do! I do! He was what Kevin Killian and Lewis E, call in Spicer's bio a "more conventional boyfriend" Spicer met as he was a "fixture in Berthelon's Berkeley salon." I just glanced and haven't read it in year, but Allen is mentioned numerous times in "poet be like God" I Love that book! But it's a little hard to get and expensive ($40). Jen

The Art of Plumbing

Beforetimes. Uranus culls his gilded camels and bathes in the Baikal, the Zaysan, the Lanao. He wades in low-lying planes; spas in every rain-filled meteor crater. Sixty-fourth parallel, March. Sunlight fires a salvo off his lovers collarbone. Gaias slums hoard water, asmat mud and patches of pubic forest. Her valleys are aqueducts feeding antechambers of lakes: caravans of bathtubs clawing overland talon by talon according to deep time, glacial wake, geochemistry. Lake Agassiz Basin. Morass hollow, calderas. Gathering my hair off the pillow, I rise from the spill on our sheets to bathe.

OceanusTitan of the brackish Atlantic, master of Ketos and Kraken, conductor of sky to land. Half man, half serpent; horizon marks the fix. Biceps of accumulated cloud ceiling the sea. Hell rip your ship apart for a violin. His tails a womans braid dropped deep. And over its mucus and muscled carbuncles, legions of mollusc princes ascend, knot by knot by octopus tapiscrabs pincers and half-spumed clamsthrough bergs of cloying oil slick, plagues of dross, black-blooming purple, and a drowned Cassiopeia of phosphor. Abyssss. Germs fermenting in the kegs of their slow-moving shells. Up through the punch holes of Poseidons belt, out through the tunnels of his prosthetic manifold, svelte pipelines, immaculate tapsan invertebrate army comes to kiss the slit where my tail splits, two legs.

About the Al Purdy A-frame Project:

> So we built a house, my wife and I > our house at a backwater puddle of a lake > near Ameliasburg, Ont.
> Al Purdy In Search of Owen Roblin

And that A-frame house, made out of second-hand lumber and original poetry, became the most famous writers house in the country. Hundreds of writers and their housemates found their way to Roblin Lake to visit the Purdys and talk about poetry and history while downing beer or wild grape wine. Coleridge and his friends had their lake country, and now the Canadian poets would have theirs. A lot of poetry and prose came out of that hard-to-find place.

To prevent its second-hand wood from ending up on someones scrap heap, and with the blessing and support of Als widow, Eurithe Purdy, The Purdy A-frame Association raised funds to purchase the property and is now raising more funds to preserve it, create an endowment and establish a poet-in-residence program.

Voice Studies 11 (Blamey) & 12 (Sondheim) (fwd, please post)

Tue 29 Jan 2013

Dear all,

We are pleased to announce the release of:

VOICE STUDIES 11 & 12

David Blamey

VS 011 (2013)

20 minute double sided cassette

Side A ? O.K.
Side B ? O.K.

As a visual artist, David Blamey has a knack for finding patterns of formalism in everyday life that, when augmented through acts of repetition or prolonged attention, break down and unravel in interesting ways. At the critical point of collapse within this method there exists an opportunity for subjects to transcend themselves: to be elevated from their material constraints into a higher realm of possibility.

This new sound piece evolved from an ink drawing made in India that simply states: ?O.K.? The banality of the word would seem to offer little in the way of musical promise, yet when repeated over time our awareness becomes drawn to subtle inflections within its minimal neutrality. In due course any meaning that the word may have once held is lost and something else transpires. With references to club culture, meditation tapes and conceptual art, this project serves as a droll mantra for uncertain times.

The First Poem Transmitted At The Speed of Light

Tue 29 Jan 2013

In 1794 the Swedish inventor and poet Niclas Edelcrantz sent a poem by optical telegraph dedicated to the Swedish King on his birthday from the Palace in Stockholm to the King at Drottningholm. The words of the poem were encoded in a language of collapsing iron shutters, which were decodable as numbers, which in turn rendered up words, letters, phrases. A series of towers topped with collapsing iron shutters and manned by men who knew just when how and why to collapse and restore them, passed the poem along in the same manner that native Americans used smoke signals. The Optical Telegraph was a whizz-bang bit of technology if there ever was one. My source for this golden bit is the Wikipedia. God bless you all, or rather What Hath God Wrought?. Jess

Re: Spicer query
Wed 30 Jan 2013

Maria, I never think of myself being related to anyone (certainly not to James Joyce), and there are a surprising number of Joyces out there, so I almost overlooked this notice. However, I think Allen Joyce actually is a cousin of mine. I know little about that sector of my family due to the schism which occurred when my grandfather took up with my grandmother when his wife was pregnant with their ninth child. However, I do know that Allen was born in Hawaii in 1930. His father, Allen R. Joyce, was a commander of submarines, partly during WWII, and he retired as a Rear Admiral. I think he was based in San Diego. My father told me not too long ago that Allen Jr. was gay. I am investigating this further and will back channel with more details. I am fairly sure that I can contact Allen's nephew and gather more details.

120. Philip Meersman
Please, help safe the Institute of the City Poet in Antwerp, Belgium
Wed 30 Jan 2013

Dear all,
For 10 years the different Antwerp City Poets were a beacon of Freedom of Speech, a conscience for the City Council and a voice for the people of Antwerp.

For ten years, Tom Lanoye, Ramsey Nasr, Bart Moeyaert, Joke van Leeuwen, Peter Holvoet-Hanssen and now Bernard Dewulf have been proud defenders of the free verse and Poetry.
(http://www.antwerpen.be/eCache/ABE/81/35/307.html)

Now they need your support!

In an article in Flemish quality newspaper "De Standaard" (http://www.standaard.be/artikel/detail.aspx?artikelid=DMF20130130_010) the right winged flemish nationalistic party NV-A proposes to stop the institute of the Antwerp City Poet. Due to the fact that these people are or badly informed about what the Antwerp City Poet is doing for poetry, language and integration or because of the fact that this right wing party sees the Antwerp City Poet as a remnant of 10 years "left wing influence" on society or just want to stop the unique way the Antwerp City Poet format works - the Antwerp City Poet is completely free and can speak and write about whatever s/he wants and it will be made public regardless of the fact if it is pro or contra the reigning mayor or parties. The NV-A has been very eager to use philosophy, popular misconceptions and lies to discredit the arts as a way of freedom of expression and not as a propaganda tool for the right wing nationalistic Flemish nation state making. The president of the Flemish Parliament (member of NV-A) as well as mayor of Antwerp (the president of the NV-A) and different other NV-A politicians and thinkers are constantly trying to shut up all dissident voices in Antwerp and in Flanders. As we see currently in Hungary, but also in other countries around the world, dissident voices to the nationalistic narrow far right way of thinking are being silenced by portraying the dissident voices as enemies of the(ir) state (vision) and so stopping funding with common popular consent or even worse convicting them to prison. I took the freedom to add the links to these articles underneath here so - with the help of a (google) translator you can read them for yourself and assess the danger first hand.

As you know, I'm - not only in my poetry but also in my day-to-day life - an advocate of freedom of speech everywhere in the world. On Facebook there is a group - since today - which is "Safe the City Poet" (https://www.facebook.com/pages/Red-de-Stadsdichter/148087885348800)

As most of you have met or been in touch with the unique way the Antwerp City Poet works and since you are all very much in favour of Freedom of Speech as active poets, exiled or organisers, I send you this plea to go to the facebook page and like it, leaving a comment and/or writing about this threat to the freedom of speech in the centre of Europe.

I thank you for sending your letters of support to Michael Vandebril and/or to publish them online, sharing them with us all.

Hoping that the voice of the City Poet of Antwerp will not be deafened.

Read the Charter of Peter Holvoet Hanssen, the previous city poet here:

From: Marianne Noble <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]

Dear Professor Damon , I'm writing to draw your attention to a large international conference on Emily Dickinson this summer at the University of Maryland and American University. I invite you to submit a proposal for the conference, and also to spread the word to students and colleagues who are working on Dickinson.

For its 25th anniversary, the Emily Dickinson International Society is sponsoring a conference, Aug 9-11, entitled Emily Dickinson, World Citizen <http://emilydickinsoninternationalsociety.org/node/123>. You can click on CFP <http://www.emilydickinsoninternationalsociety.org/node/329> here; it's also attached and pasted it in below. As you'll see, we're especially interested in "innovative and alternative presentation modes (such as pecha kucha and artistic performances)," and in contributions that stretch the theme of Emily Dickinson, World Citizen <http://emilydickinsoninternationalsociety.org/node/123>. She did, after all, gather "Paradise" in her "narrow Hands."

If you have any questions, please don't hesitate to contact me Marianne Noble ([redacted] <mailto:[redacted]>) or Martha Nell Smith ([redacted] <mailto:[redacted]>) directly or the conference committee at [redacted] <mailto:[redacted]>. We hope you will join us for a wonderful time rowing in Eden and basking in poetry.

In Possibility,

Emily Dickinson International Society (EDIS)

EDIS 2013 International Conference: Ã¢Â€ÂœEmily Dickinson, World CitizenÃ¢Â€Â

University of Maryland and American University

College Park, MD and Washington, D.C.

http://www.emilydickinsoninternationalsociety.org/node/123

On August 9-11, 2013, the University of Maryland and American University will co-sponsor an Emily Dickinson International Society (EDIS) international conference in the Washington, D.C. area. To celebrate 25 years of EDIS fostering intellectual and artistic exchange, Ã¢Â€ÂœEmily Dickinson, World CitizenÃ¢Â€Â will explore DickinsonÃ¢Â€Â™s various forms of belonging and ways in which multiple constituencies Ã¢Â€ÂœbelongÃ¢Â€Â to her, her world. The poet herself may have seen Ã¢Â€ÂœNew Englandly, Ã¢Â€Â but as a cosmopolitan reader, she crafted and cultivated numerous affiliations beyond the local. This conference explores her politics, her understanding of citizenship, her engagements with international cultures and influences, as well as those culturesÃ¢Â€Â™ diverse engagements with her writings. The focus of the conferenceÃ¢Â€Â™s critical and artistic inquiries is the global reach of her mind and verse from the nineteenth century to the present.

Ã¢Â€ÂœEmily Dickinson, World CitizenÃ¢Â€Â will take extensive advantage of the many historical and cultural resources in the D.C. area. Anticipated highlights include high tea at the Willard Hotel, where Emily Dickinson stayed when she visited her Representative father and where Julia Ward Howe wrote Ã¢Â€ÂœThe Battle Hymn of the RepublicÃ¢Â€Â; a lecture and/or exhibition, followed by a reception, at the National Museum of Women in the Arts; a dinner and reception at American University; a poetry reading by some who consider the DC/Maryland area home; and what Emily Dickinson would surely demand if she were coming Ã¢Â€Â”a crabfest, with alternatives of course for those who do not eat shellfish.

For this conference in Ã¢Â€ÂœScarlet Maryland, Ã¢Â€Â we invite proposals for papers, performances, panel sessions, and other critical and artistic responses to the theme Ã¢Â€ÂœEmily Dickinson, World Citizen.Ã¢Â€Â Innovative and alternative presentation modes (such as pecha kucha) are encouraged. Presentations of research not directly related to the conference theme are also invited. Our Ã¢ Â€ÂœworldingÃ¢Â€Â of Emily Dickinson includes using 21st century media for our knowledge exchange. To that end, abstracts of the presentations will be made available to all participants at least 30 days before the conference. Please submit proposals for papers, performances, panels to [redacted] <mailto:[redacted]> by February 15, 2013. Notifications of acceptances will be sent no later than February 28, 2013.

Look for updates on the conference at http://www.emilydickinsoninternationalsociety.org/node/123.

Re: Spicer query
Wed 30 Jan 2013

Whoa, Elisabeth, that is definitely the same guy.

I gathered from friends of Allen's that, at the time he met Spicer, he was sort of what was once called a "remittance man,"that his family gave him an allowance on condition he stayed away (maybe not in so many words).

What a small world and to have it emerge on the Poetics List, there's a strange beauty in this. Please keep me posted on your further investigations. Your cousin haunts me, and the letters and poems Spicer wrote to him are about as warm as he got,

Cheers from San Francisco,

Kevin K.

Maria, I never think of myself being related to anyone (certainly not to James Joyce), and there are a surprising number of Joyces out there, so I almost overlooked this notice. However, I think Allen Joyce actually is a cousin of mine. I know little about that sector of my family due to the schism which occurred when my grandfather took up with my grandmother when his wife was pregnant with their ninth child. However, I do know that Allen was born in Hawaii in 1930. His father, Allen R. Joyce, was a commander of submarines, partly during WWII, and he retired as a Rear Admiral. I think he was based in San Diego. My father told me not too long ago that Allen Jr. was gay. I am investigating this further and will back channel with more details. I am fairly sure that I can contact Allen's nephew and gather more details.

The Drive-Thru, and Drive-By Schools of Post-Post-Modern American Poetics
Wed 30 Jan 2013

If post-post-modern poetry is more process than product with Poetic Effort (PE) taking precedence over Poetic Product (PP), then perhaps further analysis might allow us to posit two broad fields of post-post-modernity in (at least) American poetry: Drive-Thru poetics (High PE, LOW PP), in which the poet attempts to service the reader to the extent that he or she successfully services herself; and Drive-By poetics (HIGH PP, HIGH TO LOWER MIDDLE PE), in which the poem as aesthetic object, able to be "bought, and sold"--if even in a token sense, is still discernible against the phenomenological back-drop of PE.

A series of towers topped with collapsing iron shutters and manned by men who knew just when how and why to collapse and restore them, passed the poem along in the same manner that native Americans used smoke signals. The Optical Telegraph was a whizz-bang bit of technology if there ever was one. My source for this golden bit is the Wikipedia.*

I'm told the poet asked, are birds free from the chains of the skyway?
So I depart from air.

One accustomed to the sea takes not long to trust airs buoyancy.
So let breath be the place we start from. Let the sun rise in our wake and our ship shudder as we descend through cloud.

The river below, a forked black tongue darting through the snow, I named for the patron of cooks, put to death on a grill.

The maps I drew four centuries ago
I compare with land from the vantage of birds and am not dissatisfied.

February 2013 brought the country's violence into the poem, and asked what a nation full of guns has done to its verse. One hundred and eighty-seven messages moved through the list — a small surge in the thinning years — and its currents ran between the metaphor of the weapon and the wildness beyond the human, between the gun in American poetry and the misanthropic nature-vision of Robinson Jeffers. Two months after a schoolhouse massacre, the room turned, gravely, to the imagery of firearms it had inherited and the question of what to do with it now.

The largest thread traced the weapon through the tradition. A member opened an inquiry into "the metaphor of the gun as reflected in American poetry", reaching back to Dickinson's life that had stood a loaded gun and Whitman's shooting scenes and forward to the present — the room assembling, soberly, the long American entanglement of poetry and the firearm. In the shadow of recent horror the old figures could not stay merely literary; the loaded gun of the poem sat uneasily beside the real ones the country would not put down, and the room felt the difference in its bones.

The quarrel's counter-current reached past the human entirely. A thread hunting for connections "between Robinson Jeffers and the Beat movement" summoned the poet of inhumanism, who had answered a violent species by turning toward the hawk and the stone and the indifferent Pacific — the vision that finds relief from human cruelty only by looking away from humanity altogether. Against the metaphor of the gun, Jeffers offered the metaphor of the cliff and the sea: the consolation, bleak and vast, of a nature that neither shoots nor grieves.

Around the grave threads ran the machinery of the profession — a great anthology relaunching and seeking an editor, a knotty thread on process and craft, a joke about Dickinson as a nude celebrity. The ordinary literary business carried on beside the meditation on violence, the room capable, as ever, of holding the solemn and the silly in the same inbox — a relaunched anthology hunting for its editor in the same weeks the list weighed what a poem can say about a massacre.

I have set February down exactly as the archive delivered it — the metaphor of the gun traced through American poetry, Jeffers's inhuman turn toward the hawk and the sea, and the profession's ordinary business alongside — because it was the month the list let a national horror into the poem and asked what its own tradition had to say about the weapon. A room that will follow the gun from Dickinson to the present in the shadow of a massacre, and reach past the whole violent species toward Jeffers's indifferent nature for relief, is a room doing the serious work its art exists for: not to solve the violence, which it cannot, but to refuse to let the country's deadliest image pass through its poems unexamined.

Reading at Woman Made Gallery Chicago

* Woman Made Gallery,
Hello- This Sunday, Feb 3rd from 1:30-3:30pm:

* Woman Made Gallery, 685 N. Milwaukee, Chicago
* Shevaun Brannigan, CM Burroughs, Tyler Mills, Sandra Marchetti, Carrie McGath, and Naomi Buck Palagi will read work on the theme of Public/Private. Description: â€œFrom the exploding popularity of reality television and celebrity culture to the U.S. government's ever-growing presence in our homes, schools, and community spaces through Patriot Act-sanctioned surveillance, the twenty-first century has seen enormous shifts in cultural and political conceptions of what is considered private and what is considered public, both in the United States and world-wide. We as individuals are losing control over what is seen and what is unseen; known and unknown; public and private. How do these shifts manifest in our daily lives? Who is most affected and why? How do poets address these changes, whether through illuminating, embracing or actively working against them?"

Curated by Nina Corwin and documented by audio recordist Kurt Heintz, featured readers include Shevaun Brannigan, CM Burroughs, Tyler Mills, Sandra Marchetti, Carrie McGath, and Naomi Buck Palagi.

I know it's unlikely, but does anyone have a student in the New York City area who would like to be an intern for a Larry Eigner biography. Duties include typing quotes from letters and doing library

Support the VERSeFest '13 : Indiegogo campaign!

Thu 31 Jan 2013

VERSeFest 13, Ottawa's annual international poetry festival, starts on 12 March. We need your help to make the festival even better than last year!

VERSeFest is Ottawas annual international poetry festival. It is managed by a collective of Ottawa poetry groups called VERSe Ottawa. The festival is going into its third year and has been a great artistic success. Last year's festival brought spoken word poets of the calibre of C.R. Avery and Ursula Rucker, and written word poets such as Philip Levine and Rae Armantrout. We're looking forward to VERSeFest 13, which will feature poets from Australia, Ireland and the Netherlands. The festival promises to be even better than its predecessors. But we need your help.

Staging an international poetry festival is a much more expensive operation than keeping it Canadian. Travel costs are very much higher, as you might imagine; even the costs of accommodation and hospitality rise above those for Canadian nationals. We have sought and obtained some funding from several Canadian funding agencies, but it isn't enough to offset costs.

We need $5,000 to break even on VERSeFest 13. If we don't manage to raise that amount, we will have to start cancelling international and Canadian poets. We need $2,500 to bring two Irish and three Dutch poets to Ottawa, and we need $1,500 to bring Canadian poets from western Canada. A further $1,000 will go toward accommodations and hospitality for other festival participants.

Your contributions will go directly to funding the artists appearances. VERSeFest is run completely by volunteers, so 100% of every donation goes toward making the festival happen. Please give what you can.

http://www.indiegogo.com/versefest/x/2291088

You can help even if you cant contribute financially. Please pass the word about our campaign to friends and acquaintances. Make some noise about VERSeFest and Indiegogo. Use the Indiegogo share tools to get the word out.

Thank you!

1. COLLECTED POEMS, JOSEPH CERAVOLO, (Wesleyan University Press, 2013). The late Joseph Ceravolo (1934-1988) has only posthumously begun receiving his due as a contemporary Master. One of the many postwar Greats largely resident in one of the nation's two elite coastal literary enclaves--Ceravolo lived and wrote in and around New York City for most of his career--Ceravolo, like many avant-garde geniuses until recently excluded from institution-driven public canonization, has been the beneficiary of the renewed interest in late twentieth century experimental writing produced by the Program Era, which interest also explains the historic expansion in independent literary publishing over the same time period. (It is worth noting, too, that Ceravolo was one of the nation's early-adopter creative writing students, having studied under the illustrious Kenneth Koch at The New School in the 1950s, years before even two terminal-degree graduate creative writing programs dotted the American landscape.) The poet's distinctive style consists of the sort of raw ellipticism that children, so better attuned than their elders to the associative rangings of the mind, produce naturally and in great volume. If there is a precursor to the current tendency, among younger poets, to produce verse that feels more emotionally exacting than it semantically has any right to be, that is gleefully intuitive rather than bleakly methodical, it is Ceravolo.

The late Koch once implied that Ceravolo's writing was, in some form or another, a mystical enterprise, and others have associated it more directly with the Dadaism and Surrealism of the early-twentieth century European avant-garde. However well-intentioned this praise--and in the vernacular of the shrewd, simultaneously anti- and pro-canonmaking doublespeak of the American avant-garde, any praise that seeks to deduce or manufacture a nexus between tradition and an individual talent is at least nominally well-intentioned--it misses the mark. What Ceravolo (a shy family man from New Jersey in his personal life) reveals in his work is that the natural processes of the human mind, channeled reflexively and lovingly through the prism of received language, are glorious and magical in situ--it does not require readers' imagination or whimsy to make them so. To call a thing mystical is to (often unfairly) position it as an irreducible and irreplicable eccentricity; it is no slight to Ceravolo to say that his distinctive writing style does not so much denominate a distinctive thinking style as constitute a revelation and celebration of what are already, in fact, universal phenomena.

The literary-arts pedagogy of the poet Charles Bernstein, referred to by the Philadelphia-dwelling author and educator as "creative wreading" (an amalgam of "creative writing" and "creative reading") encourages writers and readers alike to locate and reside in those elements of a poem that appear quote-unquote "wrong," cause consternation, disrupt expectations, and produce what Bernstein terms a "non-absorptive" (that is, difficult to parse using received expectations of/for language) reading experience. The theory behind such readings is not merely that these eddies of strangeness are the most interesting bits in the texts in which they appear, though this is presumptively true under the pedagogy, but also that they constitute more authentic representations of the false starts and misfires of the brain that in fact plague (or, as you like, bless) each one of us daily. Bernstein's point is one Ceravolo long ago internalized and exhibited in his body of work. Indeed, while there is much talk today of "voice" and "authenticity" in poetry, in fact "voice"--as Collected Poems reveals--is merely an elective construction traceably comprised of semi-discrete principles like grammar, diction, tone, syntax, parataxis, juxtaposition, ethos, logos, and pathos, and authenticity is always to be found in compositional process rather than product. In other words, we needn't force these things; we merely need attune ourselves to "hear" our native skill-set and then determine how and why and where this psychic know-how corresponds to anything operative in the world.

Ceravolo is, in this view, as authentic and vocally distinctive a poet as we have, despite the fact that his poems often cannot be read or heard the way everyday speech is heard or processed--and that no one but Ceravolo could know or say whether the poet had expressed his sentiments "authentically" (that is, in fidelity to the form and nature of their source stimuli within and without the poet himself). Scholars may coo over the prospect of adding Ceravolo's voice to the already robust gallery of personalities associated with the so-called "New York School"; the rest of us will find in the poetry a sensitivity to instinctive association that is no more particular to New York City than a French baguette, no more exclusive to the aesthetic sensibilities of the New York School poets (who, after all, are far more credibly associated biographically than artistically) than the line or stanza was to the Romantics.

The best American poetry--and Ceravolo contributes substantially to the stock of verse deserving of this honorific--can often be read as an additive equation in which only the first and resultant terms are available to the reader; the middle terms, the ones added to the first to produce the final result, are usually elided. And it is in these absent terms that we measure the literary and historical significance of an individual author. Whatever his borrowings from the American, British, and Continental literary tradition, Ceravolo stands apart as an American literary icon of nearly unparalleled achievement. That the American avant-garde was lamenting his "disappeared" status (as to the "public" canon) not twenty years ago, and that he has now received posthumous publication of his collected works from one of the most august university presses in the nation, is yet another sign, as if any more were needed, that the antagonistic rhetoric of culturally-entrenched avant-garde poet-scholars (which heaps equal piles of self-aggrandizing calumny on The New Criticism; the philological and historicist English Literature scholarship the New Criticism displaced; the Official Verse Culture engendered and sponsored by The New Criticism; the Creative Writing Movement the New Criticism abhorred and was vanquished by; and any attempts at a New Avant-Garde among those never lip-bitingly apprenticed to the Old) was, is, and will continue to be--its slickly professional claims of victimhood notwithstanding--the most powerful canonizing force in American letters.

Ceravolo transcends the canon--both the institutionally-approved and the increasingly robust alternative versions--because in his life he occupied the sort of real social spaces poets inhabit and alter irrevocably, and in his verse he occupied the sort of real psychic spaces each one of us inhabits but often finds unaccountably difficult (lacking Ceravolo's genius) to reify on the page. Ceravolo's verse is at once classical and fresh, tender and profound, succinct and expansive, tantalizingly parseable yet divinely ineffable. It would take a lifetime of expert reading to fully appreciate this lifetime of superlative writing; with the long-awaited publication of a collected Ceravolo, America's contemporary poetry readers now have the opportunity to do their part.

Smell My Metal, Etc.--Or Process Makes Perfect

Thu 31 Jan 2013

Dear Stephen,

Could you please share with the list the process by which you arrived at the name Smell My Metal Knees for your promised journal? It sounds like a specialty magazine to me. Were you angry when you invented the name? Frustrated? It doesn't sound warm or fuzzy, or "efficient" as one-syllable names like "Fence" "Chain" "Grid" or other well-known and highly respected venues sound. Or were you inspired by science fiction, or is the title based in a hidden autobiographical detail, as, for instance, I could theoretically invent a magazine named "Rub My Metal Shoulder," and be entirely accurate, since my shoulder does indeed set off security alarms at airports. (This is a matter of record.) In short--Have you undergone knee replacement and taken this way to hint darkly at the fact? Or is there some other effect you wish to produce by this interesting title?

Every best wish,

Jess

Anselm Hollo (1934-2013)

Fri 1 Feb 2013

Much sadness. This was written for Anselm when he was hospitalized in the summer of 2003

EVERYTHING TRANSLATES

for Anselm

To hear the fan go to imagine air

filling whatever space is before it, hot interior of a cabin, half-helix

of the ear where sound tickles.

Cage shuts himself

in a still, sealed room

to hear his blood pound.

No purity like that for the translator letting the world's noise enter,

an intruder banging on the door.

At least, half of the pounding gets past the tympanum,

at least half of that reaches to the heart which adds that pounding to its own.

Vitreous Hide released! Book launch on YouTube.

Fri 1 Feb 2013

My new book,Â Vitreous Hide, from Lavender I
Dear Poetics Listers,

My new book,Â Vitreous Hide, from Lavender Ink press of New OrleansÂ (also available on Amazon, but please consider buying directly from the publisher) was launched in that beautiful city on January 20th. You can view the reading on YouTube, if you like. I hope some of you do and that you enjoy it. Please also consider reviewing, teachingÂ and/orÂ inviting me to read fromÂ Vitreous Hide. Really, I won't mind at all. (I would, in fact, be terribly and terrifically grateful!) You can see a listing of my currently scheduled readings in Providence (2/9), New York (3/15), and Athens, GA (3/21) on my website, MichaelTodEdgerton.blogspot.com. I hope to see some of you there. Thanks! Praise forÂ Vitreous Hide: In a theater of the page permeated by sonic play, Edgerton shuffles together elements and impressions of the Orpheus myth, splicing them together with other aspects of the Greek pantheon, augmented with cameo appearances by Cocteau, Heidegger, Madame Bovary, and a few essential others. True to the Orphic agenda, sound, made overtly and gorgeously lyric, becomes the dominant character, increasingly swept up into a dynamically choreographed typography. Itâ€™s a book of big ideas and big feeling, yet carried so lightly on its lyric weave that it becomes almost weightless. A real delight for both ear and mind. Â Â Â

http://halvard-johnson.blogspot.com/

Bill of lading: Gerry loose (Scotland), Diane Stevenson (US), Lorenzo GarcÃa Vega (Cuba), translated by Christopher Winks, Gaspar Orozco (Mexico), translated by Mark Weiss, Ken Wolman (US), RocÃo CerÃ³n (Mexico), translated by Anna Rosen Guercio, Rochelle Owens (US), Carol Watts (England), Dulce MarÃa Loynaz (Cuba), translated by Rebecca Seiferle, Carlos Blackburn (US), Jerome Rothenberg (US), Hezy Leskly (Israel), translated by Adriana X. Jacobs, George Economou (US), Mervyn Taylor (Trinidad), Trevor Joyce (Ireland), Joel Lewis (US), Sally Fisher (US, Douglas Barbour (Canada), Jill Jones (Australia), Halvard Johnson (US), and Mark Weiss (US).

Note that I thought of the blog as a magazine, ordered as I thought makes a kind of sense, but like a magazine you're free to read it any which way.

I think I speak for all involved in saying that praise or candy are gladly accepted.

Spread the word!

fyi: for anybody interested in Robinson Jeffers, my own bit in the latest Otoliths is "Poems Floated from the Hearth" a kind of an extended commentary on Jeffers, poets of the SF Renaissance, and Rexroth as seen through a poem of Kevin Opstedal's and focusing upon a recent critical book: Jeffers and the American Sublime by Zaller (stanford U press. My Thanks to Mark and Otoliths for hosting it

Praise forÂ Vitreous Hide:
In a theater of the page permeated by sonic play, Edgerton shuffles together elements and impressions of the Orpheus myth, splicing them together with other aspects of the Greek pantheon, augmented with cameo appearances by Cocteau, Heidegger, Madame Bovary, and a few essential others. True to the Orphic agenda, sound, made overtly and gorgeously lyric, becomes the dominant character, increasingly swept up into a dynamically choreographed typography. Itâ€™s a book of big ideas and big feeling, yet carried so lightly on its lyric weave that it becomes almost weightless. A real delight for both ear and mind.

Re: NEH Summer Institute
Sat 2 Feb 2013

Dear Poetics List:

I'm happy to announce NYU's Summer Intensive in Creative Writing -- June 16-June 28th. This year's guest writers are Roxana Robinson (fiction), Chase Twiichlell (Poetry) and Michael Thomas (nonfiction). During this two week workshop participants work with the guest writers and in the mornings work improvisationally in workshops I conduct along with my colleague April Krassner. We work with a variety of constraints -- Oulipean and others. We invent them.

The program grants 4 undergraduate credits and is also open to postgraduate students. I'd appreciate it if you spread the word to students and others. This is a genuinely experimental program that focuses on writing, not on career.

The McGhee Division is NYU's college for nontraditional students.

Please direct interested parties to me:

Re: Smell My Metal, Etc.--Or Process Makes Perfect

Sat 2 Feb 2013

So, I take it, we were in the ball park. Couldn't forward the pix, but maybe you could, Stephen. My name is Jesse the words that form the 'title' of the journal I proposed were the first things that came to mind on viewing the attached photograph. Altho I, too, have loads of metal in my hip and ankle, this was so secondary to that instant that I didn't even think of 'that' until maybe an hour later. In a way, it is a re-working of the more ordinal 'kiss my ass,' which the look on the robot's face seems to be suggesting, and the robot's 'encouraging' hand on the back of the workman's head seems also suggestively erotic, as if, instead of 'kiss my ass' the alternate could easily be 'suck my cock,' and, given that it is the almost 'robotic,' non-empathetic stasis of things novel that are suggesting this, I thought also, as to the novelty of the poem, that things 'natural' might usefully be suggested, sexually, in particular, by way of contrasting the poem's 'novel' (metallic) demands with 'natural' urges (kissing, say, knees, or actually 'getting down on one's knees') that are always resistent to yet ever-concupiscent in the dialectic. And of course, there are also 'alchemical' overtones. I was actually attempting to point toward work that was 'dialogical' rather than a gathering of pseudo-factual historicity. I hope this answers sufficeintly your query, and my best to you.

Jessie,

Stephen

List stats once were 2,000 worldwide

Mon 4 Feb 2013

Are recent demographic stats available? When I edited John Gardner's fiction/poetry journal MSS. in the mid-to-late 80s, four or five years after he had crashed his motorcycle in Pennsylvania and died, subscriptions fell from 2,000 to 167, a fact I knew, since I automated the subscriber list and sent reminders and shipped issues and coordinated printing and screened submissions. Gardner's widow (not precisely a widow, since he had been divorced for a week) kept the number of subscribers at 2,000 in her listings.

Charles Olson website
Mon 4 Feb 2013

Looking for Oneself: Contributions to the Study of Charles Olson is a website anthology of Ralph Maud's scholarly journal Minutes of the Charles Olson Society. The website is back online at a new address, charlesolson.org. Charles Olson (1910-1970) was a prolific poet and scholar with a revolutionary agenda whose outline can be discerned in his seminal manifesto "Projective Verse"

(1950). Projective poetics found its fullest expression in Olson's The Maximus Poems. Ralph Maud, emeritus professor of English at Simon Fraser University, is a dedicated Olson scholar with eight books of and about Olson and 66 issues of the journal under his belt. Charlesolson.org is a stimulating selection of memoirs, essays, transcriptions, reviews and guides to scholarship, with supporting material and an interactive news section designed for the website. Olson is not for everyone. To a few he is a primary thinker for our time. "I would be an historian as Herodotus was, looking/for oneself for the evidence of/what is said." ("Letter 23," The Maximus Poems by Charles Olson, copyright 1983, the Regents of the University of California.)

The Metaphor of the Gun in American Poetry
Mon 4 Feb 2013

I'm very interested in the metaphor of the gun as reflected in American poetry. I'm quite aware of My Life had Stood--A Loaded Gun by Emily Dickinson, and the Currier and Ives shooting contest in Song of Myself, but more titles, and more contemporary manifestations in poetry, and especially linguistically innovative poetry would be of interest.

The Making of Americans and The Making of Earthlings--Gurdjieff's Parody of Stein
Tue 5 Feb 2013

As one who has read two nearly impossible books to read in their entirety: Stein's Making of Americans and Gurdjieff's Beezelbub's Tales To His Grandson, and who is now engaged in a little Stein project on Facebook at the moment, not so much to produce product, but to experience process, I would like to point out distinct similarities that exist in the repetitive stylings and written orality exhibited in structure and content (as per Ong and others), in the "intentional difficulties and layerings of complexities" including the repetitive, hypnotic use of gerunds (in the original language and in the translations of Gurdjieff's work) in the so-called esoteric text of a Master of the occult and the widely applauded and highly regarded masterpiece of Gertrude Stein. Similar catch phrases--"more and more," "slowly developing," etc., can be found in both texts, and may very well be a product of a battle of egos between Gurdjieff, a self-styled (charlatan) genius, and Stein, a self-styled (genuine) genius--both of whom were connected via "The Rope"--a group of wealthy writers who were Stein's friends, and also followers of Gurdjieff--a gentleman not particularly liked by Stein. The Making of Americans was surely known to Gurdjieff via The Rope, well before it was published in the Contact edition of 1926, and was probably the inspiration behind the writing of Beezlebub's Tales--said to have taken place during Gurdjieff's recovery from a car accident in 1925 and given oral readings in the years following by his students. No doubt oral readings of The Making of Americans were also taking place among Stein's own friends and followers, so we can almost see the shadows of a competition that may have escaped the biographers of Stein and Gurdjieff up to the present moment, with Stein merely telling of the making of Americans, while Gurdjieff laid bare the arcane mechanisms of earthlings told from the repetitive, and sometimes nostalgic (!) point of view of Aliens speeding on a space ship. When can almost hear Gurdjieff's "Ha, take that Gertrude Stein," or the esoteric equivalent of it, whatever that may be, when we lay both books on the desk before us and position them side by side. 2013. 8x10, 221 pages

ISBN-10: 1-936687-07-0 | ISBN-13: 978-11936687-07-7

This is the long-awaited collection of interviews & photos spanning 25 years in the life of Bern Porter wherein he reveals the secrets of forming the Institute for Advanced Thinking, growing up in Maine, observing the nature of plasma and the universe and how to design the perfect shoe and bake the perfect onion, as well as sharing anecdotes about famous personages from history that he may or may not have ever met and explaining why found poetry is the literature of the future.

"I am the inventor of Found Art. This was a tremendous development for me. I was born without anything and therefore had no money for an artist's tools such as easels, paints, brushes, etc. So, at the age of four, I invented Found Art. I would go to the Post Office wastebasket and go through it, pulling out things that in some way would interest me. I'd find printed words, word gems, and combinations of words that were poems in themselves. With a found poem, I would go through the wastebasket, take scissors and glue and put it together. Cut and reassemble it. I am the inventor of the whole philosophy of Found Art."

'Smell My Metal Knees' as title was inspired by a photograph of a workman who seems to be working on one of the legs of a robot, which has its hand on the back of the workman's head, seeming to draw him closer, so as to seem both sexually suggestive, as well as having something to do with the power of 'novelty' to draw from nature its sinews and somehow 'idealize' them, thus, the robotic asking 'smell my metal knees' seemed an encouragement toward Apollonic 'form' as well as an expression of desire, and an insult, of sorts, as well, having, as it does, have overtones of 'kiss my ass.'

One pertinent question related to 'smell my metal knees' would have to do with ways in which to slow the continuous extractive powers that have been so heavily capitalized at this point, as to nearly seem 'the whole picture.'

The intent of the magazine, as it were, would thus having something to do with the continuously comedic, taken, of course, in an outre yet deadly serious way. Since there has been so little response thus far, my sense - suspected always but now somewhat more confirmed - is that there is little out there that is either continuously comedic, outre or deadly serious. Of course, I am entirely willing to be shown the errors of my ways, and the distortion of my beliefs. I had thought that so being 'done to' would make an interesting read. I would like only to mix with, and mix it up with, the Dead, who, in my understanding, basically can be reached only by email, or such associated lists as this one, thus, my initial address.

Looms reviewed in Bookslut

Wed 6 Feb 2013

Thanks to Cort Bledsoe for his beautifully-written review of Looms for Bookslut:

http://www.bookslut.com/poetry/2013_02_019866.php

Cheers!
Camille

Excerpts from reviews:

Looms is a wonderful continuation of Martin’s previous collection, Sonnets, in which she explored similar themes as well as playing with the sonnet form. Martin has proven herself to be a solid poet with an ear for language and an inquisitive mind, delving into the big questions we all face. In this collection, Martin has woven a rich tapestry of poems that are well worth perusing. —Cort Bledsoe for Bookslut

There is such an expansiveness to Martin’s Looms. The poems exist in that magical place where words, images and ideas collide, creating connections that previously had never been. —rob mclennan [Looms] has a very painterly, noir feel, alienated and penumbral, taut yet expansive. Impressive and addictive.

—Steve Spence for Stride Magazine

Out from Otoliths—Martin Edmond's "Eternities"

Martin Edmond's Eternities is at once memoir, belle lettrist in a kind of Modernist French tradition, lyric prose poetry, literary criticism. He is a chronicler of lost and discarded sacred things, people, places—Tempe Velodrome, the Manzil Room, the Wet Taxis playing at the Britannia Hotel. The writing frequently builds a pathos that often leads to grieving, grieving for lost youth and ruined possibilities. The paradox is that the romantic desire for the ideal can be realized in dreaming. Edmond is so authentic you can believe every anecdote he tells, partly because he puts himself and the reader at the scene of real crimes and with novelist’s skills re-enacts their immediate horror. Meticulous research underpins the mythic dreaming and the constant resurgence (via mechanisms of memory, portents-reading, and hallucination) of the uncanny, seeping, if you like, out to the detritus of past time. The intertextual transcends the dull mechanics of postmodern technique, emerging epically as the Koran, the Tora, Aztec lore and old Testament parable populated with hithertouncelebrated gypsies, thieves, dream-chasing hippies, and murderers. The book rolls with humanity, a secularized laughter and magic. Not theological at all, but as powerful as re-incarnation and pagan idol worship; such profound depth to even the most innocuous recollections. Perhaps it is Edmond’s expat origins, a New Zealander who has made Sydney crueler, kinder, more exotic and more magical than it ever could be on its own: . . . in those moments some ineffable translation happens, some occult adjustment of soul, some realignment of possibilities, after which he is profoundly changed. And all else too. It is as the book says—the redeemed world will be the same but not as this is. It's theology without god. It's nothing. Everything. —Adam Aitken

Martin Edmond's bohemian travels documented within these prose pieces are eternities made manifest in run-down flats, movie sets and, along with other jobs, toiling on the night shift at the post office among fellow poets, painters, musicians and other variously assembled creatures of the night. Here is a writer with abundant gifts. With a novelist's eye for detail and a poet's perfect pitch Martin Edmond lives the life of the writer who takes ecstatic possession of every living moment. Within these pages the writer asks, 'can music banish a curse?' You bet it can. —Richard Lopez

Poet as Radio: Kathleen Fraser this Sunday, February 10

Wed 6 Feb 2013

This Sunday, February 10, 11:30-am-12:30pm PT, join us for part one of our long-awaited interview series with Kathleen Fraser! The show will also be available at poetasradio.blogspot.com next week.

Kathleen Fraser's newest collection, movable TYYPE (Nightboat), foregrounds texts from four recently produced Artist Books that follow an early interest in the visual / material properties of typography & scale. These collaged texts are placed intentionally, side by side, with recent condensed lyrics and prose pieces written during parallel years. Her collected essays, Translating the Unspeakable: Poetry and the Innovative Necessity (Wesleyan), is in its second printing.

Fraser co-founded and was Editor of the journal HOW(ever) [1983-1992], and followed, eight years later, with its visually expanded on-line version, HOW2 (soon to resume production under a new generation of American editors). As director of The Poetry Center at SF State University, 1972-75, Fraser founded The American Poetry Archvies and began a twenty-year teaching career as Professor of Creative Writing in the graduate program at SFSU. Fraser has won a Guggenheim in Poetry and two NEA fellowships. Her publications include 16 volumes of poetry, a book of children's poems based on Peter Breughel's paintings of children playing games and seven collaborative Artist Books, collected by the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript library at Yale. Her work has been translated widely into Italian and French.

Tune in on Sunday, 2/10, 11:30am-12:30pm at savekusf.org / San Francisco Community Radio.

Re: Jeffers and the Beats

Thu 7 Feb 2013

It's interesting that while Henry Miller did connect with the Beats--or they with him, I can't recall reading of any of the Beats or even the tangentially Beat writers going to visit him. Maybe William Everson did, since he was such a fan of Jeffers-like narratives, and a producer of the same. Once again, Rexroth--if you want to count him as a Beat probably did encounter him, as he encountered Ina Coolbrith Clark Ashton Smith and the other first gen San. Fran. writers this side of Jack London and George Sterling, but by god I don't recall any written Rexroth memories of an actual Jeffers visit. Jeffers was still alive and kicking--though he wasn't writing much by the time the Beats really got going, and I wonder how much he would have had in common with what they were up to anyway. He strikes me as someone who didn't get into fast cars, drinking all night, and all of that stuff. Jeffers didn't have much to do with Williams either come to think about it, and Williams was key to the Beats. Interesting question. Now what the critics have said about influences, maybe Snyder and Welch with their version of ecopoetics, etc. Maybe. Jess

Sounds great until you get to this part:

& then you realize that what it is is crass exploitation, sweat-shop labor without even a pittance of payment, a ripoff for a new century.

Can you help? Just $10 will make a difference.

You can donate at the link below:

'Smell My Metal Knees' as title was inspired by a photograph of a workman who seems to be working on one of the legs of a robot, which has its hand on the back of the workman's head, seeming to draw him closer, so as to seem both sexually suggestive, as well as having something to do with the power of 'novelty' to draw from nature its sinews and somehow 'idealize' them, thus, the robotic asking 'smell my metal knees' seemed an encouragement toward Apollonic 'form' as well as an expression of desire, and an insult, of sorts, as well, having, as it does, have overtones of 'kiss my ass.'

One pertinent question related to 'smell my metal knees' would have to do with ways in which to slow the continuous extractive powers that have been so heavily capitalized at this point, as to nearly seem 'the whole picture.'

The intent of the magazine, as it were, would thus having something to do with the continuously comedic, taken, of course, in an outre yet deadly serious way. Since there has been so little response thus far, my sense - suspected always but now somewhat more confirmed - is that there is little out there that is either continuously comedic, outre or deadly serious. Of course, I am entirely willing to be shown the errors of my ways, and the distortion of my beliefs. I had thought that so being 'done to' would make an interesting read. I would like only to mix with, and mix it up with, the Dead, who, in my understanding, basically can be reached only by email, or such associated lists as this one, thus, my initial address.

It doesn't sound warm or fuzzy, or "efficient" as one-syllable names like "Fence" "Chain" "Grid" or other well-known and highly respected venues sound. Or were you inspired by science fiction, or is the title based in a hidden autobiographical detail, as, for instance, I could theoretically invent a magazine named "Rub My Metal Shoulder," and be entirely accurate, since my shoulder does indeed set off security alarms at airports. Exhibition: The Victor E. Reichert Robert Frost Collection (Buffalo, NY)

Thu 7 Feb 2013

The Poetry Collection of the University Libraries, University at Buffalo, presents:

The Victor E. Reichert Robert Frost Collection

An exhibition featuring selections from the Reichert Frost Collection

January 31 through March 29, 2013

Monday through Friday 9:00 am to 5:00 pm

The Kaveeshwar Gallery

501 Capen Hall

University at Buffalo

Buffalo, NY 14260

Victor E. Reichert (1897-1990) was rabbi of the Rockdale Avenue Temple in Cincinnati, Ohio, from 1938 to 1962 and shared a long friendship with the American poet Robert Frost (1874-1963). In 1946 Reichert invited Frost to present a sermon, and in 1960 he was instrumental in awarding Frost an honorary Doctorate at Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion. Victor Reichert was an avid Frost collector, and his collection passed to his son Dr. Jonathan Reichert, Professor Emeritus from the UB Department of Physics, who donated it to the Poetry Collection. The Reichert Frost Collection features many signed and inscribed publications by Frost, a Frost manuscript, letters, photographs, audio recordings, and ephemera, as well as many Frost-related items from other critics.

The donation of this collection was recently featured on NPR's Morning Edition on the 50th anniversary of Frost's death:

Dorn's "Gunslinger" series comes to mind of course. But old school, you can't beat this image from Longfellow....

TheArsenal at Springfield

This isthe Arsenal. From floor to ceiling

Like a huge organ, rise the burnishedarms;

Butfrom their silent pipes no anthem pealing

Startles the villages with strange alarms.

Ah!what a sound will rise, how wild and dreary,

When the death-angel touches those swiftkeys!

Whatloud lament and dismal Miserere

Will mingle with their awful symphonies!

I'm very interested in the metaphor of the gun as reflected in American poetry. I'm quite aware of My Life had Stood--A Loaded Gun by Emily Dickinson, and the Currier and Ives shooting contest in Song of Myself, but more titles, and more contemporary manifestations in poetry, and especially linguistically innovative poetry would be of interest.

Website & news

http://www.stephenavincent.com/ I now have a new (first) website! Stephen Vincent: Artist, Poet and Maker of Books It includes a good visual survey of my Haptic artwork, including accordion fold books and drawings. Of specific interest here may be a selection of 10 works I made while listening to poets reading from their work, primarily in the Bay Area (tho it is a national cast - Frank Sherlock, CA Conrad, Fanny Howe, Beverly Dahlen among others). I have made over 50 of these over the last several years. Yes, I admit it, readings have been an addiction! Also is a bibliography of my poetry books, including hot links to ebooks at faux and Shearsman. And a link to my dormant blog archive, which I am threatening to wake up with new entries. (Back to the blogs, rumor is that Facebook is about to bomb from user fatigue). If you are - for many are far flung chance - in the Bay Area this weekend, I will have a table (#48) at Codex, the international book fair for artist and hand crafted books. It will be in Richmond on the Marina. They have a web site: http://www.codexfoundation.org/2013/2013.html

Which - the international part - does remind me that I will be a presenter this June in Glasgow at the Ekphrasis Conference I will appreciate your interest and feedback. To build a good website, I discovered, is no small thing.

hi Sarah,

don't know if you saw my post but in the latest Otoliths I have a longish review piece (http://the-otolith.blogspot.com.au/2012/12/patrick-james-dunagan.html) that covers Jeffers relationship to "the beats" in so far that it mentions Whalen, Welch, Snyder, Kyger, and Spicer--- also Rexroth---- who is the sorta lynchpin/hangup (w/ a bit of grouchiness that brings them to Jeffers----- also William Everson is a central Jeffers disciple ifya haven't read his seminal study Archetype West I'd heavily encourage you to do that along with his interviews and 2 critical volumes on Jeffers .... I do cite a number of critical pieces in the bit, tho it doesn't have a works cited, I tried to include the titles of the essays when doing so and of course I name the author, so googling will pull up the complete citation--- I'm happy to help tho if needed (backchannel Jeffers' wife raced cars in Southern California, but this is before 1913. They were pretty well known in Carrmel for in-home musical evenings earlier in their time there.

There also seems to have been a Krishnamurti/Theosophy connection.

Re: Smell My Metal, Etc.--Or Process Makes Perfect

Sun 10 Feb 2013

Email submission is okay. In fact, ANY means is okay. One 'truth' is that the immediacy of 'hearing' the words 'smell my metal knees' upon viewing the photograph that inspired them, might be enough. Not that the journal may never exist; it probably may. Whether it will, or, in retrospect from some future, does, remains an open question, depending upon what comes by mail, email, direct hand-to-hand transference, radio transmission, etc. The title - 'Smell My Metal Knees' - despite what I just mentioned about possibly being 'enough,' will likely never be enough in Jaqueline Susan's sense, that is, 'once is never enough.' 'Never' was anyway 'once' at some point long ago, when stamps were more affordable. We can all reach disagreement in some real sense with one agreeable handshake. That is, there WILL be a magazine, perhaps something more like a stamp collector's album than a literary journal, in which each stamp is stamped, or, that is, cancelled with, a handwritten poem. Now, there's an idea whose time has come, or come and gone, now that there's no more Saturday home delivery. Material sent could very well be best considered somewhere considerably off the trail between 'wonk' and 'flarf,' if there is one. If not, there is always the possibility of blazing one, in answer to how dumb (or smart) one can get while dressing a better friend in metal . . . or UNdressing same, obeying always the metallic voices of bones dressed as birds who keep me awake all night, as they flatten and/or click with unalterable hipness, their supposedly 'metal' wings.

'Smell My Metal Knees' as title was inspired by a photograph of a workman who seems to be working on one of the legs of a robot, which has its hand on the back of the workman's head, seeming to draw him closer, so as to seem both sexually suggestive, as well as having something to do with the power of 'novelty' to draw from nature its sinews and somehow 'idealize' them, thus, the robotic asking 'smell my metal knees' seemed an encouragement toward Apollonic 'form' as well as an expression of desire, and an insult, of sorts, as well, having, as it does, have overtones of 'kiss my ass.'

One pertinent question related to 'smell my metal knees' would have to do with ways in which to slow the continuous extractive powers that have been so heavily capitalized at this point, as to nearly seem 'the whole picture.'

The intent of the magazine, as it were, would thus having something to do with the continuously comedic, taken, of course, in an outre yet deadly serious way. Since there has been so little response thus far, my sense - suspected always but now somewhat more confirmed - is that there is little out there that is either continuously comedic, outre or deadly serious. Of course, I am entirely willing to be shown the errors of my ways, and the distortion of my beliefs. I had thought that so being 'done to' would make an interesting read. I would like only to mix with, and mix it up with, the Dead, who, in my understanding, basically can be reached only by email, or such associated lists as this one, thus, my initial address.

My dad edited tons of Bill's stuff. The other one I have here is Naked Heart (that's essays by UNM Press) and the Veritable Years (which largely poetry). There is tons of other stuff but don't have in my mind...

I went to Bill's house as a teenager (it was called Kingfisher Flat) it was wonderful in the Santa Cruz mountains. Bill had pretty severe Parkinsons by then, but I was lucky to meet him (as an "adult).

Steve Benson is thinking about how to read. He recently finished a set of memoirs called The Grand Piano, co-authored with ten friends. At his last New York reading, in March 2012, he did a lot of shouting and talking and walked around in semi-darkness while ice melted on the loft’s ceiling.

Teresa Carmody is the author of the story collection Requiem (Les Figues Press, 2005) and the chapbooks I Can Feel (Insert Press, 2011) and Your Spiritual Suit of Armor by Katherine Anne (Woodland Editions, 2009). Belladonna* acknowledges the valuable contributions of our interns, who often volunteer their time to support our publications and events in exchange for college credit or simply our gratitude. While weâ€™re unable to compensate interns and volunteers with wages, we find unique ways to express our thanks - including this event at Dixon Place.

Performers:
Jâ€™Sun Howard & Jennifer Karmin

Guest artists:

(Meida McNeal, Felicia Holman, Abra Johnson, Boogie McClarin & Aisha Jean-Baptiste)

Post-performance talk moderated by:
Ira S. Murfin

Sponsored by:
Insight Arts, Nights of Insight cultural series
IN>TIME Performance Festival
http://insightartsliberation.org http://www.in-time-performance.org

Utopic Monster Theory is a polydesirous bricolage of text-movement exploring 21st century cultural work. The performance defines and attempts to understand why artistsâ€™ creative labor is undervalued. Source material and inspiration are derived from: Antony & the Johnsons, Joseph Beuys, the Black Panther Party, Bleach anime series, Family Guy TV show, the Internal Revenue Service, Andrew Joron, John Lennon, Bernadette Mayer, Herman Melville, Thomas More, Eric Satie, Mary Shelly, and Hannah Weiner.

Honey Pot Performance will present an excerpt of their newest project, The Price Point of Living, which illuminates stories of everyday citizens struggling to find a sense of direction, purpose, and value in the wake of an uncertain labor market. At its core, the work explores the abstract question â€œWhat is the value of living?â€

J'SUN HOWARD is a dance artist/writer whose choreography has appeared in multiple venues including Links Hall, Northwestern University, Sonotheque, Lincoln Square Theatre, Insight Arts/Center for New Possibilities, Epiphany Church, and was commissioned for Chicago Academy School for the Arts students. He was selected to be a LinkUp Residency Artist at Links Hall and in 2010 was granted the Julius Margolin Scholarship â€œYouth In Labor Awardâ€ to protest at the School of Americas. Jâ€™Sun has performed for many Chicago choreographers, most extensively with Darrell Jones. His literary work can be seen in journals Chicago IRL, The Garland Court Review, and Storyglossia.

JENNIFER KARMIN's multidisciplinary projects have been presented at festivals, artist-run spaces, and on city streets across the U.S., Japan, Kenya, and Europe. These collaborative pieces include 4000 Words 4000 Dead, Revolutionary Optimism, Walking Poem, and Unnatural Acts. She is the author of the text-sound epic Aaaaaaaaaaalice and her poetry was recently published in the anthology Iâ€™ll Drown My Book: Conceptual Writing by Women. Jennifer teaches in the Creative Writing program at Columbia College and at Truman College, where she works with immigrants as a community educator. Since 2005, she has curated the Red Rover Series.

HONEY POT PERFORMANCE is a woman-focused creative collaborative community comprising five core members: Meida McNeal, Felicia Holman, Abra Johnson, Boogie McClarin, and Aisha Jean-Baptiste. They draw upon a central notion found in performance studies, black feminist discourse and sociology: non Western, everyday popular and/or folk forms of cultural performance are valuable sites of knowledge production and cultural capital for subjectivities that often exist outside of mainstream communities.

IRA S. MURFIN is a writer, theatre artist, and doctoral candidate in Northwestern Universityâ€™s Interdisciplinary PhD in Theatre & Drama. Performances have been presented at MCA Chicago, Links Hall, Chicago Cultural Center, and Rhinoceros Theatre Festival. Writing has appeared in elimae, Theatre Topics, Theatre Journal, Review of Contemporary Fiction, and Requited, where he is now Performance Editor. Ira is a Pre-Amble Scholar at Chicago Shakespeare Theater, and a founding member of the Laboratory for the Development of Substitute Materials. He is a former resident of the urban design laboratory Arcosanti, where he was editor for the writings of its founder, Paolo Soleri.

A Dream for Baby Boomers Of A Certain Age

Mon 11 Feb 2013

I had a dream that J. Robert Oppenheimer appeared on What's My Line, and when everyone had their masks on, and the great genius had signed in and was grimly but gamely seated, the lights went out, and only the host, the producers, the renowned but remorseful intellect who would never win a Nobel prize for anything, and the live T.V. audience, the mothers, fathers, boys and girls watching at home, and all the ships watching at sea, as well as the makers of Serutan (which is Nature's backwards), knew the difference.

The Latest Gentrification
Tue 12 Feb 2013

Speaking of smelling metal knees, I read a nice piece today by one Rebecca Solnit in the London Review of Books which painted a rather unflattering portrait of my old town; I thought I might ask Bay Area poets to respond.

http://www.lrb.co.uk/v35/n03/rebecca-solnit/diary

Here's a relevant paragraph in case the link asks you to subscribe or something:

"A Latino who has been an important cultural figure for forty years is being evicted while his wife undergoes chemotherapy. One of San Francisco's most distinguished poets, a recent candidate for the city's poet laureate, is being evicted after 35 years in his apartment and his whole adult life here: whether he will claw his way onto a much humbler perch or be exiled to another town remains to be seen, as does the fate of a city that poets can't afford. His building, full of renters for most or all of the past century, including a notable documentary filmmaker, will be turned into flats for sale. A few miles away, friends of friends were evicted after twenty years in their home by two Google attorneys, a gay couple who moved into two separate units in order to maximi[z]e their owner-move-in rights. Rental prices rose between 10 and 135 per cent over the past year in San Francisco's various neighbo[o]rhoods, though thanks to rent control a lot of San Franciscans were paying far below market rates even before the boom -- which makes adjusting to the new market rate even harder. Two much-loved used bookstores are also being evicted by landlords looking for more money; 16 restaurants opened last year in their vicinity. On the waterfront, Larry Ellison, the owner of Oracle and the world's sixth richest man, has been allowed to take control of three city piers for 75 years in return for fixing them up in time for the 2013 America's Cup; he will evict dozens of small waterfront businesses as part of the deal."

I mean, on the day when pitchers and catchers report, I'm reconsidering being a Giants fan. Cleveland Indians anyone?

Unlike other Islamic societies, Berbers still practice marriages by the heart, where lovers choose each other, as opposed to being chosen for each other by families. A local legend tells of two lakes being formed, Isli (his) and Tislit (hers), from the tears of two lovers denied by their warring tribes the right to marry. The lovers both drowned in the lakes formed by their tears, and in regret the peoples decreed never again would families stand in the way of a marriage of the heart. An unusual tale for Valentines!!!

I was away from home when this thread started --

For what it's worth, a check of the name index to THE SELECTED LETTERS OF ROBINSON JEFFERS 1897-1962 turns up not one reference to any Beat writer, or any of the New American Poets at all for that matter -- though this is, again, the SELECTED letters --

I'm very interested in the metaphor of the gun as reflected in American poetry. I'm quite aware of My Life had Stood--A Loaded Gun by Emily Dickinson, and the Currier and Ives shooting contest in Song of Myself, but more titles, and more contemporary manifestations in poetry, and especially linguistically innovative poetry would be of interest.

poetry writing workshop in jackson heights, queens

Wed 13 Feb 2013

Hi All,

could you please forward this to interested parties? Thanks, Lisa Jarnot

In the autumn I ran a workshop with the theme "poet's notebooks" and it went really well. I'm running part 2 of the class on mondays 6-8:30 from Feb 25 to April 29 at my apartment in Jackson Heights, Queens. I have 4 students enrolled and am looking for 3 more.

Cost is $300 for new students, $275 for returning students. I want to run the class as a theater performance of sorts.
There will be five topics that we'll focus on in notebook writing:

Architecture
Food
State dept (current international affairs)
Language
Meteorology

And we will spend two weeks on each topic. The goal is to write obsessively in the notebook about the topic in an "as if" mode. (during these two weeks I AM an architect or I AM fluent in Japanese, or I AM a state dept official.) I'm thinking of the workshop meetings as a kind of salon, where we come in, have a glass of wine, (or tea), and talk about our discoveries, read from our notebooks, and spin off into in-class writing exercises inspired by the information we've gathered.

Re: Jeffers and the Beats
Wed 13 Feb 2013

You've gotten a lot of good ideas recently, but I've several more suggestions for you.

Tim Hunt edited the five-volume Collected Poetry (Jeffers) and is certainly one of the pre-eminant Jeffers scholars living. He also recently published--or is about to publish--a book on Kerouac and if anyone knows the ready connections between Jeffers and the beats, it is likely him. You can connect with Tim via his web-site: http://www.tahunt.com/ I know Tim very well and I am sure he would be delighted to talk with you.

Bob Brophy is another pre-eminent Jeffers scholar and I know he knows a great deal about Jeffers and the beats. I am hesitant to put people's e-mail addresses out on list-servs, but if you wish to back-channel me, I can connect you with Bob. He is another good friend and I'm sure he would be glad to share what he knows.

The Robinson Jeffers Association web-site has all the back issues of the RJ Newsletter on-line, as well as many volumes of Jeffers Studies: http://www.robinsonjeffersassociation.org/

The RJA also maintains a list-serv and I am certain if you posed your query to that list-serv you would get a ton of feedback, ideas, and directions:
<[redacted]>

As I'm sure you know, the beats were far more interested in Jeffers than he was of them. Of course they hardly overlapped, RJ dying in 1962. But the Beat Museum in San Francisco, for example, displays a bust of Jeffers, good indication that he was meaningful to them. I am certain there is some scholarship on RJ and the beats out there; the connection is not tenuous.

I am a long-time Jeffers scholar and member of RJA; feel free to drop my name when/if you contact any of the people I've mentioned here.
--ShaunAnne Tangney

One quick note on the post below: Jeffers was absolutely into "fast cars and drinking all night" as the first two volumes of the Collected Letters amply demonstrates. Life and times at Tor House were absolutely besotted and at times completely mad. There are a series of letters in volume 2 between Una and a friend where she admits that Jeffers almost murdered her in a drunken rage driving home from a party--!

NEH Summer Institute
Wed 13 Feb 2013

Greetings!

We are writing to invite you to learn more about an exciting three week NEH summer institute for twenty-five college and university teachers (including at least three advanced graduate students), filled with innovative scholarship, rich dialog, and fertile opportunities for advancing research.

When: July 14 - August 3, 2013

Where: University of Kansas, Lawrence, KS

*What: “Don’t Deny My Voice: Reading and Teaching African American Poetry” *

Application Deadline: March 4, 2013

What is poetry today? What has changed? How do we teach poetry and get students to transform their passion for performance into meaningful analysis? The Institute seeks to strengthen the connections between foundational and contemporary forms of poetry, between the practice of poetry and today’s global society, and between the words and sounds and the spirit of black poetry that refuses to be denied.

If you are a current college or university teacher of American literature or near the end of your graduate studies in this field, and have an interest, please read the attached “Dear Colleague” letter with much more detail on this exciting project and please visit our website www.dontdeny.ku.edu for further application instructions. The stipend for this three-week Institute will be $2,700 for each NEH Summer Scholar, to cover travel, housing and food.

Or, if you know of a college teacher who might be interested in applying to this institute, please forward this invitation to them!

it is pretty bad. and what Solnit reports is accurate so far as I have some knowledge of who she speaks. (She gave a rather grandstanding bit in regards to all this @ the 3 hour multi-speaker Jay Defeo event the other Sat @ SFMoma.) There's also Kevin Killian's bit: http://www.sfbg.com/2012/10/16/sf-stories-kevin-killian Kind of beating her to the punch at least for local readers. However, as I ribbed Kevin a little, his claim: "we counted and realized that only three poets under the age of forty remain in San Francisco." is rather silly.

I personally know at least 6 closely--- no matter how you wanna break down what makes a "poet" a poet. & i checked with Kevin and he was only counting one of mine, I think. and he didn't really know where the others lived. But everybody else lives in the East Bay it's true, , have lost at least 3 or more "young poets" in the last couple years and nearly just lost another, but luckily he's now just living closer to me, and that's where all the hip house readings are for the most part. I stay in the city myself. As for the Giants--- the new park is really very nice. I'd much prefer they start to lose tho and tickets become cheaper and more available and eventually the whole stadium just becomes a public park of some kind. Open all the time. > "A Latino who has been an important cultural figure for forty years is being evicted while his wife undergoes chemotherapy. One of San Francisco's most distinguished poets, a recent candidate for the city's poet laureate, is being evicted after 35 years in his apartment and his whole adult life here: whether he will claw his way onto a much humbler perch or be exiled to another town remains to be seen, as does the fate of a city that poets can't afford. His building, full of renters for most or all of the past century, including a notable documentary filmmaker, will be turned into flats for sale. A few miles away, friends of friends were evicted after twenty years in their home by two Google attorneys, a gay couple who moved into two separate units in order to maximi[z]e their owner-move-in rights. Rental prices rose between 10 and 135 per cent over the past year in San Francisco's various neighbo[o]rhoods, though thanks to rent control a lot of San Franciscans were paying far below market rates even before the boom -- which makes adjusting to the new market rate even harder. Two much-loved used bookstores are also being evicted by landlords looking for more money; 16 restaurants opened last year in their vicinity. On the waterfront, Larry Ellison, the owner of Oracle and the world's sixth richest man, has been allowed to take control of three city piers for 75 years in return for fixing them up in time for the 2013 America's Cup; he will evict dozens of small waterfront businesses as part of the deal."

Re: Jeffers and the Beats
Wed 13 Feb 2013

Thanks for checking out the article, Catherine.

Una Jeffers, his wife, did lead a very interesting life--- I also wrote up the latest vol of letters awhile ago:
http://criticalflame.org/nonfiction/0912_dunagan.htm
it's somewhat worthwhile & a lovely looking book--- if VERY long--- the Krishnamurti/Theosophy connection pops up there in so far that Una reports on some of the visits they had --- she wrote most of the Jeffers correspondence.
There's also an awesome pic in the book of Una with Langston Hughes outside by some rocks accompanied by a couple bottles of something or other

All her work is marked with an urban, Jewish, feminist aesthetic that continually challenges linguistic habits and normative modes of meaning production. Engaged with the art of combination and turbulence of thought, it is a testament to the creative and regenerative power of language and its infinite possibilities for pushing meaning to the limits of its semantic boundaries.

Her writing has been described as "electricity in language" (Nicole Brossard), "plural, cascading, exuberant in its cross-fertilization of punning and knowing, theatre and theory" (Charles Bernstein), "a tour de force of linguistic doublespeak" (Globe and Mail), and "opens up the possibilities of reading" (Vancouver Courier). She is co-founding director (Minister of Semiotic Turbulence) with Jake Marmer for KlezKanada Poetry Festival and Retreat: Three Millennia of Poetic Subversion and professor of communication and media studies at Fordham University.

Risk-Shapers: Sharon Dolin and Peter Covino: Reading & Conversation Book Culture, Thursday, Feb. 28th, 7pm, Free and Open to the Public

Join us for two award-winning poets who will read from their new books and discuss the wellsprings of their work. What drives them to write? Both risk-takers in form and subject matter, how do they think about the ethical issues associated with writing about sexuality, abuse, mental illness? Both poets will also talk about the various poetries, both at home and abroad, that inform their work. Boundary-crossers in aesthetics, language, and culture, these Sharon and Peter will also answer questions from the audience.

If you're a teacher of poetry, this is a great event to bring your students to.

Sharon Dolin is the author of five books of poems, most recently: Whirlwind (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2012) and Burn and Dodge (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2008), winner of the AWP Donald Hall Prize in Poetry. Sharon Dolin also teaches at the Unterberg Poetry Center of the 92nd Street Y and directs the Center for Book Arts Annual Letterpress Poetry Chapbook Competition. www.sharondolin.com

Peter Covino is the author of The Right Place to Jump (New Issues 2012) and Cut Off the Ears of Winter (New Issues 2005), as well as the chapbook Straight Boyfriend (2001), winner of the Frank O'Hara Prize. He also co-edited Essays on Italian American Literature and Culture (Bordighera Press, CUNY, 2012). He won the 2007 PEN American/Osterweil Award for emerging poets. LYN HEJINIAN judges Beecher's poetry contest
Fri 15 Feb 2013

Hi,

Beecher's magazine is now accepting entries for the annual contest, which closes on March 31. The poetry judge is Lyn Hejinian. Perhaps you or someone you know would like to enter.

Only $12 for the entry fee (which looks like a bargain, these days) for $200 + publication in #3 (and copies). Beecher's is still pretty young, so the odds of making the first cut are still pretty reasonable, methinks.

Chicago School of Poetics Scholarship Appeal
Sat 16 Feb 2013

I just got an email from poet Francis Levato saying that he and Larry Sawyer have been teaching from Argotist Ebooks' catalogue at The Chicago School of Poetics. This is great news, and shows great faith in the ebook format as a serious medium for the reception of poetry. This is what he says in his email:

"It's been a while since I last emailed, and I believe it was about teaching from Argotist ebooks at the Chicago School of Poetics. Both I and my co-director Larry Sawyer have taught from your catalogue, and, of course, really appreciate the work you put out. I'm writing now to ask if you might consider helping us get the word out about a scholarship campaign we are nearing the end of for the School. We're trying to raise funds to offer full scholarships to poetry students in financial need. Do you have an email list you regularly send to where you might mention the campaign? If this is something you wouldn't be comfortable doing I completely understand. More information about the campaign is below"

I have agreed to spread the word about the scholarship campaign and urge you all to do so as well. I will also be donating $10 for the campaign.

Here are the full details of the campaign:

Chicago School of Poetics Scholarships

With your generous support, the Chicago School of Poetics will be offering full scholarships for Master Classes (with poets like Eileen Myles and Charles Bernstein) and regular 8-week courses for the 2013 school year.

Just $10 can help students in need attend classes.

Please donate today at:
http://www.indiegogo.com/CSoPScholar
The campaign ends February 22nd.

"This is what a school truly should be—think of Black Mountain College—beyond all the boundaries & borders. "—Ron Silliman

The Chicago School of Poetics (CSoP) is an online and on-location school that offers compelling poetry classes without the MFA time commitment, pressure, or price tag.

With an emphasis on craft, instructors at the School focus on the merits of student writing on its own terms. It’s not the typical creative writing workshop! Courses offered at the School allow students to refine their work in a collaborative—not competitive—environment. We don’t teach creativity. Courses allow students to understand the writing process from the inside by observing firsthand how the instructors work in order to gain the critical distance necessary to write more resonant poetry. The School also offers genuine community. On-location courses offer valuable face-to-face contact and online courses offer valuable access to the vibrant community of Chicago poetry for anyone worldwide.

But all proved fruitless. Meanwhile, they could barely function at cross-purposes. Too much of a good thing, the one who considered herself ancestral concluded, inventing the name for a certain brutal, if necessary, procedure.

"This is what a school truly should be—think of Black Mountain College—beyond all the boundaries & borders. "—Ron Silliman

The Chicago School of Poetics (CSoP) is an online and on-location school that offers compelling poetry classes without the MFA time commitment, pressure, or price tag.

With an emphasis on craft, instructors at the School focus on the merits of student writing on its own terms. It’s not the typical creative writing workshop! Courses offered at the School allow students to refine their work in a collaborative—not competitive—environment. We don’t teach creativity. Courses allow students to understand the writing process from the inside by observing firsthand how the instructors work in order to gain the critical distance necessary to write more resonant poetry. The School also offers genuine community. On-location courses offer valuable face-to-face contact and online courses offer valuable access to the vibrant community of Chicago poetry for anyone worldwide.

the closest direct contact that I've been able to find regarding Jeffers and the Beats was Kenneth Rexroth's1957 review of Radcliffe Squire's The Loyalties of Robinson Jeffers, titled "In Defense of Jeffers," where he says lots of asinine things, and then in The Selected Letters of Robinson Jeffers, when writing to Radcliffe Squires who had forwarded him Rexroth's review, Jeffers showed little interest in Rexroth's "silly article" which "is not disturbing but merely obvious" [the quotes are from Jeffers' letter].

Once again, Rexroth--if you want to count him as a Beat probably did encounter him, as he encountered Ina Coolbrith Clark Ashton Smith and the other first gen San. Jeffers was still alive and kicking--though he wasn't writing much by the time the Beats really got going, and I wonder how much he would have had in common with what they were up to anyway. He strikes me as someone who didn't get into fast cars, drinking all night, and all of that stuff. Letter Machine Editions

Dear poetics readers,
In 2007, Joshua Marie Wilkinson and I started Letter Machine Editions as a nonprofit publisher of new books and chapbooks. We've released works by Sawako Nakayasu, Farid Matuk, Anselm Berrigan, Andrea Rexilius, Peter Gizzi, John Yau, Travis Nichols, Juliana Leslie, and Sara Veglahn. Fred Moten's new book is coming out later in the year.
Right now, we are wrapping up the proofs of our two most ambitious titles to date:
Eddie Berrigan's Can It!, an aesthetic memoir of sorts that features interviews, absurdist prose, travelogues,etc. It's a book that's balanced between several tragedies in order to figure out how to proceed as both an artist and, really, as a person.

and Aaron Kunin's Grace Period: notebooks 1998-2007. This book is going to slay you. I was lucky enough to publish a small excerpt as a chapbook years ago, and that was awarded the inaugural Essay Prize. You can read an excerpt here:
http://www.essayprize.org/winners_kunin_essay1.php
We've decided to do something a little different here in terms of funding; actually, to return to a century-old model of subscription for these titles. We are well aware that you get a lot of requests to donate funds to small presses like ours; we get them too. Really, it's a subscription to these books we're offering at a deep discount. Our hope is that we can raise enough money to cover the printing costs and get them to readers who'd be moved by them.
$35 gets you both of our new titles, shipping included.
Right now, we're just $2,000 away from our goal, but there's only about ten days left in our campaign, after which the Kunin book will retail for $25 and the Berrigan for $20.
Support us if you can by subscribing here.
Infinite thanks--Josh & Noah

Re: Jeffers and the Beats
Tue 19 Feb 2013

Not to beat a dead horse, but...there are now two volumes of the COMPLETE LETTERS of Robinson and Una Jeffers out from Stanford--a HUGE improvement over the old Selected. Volume three should be out within a year. James Karman has done a masterful job with the letters, and we now have a much clearer idea of what daily life was like for the Jeffers family.

Again, Jeffers was not a person who sought out the literary lime-light, but I do believe that the Beats were quite fond of him. As for the zero mentions of other poets in the Selected, that is likely an omission by Ridgeway as to her own notions of "selection." Jeffers is often mistaken as an Emily Dickinson type, but in fact he had a wide circle of friends and a constant stream of visitors to Tor House. The Tor House website says: "Many influential literary and cultural celebrities were guests of the Jeffers family. Among them were Sinclair Lewis, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Langston Hughes, Charles Lindbergh, George Gershwin and Charlie Chaplin. Later visitors have included William Everson, Robert Bly, Czeslow Milosz and Edward Abbey." Additionally, James Karman's biography of RJ provides an exhaustive list of visitors that is virtually a who's-who of mid-twentieth century writers, artists, and celebrities!

I am well aware that none of those listed above are Beats; as I said, they were more interested in him than he in they, especially given that he was quite at the end of his life when they arrived on the scene. But I just wanted to clarify that the Selected Letters is not a very good--i.e., informative--source, that the Collected Letters is authoritative, and that Jeffers did interact with a great many of the writers, artists, actors, and celebrities of his day.

Announcing the VERSeOttawa Hall of Honour: William Hawkins and Greg Frankson

VERSeOttawa works constantly towards supporting poetry and the poetry community in Ottawa, but we are not the first to do this. There have been many important people who have helped create, shape and support this artform that we love and the community that has built up around it.

It is with this in mind that VERSeOttawa has decided to create the VERSeOttawa Hall of Honour. It is our way of recognizing the important contributions made to the Ottawa poetry community, whether through poetry itself or other methods of support (or, as is often the case, both). Each year a nomination committee will choose two worthy inductees whose work will be honoured that year, and into the future.

An induction ceremony will be conducted as part of VERSeFest. This year that will take place on March 17th.

The nomination committee this year has chosen two people to be the first inducted in to the VERSeFest Hall of Honour.

We are proud to recognize William Hawkins and Greg Ritallin Frankson

As a poet, William Hawkins was nationally-known and regarded as Ottawas best and certainly most dangerous poet from 1964 to 1974. He published a number of books, including the infamous Ottawa Poems, published by Nelson Balls weed/flower. Hawkins appeared in the anthology New Wave Canada, edited by Raymond Souster as the last publication by Contact Press.

As an organizer/host, Hawkins ran Ottawas infamous coffeehouse Le Hibou through the 1960s with his wife. He hosted performances by Gordon Lightfoot, Leonard Cohen, Joni Mitchell and dozens, if not hundreds of others.

He was an advocate, writer and large presence during a period of Ottawa poetry that had very few of any of those; he was also a writer actively reading, writing and publishing, and connecting to a community far wider than that of the immediate city.

You can read more about him at his website, here:
http://www.wmhawkins.com/content/poetry.html

Greg Frankson debuted as Ritallin in Ottawa in 2003. In 2004 he represented Ottawa at the Wordlympics (now known as the Canadian Festival of Spoken Word), and did so again in 2006. In addition to being a full-time professional artist, Greg recently was on the team that won the 2012 Canadian Slam Championships (though now representing Toronto).

Immediately following the Wordlympics in 2004, Greg co-founded Capital Slam, now one of the longest running monthly slam series in the country. He ran Capital Slam and the Capital Poetry Collective for 2 years where he created the template for a stable, supportive, inspiring slam series. He also founded the Bill Brown 1-2-3 series.

Before moving to Toronto, Greg co-founded the Ottawa Youth Poetry Slam. Creating this environment for young poets to come and share their work was a crucial step in the evolution of the spoken word poetry scene in Ottawa. The poets coming out of the slam have received great accolades, but even more important is the fact that it is a place where all youth can have a voice and share their art.

So while Gregs work was crucial to help create the current Ottawa spoken word scene, through the Youth Slam his work is just as crucial to the future of the scene as well.

Gregs website can be found here:

137. Greg Masters
new book from Bernadette Mayer & Greg Masters
Wed 20 Feb 2013

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

At Maureen's, a new book from Bernadette Mayer and Greg Masters

New York, Feb. 2013 – New York-based publisher Crony Books is pleased to announce the publication of a new book, At Maureen's, by Bernadette Mayer and Greg Masters.

At Maureen's is a double journal offering a Rashomon-like take on a month spent housesitting in Connecticut. Two poets from the bohemian enclaves of the East Village of Manhattan do what they can to acclimate to their new rural surroundings: a horse, raspberries, diapers, books, each other and family and friends.

It's back to the garden for two writers and their families and friends. Only in this patch, which are weeds and which are flowers is not so certain. Two perspectives of the proceedings are on offer with sustained moments of concentration that enhance the details. Wonder and love blossom too.

At the time this book was written, summer 1981, Bernadette Mayer was director of the Poetry Project, a literary center housed in St. Mark's Church in the East Village of Manhattan. She is the author of numerous books of poetry and prose, including A Bernadette Mayer Reader and The Helens of Troy, NY (New Directions). Greg Masters was editor of the Poetry Project Newsletter and co-editor of the poetry magazine Mag City.

The book is available for $16.99 from Crony Books: www.cronybooks.net.

An ebook version will soon be available for around $9.99 from most ebook publishers:

iTunes iBookstore
Barnes & Noble

Thu 21 Feb 2013

At 11:00 a.m. EST, in room 518 of LaQuinta Inn, Orlando, Florida, USA, I found the right word at the right time for the right place for a 25 year old poem that I've been attempting to finish. Now, I'm happy to announce, it's finished and it's one of my best. I'll celebrate with a long walk in the heat and maybe some chili mac at Steak 'n Shake.

And so it goes,

An open letter from the World-wide Poets addressed to United Nations Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon, President of the European Commission José Manuel Barroso, and President of the United States, Barack Obama.

Dear Sirs,

After more than a century of systematic crimes such as genocide, slavery, sexual abuse, war crimes, and discrimination, being a Hazara still appears to be a crime in Afghanistan and Pakistan. Just on Thursday 11, January 2013, over one-hundred Hazara were killed in a terrorist attack in the city of Quetta, Pakistan. In recent years, more than a thousand Hazaras have been killed in similar organized attacks in that same country.

Today, in their homeland, Afghanistan, they are still not safe. Every year, they face attacks by Afghan Kuchis who are backed by the Taliban and the Afghan government. Their roads are blocked by Taliban gunmen with cars stopped and passengers killed. In the center of Afghanistan, where a huge population of Hazaras are marginalized, they do not have access to basic legal rights. They still face systematic discrimination and Taliban attacks. The result is that millions of Hazaras have fled to numerous countries as refugees or asylum seekers, frequently in terrible living conditions.

Hazara indigenous people made up nearly 67 percent of the population of Afghanistan prior to the 19th century. However, they suffered genocide and enslavement twice in 19th century. They were violently forced from most parts of their land, which is located in the south of modern Afghanistan. More than 60 percent of them were killed and thousands of them were sold as salves.

The entire history of the 20th century in Afghanistan has been marked by killing and discrimination against Hazaras. In August 1998, the Taliban killed more than ten thousand Hazaras in the northern city of Mazar-i-Sharif . Similar massacres quickly spread to other parts of Afghanistan. Destroying Hazara history and making and promoting a false history about them have been further strategies, in addition to violent crime.

For example, in March 2011, the Taliban notoriously destroyed the ancient Buddha sculptures of Bamiyan which are primary symbols of Hazara history and culture, and one of the most popular masterpieces of the oral and intangible heritage of humanity. Such is the history of two centuries of crimes against the Hazara, and from which they suffer today.

Therefore, we poets from around the world declare our solidarity with the Hazara people and ask you world leaders to take following steps to properly insure the security and safety of the Hazara people and culture:

1: Declare a state of emergency regarding Hazara circumstances authorized by the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide.

2: Put pressure on both the Afghan and Pakistani governments to immediately cease acts of discrimination against the Hazaras and to stop supporting terrorist groups who commit violent acts against them.

3: Ask the Refugee Convention's state parties to protect Hazara asylum seekers and grant them asylum.

4: Establish an international truth Commission to investigate the crimes against the Hazaras.

5: Open a comprehensive case in international courts such as the ICC.

6: Over 150 thousand international troops are in Afghanistan. They must ensure sure the safety of the Hazaras before they leave Afghanistan.

7: Ask international media to investigate and report on activities against the Hazara, particularly in Afghanistan and Pakistan.

Thank you

Being & Event, & Poetry
Thu 21 Feb 2013

"Being And Event," by Alain Badiou, was published in 2007 by Continuum in London. It is, indeed, a monumental book. In my opinion, it restores the dignity and elegance of mathematics to continental philosophy.

Although "Being And Event" is a challenging read, the rewards of the book greatly outweigh the difficulties encountered. And as far as philosophy is concerned, this book presents a fresh approach to ontology, one which goes considerably beyond the limitations of the Heideggerian edifice.

Based largely on the achievements of set theory, "Being And Event" argues for an open ontology, one wherein truth can rupture seemingly static conceptual and social situations … thus bringing about changes of universal significance.

But nevertheless, what has drawn me most inescapably to "Being And Event" is that Badiou has included in the very interstices of the book chapters on poets, from Parmenides to Mallarmé and beyond, their poetries, and perceptive anyalyses of poetic works, and ALL combined in the very processes of mathematics and philosophy.

The poetry chapters are not mere fluff, as with most mathematicians, scientists, and philosophers, but are integrated within the very structure and the fundamental arguments of the book.

Badiou, like Herodotus, seems to remember a time when poetry had not yet divided itself out from mathematics.

Indeed, if there is a philosopher/mathematician for poets today, and a philosopher poet for the day, surely it would be Alain Badiou.

Re: Editor/Web Designer sought for W.W. Norton Anthology Relaunch 2013

I agree. There are plenty of nonprofit, arts foundations and presses and university groups that desperately need unpaid volunteers. It's very offensive. Maybe restaurants will follow suit? Wanted waiters and managers, unpaid gigs, but OH what great experience. Or insurance or banks? Great unpaid opportunity to garner valuable work experience. A ten year unpaid internship.

Re: Emily Dickinson, hot nude celebrity

Thu 21 Feb 2013

Dear List,

I think E.D. must have been hot. At least, the rumors about she and sister Vinnie ran to that effect--that though they did not marry, they were frolicsome in company--perhaps a tad on the wild side for their time and place. Though these words may sound somewhat flip, they're well documented in Sewell. And of course, the poetry attests, that though ED was one who could pray well (in the proper Kierkegaardean sense with the eye of intellect trained on the eye of faith, maugre the bridge of the nose) she could play well too. Amen to that.

Re: Thursday: Blessing the Boats: A Tribute to Lucille Clifton

Thu 21 Feb 2013

I remember the poetry readings at the Baltimore Theater Project back in the early 70's, and in particular one evening when Lucille Clifton arrived, a bit after everyone else was seated on cushions on the bare floor. I remember the sense of grace and dignity she carried about with her, and a kind of silence that surrounded her poems when she read them--not the silence of steel as in a bell encompassing a clapper--shrill and cutting to the ear, but a warm silence--and--if you will--a welcoming silence.

I would also like to point out that as I scanned the list of "world-class poets," picked to celebrate the work of Lucille Clifton, I thought of the American sports teams that award themselves "world championships" without leaving American soil. Let's change that "thirteen world-class poets" to "thirteen American-class poets." Isn't that enough?

It does worry me greatly. Students in journalism and communication degrees at UTS (University of Technology, Sydney) are expected to undertake unpaid internships as a part of their degrees, if they have any hope of getting a job.

What worries me even more is that teaching staff actively support the idea of unpaid labour from under grad students, in the hope that they may gey a job... sounds like blackmail to me. And shame on the communication degree at UTS. (I feel sorrow and regret to be a graduate of this degree...)

Re:

To follow this up a little more:

The degree in Communication at the University of Technology, Sydney, has been considered one of the few leading art degrees, internationally.

Now that teaching staff at UTS have come out in active support of unpaid internships, which is another word for slave labour, it should follow that this degree should be treated with the utmost suspicion and graduates from this degree, should they apply for a position, be treated as low on the want to hire rank, unless you were after a position which supports slave labour. (This affects me since I now lose status and advantage that such an elite degree should offer. Basically, I lose money.)

I mean, who would seriously consider employing someone from an institution that advocates slavery? Why pay the bucks when you can get it for free.

Adeena Karasick http://www.adeenakarasick.com Adeena Karasick is an internationally acclaimed and award-winning poet, media-artist, and author of seven books of poetry and poetic theory, most recently, This Poem and Amuse Bouche: Tasty Treats for the Mouth (both from Talonbooks) as well as four videopoems regularly showcased at film festivals worldwide. All her work is marked with an urban, Jewish, feminist aesthetic that continually challenges linguistic habits and normative modes of meaning production. Engaged with the art of combination and turbulence of thought, it is a testament to the creative and regenerative power of language and its infinite possibilities for pushing meaning to the limits of its semantic boundaries.

Her writing has been described as "electricity in language" (Nicole Brossard), "plural, cascading, exuberant in its cross-fertilization of punning and knowing, theatre and theory" (Charles Bernstein), "a tour de force of linguistic doublespeak" (Globe and Mail), and "opens up the possibilities of reading" (Vancouver Courier). She is co-founding director (Minister of Semiotic Turbulence) with Jake Marmer for KlezKanada Poetry Festival and Retreat: Three Millennia of Poetic Subversion and professor of communication and media studies at Fordham University.

Tim Trace Peterson http://www.writing.upenn.edu/pennsound/x/Peterson.php Tim Trace Peterson is the author of Since I Moved In (Chax Press) and Violet Speech (2nd Avenue Poetry), and the editor/publisher of EOAGH. Peterson is co-editor of Troubling the Line: Trans and Genderqueer Poetry & Poetics (Nightboat Books) and co-editor of the forthcoming Collected Writings of Gil Ott (Chax Press). Peterson curated the TENDENCIES: Poetics & Practice talks series at CUNY Graduate Center from 2009-2012.

Sun 24 Feb 2013

I have just learned that I will be presenting at Maine's "Quality Counts 2013 medical conference in Augusta April 3rd. Will probably be staying near Bangor, however. Are there any poetry venues for early April? Bearing in mind it is National Poetry Month? and Stonecoast is nearby? I would love to meet a poet or two. A little late for a reading to be scheduled, I fear. But perhaps something for the future?

See Sporkworld.org/Deed for more about me and my background.

Thanks for any advice. Please backchannel.

Best,
Martha

The Worst, by Rebecca Farivar

When I focus I can feel-- honestly feel--what it's like to burn alive. No one wants to hear about it. I imagine at a certain point you must pass out. But before that think this is the worst case.

Everyone keeps telling me to see a therapist. They just don't want to talk. There are so many ways you could burn. Most likely in a car wreck. That's why I feel it most when driving, and then I need to breath, calm down, think of peaceful things like noodles.

The Derelict Narrative: An Account of In/Words

David Emery offers a companion piece to rob mclennan's Open Book profile and Peter Gibbon's personal memoir about In/Words, an Ottawa-based literary collective now in its teens. AngelHousePress admires this persistent adolescent for its sense of community, the variety of publishing activities it has taken on & its sense of creative whimsy & mayhem. In/Words is our bratty older brother & we couldn't be more pleased to see it celebrated & remembered.

remember we are always looking for essays, manifestos, rants, interviews, reviews, statements on your creative practice or anything else that might contribute to the ongoing conversation about the creative arts. please send work my way for consideration, along with a bio & author photo.

178. Lewis, Susan
The Next Big Thing (Susan Lewis)
Wed 27 Feb 2013

Tag, I'm it!

Having been tagged by my friend, partner, & esteemed fellow-poet Marc Vincenz, it's my day to play the poetry-interview-pyramid game, "The Next Big Thing!" Today's book is "How to Be Another," coming out soon from Èervená Barva Press. And don't miss next week's interviews on MadHat Lit from the legendary Terese Svoboda, Norma Cole, Sheila Murphy and Gloria Mindock. (www.madhatlit.com).

What is the working title of the book?

"How to Be Another."

Where did the idea come from for the book?

I was experimenting with a range of variations on the prose poem, from more-or-less abstract, aporetic verbal collages, to meditations, to parables and tales, when I realized they had a certain thematic through-line, namely, empathy - its necessity as well as its ultimate unattainability. Hence the title, "How to Be Another." What's more, I realized my dissimilar approaches could be understood as different ways to elucidate, illustrate, or convey that thematic through-line. So I divided the collection into four sections: "i.e.," "e.g.," "Rx," and "vis."

What genre does your book fall under?

Prose poetry.

What actors would you choose to play the part of your characters in a movie rendition?

Most of the parts are for CGI-animated impossibilities. But there are also ordinary humans in these tales! Chandler Riggs (who plays Carl in The Walking Dead) would be great for "The Kiss." Elisabeth Moss (who plays Peggy in Mad Men) would be amazing in a number of these pieces. "Half-Life" requires a wolf-like white dog, very much like my Samoyed, Loki - although I rather doubt he has any real interest in acting!

What is the one sentence synopsis of your book?

"Between anything & the real thing, jaws snap."

How long did it take you to write the first draft of the manuscript?

Three or four years, give or take a few.

Who or what inspired you to write this book?

Borges, Cortazar, Rimbaud, Mallarme, Russell Edson, Wittgenstein, to name a few. Discovering the breadth of potential for the short prose form mined by these great writers felt like a homecoming for one impulse of my writing self.

What else about your book might pique the reader's interest?

Among its cabinet of oddities are boys who "flap their wings and pray for rain," a rebellious moon, intransigent scallops, a dog who can deep sea dive, "clouds which act like railroads, taking anything anywhere," a recriminatory moth, and a man whose life is an art exhibit.

Will your book be self-published or represented by an agency?

It will be published by Èervená Barva Press later this year.

My tagged writers for next Wednesday are:

Terese Svoboda, "Dogs Are Not Cats" (MadHat Press, 2013)
Norma Cole, "Distraction"
Sheila Murphy, "American Ghazals" Gloria Mindock, "Screaming for Paul"

Contribute to Research on Digital Media and Changing Poetic Practice

Wed 27 Feb 2013

Hi all,

My name is Ben Falandays and I am a fourth year undergrad at the University of Delaware. I'm currently in the process of writing a thesis concerning the shifting practices of creation and consumption in poetry that come with the digital media.

As a part of my research, I'm conducting a survey to get some concrete data about the way that contemporary poets are using media to create, publish, and read poetry. You can access the survey here:

https://delaware.qualtrics.com/SE/?SID=SV_4Mjj1q6xudIWRwx

If you are a poet yourself, or have access to a community of poets with which you could share this survey, your help would be greatly appreciated. It only takes a few minutes, but you will be making a contribution to our understanding of how shifts in media affect the world of poetry!

Best,
Ben

Dear List,

I think E.D. must have been hot. At least, the rumors about she and sister Vinnie ran to that effect--that though they did not marry, they were frolicsome in company--perhaps a tad on the wild side for their time and place. Though these words may sound somewhat flip, they're well documented in Sewell. And of course, the poetry attests, that though ED was one who could pray well (in the proper Kierkegaardean sense with the eye of intellect trained on the eye of faith, maugre the bridge of the nose) she could play well too. Amen to that.

Orlando Poetics
Thu 28 Feb 2013

It's not bad here. It hasn't been too terribly hot. The birds, as always, are good--watched a nice little grebe wading through mossy water then suddenly dipping its head for a treat. I had a good time holding forth about poetry and the perverse to students at Rollins College where the presiding muse is Carol Frost. It may be that some of us will go to see Scott Momaday--a poet I've long admired who lives here abouts.

Needless to say if any Orlando poets would like to see this devil in the flesh I'm good for a coffee. Back-channel is perfectly fine.

140 messages · Thu 28 Feb 2013 – Sun 31 Mar 2013

March 2013 gathered the room around a farewell to one of its own presiding spirits — the poet who had once been elected the list's own Anti-Laureate, and who had spent decades making mischief and music in equal measure. One hundred and forty messages moved through the list, and its warmth gathered around the memorial for Anselm Hollo, set against the annual churn of the great writers' conference. The month held the intimate and the institutional together: a beloved poet mourned, and the professional machinery grinding on around the grief.

The largest tender thread was the memorial. Anselm Hollo had died at the end of January, and the room passed along the invitation to "a memorial tribute to Anselm Hollo" — the Finnish-born poet and translator, the great wit and dissenter, the man this very list had once crowned its Anti-Laureate and who had filed his mock-decrees with such delight. He had been one of the room's truest characters, a poet who took the art with total seriousness and himself with none, and his death removed one of the last living links to the list's own comic and combative prime.

Around the grief ground the machinery of the profession. The great annual writers' conference filled a thread with readings and schedules and the anxious social calculus of the literary crowd — the institutional churn of a poetry increasingly organized around the conference and the program — the exact apparatus Hollo's irreverence had always mocked. There was a bitter aptness in mourning the Anti-Laureate in the same weeks the room mapped its way through the professional carnival he would have skewered.

Beneath both ran the small persistent keeping — an ecological-poetry event announced, new publishing teams forming, readings posted. The infrastructure carried on beneath the memorial, the reading series and the little presses doing their patient work, the living poetry going on being made even as the room buried one of the makers who had shaped its spirit — the reading series and the little presses carrying forward, in their unglamorous way, exactly the uninstitutional energy Hollo had stood for.

I have set March down exactly as the archive delivered it — the memorial tribute to Anselm Hollo, the writers' conference grinding on around it, and the small keeping beneath — because it was the month the list mourned its own Anti-

Laureate, the poet who had embodied everything wild and funny and uncompromising in its character. A room that will gather to remember Anselm Hollo in the same weeks it threads its way through the professional conference he loved to mock is a room saying goodbye to a piece of its own soul: the irreverent, uninstitutional, gloriously serious-and-unserious spirit that had made the list, in its best years, not just an argument but a company of friends.

Readings by Alexander Cigale, Dana Golin, Susan Lewis, Peter Marra, Larissa Shmailo, Joel Lewis and Jonathan Penton, accompanied by Leon Dewan of Dewanatron, inventor of the Swarmatron, the crazed electronic genius described at http://www.newyorker.com/talk/2011/01/24/110124ta_talk_paumgarten .

Sidewalk, 94 Avenue A, New York (buy-one-beer-get-one-free refill on Saturday afternoons)! And after our read, stick around for a Boog City Literary event at 6pm!

You can learn more about the Unlikely series at http://www.unlikelystories.org/<http://www.facebook.com/l.php?u=http%3A%2F%2Fwww.unlikelystories.org%2F&h=7AQH5kWfX&s=1> and the MadHat family at http://www.madhatarts.com/ .

Hello Michael,

Since you asked so nicely, Canarium, Green Lantern, Coach House and House of Anansi are teaming up for this great poetry reading:

* * * *

Four Presses, No Boundaries: An AWP Off-Site Event
American presses Canarium and Green Lantern join forces with Coach House and House of Anansi

Please join us for a poetry reading that shatters the Canadian-U.S. border! Two of the best American indie presses (Canarium, Green Lantern) join forces with two of the best indie presses north of the border (Coach House, House of Anansi) for an incredible event the first night of the AWP Conference in Boston.

The four-press showdown takes place at nearby Dillon's (955 Boylston Street) -- it's literally less than a five-minute walk from the Hynes Convention Center. So if you're not particularly a big fan of walking or cross-Boston travel, stay in the neighbourhood for some of the best poetry readings of the AWP!

In the spirit of cross-border literature, we'll feature short readings by:

Joel Craig (/The Whi//te House/, Green Lantern)
Brent Cunningham (/Jou//rney to the Sun/, Atleos)
Jeramy Dodds (/Crabwise to the Hounds/, Coach House)
Andrew Faulkner (/Need Machine/, Coach House)
Anthony Madrid (/I Am Your Slave Now Do What I Say/, Canarium)
Sara Peters (/1996/, House of Anansi)
Adam Sol (/Jeremiah, Ohi//o/, House of Anansi)
Matthew Tierney (/Probably Inevitable/, Coach House)
Nick Twemlow (/Palm Trees/, Green Lantern)
Lynn Xu (/Debts & Lessons/, Omnidawn)

Have a few drinks at the cash bar, talk shop with your fellow writers and publishers and pick up some killer new books at the book table. Celebrate with us!

Schedule:

8:45 - short readings by Adam Sol, Andrew Faulkner, Joel Craig, Anthony Madrid, Matthew Tierney
9:30 - short drink break
9:45 - short readings by Brent Cunningham, Sara Peters, Jeramy Dodds, Lynn Xu, Nick Twemlow

Four Presses, No Boundaries
An AWP Off-Site Event
readings by Joel Craig, Brent Cunningham, Jeramy Dodds, Andrew Faulkner, Anthony Madrid, Sara Peters, Adam Sol, Matthew Tierney, Nick Twemlow and Lynn Xu

Re: Poetry readings during AWP

Fri 1 Mar 2013

Hi Michael,

I'm organizing an offsite reading, which I think is going to be great! It's on Thursday March 7th, at 6:30 and is called Kale Soup for the Soul (poets reading work about family, food and Portuguese culture). It's at the Portuguese Consulate and we'll even have refreshments, music and wine. Free and open to the public.

Also I'd recommend checking out the AWP web site (this year they list Public readings as well as conference events)

Take care

24. Patrick F. Durgin
Fwd: PQRS, by Patrick Durgin | new from Kenning Editions
Sat 2 Mar 2013

Announcing the publication of /PQRS/ <http://www.kenningeditions.com/pqrs-by-patrick-durgin/>, by Patrick Durgin /PQRS/ is a poets theater script with initials for names and functions for characters. It is about linguistic contagion and statist collusion, the fate of labor and play as literary genre (i.e. "essay"), the utility of public art and site-specificity in the post-medium age, the plasticity of gender, the metaphysics of lyric address, and several other topics. It was written between 1998 and 2012, mostly toward the end of that period.

Patrick Durgin <http://epc.buffalo.edu/authors/durgin/> is coauthor of /The Route/ (Atelos, 2008, with Jen Hofer) and has published numerous chapbooks, including /Imitation Poems/ (2006) and /Color Music/ (2002). Durgin is also editor of /Hannah Weiner's Open House/ <http://www.kenningeditions.com/hannah-weiners-open-house-by-hannah-weiner/> and /The Early and Clairvoyant Journals of Hannah Weiner/<http://libraries.ucsd.edu/speccoll/m504/index.html>. He teaches critical theory, literature, and writing at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

It's one thing to advocate for writing that pushes boundaries, mixes discourses, and transgresses the dominant aesthetic, but it's quite another to actually write it. As a play, /PQRS/ is not just unstageable, it is a monumental failure. That is, it fails with such clarity, indifference, legitimate anger, and abandon that it turns into a kind of monument, marking the point where the intellect's pessimism collapses into the will's optimism. The many models and forerunners for a project this radical include the posthumously published texts of Gertrude Stein, referred to explicitly here as "the most exhaustive syllabic implosion in prose of any language." But if Stein's implosion was horizontal,/ PQRS/ goes vertical, running up and down the scale of rhetorics: essay, drama, lists of potential performance art projects, lit crit, film crit, music history, autobiography, back to drama, intermission, critique of capital, URL of a Tumblr page of women laughing while holding salads, back to drama (and: /scene/). "The text succeeds its own conditions." In dire and unsuccessful times, that's the hope.

---Brent Cunningham

With a genuine sweep and suspense, /PQRS/ up-ends and pats down received ideas of genre, putting its principal characters (the eponymous P, Q, R and my own favorite, S) through their paces on an imaginary stage in an imaginary play. Designed not to be acted or produced, Durgin calls this work a "script," which I like for its straightfoward modesty. But as I see it, it's first cousin to something like the 1930s "essay-novels" of Virginia Woolf, /Orlando /or/ The Pargiters/---books written simultaneously in two veins, each illuminating the other in unexpected, and here thrilling, ways. Like aging stars, P, Q, R, and S upstage each other, disconcert each other, all in the interest of presenting as much enlightenment as we can sit for, within the pages of a single book; so they form a serious quartet with comic overtones, like the lovers and mages of Mozart's "Non ti fidar, O misera." Don't trust him, O sad person!

---Kevin Killian

The "performance" "script" Patrick Durgin imagines in /PQRS/ is not so much dramaturgical as sweepingly demiurgical, in the sense that it fashions a world out of the chaos of a twenty-first-century poet's broad field of experience and association (literary history, music and film, economic theory, sculpture, public art, performance art, and poetics, to name a few examples). This world is inhabitable, if not comfortable: it is a world that resists staging in any conventional sense, but whose very conceptual difficulty supplies a context for new models of dramatic form and provides a vehicle for the kinds of thinking and representing that happen when various avant-garde ideologies collide with the twin crises of postmodern irony and capitalist recuperation. The tidy serialism implied by the title is a feint that dissolves into a frenetic vista of spectacular anxieties and social realities. It would be banal to confine /PQRS/ under the tired rubric of "cross-genre"; rather, it rehearses genre's continuing usefulness as a category and finds it wanting.

---K. Silem Mohammad

Reminiscent of Guy Debord's /The Society of the Spectacle/, albeit in an intensified and wildly fluid twenty-first century context, Patrick Durgin's essay-as-poetics script releases a discursive energy typically suppressed in theater. This is a theater of compressed time, bursting within the seams of global capital's themes. A spooky and illuminating work.

---Carla Harryman

Poet's theater has always pushed the genre boundaries of what is a play to a far off horizon. And Patrick Durgin's /PQRS/ is yet another example in this tradition. It is more indebted to the happening, to philosophy, to essay, to scholarship than it might be to the conventions of realist drama. It has demanding, location specific production instructions. It lectures without shame about art, its economies, its global circulations, its powers. And yet it still is full of the powerful exchanges that make drama at moments so provocative.

What People Are Saying About Big Bridge* * *

* "Big Bridge* has been doing the good work of building bridges for writers and artists for fifteen years. I wish them another good fifteen."-Dorianne Laux, poet and teach, author of The Book of Men (W.W. Norton) and Facts about the Moon (W.W. Norton), is the recipient of the Oregon Book Award and winner of the Paterson Prize in Poetry

"Big Bridge lives up to its name: it has linked poets from around the globe in a fearless passage from silence to the agora. The struggle for justice through the agency of poetry is a mighty force: Big Bridge is a well-aimed spearhead toward that ideal."-Andrei Codrescu, poet<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8yZLt0va2iDGFLa51dBPbc6h5VN3bcfdyKl2GtxC9s1uVIdrAOeqQBNOJaSp_BzX82-0faR7pWqjsV6DSdv4CSeWb87GTRg5U_kJsLhUld-qPTY3OT3uddSF>, novelist<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8ybhoadLamfVlT3EHEa24q8LfKieZ1dU8Nw3yAYy2VPEfQc-gqB1Cub91Sz-Xkg5AhqucbOhgb-Cm6UiiIWlkTDW1cVAC5zKStR1uvDkhRPdUVgnzSZ0K4AX>, essayist, screenwriter, publisher of Exquisite Corpse, A Journal of Letters and Life, and commentator for National Public Radio<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8ya99M25XTyiLBzrn2GrIuMtQj7xkEezc9NC3PDq982qFre_Q7oZqIkBdpylkloilLI_MRLictimhhFw3dGhY1oXbj2xQbxLnKCJydFsNSNEJX6pE15FgYJiYO5Ko3MtgO21nK59eDkwmg==>

"Big Bridge is, for the digital age, the kind of broad, inclusive, smart (but never academic), happy / angry journal we have not had in too many decades. Its antecedents include such stalwarts as Coyote's Journal, Beatitude, The World or John Sinclair's Work, but Big Bridge demonstrates the possibilities of life on the web by going much further & deeper than any one of those publications. Its reach is literally the planet, but I suspect that if anyone starts sending in writing or art from Mars or another star system, it would show up in Big Bridge first." -Ron Silliman, poet, editor of Silliman's Blog

"What I find is Big Bridge is the community of poets without nostalgia and without pretense.- Michael Basinski, Curator, The Poetry Collection of the University Libraries, University at Buffalo.

"Big Bridge is a marvelous resource for the high but often battered, sometimes financially impoverished art of poetry. It is wide-ranging, impeccably diverse, historically aware, open to the avant-garde as well as to formal modes, always intelligent, at times astonishing. It's a magazine for poets that never forgets its obligation to interest the general reader-the person for whom poetry is too often out of reach. You'll find famous poets there, but you'll also find unknown poets-and, importantly, poets who *will*be known."- Jack Foley, poet, critic, KPFA radio host and editor of acclaimed V*isions & Affiliations: A California Literary Time Line 1940-2005*

"For fifteen-plus years, Big Bridge has kept alive the spirit fo the marvelous, offering again and again a cornucopia of edgy intensities and restless beauties that make us recommit to imagination's interventionist powers."-*Maria

*"Big Bridge *provides a wonderful platform for some of the best poetry and prose, art and photography, being made in these times. It's a rare and much-needed way to stay abreast of "the news that stays news."- Aram Saroyan, poet<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8yZLt0va2iDGFLa51dBPbc6h5VN3bcfdyKl2GtxC9s1uVIdrAOeqQBNOJaSp_BzX82-0faR7pWqjsV6DSdv4CSeWb87GTRg5U_kJsLhUld-qPTY3OT3uddSF>, novelist<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8ybhoadLamfVlT3EHEa24q8LfKieZ1dU8Nw3yAYy2VPEfQc-gqB1Cub91Sz-Xkg5AhqucbOhgb-Cm6UiiIWlkTDW1cVAC5zKStR1uvDkhRPdUVgnzSZ0K4AX>, biographer<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8yaeFtYJZtrvXNwACckovVnSPvaFkPsYorQy3RGbmFSwka9GKDO500XTqXpMUlOGuOy2vn5syGtX7M-ZiphrzthXdburoAKrnI_1JHS6H0NciFaG6sLN2OI5nlx2LmpFCDs=>, memoirist<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8yZLVvsypOui-CUu-7V5eVFi4ArDqNbaGuTjajE-NyiF1gCDO9__2myOcXfYa4hvAfWINkgWQb-uePOzljuaZ5h3HBdIYoooOv4NIrRxAz0TVYaDvzH_xJ-y>and playwright<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8yZ5sjUP6OeK8YxcxhpRQxUb01KbKH5Bjz3O6TSIlvj27bBJiLqYxszY7stWSnjeqmvvBCsSOUNHimsyRgZExwZpCjpRtS6DmWBOQjLwBY96UBRE49H3imfxOLuCfj5DhYc=>, author. *"Big Bridge *is a unique phenomenon in literature, gathering poets and writers together from around the globe in a huge, encompassing, and utterly new view of the latest in letters. Like a migration of monarchs, there is nothing else like this seminal annual."- Larissa Shmailo, poet and translator

"Big Bridge has long been a must-read for anyone occupied by poetry and art."-Bill Berkson, poet, critic, teacher and sometime curator. Poet, essayist, curator, professor emeritus at the San Francisco Art Institute

Big Bridge is more than a literary arts magazine. It's a world wide web of literary arts experiences. And because of the possibilities of digital publishing, a reader has instant access to fifteen years of the magazine's offerings of work by poets and artists from all over the globe. Print publications simply cannot compete with this kind of immediacy and breadth. And certainly can't offer such scope at no charge to the reader. But it takes more than 21st Century technology to create such a terrific literary arts adventure. It takes vision, poetic intelligence, and a dedication to the world wide web of poetry (rather than commitment to a small poetic suburb). There are hazards, however. Once one crosses that Big Bridge and begins to explore the territory, one may not re-emerge for days.-Barbara Barg, poet

"Big Bridge is devoted to poetry. The site's tastes are wide and ranging. From features on master authors like Philip Whalen or Edward Dorn, to new voices with an array of interests and attitudes toward poetry, *Big Bridge *has it all. Michael Rothenberg's commitment to new writing and to the traditions of the New American poetry unite at Big Bridge to keep conversations alive--across place and across time--in the cyberian interspaces of the web."-Dale Smith, poet, teacher, essayist

"Big Bridge is one of our most significant web sites for contemporary art and writing-I am honored to be included."-Anne Tardos

"Where have the Muses survived the storms of American History? The Commonwealth of Massachusetts? Greater New York City? The magnificent San Francisco Bay area? Or does the 3%-translated-books statistic prove us terminally parochial? --Terri Carrion's and Michael Rothenberg's* Big Bridge * is a golden gate to everywhere-*-*lovingly, lavishly presenting the world's writing, art, music. The best of what's happening now, historic documents: it's all here in a lively journal manifesting the editorial policy make it fresh, make it new."-Lou Rowan, editor of *Golden Handcuffs Review *and author of Sweet Potatoes

"Big Bridge is exactly that, a gorgeous span across geographies and aesthetics, a road to a new world. I am grateful for the vision and all the construction work that builds this stunning bridge." - Sarah Browning, Director, Split This Rock

*Big Bridge *is one of the best venues for poetry and literature currently online. Thanks, Michael, for the work you are doing."- Bill Lavender,poet, editor, and teacher. His most recent book is his acclaimed verse memoir, Memory Wing.

"I've been pouring blood, money & guts into the online Museum of American Poetics for almost fifteen years, so I've been around the block a time or two. Big Bridge is the Akashic Records of American Poetry."- Jim Cohn, poet, editor, essayist, publisher and founder of the on-line Museum of American Poetics (MAP) at www.poetspath.com<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8yayiKEMKHnlbRxd4aKL5nlXnpeziTUJWwP3hY6ygKONNkT_kPZIeZVsQfOzZJZ0HKMRJCgcqiSMc2qWmYLJZg1EmGKfDdDHWb-n1bXEbRqVmA==> .

"Big Bridge by Michael Rothenberg has always been there. It is from his webzine that thousands of other webzines have started, thus giving way to a new social awareness. Michael has been the Number One in the spreading of culture since the advent of the Internet. A poet and writer, he has highlighted and kept alive as an editor first and foremost Contemporary American Literature to which he has joined World Literature, in a one to one relationship with all the authors he has featured on Big Bridge. It is right through his webzine that I first met Michael, many years ago, an excellent friend who has been intensively active. Praise will never be enough to match his untiring enthusiasm, sensitivity, and strenuous work. As the Editor of the Poets' Corner, it is at times easy to be tempted to let everything go, Michael has shined as an example for me, and I am sure, for many other editors, writers, contributors to the Belles Lettres in the whole world."-Anny Ballardini, Editor of the Poets Corner<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001dq72bl4l8yZ3IBn4ditb8tXZ7r8c710jIE7xUMr88W99tq2dSAohbtCtVAshN9L268YbPzcuVnReMndtF2TbAdFK4NmZF6RcP2_6jGpPacu9HxfmQ2_csz36LDkwFU0t39jaxIXT00L-lX_Sdh8GLg==>MFA, PhD student.

"Cuba, Morocco, Ohio, Neo-Surrealism, the 70's scene in Bolinas, the Philip Whalen Journals, Wisconsin Protest Journals, translations from Japan, Iran, Tbilisi & elsewhere. If you think, as I do, that the work of peace begins with cultural exchange and deep awareness of other cultures, you can begin to sense the magnitude of the work being done by the relentless Michael Rothenberg and Big Bridge. The editor of the fantastic The Collected Poems of Philip Whalen and As Ever: Selected Poems of Joanne Kyger, the co-founder of 100 Thousand Poets for Change (the worldwide poetry event entering its third year) has been at it in cyberspace with the e-journal Big Bridge for 16 years. Sure, it takes huge effort to keep anything going for 16 years (which seems like an eternity in our era of great velocity) but to do it with such breadth, depth and quality issue after issue is simply astounding. The connections created by this magazine are essential to the global community and dialog that the world's best poets are beginning to engage in and we are so much better off with Michael Rothenberg and Big Bridge. Bridge building is the work we need right now in our world and few do it with the same verve and commitment. Ashé!"- Paul E Nelson, *A Time Before Slaughter, Organic Poetry, *Seattle, WA

Beat writers, Language poets: CFP for 2014 MLA (deadline March 20)

Mon 4 Mar 2013

Call for Proposals for a special session for MLA 2014:
BEAT ARTISTS, LITERATURE, AND LANGUAGE WRITING

Deadline for Submissions: March 20, 2013 Contact information: Ronna C. Johnson ([redacted]) and Deborah Geis ([redacted]).

Seeking proposals for essays of productive discussions of the multiple relations and interrelations, overlaps and departures, influences and legacies effected between these disparate literary movements of the postwar, postmodern rise. Consider questions of Beat writers, Language poets, and the virtues and limitations of assimilation into the academy; or questions of cooptation each movement faces in the 21st-century academy. Discussions may take inspiration from a past body of scholarly work on the Language movement that has sought to claim an authenticity for poets who are skeptical about such claims, and that has sought to place the rejection of closure that is so important to Language poetry within the broader map of postwar poetries (including the Beats) that increasingly embraced a poetics of indeterminacy and the politics of poetic form. How do Beat literature and writers fit the experimental demands of Language writing and writers?

Topics might investigate:

– Shared precursors between the Beat and Language movements (Stein, Zukofsky, Pound, et al.)

– The influence of individual Beat poems ("Wichita Vortex Sutra," among others) or techniques (the cutup, among others) on the Language movement

– Beat literature and individual writers of the Language movement (Ron Silliman, Leslie Scalapino, Barrett Watten, Michael Davidson, among others)

– Self and language: Beat writing and the dispersed subjectivity of Language poetry

– Language poetry's experiments with autobiography (texts such as Hejinian's "My Life," Howe's "My Emily Dickinson," and the collective autobiography "The Grand Piano," among others)

– Major presses and journals of the Language movement

– Spiritual poetics and the materiality of language

– The line in Beat poetry and Language poetry

– Experiments with syntax in Beat poetry and Language poetry

– Beats, Language poets, and the politics of poetic form

– Beat writing and Post-Language poetries

Proposals with brief professional biographies should be sent no later than March 20, 2013, to Ronna C. Johnson ([redacted]) and Deborah Geis ([redacted]).

Presenting Opon

Mon 4 Mar 2013

Dear Friends,

Brad Vogler, a founding member of Delete Press, has recently launched the inaugural issue of Opon, a poetry journal. Please visit Opon.org to have your eyes recede into your brain which is also your heart.

As Brad describes it: *Opon is an offshoot of Delete Press, and is edited and maintained by Brad Vogler. Some things of interest include: poems accompanied by writing on process/procedure, a series of revisions, collaborative work, interviews and visual poetry. Maybe it isn't any of these things, and you have something else in mind? A surprise can be nice. Things longer in length, 8-10 pages are preferred, but this isn't a requirement.

*The first issue presents work by Kate Eichhorn, Eric Goddard-Scovel, Tirzah Goldenberg, Jill Magi, Moria L. Purdy, and Nico Vassilakis.

Enjoy!

the Love that dare not tweet its name
Mon 4 Mar 2013

Happy Springtime, panicked and precious friends! There's a bit of fine new content at UnlikelyStories.org, namely:

Volume 2 of /Love Has Been Liquidated/ by John Bryan, the continuation of his sprawling choose-your-own-adventure role-playing one-sided epistolary-romance prose poem and information about /Gods of a Ransacked Century/, the new 52-page book by Marc Vincenz, which will be released this weekend at the annual conference of the Association of Writers' Programs in Boston!

And oh, yeah, we're all over Boston. /Unlikely/ will be represented at MadHat's bookfair booth, Booth 3010 on the second floor of the bookfair, and I'll be there most of the weekend.

On Thursday, March 7, at 5:30pm, I'll be MCing the joint read of MadHat and Pen & Anvil Press, and I'll be reading from /Gods of a Ransacked Century/ on Marc's behalf, as well as from /Unlikely/ peep j/j hastain's latest chapbook, /dear secondary umbilical//,/ (MadHat Press, 2013). That'll be at 5:30pm, Thursday, March 7th, 2013, the Atrium of the Sherrill Library, Lesley University, 89 Brattle St., Cambridge, near the Harvard Square T Station.

I'll be reading Marc's poetry again on that same night at the launch party for the #20 issue of /Cha: An Asian Literary Journal/, which features Marc's poetry as well as work by Xi Chuan, Eleanor Goodman, Lucas Klein, W.F. Lantry, Kim Liao, Mai Mang, Tracy Slater, Marc Vincenz, and Nicholas YB Wong (Kaitlin Solimine will MC). That's at the Fairbank Center for Chinese Studies, the Center for Government and International Studies--South Building, Harvard University, 1730 Cambridge St., also in Cambridge near the Harvard Square T Station if you can't figure that out.

On Saturday, March 9, at 4pm I'll be reading poetry by the late /Unlikely/ peep Hugh Fox, from his book /Primate Fox /(MadHat Press, 2012). I'll be joined by Bernadete Costa-Fox, Lo Galluccio, Leonora Smith, John Roche, Doug Holder, Steve Glines, and John Gosslee. That'll be at the Bloc 11 Cafe, 11 Bow St., Somerville.

And on Sunday, March 10, at 6:30pm, /Unlikely/ will have one final New York read in conjunction with MadHat at the Gallery at le poisson rouge, 158 Bleeker St in Manhattan! Featuring Alexander Cigale, Steven Dalachinsky, Dana Golin, Susan Lewis, Yuko Otomo, Jonathan Penton, Larissa Shmailo, and the electronic musical accompaniment of Leon Dewan of Dewanatron! Come see! We did a similar show on Saturday, March 2 at Sidewalk Bar, and it was big fun -- come check out the refinement in a bigger venue!

Dancing from the other end,

PoemTalk 63 on Laynie Browne's "Daily Sonnets"
Tue 5 Mar 2013

Today we are releasing PoemTalk #63, a discussion of Laynie Browne's Daily Sonnets with Sueyeun Juliette Lee, Lee Ann Brown, and Jessica Lowenthal:

https://jacket2.org/content/poem-talk http://www.poetryfoundation.org/features/audioitem/3834

PoemTalk is available on iTunes (simply type "PoemTalk" in your iTunes store searchbox).

From the program notes:

PoemTalkers Jessica Lowenthal, Lee Ann Brown, and Sueyeun Juliette Lee gathered with Al Filreis to talk about five poems from Laynie Browne’s Daily Sonnets, which was published by Counterpath Press of Denver in 2007. We chose two of Browne’s “fractional sonnets,” two of the sonnets in which the talk of her children is picked up partly or wholly as lines of the poem, and one of her “personal amulet” sonnets. These are, to be specific: “Six-Fourteenths Donne Sonnet” [MP3], “Two-Fourteenths Sonnet” [MP3], “In Chinese astrology you are a snake” [MP3], “I’m a bunny in a bunny suit” [MP3], and “Protector #2: Your Personal Amulet” [MP3]. The sonnet after Donne is a constrained rewriting of a “holy” sonnet: “I am a little world made cunningly.”

Quâ€™est-ce quâ€™un corps ? Quâ€™est-ce quâ€™une vie ? Quâ€™est-ce que le temps ? Â« Ce qui va arriver est dÃ©jÃ en train dâ€™arriver / Il y a des gens qui prÃ©fÃ¨rent â€˜le monologue intÃ©rieurâ€™ / Jâ€™aime casser la gueule des gens Â». Entre diagramme de lâ€™esprit, sommation du poÃ¨me, comÃ©die de mÅ“urs et kalÃ©idoscope de la perception hantÃ© par les lois de la succession et de la dissolution,Â Les SonnetsÂ de Ted Berrigan admettent, renversent et renouvellent les conventions du sonnet shakespearien. Comme lui, ils sâ€™intÃ¨grent â€“ Ã corps parfois dÃ©fendant â€“ dans le temps : temps du rÃ©cit et de la prosodie, dâ€™une Ã©poque et dâ€™une compagnie, de la naissance et de la mort, Â« fÃ©minin, merveilleux et fort Â».

Avec Frank Oâ€™Hara, John Ashbery et Ron Padgett, entre autres, Ted Berrigan (1934-1983) est associÃ© Ã Â« lâ€™Ã©cole de New York des poÃ¨tes Â». Il sâ€™est dÃ©crit, dans un curriculum vitae de 1982 comme Ã©tant Â« modÃ©rÃ©ment vÃ©nÃ©rable, large, dâ€™apparence traditionnelle. Ressemble Ã Apollinaire (barbu) ou Ã un ours dÃ©guisÃ© en George Bernard Shaw [...] Formidable, affable, endurant Â». Figure centrale du Poetry Project Ã Saint Markâ€™s Church in-the-Bowery, dans le East Village, Ted Berrigan a fondÃ© dÃ¨s 1963 la revue littÃ©raire Â« C Â» et la maison dâ€™Ã©dition Â« C Â» Press. Selon Allen Ginsberg, Â« Ted Berrigan Ã©tait un grand homme, tout le monde le dit, grande figure paternelle grand chef de poÃ©sie â€“ combinaison de Beat de grand classique et de New York School â€“ grand encouragement pour ses aÃ®nÃ©s grand Consul pour ses cadets Â».Â Les Sonnets, son premier livre, publiÃ© en 1964, est devenu un classique de la poÃ©sie amÃ©ricaine, renouvelant la forme du sonnet et inspirant de nouvelles gÃ©nÃ©rations de poÃ¨tes. Â« LireÂ Les Sonnets, Ã©crit John Ashbery, câ€™est sentir ce que sera le futur. Â»

Â« Le sonnet, tel que le rÃ©invente Berrigan, pour son propre compte, nâ€™est pas le tÃ©moin dâ€™une nÃ©gation avant-gardiste de la forme, dâ€™une destruction de la forme, dâ€™une rupture absolue avec le passÃ© de la forme, dont il ne conserverait, de maniÃ¨re dÃ©risoire, presque que le nom, mais un hÃ©ritier, certes insolent, et joueur, mais en mÃªme temps un descendant inventif et novateur de tous les sonnets de la tradition. Â» Jacques Roubaud, postface Ã la prÃ©sente Ã©dition.Â

VIDA: THE COUNT IS OUT - "Can You Hear Me Now?"

Tue 5 Mar 2013

THE VIDA COUNT for 2012:Â
â€œCan You Hear Me Now? Is This Thing On?â€Â
http://www.vidaweb.org/

March 4, 2013 â€”Â VIDA: Women in Literary Arts today released its annual Count, examining issues of gender discrimination in some of the nationâ€™sÂ major literary venues for 2012. The previous Counts have fueled considerable media response by revealingÂ the wide disparity in rates of publication between male and female authorsÂ in nearly every genre.Â

This yearâ€™s Count demonstrates that some outlets have heard VIDAâ€™s messageâ€”critically-acclaimed magazines such asÂ Tin House, Poetry and Threepenny ReviewÂ were particularly noticeableÂ for the positive attention editors are giving to create a more balanced publishing landscape.Â

But as the conversation over these issues has grown louder,Â some magazines seem to have become tone deaf. The 2012 Count reveals that the gender discrepancy in venues such asÂ The Paris Review,Â The New Republic, New York Review Of Books, Times Literary Supplement, The New RepublicÂ andÂ The NationÂ has either stagnated or grown quantifiably worse since VIDAâ€™s Count began.Â

Nationally best-selling writer and VIDA Board member Cheryl Strayed said,Â â€œPeople suggest that women donâ€™t submit work to magazines often enough. Then how has a fantastic magazine likeÂ Tin HouseÂ managed to rise in The Count with no negative effect on the quality of its content?Â The submission argument is no argument at all. Literary venues who arenâ€™t paying attention to this issue have fallen in my estimationÂ by continuing to perpetuate white male dominance. Their increasing irrelevance to readers is turning them into dinosaurs.â€Â

Asked about these magazinesâ€™ poor showing, poet and VIDA Co-director Cate Marvin is not surprised:Â â€œWhenever gatekeepers are questioned about the privilege of their practice, we see a slight backlash. The good news is that the conversation is starting to have a positive effect, through magazines whoâ€™ve responded thoughtfully.Â VIDA is planning to disseminate subscription recommendations, on a national level, to promote publications that consistently strive to balance the literary landscape. We encourage consumers to be conscious of gender bias in publication practices when choosing which magazines to support.Â We want to make readers aware of these issues so they can support publishers who take all writers seriously.Â Money talks, and so does VIDA, along with the many thousands of women and men who support our mission.â€Â

VisitÂ vidaweb.orgÂ to view the 2012 Count.Â To speak with VIDA Co-directors Cate Marvin and Erin Belieu, pleaseÂ contact Alise Hamilton atÂ [redacted].Â

View the Premiere Screening of Robert McTavish's "The Line Has Shattered" on March 21 at SFU Woodward's, Vancouver

Thu 7 Mar 2013

The Line Has Shattered, a documentary film by Robert McTavish on the 1963 Vancouver Poetry Conference, is being premiered on Thursday, March 21st at 7:30pm at the Djavad Mowafaghian World Art Centre, Goldcorp Centre for the Arts, SFU Woodward's, 149 W. Hastings Street, Vancouver. Admission is by donation: $3.00 for students, and $5.00 for others.

http://vimeo.com/60036134

The event is being introduced by Canadian Poet Laureate (and '63 conference participant) Fred Wah.

Narrated by poet Phyllis Webb, who chronicled the event at the time, The Line Has Shattered is a sixty-minute documentary film that revisits the '63 Conference and hears from a number of its participants half a century later.

The Vancouver Poetry Conference, hosted by the University of British Columbia in the summer of 1963, is seen by many as a landmark event in the history and development of West Coast Canadian and North American innovative poetry - and indeed a major early manifestation of the Sixties West Coast zeitgeist.

Organized by UBC English professor Warren Tallman and American poet Robert Creeley, the conference was an intense, freewheeling three-week program of discussions, workshops, lectures, and readings at which a rising generation of Canadian and American poets, including George Bowering, Daphne Marlatt, Fred Wah, Jamie Reid, Michael Palmer, and Clark Coolidge, was exposed to and, in many cases, profoundly influenced by the personalities and 'New American' open-form poetics of the visiting poet-instructors Allen Ginsberg, Charles Olson, Denise Levertov, Creeley, Robert Duncan, and Margaret Avison. For many of the student participants the conference played a key role in providing them faith that the pursuit and practice of poetry could constitute a meaningful calling and life's work.

Robert McTavish is a Canadian documentary film-maker whose works include Ghosts on the Land (2001), Fiddler's Map (2003) and What To Make of It All?: The Life and Poetry of John Newlove (2006). He also edited A Long Continual Argument: The Selected Poems of John Newlove (Chaudiere Books, 2007, afterword by Jeff Derksen) which was hailed by the Globe and Mail as "a fitting monument to the poet's consummate craftsmanship, and a cause for national celebration."

This event is being co-sponsored by SFU Library and English Department, with thanks to the Vancity Office of Community Engagement.

Fri 8 Mar 2013

I'm reading with Andrew Kaufman and Barry Webster on Thursday, March 14, for the FINAL installment of the Robson Reading Series at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver.

If you're in Vancouver on Thursday, March 14, please join us - it's going to be a great reading and farewell to this venerable series.

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is “A Needle Through Night” by Julia Pello

Sun 10 Mar 2013

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œA Needle Through Nightâ€ by Julia Pello

Description:

A Needle Through Night is an experiment in the spontaneous amassing of subjectivities in a non-stop tornado of impressions, deliberations and observations. Like a needle pulling thread, the act of writing extracts and attracts whatever comes within reach, as it seeks exalted states of â€œinnerâ€ revelations through sudden encounters with the outside world, and which might prompt the question: Where or what is the boundary between the supposed interior and exterior?

Available as a free ebook here:

Granary Books: A Complete Collection of Publications 1985-2012 For Sale

Mon 11 Mar 2013

"It's difficult to fully describe the range and impact of Steve Clay's Granary Books. Beginning in 1985 he has concocted a mix of poets, artists, printers, and craftspeople whose work defines an era and fundamentally shapes our understanding of the artists' book." Mark Dimunation, Chief of Rare Book and Special Collections Division, Library of Congress

The Granary Books Collection

A complete gathering of Granary Books publications 1985-2012

The prospectus offering the collection may be found here

For nearly thirty years, Granary Books has investigated verbal/visual relations in the time-honored spirit of independent publishing. Granary's mission—to produce, promote, document, and theorize new works exploring the intersection of word, image, and page—has earned the press a reputation as one of the most unique and significant small publishers operating today.

We are offering for sale a complete collection of all 157 works published by Granary Books 1985–2012.

Such a collection would be all but impossible to assemble from scratch and provides a unique opportunity for an institution or private collector to acquire an extraordinary resource abundant in content for research by scholars, curators, poets, and artists—for anyone interested in the present and future of the book.

Superb Granary Books collections are held by many of the most important libraries in North America including the Library of Congress, New York Public Library, Getty Research Institute, and Special Collection Libraries at Brown, Buffalo, Columbia, Emory, Stanford, Smith, Yale, and York, to name a few.

66. Deborah A. Meadows

Deborah Meadows, last book -- Translation, the bass accompaniment: Selected Poems

Mon 11 Mar 2013

Announcing Translation, the bass accompaniment: Selected Poems by Deborah Meadows from Shearsman Books.

The bass guitar creates patterns that make music into a visceral experience—they are what infect the body. The poems in Translation, the bass accompaniment: Selected Poems are in dialog with other authors, and here, experimental poetry engages logician Quine, encyclopedic novelist Melville, philosophers Irigaray and Deleuze, theologian and synthetic philosopher Aquinas, poets Dragomoshchenko, Hejinian, Baudelaire, and Celan, Soviet cinematographer Vertov, video artist Bill Viola, and others.

Many have written of the mediated experience that language, private life, and civic life involve. In that spirit, the poetry engages the syntax of exploratory thought from ten earlier books brought together here for the first time and ends with a poem that hints at a version of tomorrow.

Available here: http://www.shearsman.com/pages/books/catalog/2013/meadowsSP.html Praise for Translation, the bass accompaniment: Selected Poems: “Deborah Meadows’ deployment of translation as poetic construction offers the reader access to an unusually complex and rewarding set of investigations and interventions into philosophical and literary authority. With remarkable variation, her philosophically informed poetics of indeterminacy illuminates patterns and structures of thinking within the cutting edge literary, artistic, and philosophical traditions that interest her: from Rabelais to Melville, Vertov to Dragomoshchenko, Deleuze to Quine to name a few. The poem as translation however remains equally awake to the pulses, patterns, and notes of everyday life, bodily experience, popular media, the brutality of political violence and social inequities—historically immediate to the composition of the poetry. The experience of reading Meadows' writings as pattern held within variation and variation informed by pattern brings this reader to a felt sense of historical encounter: in which “now” and “then” and “presence” and “absence” necessarily appear together.” --Carla Harryman

“Deborah Meadows casts a cool and canny eye at "our notorious zoo of cruelty and vice," translating the toothsome and bewildering patois of the creatures who live in it. "[W]hiskers of an ant," she writes, "one pound of feathers, weigh it yourself!" Is it possible to parse pharmaceutical time, for instance, "a sustained release," when "Mexico begins maybe three hours from here"? But Meadows, through a rich and brilliant series of ten collections, gathered in these pages, never seems tempted to think of our chatter as the mere voiceover to a documentary on human failure, or as she brutally dispenses with it, "raid / another raid // sex and grooming / more grooming." "Anger must save that boy," she says early on, and later, "I amongst it, I kills it, I have rights." What she tumbles us to here is the critical right to inscribe our world. We pull (and are pulled by) the recalcitrant and spotted beeste of language until, finally, "out it comes / at leash-end." This fierce and intelligent leopard is the real thing.”

--Rachel Loden

seventeen seconds: a journal of poetry and poetics #6
Mon 11 Mar 2013

the sixth issue of seventeen seconds: a journal of poetry and poetics is now online!

http://www.ottawater.com/seventeenseconds/

Sixth Issue: Winter 2013

Cameron Anstee - for VERSeFest: this is the kind of poetry we want Nathan Dueck - from Th Passn o th Jpwn o Rc Kathryn MacLeod:
- post landmarks
- Wandering Star (Journey to China)

rob mclennan - Shaped, and re-shaped: a short interview with Sarah Mangold Pearl Pirie - Safety, Risk and the Brain in Poetry and Publishing Elizabeth Robinson - On Lithography and other poems

seventeen seconds: a journal of poetry and poetics comes out as the natural extension of the eight issues of Poetics.ca edited by rob mclennan and Stephen Brockwell. Highlighting the diversity of voice, style, practice and politic, seventeen seconds continues the resolve to provide a forum for dialogue on contemporary poetics, with a focus on Canadian writing. Over the past two decades, the amount of critical writing published in print literary journals on Canadian poetry, specifically, seems to have decreased dramatically, but slowly returned through a number of online journals. seventeen seconds simply wishes to help strengthen the dialogue and the ongoing conversation about writing through publishing new writing, and conversation about new writing. How else are we supposed to learn anything, unless we keep talking?

Poet as Radio: Chris Daniels on March 17

Join us this Sunday, 3/17, 11:30am-12:30pm PT, at savekusf.org for part one of our conversation with Poet and Translator Chris Daniels!

The perfervidly anti-capitalist, godless, rootless internationalist son of well-known language-artist maestro David Daniels, poet/ translator/ publisher Chris Daniels was born in NYC in 1956. He dropped out of high school to become a dishwasher and never bothered with college. He worked as a cook and played electric bass guitar for many years. In 1980, he moved to the San Francisco Bay Area, where he still lives and, until very recently, sold his labor at a terrible loss. He was laid off in 2009 and is currently studying IT at Heald College in San Francisco, so that he can go back to selling his labor at a terrible loss. For reasons still unclear to him, he passed the GED and received a high school diploma in 1996.

Books: The Collected Poems of Alberto Caeiro by Fernando Pessoa and The Collected Poems of Álvaro de Campos by Fernando Pessoa, vol. 2 (both published by Shearsman Books; vol. 1 of Campos is forthcoming); On the Shining Screen of the Eyelids by Josely Vianna Baptista (Manifest Press); an ongoing, fascicular anthology of Lusophone poetry, self-published and distributed as exceedingly modest chapbooks; and porous, nomadic, a longish poem published by Airfoil (David Abel and Sam Lohman) in Portland, OR. His translations have been published widely in zines and journals in the USA and elsewhere, and online.

Symposium on Territory March 18 & 19
Tue 12 Mar 2013

Please join us for the upcoming Symposium on Territory with Kass Fleisher, Sueyeun Juliette Lee, Craig Santos Perez, and Juliana Spahr, Co-Curated by Bhanu Kapil and Michelle Naka Pierce.

Monday, March 18: Panel @ 7:30 pm in PAC

Tuesday, March 19: Reading @ 7:30 pm in PAC

Both events are free and open to the public.

How do we write an ethics or document of place? How do we engage both the voluntary and involuntary aspects of a history of migration? How can we open to the deep play of the interzone? Define: interzone. A flourishing. A broken vase. Our invited writers engage specific borders: their mutability, history, and current politics/resource needs/disputes. Can we write "territory" in a way that doesn't replicate a colonizing paradigm of accountability or address?

For more info, please visit: http://naropa.edu/jks-symposium

Guest bios below:

Kass Fleisher's novel Dead Woman Hollow was released by SUNY Press (excelsior Editions) in 2012. She also authored Talking Out of School: Memoir of an Educated Woman (Dalkey Archive Press, 2008); The Adventurous (experimental prose; Factory School, 2007); Accidental Species: A Reproduction (experimental prose; Chax Press, 2005); and The Bear River Massacre and the Making of History (nonfiction; SUNY Press, 2004). Short work has appeared in The Iowa Review, Denver Quarterly, Mandorla, Notre Dame Review, Postmodern Culture, and The Los Angeles Review of Books, and she writes plays and screenplays with her partner, Joe Amato.

Sueyeun Juliette Lee grew up three miles from the CIA. Her books include That Gorgeous Feeling (Coconut Books) and Underground National (Factory School) as well as several chapbooks, most recently A Primary Mother (Least Weasel Series at Propolis Press). She writes poetry reviews for the Constant Critic and is a poetry editor for the Asian American Writers' Workshop. She lives in Philadelphia where she teaches and edits Corollary Press.

Craig Santos Perez is a native Chamoru from the Pacific Island of Guåhan/Guam. He is the co-founder of Ala Press, co-star of the poetry album Undercurrent (Hawai'i Dub Machine, 2011), and author of two collections of poetry: from unincorporated territory [hacha] (Tinfish Press, 2008) and from unincorporated territory [saina](Omnidawn Publishing, 2010), a finalist for the LA Times 2010 Book Prize for Poetry and the winner of the 2011 PEN Center USA Literary Award for Poetry. He is an Assistant Professor in the English Department at the University of Hawai'i, Manoa, where he teaches Pacific literature and creative writing.

Juliana Spahr's most recent books are Well Then There Now (Black Sparrow Press) and, co-edited with Stephanie Young, A Megaphone: Some Enactments, Some Numbers, and Some Essays about the Continued Usefulness of Crotchless-pants-and-a-machine-gun Feminism (ChainLinks).

on a ribbon. it sing. its going to fall. sir stop. itll fall. go back. a glass in the tree.
it will fall. the ribbon is fraying. maam

Helene Gelens is a writer of poetry, essays and prose. Her debut niet beginnen bij het hoofd (2006) was shortlisted for the C. Buddingh Prize for New Dutch Poetry and her second collection of poetry zet af en zweef (2010) was awarded the prestigious Jan Campert Prize. A third collection will be published spring 2013. Gelnss poetry has been translated in English, German, Spanish, Polish and Albanian. Gelens lives in Amsterdam and Antwerp.

Long considered one of the most outstanding poets of his generation, Erik Lindner advocates spreading poetry using all available means and media, and does so not only in his own homeland, but abroad as well. He regularly publishes his poems in renowned international literary magazines such as Poetry Review (England), Manuskripte (Austria), Interim (USA), Action potique (France), and Luvina (Mexico), which has even led to translations of his work into Chinese and Macedonian. Aside from his own volumes of poetry Tramontane (1996), Tong en trede (Tongue and Step, 2000), Tafel (Table, 2004), and Terrein (Terrain, 2010) and a book on the art of poetry published in 2009, Erik Lindner published a French anthology with contemporary Dutch poetry, Le verre est un liquide lent (Glass is a Lazy Liquid, 2003), presenting 33 of his poetry colleagues.

My panel talk at the glitch panel, SXSW (without visuals)

Thu 14 Mar 2013

My panel talk at the glitch panel, SXSW

http://www.alansondheim.org/sxsw.mp3

The panel was "2012: Year of the GLI.TC/H"
Panelists were Jon Cates, Jon Satrom, Patrick Lichty, myself, all thanks to Bishop Zareh, who brilliantly organized the whole thing.
The panel lasted an hour in the Longhorn Room, Omni Downtown, under the sub-category
"Art + Inspiration."

disclaimers: I meant Iraq when I said Iran; I didn't mean to imply to the Involuntaries came out of the avatar work; I'm not sure I mentioned Maud Liardon's name, I didn't have time to thank everyone at Chicago and WVU; I stumbled a bit about the theoretical material which I really didn't cover; I forgot to show the Facebook profile picture of the wounded WWI soldier; I recorded at too high a volume; I didn't record others; I had the recorder awkwardly set. On the other hand, a lot of material was shown and people were excited about it all. The Razorfish presentation was similar but shorter and cut off in the middle of a video. Hope you get something out of this; most but not all of the images (video/still) are older, but not all. Finally I didn't mean to sound like such an idiot about erasing my Odyssey platform at the end of the last performance with Sandy Baldwin. Everything was improvised, I did my best.

The day before my reading at UBC's Robson Series, I was fortunate to be able to attend a reading featuring Nicole Brossard, John Barton, and Catherine Owen as part of the Vancouver Writers Fest.

I took some photographs at the reading, which are posted on Rogue Embryo as a slide show. There are some especially nice moments in a collaborative reading by Nicole Brossard and Fred Wah.

Mon 18 Mar 2013

Call for Papers â€” extended to 15 April

International Poetry Seminar

Moving Back and Forth between Poetry and / as Translation: Nomadic Travels and Travails with Alice Notley and Pierre Joris

(7-8 November 2013, UniversitÃ© Libre de Bruxelles)

Convener: Franca Bellarsi
Co-convener: Peter Cockelbergh

Over the last forty years, the concepts of nomadism and rhizomatic writing have become ever more prominent in North-American verse. The different yet highly complementary trajectories of Alice Notley and Pierre Joris are two cases in point. In life, their nomadism made them journey in opposite directions via Englandâ€”with Joris relocating from Europe to the USA after a detour through the Algerian desert, and Notley leaving behind the American desert of her youth for New York, and later on Paris. Likewise, the multi-layered textual roamings that inform their poetic travails also unfold along a pattern of intersecting and diverging routes. Yet, whether in dialogue with or counterpoint to one another, Notley and Joris both engage in a poetics of ongoing movement and challenging fluidity, in writing practices that repeatedly subvert the conventional borders of identity, belonging and representation. Whereas Joris openly vindicates this nomad poetics, its presence may remain more implicit in Notleyâ€™s output but is, however, no less real.

Moreover, with their writing marked by a poetic hybridity that challenges the safe boundaries of nation, language and aesthetics, of gender and genre, history and myth, Notley and Joris also interrogate poetry as an actual form of cultural and experiential â€œferrying-over,â€ as an act of translation that extends well beyond the mere faithful rendition of a would-be original. Notleyâ€™s rhizomatic imagination may have blossomed within one and the same language, whereas Jorisâ€™s has regularly involved circulation between different linguistic systems. Nonetheless, both cultivate a poetics of in-betweenness and transgression that revels in permanent re-creation and transposition of myth, medium and concept inside the very space of English.

As practitioners of a personal, experimental poetics of disobedience whose nomadic remappings also expand our understanding of the very act of translation, Alice Notley and Pierre Joris are the two keynote speakers who, in both dialogue and counterpoint, will inspire the poetic travail of this two-day international seminar hosted by the UniversitÃ© Libre de Bruxelles (ULB) and its Department of Modern Languages and Literatures.

Under the impetus of the Notley-Joris tandem, this two-day poetic laboratory will thus be a space of reflection a) upon how â€œnomadismâ€ and its rhizomatic energies affect developments in contemporary poetry and poetic translation; and b) conversely, upon how different understandings of a â€œnomad poeticsâ€ may renew our approach to poetic production and translation across the ages, from the ancient epic up to Modernism and so-called Postmodernism.

We welcome proposals addressingâ€”but not necessarily limiting themselves toâ€”the following issues:

Whether a â€œnomad poeticsâ€ is explicitly or implicitly present in their work, who are the â€œnomad poetsâ€ of our time in the English language? To what extent, as in the case of Notley and Joris, can their poetics of disobedience and impurity be brought into dialogue and counterpoint? How does their work compare with the one of Notley and Joris? What are the non-Anglophone influencesâ€•both past and presentâ€•upon the contemporary forms of nomad and rhizomatic writing in English? How does the hybridity inherent in poetic nomadism and rhizomatic practice throw a different light on works in mixed or mixed-in languages and/or in mixed or mixed-in media? As an expression of restlessness and displacement, does nomad verse also question our conventional understanding of place and of its poetics? How do the works of Notley and Joris, for instance, renew our sense of the urban, of the desert, and of the aesthetics associated to such spaces? How do Notley and Jorisâ€™s respective remappings of myth illuminate the possible intersections between a nomad poetics and the (de)construction of personal and social myth? How does poetic nomadism bear on both our expression and understanding of trans-cultural and trans-historical experience? Even further, can poetic nomadism and its rhizomatic trajectories offer pathways for rendering trans-species experience? Do nomadism and its poetics of hybridity also constitute a form of ecopoetics? What contributions might they make to the ongoing theorization of ecopoetics? In what ways does a nomad poetics and its hybrid remappings challenge the conventionally accepted boundaries of gender and genre? As an active poet, how have the concepts of nomadism and rhizomatic writing influenced your experimental practice? To what extent has the different yet complementary nomadism of Notley and Joris inspired you? As a translator of poetry, what new possibilities might Jorisâ€™s concept of â€œnomadic translationâ€ open up for you? How might Notleyâ€™s re-creation and transposition of Sumerian myth into contemporary English enrich your practical understanding of your own craft? How does Notleyâ€™s and Jorisâ€™s respective interest in â€œimpure translationsâ€ invite us to revise assessments of past translations of poetic works into English/from English into other languages? What can a nomad poetics and its hybridity contribute to our understanding and theorization of â€œmetaphorâ€ and â€œimageryâ€? How do nomadism and its enlarged experiential field tie in with a poetics of the ugly, the commonplace, and the daily ordinary and trivial? With its poetics of impurity and disobedience, how does nomad writing both challenge and renew expressions of the sacred and spiritual in poetry? If we subscribe to the belief that poetry is not just an expressive practice, but also an epistemological one and a form of knowing, how does poetic nomadism help us reconsider our epistemological models? What light does a nomad poetics throw on the phenomenon of linguistic and cultural exile (whether the latter be chosen or enforced)? The working language of the seminar will be English, and the various Anglophone poetic traditions will be taken as a starting point, but we highly encourage comparative work, bringing poetic practices in other languages into the debate and reflection.

new from Burning Deck
Tue 19 Mar 2013

Burning Deck now has a Facebook page:
http://www.facebook.com/BurningDeck
Please check it out for pre-announcements, reviews, news.

2 new books:

1. Claudeâ€ˆRoyet-Journoud
FOUR ELEMENTAL BODIES
translated from the French by Keith Waldrop
Poetry, 368 pages, offset, smyth-sewn
ISBN 978-1-936194-13-1, original paperback $20
Publication date: April 15, 2013

Claude Royet-Journoudâ€™s Tetralogy assembles his central volumes REVERSAL, THE NOTION OF OBSTACLE, OBJECTS CONTAIN THE INFINITE, and NATURES INDIVISIBLE [LE RENVERSEMENT, LA NOTION Dâ€™OBSTACLE, LES OBJETS CONTIENNENT Lâ€™INFINI, LES NATURES INDIVISIBLES] Royet-Journoud is one of the most important contemporary French poets whose one-line manifesto: "Shall we escape analogy" signaled a revolutionary turn away from Surrealism and its lush imagery. His spare, â€œneutralâ€ language, stripped of devices like metaphor, assonance, alliteration, questions the nature of â€œpoetic languageâ€ as he explores the experience of loss.

Claude Royet-Journoud was born in 1941, in Lyon, and lives in Paris. He edited the legendary journal SIÃˆCLE Ã€ MAINS (with the late Anne-Marie Albiach & Michel Couturier, 1963-70) and, later, â€œA,â€ ZUK, and Lâ€™IN-PLANO. He has been a champion of American poetry since the sixties, when he translated Oppen and published Ashbery and Zukofsky. Interviews in English have appeared in LINGO #4 (1995) and in Serge Gavronsky: TOWARD A NEW POETICS, U of CA Press, 1994.

2. Markâ€ˆTardi
AIRPORT MUSIC
Poetry, 96 pages, offset, smyth-sewn
ISBN13 978-1-936194-14-8 original paperback $14
Publication date: April 15, 2013

Mark Tardi works at the intersection of American and Polish culture. The present volume plays on the tension between impalpable â€œairâ€ and solid â€œportâ€, between a single focus (Sean Scullyâ€™s stripes) and shifting directions of torque (Lee Bontecou), between hope stretching outward and implosion of infinite regress. It is, to quote Jennifer Moxleyâ€™s definition of the poem, â€œa bridge of half-measures on the way to the possible.â€

Mark Tardi grew up in Chicago. Other publications include the chapbook PART FIRSTâ€"CHOPINâ€™S FEET and the full length collection EUCLID SHUDDERS. He has guest-edited an issue of the journal AUFGABE devoted to contemporary Polish poetry and poetics.

Antiwar poetry articles finally in print

Tue 19 Mar 2013

Dear Poetics List Members,

Does anyone remember that for an article I was working on a few years ago I posted a call for antiwar poetry? It was accepted for publication about three years ago, but due to backlogs and whatnot it took until now to find its way into print. In the meantime, I wrote another article focusing on Brian Turner's *Phantom Noise *(2010).

I again want to thank all the members who wrote to me and shared ideas and poems with me. I couldn't have written it without everyone's help. Even though I was only able to write about a limited number of poets, I learned from the broad range of approaches the possibilities available to us in English.

Here is the original article (published most recently):

"Resisting Imperial Jouissance: The Transideological Line in Recent American Antiwar Poetry." *Canadian Review of American Studies *43, no. 1 (2013): 1-22.

http://utpjournals.metapress.com/content/lg6n57260r44nq06/

And here is the newer article within a special issue on imperial affect:

"Transversality and Imperial Affect: Situating Brian Turner's Phantom Noise." *Parallax *18, no. 4 (2012/11/01 2012): 42-53.

Jesse Glass Johns Hopkins Reading 1980 Nostalgia from Rick Peabody

Thu 21 Mar 2013

Featured in this issue of Johns Hopkins University MFA On-Line Maga Doctor TJ Eckleberg Review. Gives a pretty good picture of what was happening in the Baltimore-Washington area in those times, this side of Some of Us Press--which, maybe was finished by 1980. Michael Martone of the Fiction Collective organized the reading. I don't have much time for nostalgia but this might be worth a look.

New Book Announcement

Thu 21 Mar 2013

Shira Dentz's new book, door of thin skins (CavanKerry Press), is available now at Amazon and the publisher's website!
http://www.amazon.com/door-thin-skins-Emerging-Voices/dp/1933880368

"The misuse of power in a patient/doctor relationship in shattering detail. A patient is cut off from her body and the doctor imposes his. What the poet must do, and does, is let language be torn apart so that the senses (sense) may re-collect in beauty, in the body of the poem." --Eleni Sikelianos

"door of thin skins is a perfect title for Shira Dentz’s latest work. In this fever dream of a book, Dentz’s language is like a spirit who can pass through the scrims of time and perspective, but not unscathed. These poems are the toll. She sings what fails to kill us. "—Cornelius Eady

Bird-be-here! A review.

Sun 24 Mar 2013

“How big was the town?” asks Christine Deavel in her debut collection, Woodnote (Bear Star Press). No miles, blocks, lots. It is “One crockery bowl filled with red leaves” [“Home Town (Over and Over)”]. We can lift, fill, create, and know it. One bowl + red leaves = an assay, a familiar weight and measure, an image. A fey specificity. Finish reading this review, by Sarai, of Deavel's Woodnote: blog.thewritingdisorder.com/?p=272 reading in SAN FRANCISCO: Monday (3/25) - Dunagan, Fenner, Fisher - Bird & Beckett - 7pm

Sun 24 Mar 2013

TOMORROW - Monday, March 25th at 7:00 pm, poets Patrick James Dunagan, Derek Fenner and Christina Fisher read poems and engage in repartee at Bird & Beckett Books (653 Chenery Street, in San Francisco, just two blocks from the Glen Park BART Station). Please come and forward this on to anyone and everyone who might be interested. Dunagan’s upcoming booke, Das Gedichtete, hasn't quite made it off the Ugly Duckling Presse just yet, so we've put together a slim and extremely limited edition of poems by all three for distribution at the reading, so don't miss out! (Also, the new issue of AMERARCANA: A Bird & Beckett Review has just been delivered, featuring even more poems by Dunagan & FIsher, along with many others. Mark you calendars for a release reading on Saturday, April 6, 7 pm.)

More on the poets:

A graduate of the Poetics program at New College of California, Patrick James Dunagan lives in San Francisco and works at Gleeson library for the University of San Francisco. Just bout now or sometime his writings appeared in: 1913, Amerarcana, Big Bridge, Bookslut, House Organ, Lighting'd Press, Newpages, Otoliths, Rain Taxi, Shampoo, and The Volta. His books include Das Gedichtete (Ugly Duckling), There Are People Who Say That Painters Shouldn't Talk: A GUSTONBOOK (Post Apollo), Her Friends Down at the French Cafe Had No English Words For Me (PUSH), from Chansonniers (Blue Press) and Spirit Guest (Lew Gallery).

Derek Fenner is an artist, writer, publisher, and educator. He is the author of My Favorite Color is Red (Bootstrap Press 2005), I No Longer Believe in the Sun: Love Letters to Katie Couric (Boostrap Press 2009), Wild Schemes (Lew Gallery 2010), and I No Longer Believe in the Northern Lights: Love Letters to Sarah Palin (13 b'ak'tun press 2012). He lives in Oakland, CA.

Christina Fisher's Maybe, A Painter is published on Auguste Press, and she looks forward to her next collection, YOUNG. She lives in San Francisco.

damascene road passaggio, selections

Dear, Sweating out the hubris from the struggling repertoire (hands facing upward always full too full for love to settle into, always against the grade. Is it that empty hands tremble most like an empty mouth with no words to feedthe darkness that is deepest there). We are all out of error, the passaggio stuck, in error mimicry ends, in error the opening theme is more precise, more, so to speak. And my heart in error most, giving out and out on Broadway, legato resonating, backed by the metal tresses of that building, of that A, the backless Y. And the w framing the inaudible exit. Do we need a glossarist so we can abandon complexity (just for a moment? Does one need to name these Books of Gale? Contra Gale? Muttering in cadentia, visually muttering the opening Act or the point where the heroine falls, fully clothed, from the mist and we realize that yes we are all players and she most of all is tired.

New and On View: Mudlark Flash No. 73 (2013)

The New God is a Revolver in the Sun and So Death Blows His Little Fucking Trumpet

by John Valentine

Author's Note: It's been some 16 years now since the passing of Larry Levis, and he is missed. He wasn't just an extraordinary wordsmith. He was--as are we all--an uncanny event, "an unfinishable agenda of the stars." What I've admired about his poems is his amazing ability to point at the uniqueness, the singularity, of the existential moment and the people in it. A very precise example of this is the poem "Photograph: Migrant Worker, Parlier, California, 1967" in the collection ELEGY. Here, we are invited to dwell upon the utter facticity of Johnny Dominguez, his individual, transient, and profoundly irreplaceable being-there. In so doing, Levis reminds us all of our own such being. "The New God is a Revolver in the Sun" and "So Death Blows His Little Fucking Trumpet" are thus a kind of pointing as well, an homage, a reminder of a man and his very special talent. JV

When Mudlark Flash No. 73 first appeared in January of this year, 2013, it was a single, "The New God is a Revolver in the Sun," just the one poem. But since then Valentine has made what he calls "another attempt at a Levis tribute" and that poem, "So Death Blows His Little Fucking Trumpet" has been added to Mudlark Poster No. 73 here, a flip side, thus making it new again.

John Valentine teaches philosophy at the Savannah College of Art and Design in Savannah, Georgia. His poems have appeared in various journals, including The Sewanee Review, The Midwest Quarterly, Southern Poetry Review, The Adirondack Review, and Rock Salt Plum Review. He has had five chapbooks published with Pudding House Publications, and one chapbook with Big Table Publishing.

Spread the word. Far and wide,

William Slaughter

"You Are The Ocean"
â€œYou are not a drop in the oceanâ€¦ You are the Ocean, in a Dropâ€
- Rumi
Atlantic Ocean â€“ Morocco Fishing Village

We are but cogs in the great wheel of life
Keep your place, quiet, do not be bold
Everyone has their rank in the chaos of life
Keep to yours, be obedient, we are told...

But life is not machine, mankind are not cogsâ€¦
And to think that we are and it is we must stop!
We are not, as Rumi said, a drop in the ocean,
But rather the entire oceanâ€¦ in a drop!

New Release from Shearsman Books
Sat 30 Mar 2013

New collection of poetry by Sydney poet, Pam Brown :

Home by Dark
by Pam Brown

published by Shearsman Books (isbn 978 1 84861 288 4 paperback 132 pps) (Cover Painting by Melbourne artist Jon Cattapan)
_____ Rachel Blau DuPlessis says : Pam Brown's work is fearless, acutely observant, witty and wry. She delights in the curiosities of the everyday, in notational sprezzatura, in the penetrating encapsulation of layers of time, chance and meaning with her twists of lexicon, diction and line break. This is a work of quotidian consternation, breaking through from irony to sheer fondness and painful shadows. She sees askew - and 'Home by Dark' has its own poignant look at decades, bodies, and changes. Pam Brown is a wonderful writer, one of the scintillating wizards of Oz poetry.

Kate Lilley says: Pam Brown’s 'Home by Dark' is plainly beautiful: a subtle, moody daybook, warding off darkness and ‘counter-revolutionary’ boredom. Brown’s engaged intelligence and light touch draws us into the flows and eddies of ‘a poetry world’ where ‘everything is providential,/or not'. Reserved and intimate, swift and immersive, these poems are ‘right here’, in the midst of precarity: 'strike another match, go start anew'

NationalPoetryMonth.ca - a month of visual poetry
Sun 31 Mar 2013

AngelHousePress presents NationalPoetryMonth.ca, a celebration of poetic form of all kinds and an homage to those poets who try to extend the definition of poetry. This year's edition, which marks our fifth anniversary, is a tribute to the Last Vispo, an anthology of visual poetry edited by Nico Vassilakis and Crag Hill and published by Fantagraphics in 2012. The site contains visual poetry, asemic writing, collage, concrete poetry and other forms of whimsy by artists from Australia, Canada, the USA, Finland, Hungary, Italy, and Sweden. Each day in April a different visual poem will be shown. AngelHousePress thanks all who participated and sent work for consideration and wishes the month had at least forty five days in order to showcase all the great poetry we received.

Starting April 1, please visit NationalPoetryMonth.ca for a different visual poem every day.

Maggie O'Sullivan @ the CUNY Graduate Center!! Thursday 4/4!!

Sun 31 Mar 2013

â€œEcho-Poeticsâ€:

a Reading and Conversation with

Maggie Oâ€™Sullivan

Thursday, April 4, 2013

6PM, Room 5414

CUNY Graduate Center (5th Avenue & 34th Street, NYC)

free!

*reception to follow *

Please join the GC Poetics Group for a reading and conversation with poet and artist Maggie Oâ€™Sullivan, making a rare visit to New York from England. This event will center around the idea of â€œecho-poetics,â€ a term Charles Bernstein uses in his â€œIntroductionâ€ to Oâ€™Sullivanâ€™s Body of Work. What constitutes an â€œecho-poeticsâ€? How does this diverge or complement ecopoetics? What does it mean to â€œhalf-sing a songâ€ and how does this connect to modern renderings of lyric?

* **** *

Maggie Oâ€™Sullivan is a British-based poet, performer, and visual artist, whose books include In the House of the Shaman (1993), Body of Work(2006), WATERFALLS (2009) and murmur, newly published by Veer Books. Her work has also appeared extensively in journals and anthologies and she has performed internationally, often in collaboration. She is the editor of

Out of Everywhere: An Anthology of Contemporary Linguistically Innovative Poetry by Women in North America and the UK, and collaborated with Bruce Andrews on eXcLa (1993). She has a close association with Veer Books and the Birkbeck Contemporary Poetics Research Centre. All Origins are Lonely(2003) was the inaugural Veer publication, and her *ALTO â€“ London Poems, 1975 â€“ 1984 *was published by Veer in 2009. Online recordings of her work may be heard at PennSound. Her website is www.maggieosullivan.co.uk.

The GC Poetics Group is grateful for the support and co-sponsorship of the Doctoral Students Council.

April 2013

77 messages · Sun 31 Mar 2013 – Mon 29 Apr 2013

April 2013 was a small, outward-facing month — seventy-seven messages — that spent its National Poetry Month looking across borders and toward those in need, the thinned room reaching, in its diminishment, past its own edges. There was no large argument, only a scatter of threads pointing outward: a recovered history of avant-garde exchange between continents, a fund for poets in trouble, a few small experiments. The month was the list at its most modest and its most generous, giving what little attention it had left to poets far away and poets in difficulty.

The largest thread recovered a transnational history. A feature in Jacket2 gathered a historic Bengali poetry publication, and the room learned, or remembered, how "Allen Ginsberg brought back some avant-garde writings of contemporary Bengali poets" from his travels half a century before — the Krittibas poets of Calcutta linked to the American underground through a single traveler's suitcase of manuscripts. It was the list's oldest and healthiest instinct, the outward reach: the reminder that the experimental impulse was never American property but a global conversation, briefly made visible again.

The quarrel, such as a seventy-seven-message month can muster, was really an appeal to conscience. A thread for Poets in Need kept the mutual-aid fund in view — the practical machinery by which the community catches its own when they fall — the recognition that behind the abstractions of poetics were people who sometimes could not pay the rent. In a diminished month the room turned, tellingly, to care: not argument but aid, not theory but the fund.

Around the edges ran the smallest keeping — a call for work, a note on a machine-poetry experiment, a scatter of event notices. The infrastructure carried on at its faintest, the little magazines and the small appeals doing their quiet work in a room grown very quiet indeed — the reach outward and the care for one's own being, in a diminished April, almost the only energies the list had left to spend.

I have set April down exactly as the archive delivered it — the recovered Bengali avant-garde carried west by Ginsberg, the fund for poets in need, and the faint keeping of a thin month — because it was the month the diminished list spent its little remaining energy reaching outward and downward: toward the poets of another continent, and toward its own members in trouble. A room that will use a seventy-seven-message April to remember a transnational avant-garde and to keep alive the fund that catches falling poets is a room whose generosity outlasted its size, still practicing, at the edge of its own decline, the two things it had always done best: reaching past its borders, and taking care of its own.

A historic Bengali poetry publication in Jacket2--from Aryanil Mukherjee

A historic Bengali poetry publication in Jacket2 by Aryanil Mukherjee <https://www.facebook.com/aryanil.mukherjee> (Notes<https://www.facebook.com/profile.php?id=1742271370&sk=notes>) on Monday, May 21, 2012 at 6:47pm<https://www.facebook.com/notes/aryanil-mukherjee/a-historic-bengali-poetry-publication-in-jacket2/10150843238708457#>

Almost, 50 years back, in 1964, Allen Ginsberg brought back some avant-garde writings of contemporary Bengali poets of the Krittibaas and Hungry Generation groups from Calcutta. Allen helped Lawrence Ferlinghetti do a special issue on Bengali poetry in the City Lights magazine.

(as it turned out during our correspondance re The Hungry Poets, Ginsberg's time in India and Aryanil's long truly fascinating, labyrinthine & mesmerizing recounting the inside history of these people, places,events, cross influences & noninfluences, complications etc through the years-- i had this special issue and xeroxed and sent copiesof the poetry & AG's notes to Aryanil--a kind of magical synchronicity of the moment--d-bc)

http://jacket2.org/feature/adaptations-bengali-poetry/

A similar but more extensive portfolio of Bengali poetry was released today in Jacket2 (linked above). The work published is largely an English translation of poetry and essays coming from a young group of experimental Bengali writers. Since the dawn of the new millennium, they began writing, quite unconsciously,

I think, a newer kind of avant-garde Bengali poetry that is perhaps more multi-epistemological than ever before. As its traits began to gel by the end of the first decade, this group, where I proudly belong, felt a pressing need to identify and formalize their collective poetics. They called it "Paribishhayee Kabitaa" or Circumcontentive Poetry. A Circumcontentive Poetry Movement issue came out in the Kaurab magazine in Jan, 2011. We also run a low-profile blog - http://circumcontentivepoetry.blogspot.com where we print our new work for group discussion.

While we welcome this historic publication with great delight, I, on behalf, of this small group of writers, express our deepest gratitude to a few. First to the feature editor Sarah Dowling, for firstly soliciting the work and spending painstaking hours editing the bizarre quasi-scientific poetics of our crazy English tongue, trying to normalize it for her "6-pack Jacket Joes". Sarah, it was a joy to work with you! Secondly, I/we remain profoundly indebted to Jacket2 editor Michael Hennessey for so many reasons that cannot be listed here. The comfort of working with Mike has been unprecedented.

This section could not have been done without the direct support of Pat Clifford and the constant encouragement we receive from Charles Bernstein and Al Fileris. Bengalis are generally worse than New Yorkers when it comes to thanking and I am trying so hard to disprove that.

Urging you all to read it and share. & yes, slowly please.

Rattapallax iPad issue Debut
Mon 1 Apr 2013

Rattapallax just released the magazine as an app. We thin
Dear Friends

Rattapallax just released the magazine as an app. We think its ground-breaking and radically different than any other literary magazine. What makes this unique is that it is a self-contained app, and not a reproduction of the "print" journal on a tablet. Most publications send a PDF file of their print journal to a third party app that "displays" it in their interface. Rather, our magazine was designed from the ground-up for the iPad by Stoycode. There is no version of it in print or online.

It was conceived and designed for the iPad. Sorry, only the iPad. Maybe in the future it will be available on other devices.

Editor-in-Chief Flávia Rocha put together a remarkable selection of work. Special focuses on Marie Ponsot, Julius Chingono, Scott Hightower, Jill Magi, Monica Youn, Mallika Sengupta, and many others. Also, fiction, art, essays and music/songs edited by Haale. As well as the full-length poetic film by Cecilia Vicuna.

So please download the app at:
https://itunes.apple.com/us/app/rattapallax21/id623482251?mt=8

More info on the issue at http://rattapallax.com/blog/magazine/

The issue was edited by Flávia Rocha, Alan Cheuse, Craig Epplin, Natalia Fedorova, Catherine Fletcher, Haale, Idra Novey, Tera Vale Ragan, Lloyd Robson, Edwin Torres, Caecilia Tripp, and Fernanda Rocha. With help from Ram Devineni and Tamara Alazri.

Tom Bissell kicks off our online tribute to Fox: â€œLiterary reputation is a fragile, innocuous, and transient thingâ€”a butterfly that dies in your palm moment you capture it. Thus: do the work, which is the only thing over which a writer has some measure of control. Paula did the work. It was there for us to find, still vitally alive. In that sense, I wonder if maybe we donâ€™t have all this backward. Maybe certain books and certain writers are not found. The work of Paula Fox, I think, found us.â€ Read more (http://www.theparisreview.org/blog/2013/04/01/paula-fox-in-plain-sight/?utm_source=newsletterApril2013&utm_medium=email&utm_campaign=PaulaFoxBissell) .

A similar but more extensive portfolio of Bengali poetry was released today in Jacket2 (linked above). The work published is largely an English translation of poetry and essays coming from a young group of experimental Bengali writers. Since the dawn of the new millennium, they began writing, quite unconsciously, I think, a newer kind of avant-garde Bengali poetry that is perhaps more multi-epistemological than ever before. As its traits began to gel by the end of the first decade, this group, where I proudly belong, felt a pressing need to identify and formalize their collective poetics. Almost, 50 years back, in 1964, Allen Ginsberg brought back some avant-garde writings of contemporary Bengali poets of the Krittibaas and Hungry Generation groups from Calcutta. Allen helped Lawrence Ferlinghetti do a special issue on Bengali poetry in the City Lights magazine.

(as it turned out during our correspondance re The Hungry Poets, Ginsberg's time in India and Aryanil's long truly fascinating, labyrinthine & mesmerizing recounting the inside history of these people, places,events, cross influences & noninfluences, complications etc through the years-- i had this special issue and xeroxed and sent copiesof the poetry & AG's notes to Aryanil--a kind of magical synchronicity of the moment--d-bc)

http://jacket2.org/feature/adaptations-bengali-poetry/

A similar but more extensive portfolio of Bengali poetry was released today in Jacket2 (linked above). The work published is largely an English translation of poetry and essays coming from a young group of experimental Bengali writers. Since the dawn of the new millennium, they began writing, quite unconsciously, I think, a newer kind of avant-garde Bengali poetry that is perhaps more multi-epistemological than ever before. As its traits began to gel by the end of the first decade, this group, where I proudly belong, felt a pressing need to identify and formalize their collective poetics. They called it "Paribishhayee Kabitaa" or Circumcontentive Poetry.
A Circumcontentive Poetry Movement issue came out in the Kaurab magazine in Jan, 2011. We also run a low-profile blog - http://circumcontentivepoetry.blogspot.com where we print our new work for group discussion.

While we welcome this historic publication with great delight, I, on behalf, of this small group of writers, express our deepest gratitude to a few. First to the feature editor Sarah Dowling, for firstly soliciting the work and spending painstaking hours editing the bizarre quasi-scientific poetics of our crazy English tongue, trying to normalize it for her "6-pack Jacket Joes". Sarah, it was a joy to work with you! Secondly, I/we remain profoundly indebted to Jacket2 editor Michael Hennessey for so many reasons that cannot be listed here. The comfort of working with Mike has been unprecedented.

This section could not have been done without the direct support of Pat Clifford and the constant encouragement we receive from Charles Bernstein and Al Fileris. Bengalis are generally worse than New Yorkers when it comes to thanking and I am trying so hard to disprove that.

Urging you all to read it and share. & yes, slowly please.

Nomadic and Processual Poetics: A Symposium with Pierre Joris and Allen Fisher, 17th-18th May 2013. Bangor University

FINAL DEADLINE FOR PROPOSALS: APRIL 15th

This one-day symposium is organised by Contempo, the Centre for Contemporary Poetry which is run jointly by Aberystwyth and Bangor Universities.

It will consider the scope and applicability of the ideas of Pierre Joris and Allen Fisher and related poetics, including issues of translation and place-specific writing, in the light of the archipelagic World-and-UK context of the many â€˜devolved voicesâ€™ of contemporary poetry.

A nomadic poetics is â€¦ always changing, morphing, moving through languages, cultures, terrains, times without stopping. Refuelling halts are called poases, they last a night or a day, the time of a poem, & then move on. A nomadic poetics needs mindfulness in & of the drift (dÃ©rive) â€“ there is no at-homeness here, but only an ever more displaced drifting. For the language to be accurate to the condition of nomadicity, it too has to be drifting, to be always â€˜on the wayâ€™, as Celan puts it.â€¨

Pierre Joris, Notes Towards a Nomadic Poetics.

The new works . . . include objects and processes, process-showings and methodologies in a world of multiple possibilities that is . . . complementing the political arena, without being its voice. . . . It is a requirement of this art that . . . the poetry is always â€˜yet to be foundâ€™ in the process of its making, and that making continues to take place through the physiology of the reader.â€¨

Allen Fisher, The Topological Shovel, Four Essays.

Confirmed contributors include Pierre Joris, Allen Fisher, Jean Portante, Mandy Bloomfield, Ian Davidson, Steven Hitchins, Peter Barry and ZoÃ« Skoulding.

Suggestions for further fifteen-minute talks/papers (followed by discussion) are invited on any aspect of the work and/or cultural contexts of Pierre Joris and/or Allen Fisher. Please send a 200-word outline of your proposed topic by April 15th 2013. Those who wish to contribute to discussion without presenting a paper are also welcome, but please confirm attendance by the same date if you plan to come. Fee: Â£30 waged or Â£20 student/unwaged.

A reading featuring Allen Fisher, Pierre Joris, Nicole Peyrafitte and Jean Portante will take place before the symposium at 6.30pm on the Friday evening, May 17th.â€¨ All events will be held in Bangor University.

Please send proposals to both e-mail addresses below:â€¨ Dr ZoÃ« Skoulding ([redacted]) and Professor Peter Barry ([redacted])

i find this enormously troubling, considering how few reviews there already are in canadian literature for small press poetry and fiction;

i wonder, if everyone wrote as many worthy reviews for as many books and/or chapbooks they produced, would we even be in this situation?

if we aren't willing to talk about what we've already produced, if we aren't willing to understand the work that has already been done, is there any point in producing any more?

Plug for upcoming workshop online:

Making Matter Move: Philosophy and Physics in Poetry

As we consider major philosophical subjects in our work, we will also look to the seemingly separate realm of physics for challenge and material. Though philosophers traditionally tend to work in ideas, poets go the next step, integrating intellectual considerations with tangible aspects of the ephemeral and the carnal - with matter itself. Poetry allows us to broaden knowledge, bridge schools of thought and access new inroads for processing the world, rooted in our potential to imagine and conceive.

Each week we will focus on one major philosophical topic such as Life, Love, War, and Death by crafting poems that approach related issues and by employing the poet's intuitive senses as well as the intellect. We'll employ poetry as permission and a means to not only be moved, but to move the matter of world and words. A medley of poems will be stimulate us by Anne Carson, Paul Celan, Emily Dickinson, Wallace Stevens, WisÅ,awa Szymborska & many more.

Dorothea Lasky this Friday at CU Boulder, 4pm, Norlin 5th floor

Tue 9 Apr 2013

The Creative Writing Program at CU Boulder presents an afternoon reading withDorothea Lasky (featuring short sets from two of our third-year MFA students: Rachel Levy & Sara Renee Marshall) this Friday, April 12th @ 4pm!at the Center for British & Irish StudiesM549, 5th floor of the Norlin Libraryhttp://www.colorado.edu/campusmap/map.html?bldg=W-NQ Free & open to the public! Dorothea Lasky, a rising star in the world of contemporary poetry, melds everything from the confessional mode of Plath with the avant-garde leanings of Bernadette Mayer to the classic vitriol of Catullus and the passion of Sappho, creating something wholly original, vibrant, necessary, and fierce. Openendedly allegorical and unabashedly social, with equal parts psychological inquiry, sexual sublimity, and doubt-laden reverence, hers is a voice unafraid to embody the authoritative force of antiquity, rescuing our current preoccupation with theoretical discourse from its fear of the mirror, and identity politics from its imprisonment therein. She was born and raised in St. Louis, Missouri. She has published three collections of poetry, ThunderBird, AWE, and Black Life, as well as several chapbooks, including the polemical Poetry Is Not a Project. Her poems have appeared in a number of prominent publications, including the New Yorker, Paris Review, and American Poetry Review. Known for her colloquial, even slangy style and dramatic readings, Lasky acknowledges that “there is a kind of arrogance, a kind of supreme power, that when infused with a little real humility and expertise, makes a poem. Because the poem is always about the speaker.” Lasky currently lives on the East Coast. Listen to her read "I Had a Man" http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=eHrqx_rBc4s

& featuring Levy & Marshall:

Rachel Levy lives in Boulder, CO, where she is finishing an MFA in creative writing at the University of Colorado. Her prose has been published in The Collagist, Everyday Genius, PANK, FENCE, and other journals. Her first chapbook, Necessary Objects, was published by Tree Light Books. Sara Renee Marshall is a poet and editor. She lends a hand at The Volta and Noemi Press. Recent poems and essays are out or forthcoming in places like Octopus Magazine, CutBank, and Colorado Review. Her chapbook, AFFECTIONATELY WE CALL THIS THE HOUSE, is forthcoming from Brave Men Press. A New Kind of Workshop
Wed 10 Apr 2013

A NEW KIND OF WORKSHOP -- “ON THE ROAD”

Sacred Sites and the Creative Word is offering a new kind of workshop. It invites writers to enroll in its new and building workshop series, one that takes small groups of poets & writers “on the road” to investigate archeologically significant and/or spiritually historical sites while experimenting with the writing process. “Global hotspots” (metaphorically speaking) will provide a base for a collaborative creative experiment. Intellectually based but also inspired by the spiritual history, energies, and aesthetic beauty of each site, the traveling workshop will also allow time for the actual writing (you will work on paper, in journals, on laptops or Ipads). These traveling workshops will also build time in for discussions with the other writers. Visual and new-media artists may also apply for the workshops we are now scheduling. Hybrid artistic collaborations are most encouraged.

Writing “on the road” will encourage momentum for writers towards their work -- and insist upon movement within the writing itself. The trips we will do to such sites (France, Egypt, Peru are being scheduled) will inspire those with interests in ancient spirituality and shamanism, the feminine divine and alternative spiritual practices, and the intellectual history of religion and art. Accommodations will be comfortable but not pricey, and are fully included along with ground transport.

Laura Hinton, Ph.D., Professor of English at the City College of New York (CUNY), author most recently of the poetry book Sisyphus My Love in addition to critical books and essays on feminist theory in literature and art, will lead the first workshop scheduled for *July 11-23, 2013, “The Sacred Feminine in the South of France: Virgin, Magdalene, and Black Madonnas.” *She has 15 years experience traveling and studying this terrain. Workshop space is limited. See the website for full trip-workshop information details and registration, now open for this journey. And keep watching for more schedules to come:

Speaking the Earth's Languages brings together for the first time critical discussions of postcolonial poetics from Australia and Chile. The book crosses multiple languages, landscapes, and disciplines, and draws on a wide range of both oral and written poetries, in order to make strong claims about the importance of 'a nomad poetics' – not only for understanding Aboriginal or Mapuche writing practices but, more widely, for the problems confronting contemporary literature and politics in colonized landscapes.

The book begins by critiquing canonical examples of non-indigenous postcolonial poetics. Incisive re-readings of two icons of Australian and Chilean poetry, Judith Wright (1915–2000) and Pablo Neruda (1904–1973), provide rich insights into non-indigenous responses to colonization in the wake of modernity. The second half of the book establishes compositional links between Aboriginal and Mapuche poetics, and between such oral and written poetics more generally.

The book's final part develops an 'emerging synthesis' of contemporary Aboriginal and Mapuche poetics, with reference to the work of two of the most important avant-garde Aboriginal and Mapuche poets of recent times, Lionel Fogarty (1958–) and Paulo Huirimilla (1973–).

Speaking the Earth's Languages uses these fascinating links between Aboriginal and Mapuche poetics as the basis of a deliberately nomadic, open-ended theory for an Australian–Chilean postcolonial poetics. "The central argument of this book," the author writes, "is that a nomadic poetics is essential for a genuinely postcolonial form of habitation, or a habitation of colonized landscapes that doesn't continue to replicate colonialist ideologies involving indigenous dispossession and environmental exploitation."

Stuart Cooke is a poet, translator, and scholar based on the Gold Coast, Queensland, where he is a Lecturer in Creative Writing and Literary Studies at Griffith University. His poetry has appeared as Corrosions (2010) and Edge Music (2011) and he is the translator of Eleven Poems, September 1973(2007) by the Chilean Juan Garrido-Salgado.

About Remote Encounters from Garrett Lynch:

Remote Encounters: Connecting bodies, collapsing spaces and temporal ubiquity in networked performance

keywords: performance, networked, body, space, place, time, real, virtual

URL: http://remote-encounters.tumblr.com/

:: Description ::

Since the internet entered the public domain in the early 90's there has been an explosion in artistic interest in its use as a means, site and context for creative practice. Much of this practice is performative in nature; ether originating from a performance background and using the internet as a new site and/or augmenting aspect of that practice or is a form of practice developed as direct response to the internet and becomes performative to some degree in its spectatorship.

It has been well established that the internet is not the first or only example of the use of a networked technology repurposed for creative practice. There is a clear time line that can be traced back through the practice of Roy Ascott and his coining of the term Telematic Art in the 1980's to artist's use of satellite networks, telephone and other telecommunication devices as each were invented. Seen in this respect the internet can be considered as one of many networked technologies that has enabled networked performance.

The internet is unique however in that it is not a singular network type that favours a particular form of media, broadcast or spectatorship. Most famously known as the network of networks it enables multiple protocols of which the world wide web's http is just one, is multimedia in nature and encourages intertextual folding and layering of media, is multi-directional not simply a broadcast communication form, de-centralised in ownership and the majority of its technologies are openly accessible.

Remote Encounters, a two-day international conference with performance evening, aims to explore the use of networks as a means to enhance or create a wide variety of performance arts. How do networks as a site for performance provide opportunities for us as artists and performers? In particular how can we remotely collaborate, merge geographically separate places and times, reconfigure the space of performance and the relationship between artist and audience?

Location: ATRiuM, Cardiff School of Creative & Cultural Industries, University of Glamorgan, Adam Street, Cardiff, Wales, CF24 2FN.

Date: 11th - 12th of April 2013

Our proposal in brief:

Pain dance / performance in OpenSim with Sandy Baldwin: textual materials would be presented in the form of chat and sound-over/ voice-over. We would be working with distorted avatars and modeling from tissues, etc. [We'll perform in Second Life.] The text would deal with issues of death, sex, and pain in virtual worlds.

KlezKanada Poetry Retreat
Fri 12 Apr 2013

Dear Friends,

After memorable launch last year, North America's first Jewish Poetry retreat is back again! I'm honored to be co-hosting it with poet Adeena Karasick. The retreat is part of the (very hip) KlezKanada festival, held in Laurentian Mountains Aug 19-25.

The week-long fest is big and very much cross-genre and so in addition to the actual daily writing sessions there will be great opportunities for collaborations with musicians, dancers, theater and visual art folks - who'll all be there alongside us. Canadian Laurentians are gorgeous - mountains, forest, lake are all right there- and there's going to be A LOT of great music all the time.

Please spread the word among fellow poets/friends/students etc.!

Some scholarships available for folks under 35! Applications are due by May 1st here's the link to application: http://klezkanada.org/scholarships/.

Information about the KlezKan retreat is here: http://klezkanada.org/poetry-retreat/ and below's the blurb:

Poetry’s greatest moments have often been measured by its proximity to music. And so, Klezkanada – legendary festival of Jewish music and culture – is inviting poets world-wide to join the festivities at a week-long writing retreat. Two daily workshop sessions will explore the poetic tradition and anti-tradition across the three millennia of Jewish discourse, with a special focus on the avant-garde and otherwise contemporary work. We’ll look at ritualistic poetry, mighty Jewish vernaculars, ecstatic tradition of poetry-prophecy; Talmud and its dialectic-all-yelling-at-once heritage; practice of Found Poetry and Uncreative Writing; Kabbalistic language experiments; Jazz/Klezmer inspired poetry – and so much more. There will be one-on-one time with the faculty and encounters with internationally celebrated poets, musicians, artists, and academics. Poets will be encouraged to draw inspiration from the numerous concerts, and to collaborate with musicians, dancers, painters and other participating artists, to attend lectures, Yiddish classes, sing, dance, celebrate. Held in the beautiful mountain settings in the heart of the Canadian Laurentians.

Spread the word!!

Gradually the World: New and Selected Poems, 1982 – 2013

By Burt Kimmelman

Drawings by Basil King

"The specificity of Burt Kimmelman's poems has, for more than thirty years, been a singularly locating force. It situates us in space, in relation to the luminosity of objects, art, and one another. That every shadow of wonder can stand forth in the most familiar words is the gift this poet offers his readers time and again." – Susan Howe

Come to the Book Launch at Poets House on September 20th, 7-9. (Please save the date!) Directions: PoetsHouse.org..

Praise for Burt Kimmelman's Earlier Poetry

“A rare evocation . . . the wonder of this world in itself.” – Robert Creeley

“Artful, fastidious, learned . . . I am delighted by so much feeling for style.”
– Alfred Kazin

“A strict & powerful accounting, leaving me – for one – filled with admiration & hooked on every word.”
– Jerome Rothenberg

“Form calls deeply to form, as though the works … lifted one to the very brim of language….”
– Michael Heller

“Few contemporary poets so gracefully demonstrate classic notions of what the practice of poetry must be.”
– Madeline Tiger, Jacket

“Exceptionally intelligent and necessary . . ."
– Ed Foster, Poetry Project Newsletter

“His confidence lies with the poem itself, that he has found it (or that it has found him)….”
– Norman Finkelstein, The Offending Adam

“[In Kimmelman's poems] the arts restate the questions we have been asking and the ways they clean and stretch our questions reward us more than answers would.” – William Bronk

“As quiet an experience as anyone could wish for.”
– Cid Corman

“He finds what is luminously transcendent….”
– Harvey Shapiro

“Worth our own best attention. ”
– John Taggart

–* *Jon Curley, Talisman

“Attains ‘the simple … facts’.”
– Samuel Menashe

“A verse so delicate and so far from insistence….”
– Karl Young, Light & Dust

“Kimmelman's poems attest to the simple majesties of being, the massive implications of the everyday."

Exhibit at Boog Fest's 10th Annual Small, Small Press Fair
Mon 15 Apr 2013

Hi all,

Boog City would like to invite you to exhibit at our 10th annual small, small press fair (with indie records and crafts, too).

The fair will once again span two days, Sat. Aug. 3-Sun. Aug. 4, and be held at Brooklyn’s Unnameable Books (600 Vanderbilt Ave.) in their spacious backyard. The fair will take place during the 7th annual Welcome to Boog City poetry, music, and theater festival.

The fair will open on Saturday with performances by authors from each of the tabling presses.

Tables are $30 for the fair, $20 dollars if you bring your own bridge table (up to 3’ x 3’). All tabling presses will also receive a complimentary online business card size ad (H-2" x W-3.5") in the festival program issue of Boog City.

When you email me to reserve your table and schedule your reader here's what I'll need:

—a bio, logo, and url for the press

—a bio, color foto, and url for your press' reader. (Each press will have 10 minutes total for a reader and, perhaps, to talk about their press.) Though most poets (myself included) don't have their own websites, I'm guessing your poet might have work, or perhaps even an interview with them, online. If so, if you can please send one of those urls.

Please email all of the information and images to me on or by Fri. May 31, and make payment via paypal to [redacted].

This year’s fair will feature readings, musical performances, short political talks, our new BoogWork poetry workshop and reading series, and our annual panel.

We look forward to the fair once again being a warm gathering with wonderful books, poetry, music, and other items from around our creative community.

as ever,
David

P.S. Apologies if you received more than one copy of this email.

[Writings in Rhyme] Less than Dogs, In No Way Men
Wed 17 Apr 2013

Writings in Rhyme has posted a new item, 'Less than Dogs, In no way Men'

I thought all that attacked runners were dogs,
Snapping at heels, and I wondered why...
Was it the primeval urge of the chase
As someone by them does fly
And the kicking heels are irresistable
As if in a bygone day
When there was no master to give them their food
And they ran to catch their prey...

Someone, somewhere, for some reason [...]

Cosima Bruno on translation as a mode of reading poetry
Sun 21 Apr 2013

I'd like to draw your attention to a book published by Cosima Bruno and described below, entitled Between the Lines: Yang Lian’s Poetry through Translation. Bruno's book makes a case for studying translations as a method of reading poetry. I'm mentioning the book here because I think it may be of interest to list members but may not otherwise enter into conversations within English-language poetry––since it focuses on the work of Chinese poet Yang Lian (about whom, incidentally, I've also written in A Common Strangeness and elsewhere).

Between the Lines: Yang Lian's Poetry through Translation

Between the Lines: Yang Lian’s Poetry through Translation is a book concerned with variants of the epistemological act: reading, translating, writing. It investigates two broad theoretical and methodological questions that are crucial in cultural, translation and literary studies alike: the issue of interpretation and representation, and the need for a non-dichotomous approach to the study of literature and literary translation. The author, Cosima Bruno, engages with these questions by synthesizing and revising hermeneutical approaches and by providing new methodological tools for a textual exegesis of Yang Lian’s poetry – one of the most critically acclaimed contemporary work. The publication of this book thus marks a shift in the study of poetry translation, too often based on evaluative and contrastive analysis between two (typically western) language pairs.

You can also listen to Bruno talking about her book here: http://newbooksineastasianstudies.com/2012/11/26/cosima-bruno-between-the-lines-yang-lians-poetry-through-translation-brill-2012.

Nate Mackey Interview now in Amerarcana: A Bird & Beckett Review

Mon 22 Apr 2013

Excerpt from an interview (now published) with Nate Mac
Dear Sunystas:

Excerpt from an interview (now published) with Nate Mackey: http://paulenelson.com/2013/04/21/nate-mackey-amerarcana/

"PEN: What is the appeal of the serial form? What attracts you to it?

NM: The fact that things remain open. Itâ€™s an open form. The well- wrought urn aesthetic, where the poem is this discrete, self-contained accomplishment in which everything fits together and works together in this well-oiled, machine-like way, imposes a certain sense of closure on each poem that I find constricting and found constricting. I wanted there to be the possibility of things coming into the poem that were not necessarily resolved in that poem, that were not necessarily pursued to their fullest or most exhaustive sense in the poem. I wanted things to come into the poem that would have a life beyond that particular poem and that would become part of an exploration that Iâ€™d be involved in in my writing. The appeal of the serial poem is that it allows that. Itâ€™s not so much a matter of itâ€™s there and itâ€™s done, but that again and again, again and again, again and again, you come back to certain concerns, certain motifs, certain figures. In a sense, thereâ€™s the freedom of not feeling that one has been definitive, that one has closed things up, that one has shut the door on further exploration..."

WE START WITH DEATH ...
Mon 22 Apr 2013

2 WEEKS - ONLY 2 SEATS REMAINING!

*WEEK #1, WE START WITH DEATH - *

Making Matter Move: Philosophy and Physics in Poetry

As we consider major philosophical subjects in our work, we will also look to the seemingly separate realm of physics for challenge and material. Though philosophers traditionally tend to work in ideas, poets go the next step, integrating intellectual considerations with tangible aspects of the ephemeral and the carnal - with matter itself. Poetry allows us to broaden knowledge, bridge schools of thought and access new inroads for processing the world, rooted in our potential to imagine and conceive.

Each week we will focus on one major philosophical topic such as Life, Love, War, and Death by crafting poems that approach related issues and by employing the poet's intuitive senses as well as the intellect. We'll employ poetry as permission and a means to not only be moved, but to move the matter of world and words. A medley of poems will stimulate us by Anne Carson, Paul Celan, Emily Dickinson, Wallace Stevens, WisÅ‚awa Szymborska & many more.

The Rooster Moans Poetry Cooperative STRING THEORY

by Amy King

Try again. Embroider the earthâ€™s arc of belly rising to fold into mountain. If you lay your head table-side, a stream trickles out, over rocks, into lunar heights.
Right here beside you. The sheen of a screen replays distant ringing from a lime green phone, 1950.
It is your mother before she became.
Then a school girl in college clothing.
The floor tiles buckle with sprouting weeds we seeded with sleep. We stood in the roomâ€™s disintegration, matter apartâ€”shapeless scenes apiece, looking for form.
Mockingbird nests in the paisley fabric our scientists embroider with wormholes, ideas melting with the walls into hair. We are all separate flesh, sleeker atoms to become parallel people.
We blend with the desks before us, our writing utensils tuning to forks with fingers, words turning out pupils of stars on the hunt for dark matter.
Keyboards and dust sponge like doorknobs.

Wood grains in floors become paintings of carpet fibers, dust mites and personal. We part like walls with zippers over eyelids to pass through portals called doors.
They smile when we reach with our minds to turn handles, yielding keyboards from the piano next door.
No navel in the previous mountain sheds its boney clothes before us. We are as equal as the ghost birds holy forever scarred songs, aloud ahead.

About VERTIGO DIARY:
Larry’s poetry gives me the best kind of vertigo: the kind where you’re afraid of falling, but when you do you fall into a soft, meaty, sensual, smart ravine that shakes you pretty good, but instead of killing you it turns you into a Thinking Cocktail. What a scary and fine artist Mr. Sawyer is!

—Andrei Codrescu

Larry Sawyer’s Vertigo Diary speaks from a three-fold poetics of self-consciousness, critique and humor so that we chuckle at and choke on our collective shortcomings. This book contains so many thrilling moments of high altitude lyricism that are skillfully balanced by an urbane desire to “progress beyond the / Need to fill our silences with such idiot carcasses.” In the end, Sawyer’s woozy and exquisite poems are shadow messages from the other side of ourselves, messages that unshackle language and let it loose in a dynamic field of play. When I hear these messages, I feel a rare sense of freedom; that is, “To their telegrams I respond / with a ponderous liberty.”

—Nathan Hoks

The secret love-child of Frank O'Hara and Paul Éluard, Vertigo Diary is a swirling romp into the city—through the mundane to the Pentagon to the not-so-probable. Sawyer's latest maps a world filled with beauty and longing, where the political, pop culture, and literary history meet in “our own private Pompeii.”

—Megan Kaminski

Larry Sawyer’s Vertigo Diary is a fine 21st century example of the poetry of the American Urban Sublime. More Ben Katchor’s Julius Knipl than Nelson Algren’s Frankie Machine, the author serves up a “moment salad” of incidentals in our day world and his sharp ear gets the real news down sans air quotes. Humane and wry, the book reads like the serial composition playing in my head—you just can’t tell what is awaiting you past the next period, comma or enjambment. Dialectic bebop.

—Joel Lewis

In Vertigo Diary, Larry Sawyer gives us poems that are rich in idiosyncratic imagery and elusive, quotable metaphor (“Why was each moment such a miniature Troy?”). Sawyer’s exuberant sensibility has led him to confident lyric expression whose finest moments are beyond context.

—Tony Towle

Larry Sawyer has curated the Myopic Books Poetry Reading Series since 2005. With Lina ramona Vitkauskas he also edits milk magazine. Sawyer is also the co-director of The Chicago School of Poetics. His poetry and literary reviews have appeared in publications including Action Yes, The Argotist (UK), The Boston Review, The Chicago Tribune, Coconut, Court Green, Esque, Exquisite Corpse, Forklift Ohio, Jacket (Australia), The Miami Sun Post, MiPoesias, The National Poetry Review, Ploughshares, The Prague Literary Review, Rain Taxi, Shampoo, Skanky Possum, Tabacaria (Portugal), Van Gogh’s Ear (France), Vanitas, Verse Daily, Vlak (Czech Republic), and elsewhere.

His collection Unable to Fully California is available on Otoliths Press. Sawyer has read his work at venues including the Bonk Reading and Performance Series in Wisconsin, the Chicago Printer’s Row Lit Fest, Columbia College Chicago, The Hideout in Chicago, Myopic Books, The Poetry Center of Chicago, Quimby’s, The School of the Art Institute of Chicago, and Woodland Pattern Book Center in Milwaukee.

RISE IN THE FALL. By Ana Bo¾ièeviæ, images by Bianca Stone.

Ana Bo¾ièeviæ is both a poet's poet and the people's poet. Rise in the Fall, her second full-length collection, is a revolutionary book and an ars poetica for the polis in which she excludes nothing - even nothing. Navigating literary history, gender, sexuality, economics, family, friends and lovers, she is at ease deploying and subverting the universal political statement and the lyric "I".

A Croatian émigré, Bo¾ièeviæ approaches the English language with a playful objectivity, bouncing back and forth from the conversational to the grand: "This is the whitest shit / I've ever written" she notes in her half-myth "About Nietzsche." Her critique of our time and place is at once empathetic and crude, tender and grotesque. Lucky for us, "beauty [wins] in all its casual terror and pain."

*Begging for Itby Alex Dimitrov

Alex Dimitrov leads us through the streets, bridges, and bedrooms of New York City, sometimes as far away as Buenos Aires and Iceland, and as close as our own darkest corners. A Bulgarian immigrant, Dimitrov writes as both observer of and fervent participant in an "American youth," as his speakers navigate both the physical and emotional landscapes of desire, intimacy, and longing--whether for a friend, a lover, or a self, "Saint or stranger, I still recklessly seek you."

"Alex Dimitrov's passionate, headlong poems seem to want to carve beneath the surface of gestures, beneath the skin, to the warm and dangerous blood beneath--until sex, and the poem itself, are 'a nerve brightly turning in a closed room of the mind--.'...Begging for It is a fierce and memorable debut." --Mark Doty

LaTasha N. Nevada Diggs*

*TWERK unveils an identity shaped by popular media and history, code switching and cultural inclusivity. The poems, songs, and myths in this long-awaited first book are as rooted in lyric as in innovation, in Black music as in macaronic satire. TWERK evokes paradox, humor, and vulnerability, and it offers myriad avenues fueled by language, idiom, and vernacular. This book asks only that we imagine America as it has always existed, an Americana beyond the English language. *

Tweaking parallel languages, rebooting and putting them to (hard, hard) work, TwERK's non-stop shimmy-shimmy embarks on an animé-iigjag idio-lingual-lectical booty-roll and doesn't come down until the break of dawn. La Reina de Harlem responds to Lorca's Big-Apple-opolis heteroglossia with her own inimitable animations, incantations and ululations, twisting tongues so mellifluously that you don't even realize you've been dancing on Saturn with Sun Ra for hours and still could have begged for more. Welcome LaTasha Diggs: this is her many-splendored night out!

R. Erica Doyle

~~~~~~~~

PROXY is an unrequited love story in prose poems, where the landscape of the beloved body becomes the windows of New York City, the deserts of North Africa, and the mangroves of the Caribbean. PROXY is a conversation with the calculus, plotting and space against the infinite capacities of desire.

**

How can you sit lie stand lean wade not fidget cross/un/cross your legs tight tight tight while releasing the pressure that is R. Erica Doyle's proxy? To sting while being stung. To drink when famished. Eat Devour quickness. These words "[l]eave enough filth to make a difference." Un/plant the seed. Strain to blossom break. I am exhausted. Returning for more. Unsatiated. This proxy "displace[s] the lust". Yes, "wounds [are] getting deeper."

Gina Myers, Hold It Down

"Gina Myers' aptly-named Hold It Down chronicles the endless effort to keep a lid on hope, that feathered thing that must be denied so the rent can be paid. Everything else Pandora's box let loose has hung around--boredom, sickness, loneliness--but if hope gets out, it gets away. Moving among Brooklyn, Saginaw, and Atlanta, with a soundtrack looping Otis Redding and Johnny Cash, these poems forgo hipster irony for genuine dismay with consumerism, war, and others of the world's ills. Myers' lines break like hearts. Let her speak plainly to you: "This is my life, / this is my life."--Evie Shockley

May 2013 found the thinned room rising, briefly and with relish, to defend the worth of poetry against a powerful man's public contempt. One hundred and thirty-one messages moved through the list, and its sharpest current answered an economist who had sneered that reading poetry was the mark of an unserious, unproductive life. The room, which had spent years doubting poetry's power itself, discovered that it would not tolerate the contempt when it came from outside — and defended the art it privately worried over with a vigor its own doubts had lacked.

The largest pointed thread was a rebuttal. A prominent conservative historian had disparaged John Maynard Keynes by suggesting his economics were frivolous because he was childless and preferred verse to worldly matters — and the room rose against "the conservative policy intellectual Niall Ferguson's sneer", the casual assumption that a life given to poetry is a life wasted, unserious, insufficiently invested in the future. It was an old prejudice stated baldly by a man with a platform, and the list met it with the indignation of people who had heard it too many times.

The quarrel turned on what poetry is worth. To the sneering economist, reading poetry was a diversion from the real business of the world; to the room, it was the real business — the attention, the memory, the making of meaning that no ledger measures. The list had spent the decade uncertain whether poetry mattered to anyone outside itself, but faced with a powerful man's open scorn, it found its conviction again: that the pursuit he dismissed as idle was, in fact, among the least idle things a person can do.

Around the argument ran the ordinary keeping — a collection of aphorisms announced, readings in Brooklyn, a bit of good personal news, the standing notices. The infrastructure carried on beneath the defense, the small presses and the reading series doing their patient work, the living poetry going on being made in the teeth of the world's indifference and occasional contempt — the reading raised, the aphorism gathered, the small book announced, each a quiet rebuttal to the sneer that none of it was worth a serious person's time.

I have set May down exactly as the archive delivered it — the answer to the economist's sneer, the defense of poetry against the charge of frivolity, and the small keeping beneath — because it was the month the doubting list rediscovered its conviction the instant the contempt came from outside. A room that will spend years quietly wondering whether poetry matters, and then rise as one to rebuke a powerful man who calls it a waste, is a room that knows the difference between its own honest doubt and someone else’s lazy scorn: private uncertainty about the art’s power is one thing, but the public claim that a life given to poetry is a life wasted is exactly the lie the room existed to refuse.

Horse Less Press Open Reading Period
Wed 24 Apr 2013

Horse Less Press
Call for Book Manuscripts, Poetry & Cross-Genre Writing
Open until May 31
Editors: Jen Tynes, Michael Sikkema, Erika Howsare, and Jen Denrow
horselesspress.com

We are interested in full length (60 pages or more) manuscripts of poetry or cross-genre writing. Please include an acknowledgements page. We prefer PDFs.
To submit, visit our Submittable page:
https://horselesspress.submittable.com/submit

Manuscripts will be read by all four of our editors as well as a team of trusted and brilliant readers. We will select 1-2 manuscripts from this reading period to publish in 2014. We will make decisions and announcements no later than August 31, 2013. Please don't query before that date. We're happy to accept simultaneous submissions, but please contact us immediately if your manuscript has been accepted elsewhere. We will raise a glass with you.

We do not read blind. We are equally interested in publishing writers we know and writers we don't, and we believe that the writer-publisher relationship is important to the success of a book. We want to collaborate with our authors to create the best books possible. In your cover letter, please tell us why you think Horse Less Press is a good fit for your manuscript. Please also tell us a little bit about your vision for the publication and promotion of your book.

We are uncomfortable with reading fees, but we are also uncomfortable working with authors who aren't readers and supporters of small press publishing. When you submit your manuscript, we ask that you pre-order one of our 2013 titles (Kristin Abraham's The Disappearing Cowboy Trick or Stephanie Anderson's In the Key of Those Who Can No Longer Organize Their Environments) for $15. This is the regular cost of the books, which doesn't include shipping or the fee for using Submittable; there is no extra fee for reading your manuscript. That is to say, it's a good deal.*Please remember to specify which book you want in your cover letter. * If you don't specify, we'll choose for you. Abraham and Anderson's books will be mailed by late summer.

Welcome to Boog City 7 Lineup, in Progress

Thu 25 Apr 2013

Hi all,

A month into booking, I wanted to let everyone know how things are looking so far with the 7th Annual Welcome to Boog City festival of poetry, music, and theater. First we've added an extra day, bringing the festival to four days, beginning Fri. Aug. 2 and concluding on Mon. Aug. 5, Boog's 22nd anniversary.

Second, we've secured Sidewalk Cafe for the night time show on Sun. Aug. 4. It'll play host to our fourth Boog Poets Theater night, featuring performances of short plays written and performed by writers and actors from our community, as well as our Classic Albums Live series, which we're excited to announce will feature, for its 15th Anniversary, Major Matt Mason USA’s Me Me Me performed by area musical acts.

And below this note is what else we'll be featuring.

best,
David

Edmund and Edward at Prose Pros!
Fri 26 Apr 2013

---

*  P R O S E P R O S **

Our 6th season!

hosted by Martha King & Elinor Nauen* *

*Edmund Berrigan & Ed Friedman*

Thursday, May 9, 2013

6:30 to 7:45 p.m. (starts & ends on time!)

at the SideWalk Café

94 Avenue A at 6th Street, NYC (F to Second Avenue, exit at First Avenue or R to 8th Street, walk east to A.)

Edmund Berrigan is the author of two books of poetry, Disarming Matter(Owl Press, 1999) and Glad Stone Children (Farfalla, 2008). This month Letter Machine is publishing his "quasi-memoir," Can It! He is editor of the Selected Poems of Steve Carey (Sub Press, 2009), and co-editor with Anselm Berrigan and Alice Notley of The Collected Poems of Ted Berrigan (University of California, 2005) and The Selected Poems of Ted Berrigan (University of California, 2010). Currently he is an editor for the poetry mags *Vlak *and Brawling Pigeon and is on the editorial board of Lungfull!

Ed Friedman came here from California but as artistic director of the St. Marks Poetry Project for 16 years established himself in middle of the world of New York and published nine books of poetry and prose, among them: *The Telephone Book; Humans Work; Mao & Matisse; *and *Drive Through the Blue Cylinders. *He has collaborated with visual artists Robert Kushner (*The New York Hat Line *and Away) and Kim MacConnel (La Frontera and Lingomats) and given readings and performances at the Museum of Modern Art, The Kitchen and the Public Theater.

WHERE: The back room of the East Village's SideWalk Café. All readings are on Thursdays at 6:30 (sharp), usually the first Thursday of the month. One drink minimum (or purchase a munchie). No cover charge but we do ask for a generous contribution, which goes to the readers.

*WHY: *There are hundreds of poetry readings in New York City every month, but just one series—Prose Pros—dedicated solely to prose. Here you can hear stories, essays, criticism, biography, and work in-between. If you'd been at the Side Walk earlier this year you have heard Mark Jay Mirsky working out a sexy New York story as we listened … Sarah Falkner making geology hilarious…*Andrei Blatnick *packing a novel's worth of incident and emotion into a 3-page story … *Ammon Shea *comparing Dan Quayle's spelling prowess to that of Thomas Jefferson … Bob Rosenthal dishing intimate tales of Allen Ginsberg…David Berrigan ruminating on evolutionary biology and life with his poet father. So don't miss our next reading, Join us on May 9.

Coming up in JUNE: Mike DeCapite & Vincent Katz.

Elinor Nauen: [redacted]

summer writing workshop in jackson heights queens

Sat 27 Apr 2013

Hi All,

I'm going to be running another writing workshop in the NYC area this summer. I'd really appreciate it if you could forward this to any interested parties.

Thanks,
Lisa Jarnot

This summer I'll be continuing the theme of The Poet's Notebook with an emphasis on The Five Senses. The class will run for ten weeks, with a sequence of two week segments exploring the fields of sight, hearing, taste, smell, and touch.

We'll experiment with braille and sign language and synesthesia, and we will think about our habits as writers (what sensory information do we favor? what sensory information do we ignore?).

The class is open to creative people of all kinds, and the dates of meetings are Mondays (6 pm to 8:30 pm):

June 3, 10, 17, 24,

July 1, 8, 15, 22, 29,

Aug 5

Fee for the class is $300 ($275 for returning students) and the class will be held in Jackson Heights, Queens.

Contact me at [redacted] to register.

Poet and publisher Jill Stengel founded a+bend press in 1999 as the print component of her poetry reading and publication series held in San Francisco's historically-rich North Beach, producing a chapbook for each reader. Later she added a journal, mem, featuring writing by poet-mothers raising young children.

Dear Jack, Jill's first full-length collection, will be available this Spring from Black Radish Books. Nearly a dozen of her chapbooks have been published, some of which can be viewed online at dusie.org and other sites. Her writing has also appeared in print and online journals and anthologies, including Boog City, Kindergarde, Otoliths, Try, and Touched by Adoption. She has taught poetry and book arts, participates in poetry collectives, and is active in the Poet-Moms listserv community.

dusie : the tuesday poem,

Tue 30 Apr 2013

Over at the Swiss online journal Dusie (http://www.dusie.org/), editor/publisher Susana Gardner is allowing me to curate a weekly poem on the dusie blog. On Tuesday, April 9, 2013, the series opened with "On Recovery," a poem by American poet Elizabeth Robinson (currently the Hugo Fellow at the University of Montana). The Tuesdays that immediately followed included the poem "Cityscape," by Kansas poet Megan Kaminski, "from Winter of Weak Welcome" by Toronto poet Marcus McCann and "ANGEL GOING POW" by American poet (and current Toronto resident) Hoa Nguyen.

http://dusie.blogspot.ca/

The series aims to publish a mix of authors from the dusie kollektiv, as well as Canadian and international poets, ranging from emerging to the established. Over the next few weeks and months, watch for new work by dusies and non-dusies alike, including Stephen Collis, j/j hastain, David W. McFadden, Edward Smallfield, Er¡n Moure, Roland Prevost, Maria Damon, Rae Armantrout, Jenna Butler, Cameron Anstee, Sarah Rosenthal, Kathryn MacLeod, Camille Martin, Pattie McCarthy, Stephen Brockwell, Rosmarie Waldrop, Nicole Markoti and Deborah Poe.

A new poem will appear every Tuesday afternoon, Central European Summer Time, just after lunch (which is 8am in Central Canada terms).

I was fortunate enough to participate in a number of dusie projects, including the fifth dusie kollectiv, and guest-edited Dusie 10: the Canadian issue.

The Week Shall Inherit The Verse

Wed 1 May 2013

Hi, everyone!

rob mclennan's notice about his weekly Dusie poem reminds me that I've been meaning to introduce you to the weekly poem blog that I curate, The Week Shall Inherit The Verse.

The concept is simple: each week, I post a single, previously unpublished poem by a poet I admire. I've been putting them up since July, and have so far published works by poets from Canada, the U.S., Scotland, Denmark, and Israel. Browse through the "back issues" and you'll find exciting new poems by Eileen Myles, Alice Burdick, Niels Hav, Diana Hartog, David W. McFadden, Joel Lewis, Jay MillAr, and lots more.

All the poems are solicited. Hope you find some to enjoy!

Segue Reading Series: May 4: Madeline Gins with Alex Duensing & C. Spencer Yeh

Thu 2 May 2013

The Segue Reading Series is proud to present:

* *

MADELINE GINS with ALEX DUENSING & C. SPENCER YEH

SATURDAY May 4, 2013

Zinc Bar

82 W. 3rd st.

New York, NY

$5 admission (in support of the readers).

Madeline Gins: This exceedingly troubling figure has provided our benighted species with a new option for how to live life on this planet—not bad for someone who first stepped forth as a p-p-p-poet. Intent on achieving [a] reversible destiny for our up-against-it species, she ever pits 'despitefulness' against poignancy no matter how touching. Is there any discourse she has not entered??

According to the Many-Worlds Interpretation of Quantum Physics, the version of Alex Duensing that you meet may have successfully utilized a combination of politics, theater and poetry to create anti-time, bodily free-energy and a Gordian Knot-Type solution to all Zen koans. You may also encounter him as pure money or as a mechanical dog.

C. Spencer Yeh is recognized for his interdisciplinary activities and collaborations as an artist, composer and improviser. Recent recorded works include Ambient (with Robert Piotrowicz), 1975 and* CS Yeh's Transitions.* Yeh also volunteers as a movie trailer editor for Spectacle Theater in Williamsburg, Brooklyn.

UP NEXT: May 11: STEPHEN RATCLIFFE & HELEN MIRRA

Check out the full Spring Season<http://www.seguefoundation.com/calendar.htm> .

The most recently published of his collections is a chapbook, Meeting the Minotaur, from Split Oak Press, 2011. He retired from Ithaca College in 2011, where he had been a senior administrator, sometimes lecturer, and also, for a couple of years, county Poet Laureate. He spent last year as a Senior Fulbright Fellow at Lucian Blaga University in Sibiu, Romania, named for a great poet whom the authorities forced to refuse the Nobel Prize in the early 1950's. A sequence of Hamill's poems and an interview with him can be found in the current issue of the Journal of American, British, and Canadian Studies (Romania).

Praise for By The Hours

The poems presented in this collection represent over a decade of work, including poetry previously published in long out-of-print and difficult to find chapbooks and self-published collections, newly revised for this edition, uncollected poems from obscure journals and ezines, and a selection of new poems. Together, they present the development of a singular voice and vision in poetry.

The particularities of a deeply felt life are brought into focus in Eric Hoffman's lovingly and carefully worked language – its handsome and quiet music, set down as a tangible event within the flow of time. –Burt Kimmelman An Excerpt from By The Hours

The angel of history is propelled on the storm winds of catastrophe –

The voices recovered, the voices redeemed –

That lost, Adamic tongue, secretly beneath all language, whose presence makes possible the impossible
act of translation –

Perhaps
the greatest philosopher is the collector of books, the frequenter of emporiums and arcades, of illuminations,
the precisions of hermetic symbolism, of white magic –

Waiting has a way of keeping one alive,
an initiative aimed at a miracle,

an infinite amount but not for us -

from our Music section, edited by Jonathan Berger

—"I was very active in musical theater in high school. I love drama and chaos and maybe that's why I love performing so much; it's a safe playing field to act upon my emotions, desires, fears, and sadness. Nobody gets hurt." From "'Get Off Your Ass and Take a Writing Class': A Conversation with Gina Mobilio About Her Different Art Forms," by Berger.

From our Small Press section, edited by Kimberly Ann Southwick

—"While the image of the tunnel swallowing animals, people, or cars that disappear inside it is a powerful one, it also emphasizes the tunnel's immobility." From A(n e)Book With(ab/out) a Body: Writing Digitally about Physicality," Shotgun Torso (Up Literature) by Brian Warfield.

—"I've been telling myself that I'll stop doing these things (above/ ground press being but one) when they're no longer fun. Somehow I don't see that changing for quite a long time." —above/ground press editor/publisher, rob mclennan.

"When I first founded Lost Horse Press, I thought I could publish all literary genres that I loved, but I learned soon enough that to endure and grow the press had to specialize, not diversify." —Christine Holbert, founder/director Lost Horse Press

From "Keeping Time: Two Small Press Editors Talk About Being in it for the Long Run" by Southwick

The economist Niall Ferguson undervalues poetry and takes a damaging loss

Sat 4 May 2013

http://theartpart.jonathanmorse.net/2013/05/poetry-a-value-added-return-on-investment/

I discuss the conservative policy intellectual Niall Ferguson's sneer that Keynesian economics are dangerous in the long run because Keynes was a childless homosexual who preferred reading poetry to making babies. I then recommend a short course of reading (just nine lines) for Professor Ferguson.

Generate This: Final performance for Reading and Writing Electronic Text

Sun 5 May 2013

Hello everyone,

I teach a class at NYU's Interactive Telecommunications Program about generative, procedural and conceptual writing. We're holding our final performance later this week, and I thought it might be of interest to some of you. I'm glad to answer any questions about the event by e-mail. Details below.
-a

GENERATE THIS

Thursday, May 9th, 2013
7pm
721 Broadway, New York, NY
Ground floor (Common room)
Free

On the web: http://www.decontextualize.com/2013/05/generate-this/

On this evening, fifteen students of NYU’s Interactive Telecommunications Program will read aloud their experiments in generative and procedural electronic text. These experiments, built using the Python programming language, have been brewing and bubbling for the duration of the semester. Examples of what you may encounter: the Bible meeting the Kama Sutra, while the New York Times site meets its own comments. Markov chains of many sizes and varieties; otherworldly haiku; accidental hiphop; attempts to pronounce the unpronounceable. The corpus meets the body. One night only!

Reading and Writing Electronic Text is a course offered at NYU’s Interactive Telecommunication Program. (http://itp.nyu.edu/itp/). The course is an introduction to both the Python programming language and contemporary techniques in electronic literature. See the syllabus and examples of student work here: http://rwet.decontextualize.com/

The first of its kind, Troubling the Line: Trans and Genderqueer Poetry and Poetics gathers together a diverse range of 55 poets with varying aesthetics and backgrounds. In addition to generous samples of poetry by each trans writer, the book also includes "poetics statements"-reflections by each poet that provide context for their work covering a range of issues from identification and embodiment to language and activism.

"Just as poetry bends language away from the utilitarian task of communication, towards unanticipated expressive potentials, so too do trans and genderqueer ways of being have the capacity to exceed and transform what society would have our bodies mean and do. The poets collected in this anthology live their art as well as write it. Let them change you. Don't miss a word." - Susan Stryker

"Troubling the Line deftly oscillates between poems and poetics statements, detonating sense and sense making through powerfully embodied zones of sexual desire and social play. Herein are rich meditations of self-fashioning for a future that trips the hard wiring of our nervousness into fearless acts of being. In this stunning and timely anthology are complex mirrors and long shadows where the trans and genderqueer self evolves, re-shot into poem as photograph, as exercise, as memory, art made from enduring phenomenon into lasting primer." - Ronaldo Wilson

Poets Include:

above/ground press interview in Boog City,

Wed 8 May 2013

Kimberly Ann Southwick was good enough to interview me for the new issue of New York's Boog City on twenty years (so far) of above/ground press. Thanks very much!

I've posted the interview here:

http://www.abovegroundpress.blogspot.ca/2013/05/keeping-time-rob-mclennan-interviewed.html

But you can download the original, along with the entire issue (a baseball themed issue of poetry etc) here:

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc80.pdf

Boog City was also the host, many years ago, of an above/ground press reading (and the American launch of the anthology "Groundswell: the best of above/ground press, 1993-2003") featuring myself, Clare Latremouille and Stephen Brockwell, January 7, 2004.

Online Poetry Workshop with Stan Mir - June 2 - July 28

Dear Poetics List Community,

I'll be running an online poetry workshop, in affiliation with Barrelhouse Magazine <http://www.barrelhousemag.com/>, starting June 2. The workshop is limited to 12 participants and costs $250.00 for 8 weeks. This is a great way to receive some feedback on your work and an opportunity to write some new poems. Please see below for more information. Or, you may also go directly to Barrelhouse's website (please scroll down for poetry workshop info): http://www.barrelhousemag.com/online-fiction-workshop/.

WORKSHOP DESCRIPTION:

As William Carlos Williams once suggested, “a poem is a small (or large) machine made of words.” With this in mind, we will pay particular attention to the making and writing of poems in our workshop discussions. While this class will focus primarily on poems written by the participants, there will also be some assigned readings. One of the peripheral goals of the course will be to read a sampling of contemporary poets. As a poet, I take an interest in working with local, immediate detail. So, in the course we will also spend some of our time discussing how we can write poems that are more responsive to our environments. Because this course will include participants from all over we should be able to have some interesting conversations on this topic. This course is open to all levels of experience.

WHEN?

The workshop starts on June 2, 2013, and runs for 8 weeks.

HOW MUCH?

The workshop is $250.

ABOUT STAN MIR:

Stan Mir is the author of two recent books of poetry, Song & Glass (Subito Press) and *The Lacustrine Suite *(Pavement Saw Press). His poetry and reviews have also appeared in publications such as American Letters & Commentary, Colorado Review, Fence, The Poetry Project Newsletter, and Verse. He lives in Philadelphia with his wife and daughter, and organizes the Chapter & Verse reading series with Ryan Eckes.

I am pleased to say that JOSEPHINE BUTLER has been published by Phoenix Press International. This multi-genre press has offices in France, Canada, Africa and the U.S. Check out their wonderful web pages. To show that even major established presses such as this are human, somehow there are a few non-fatal errors for which the book is discounted on Amazon and Barnes and Noble. Grab it now. OT: Help Bring Major Matt to Me Me Me Live at BoogFest

Please forward

Hey everybody,

Let's get Matt Roth from Kansas to NYC for the 7th annual Welcome to Boog City poetry, music, and theater festival for the live show of his classic Me Me Me album and perform a solo set, too.

Matt Roth was a large part of the New York City music community, helming Olive Juice Music; recording, mixing, and mastering music for himself and others, including Kimya Dawson, Daniel Johnston, Jeffrey Lewis, Adam Green, The Trachtenburg Family Slideshow Players, and Toby Goodshank; and performing live as part of Schwervon and Kansas State Flower, and solo as Major Matt Mason USA. It was as Major Matt that he released his classic album Me Me Me in 1998 (http://www.allmusic.com/album/me-me-me-mw0000259918).

Now, as Me Me Me turns 15, we're going to be performing it live on Sun. Aug. 4 at Sidewalk Cafe as part of our Classic Albums Live series during the Welcome to Boog City festival. I've invited Matt to play some new songs and kick in on some old ones, too, and he's excited to take part. Now all we need to do is raise the $500 to get him here.

Donations of any and all amounts are welcome. For every dollar you donate, get a word in the online program for the 7th annual Welcome to Boog City poetry, music, and theater festival. 2 dollars, 2 words; 10 dollars, 10 words, and so on. For every $25 you donate get a H-2" x W-4", 25-word 1 image ad.

Every $25 gets Matt 60 miles closer to NYC. 20 $25 donations gets us $500 and all 1,200 miles. As donations come in, we'll update you on how things stand.

Please send all donations to [redacted] via http://www.paypal.com/ .

Thanks for your support!

best,
David

P.S. Separately, if you have frequent flyer miles you would like to use to get Matt a roundtrip plane ticket from Kansas, please email me.

Three Versals for Versal 11
Thu 9 May 2013

Hi friends,

For those of you who love Versal or who have heard enough about us to be curious:

Until June 1 we're running a subscription drive! Buy a two-issue subscription starting with Versal 11, and receive a free back issue of your choice. That's a bit of Versal past AND future for your illustrious library.

http://www.versaljournal.org/subscribeme/

Versal 11: A journal, a story of its making it took an even ?

greater fugitive?
to get us to?
this point
--Samuel Ace, Letters

Gracing the cover of Versal 11 is a dead fish.

We've never chosen an image that so compellingly captures the work within an issue.

Versal 11 assembles struggles and triumphs, the births and deaths we face, and the holding on and letting go required in making our newest issue. Featuring artwork from Andrew Friend and Mario Zoots, poetry from Mathias Svalina, Gregory Sherl, and Zarah Butcher-McGunnigle, as well as prose from Adam Peterson, Traci O Conner, and Leah Bailly, this is arguably our best Versal yet.

I hope you'll join us in celebrating independent literary publishing, and our newest issue, and all the good stuff that is poetry&prose&art&inbetween.

Thanks for your eyes and ears, and all the best from Amsterdam, Megan

Every cycle causes day and night calming, tilling or could befuddle so many that we would retreat into myth again?

The fire-breathing bull,
an A overhead, passing

In the end, wood

Mon 13 May 2013

ROBERT GRENIER
*"Language Objects: Letters in Space, 1970 - 2013" *
May 18 - June 30, 2013
Reception Sunday, 19 May 4-6 PM

May 18 – June 30, 2013
Reception for (& presentation by) the artist, Sunday, 19 May 4 - 6 PM

SOUTHFIRST is proud to present *"Language Objects: Letters in Space, 1970 - 2013," *a retrospective exhibition tracking (via notebooks, holographic & published texts, archival materials and works on paper) the evolution from early typewriter-generated forms to more recent four-color drawing poems in the work of American poet Robert Grenier between 1970 - 2013. The show will be on view from May 18 – June 30, 2013.

*On Sunday, May 19, 4 - 6 PM, Robert Grenier will introduce the 'idea' for the show, and speak to/read from & provisionally 'interpret' certain of the materials set forth in the room. *

Over the past 40 years, poet/artist Robert Grenier (b. 1941) has constantly pushed poetry into new frontiers of practice and utterance. His handwritten poems, produced in the last two decades, cross the upper limit of inscription to be both writing and drawing. His works include *Series *(This Press, 1978), SENTENCES (Whale Cloth Press, 1978), *Oakland *(Tuumba Press, 1980), *A Day at the Beach *(Roof Books, 1984), Phantom Anthems (O Books, 1986), and *OWL/ON/BOU/GH *(Post-Apollo Press, 1997), as well as more recent online color drawing poem sequences like POND 1<http://bit.ly/106cFxV> and PENN SCANS <http://www.whalecloth.org/grenier/pennscans>. A graduate of Harvard College and the Iowa Writers' Workshop, Grenier has received two NEA fellowships for poetry writing and a 2013 grant from the Foundation for Contemporary Arts. An archive of his work is housed in the Stanford Libraries' Department of Special Collections. He lives in northern Vermont.

The Conversant: Call for Submissions

Tue 14 May 2013

The Conversant <http://theconversant.org/>, an online literary journal that is a part of the larger poetics collective, The Volta <http://thevolta.org/>, is now taking submissions!

We're open to a broad range of interview projects but particularly keen on ambitious, multi-part interview series that explore specific fields, themes and methods. Examples include H.L. Hix's <http://theconversant.org/?cat=42> three-question and one-question "mini-interviews" and Philip Metres<http://theconversant.org/?p=2864>' interview series with Russian poets. The Conversant is also happy to accept as submissions soundscapes/audio pieces, videos, as well as transcribed dialogues.

As we have previously published several online chapbooks<http://theconversant.org/?cat=252>, we're also interested in longer interview projects that can be converted into chapbooks.

For submissions and queries, please email the editors at [redacted].

Pencil Palace
Wed 15 May 2013

In Wim Wender's magnificent film, Wings of Desire, Peter Falk (who plays himself), at one point rhapsodizes on the immediacy of life as illustrated by the marks created with his pencil. For the artist, the pencil is the intermediary, the conduit between eye and coordinated vision. Over the years, I have amassed a collection of pencils that were either intrinsically intriguing or that suggested a specific purpose. I doubt that many of them would be especially prized by bonafide pencil-collectors; no, this display is pretty-much self-indulgent. I do however, appreciate the possibility of a story told on as well as by-means-of these implements, which is I suppose, what advertising-pencils are about. And, it will possibly come as no surprise (assuming that you've seen my otherwork), that I just liked the idea of these long thin scans of pencils linked to their itemization. Something could also be made of the dwindling availability of varieties of drawing implements over the years.

91. The University of Arizona Poetry Center

Tyler Meier Named New Executive Director of the University of Arizona Poetry Center

Wed 15 May 2013

 Kenyon Review Managing Editor Tyler Meier Named New Executive Director of the University of Arizona Poetry Center
---------- College of Humanities Dean Mary Wildner-Bassett has just named Tyler Meier as the new Executive Director of the University of Arizona Poetry Center. Meier brings years of experience as a poet, administrator and teacher to his new position at the Poetry Center, which he assumes on August 5.

Meier comes to the Poetry Center from The Kenyon Review in Ohio where he was the managing editor as well as the co-director of the Young Writers Summer Program. He received an MFA from the University of Washington, and his poetry and nonfiction have appeared in At Length, AGNI (online), Laurel Review, Bat City Review, jubilat, Washington Square, Thermos, Forklift, Ohio, and elsewhere.

â€œNow that the Poetry Center has settled into its landmark building, we are ready to embark on the next era of the Center, to expand our vibrant programs and build new audiences for poetry here and across the country. I know Tyler will bring energy and enthusiasm to the position,â€ said College of Humanities Dean Mary Wildner-Bassett.

â€œIâ€™m thrilled to join the Poetry Center staff as Executive Director,â€ said Meier. â€œFrom the volunteers and donors and docents to the writers who visit in the Reading Series, from the incredibly dedicated staff to the larger community served by the collections and programs and events, Iâ€™ve been truly astounded by all of the people who participate in the daily life of the Center. The place positively hums. This must be what Ruth Stephan had in mind over fifty years ago when she had the original, beautiful idea for a Poetry Center. It is an aspirational space that recognizes and celebrates a central role for poetry in our contemporary culture, and it amplifies our hopes for what the art form might do in the years to come.â€

Meier will replace Gail Browne who has served as the Executive Director of the Poetry Center since 2002. Browne is pursuing other arts administration opportunities in the greater Phoenix area.

CALL FOR WORK: Poets for Living Waters
Wed 15 May 2013

Poets for Living Waters is a poetry action begun in 2010 as a response to the Gulf Oil Disaster of April 20, 2010, one of the most profound man-made ecological catastrophes in history. While devastating, could that extreme event be best understood as merely a partial manifestation of a widespread but at least somewhat limited consciousness producing global ecological crisis?Â Â

Zen Master Thich Nhat Hanh suggests that in response to the contemporary situation, we refrain from appeals to effective argument but rather stir affective compassion: â€œWe should not talk in terms of what they should do, what they should not do, for the sake of the future. We should talk to them in such a way that touches their heartsâ€¦â€ This artistic initiative contributes to this latter conversation, motivated by the belief that poetry helps return us to our senses.

Review by Alfred Starr Hamilton--I am Immune

Wed 15 May 2013

In 1984, I sent a copy of my chapbook Enoch to Alfred Starr Hamilton for his comments and he wrote back: "I'm not the sort of poet to comment, but I knew an Enoch and he was ok I think.

Immune,

Alfred Starr Hamilton."--That's just a remembered paraphrase--it was actually wilder than that and the letter was more of a poem about traveling among the stars and being a member of a Lodge.

He also sent a black & white photo-booth-in-a-bus-stop-pix which may be in my archives at the University of Maryland--stuck away in the letters--incl. the one I just paraphrased. I believe he was wearing a hat in the picture, and was looking rather dapper.

If anyone on this list remembers Alfred Starr Hamilton it would be great to read about it.

I'd considered asking him for a tape of his reading some of his poems, but I didn't. Wish I had. He probably read in a low, stumbling forward manner--a cane-tapping of the tongue.

I'd always imagined myself ending up in a rented room writing poems and getting old. Happy to say that a family helps immensely. I'd always liked his way of saying farewell in his letters: Immune, or I am immune. With the permission of the Manes of Alfred Starr Hamilton, I've borrowed it.

Immune,

Jesse

Quirky, electric poems, spare and challenging.
-Peter Matthiessen, author of*Shadow Country

WABAC Machine begins innocently enough with the thought that a cat has no real name and proceeds through inexorable dream/dervish/fairy tale logic to a place (the wild?) where nouns dissolve. This is a world of radical flux where self is barely even a construction. Let's call it post-human. There is nothing academic about it. Things loom up and are always something else. Here it makes perfect sense for one "me" to say, "I sell temporary kitties in the form of reconstituted sponges."

new from above/ground press: punchlines, by Aaron Tucker

punchlines
by Aaron Tucker
$4

why was the camel unhappy?

its still a good idea to contemplate while the city sprawls out in waves beneath our apartment balcony:

my father is dead hit by a car

I land + rush to the hospital in time for the whistle of one lung working but my father is dead, mist

later I mow my mothers lawn careful to avoid sporting goods skeletons + that highway that barn sprawling towards the cow field

I let the grass clippings blow onto the yard careful to avoid thinking about that blade whirling slicing through the flesh of my hand

slicing through my arm torso like an ocean drowning
|| a bumper impact || a twenty nine story fall the way a yard might rush upwards me downward

as if I woke up on a river shoreline in Montana at sunset repeating the same motion that the night takes rushing downwards over the mountains

the moon whirls out + my mother goes to bed dreams of my father pushing the lawnmower back into the barn closing locking the door that blade hyperlinks to the grass pouring out of my veins onto our apartment balcony

Jack Kerouac in Dublin, Ireland
Thu 16 May 2013

The Dublin Writers Festival presents ...

“LA NUIT EST MA FEMME :

Jack Kerouac’s search for a Language and an Identity”

Venue : The Workman's Club in Dublin, Ireland

Date : Thursday, 23 May 2013

Time : 8:30 p.m.

“LA NUIT EST MA FEMME”

Kerouac's given name wasn’t Jack; it was Jean-Louis. His mother tongue wasn’t English; it was French. In the early fifties Kerouac wrote two unpublished works in French — “Sur le chemin,” and “La nuit est ma femme,” in which Kerouac identified French as the language in which he often swears, often dreams, and always cries.

“When Jack was feeling wounded or angry,” Joyce Johnson remarks, “he’d sign his letters Ti Jean. He’d save Jean-Louis for his darkest moments.” She suggests he never felt truly American, and his love for the star-spangled nation was always the love of an outsider.

In “Lonesome Traveller,” Kerouac wrote “My people go back to Breton France, first North American ancestor Baron Alexander Louis Febris de Kérouac ... was granted land along the Riviere du Loup after victory of Wolfe over Montcalm; his descendants married Indians (Mohawk and Caughnawaga) and became potato farmers ...”

Kerouac’s father told him : “Ti Jean, n’oublie jamais que tu es Breton!” (“Never forget that you are Breton!”) In 1965, he traveled to Brittany searching his family’s roots. Unfortunately, he followed a wrong track. He never went any further until just before his death, in 1969.

“LA NUIT EST MA FEMME” will construct a literary exploration of Kerouac's relationship to French, to Catholicism and Buddhism; of his bi-lingual identity; and of his fraught relationship with America. The selections will draw on his letters, poems, haiku and novels ... especially his writings in French.

Two writers — Gabriel Rosenstock and Gearóid Mac Lochlainn — will both translate and respond to Kerouac’s work, in Irish and in English. The texts will be read to improvised jazz accompaniment by The Dirty Jazz Band and on-screen projections created by Margaret Lonergan.

“LA NUIT EST MA FEMME” is curated by Liam Carson, director of the IMRAM Irish Language Literature Festival.

Venue : The Workman's Club in Dublin, Ireland

Exhibit at Boog's Small Press Fair / List of Fest's Participants
Fri 17 May 2013

Hey everyone,

Once again, it's time for Boog City's now 10th annual small, small press fair, and we'd like to extend to you once more an invite to each of you to exhibit.

The fair will once again span two days, Sat. Aug. 3-Sun. Aug. 4, and be held at Brooklyn's Unnameable Books (600 Vanderbilt Ave.) in their spacious backyard. The fair will take place during the 7th annual Welcome to Boog City poetry, music, and theater festival.

The fair will open on Saturday with performances by authors from each of the tabling presses.

Tables are $30 for the fair, $20 dollars if you bring your own bridge table (up to 3' x 3'). All tabling presses will also receive a complimentary online business card size ad (H-2" x W-3.5") in the festival program issue of Boog City.

You can send all payments to [redacted] via http://www.paypal.com/ .

When you email me to reserve your table and schedule your reader here's what I'll need:

—a bio, logo, and url for the press

—a bio, color foto, and url for your press' reader. (Each press will have 10 minutes total for a reader and, perhaps, to talk about their press.) Though most poets (myself included) don't have their own websites, I'm guessing your poet might have work, or perhaps even an interview with them, online. If so, if you can please send one of those urls.

Please email all of the information and images to me on or by Fri. June 7, and make payment via paypal to [redacted].

This year’s fair will feature readings, musical performances, short political talks, our new BoogWork poetry workshop and reading series, and our annual panel.

We look forward to the fair once again being a warm gathering with wonderful books, poetry, music, and other items from around our creative community.

as ever,
David

P.S. Apologies if you received more than one copy of this email.

As I mentioned in previous emails to you, Boog City focuses on getting the word out about lesser-known artists, be they poets, prose writers, musicians, painters, photographers, or cartoonists. Each month we publish poetry from the likes of Anselm Berrigan, Renee Gladman, Lisa Jarnot, Eileen Myles, Kristin Prevallet, and recent Pulitzer Prize winnr Tracy K. We look forward to working with you to bring your message to the local arts community to increase awareness and sales of your publications in the New York area.

as ever,
David

Geekadelphia's Geek of the Week!

Hello Poetry Friends,

I've been called worse things, but right now Geekadelphia is calling me the "GEEK OF THE WEEK":
http://www.geekadelphia.com/2013/05/15/geek-of-the-week-paul-siegell/

Before our Q&A, Geekadelphia's Chris Urie generously writes: "To me, all of Siegell’s work rings true to that of his jam band punk personality. And although his poems are heavily visual, to get the full effect, you’ll need to see him give a live reading. It’s as electrifying as going to see your favorite band in concert."

Many thanks to Chris & Geekadelphia.com! Tremendously honored!

my first two novels,
Mon 20 May 2013

FICTION: If anyone is interested:

since I've been going through boxes lately for the sake of preparing my literary archive, I've discovered further copies of my first two novels--white (2007) and missing persons (2009)--either or both of which can still be purchased directly through me.

They're $20 each (postage included; outside of Canada, $20 US) either via my paypal on the sidebar of robmclennan.blogspot.com, or by sending cheques to me at: 402 McLeod Street #3, Ottawa ON Canada K2P 1A6.

I've also a collection of short short stories out next spring, have another collection of short stories I've been spending the past year attempting to complete, and have been working on at least one other novel, with the hopes of completing such possibly next year, or even the year after.

A selection of my upcoming collection of short short stories appeared this past January as a chapbook with Sacrifice Press:

Small Press / Mimeograph Revolution, 1940s-1970s

Archive from "A Secret Location": Small Press / Mimeograph Revolution, 1940s-1970s

We are pleased to offer for sale a captivating and important research collection of little magazines and other printed materials that represent, chronicle, and document the proliferation of avant-garde, underground small press publications from the forties to the seventies.

The starting point for this collection, "A Secret Location on the Lower East Side," is the acclaimed New York Public Library exhibition and catalog from 1998, curated by Steve Clay and Rodney Phillips, which documented a period of intense innovation and experimentation in American writing and literary publishing by exploring the small press and mimeograph revolutions.

The present collection came into being after the owner "became obsessed with the secretive nature of the works contained in the exhibition's catalog." Using the book as a guide, he assembled a singular library that contains many of the rare and fragile little magazines featured in the NYPL exhibition while adding important ancillary material, much of it from a West Coast perspective.

The Archive from "A Secret Location" was collected by a reclusive New Jersey inventor and offers a rare glimpse into the diversity of poetic doings and material production that is the Small Press Revolution. It provides a rich gathering for framing an understanding of the various drifts, swirls, and eruptions in the poetry and art firmament of the era, including: Beat Generation, Counterculture, New York School, Venice West, San Francisco Renaissance, Wichita Vortex, Black Mountain, Mavericks, Hippies, Diggers, and related iterations that inform, incite, and inspire one another and the culture at large in ways we are only now beginning to fully grasp.

The collection includes excellent runs and significant examples of important little mags including:

Angel Hair, Beatitude, Big Table, Black Mountain Review, C, Caterpillar, Fuck You, Gnaoua, Grist, The Hasty Papers, Insect Trust Gazette, J, Kulchur, Locus Solus, Matter, Measure, Miscellaneous Man, Merlin, Mother, Now, Open Space, The Outsider, Pacific Nation, Poems from the Floating World, Renaissance, San Francisco Earthquake, Set, Some/thing, Tree, Trobar, Whe're/, and Yugen.

Additionally, the collection includes a representative sampling of sixties West Coast counterculture publications, including: The San Francisco Oracle, The Southern California Oracle, Communications Company (the publishing arm of the Diggers); items relating to the explosive San Francisco music scene including a collection of handbills and postcards from Family Dog and others; newspapers and magazines of radical politics such as The Berkeley Barb, Ramparts, The Realist; uncommon pre-zine self-published journals of offbeat commentary such as Horseshit and Jack Green's Newspaper; and a wide assortment of pamphlets, magazines and diverse additional obscure and rarely seen publications from the period.

recs for contemporary poetry with witches?

Hello All,

I'm working on a sequence of poems about witches and girls. I'm interested in the natural kinship between these adversaries and how they engage in a battle without weapons. While my project is largely metaphorical--about feminine archetypes, aging and coming of age--I'm doing a little research on early modern witch trials (esp. Spanish Inquisition) that I hope will connect.

Right now I have a good list of books and films, but it's a little short on poetry, especially contemporary poems. Jennifer Calkin's A Story of Witchery (Les Figues Press) is on my desk as I write and I'm looking for other books to join it.

I'm open to any and all suggestions!

Thank you,

Meryl DePasquale

June 2013

88 messages · Tue 28 May 2013 – Wed 26 Jun 2013

June 2013 was a small summer month — eighty-eight messages — that turned, in its scattered way, on how poetry survives now: by the passing of a hat, by the borrowing of the airwaves, by the reading raised in a room. The list had thinned to a murmur, and its few live threads pointed at the practical means of keeping the art alive in a world that would not pay for it: the crowd-funding campaign, the poet-as-broadcast, the small reading series carrying on. The month was about the new economics and old technologies of survival.

The largest of the small threads was an appeal to the crowd. A crowd-funding campaign pledged to donate a portion of its proceeds to a beloved poetry organization — the community learning to finance itself by the many small gifts of the internet, the digital passing of the hat that had begun, in these thin years, to replace the vanished patrons and the failing grants. It was mutual aid updated for the platform age: not the institution funding poetry, but poetry funding poetry, a dollar at a time.

The quarrel, faint, was really an old idea in a new form. A reading series titled Poet as Radio revived the durable image of the poet as a transmitter — the maker who broadcasts, who tunes in and relays, the Spicerian dream that the list kept returning to — now attached to the actual apparatus of online broadcast and podcast, the poet reaching a scattered audience through the wires. The transmission metaphor that had opened the year in January came round again in June, the poem still imagined as a signal seeking its listeners.

Around the edges ran the smallest keeping — a reading series announced, a poem shared on video, a scatter of notices. The infrastructure carried on at its faintest, the reading rooms and the online experiments doing their quiet work, the living poetry going on being made and broadcast to whoever would tune in — the reading room and the podcast and the crowd-funder all pressed, in their small ways, into the single work of keeping the signal alive.

I have set June down exactly as the archive delivered it — the crowd-funding of poetry, the poet-as-radio broadcasting to a scattered audience, and the faint keeping of a small month — because it was the month the diminished list turned to the practical question of survival: how the art gets funded and how it gets heard when the old patrons and platforms are gone. A room that will finance its poetry by passing a digital hat and imagine its poets as radios broadcasting to whoever will listen is a room improvising its own endurance, inventing, out of crowd-funders and podcasts and small readings, the makeshift new means by which a poetry with no market keeps finding its money and its audience anyway.

Sun 2 Jun 2013

The premise for Mimeo Mimeo No. 8, the Curatorsâ€™ Choice Issue, was seemingly simple. We contacted a number of librarians, publishers, poets, printers, book dealers, book collectors, and others bibliographically inclined with an invitation to curate six pages of Mimeo Mimeo with six items from their personal or institutional collections. Looking back on our initial request, the concept was rather lacking in options: six pages, six images, and six mini-essays. Sixteen contributors chose to answer our call. Some found pleasure in our constraints, vague as they were, and provided the asked-for images and essays, but always with elements of the personal that made their selections truly unique. Others broke free completely, refusing to be so select in documenting their bildungsromans in the bibliographic World-at-Large. Whatever the course of action, the end results are exemplary.

CFP -- postmedieval

Wed 5 Jun 2013

CFP for Upcoming Issue of postmedieval—Contemporary Poetics and the Medieval Muse

In a recent article, Chris Jones provides a survey of what he calls “an important new development in modern poetry,” namely the increasingly large and diverse “range of modern writers who drew on Old English sources in their work,” performing a return to and recovery of early medieval forms and plots. The foremost characteristic of this “New Old English” was the “sustained deployment of Old English tropes and techniques” and “the rhythmical possibilities for composition” offered by early medieval poetry.

One of the aims of this issue is to build on Jones’ work, and extend the conversation to more overtly experimental and postmodern poets who work with the medieval in a variety of ways. What kind of work is being done now beyond English (Old, Middle, etc.)? How does this work push beyond the tendency of translators to, on the one hand, preserve an archaic medieval “feel,” while on the other, smooth the material out for contemporary readers? Furthermore—and this is the second and more important set of questions that we wish to explore in this issue—what would a poetics look like that, instead of limiting itself to reaching into the medieval for content and form, explored medieval modes of authorship, subject position, voice, gender, genre, etc.? How could a poetics critically engage with the medieval through creativity itself, rendering both breaks and continuities between contemporary and medieval poetry in terms of language, lines, and utterance, rather than relying on traditional academic discourse?

Some of the projects we’ve been excited about in discussing this issue include Thomas Meyer’s Beowulf (Punctum, 2012); Caroline Bergvall’s Meddle English (Nightboat, 2010); Julian T. Brolaski’s gowanus atropolis(Ugly Duckling, 2011); and Pattie McCarthy’s bk of (h)rs (Apogee, 2002). All of these texts partake of medieval sources and/or modes of authorship in order to explore poetry as, respectively, a visual medium, gendered language, language slippage and loss, linguistic/sexual hierarchies, and so on. In other words, they do not attempt to update the medieval—they trouble contemporary poetics and language through the medieval, and vice-versa. What they produce is new, but, it seems to us, newness is not the point so much as disrupting received language systems in order to see what happens, what understanding of language and poetry can be discovered.

This issue of postmedieval will explore such poets and poetry with these questions, and modes of engagement, firmly in mind. We anticipate a collection that examines not only the ways that medieval literature informs and influences the work of such poets as those mentioned above, but how such work can provide an intriguing lens for considering medieval literature itself, and how certain medieval modes of writing and authorship anticipate strains of the contemporary avant-garde. If you are unsure if your essay is appropriate for this issue, please provide an abstract as soon as possible, and the editors will respond. In general, essays will be no longer than 2,500-3,000 words, and the deadline for initial drafts is October 15, 2013. The issue will be published in 2015.

Sincerely,

David Hadbawnik ([redacted]) and Sean Reynolds ([redacted]<http://us.mc1220.mail.yahoo.com/mc/compose?to=[redacted]>), SUNY-Buffalo

Crowd Funding Campaign Donating Portion of $ to Poetry Project

Wed 5 Jun 2013

Greetings!

I just wanted to let you all know that a band that I front (The Minor Arcana—http://www.minor-arcana.com) are running a Pledge Music campaign and that we are donating 40% of our proceeds above and beyond our goal to the Poetry Project. The deal is there are 11 days left in the campaign and we are halfway there. If we are fully funded in 11 days (roughly $2,000 to go) then Pledge Music will keep the funding open until March 2014 and as people continue to Pledge, 40% of all of that money goes to the Poetry Project. If we are not 100% funded in 11 days, then my band gets no money and neither does the Poetry Project.

Pledge Music is like a Kickstarter but just for musicians, curated, and with more accountability. 25% of the money is withheld from us until we complete the album and upload it to their servers AND everyone confirms they received their promised exclusive. Cards are not charged until we are fully funded and if we fail to meet the terms and conditions which Pledge Music monitors, refunds are guaranteed. In other words, we can't scam anyone.

The campaign is trying to raise a little less than half the money necessary for us to record our second album. The album is about personal and political turmoil (specifically the death of my close friend and ex-fiancee and the Occupy Movement, by and large) but includes a songs which are tributes to Celan, reimagine/recontextualize Wallace Stevens and William Carlos Williams, appropriate Andrew Joron and Rimbaud, but do it in the context of post-punk meeting art rock. I wrote all of the lyrics and music.

Some of the exclusives include broadsides/chapbooks by myself and other poets: Sarah Heady, Greg Bem, Amy Silbergeld, & Carlos Soto Roman. There are also exclusives that include exclusive posters, exclusive packaging for CDs which will ONLY be available to pledgers and will include broadsides of the lyrics (which you can preview at the campaign's site), or if you have your own band or musical project or recording needs, a full 8 hour day of tracking at Philadelphia's Turtle Studios (www.turtlestudios.com) OR an entire full-length record mastered by them, or I or my band will travel anywhere within a reasonable distance (say 5 hours-ish of Philly) to play an event/party—there's a lot of weird, quirky packages available.

It's important, however, that we first meet this funding goal in the next 11 days, or else the campaign cannot raise funds for the Poetry Project, so your help is important now. Crowd funding isn't about how much you value an artist after all—it's about how much small DIY bands/artists and groups like the Poetry Project value you. It's our demonstrative admission that we cannot do what we do without support from our community of colleagues, peers, and fans.

Thanks for reading this and for all of your consideration.

Best,

Matthew Landis

Greetings!

I just wanted to let you all know that a band that I front (The Minor Arcana—http://www.minor-arcana.com) are running a Pledge Music campaign and that we are donating 40% of our proceeds above and beyond our goal to the Poetry

Project. The deal is there are 11 days left in the campaign and we are halfway there. If we are fully funded in 11 days (roughly $2,000 to go) then Pledge Music will keep the funding open until March 2014 and as people continue to Pledge, 40% of all of that money goes to the Poetry Project. If we are not 100% funded in 11 days, then my band gets no money and neither does the Poetry Project. *You can fund the project here: * http://www.pledgemusic.com/projects/minorarcanarecord2

Pledge Music is like a Kickstarter but just for musicians, curated, and with more accountability. 25% of the money is withheld from us until we complete the album and upload it to their servers AND everyone confirms they received their promised exclusive. Cards are not charged until we are fully funded and if we fail to meet the terms and conditions which Pledge Music monitors, refunds are guaranteed. In other words, we can't scam anyone.

The campaign is trying to raise a little less than half the money necessary for us to record our second album. The album is about personal and political turmoil (specifically the death of my close friend and ex-fiancee and the Occupy Movement, by and large) but includes a songs which are tributes to Celan, reimagine/recontextualize Wallace Stevens and William Carlos Williams, appropriate Andrew Joron and Rimbaud, but do it in the context of post-punk meeting art rock. I wrote all of the lyrics and music.

Some of the exclusives include broadsides/chapbooks by myself and other poets: Sarah Heady, Greg Bem, Amy Silbergeld, & Carlos Soto Roman. There are also exclusives that include exclusive posters, exclusive packaging for CDs which will ONLY be available to pledgers and will include broadsides of the lyrics (which you can preview at the campaign's site), or if you have your own band or musical project or recording needs, a full 8 hour day of tracking at Philadelphia's Turtle Studios (www.turtlestudios.com) OR an entire full-length record mastered by them, or I or my band will travel anywhere within a reasonable distance (say 5 hours-ish of Philly) to play an event/party—there's a lot of weird, quirky packages available.

It's important, however, that we first meet this funding goal in the next 11 days, or else the campaign cannot raise funds for the Poetry Project, so your help is important now. Crowd funding isn't about how much you value an artist after all—it's about how much small DIY bands/artists and groups like the Poetry Project value you. It's our demonstrative admission that we cannot do what we do without support from our community of colleagues, peers, and fans.

GEORGIA by Andrew Zawacki + digital ARTHUR ECHO (Conrad/Donovan)

Wed 5 Jun 2013

Announcing a new, co-published title from Scary Topiary & Katalanché presses

GEORGIA by Andrew Zawacki

A long poem in the myriad traditions of Philippe Soupault, Charles Olson, Carson McCullers, Jacques Derrida, et al., GEORGIA is a bereaved "insomiateque"--part incantation, part invective, part lullaby.

Saddle-stitched binding and silk-screened covers. Art by Grace Tran. Edition of 166. $10, ppd.

ALSO, I'm excited to announce the long overdue digital version of the very rare, first ever Scary Topiary chapbook: ARTHUR ECHO by CAConrad & Thom Donovan, which vanished quickly in its original run of 88 print copies. This title is now available in a free, pdf form.

What I've been doing recently

Thu 6 Jun 2013

What I've been doing -

New ESP-Disk vinyl and cd forthcoming!

We've been busy recording and mastering; the recording was made at GodelStrings on Saturday, the mastering on laptops.

The lineup and instrumentation -

Azure Carter, lots of songs!
Chris Diasparra, baritone and tenor saxes!
Ed Schneider, alto sax, a bit of singing!
Alan Sondheim, long-necked saz, cura, cura cumbus, electric saz, viola, violin, tro, oud, classical guitar, parlor guitar, dan moi, kouxian, ukulele, sarangi, suroz, ghichek, pipa, sung lisu, flute, chromatic harmonica, Cm harmonic harmonica!

(I wanted to see what the transitions would be like, from one instrument or mode of playing to another; I also wanted to try using an extreme number of instruments during the course of a 9-hour recording session.)

The sound recording is amazing - I really recommend this studio.

-- Also, working on a series of texts on IMMORTALITY for the upcoming Subtle Technologies gathering/conference in Toronto this weekend, yay!

-- And query - just found a Korean gayageum at a thrift store; it's quite old and needs some work - if you know anything about stringing it please get in touch! Thanks -

Ezra, Emilio Prados

Thu 6 Jun 2013

Also in Ezra, my translation of Enclosed Garden by Emilio Prados is featured. Prados, a major figure in the Generation of 1927, along with his close associates Lorca, Aleixandre, Cernuda, Guillén, spent his years of exile after the Spanish Civil War in Mexico City. His poetry configures the body as a garden and the garden as a lover in a maddening concatenation of the contained within the contained, walls within walls opening on the limits of existence. Enclosed Garden, 380 pages is available from Lavender Ink / Diálogos. This is the first substantive translation of work by Prados (1899-1962) into English. http://www.lavenderink.org/content/link-titles/152. A wonderful review of this edition has been published by Lucina Schell at http://readingintranslation.wordpress.com/2013/06/01/emilio-prados-jardin-cerrado-and-the-spanish-tradition-in-exile/.

45. William Gillespie | Spineless Books

announcing backward pilgrim, by Deborah Akers

Mon 10 Jun 2013

backward pilgrim by Deborah Akers / I-Beam Books, 2013

http://i-beambooks.com/backwardpilgrim/index.html

“In poems pulsing with the dense, rich music of partial rhyme, Deborah Akers brings us her arresting vision of the Colorado Rockies, a landscape where “... ten thousand feet / raises the stakes / to biblical proportions...,” where “eons of crushed lives / crowd into / swaths of sandstone...” From kyrie to benedictus, Akers sings the songs of a pilgrim come to the mountain. On these pages she invokes what might be lost, if not for the power of her poems to reclaim it.” — Paulann Peterson, Oregon Poet Laureate

The seemingly unavoidable human impulse to seek comfort and reassurance in taxonomy means that providing labels might be the best way to introduce Deborah Akers and her new book of poems, backward pilgrim. Akers was born and raised in Colorado, schooled in Washington and Oregon, and lived for several years in California, before returning to Oregon (specifically, Portland) to work and write. So, Akers can safely be included in the category, Western poet. Her poems throb with an abundance of images derived from the flora, fauna, geology, and geography of her home state, thus making her a Nature poet, as well. Many of her poems recall her childhood and invoke family scenes, so calling her an Autobiographical poet would not be a mistake, though there is a reserve in Akers’ recollections that preclude adding a label so raw as Confessional. While her poems abound with internal rhyme, half-rhyme, and assonance, Akers does not employ any recognizable conventional forms (though she frequently uses strophes of equal length in many of her poems), so the designation Free Verse poet is apropos, with the Objectivist poet Lorine Niedecker being someone in particular with whom Akers can be favorably compared. Then there is the matter of the religious imagery that provides spiritual seasoning for so many of Akers’ poems. Akers was raised a Protestant, but one sequence of poems references a Catholic requiem, and allusions to Buddhism also appear. In virtually every Akers poem, if the divine is not encountered directly, it is almost surely lurking somewhere in the background and is providing some of the impulse for what is being written. However you finally classify these poems, all of them reverberate with the beauty of what is seen, what is heard, what is said. Often, it is a spare beauty, austerely recorded, but it is undeniable. Finally, backward pilgrim is Akers' first collection of poetry, which should be seen as a recommendation in and of itself. A first book resembles a "Selected Poems" in that a first book can be a gathering of an author's best work to date. First collections have the advantage of no boundaries: every poem the author has ever written can be considered; only unwritten poems are unavailable. The author has the luxury of being ruthless, tossing aside the merely good and the just adequate, while holding out for the best. Akers' pilgrimage through years of poems has resulted in a book that provides not only a lovely, detailed map of territories both physical, emotional, and spiritual, but meditations on the journeys possible when one opens oneself to the mysteries the world has to offer.

This Thursday, For Jerry: A Grand Jury Resistor Benefit Reading

Tue 11 Jun 2013

Dear friends,

Hope to see you this Thursday, June 13th for a reading in solidarity with NYC grand jury resistor Jerry Koch, featuring:

*Lonely Christopher
*Diana Hamilton
*Sophia Le Fraga
*Ariana Reines
*Joshua Furst

*and more!

We'll be raising money for the legal and support fund of NYC grand jury resistor, Jerry Koch. A longtime anarchist and legal activist, Jerry was recently subpoenaed as a witness by a federal grand jury, and has refused to testify. As a result, he's been sentenced to up to 18 months in jail, with a possibility that the sentence can be renewed, which he began serving two weeks ago--despite not being charged with any crime, and invoking his First and Fifth Amendment rights.

There's a long history of federal grand juries being used to persecute political activists, and it's a trend that has increased in recent years, so we hope you can come out to show solidarity with Jerry. We'll be taking donations, and there will be beer and wine for sale, with all proceeds going to Jerry's support campaign.

Even if you can't make it out to the reading, please take a look at the Jerry Resists support campaign website, http://jerryresists.net/category/news/, and consider making a small donation and/or writing a letter.

All best,
Aaron and Josef

SPECS (www.specsjournal.org) is on the lookout for genre-crossing work and innovative poetry! We are now accepting submission via submittable: http://specs.submittable.com/submit specs {specifications, speculations, spectacle . . . } is a journal that aims to produce a charged atmosphere around artistic and critical approaches. Hence, specs is willing to live in a constant state of flux, with the mission of propagating strange and involved sympathies between disparate genres and forms. We want to break down hierarchies between poems, fictions, and critical writing. We hope for seepages, warped conversations, and misappropriations between areas of content.

specs, a nonprofit journal for the arts, was founded in 2007 and is published annually. Funding is provided by Rollins College, in addition to sales and private contributions.

New from AngelHousePress - Four Hundred Rabbits by Steven Artelle

Thu 13 Jun 2013

Steven Artelle's long poem "Four Hundred Rabbits" is simultaneously imaginative & philosophical. There are red rabbits, shy rabbits, rabbits into soft core porn, rabbits with foot fetishes, filthy creatures who become deities of dust, robot rabbits, masked rabbits. Above all "Four Hundred Rabbits" has a poignant lyricism with descriptions which bring to mind Albrecht DÅ±rer's Apocalypse & William Blake's illuminated books. This work is full of energy, heat, humour & creativity. If John Updike, Dante Alighieri & Lewis Carroll were to have a love child, his name would be Steven Artelle.

"one rabbit cried/our divinity was nothing without the cities/the cities with their night fires and their cavernous days/and praise and praise and praise was the pulse of our dancing"

Limited Edition of 50 copies.
ISBN: 97819267860302
Price: $5.00 CAD

Steven will be launching "Four Hundred Rabbits" on Friday, June 14, 2013 as part of the Ottawa Small Press Book Fair Pre-Fair Reading in Ottawa at 7:30pm, the Carleton Tavern, 223 Armstrong, UPSTAIRS.

BLURBS:

Vassilakis has taken a huge leap forward in the evolution of concrete poetry, by utilizing the myriad possibilities of digital manipulation of typography. The result is work of stunning beauty, color, design, concept, with a visuality that makes his ideas and poetics vivid and endlessly intriguing.

John M.
Bennett

Is it feasible for visual poetry to be positively erudite? In the words (or word) of one of the not-quite-texts here, Moments Notice presents the argument for YES.

Ron Silliman

Moments notice us at a moment's notice, lying in wait for us, in this space-time lingo-jaunt. When humans (hypothetically) fall into a black hole, the first thing their bodies undergo is "spagghettification." One could say that when human language falls into Nico Vassilakis's clutches, it undergoes a similar process. But instead of annhihilation, there is plenitude. Visually festive, this malleable skein of tangled spagghettiyarn'd verbiage bounces and twists its way through text/image after text/image, singing as it goes. Join in for a rollicking time, but hold on to your hat!

Maria
Damon

The Tongue knows language never spoken never revealed in the spaces between letters between the multiple readings of discourse gone blissful. The Tongue ties typography graphic in the handheld device of your choice, thumbed at, thumbed into endless arrays pleasured from the keyboard of all possibilities.

http://boogcity.com/flyer.wbc7.pdf

The event will take place, for the sixth time each at Adam Tobin's terrific Unnameable Books in Prospect Heights, Brooklyn and in The East Village at the legendary Sidewalk Café.

This flyer delineates by venue the folks performing on one of the four days at Unnameable Books and those performing during our one night on at Sidewalk Cafe, Sun. Aug. 4. Within the next week or so I'll be updating this flyer and breaking it down to reflect the minute-by- minute sked, and I'll use the same URL for that revised flyer, so if you revisit the above URL later on you will see the full sked, slot by slot.

For more info you can email [redacted], call 212-842- BOOG(2664), tweet @boogcity, or message us on facebook.

Hope to see you at the fest, and if you make it down be sure to say hi.

Now Online/Boog City 81: With Oakland and More
Fri 21 Jun 2013

Hi,

The online pdf of Boog City 81, with a special section of work on Oakland, Calif., is now available. You can read it at:

http://boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc81.pdf

And, for the first time ever, everything's hyperlinked in the issue.

And two important Boog things to note:

You'll see on pages 2-3 the list of all that's going on at the 7th annual Welcome to Boog City Festival where, for the first time, we've surpassed 100 performers. If you want to view the flyer separately and share with others:

http://boogcity.com/flyer.wbc7.pdf

(thanks to our art editor, the incomparable Jonathan Allen (http://www.jonathanallen.org/), for the festival logo.)

And, as part of the fest, we're hard at work on raising funds to bring NYC expat Matt Roth, Major Matt Mason USA, in to witness the performance, for its 15th anniversary, of his classic Me Me Me album, to play the final song of the record and then a set of post-Me Me Me solo work.

We've raised $309, and need to raise $191 in 10 days, on or by Sun. June 30, to be able to get Matt to town. The ad for the Matt fundraising is on p.2 of the paper. if you want to view it separately and share with others:

http://boogcity.com/festival/majormatt.pdf

And to paypal donations of any amount, send funds to [redacted] to:

Thanks for your continued support.

best,
Your Friends at Boog City

from our Music section, edited by Jonathan Berger

After editing Boog City's music section since the fall of 2003 and issue 11, Jon's tenure ends here, with issue 81. (The great J.J. Hayes is taking over with the upcoming Boog City 82.)

Jon's ability to turn all of us on to musicians we probably never heard of has been much appreciated as we continue with the original Boog City mission statement, to get the word out about artists of all kinds who folks should know about.

I asked Jon to share some of his favorite pieces. So he picked eight of them. Go to page 12 in the issue and there are links to each of the issues.

The library remains a democratizing and nurturing environment where creativity can thrive." From our Small Press section, edited by Kimberly Ann Southwick

—"You can almost have a kind of scavenger hunt. You hit the corner and suddenly there’s this gorgeous, big shimmering mural. That’s how I see art in our city. Here it’s part of life. Art is part of life in this understated, hardworking, unexpectedly beautiful splash-of-mirrors-in- the-midst-of-the-daily-grind. I think that’s how I see writing here too." From "Literature, Art, and Philadelphia, A Love Story: Apiary Magazine’s Lillian Dunn Talks," by Steve Burns.

New Release "As They Fall" by Ivy Johnson
Sat 22 Jun 2013

Introducing a new poetry release by Ivy Johnson, recent graduate of Mills College MFA Poetry program, published by Timeless Infinite Light of Oakland, CA.

In "As They Fall" various syntagmas - words, phrases, sentences - are printed in handwriting on 3" x 4.25" cards. The poem(s) can thus be arranged in any variety of order by the builder/reader of the poem, a methodology recalling works such as Robert Greiner's "Sentences." Each card is beautifully printed with a starry design and is unique in its own cloudy wash of pale salmon pink.

"As They Fall" creates a mythic economy of language based in contingency rather than declaration. Pulling from my own pile of cards randomly I read, "now I am hungry / put your mouth on me oh god / the warbling poles / the wind planted seeds / is this not baptism / throbs w/ a flash / florescent lights / turn, then". Alternatively, I am invited to construct my own poem, invited to navigate of the total space that is the whole of the poem's language and to "try out" its economy of movement and imagery for myself. For example: "As in a mirror / the handprints / random flat vibrations / sometimes a figure / build in me / as if returning were possible / the sun was pure / a scene / a flood behind it".

Free event at Campos Plaza Housing Development?
featuring Cooper-Moore, Rob Brown, Darius Jones, Roy Campbell Max Johnson, Chad Taylor + children of Music is Mine

For 3 years, Arts For Art has run a free music program 'Music Is Mine' for the children in Campos Plaza housing development - 611 East 13 Street. The primary teachers have been William Parker and Jean Carla Rodea with help from other musicians. Last Tuesday when musicians who were to perform for and with the Music Is Mine students arrived for the final class of the year, the children were being driven away on a 'field trip' And -Our teachers were informed that NYCHA will be closing the center in September. Later we heard that all of the NYCHA children, senior & health centers would close because of the loss of federal funding, due to the sequester budget cuts. Now it seems that people are rising to Save these centers. Hopefully our event will bring much needed attention to these important programs. let me know if you can help. GOLES will send a representative and Councilwoman Rosie Mendez will be speaking and I am very sorry for the late notice! thank you Patricia

Tue 25 Jun 2013

Hello Again,

In a little over five weeks, to mark our 22nd anniversary, we'll be putting on our seventh annual Welcome to Boog City poetry, music, and theater festival, featuring poets, musicians, and playwrights performing at two venues, in two boroughs, over four days, from Fri. Aug. 2-Mon. Aug. 5. To see the full schedule of over 100 poetry, music, and theater peformances visit:

http://boogcity.com/flyer.wbc7.pdf

Ten days before the event, we'll be putting out the festival issue of Boog City. This issue will feature pieces on some of the performers and a full schedule, illustrated with images of each of the performers. Here's what last year's looked like:

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc72.pdf

Advertising in the festival issue of Boog City means you will reach more than 3,000 readers, poetry lovers, and small press aficionados throughout the East Village, other targeted areas of lower Manhattan; Williamsburg and Greenpoint, Brooklyn; as well as online distribution on our boogcity.com website. That's an increase of 33.3% over our regular issues for no additional cost. And, since this issue is also a program for the festival, readers will give it a closer read as they check to see who's up later on that day and throughout the festival.

Boog City continues to offer our special Small Press Ad Rates. That means when you advertise with us you will save 50% off of our regular display ad rates.

* Eighth-Page $40

Here is a link to our full rate card:

http://boogcity.com/adrates.pdf

As I mentioned in previous emails to you, Boog City focuses on getting the word out about lesser-known artists, be they poets, prose writers, musicians, painters, photographers, or cartoonists. Eight times a year we publish poetry from the likes of Anselm Berrigan, Renee Gladman, Lisa Jarnot, Eileen Myles, Kristin Prevallet, and recent Pulitzer Prize winnr Tracy K. Smith, alongside our music section, small press book reviews, political commentary, art, comics, and photographs.

We look forward to working with you to bring your message to the local arts community to increase awareness and sales of your publications in the New York area.

as ever,
David

July 2013

77 messages · Sat 29 Jun 2013 – Sat 27 Jul 2013

July 2013 was a thin, aphoristic month — seventy-seven messages — that set the ugliness of the poetry business against a lovely, dark defense of poetry itself: the art as a beautiful deceit, a story that shelters us from the truth of eternity. The room had little traffic, but its scattered threads circled a single consoling idea, borrowed from one poet through another: that poetry lies, and that its lying is a mercy. The month found, in its smallness, a kind of creed.

The largest current was a defense of the beautiful lie. Amy King, invoking Alice Notley, offered the room the aphorism it would carry through the month — that "Poetry is a deceitful thing. That protects us from eternity." — the poem as a saving fiction, a story we know to be untrue and believe anyway, precisely because the alternative, the raw fact of the infinite and the ending, is unbearable without it. It was the oldest defense of the art restated with a shrug and a wink: poetry lies, thank God, and the lie is what keeps us company against the dark.

The quarrel set that consolation against the trade's indignities. A thread on the beastly po-biz catalogued the ugliness of the profession — the careerism, the favor-trading, the small cruelties of the literary marketplace — the sordid machinery around an art whose actual gift is the deceit that protects us from eternity. Between the beautiful lie of the poem and the ugly truth of the po-biz sat the month's real contrast: the thing itself, and the wretched apparatus that has grown up to sell it.

Around the edges ran the smallest keeping — a poetry postcard festival announced, a book of visual poetry available, a prompt shared for writing. The infrastructure carried on at its faintest, the small festivals and the self-announced titles doing their quiet work, the living poetry going on being made in the gap between its own beauty and its business.

I have set July down exactly as the archive delivered it — Notley's aphorism that poetry is a deceitful thing that protects us from eternity, the ugliness of the po-biz set against it, and the faint keeping of a thin month — because it was the month the list found, in its smallness, the consolation at the center of its art: that the poem is a saving fiction, a beautiful lie that shelters us from the unbearable truth. A room that will hold, in the same July, the loveliest defense of poetry as a merciful deceit and the ugliest facts of the business that sells it is a room that knows both halves of its condition: that the thing itself is a grace, a story that protects us from eternity, and that everything built around it to market and rank and sell it is exactly the eternity the poem was trying to spare us.

— Kristen M. Fabians

looking for boulder housing: july 7-14
Sat 29 Jun 2013

hi poetics friends...hope you're all enjoying summer.

i head to boulder this sunday to teach during week 1 of naropa's summer writing program. then, i'll also stay in boulder for week 2 of the program so i can relax and have some summer fun. i've got faculty housing for week 1. but -- could you be in touch if you know someone who might be able to host me in boulder for the week of july 7-14? or, someone who has a low-priced room to rent? ideally, a cat-free place because of my allergies (or a room with a door that closes to cats). i've asked a few people at naropa but haven't had much luck. any ideas?

big thanks,
jen karmin

"Beginner's Mind" blog-re-announcement

Sun 30 Jun 2013

Begging your indulgence from the busy schedule I know you all have, with the summer beginning I've decided to re-announce "Beginner's Mind," which, unlike its first announcement, now has an introduction. Also, the first two months (May and June) have been revised. As the entanglements of texts and images clarify at their own pace, the fantasy of progress requires working in all directions.

Here's where Beginner's Mind begins:

Thank you, as always.

Welcome to Boog City 7 Bios and Websites

Classic Albums Live presents,
for its 15th Anniversary,
Major Matt Mason USAâ€™s Me Me Me

Jonathan Berger http://jonberger.com http://olivejuicemusic.com/artists/jonathan-berger Jonathan Berger first heard Major Matt Mason USA perform in 1994. He drove MMM to an Albany Borders Books in 1996. He took Nan Turner to her first MMM show in 1999 and published his column in AntiMatters around the same time. Jonathan Berger was at the first Schwervon! show, the first Kansas State Flower show, and the first show where Major Matt Mason stood up to perform. Jonathan Berger has recorded for Olive Juice Music and cat-sat for Gummo. Occasionally, he writes (Berger, that is).

Dan and Rachel http://danandrachel.com/ http://kalerecords.com/ Twisted love-rock duo Dan and Rachel has a wild song collection that ranges from loud dance beats to soft folk tunes, from hilarious commentaries to old-school love songs. Their live performances run the gamut of human emotion, with songs about bananas, love, social ills, and zombies. Audiences are quick to join in the chorus of â€œtheir classic rapid-fire history of the banana.â€ (American Songwriter)

Since 2009 they have toured over a dozen countries, playing internationally acclaimed venues including Webster Hall (NYC), El Lokal (ZÃ¼rich), and the Reeperbahn Festival (Hamburg). They made their first album, Damn Monsters!, in 2011.

Their second album, Plus One, was released in 2012 on Kale Records. Dan and Rachel also write songs for the Bushwick Book Club. They live and grow food in Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn.

Steve Espinola and Preston Spurlock http://paleophone.net/ Steve Espinola is a mostly-piano-playing singer-songwriter, though he deviates to other instruments. As of late, he is running a boutique artisanal record cutting service specializing in unique "Mixtape" LPs, Program, and order one for your beloved hipster. His music has been described as a â€œFats-Waller-shares-a-cigarette-with-Brian-Wilson- while-Marianne-Moore-buys-insurance-from-Wallace-Stevens-and-Isabella- Rossellini-eyes-Stanley-Tucci-in-Big-Night sort of hybrid.â€

Preston Spurlock is a South Florida-based cartoonist, animator, and musician currently living in Brooklyn. He first started playing the Sidewalk Cafe in 2005.

Casey Holford http://www.caseyholford.bandcamp.com http://www.framedfractions.com http://www.Facebook.com/GoldenRuleStudio Casey Holford is a Massachusetts-born, Ditmas Park, Brooklyn resident who has spent the last 12 years playing and recording and listening to as much music as possible. He's been in a number of bands with funny names, like Urban Barnyard and Art Sorority for Girls, and he has recorded several solo albums and EPs. He produces records for songwriters from his attic studio Golden Rule. He is also an ardent amateur photographer, with a small army of weird old film cameras and a penchant for soaking his negatives in bourbon.

Kung Fu Crimewave http://www.kungfucrimewave.bandcamp.com Siblings, Luke, Joanna, and Neil Kelly along with Preston Spurlock and Matt Colbourn make up the band Kung Fu Crimewave. Rocking New York City since 2007 they have become known for their energetic live shows and whimsically up beat post apocalyptic songs.

Major Matt Mason USA http://www.olivejuicemusic.com/blogs/mmm Major Matt Mason USA is the name for songwriter/sound producer Matt Rothâ€™s solo music project. Inspired by the homemade tapes of Daniel Johnston and the writings of Raymond Carver, MMMâ€™s first recordings appeared in self made cassette format around 1994. He as since released 5 full length albums (on CD and CDR) and two 7â€ singles on Olive Juice Music. 3 of these albums have also been released in the UK on Teenage Fan Club drummer Francis MacDonaldâ€™s, Glasgow based, label Shoeshine Records. MMM's music is riddled with influences that range from the paired down songwriting of early Bob Dylan and Neil Young to the more aggressive elements of The Velvet Underground and Yo La Tengo. Matt is also a member of the bands Schwervon and Kansas State Flower. The DIY spirit is a big part of MMMâ€™s art and lifestyle as he continues to carve a niche for himself and others in the ever evolving stew of contemporary American Folk Music.

dubbed "the NYC Antifolk scene's answer to Zappa & the Mothers of Invention"). He writes songs about Klaus Kinski, manboobs, and cheese fries. Also, he writes songs about love and sex and pain and stuff. The Elastic No-No Band back-catalogue is available at the above url.

Todd Carlstrom and the Clamour http://www.reverbnation.com/toddcarlstromandtheclamour
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TPRP5XwzGtI Todd Carlstrom and the Clamour are an occasional guts-n-glory rock band with a http://www.reverbnation.com/toddcarlstromandtheclamourrotating cast. So rotating, in fact, that Todd will tell you who's playing tonight when we get onstage. The band started when sessions were ending for Todd's Major Matt-produced album, Gold on the Map. What started as a recording experiment (Todd playing all the instruments and writing many of the songs on the spot) had yielded some good loud results, so he put together a group to play them live. And thus, the Clamour.

Northern Media Group, defined him as â€œPublisher of the Year.â€ He is also a distinguished travel journalist, providing, for many years, the research and creative contents for regular updates of at least 50 titles within The Frommer Guides, shaping and guiding coverage that included most of Western Europe, the Caribbean, Bermuda, The Bahamas, and parts of the Americas.

Their books have generated literary awards, lots of blog and tabloid commentary, and a growing list of devoted fans.

The Tet Offensive https://www.facebook.com/tetoffensive http://www.youtube.com/thetetoffensive The Tet Offensive are a string quartet-powered rock band led by composer and singer Brian Robinson. I know that you just read a sentence that used the words â€œstring quartetâ€ and â€œcomposerâ€ in them. And yet theyâ€™re still a rock band. They still cover the White Stripes and Soundgarden. Theyâ€™ve played The Knitting Factory and CBGBs. They still play rock music despite the contemporary notion that string quartets are a part of the classical music world, and that composers are brooding and effete loners with sallow complexions and mood swings. They say "To Hell with that preconception." In a genre that celebrates the visceral and gritty, is there nothing more visceral than screaming a taut bow of horsehair against strings, and having no amplification or effects pedals to mask what youâ€™re playing? Theyâ€™re celebrating the risk-taking and scary parts of rock. Where Dylan plugged in, theyâ€™re kicking out the whole band and replacing it. "Like our namesake,they say,"we are the surprise attack during a national holiday. We are the Tet Offensive."

Strategizing Poetics at CSoP with Sharon Mesmer

Wed 3 Jul 2013

OULIPO, noulipo, Conceptual, flarf, post-flarf: the transformation of poetry and prose through deploying strategies of method, structure, content, intention and chance/change is a given now. In utilizing strategy in our own work, don’t we wonder how great a part control (or the absence of it) should play? How far back should writers stand from their works, making way for the (perhaps) foreign agent of "strategy"? What benefits accrue to the work? What do writers gain — or lose? We'll look at and discuss Stéphane Mallarmé's Un coup de dés jamais n'abolira le hasard (A throw of the dice will never abolish chance), selections from the anthologies OULIPO: A Primer of Potential Literature, The Consequence of Innovation: 21st Century Poetics, I'll Drown My Book: Conceptual Writing by Women, and Postmodern American Poetry: A Norton Anthology, and other related documents. Three written assignments, to be discussed during class time, will be based on model texts from those works.

Classes start July 19th. For more information or to register click below:

seventeen seconds: a journal of poetry and poetics comes out as the natural extension of the eight issues of Poetics.ca edited by rob mclennan and Stephen

Brockwell. Highlighting the diversity of voice, style, practice and politic, seventeen seconds continues the resolve to provide a forum for dialogue on contemporary poetics, with a focus on Canadian writing. Over the past two decades, the amount of critical writing published in print literary journals on Canadian poetry, specifically, seems to have decreased dramatically, but slowly returned through a number of online journals. seventeen seconds simply wishes to help strengthen the dialogue and the ongoing conversation about writing through publishing new writing, and conversation about new writing. How else are we supposed to learn anything, unless we keep talking?

The thirty-first volume of the poetry annual New American Writing is now available, with a section of Ten Canadian Poets edited by yours truly, following on the heels of other selections of Canadian poetry I've attempted to showcase outside our borders, including the Canadian issue of Swiss online pdf journal dusie, or the three sections I edited for Jacket magazine (on Douglas Barbour, on George Bowering and on new Canadian poetries), as well as a thread that exists in the midst of the new Tuesday poem feature Ive been curating, over at the dusie blog. Ive actually been wanting to edit an anthology of twenty-four Canadian poets for a non-Canadian publisher for years, but haven't yet managed to convince a publisher.

When soliciting for this small section of New Canadian Writing, I attempted a cross-section of some of the writers Ive been keeping my eye on, the ones from various corners of the country that excite me. They range from the well-established to the other end of emerging; they range from the experimental to the more lyric narrative. The differences between our two countries are small, stark, obvious, nebulous and often impossible to articulate. There is no single difference. We look and sound like you, but after a while, subtle difference come up, that you hadnt quite noticed before.

There have certainly been improvements over the past decade, but on the whole, writing doesnt cross the Canadian/American border easily, and most international publishers that produce poetry works dont often publish the works of Canadians, leaving us aware of works by American, British and other international writers, but predominantly as a one-way system. Online journals such as Jacket magazine, Jacket2 and Lemonhound have certainly worked to improve the conversations between countries, as well as the Canadian poets now with author pages on the American Electronic Poetry Center website, but there is always room for improvement. I hope that this small engagement might provide some further interest in what some truly amazing Canadian poets have been up to, lately.

Thanks so much to Paul Hoover and Maxine Chernoff for allowing me this space in their journal.

Textsound issue 17: Fence Books Mix Tape

Wed 10 Jul 2013

Textsound issue 17: Fence Books Mix Tape

Textsound has produced a small number of special issues in the past: We published an issue focusing on Jon Cotner and Andy Fitch<http://www.textsound.org/index.php?ISSUE=9>'s collaborative works, in celebration of their UDP release Ten Walks/Two Talks, and Anna Vitale curated an homage to the poetics in her home state, Michyou <http://www.textsound.org/index.php?ISSUE=10>.

Issue 17 kicks off a new series of special issues, this time focusing on small presses. The issue's not meant to be a replication of the publisher's bookshelf, but an aural insight into the individual voices that make up the press's collective body. We left the call open-ended; contributors were asked to send readings from printed texts, critical work, soundscapes, collaborations, manifestos, or whatever else they could imagine.

New Happenings

Hannah Ensor is joining the editorial board. Hannah writes poetry and makes noise-pop tentacular deep-ocean sounds with John Melillo as the band Algae & Tentacles. Her poems are online at Spork Press, Evening Will Come, and Network Awesome, and in print in CutBank and Bat City Review. She holds an MFA in creative writing from the University of Arizona and serves on the board of directors of Casa Libre en la Solana, a literary arts nonprofit in Tucson, Arizona.

Some of our contributors are collaborating on audio pieces for The Conversant <http://theconversant.org/>. You can check out the first installment here <http://theconversant.org/?p=3169>.

Our next issue will be a spotlight on Bay Area poetics, curated by Adam Fagin.

OTHERWISE SMOOTH
Rosmarie Waldrop

> How daily my life. How tiny the impurities around which > words might accrue. Worlds. Whorls. Pearls? Once I stood > in a town where nothing was left unchanged but the clouds > driven from the east. Now I learn from the sea. Always the > same, always different, brackish body, uncertain. The > unusual I hold at bay by taking pictures. To let it accrue > to memory without having to experience it? Do we live this > way, walking, as if we could, on thin air? But the sycamore > stands in the yard all day and all night. And now, though > still lifeless in appearance, quickens. Roots gripping > farther down.

EMBRASSER
/Un journal international de traduction du francais et de l'anglais/

«Embrasser» va se concentrer sur la littérature du monde francophone entourant les différentes variantes du français parlées à l'extérieur de la France, en passant par l'histoire et la culture. Notre première publication va célébrer la culture et le français louisianais. C'est d'ailleurs dans le cadre des célébrations du Mardi Gras de 2014 que se déroulera le lancement du journal à Lafayette, en Louisiane. Les textes seront présentés en anglais mais également en français louisianais. Les prochaines publications d'Embrasser auront pour thème le français et les cultures francophones retrouvés autour du monde.

Pour sa première publication, Embrasser est à la recherche de :

*Textes de fiction *et*de non-fiction créative *allant jusqu'à 4000 mots; *de textes de poésie *allant jusqu'à 100 lignes, de pièces de théâtre ou des scénarios, allant jusqu'à 10 pages. Ces textes peuvent être rédigés par des habitants de la Louisiane ou par quelqu'un qui écrit au sujet de l'expérience louisianaise. De plus, nous acceptons des textes de critique littéraire au sujet d'une pièce ou d'une oeuvre littéraire, d'une oeuvre d'art visuel ou une oeuvre audiovisuelle, d'une performance musicale ou orale publiée, produite, écrite, créée ou performée en Louisiane, allant jusqu'à 3000 mots. Pour ces textes, nous recherchons des discussions d'actualité : les oeuvres réalisées avant l'an 2000 ne seront pas considérées.

Les soumissions devront être rédigées en anglais ou dans l'une des variantes du français louisianais.

Si acceptées, les soumissions en anglais vont être traduites en français louisianais et celles en français seront traduites en anglais. Les écrivains bilingues sont encouragés de traduire leurs propres textes et de les soumettre dans les deux langues.

Embrasser est un journal d'impression traditionnelle. Donc, nous préférons les textes courts. Chaque auteur peut soumettre jusqu'à trois textes. Toutefois, nous sommes désolés mais nous n'accepterons pas les textes qui ont été déjà publiés ou les publications simultanées.

*Les textes devront être soumis pour le 30 Septembre 2013 et envoyés à :

> The Laurentian Book of Movement
>
> > The moths die as soon as I learn their names. I hear > > nothing from the bats but what the machine tells me.
> > They are sending their best wishes, reminding me to > > breathe.
> > Richard Froude, Fabric
> In 1842, Augustin-Norbert Morin walked into the woods. There were only woods.
>
> The forest houses one kind of logic. There is more than one. You called out names under your breath. You stepped out into fleshy rain.
> The constellations were in error. We read the sounds of birds.

The skyline, black against the night blue. The first few pages of the weather wrote a thunderstorm. The eaves were full of leaves. Rain water overflowed the porch. We chomped out portions of late summer, reckless portions of Aurora Borealis.

A thread pulls powder across various landmarks. We walk into the Metro. This is not a pilgrimage.

The English language corresponds with optical illusions. One looks too close sometimes, and words begin to shimmer, flick. A chance occurance, breathes.

There were only woods, north-rolling mountain range a snake across the continent. My mouth full of leaves.

The bed was rich of metal, sleep. I walked into your shoulder.

the ottawa small press fair, 19th anniversary/autumn 2013 edition: october 12, 2013

Mon 15 Jul 2013

span-o (the small press action network - ottawa) presents:

the ottawa
small press book fair

autumn 2013 edition will be happening Saturday, October 12 in room 203 of the Jack Purcell Community Centre (on Elgin, at 320 Jack Purcell Lane).

contact rob at [redacted] to sign up for a table, etc.

"once upon a time, way way back in October 1994, rob mclennan & James Spyker invented a two-day event called the ottawa small press book fair, and held the first one at the National Archives of Canada..." Spyker moved to Toronto soon after our original event, but the fair continues, thanks in part to the help of generous volunteers, various writers and publishers, and the public for coming out to participate with alla their love and their dollars.

General info:
the ottawa small press book fair noon to 5pm (opens at 11:00 for exhibitors)

admission free to the public.

$20 for exhibitors, full tables
$10 for half-tables (payable to rob mclennan, c/o 402 McLeod St #3, Ottawa ON K2P 1A6;

send by October 1 if you would like to appear in the exhibitor catalogue.

note: for the sake of increased demand, we are now offering half tables. for catalog, exhibitors should send name of press, address, email, web address, contact person, type of publications, list of publications (with price), if submissions are being considered & any other pertinent info, including upcoming ottawa-area events (if any).

& don't forget the pre-fair reading usually held the night before, info tba! also,

BE AWARE: given that the spring 2013 was the first to reach capacity (forcing me to say no to at least half a dozen exhibitors), the fair can't (unfortunately) fit everyone who wishes to participate. the fair is roughly first-come, first-served, but preference will be given to small publishers over self-published authors (being a "small press fair," after all).

the fair usually contains exhibitors with poetry books, novels,cookbooks, posters, t-shirts, graphic novels, comic books, magazines, scraps of paper, gum-ball machines with poems, 2x4s with text, etc, including (at previous events) Bywords, Dusty Owl, Chaudiere Books, above/ground press, Room 302 Books, The Puritan, The Ottawa Arts Review, Buschek Books, The Grunge Papers, Broken Jaw Press, BookThug, Proper Tales Press, Phafours Press, and others. happens twice a year, founded in 1994 by rob mclennan & James Spyker. now run by rob mclennan thru span-o. questions, [redacted]

free things can be mailed for fair distribution to the same address. we are unable to sell things for folk who can't make it, sorry. also, always looking for volunteers to poster, move tables, that sort of thing. let me know if anyone able to do anything. thanks. for more information, bother rob mclennan.if you're able/willing to distribute posters/fliers for the fair, send me an email.

I’m not out to deny anyone institutional participation or access to resources; rather, I want to call attention to the claim these groups purport to block capitalism while intentionally employing capitalist techniques (i.e. media-style sensationalism to garner notice, sound-bite saturation, prolific self-referencing, reducing all other modes of subjective expression to exchangeable equivalences, etc.) to achieve and secure status within the capitalist structure.

Apostrophe, Odes, Ekphrasis, Oh My!

Dates: August 5-30, 2013

In the course of this workshop, we will look at a the work and lives of a variety of artists such as Leonor Fini, Frida Kahlo, Dorothea Tanning & Remedios Varo, as well as numerous poets like Paul Eluard, Allen Ginsberg, Rachel Eliza Griffiths, Edna St. Vincent Millay & many more, and consider how ekphrasis can extend beyond mere description of the visual arts but may also be combined with address (apostrophe) or incorporate the ode as a means to reflect appreciation of, and concerns from, an artist's work.

A celebration for the release of Nathan Hok's poetry collection The Narrow CircleSATURDAY, JULY 20th 7pm at the Book

Readings by:
*Nate Hoks
*Catherine Theis
*Jennifer Karmin in a live collaboration with Toby Altman & Joel Craig Â
The Narrow Circle,Â selected as a winner of the National Poetry Series by Dean Young:Â Â
John Ashbery
calledÂ Reveilles, Nathan Hoksâ€™s debut book, a â€œdazzlingâ€ collection and Hoks a poet whose â€œfine gradations of observation turn the reader into a barometer of strong subtleties like those of the weather, that can be minute even as they affect us powerfully.â€Â The poems in Hoksâ€™s new book,Â The Narrow Circle, perform a similar magic.Â In associative lyrics and fabulist prose, Hoks explores inner and outer experiences.Â The poems frequently focus on the body as a membrane where everything becomes inside-outâ€”where the â€œface disperses with angels of teeth and loam,â€ where â€œsky comes out of the mouth,â€ where a giant green worm â€œburrows a hole in the head,â€ and where the heart is a vestibule that cannot be closed.Â Suites of pictures within the text further delineate this inward-outward pull, offering visualizations of interior voices and sketches of exterior shadows.

The Urn and the Urinal (Poetry Where Death Goes) + The 3rd Annual New York City Poetry Festival

Mon 22 Jul 2013

*The Urn and the Urinal (Poetry Where Death Goes) *
*
*
*The poet is the priest of the invisible.
– Wallace Stevens*

Into one, the corpse is poured, and through the other, life’s byproducts.

Few caress the corpse, fantasize over inanimate doughy flesh, imagine the corporeal membrane as something other than former Self, as something else, anymore than one wishes to drink urine to discover its taste or consider its other existences. And yet, urine as therapy purports to cleanse, diffuses the jellyfish sting, and is found on ice in restaurants regularly. It enters the body, and washes over it.

CFP: Dickinson Electronic Archives 2 Volume 3

Wed 24 Jul 2013

DEA2: CALL FOR PROPOSALS FOR VOLUME 3 (2014)
Emily Dickinsonâ€™s Reading Culture

â€œFor Poetsâ€I have Keatsâ€and Mr and Mrs Browning. For Prose â€ Mr Ruskin â€ Sir Thomas Browne â€

and the Revelations.â€
â€”Letter to T. W. Higginson, 25 April 1862

Why should we care what Emily Dickinson really read or about her relationship to reading, books, and authors? In Thomas Wentworth Higginsonâ€™s Atlantic article for â€œyoung contributorsâ€â€”the article that prompted Dickinsonâ€™s account of her reading, oftâ€cited, and her subsequent correspondence with Higginsonâ€”he noted: â€œFor purposes of illustration and elucidation, and even for amplitude of vocabulary, wealth of accumulated materials is essential; and whether this wealth be won by reading or by experience makes no great difference.â€ For Dickinson, separated by location, situation, and temperament from the â€œwealth ofâ€¦ experienceâ€ that presumably characterized the lives of many professional writers, this counsel must have seemed pure balm. If she could write from the â€œwealthâ€¦ won by reading,â€ then, as a dedicated reader, she would be on firm ground. Emily Dickinsonâ€™s reading provided a vital foundation for her writing.

Dickinsonâ€™s reading is also significant on its own merits, however, as a practice that connected her directly and powerfully to a community of readers on both sides of the Atlantic. Dickinsonâ€™s reading has been on the critical agenda since 1966, when Jack Capps published Emily Dickinsonâ€™s Reading, 1836â€

1886; it was next taken up by Carlton Lowenberg in Emily Dickinsonâ€™s Textbooks (1986). Both Capps and Lowenberg were engaged bibliographers, documenting the worlds of books that Dickinson inhabited at home and at school. But as the idea of Dickinsonâ€™s circle has evolved, so has the idea of her reading culture. The recognition of readingâ€™s role in Dickinsonâ€™s writing has led to an explosion of critical interest in this topic, as exemplified by the special issue on reading in the Emily Dickinson Journal (2010). As scholarship on nineteenthâ€century reading practices, libraries, and book history has grown, a reconsideration of Dickinson as a reading writer and a reader is timely.

Volume Three of the Dickinson Electronic Archives 2 will focus on Emily Dickinsonâ€™s reading culture. We invite proposals for works that examine topics such as:

the circulation of works in manuscript and other informal patterns of reading and reception;

the origins, development, and use of the Dickinson family libraries; reading in Amherst town and at Amherst College; transâ€Atlantic publishersâ€™ adaptations to a changing marketplace; intersections between women writers and readers; periodicals and subscribers in the midâ€ to late nineteenth century; the response to particular books or periodicals among members of Dickinsonâ€™s circle.

Contributions may take the form of essays, bibliographies, timelines, games, posters, or other genres, but should contain visual elements. Visual elements, in addition to appearing within their native contributions, will be assembled into a collective exhibition at the core of the volume.

About the DEA 2:

The Dickinson Electronic Archives 2 is a scholarly resource showcasing the possibility of interdisciplinary and collaborative research and exploring the potential of the digital environment to reveal new interpretive material, cultural, historical, and theoretical contexts. In doing so, the DEA2 opens a space of knowledge exchange for a networked world of scholars, students, and readers by offering a series of exhibitions on subjects of keen interest to readers of Emily Dickinson. Each exhibition will offer spaces for commentary that are of different sorts. At present the DEA2 offers a discussion forum, a space like that patrons inhabit as they walk through and talk about an exhibition, a space like that moviegoers inhabit when they stop for a nightcap or late night snack and discuss the movie just viewed. The DEA2 also offers *Essays and Other Writings * for every exhibition we offer.

The deadline for proposals is September 15, 2013. Please send proposals of 500â€1000 words, with your contact information, by email attachment to the volume editor. Contributors whose proposals are accepted will be notified by November 1, 2013. Final contributions will be due March 31, 2014. The volume will be released in July 2014.

Welcome to Boog City 7 Bios and Websites

Classic Albums Live presents,
for its 15th Anniversary,
Major Matt Mason USAâ€™s Me Me Me

Jonathan Berger http://jonberger.com http://olivejuicemusic.com/artists/jonathan-berger Jonathan Berger first heard Major Matt Mason USA perform in 1994. He drove MMM to an Albany Borders Books in 1996. He took Nan Turner to her first MMM show in 1999 and published his column in AntiMatters around the same time. Jonathan Berger was at the first Schwervon! show, the first Kansas State Flower show, and the first show where Major Matt Mason stood up to perform. Jonathan Berger has recorded for Olive Juice Music and cat-sat for Gummo. Occasionally, he writes (Berger, that is).

Dan and Rachel http://danandrachel.com/ http://kalerecords.com/ Twisted love-rock duo Dan and Rachel has a wild song collection that ranges from loud dance beats to soft folk tunes, from hilarious commentaries to old-school love songs. Their live performances run the gamut of human emotion, with songs about bananas, love, social ills, and zombies. Audiences are quick to join in the chorus of â€œtheir classic rapid-fire history of the banana.â€ (American Songwriter)

Since 2009 they have toured over a dozen countries, playing internationally acclaimed venues including Webster Hall (NYC), El Lokal (ZÃ¼rich), and the Reeperbahn Festival (Hamburg). They made their first album, Damn Monsters!, in 2011.

Their second album, Plus One, was released in 2012 on Kale Records. Dan and Rachel also write songs for the Bushwick Book Club. They live and grow food in Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn.

Steve Espinola and Preston Spurlock http://paleophone.net/ Steve Espinola is a mostly-piano-playing singer-songwriter, though he deviates to other instruments. As of late, he is running a boutique artisanal record cutting service specializing in unique "Mixtape" LPs, Program, and order one for your beloved hipster. His music has been described as a â€œFats-Waller-shares-a-cigarette-with-Brian-Wilson- while-Marianne-Moore-buys-insurance-from-Wallace-Stevens-and-Isabella- Rossellini-eyes-Stanley-Tucci-in-Big-Night sort of hybrid.â€

Preston Spurlock is a South Florida-based cartoonist, animator, and musician currently living in Brooklyn. He first started playing the Sidewalk Cafe in 2005.

Casey Holford http://www.caseyholford.bandcamp.com http://www.framedfractions.com http://www.Facebook.com/GoldenRuleStudio Casey Holford is a Massachusetts-born, Ditmas Park, Brooklyn resident who has spent the last 12 years playing and recording and listening to as much music as possible. He's been in a number of bands with funny names, like Urban Barnyard and Art Sorority for Girls, and he has recorded several solo albums and EPs. He produces records for songwriters from his attic studio Golden Rule. He is also an ardent amateur photographer, with a small army of weird old film cameras and a penchant for soaking his negatives in bourbon.

Kung Fu Crimewave http://www.kungfucrimewave.bandcamp.com Siblings, Luke, Joanna, and Neil Kelly along with Preston Spurlock and Matt Colbourn make up the band Kung Fu Crimewave. Rocking New York City since 2007 they have become known for their energetic live shows and whimsically up beat post apocalyptic songs.

Major Matt Mason USA http://www.olivejuicemusic.com/blogs/mmm Major Matt Mason USA is the name for songwriter/sound producer Matt Rothâ€™s solo music project. Inspired by the homemade tapes of Daniel Johnston and the writings of Raymond Carver, MMMâ€™s first recordings appeared in self made cassette format around 1994. He as since released 5 full length albums (on CD and CDR) and two 7â€ singles on Olive Juice Music. 3 of these albums have also been released in the UK on Teenage Fan Club drummer Francis MacDonaldâ€™s, Glasgow based, label Shoeshine Records. MMM's music is riddled with influences that range from the paired down songwriting of early Bob Dylan and Neil Young to the more aggressive elements of The Velvet Underground and Yo La Tengo. Matt is also a member of the bands Schwervon and Kansas State Flower. The DIY spirit is a big part of MMMâ€™s art and lifestyle as he continues to carve a niche for himself and others in the ever evolving stew of contemporary American Folk Music.

Justin Remer http://elasticnonoband.bandcamp.com/ Justin Remer is a filmmaker, singer-songwriter, and former leader of Elastic No-No Band (once dubbed "the NYC Antifolk scene's answer to Zappa & the Mothers of Invention"). He writes songs about Klaus Kinski, manboobs, and cheese fries. Also, he writes songs about love and sex and pain and stuff. The Elastic No-No Band back-catalogue is available at the above url.

Todd Carlstrom and the Clamour http://www.reverbnation.com/toddcarlstromandtheclamour http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TPRP5XwzGtI Todd Carlstrom and the Clamour are an occasional guts-n-glory rock band with a http://www.reverbnation.com/toddcarlstromandtheclamourrotating cast. So rotating, in fact, that Todd will tell you who's playing tonight when we get onstage. The band started when sessions were ending for Todd's Major Matt-produced album, Gold on the Map. What started as a recording experiment (Todd playing all the instruments and writing many of the songs on the spot) had yielded some good loud results, so he put together a group to play them live. And thus, the Clamour.

Trouble Dolls .5 â€”Waitress Song http://www.troubledolls.tumblr.com www.29HourMusicPeople.bandcamp.com Harmonizing since 2001, Cheri and Pam are the femme half of the pop group The Trouble Dolls. They are also members of the record-in-a- weekend-club music collective 29 Hour Music People, whose latest release â€œSummer Musicâ€ just hit the wireless waves July 18. By day, Cheri does graphic design-y things, and Pam does science-y things and entertains notions of quitting grad school. They are thrilled to be performing a song for the Major Matt Mason/Me Me Me Tribute night. Pam built up her guitar-finger-callouses just for this song, and Cheri has created a patch for her synth called â€œMajor Mattolodionâ€. Rock on!

Danforth Prince, Blood Moon Productions http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6EnDQbIifQ4 http://www.bloodmoonproductions.com Danforth Prince, president and founder of Blood Moon Productions, has a knack for salvaging the previously unpublished oral histories of Americaâ€™s Entertainment industry. In 2011, a respected consortium of literary critics and book marketers, the J.M. Northern Media Group, defined him as â€œPublisher of the Year.â€ He is also a distinguished travel journalist, providing, for many years, the research and creative contents for regular updates of at least 50 titles within The Frommer Guides, shaping and guiding coverage that included most of Western Europe, the Caribbean, Bermuda, The Bahamas, and parts of the Americas.

In collaboration with the National Book Network, he has documented some of the controversies associated with his work in more than 30 videotaped documentaries and book trailers. Each of them can be watched, without charge, either on his companyâ€™s above website or by performing a search for his name on YouTube.com.

Blood Moon Productions is a privately owned New York City-based publishing enterprise dedicated to researching, salvaging, and indexing the previously unrecorded oral histories of Americaâ€™s entertainment industry. Reorganized with its present name in 2004, Blood Moon originated in 1997 as The Georgia Literary Association, a vehicle for the promotion of obscure writers from Americaâ€™s Deep South.

Blood Moon maintains almost 30 titles in print, mostly show-biz biographies, guidebooks to current films, and scandal guides to Hollywood. Meticulously researched, each has generated acclaim and controversy for their inclusion of information about events and relationships which, when they occurred, might have been considered either indecent or libelous, but which are now highly pertinent to Americaâ€™s understanding of its origins, values, and cultural roots.

Their books have generated literary awards, lots of blog and tabloid commentary, and a growing list of devoted fans.

The Tet Offensive https://www.facebook.com/tetoffensive http://www.youtube.com/thetetoffensive The Tet Offensive are a string quartet-powered rock band led by composer and singer Brian Robinson. I know that you just read a sentence that used the words â€œstring quartetâ€ and â€œcomposerâ€ in them. And yet theyâ€™re still a rock band. They still cover the White Stripes and Soundgarden. Theyâ€™ve played The Knitting Factory and CBGBs. They still play rock music despite the contemporary notion that string quartets are a part of the classical music world, and that composers are brooding and effete loners with sallow complexions and mood swings. They say "To Hell with that preconception." In a genre that celebrates the visceral and gritty, is there nothing more visceral than screaming a taut bow of horsehair against strings, and having no amplification or effects pedals to mask what youâ€™re playing? Theyâ€™re celebrating the risk-taking and scary parts of rock. Where Dylan plugged in, theyâ€™re kicking out the whole band and replacing it. "Like our namesake,they say,"we are the surprise attack during a national holiday. We are the Tet Offensive."

On Writing : an occasional series
Thu 25 Jul 2013

Back in April, I happened to catch (thanks to Sarah Mangold) the website for the NPM Daily (http://npmdaily.tumblr.com/), and absolutely loved the short essays presented on a variety of subjects surrounding the nebulous idea of "on writing." I would highly recommend you wander through the site to see the pieces posted there.

Inspired by those pieces, I decided to curate an occasional series of the same over at the ottawa poetry newsletter (http://ottawapoetry.blogspot.ca/), and have since posted five short essays by Ottawa writers on the nebulous subject of "On writing," with a new essay scheduled to appear every week or so. Given the nature of the ottawa poetry newsletter, I've been focusing on poets who are either current or former residents of the City of Ottawa, but am open to considering further pieces. Over the next couple of weeks, watch for new essays in the series by Faizel Deen, Pearl Pirie and Colin Morton.

Here are links to the first five, already posted:

August 2013

109 messages · Sun 28 Jul 2013 – Wed 28 Aug 2013

August 2013 was a quiet, bookish month that found the thinned room doing one of the oldest and humblest things a community of readers does for one another: helping a member find a half-remembered poem. One hundred and nine messages moved through the list, and its small threads circled the reference desk and the workshop — a hunt through Ashbery for a barely-recalled line, a fresh turn to ekphrasis, the summer courses of the poetry schools. The month was the list as collective memory, the room that remembers what any one reader has forgotten.

The largest small thread was a search. A member wrote in with a fragment lodged in memory and a book half-recalled — "Does anybody have a copy of April Galleons handy?" — asking the room to help locate a particular Ashbery poem from a line imperfectly remembered. It was the commons at its most characteristic and most tender: the pooled memory of many readers summoned to recover what one reader had lost, the room functioning as a living concordance, a shared mind holding more than any single head could.

The quarrel, gentle, was really a return to a standing love. A thread on ekphrasis reopened the room's long fascination with the poem that answers an image, the word set beside the picture — the same preoccupation that had run through the winter — while notices from the summer writing schools kept the pedagogy of poetry in view. The room's attention, even at low traffic, ran in its familiar grooves: the image and the word, the poem and the classroom.

Around the edges ran the smallest keeping — a blog updated, an ekphrastic workshop offered, a self-advertisement or two, a new title from a small press. The infrastructure carried on at its faintest, the workshops and the little presses doing their quiet work, the living poetry going on being taught and made and shared among a shrinking company of the faithful — the summer schools still enrolling, the small presses still issuing, the practice handed forward to whoever would take it.

I have set August down exactly as the archive delivered it — the hunt for the half-remembered Ashbery poem, the return to ekphrasis, and the faint keeping of a summer month — because it was the month the list did the humblest and most enduring of its services: remembering, together, what one of its own had forgotten. A room that will spend its August helping a member find a poem she can only half recall is a room performing the quiet miracle that a community of readers exists for — the pooling of many memories into one, so that no line anyone ever loved is quite lost as long as someone, somewhere in the room, can still be asked and still remembers.

Mon 29 Jul 2013

Dear All,

Apologies if you receive this more than once, but here's notice of the latest issue of Blackbox Manifold, edited by Adam Piette and Alex Houen. I have a piece on Frank O'Hara in this (comments/kickings welcome), but there's plenty of more valuable stuff to find.

Yours truly,
Sam

The creeks:

Mercy does not come from the sky
Norma Cole, Coleman Hawkins Ornette Coleman

Watershed. Stretched, a bend. Erupts. To be vulgar, coarse. Urban song, a thread of water. Spills. Underground, a Mohawk sky. We catch the rain. It snowflakes, tongue. Dark, manifold. So much a mirror, corner. Questions, held. Held up. This constellation, margin. Deeper than fulfilled, arthritic postures. We were not afraid. Thin, silent, mouths. Eye on you and then.

Search. We hold the river, down. This resolution, meets. Mouth to concentration, mouth. I cant go. No stream made, out-of-print. Useless, feathered, goods. What drawn and twisted, space. Snow warrant. Thin portraits. A simple-minded function. What ritual, thing. The trees, the skimming moon. Bookstalls. A brittle, darkened room. The pavement, ear. Abyss. Tonal waves direct.

Atlantic, between. Heavy manner, a centred abyss. This battered dawn, bashed ancient stone. The remains of civilization. First thought, Ur-thought. Grotesque. The oceans subdivision. Tactless. Define a score, a roundabout, a hedge. A supernatural crescent. This heated, cooling effort. Passive, energized. History, become a mine. A gravel tendril. Soothe. You, who are large in our eyes.

Pre-order Steve Shrader's posthumous double-volume from Tinfish Press!

Mon 29 Jul 2013

Tinfish Press's website now has a page devoted to the new Steve Shrader book: http://tinfishpress.com/?projects=the-arc-of-the-daythe-imperfectionist <http://tinfishpress.com/?projects=the-arc-of-the-daythe-imperfectionist> Shrader had an MFA from Iowa and lived in Hawai`i for nearly 40 years, working as an English instructor, a journalist, and a graphic designer. Toward the end of his life (he died in 2007), he wrote two amazing manuscripts of poems; we are publishing them both in a large, single volume. This book will be an important contribution to the literary history of Hawai`i and America more generally--

I hope you will all talk to your friends and colleagues about it. Please distribute the link to everyone who might be interested. We're taking pre-orders, which helps with cash to pay thefinal bill, coming soon.

The book should arrive in the next two or three weeks to Tinfish and to spdbooks.org <http://spdbooks.org>. I'll be on HPR's The Conversation tomorrow morning (Tuesday) to talk about it. Tune in if you can. There will be a launch later in the Fall in Honolulu, along with a gallery show of his photographs.

aloha, Susan

Mon 29 Jul 2013

new from No Press: BEING DUMB by Kenneth Goldsmith
Wed 31 Jul 2013

No Press is proud to announce the publication of Kenneth Goldsmith¹s BEING DUMB

Produced in a limited edition of 60 hand-bound copies.

http://derekbeaulieu.wordpress.com/2013/07/30/new-from-no-press-being-dumb-b y-kenneth-goldsmith/

From BEING DUMB:

³I am a dumb writer, perhaps one of the dumbest that¹s ever lived. Whenever I have an idea, I question myself whether it is sufficiently dumb. I ask myself, is it possible that this, in any way, could be considered smart? If the answer is no, I proceed. I don¹t write anything new or original. I copy pre-existing texts and move information from one place to another. A child could do what I do, but wouldn¹t dare to for fear of being called stupid.²

AN OPEN LETTER TO KENNETH GOLDSMITH FROM ANNE TARDOS
Sat 3 Aug 2013

Posting for Anne Tardos:

AN OPEN LETTER TO KENNETH GOLDSMITH FROM ANNE TARDOS

Dear Kenny,

Your piece â€œThe Burden of Artistsâ€™ Crapâ€ posted over a year ago in Harriet (http://www.poetryfoundation.org/harriet/2012/04/the-burden-of-artists-crap/), has just been brought to my attention. I am shocked and dismayed by your characterization of me. Kenny, weâ€™ve been down this road before. Only weeks after Jacksonâ€™s death you publicly accused me of interfering with his legacy by not immediately publishing all his recordings on your web site. May I also remind you that later you apologized profusely for your behavior, albeit in private.

I feel compelled to comment on your profound misunderstanding of the partial sale of Jacksonâ€™s library. I have devoted years of my life to archiving Jacksonâ€™s papers and little known publications. His archive was placed at the Mandeville Special Collections at UCSD, two years ago. To make this possible, I had to organize his works with the assistance of several devoted young poets over many years. Without going through the immense amount of unsorted papers, and cataloguing them, no institution would have been able to recognize the scope of the work. As for the Mac Low library, I made extraordinary efforts to place it in its entirety with reputable institutions. I am saddened that you donâ€˜t realize that parting with these books was heartbreaking for me, too.

I hope it doesnâ€™t embarrass you too much to know that the books you describe are duplicates. Perhaps you are unaware of the enormity of the collection, and that most of Jacksonâ€™s books are still in my possession. Your own books, the ones you are so sure were gone with the rest, and which you had inscribed to both of us, remain on a bookshelf next to my desk.

You write that â€œevidently the poetâ€™s widow wanted to get rid of it all.â€ Your condescension is both reckless and misguided. The comparison you make with Charles Ivesâ€™s heirs is laughable. Are you not aware that Ivesâ€™s studio is being kept as it was during his lifetime, intact and complete at the American Academy of Arts and Letters, which has meticulously recreated his studio, down to the radiator piping? Jackson wasnâ€™t so lucky.

Your reference to my reasons for selling part of the library are too offensive to answer.

To bring you up to date, in addition to my own books of poetry, I am currently editing the third posthumous book of Jacksonâ€™s. I have also preserved and conserved all of his heretofore unknown visual works, some of which are currently on exhibit in major European museums and galleries, all over the world.

You and I have known each other for many years, and over those years Iâ€™ve discovered that conjecture formed from incomplete information nearly always proves wrong. The heartbreak of a friendâ€™s death is one thing, but the heartbreak of maligning and vilifying a friend is quite another. I hesitate to characterize it.

Regards,

Anne

LINER NOTES review copies
Mon 5 Aug 2013

I'm writing with the news that PDF copies of Andy Mister's LINER NOTES are available for* *review consideration. If you are interested, write [publishers at stationhill.org] and we'll see a copy to you. Here's a brief description, publishing specifics and excerpts and links to early reviews as well as praise.

Andy Mister's LINER NOTES is a semi-narrative prose poem, a meditation on alienation and pop culture. Beginning with the Beach Boy's unfinished masterpiece Smile, Mister describes a world populated by ghosts. Adrift on a sea of drug use, boredom and popular entertainment, Mister traces his relationship to the obsessive collection of ephemera and the coterminous feelings of isolation and loss. Like an iPod on shuffle, lyrical descriptions of urban landscapes and memories of failed relationships mix with song lyrics and deadpan anecdotes of death, failure. In the end a life, like the book itself, is assembled from the detritus of pop culture. As he writes, "Each billboard is a monument to our ability to believe in anything, at least for a moment. Then it's gone." But belief's shadow remains, amid the news of a world shot full of holes, which LINER NOTES' hauntings seem to delineate like the chalk figure at the center of every homicide scene we've ever imagined ourselves appearing within… "There'll probably be some music there, lining your eyelids."* * LINER NOTES by Andy Mister ISBN 978-1-58177-131-2 Paper, $13.95, 68 pages Pub. Date: 15.Oct.13 Distributed by SPD www.stationhill.org <http://www.stationhill.org>

Early Reviews and Praise for LINER NOTES:

"It's not so often anymore that we read a book of poetry [LINER NOTES] and think to ourselves, "This poet means exactly what they say." It's a startling realization, that we so often praise the artistry of a poem or collection for having accurately captured the artistic ambitions of the poet, but less commonly consider how and when contemporary poetry is nonfictional, a direct address from the bared poet within the poet."

*Fanzine review and interview: *
http://thefanzine.com/some-notes-on-andy-misters-liner-notes/

* * “[LINER NOTES] is a poet’s memoir, a series of discreet yet interlocking paragraphs that oscillate between the suicide of so many of our rock-star idols and the loneliness at the core of how we mistakenly use their celebrity to attempt to build something of our own sense of self-worth. That’s part of it anyway. There’s more. There’s the pain of familial alienation, the fear of artistic or economic or erotic failure. The desire to connect. And ultimately, the construction of a self that’s so intimately portrayed, one can’t help but feel not so much for the “I” here as along * with* the ‘I’.” —From Eli Noah Gordon’s review in Volta Picks http://thevoltablog.wordpress.com/2013/07/16/the-volta -picks-andy-misters-liner-notes/

"Andy Mister’s loving and disturbing ‘notes’ create a complex harmony (sympathy) between public noise and private revelation. In the midst of LINER NOTES we read: “Childhood is a song I can barely remember the words to. They only come back to me when I am thinking of something else.” That something else is at the heart of this compelling and magical book. Listen!" —Peter Gizzi "Jim Carroll’s 'People Who Died' comes immediately to mind, but LINER NOTEShas more in common with David Markson’s late books or with Frank O’Hara’s ‘Hatred’ than with any pop song. What’s most evident, though, is that AndyMister cares for his readers by caring about his subject. He’s your friend, and he’s alive."

—Graham Foust

“I love the blunt care for real time, with all its gaps & noises & bends, Andy Mister takes in the searching, powerful scroll of paragraphs that make up LINER NOTES. Working through the implied vision of an undecided note taker prone to stark assertions and excavating insights to perception, Mister puts songs at the heart of his relationship to language & digs away at the disappearances they reflect in their, and his, histories. “The world becomes boring when you brush away the detritus” says the same mind that listens to own its aloneness, & desires, evenly, “to dissolve each distance in distance.” —Anselm Berrigan

"I had forgotten with what feverishness I used to study the back jackets of my LPs. Was I seeking to understand my desire? The sadness of desolate beauty?

The sensitive youth’s love affair with death? It’s all here—as breathless and disarmingly self-conscious as the sweetest parking-lot kiss. I love this book." —Jennifer Moxley Poetic Fictions Play A Success at the Boog Festival and many thanks to David K.

Tue 6 Aug 2013

My play about the 1964 reading in San Francisco--Poetic FICTIONs--featuring Gary Snyder, Philip Whalen, and Lew Welch--a L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E-esque excavation of meaning & myth & the creation of the same--was a success. Nabbed a video of it. I enjoyed the energy at the Boog Fest Poets' Theater and the talent displayed in some cases was at least memorable. The Venue was tiny but that was made up for by the availability of fizzy water and applause.

Am sitting in the BUSINESS OFFICE of the HOTEL PENNSYLVANIA at 5 A.M. smiling over yet another instance where I'm convinced I actually have a self much to the chagrin of Dennet and the functionalists.

ELIZABETH MARINO was recently interviewed and reviewed by the editor of the London-based Femficatio. "There are some defining moments of celebration here, but what largely remains from reading Debris is a proper oxymoron â€“ the ethereal poignancy of existence most severe, beautifully evinced through art's filter. This small book deserves a very large space on every literature shelf." A second chapbook is due out at the end of the year, from Dancing Girl Press. Her work has appeared in anthologies, journals, and on performance stages throughout the area.

TIMOTHY DAVID REY is a Chicago-based writer/performer whose plays and performance pieces have been seen and heard around Chicago and out of state. His new book is entitled LITTLE VICTORIES: POETRY AND PERFORMANCES and is available at Lulu.com. He is the president of NewTown Writers, one of the nation's longest LBGT Writing Groups. You can find and "like" Timothy Rey on Facebook!

NEWTOWN WRITERS, founded in 1982, was created with the mission of fostering queer literature through workshops, readings, publications, performances and promotion of LGBT writer's work. They are committed to reaching beyond the traditional borders of community by welcoming writers of all levels and from all communities including academic, medical, journalistic, youth and established artists. They hope to broaden and give expression to the collective voice of their community as the longest-running LGBT writer's group in the United States.

Red Rover Series is curated by Laura Goldstein and Jennifer Karmin. Each event is designed as a reading experiment with participation by local, national, and international writers, artists, and performers. Founded in 2005 by Amina Cain and Jennifer Karmin, the over sixty events have featured a diversity of renowned creative minds.

Boog News Update

Wed 7 Aug 2013

Hi all,

A few days ago Boog began its 23rd year with the final day of our 7th annual Welcome to Boog City festival. So with the fest over, some notes on what's in store for this Boog year.

First off, some good and good housekeeping. After a year as small press editor, Kimberly Ann Southwick is moving on to other projects, including her own journal, Gigantic Sequins. And I'm real happy to announce that our new small press co-editors will be Jenn and Chris McCreary. Here are short bios for those of you who may not be familiar with them:

Jenn McCreary's new full-length collection, & now my feet are maps, is forthcoming from Dusie Press in 2013. Other works include ab ovo (Dusie Press), a doctrine of signatures (Singing Horse Press), & Odyssey & Oracle (Least Weasel Press). A new chapbook, The Dark Mouth of Living, is also forthcoming from Horse Less Press this year. She was recently named a 2013 Pew Fellow in the Arts for poetry.

Chris McCreary is the author of three books of poems, including Undone: A Fakebook (Furniture Press). He has reviewed poetry and fiction for venues such as Rain Taxi, The Volta, and The Poetry Project Newsletter.

Together they co-edit ixnay press, a Philly-based tiny press.

Next, if you want to write a review, be reviewed, or be featured in Boog's art, libraries, music, printed matter, or small press sections, contact the appropriate section editor:

art editor Jonathan Allen [redacted] libraries editor Jessica Smith [redacted] music editor J.J. Hayes [redacted] printed matter editor Amy King [redacted] small press co-editors Chris and Jenn McCreary [redacted]

Poetry Submission Guidelines: Email subs to Buck Downs, poetry editor, to [redacted], with no more than five poems, all in one attached file with "My Name Submission" in the subject line and as the name of the file, ie: whitman_sub.

And third, here are some notes on some upcoming publications and events:

—Boog City will be coming out its usual 8 times, including

Our annual NYC small presses issue and event
The 7th (or 8th) Portable Boog Reader

—Baseball poetry reading. On Sat. Oct. 26, 7:30 p.m.-9:30 p.m., we'll be having a baseball poetry reading in Brooklyn's Unnameable Books, featuring contributors from our recent baseball issue, and music from local band Cool Papa Bell. We'll be publishing a short-run broadside of Bernadette Mayer's classic poem "Carlton Fisk is My Ideal," with art by Melissa Zexter, for the occasion.

—d.a. levy lives: celebrating renegade presses On Sun. May 4, 2014, 12 noon-5:00 p.m., at Unnameable Books, we'll be hosting not one, not two, but three non-NYC small presses and their authors and musical acts, as part of the 11th season of d.a. levy lives events.

And fourth, after a recent collating project, complete sets of Boog City are now available. Librarians or others interested in acquiring a set, please email [redacted].

Finally, for Boog City advertising rates, deadlines, and tech specs, visit:

The next two issues are due out Sept. 19 and Oct. 29.

Ekphrasis - a thought
Wed 7 Aug 2013

I have been thinking of Cole Swenson's talk in Glasgow (the Ekphrasis Conference, this past June) particularly her invocation of the moment where Mary - after the Crucifixion - has an apparition of Jesus in the garden. When she reaches out to touch him (or his garments) He disappears (to be of Life, or Greater than Life?). The event/incident makes me think of the relationship between word and image. That is, when the word tries to reach out and touch the image, the image disappears. And when the image tries to become the word, the word disappears. That finally there is no utopic rapprochement between the two. They live in separate "gardens" with one eye towards each other. Yet, like Orpheus & Eurydice we give the two an impossible dream of marriage.

I don't know if this was Cole's intention, but it is what I took away.

The competition is open to anyone who has not previously published one, or more than one, volume of poetry or prose poetry. The author receives $1000 and five percent of the 1000 copy press run. Previous judges have included Judith Vollmer, David Bromige, Bin Ramke and Howard McCord. This year David Baratier will be the judge; past students, Pavement Saw Press interns and employees are not allowed to submit. All poems must be original, all prose must be original, fiction or translations are not acceptable. All writers without a full length book or those who have published only one full length book are eligible. Writers who have had a second volume of poetry and/or prose poetry under 40 pages printed or printed in limited editions of no more than 500 copies are also eligible. Submissions are accepted during the months of June, July, and until August 15th. All submissions must have an August 15th, 2013, or earlier, postmark. This is an award for first or second books only.

If you wish to send via regular mail your manuscript should be accompanied by a check in the amount of $20.00 made payable to Pavement Saw Press. All US contributors to the contest will receive books, chapbooks and journals equal to, or more than, the entry fee. Add $3 (US) for other countries to cover the extra postal charge. Do not include an SASE for notification of results, this information will be sent with the free book. Do not send the only copy of your work. All manuscripts are recycled and individual comments on the manuscripts cannot be made. Entry Fee: $20 for mailed US and Canadian entries, $23 for mailed overseas entries, $27 to submit electronically (all entries, world wide).

If you wish to submit electronically, you should send $27.00 via paypal to [redacted]. We will then send you an e-mail confirmation as well as where to e-mail the manuscript. Electronic submissions need to be sent as PDF files or as word (.doc) files. Other formats are not accepted. The extra cost is to cover the paypal fees as well as the time, labor, ink, and so on, to print out your manuscript. In addition to the prize winner, sometimes another anonymous manuscript is chosen, if enough entries arrive. This â€œeditors choiceâ€ manuscript will be published under a standard royalty contract. A decision will be reached in December or January. Entries should be sent to:

The Factory Reading Series presents: Nguyen, Smith + Rowley, September 21, 2013

span-o (the small press action network - ottawa) presents: The Factory Reading Series with readings by:

> Hoa Nguyen (Toronto)
> Dale Smith (Toronto)
> + Mari-Lou Rowley (Saskatoon)

lovingly hosted by rob mclennan Saturday, September 21, 2013; doors 7pm; reading 7:30pm
The Carleton Tavern,
223 Armstrong Street (at Parkdale; upstairs)

Born in the Mekong Delta and raised in the Washington, D.C. area, Hoa Nguyen studied Poetics at New College of California in San Francisco. With the poet Dale Smith, Nguyen founded Skanky Possum, a poetry journal and book imprint in Austin, TX where they lived for 14 years. The author of eight books and chapbooks, she currently lives in Toronto where she teaches poetics in a private workshop and at Ryerson University. Wave Books published her third full-length collection of poems, As Long As Trees Last, in September 2012.

Dale Smith teaches at Ryerson University, Toronto. With Hoa Nguyen he published 10 issues of the always-hip and controversial journal, Skanky Possum. His book, Poets Beyond the Barricade: Rhetoric, Citizenship, and Dissent (University of Alabama Press), was published last year, and Slow Poetry in America (Cuneiform) is forthcoming in winter 2014. His poems, reviews, and essays have appeared in the Best American Poetry 2002, Bookslut, Chicago Review, Jacket, New American Writing, and more.

Poet and interdisciplinary adventurer Mari-Lou Rowley has encountered a timber wolf, come between a black bear and her cub, interviewed an Italian astronaut, found over 44 four-leaf clovers, and written nine collections of poetry. Most recently Unus Mundus (Anvil Press 2013) was awarded second prize in the John V. Hicks Long Manuscript Award. Suicide Psalms, also published by Anvil in 2008, was shortlisted for a Sask Book Award. Her work has appeared internationally in literary, arts and science-related journals including the Journal of Humanistic Mathematics (US) and Aesthetica Magazines (UK) Creative Works Competition (finalist 2011). She was one of 20 invited participants in Creative Writing in Mathematics and Science at the Banff International Research Station in 2010. To feed her poetry habit she has worked as an advertising manager in Edmonton, marketing director in Toronto, and communications strategist and science writer in Vancouver. In her current incarnation she is pursuing an interdisciplinary PhD at the University of Saskatchewan in new media, neuroplasticity and empathy. When she grows up she wants to be a writer.

Re. the Romanian translations I mentioned in my previous post, I am very grateful to Racula Tanesescu for casting the poems into Romanian and to Chris Tanesescu for inviting me and for furthering the project. They have done major work in introducing contemporary American poetry to Romanian readers, including most recently a Selected Poems of Jerome Rothenberg.

Does anybody have a copy of April Galleons handy?
Or know, off hand, the name of the poem that this comes from--

I have a vague memory of it, so I'm pretty sure I don't have the exact words, but I know I'm pretty close--

"But the thing has to come into being, or else all we'll have is disagreements, desagreements, to name a few...."

C

I'd love to get the exact quote so I can use it for a little essay I'm writing....

thanks!

New from MadHat Press!

Mon 19 Aug 2013

MadHat Press is proud to present "Dear Robert" by Lysette Simmons, winner of the Wild & Wyrd Chapbook Contest, judged by the great CAConrad.

CAConrad writes:

"Dear Robert stole my heart!! Lysette Simmons is one of my new favorite poets, and I can't wait to see what she writes for us next!! Carol Novack died before the release of this book, sadly, so we hold these poems up in her memory of generosity!!"

Brian Kim Stefans writes:

Dear Robert combines sonic invention and metafictional whimsy with the wit of a stand-up. "But with well trimmed / hair, so much / inaction, how could you always / rattle my shoulders?" Teetering within a welter of voices -- at one point flirtatious, the next melancholic, the next blandly epistolary or convulsively Surreal -- the poems tell a story best described as addresses to the Unknown, appeals for certainty from a damsel haplessly "in flux." These are no ordinary "all-over" collage poems in the line of Ashbery or Berrigan but a full-blown experience in a spectral, stochastic poetics reflecting a singular intelligence.

Available now on Amazon, from the Press, and as an e-book.

cheers,

Susan Lewis

new from above/ground press: After Swann, by Marthe Reed

After Swann
Marthe Reed

these dreams stop like a clock
a malady

too irresistible
this black cavity precisely the same

she might have a red principle
a certain type of femininity

her subjection fixed in space

oh, marvelous the tombs of sunlight straying impossible for me

the vagrancy of her detachment that face deliberately unfinished present except in a flood of blue light that current

we imagine almost ours that sort of tenderness the instant of pain
the special pleasure and seize

the mysterious object still alive
buried in a couch of grass

The text for these constraint-driven poems is collaged from the Moncrieff translation of Marcel Prousts Swanns Way, accessed via Project Gutenberg.

Marthe Reed is the author of three books: (em)bodied bliss (Moria Books 2013), Gaze (Black Radish Books 2010) and Tender Box, A Wunderkammer (Lavender Ink 2007). A fourth book, Pleth, a collaboration with j hastain, will appear September 2013 from Unlikely Books; a fifth will be published by Lavender Ink (2014). She has also published four chapbooks as part of the Dusie Kollektiv. Her poetry has appeared in New American Writing, Golden Handcuffs Review, New Orleans Review, HOW2, MiPOesias, Fairy Tale Review, Exquisite Corpse, BlazeVOX, and The Offending Adam, among others.
