88. Camille Martin
Robert Zend's widow, Janine
Thu 22 Aug 2013

I'm wondering whether anyone here is acquainted with Janine Zend, widow of Toronto poet Robert Zend, and if so, would you be willing to introduce me to her? I'm writing an essay about RZ and would love the opportunity to speak with her.

Cheers,
Camille

Apostrophe, Odes, Ekphrasis, Oh My! a September workshop<http://poetrycoop.us4.list-manage2.com/track/click?u=bb3dc7ead7e8fcce474c593af&id=1d8b0f9c16&e=03f983a188>with Amy King<http://poetrycoop.us4.list-manage1.com/track/click?u=bb3dc7ead7e8fcce474c593af&id=3d8a6f63e2&e=03f983a188>

For as long as we can remember, poets have addressed the sun and moon, distant lovers and heroes, while also separately singing odes to the gods. The Surrealist painter Leonora Carrington once said, "We learn about the soul, and we have to listen to the soul." Just as some poets use music for inspiration, ekphrastic work can go beyond description and manifest as an influence or force of the art work itself and, sometimes, the artist's life.

In the course of this workshop, we will look at a the work and lives of a variety of artists such as Leonor Fini, Frida Kahlo, Dorothea Tanning & Remedios Varo, as well as numerous poets like Paul Eluard, Allen Ginsberg, Rachel Eliza Griffiths, Edna St. Vincent Millay and many more, and consider how ekphrasis can extend beyond mere description of the visual arts and be combined with address (apostrophe) or the ode as a means to reflect appreciation of an artist's work.

Previously $350, this one-of-a-kind workshop is now priced at a back-to-school special of $300 per person<http://poetrycoop.us4.list-manage.com/track/click?u=bb3dc7ead7e8fcce474c593af&id=8474f3f01e&e=03f983a188>, or $250 for 'birds-of-a-feather<http://poetrycoop.us4.list-manage.com/track/click?u=bb3dc7ead7e8fcce474c593af&id=a3390c0c15&e=03f983a188>,' friends who sign up together! Jean Baudrillard: From the Ocean to the Desert -
The Poetics of Radicality

by Gerry Coulter

http://intertheory.org/gerrycoulter.htm

It is in the deserts of postmodernity where Baudrillard both found and left us. It is in these deserts that we become aware, as did Baudrillard and other poststructuralist thinkers, that theory precedes the world (there is nothing that can be said of the world that is not already framed by our approach to it). It is within Coulter's absolutely lucid exploration - and it goes without saying that the work of Jean Baudrillard should be recognized in such an appropriate revelation - that Baudrillard's thought is unveiled.

About the Author
Gerry Coulter is the founding editor of the International Journal of Baudrillard Studies He has received Bishopâ€™s Universityâ€™s highest award for teaching â€“ the William and Nancy Turner Prize.

Integral Reality

by Robert Hassan and Nicholas Ruiz III

http://intertheory.org/ir.html

In this political, cultural and philosophical analysis, Hassan and Ruiz explore developing concepts of time, space and capital in relation to politics today.

About the Authors
Robert Hassan is a Media and Communications Research Fellow--University of Melbourne, Australia. His recent books include 27/7: Time and Temporality in the Network Society (Cambridge UP, 2007) and The New Media Theory Reader (Open UP, 2006)

Nicholas Ruiz III, Ph.D was born in New York City in 1970. He is the author of The Metaphysics of Capital and America in Absentia. He is also the editor of Kritikos.

Re: Ashbery (April Galleons) Question
Thu 22 Aug 2013

I got up, went downstairs, somehow got my tired old body over the dog gate, got my copy of April Galleons off the bottom shelf, where I had to get my tired old body down to the floor and back up, got back over the dog gate somehow, upstairs, sat down, skimmed every page of the book, and though I found that Ashbery starts with "but" very often, didnt find the passage. Dang. But I did read my first Ashbery in a week.

Chris,

"One Coat of Paint" is the title. The sentence is too long to quote, but you can find it at:

Does anybody have a copy of April Galleons handy?
Or know, off hand, the name of the poem that this comes from--

I have a vague memory of it, so I'm pretty sure I don't have the exact words, but I know I'm pretty close--

"But the thing has to come into being, or else all we'll have is disagreements, desagreements, to name a few...."

Kingston Festival: Axial Band (with Quasha & Stein et al.): axial music and language performance

Thu 22 Aug 2013

Kingston Festival of the Arts

presents

**

*The AXIALBANDin PERFORMANCE

Old Dutch Church

Saturday, August 24th , 20135:30 - 6:30 PM

Uptown Kingston | 272 Wall Street | Kingston, NY 12401

David Arner(piano, balafon, metallafon)
John Beaulieu (keyboard, harmonica, percussion)
George Quasha (electro-acoustic percussion)

Charles Stein(voice art)

Many instruments, one voice

Axial Music follows a principle of spontaneous interpersonal composition without the intention of honoring precedent or previous patterns, guided instead by radical following of actual sounds generated in an intentional field. When successful the sound event has a life independent of the musicians and may generate an altered state of listening. In addition to sound events, the performance sometimes has visual and language components.

The Axial Band has performed extensively over the past three years in New York City and the Hudson Valley.

Most recently:https://vimeo.com/71147223*

http://kingstonfestival.org/wordpress1/event/the-axial-band-in-performance/

David Arner, musician (piano, harpsichord, percussion), composer, and longtime proponent of innovative music and spontaneous composition, teaches at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Performing throughout the US both solo and collaboratively (with musicians Michael Bisio, Tomas Ulrich, Jay Rosen, as well as poet/sound-artists Charles Stein and George Quasha), he has also pioneered a re-vitalization of new music for silent film (for many years at Upstate films in Rhinebeck, NY, the Knitting Factory, the National Gallery of Art, and the Whitney Museum). Recipient of a 1980 NEA Jazz Fellowship. Among his many CDs is the recent 4-CD boxed set: /Spontaneous Suites for Two Pianos/ (RogueArt label) (duets with Connie Crothers). www.davidarner.com <http://www.davidarner.com/>

John Beaulieu, composer, musician, and healing artist engages multiple mediums in his exploration of consciousness for healing and greater spiritual understanding. His work ranges from the development of tuning forks (tuned to precise mathematical formulas) as musical instruments to intuitive divination-based sonic systems. He experiments with new systems for creatively generating music possibilities as part of his quest to incubate neural pathways, empowering a new sense of reality. Author: /Music and Sound in the Healing Arts/ and other books. See www.biosonics.com <http://www.biosonics.com>.

George Quasha, artist/poet/sound artist, explores a principle (axiality/liminality/configuration) in language, sculpture, drawing, video, sound, installation, & performance. Most recent of his 17 books are/Axial Stones: An Art of Precarious Balance /(2006, foreword Carter Ratcliff); /An Art of Limina: Gary Hill's Works and Writings/ (2009, with Charles Stein; foreword Lynne Cooke); and /Verbal Paradise/ (/preverbs)/ (2011), and /Scorned Beauty Comes Up From Behind (preverbs)/ (2012). A 2006 Guggenheim Fellow in video art, his /art is: Speaking Portraits/ recording over 1000 artists/poets/composers in 11 countries, appears online at www.quasha.com <http://www.quasha.com>. He performs with Gary Hill, Charles Stein, David Arner, and John Beaulieu.

*Charles Stein*works complexly in an integrated field of poems, sound art, prose reflections, translations, drawings, photographs, , and performances. He is the author of thirteen books of poetry including From /Mimir's Head/ (Station Hill Press), a verse translation of /The Odyssey/ (North Atlantic Books), and /The Hat Rack Tree/ (Station Hill Press). His prose writings include a vision of the Eleusinian Mysteries, /Persephone Unveiled/ (North Atlantic Books), a critical study of poet Charles Olson's use of the writing of C.G. Jung, /The Secret of the Black Chrysanthemum /(Station Hill Press), and a collaborative study with George Quasha of the work of Gary Hill, /An Art of Limina: Gary

Hi, Don. Good paragraph. But for me what Olson accomplishes, and I think it's the primary thuing he swets out to accomplish, is a modelling of how one learns and how to learn through the act of writing, expanding ever outwards geographically and temporally.

Best,

Mark

Review of IIanot Review, and Teaching Copies of Beauty is a Verb

Sun 25 Aug 2013

There was a great review of the Israel Journal, IIanot Review in "The Review Review." This is issue included work by me, Joy Ladin, Miriam Libicki, Diane Wakoski, annd others.

http://www.thereviewreview.net/reviews/online-mag-delivers-great-new-writing-israel

ALSO. please please consider using BEAUTY AS VERB as a textbook! We're trying to get it around thee universities, and it remains, until this point, the only disability poetics anthology. It includes work by Norma Cole, Jim Ferris, Bernadette Mayer, Rusty Morrison, Brian Teare, Larry Eigner and many others. Beyond the poetry, the essays serve as great readings, not just on poetics, but on mobility, prejudice, and other aspects of disability. If you write to me, I can try to get you a review copy - or sample. Best, Jennifer http://vispo.com/guests/keppler/intro.htm Here is a new piece of writing of mine. It's a new introduction to seven visual poems by the Seattle polyartist Joe Keppler. I think these poems by Joe are important. They blow my mind. I tried to write an introduction to them that will help you start to understand them in your own way. I also coded the poems in HTML so that you can view them nicely on pretty much any size of monitor be it TV size or mobile.

First Remainder Series by Joe Keppler
Tue 27 Aug 2013

Poor Yorick Call for Submissions
Tue 27 Aug 2013

We are extremely pleased to introduce Poor Yorick: a Journal of Rediscovered Objects, a new online journal dedicated to work inspired by hidden or lost objects and images of material culture. http://pooryorickjournal.com

PY is now open for submissions of writing and other creative productions including but not limited to poems about sculptures and paintings in the back rooms of museums or in hidden corners of public spaces; essays about murals forgotten in plain view; articles on lost photographic archives and restored films; newly discovered letters or manuscripts; photoessays on knickknacks in attics; short films about oddities and curiosities in misbegotten sideshows; work in any genre that reminds us of pasts we should not forget.

PY also will partner with select museums to feature holdings from their collections from time to time-holdings such as the skeleton of a man named Fortune, who came as an inspiration to us in the form of Marilyn Nelson's powerful book Fortune's Bones: The Manumission Requiem.

The rollout of PY in the fall of 2014 already is expected to include a photoessay about abandoned race tracks, ekphrastic poems, a story about a golf course that few people know exists, and a piece about the cataloging and archiving of the many thousands of letters, gifts, and other objects sent to Newtown, CT in the wake of the 12/14 massacre.

If you have something or would like to write something that might be appropriate for PY, please do send it (see submissions link on the site) or contact the editor, Erik Ofgang, at [redacted]. The editorial staff is eager to read work for the rollout of first content. Even if you have nothing to send, we hope you'll share the news about Poor Yorick.

56 messages · Tue 3 Sep 2013 – Thu 19 Sep 2013

September 2013 was among the very thinnest files in the whole run — fifty-six messages — and it spent its scarcity, fittingly, on the founding father: Charles Olson, the presiding ghost of the Buffalo Poetics Program from which this list had sprung. The room had dwindled almost to silence, but the little it said returned to origins, to the great theorist of projective verse whose ideas had set the terms for everything that followed. In its near-emptiness the list turned, instinctively, to its source.

The largest small thread was a meditation on Olson. Members turned over what the founder of the Black Mountain line had actually accomplished — one venturing that "what Olson accomplishes" is finally a modeling of how a poem thinks and moves, the breath and the field and the open form that had reorganized American poetry around the body and the page. It was the list going back, in its old age, to the man at its beginning, as if a community sensing its own ending wanted to be sure it still understood where it had come from.

The quarrel, insofar as a fifty-six-message month can hold one, was about inheritance. Olson had founded the Poetics Program at Buffalo; this list was the electronic descendant of that program; and to argue about what Olson accomplished was, obliquely, to ask what the whole enterprise had been for, and whether his projective ambition survived in a room now barely able to fill a month. The founder was invoked, and the invocation carried an unspoken accounting: this is what we came from; look what we have become.

Around the near-silence ran the smallest keeping — a review reposted, a magazine's new issue, a poem shared, a fall reading series announced. The infrastructure carried on at its very faintest, a handful of notices sent into the hush, the living poetry reduced almost to a whisper and yet still, barely, audible — a review here, a poem there, a fall reading announced into the quiet, the last faint signals of a room returning, at its ebb, to the founder who had first switched it on.

I have set September down exactly as the archive delivered it — the return to Olson at the source, the meditation on what the founder accomplished, and the barest keeping of a fifty-six-message month — because it was one of the emptiest stretches the list ever saw, and in that emptiness it turned, tellingly, to its own beginning. A room reduced almost to silence that spends what little breath it has left contemplating Charles Olson, the founder whose program gave it birth, is a room taking a kind of inventory at the end: going back to the source to remember what the projective ambition had been, and measuring, without quite saying so, the long distance between that origin and the near-silence the enterprise had finally come to.

Reposted Review of "The Empire of Neomemory"

Tue 3 Sep 2013

In 2010, I published my response to The Empire of Neomemory, in the Worcester Review. My thoughts were first delivered during the Olson Centennial in Worcester. With the English-language release of this important work, I have just now reposted that response.

Tue 3 Sep 2013

Friends, colleagues, supporters, heroes of mine,

I have two weeks to raise funds for my film/media/literature/music project: Red Dust. The urgency? Dad is 91 years old. My mother, his wife of 62 years took her journey last winter and in looking for some purpose in life, he finally agreed to allow me to document his firsthand oral history of the Dust Bowl, the Great Depression and his leaving for WWII service. At 91, he actually worked during the era specific, as a migrant worked and day laborer in cotton fields at a penny a pound. This is not secondhand investigation or theory, this is the oral history and narrative of the day. He is a vital source, who has never enjoyed attention, or cameras, and is tremendous on film.

Additionally, he was so moved by the climate change, by the dust bowl that preceded it (rarely spoken of) and by his parents' resiliency and ability to change, grown and shift (born in 1878 and 1882), and by his own remarkable journey, he spent his career following WWII as an environmental protection scientist creating a pathway for sustainability and preservation that was rarely achieved in the Native community in his era. He is a national bronze medalist in the sciences and his work is still cited at the UN, though he retired thirty years ago at the normal age of retirement.

He was raised with traditional knowledge, his mother was, literally, a healer and midwife, and he incorporated it throughout his career. He is a terrific storyteller and thinker and has much to offer to the discussion of resiliency and as a chronicler of the times Native experience has sadly been nearly omitted from though the best Lange portraits were of Cherokee migrant (cotton & pea) workers. Voiceless, they are our vision of that day.

As my parents, and theirs, have always been the crux of my work dedicated to labor, to the environment, to preservation and protection of sites and tradition, to those held in institutions, to those suffering deprivation, to my active engagement in the world, and as my father taught us to withstand full-blown schizophrenia my mother suffered throughout our childhood, he is, for me, and many others, a real guidepost of insight into the philosophy of resilience, of change, of reason and his words and presence are worthy of preservation not only for the project but for all future audience ahead.

The project goes to five states: North Carolina, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas (Arkansas, if we can get there, too) to visit each site the family lived while moving for work in the fields following the longstanding tradition of agricultural tradition, all along having their own traditionally cultivated corn, squash, and beans planted at each site they worked for their own food. This is significant in a vast number of ways and the film delivers this and more. We are also set to interview the few remaining survivors he knows along the way and other Native elders, and Roxanne Dunbar-Ortiz has agreed to be interviewed and we are inviting Carter Revard, as well, as they have been, up to this point, the premier people in the Dust Bowl conversation, yet no one has a film with oral history involving a firsthand survivor who was old enough to be in the labor force at its onset.

Please help me make this film.

I am already writing the books' contents and have been at work on this for several years; while shooting I have access to him dialing and this will surely speed that process along. We plan to begin shooting in three weeks, while the weather holds and before it freezes as he cannot tolerate triple digits or below freezing much at all at 91. I need your help now as our project time for fundraising ends in a couple of weeks. Thus far, I have used my Facebook pages wholly to fundraise and have $5000 plus in hand, 25% of the amount we need to pay the crew and pay for the location costs and camera. We are not making any money in this campaign. It is all directly related to costs. With two weeks left and three from our start date, I must reach out to you and ask you to contribute what you can, I have perks at all levels and need sponsorship across the board. Ask three to ten people to match you immediately and please speak to potential larger funders to ask them to make a plea to their contacts and to consider coming in at the $2500 to $5000 level whereas they receive credit as producers of the film. A few of these and we would be solvent. If any entity is in your reach please go to them as well and ask for contributing support.

This is completely tax-deductible and hosted by an agency that already stipends a few Native writer/artists every year under their fellowship program.

I do not have time to pursue a grant as an individual as we need to shoot now while Dad is coherent (sharp as a tack) and can get around. He lost his sight completely when Mom died this year, is deaf in one ear and hard of hearing in the other from the war, and is a stroke and heart attack victim already, so we need to get to this while he is able, able minded and able bodied to get to the sites and do the work it takes to create a worthy film on the times and what this means today.

I have a dream team of all Native/Native descent film crew: Royce Sharp (Osage), Tvli Jacob (Creek), Shane Brown (Cherokee) and have a terrific editor as well, Vinnie Hogan (who helped with the pitch reel you can watch on the site). I want to pay them scale and treat them right and pay their travel and lodging and the camera and thus this project campaign is necessary for this.

Please investigate the site, please donate today, as much as you can, I really need your help and please speak to others who can help, who need tax write offs and care about oral history from a real source. This is significant work and I need you in the project. I welcome you to join us in this historic movement and in the production of what is sure to be a great documentary.

Please watch this reel and please help me reach my goal:

http://www.usaprojects.org/project/red_dust_a_mixed_blood_dust_bowl_childhood

Please blog, tweet, and motivate the project as without your help, I won't have the money to pay the crew and location costs. Dad is on an extremely limited income (having retired at the amount of pension thirty years ago). I support several of my grandkids and my fulltime university salary is $40,000 gross (and cannot deduct the grandkids as they live with their father, a single parent of four). So, there really is no money on the side for anything. I need support to make this happen, while there is time. Please help.

Sgido, hawa, I thank you!

*The host site was chosen because it is completely tax deductible. USA Projects is a non-profit crowd-funding site for artists. Unlike other crowd-funding sites, USA Projects is 100% free for artists. What does this mean? When an artist successfully reaches their minimum fundraising goal they get to keep 100% of the funds raised. In order to maintain this platform, USA Projects asks you, the donor, to make a minimum 5% additional donation to USA Projects as well as an additional 5% donation to help cover credit card processing. All donations are 100% tax deductible.

Dear Friends:

Below please find a link to an interview on the Moscow-based radio show Russian Bookworld on Voice of Russia on the subject of contemporary Russian poetry and our new anthology, Twenty-first Century Russian Poetry. The interview is with myself, Larissa Shmailo, editor of the anthology; Marina Boroditskaya, a contributing poet to the anthology; and Philip Nikolayev, who contributed both poetry and translations. The interview was hosted by Konstantin Boulevich.

Listen to the interview here:

http://voiceofrussia.com/radio_broadcast/28742746/239869305/

The online anthology may be accessed here:

http://bigbridge.org/BB17/poetry/twentyfirstcenturyrussianpoetry/twenty-first-century-russian-poetry-contents.html

Another interview is planned on VOR this month.

I hope you enjoy our discussion!

Kind regards,
Larissa

Wed 4 Sep 2013

On behalf of the Jack Kerouac School, I am excited to announce our first What Where Series of the semester! The reading will be this coming Tuesday, September 10 at 7:30 p.m. in the Performing Arts Center, with readings by Megan Kaminski, Ruth Ellen Kocher, and Reed Bye. This event is free and open to the public. We hope to see you there!

Megan Kaminski is the author of Desiring Map (Coconut, 2012) and six chapbooks of poetry, including This Place (Dusie, 2013) and Gemology (LRL Textile Series, 2012). Her writing has recently appeared in American Letters & Commentary, Denver Quarterly, Puerto del Sol, Stolen Island, and other journals. She is Assistant Professor of Poetry Writing at the University of Kansas and curates the Taproom Poetry Series in downtown Lawrence, KS.

Ruth Ellen Kocher's books include Desdemona's Fire (Naomi Long Madget Award for African American Poets; Lotus Press, 1999), WHEN THE MOON KNOWS YOU'RE WANDERING (Green Rose Prize; New Issues Poetry & Prose, 2001), and ONE GIRL BABYLON (New Issues Poetry & Prose, 2003). Her poems have appeared in many anthologies, including Angles of Ascent: A Norton Anthology of Contemporary African American Poets, and New Bones: Contemporary Black Writing in America. She teaches in the M.F.A. program at the University of Colorado-Boulder.

Reed Bye's most recent books include Catching On (Monkey Puzzle 2013), and Join the Planets: New and Selected Poems (United Artists Books, 2005). A CD of original songs, Broke Even, came out this past summer from Fast Speaking Music. His work has appeared in a number of anthologies including Nice to See You: Homage to Ted Berrigan, Sleeping on the Wing, and Civil Disobediences: Poetics and Politics in Action. He holds a doctorate in English from the University of Colorado and is working a prosodic study of the poetry of Gertrude Stein, Ezra Pound, and William Carlos Williams.

Truck September: "TimeWaveZero"

Thu 5 Sep 2013

Dear all,

first of all, I want to thank David Howard for driving Truck last August.

With a little bit of delay and suffering a severe case of holiday blues (and hernia), I'm starting this month's Truck.

I would like to dedicate September to TimeWaveZero.

In 2006 I started with the Antistresspoweet the idea to start a magazine around the idea TimeWaveZero. Due to different problems it didn't start eventually.

All in all for me 9/11 was a sort of TimeWaveZero from which a new decade, era, time frame started.

It would be my idea now to work around this idea TimeWaveZero, also incorporating the works that were mailed to us in 2006 and make a sort of dialogue between the past, present and future.

TimeWaveZero?

The emphasis would be on the poet within the international community, the poet as the catalyst to change the world, the peace-bringer, the conscience of society, but also on time and how the poet/artist is experiencing time.

Starting from the idea of experiencing the self within the vacuum of nothingness, of the zero of the beginning of things.

The zero becoming a 360 degree circle where the following idea applies:

"The Circle. How does this shape, this spatial form, enter consciousness; how does it take on meaning; how does it come to be divided into 360 units; and how it is used as a measurement standard to capture the times of our lives?" Noel Tyl

Schroedingers' cat dilemma should be considered also within this, is life/the world/our surroundings waves or particles? How do we consider ourselves within this post 9/11 world?

The theories which research the Butterfly Effect, the circle as centre of consciousness but also Aboriginal Dreamtime, Zeropointenergy (Heisenberg/Planck/quantumphysics). should be taken into consideration when thinking about TimeWaveZero and it's consequences.

Some of the theories concerning TimeWaveZero pointed at December 21st 2012 as a moment of "End of Time" or "Beginning of a new era" again. The truth lies in another part of the world perhaps, not the Mayan conundrum but the Arab Spring could point out the end of an era and start of a new timeframe. The starting point of what is yet to come….

More information on other ideas/theories about TimeWaveZero can be found here:

http://users.lycaeum.org/~sputnik/mckenna/TZandL.html

http://www.hermetic.ch/frt/math_twz.htm

You can contribute to this month's Truck, by sending your work via e-mail to philip (dot) meersman (at) gmail (dot) com

Please put "Truck - TimeWaveZero" in the subject line and add a short 3 lines bio at the end.

Versal: A journal has an intermission
Thu 5 Sep 2013

Dear friends,

We've got some news, and want to share it with you directly. Please see the press release below. Feel free to spread the word, publish the release, and/or contact me with any questions you may have.

Best wishes from Amsterdam,
Megan

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
September 5, 2013 - Amsterdam, the Netherlands

A journal has an intermission

Versal released our 11th issue in May to critical acclaim <http://www.thereviewreview.net/reviews/experimental-literary-international-journal-pushes-b>. Our 11th issue means we've been on the scene for 11 amazing years, curating the best prose, poetry, and art from practitioners around the world, for an international audience.

With that many years under our belt, we've seen and learned a lot. The literary landscape has changed drastically since we published our first issue back in 2002.

We've changed as well.

Where we're going

We're eager to improve the way we do things--logistically and conceptually. This means retiring old processes and moving over to better ways of running a journal and exploring projects we've had on the backburner.

To give ourselves breathing room for these exciting new developments we've decided to go on a sabbatical of sorts, pausing the release of the next issue of Versal and therefore its reading period. We'll make an announcement as soon as we're ready to begin reading for issue 12.

All of our subscribers will receive an email detailing options regarding their subscriptions.

What to expect this year

Though we're not producing an issue right now, we are continuing to put on events in Amsterdam and elsewhere. Watch our Twitter <https://twitter.com/versaljournal> and Facebook <https://www.facebook.com/versaljournal> page for news, including announcements regarding This is Not a Reading Series and our Journal Porn event in Seattle at AWP!

So, keep writing, creating, and keep in touch. We'll be back with Versal 12 recharged, rebooted, and better than ever.

Thanks!

The Versal Team

above/ground press: 2014 subscriptions now available! (and new address!

Thu 5 Sep 2013

The twentieth anniversary year might be winding down, but that doesn't mean we over at above/ground press (really, its just me) are doing any less. 2013 has been one of the most productive publishing years the press has seen, producing (so far) twenty-three chapbooks, six broadsheets, and two issues of The Peter F Yacht Club! Forthcoming titles for 2013 include new works by Rae Armantrout and Hailey Higdon, and a 2014 title by Hugh Thomas (to launch at The Factory Reading Series in February), plus a whole ton of other material we haven't even decided on yet.

2014 annual subscriptions are now available: $50 (in the United States, $50 US; $75 international) for everything above/ground press makes from now (that is, when you subscribe) until the end of 2014.

Anyone who subscribes before November 1st will also receive the last above/ground press package of 2013, including those exciting new titles by Rae Armantrout and Hailey Higdon (plus whatever else the press happens to produce before the turn of the new year).

Why wait? You can either send a cheque (payable to rob mclennan) to 2423 Alta Vista Drive, Ottawa, Ontario K1H 7M9 [NEW ADDRESS!] or drop the money on the Paypal button at www.robmclennan.blogspot.com

Lit Crawl Manhattan presents: LOVE: The Good and The Bad and The Dirty

Lit Crawl Manhattan presents:

LOVE: The Good and The Bad and The Dirty

Love, sweet fucking love.... It's good to us, it's bad to us, it's downright dirty and rotten. Yet we keep going back, hungry for more.

Join We Three Productions for an evening of tales about this darling little beast we call LOVE.

WHEN: Saturday, September 14, 2013 at 8pm

WHERE: 2A on 2nd Street and Avenue A, 2nd Floor, NYC

WHY: Because you know you want it

WHO: Below

Maggie Estep has published seven books and recorded two spoken word cd's. Her work has been translated into four languages, optioned for film, and frequently stolen from libraries. She lives in Hudson, NY.

Harold Dean James is the founder of We Three Productions responsible for theatre production, prose and poetry readings over the past twenty years. He is a published poet and an award winning playwright.

Wanda Phipps is a writer/performer and author of six books including Field of Wanting: Poems of Desire and Wake-Up Calls: 66 Morning Poems. She has received awards from the New York Foundation for the Arts, the National Theater Translation Fund, and others. She's curated a reading series at the Poetry Project at St. Mark's Church and written about the arts for Time Out New York, Paper Magazine, and About.com. You can find more info on her website: mindhoney.com

Marie Sabatino has been telling stories at venues all over NYC for the last ten years. Her work has appeared in a number of small publications, while rejections have come from some of the largest. Over her desk hangs a hand-written note from The New Yorker magazine, most likely, penned from a kind and sympathetic intern, which says, "We're going to pass, but please do send again." She hates that she loves this rejection.

Susan Shapiro's work has appeared in the New York Times Magazine, The Wall Street Journal, L.A. Times, Newsweek, Salon, Daily Beast, Marie Claire, Cosmo and Psychology Today. She's the author of 9 books including Five Men Who Broke My Heart and Lighting Up and the upcoming coauthored memoir The Bosnia List. She teaches writing at the New School and NYU.

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is “Show and Tell” by Joe Amato.

Sun 8 Sep 2013

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is â€œShow and Tellâ€ by Joe Amato.
Description:
â€œShow and Tellâ€ might properly be called a work of experimental sci-fi. Itâ€™s an unconventional amalgam of standard narrative, reportage, film criticism, poetry, cultural commentary, conceptual writing, and science fiction, with an overlay of autobiographical detail that will likely be seen as such only by readers familiar with the author's other work. All told itâ€™s a distinctively postmodern piece of writing that takes some unusual turns even by postmodern standards. It's part of a collection of short fiction, in progress, tentatively entitled â€œThe Heights and Weights of Stars.â€ Available as a free ebook here:

Iâ€™m pleased to announce that Word For/Word #22 is online at www.wordforword.info with poetry and visuals by

James Capozzi, Valerie Witte, W. Scott Howard, Amish Trivedi, Jessie Janeshek, John Myers, Tony Mancus, Jerrod E. Bohn, MH Rowe, Gregg Murray, Jennifer MacKenzie, Matthew Klane, Scott Helmes, Michael Basinski, Carlyle Baker, Dee Sunshine, Marc Snyder, Peter Ciccariello, Michael Sikkema, Sam Truitt, and Guy-Vincent, plus Thomas Hibbard's essay on Luc Fierns, and Brandi Katherine Herrera's review of Lori Anderson Mosemanâ€™s ALL STEEL.

Cheers!

"The Early Histories," by James Capozzi

It's more important they lay open in the ocean

And whether or not we mount the red birds

Like beveled ornaments

Less sophisticate

The shifting tents are mutinous

New movement

Eats the grain each day, little by little

Even the noun eats acid

You are in a Roman place

But the year is out of order

Only the tent city stirs in the morning

Nothing more

Upcoming Events in Louisiana and Colorado

Mon 9 Sep 2013

In a few days, and thanks to the excellent work of Jeremy Hight and Willis Gordon, we'll have a new multimedia issue of //Unlikely Stories: Episode IV//for your pleasure. For now, though, please delight in the knowledge of three forthcoming events:

--
Saturday, September 14th
during the Elemore Morgan Jr. Fall Fest Art Walk Acadiana Center for the Arts hosts

LE MOT / THE WORD
at 6:15 pm and 7:15 pm
in the James Devin Moncus Theater
101 W. Vermilion St., Lafayette, Louisiana

Featuring poetry readings in French, English, and German with Darrell Bourque, Clare L. Martin, Elizabeth Burk, J. Bruce Fuller, Michael J. Leblanc, Gerd Wuestemann and Brenda Cary. --

I'm helping to organize this great set of two twenty-minute poetry readings this Saturday night, at the Acadiana Center for the Arts in downtown Lafayette, Louisiana. They'll be during downtown Lafayette's monthly Art Walk — specifically, they'll be during Lafayette's September Art Walk, which is always dedicated to the late, great area artist Elemore Morgan, Jr. (http://www.elemoremorgan.com/) If you come to Lafayette occasionally, this Saturday will be the time — the visual art museums and galleries will be pulling out great presentations, and we'll have an exciting and unique Acadian poetry show.

Then we'll hop into a plane's cargo bay for:

&UNLIKELY: a multimedia happening at the Mercury Café
Friday, September 27, 8pm
2199 California St, Denver, Colorado

featuring j/j hastain, Tom Bradley, Tod Thilleman, Frankie Metro, Lindsey Thomas, Jeffrey Spahr-Summers, and your devotedly ennyeux host, Jonathan Penton
and an Unlikely Book Release of two new full-color books: We'll See Who Seduces Whom by David Aronson and Tom Bradley and pleth by j/j hastain and Marthe Reed starring Marthe Reed, j/j hastain, and Tom Bradley

at Innisfree Poetry
Saturday, September 28th, 5pm
1203 13th Street, Boulder, Colorado

Unlikely staffers Frankie Metro, Lindsey Thomas, and myself will be descending, along with a host of extremely Unlikely writers and artists, on the University of Colorado Boulder for the &NOW Festival (http://www.andnowfestival.com/) of experimental fiction and literature! We'll be stirring up all kinds of nasty trouble, including our Denver night of visuals, poems, and vocalizations. On the night of Friday the 27th, we'll be at the Mercury Café with j/j hastain, Tom Bradley, Tod Thilleman, and Jeffrey Spahr-Summers, and maybe if we are very very quiet and careful Yuriy Tarnawsky and Marc Vincenz will make it there! We'll see!

On Saturday evening, the party will culminate at Innisfree Poetry Bookstore and Café with the release of two fantastic books, pleth and We'll See Who Seduces Whom. Those books will be available from Unlikely Books soon, so if you can't make it to &NOW, you should get ready to buy them, instead! They will make you happy in your soul.

See you in the funny papers, at least the ones that get filed with reader opinions,

Just Out from Otoliths
Mon 9 Sep 2013

Perhaps if I'd started earlier, & achieved what has thus far been achieved—80 books in total, covering a range of media & with an impressive list of creators—I might still have the energy to continue. But I didn't, & I haven't; so, with sadness, I announce the last two books from Otoliths.<http://www.lulu.com/spotlight/l_m_young> grounds

harry k stammer

148 pages

Otoliths, 2013

ISBN: 978-0-9872010-8-9

$13.95 + p&h

http://www.lulu.com/shop/harry-k-stammer/grounds/paperback/product-21042156.html

harry k stammer's new book, grounds, is a sequel to his previous book * tents. *It continues to dig deeper into the realm of a homeless person's mind as he/she lives in downtown Los Angeles. As Philip Primeau, of PERSISTENCIA, said of tents, "stammer mixes a sort of poetic cubism with wordplay, startling typography, and a wide array of other adventurous techniques with creative intensity rarely witnessed." This book uses imagery and meaning to describe the various illnesses that afflict the homeless.

The Codicils

Mark Young

600 pages

Otoliths, 2013

ISBN: 978-0-9872010-9-6

URL:
http://www.lulu.com/shop/mark-young/the-codicils/paperback/product-21152101.html

The Codicils is actually a number of new books, nine at least, collected into a single brick, covering Mark Young's poetry from the four years since the publication of Pelican Dreaming: Poems 1959-2008. It revisits some familiar themes — Magritte, geographies, that peripatectic Postman — but it also brings in a number of new streams & memes, & includes an essay by the poet on the universality of the stochastic methodology that lies behind his poetic canon.

The journal will continue on, & print copies of the three most recent issues, twenty-eight to thirty, are now available from The Otoliths Storefront <http://www.lulu.com/spotlight/l_m_young> where the full catalog of Otoliths books & issues of the journal can also be found.

Sept 18: Daisy Fried, Kim Bridgford, Laynie Browne, Paul Siegell

Moonstone Poetry @ Fergie's Pub (1214 Sansom Street, Philadelphia)

7PM WED, SEPT 18

E-Verse Equinox Reading Series presents:
+ DAISY FRIED
+ KIM BRIDGFORD
+ LAYNIE BROWN
+ PAUL SIEGELL

Hosted by Ernest Hilbert

Event page: https://www.facebook.com/events/220195884805746/

Joyce Carol Oates describes Daisy Fried's poetry as "fluid and quicksilver as life seen close up. Here is an original voice: provocative, poignant, and often very funny." Fried is the author of three books of poetry, Women's Poetry: Poems and Advice, My Brother is Getting Arrested Again, a finalist for the National Book Critics Circle Award, and She Didn't Mean to Do It, which won the Agnes Lynch Starrett Award. For her poetry, she's received Guggenheim, Hodder, and Pew Fellowships, as well as a Pushcart Prize and the Cohen Award from Ploughshares. Recent poems have been selected for Best American Poetry 2013, and published in the London Review of Books, The Nation, The New Republic, Poetry, American Poetry Review, and The Threepenny Review. She reviews books of poetry for The New York Times, Poetry, and The Threepenny Review, and won the Editors Award from Poetry for “Sing, God-Awful Muse,” an essay about reading Paradise Lost and breastfeeding.

Jay Parini has written that Kim Bridgford’s “work is rigorous and memorable, full of linguistic surprises and emotional twists that suggest, as she says, that there is an art in learning how to underscore.” Bridgford is the director of the West Chester University Poetry Center and the West Chester University Poetry Conference, the largest all-poetry writing conference in the United States. As editor of Mezzo Cammin, she was the founder of The Mezzo Cammin Women Poets Timeline Project, which was launched at the National Museum of Women in the Arts in Washington on March 27, 2010, and will eventually be the largest database of women poets in the world. She is the author of seven books of poetry, most recently Bully Pulpit and Epiphanies.

Ron Silliman has commented on Laynie Browne’s book Daily Sonnets that “It’s a stunner and a delight. A pure dose of heady oxygen . . . an icon for the generation of poets who are about to show up.” Browne has published nine collections of poetry and two novels, most recently The Ivory Hour. Her honors include the National Poetry Series Award, the Contemporary Poetry Series Award, and two Gertrude Stein Awards for Innovative American Poetry. Since 2011 she has been a volunteer mentor for the Afghan Women’s Writing Project.

Avant-garde critic Vladimir Slender-Hedge remarked on Paul Siegell’s book wild life rifle fire that “we find DaDa dynamite and typographical talismans freshened by a poet whose native gifts imbue this exciting work with a whole new sense of poetic object. Siegell’s haptic heroism compels the reader to re-examine the basic elements of a language that we too often take for granted, in the process creating an energetic and always surprising work of both visual art and poetry.” Siegell is the author of three books of poetry. He serves as a senior editor at Painted Bride Quarterly, and by day, is a copywriter at The Philadelphia Inquirer.

Jonathan,

Great to see the issue surface and having fun looking around and through.

Wondering though re. S/s s/s how to access? Well, I'm vidiing via an iPad so maybe any link is blinded? Will find a solid computer and try?

Thanks again! Glad this is live. And hope Dorota sent you the Open Space issue?

Poetry as Social Action: 27th September @ Auckland University

How do contemporary poets engage their multiple audiences? What is the function of experiment in writing as a social act? How should we map the cultural dimensions of eco-poetics, identity politics or non-normative behaviours? Seven speakers address these and other questions in a series of interactive panels and a public reading hosted by the NZ Electronic Poetry Centre (nzepc) in conjunction with Australian poet Pam Brown’s Distinguished Visitor Award at the University of Auckland.

American Songbook, a new book from UDP
Tue 10 Sep 2013

I thought you might be interested in my new poetry book, AMERICAN SONGBOOK, just published by Ugly Duckling Presse in Brooklyn.

AMERICAN SONGBOOK is a poetic response to the grand sweep of recorded vocal music in the 20th century. The poems are based on 75 recordings, with singers ranging from Bessie Smith to Tupac Shakur, and songs from a little-known Lomax prison recording to the last No.1 pop hit in the century.

Here's a link to the book page<http://www.uglyducklingpresse.org/catalog/browse/item/?pubID=236> at UDP. The book can be purchased directly from UDP at a discount, and also from SPD<http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/9781937027001/american-songbook.aspx> and Amazon.com<http://www.amazon.com/American-Songbook-Michael-Ruby/dp/1937027007/ref=sr>.

Individual poems from the book have recently appeared online in BlazeVOX<http://www.blazevox.org/BX%20Covers/BXspring13/Michael%20Ruby%20-%20Spring%2013.pdf>, Blue Light + Turntable<http://www.turntablebluelight.com/2012/10/michael_ruby_1.html>, The Brooklyn Rail<http://www.brooklynrail.org/2011/12/poetry/three-ruby-dec11>, Peep/Show<http://peepshowpoetry.blogspot.com/2013/02/blog-post_3676.html> and The Straddler<http://www.thestraddler.com/201311/piece9.php#poetry2>.

Fw: A 'new poetry' emerges from Syria's civil war

Wed 11 Sep 2013

A 'new poetry' emerges from Syria's civil war

Leigh Cuen
Aljazeera

"Today there is literature coming out of Syria that we could have never even dreamed of just a few years ago," Atrash says.Rather than relying on metaphors and allegorical images, these new poems rely on literal, visceral descriptions, with a newfound emphasis on a united Syrian identity instead of religious symbols. Ghada al-Atrash says the literature coming out of Syria today is starkly different than just a few years ago, , Ghada al-Atrash, a Syrian-Canadian writer and translator, has been studying Syrian poetry for decades. Yet in all her years of work, she says she has never encountered works of poetry such as the ones emerging today from the depths of a Syria in the throes of an increasingly deadly civil war. "Today there is literature coming out of Syria that we could have never even dreamed of just a few years ago," Atrash says. Rather than relying on metaphors and allegorical images, these new poems rely on literal, visceral descriptions, with a newfound emphasis on a united Syrian identity instead of religious symbols. For instance, a poem she translated by Najat Abdul Samad, called "When I am overcome by weakness", reads: "I bandage my heart with the determination of that boy / they hit with an electric stick on his only kidney until he urinated blood. / Yet he returned and walked in the next demonstration... / I bandage it with the outcry: 'Death and not humiliation.'" Another by Youssef Bou Yihea titled "I am a Syrian", declares: "My sect is the scent of my homeland, the soil after the rain, and my Syria is my only religion." "A lot of poetry and beautiful lyrics are rising up from the ashes in Syria," says expatriate Syrian writer Ghias al-Jundi, who is responsible for PEN International's research on attacks against free expression in the Middle East. "There is a cultural side to the revolution, and it's brilliant." New literary tradition It's not just the content that is new. Syrian poetry is also being spread through different channels. Instead of being introduced at formal gatherings or readings, Syrian poets often debut their work at public demonstrations, or on social networking sites such as Facebook. Artscape - Poets of Protest - Hala Mohammad: Waiting for Spring Mohja Kahf, an award-winning Syrian-American writer and associate professor of comparative literature at the University of Arkansas, wrote an article in 2001 titled "The Silence of Contemporary Syrian Literature", in which she argued that fear, government censorship, and repression were the defining characteristics of Syrian writing. "That has all changed now," Kahf says, thanks in part to the Internet and social media platforms. "A new Syrian identity and literary tradition are being formed around the events of the last few years." Poetry is "playing a huge role in Syria right now because the lyrics are part of demonstrations," says Jundi. "People are singing these verses together in the streets." Peaceful demonstrations have reduced in number and size as the violence has intensified, but they have not stopped altogether. Facebook is one of the main channels that Atrash uses to connect with her partners in Syria. She says she discovered two poets from the city of Sweida - Youssef Bou Yihea and Najat Abdul Samad, whose work is quoted above - through the social networking site. Atrash contacted these writers and was granted permission to translate their works into English. "I take their poems fresh, translate them, and share them through social media," she says. "It's not just me. Today there are a lot of people translating and spreading Syrian poems from the ground." Civilians in Syria and around the world are using social networks to share these new poems without censorship. Kahf herself has served as the leader of about 20 Facebook pages focusing on nonviolent components of the revolution. "The young people in Syria today grew up as part of a global conversation," says Kahf. Although Atrash believes the revolution is rejuvenating Syrian poetry, both in the Middle East and around the world, she says language barriers between global readers and Syrian writers on the ground keep international audiences from accessing many of these new works. And it's not just language barriers hindering accessibility. The Internet is not accessible for large swaths of the Syrian population, especially as the UN estimates between a quarter and a third of the country's people have been displaced. Nevertheless, social media tools are among the only platforms for new Syrian writers to connect with each other, whether at home or in exile. While these past two years have seen a flood of new Syrian writers, not all of Syria's prominent poets participate in this digital sphere. "People are waiting for opposition poems from Adunis," says Maram al-Masri, a Syrian poet based in Paris, referring to Ali Ahmad Said Esber, one of Syria's greatest living poets. "He does a little, but for me and for a lot of people, we feel disappointed. It's not enough. We need the fathers of modern Syrian poetry to speak out." Dangerous profession Yet with the country in the grips of a two-year-long civil war that shows no sign of abating, Syrian poets - and writers more generally - are in more danger today than ever before. "Poets and writers are disappearing across the country," says Jundi. "Syrian writers are caught between a double danger: the regime and the Islamists. It is a risk to write or utter a word." Most of the poets I talk to knew there was a risk of death, imprisonment or exile if you write the truth. And even if they flee, they can also be killed abroad. - Syrian writer Ghias al-Jundi Poet Ibrahim Qashoush was kidnapped and killed in July 2011. Two writers - Dia'a al-Abdulla and Tal al-Mallouhi - are still believed to be in prison without access to a lawyer. Writer Khaled Khalifa was attacked in Damascus in May 2012 and his left hand was broken. "Most of the poets I talk to knew there was a risk of death, imprisonment or exile if you write the truth," says Jundi. "And even if they flee, they can also be killed abroad." Expatriate Syrian poets have been intimidated: Masri, who recently published a book of poems titled Freedom, she comes naked, inspired by social media images and posts from Syria, says she has received death threats and had loved ones in Syria forced into hiding. "It's not easy to enter a Syrian jail," says Masri. "You don't know if you will ever come out." Some writers take precautions, saving lyrics under different names in case police search them or their homes, or propagating their poems anonymously. In such an atmosphere, few individual poets of this new style have risen to fame. But although Syrian writers are still in grave danger, fear no longer controls their work. Violence is so pervasive in Syria that silence is no longer seen as a road to safety. Before 2011, even the popular tradition of public poetry readings were controlled by government censorship. Now Syrian writers are defying these restrictions. Newly empowered by their passionate audiences, some Syrian poets are holding nothing back. "We have broken the old phantom of fear," Masri says.

Fwd: Book launch and reading, 9/25: PQRS

Thu 12 Sep 2013

7:00-9:30 AT THE (NEW) CORPSE SPACE 1511 N. MILWAUKEE 2ND FLOOR, CHICAGO, IL

September 25, 2013

http://thecorpselives.com/?p=643

Reading, book launch, sound, and screening with Mark Booth, Mairead Case, Patrick Durgin, Devin King, and a salad bar. To celebrate the publication of /PQRS: A Poets Theater Script/, Patrick Durgin will read "Prelude to PQRS" and screen clips from films cited in the book. Mark Booth and Devin King will collaborate on a sound piece [based on music cited in the book]. Mairead Case will read her own work. And we shall consume salad.

/PQRS/ is a poets theater script with initials for names and functions for characters. It is about linguistic contagion and statist collusion, the fate of labor and play as literary genre (i.e. "essay"), the utility of public art and site-specificity in the post-medium age, the plasticity of gender, the metaphysics of lyric address, and several other topics. It was written between 1998 and 2012, mostly toward the end of that period.

Patrick Durgin is coauthor of /The Route/ (Atelos, 2008, with Jen Hofer) and has published numerous chapbooks, including /Imitation Poems/ (2006) and /Color Music/ (2002). Durgin is also editor of /Hannah Weiner's Open House/ <http://www.kenningeditions.com/hannah-weiners-open-house-by-hannah-weiner/> and /The Early and Clairvoyant Journals of Hannah Weiner/ <http://libraries.ucsd.edu/speccoll/m504/index.html>. He teaches critical theory, literature, and writing at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. Patrick Durgin @ Pennsound <http://writing.upenn.edu/pennsound/x/Durgin.php>and @ EPC

<http://epc.buffalo.edu/authors/durgin/> and see http://www.kenningeditions.com/pqrs-by-patrick-durgin/

Mairead Case is a writer, editor, and teacher. An MFA-W candidate at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago and graduate of the 2013 Summer Writing Program at Naropa, Mairead is Youth Services Assistant at the Poetry Foundation Library and an editor-at-large for Yeti Publishing and /f/eatherproo/f /books. She writes monthly book columns for the websites Bad at Sports and Bookslut.

Mark Booth is an interdisciplinary artist, sound artist, and writer residing in Oak Park, Illinois. Recent exhibitions and projects include /The Sea is Represented by an Irregular Shape/ at Devening Projects and Editions Chicago, /God is Represented by the Sea/, Adds Donna Gallery Chicago, /Nothing to do with wizards/, O'Connor Gallery, Dominican University, River Forest, IL. He has performed and exhibited in the United States, Scandinavia, Australia, and Germany. Booth is an assistant professor at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago where he currently teaches creative writing and sound.

Devin King is a writer, musician, and teacher working in Chicago. His long poem, /CLOPS/, is out from the Green Lantern Press where he is now an Associate Editor. He curates performances, readings, lectures, and movies at The (New) Corpse. A new chapbook, /The Resonant Space/, is out from Holon Press.

35. Stephanie Barber

my new movie DAREDEVILS will premiere in October!

Sat 14 Sep 2013

Hello,

I am very excited to share the news that my first feature DAREDEVILS will premiere at the 2013 New York Film Festival's "Views from the Avant-Garde" this October.

The screening will take place at Lincoln Center's Francesca Beale Theater on Thursday October 3 at 6pm.

If you would like to attend this screening (and I hope you will!) you can order tickets here: http://www.filmlinc.com/films/on-sale/program-1-stephanie-barber-daredevils

Here is a trailer & other information: http://daredevilsmovie.com/ [image: Inline image 1]

A portrait of risk and language, the experimental narrative DAREDEVILS, presents a writer as she interviews a well-known artist and feels the reverberations of their discussion throughout her day. Visually spare, still and verbose, the video considers three formal handlings of language—a dialog, two monologues and a song.

Starring KimSu Theiler <http://www.gobolux.com/>, Flora Coker<http://www.imdb.com/name/nm0170087/> and Adam Robinson <http://www.adam-robinson.info/>, shot by Matthew Thompson <http://www.imdb.com/name/nm5780055/>, and featuring the voices of Susan Howe <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Susan_Howe> and Jenny Graf<http://jennygrafsheppard.com/>, DAREDEVILS constructs a metaphor of an artist's life and work as daredevilry. The piece was written and directed by Stephanie Barber.

The piece sits gently between video art, narrative and poetic essay. The classic rising action, climax and denouement are sculpted, not by cause and effect, but by the subtle movements to and from understanding that are inherent in conversation. Bubbles of intimacy are blown and popped, begin to be blown again.
Thanks for reading! Hope to see you at the screening,

New Polish Poetry: Kopenhaga by Grzegorz Wroblewski

Sun 15 Sep 2013

Kopenhaga (translated by Piotr Gwiazda) is the first comprehensive collection of prose poetry by Grzegorz Wroblewski, one of Poland's leading contemporary writers.

Described by Marcus Slease as "NY School poetry meets Kafka meets Polish poetry (bruLion, etc.)," this bilingual edition is available from: Zephyr Press (http://www.zephyrpress.org/new.php#kopenhaga) and SPD (http://www.spdbooks.org/Producte/9781938890000/kopenhaga.aspx)

"Alien to Joycean effulgence, Kopenhaga is nonetheless a book of silence, exile, and cunning: silence instead of moralizing in the face of modernity's indignities; exile from native land and language; cunning in cajoling these conditions to sing a new song, one lacking in all jubilation, still somehow victorious in the absolute character of defeat. Grim, glancingly beautiful, always necessary."—Joshua Clover

"Kopenhaga is the study of a place into which we are all thrown as strangers, 'an enclosed compound for the paranoid,' in which we all live a public and familiar life with whomever we find. This is a book about a changing Denmark, one none of us can leave—nor should we wish to, because place, as Wroblewski has it, 'is the most important thing in the world.' And with this, Wroblewski has written one of the most important books of our time: these are at once unsettling and comforting, timely and wryly moving poems about the laughable annoyances, limited joys, and the never fully present sorrows of cosmopolitanism, the life of the citizens of the world. Gwiazda has rendered this study in a language full of 'water and shouting and whalers.' I can think at the moment of no better book for you to read in this our immense and always new Copenhagen."—Gabriel Gudding

"The poet Grzegorz Wroblewski was born in Poland, lives in Copenhagen, and is perhaps best known in English translation, as here in the marvelous versions by Piotr Gwiazda. A familiar figure everywhere, yet at home nowhere, Wroblewski is the true poetic chronicler of our 21st century diaspora in all its absurdities and anxieties. Kopenhaga, his book of aphoristic prose poems*, *pulls out all the rhetorical stops to present us with a relentless, sardonic, and hilarious picture of a culture (at once highly particular and yet anyculture) as insane as it is public-spirited and kindly. 'What terrifies me in Denmark,' our narrator remarks, '(the land of Bohr and Kierkegaard, a caring and tolerant state with a high standard of living, etc.) . . . is homo sapiens.' *Kopenhaga *is a journey to the end of the night that always makes a U-turn in the middle, to take in the latest folly—and also self-rescue mission—of the transplant. Read it and weep—and then laugh!"—Marjorie Perloff

DEBUT BOOK from Bay Area Poet Alli Warren

Mon 16 Sep 2013

City Lights Publishers is proud to announce the release of . . .

HERE COME THE WARM JETS
City Lights Spotlight #10
By Alli Warren
http://www.citylights.com/book/?GCOI=87286100637980

"Warren's first book of poems is highly self-reflective, interestingly interrogative, and a lot of fun."—Booklist

Charged with swagger and sensuality, tenderness and cold fact, HERE COME THE WARM JETS is the highly anticipated and brash, new book in the City Lights Spotlight series, penned by first-time author Alli Warren. Taking its title from the Brian Eno classic, Jets jumbles gender, class, and space-time perspectives into a chorus of contemporary idioms and lyrical longings. Against the daunting backdrop of 21st century consumerism, Warren launches her missives of sex and desire, in writing that is at once raw and sly. From the Bishop of Worms to Flipper to E-40, nobody's safe from the easy virtuosity with which she makes language sing.

Praise for HERE COME THE WARM JETS:

“Here Come the Warm Jets starts by cycling through swaths of factless job-voice before pitching an unfolding exuberant doom-diction through the book's positively evil prosodic middle. Relative time, absolute time, ornery time, palpation time, and a kind of time I can't name are all in play along the way. I think Warren's end of capitalism would come with the richest planes of full life, but only the poems and their upending of the never-ending blossom hull make me think so.”— Anselm Berrigan

"Alli Warren unfixes belief in these poem-feeds while never dissolving it. The effect is a kind of infinitely mobile fandom with occasional sparkes."—Lisa Robertson "When form and form's fiancé come maundering Alli Warren will undo them both with tart prepositional gambits and the vagaries of fortune-telling and a fine poker-faced command of stagecraft itself. With nods to the congress of manners (and hat tips too to Brooks, Duncan, and others) Here Come the Warm Jets plays at neither checking nor abashing but chronicles what it just might be to be beyond the reach of any drama, any architecture. This is one heavenly book."—C. S. Giscombe

Re: Olson
Tue 17 Sep 2013

[little bit of follow up, this is from Ben Hollander]

When the article,

‘Il Gruppo’ Surfaces to Respond to Heriberto Yépez’s Complicated Book on Charles Olson’s Time in Mexico

http://www.poetryfoundation.org/harriet/2013/09/il-gruppo-surfaces-to-respond-to-heriberto-yepezs-complicated-book-on-charles-olsons-time-in-mexico/appeared on The Poetry Foundations's Harriet Blog, the writer of the blog had asked for more info. from Il Gruppo. The writer stated:

"We’re looking for more information on Il Gruppo in general, and are keen to see them really wrestle with this [Yepez's] work and literary history. Rumors circulate that they’re looking to publish a small book on the matter. We’ll keep you posted. "(Harriet Staff)

Il Gruppo obliged and sent Harriet more info, as requested, but Harriet could not post it, stating that they only provide links to other sites.

So Il Gruppo sent it to the UK poetics list, from where this statement below is taken:

We appreciate Harriet's interest for "more information" about Il Gruppo, and will be glad to provide it in the near future. For now, and just to clarify: we are not, as Harriet writes "really wrestling" with [Heriberto] Yepez's work [on Charles Olson]. There are much larger stakes here.

Here is one brief analogy to highlight the stakes, which have more to do with how history is recorded and received than with Yepezâ€™s so-called theories.

If someone came along and wrote a book called The Geographies of Undoing, for example, which stated: "I am not interested in Ammiel Alcalay but I am declaring that he is a Zionist, that, in fact, he is the prime example of a duplicitous, chameleon-like figure who, on the one hand, purports to examine cultural politics through geography while, on the other, dominates and collapses that geography into terms that serve his Zionist purposes: to turn time into space. While most of his readers may be unaware of this, his Zionism can only be discerned by a closer examination of his relationship to his father who, in fact, belonged to a Zionist youth group. Thus, we have the classic case of the child unable to slay the father: the return, as it were, of the repressed. Hence, Zionism."

Were someone to write such a book or make such a statement, we would hope that a response might be forthcoming, a response from people who actually know Alcalay's work and his long-standing political and cultural allegiances with Palestinian groups and issues.We would hope that a response would be forthcoming from students, former students, writers, peers, friends, family or, in fact, any parties with more than a passing interest in verifying the historical record. We realize this may be a lot, even too much, to ask. But at least one can striveâ€”and in this case Il Gruppo is striving-- towards a more collective intelligence that serves to expose baseless assertions, distortions, and outright lies before they gain momentum. As is known, Il Gruppo is looking for the space and form where such issues as we are raising will be forced into the open, perhaps in the shape of a small book, if anyone wants to contact us about publishing one.

Benjamin Hollander for ll Gruppo

*An exhibition of seventy-five letterpress and offset books and broadsides featuring the work of contemporary poets, designed and executed by Charles Alexander and collaborators at Chax Press in Tucson, Arizona * For thirty-five years, Charles Alexander has written, read, typeset, printed, published, and taught poetry, and countless readers and writers are indebted to his unstinting devotion.

While in college at the University of Wisconsin--Madison in 1981, Charles teamed up with Alison Circle to form the Black Mesa Press, which issued dozens of limited-edition books and broadsides by exciting and important contemporary poets. Typeset, printed, and bound by hand (often using handmade papers), the productions of the Black Mesa Press exemplified a turn taken by a number of fine presses in the 1980s, away from familiar and safe texts and toward experimental and innovative writers.

With a move to Tucson in 1984, Chax Press was born. Though making books by hand has remained an important touchstone for the press, Chax committed itself from the start to providing challenging work by innovative poets in handsome, affordable trade editions.

For thirty years, Charles and company have pursued a critical and exploratory poetics of publishing, through all the varied means at their disposal. This exhibition of books and broadsides, which merely hints at the scope and richness of their accomplishments, coincides with the publication of two new Chax books by Portland poets: /?The Notebook of False Purgatories/ by Standard Schaefer, and /The Identification of Ghosts/ by Maryrose Larkin.

*Exhibition conceived and organized by David Abel / Passages Bookshop  */The organizer extends grateful acknowledgments to Charles Alexander for his participation, and for the loan of materials from the Chax Press archive; to Mack McFarland and Pacific Northwest College of Art for providing gallery space and technical support; to Adam Davis and Kate Schaefer at Division Leap for the loan of display cases, and to James Yeary, Sam Lohmann, and Jim Clinefelter for help with installation.// / For more information, contact:

Just Saying, RAE ARMANTROUTs most recent book of poems, was published by Wesleyan University Press in 2013. Just Saying launches in Ottawa on October 3, 2013 when Armantrout reads in A B Series. Versed (Wesleyan, 2009) received the Pulitzer Prize and the National Book Critics Circle Award. It was also a finalist for the National Book Award. Next Life (Wesleyan, 2007) was chosen as one of the 100 Notable Books of 2007 by The New York Times. Other recent books include Money Shot (Wesleyan, 2011,) Collected Prose (Singing Horse, 2007), Up to Speed (Wesleyan, 2004), The Pretext (Green Integer, 2001), and Veil: New and Selected Poems (Wesleyan University Press, 2001). Her poems have been included in anthologies such as The Best of the Best American Poetry: 1988-2012 (2013), The Norton Anthology of Postmodern American Poetry (2013), The Open Door: 100 Poems, 100 Years of Poetry Magazine, (Chicago, 2012), American Hybrid (Norton, 2009), American Women Poets in the 21 Century: Where Language Meets the Lyric Traditionst, (Wesleyan, 2002), The Oxford Book of American Poetry (Oxford, 2006) and

The Best American Poetry of 1988, 2001, 2002, 2004, 2007, 2008, 2011 and 2012. Armantrout received an award in poetry from the Foundation for Contemporary Arts in 2007 and a Guggenheim Fellowship in 2008. She is Professor of Poetry and Poetics at the University of California, San Diego. Writing in Poetry magazine, Ange Mlinko has said, I would trade the bulk of contemporary anecdotal free verse for more incisive, chilling poetry like Armantrouts.

RON SILLIMAN has written and edited over 30 books, and has had his poetry and criticism translated into 12 languages. He has worked as a political activist, editor, and market analyst. Among his honors, Silliman was a 2012 Kelly Writers House Fellow at the University of Pennsylvania, and the 2010 recipient of the Levinson Prize, from the Poetry Foundation. His sculpture poetry (Bury Neon) is permanently on display in the transit centre of Bury, Lancashire, and he has a plaque in the walk dedicated to poetry in his home town of Berkeley, although he now lives in Chester County, Pennsylvania. His new book is Revelator (BookThug, 2013). Revelator is the opening poem in a major sequence entitled Universe. Its the jumping off point for a work that, were Ron Silliman to live long enough, would take him three centuries to complete. We are hopeful. Universe is a poem of globalization and post-global poetics (an important reason for publishing this key section outside of the USA). At its core, it addresses the problem that there are only two global systems: the biosphere and capital, while every response to these global systems is invariably local. The first appearance of Revelator in a journal won Poetrys Levinson prize, previously given to poets such as Robert Creeley, Theodore Roethke, Geoffrey Hill, John Ashbery, Robert Duncan, Basil Bunting, William Carlos Williams, Dylan Thomas, Hart Crane, Robert Frost, and Wallace Stevens. Revelator launches in Ottawa on October 3, 2013 when Silliman reads in A B Series.

Cool Papa Bell http://www.cpbband.com/ Cool Papa Bell is a New York City-based band comprised of: Stan Pyrzanowski, lead/backing vocals and guitar; Jennifer L, lead/backing vocals; Brian "Brain" Parkhill bass; and Josh Fleischmann, drums. The group was founded in 2008 by Stan and Brian. CPB has an eclectic sound, with rock, blues, soul, funk, Americana, and ska influences. In addition to performing powerful, sometimes political and broken-hearted original songs, they also cover varied artists such as Dolly Parton, Prince, John Hiatt, Stevie Wonder, Jimi Hendrix, Neil Young, Etta James, Bob Dylan, Van Morrison, and Concrete Blonde, among others. Cool Papa Bell will rock you, captivate you and leave you wanting more.

The band can be seen performing around NYC at venues such as Rockwood Music Hall, Arlene's Grocery, Sidewalk Cafe, American Trash, and The Bowery

Electric. Cool Papa Bell plans to release their full-length debut album in fall 2013.

Robert Gibbons Three Rooms Press just released Robert Gibbons' first poetry collection, Close to the Tree. Gibbons recently was produced on the CD Brain Ampin through Hydrogen Jukebox, a poetry series produced through The Cornelia Street Café. He has done poetic works in after school programs, drama camps, and theater programs in Florida; Washington, D.C.; and New York City. He hopes to continue searching to find new ways to create work and provide new venues to the children he serves.

Pierre Joris http://www.pierrejoris.com/blog/ Pierre Joris is a poet, translator, essayist, and anthologist who has published more than 50 books, most recently, Meditations on the Stations of Mansur al-Hallaj (poems) from Chax Press and The University of California Book of North African Literature (volume 4 in the Poems for the Millennium series), coedited with Habib Tengour. Exile is My Trade: A Habib Tengour Reader and Pierre Joris: Cartographies of the In-between, edited by Peter Cockelbergh, came out in 2012. Forthcoming are Barzakh—Poems 2000-2012 (Black Widow Press) and Breathturn into Timestead: The Collected Later Poetry of Paul Celan. (Farrar, Straus and Giroux).

Tanya Olson http://boyishly-tanya.blogspot.com/?m=1 Tanya Olson teaches at Vance-Granville Community College. Her first book, Boyishly, will be published by YesYes Books shortly. Her work has been published in Bad Subjects, Beloit Poetry Review, Boston Review, Elysian Fields, Fanzine, and Southword (IRL). In 2010, she won a Discovery/Boston Review prize and was named a 2011 Lambda Fellow by the Lambda Literary Foundation. She helps coordinate Durham's Third Friday, is a member of the Black Socks poetry group, and serves on the board of Carolina Wren Press.

Joe Pan http://joepan.org/ Joe Pan's debut collection of poetry, Autobiomythography & Gallery, was named Best First Book of the Year by Coldfront Magazine. He grew up along the Space Coast of Florida, attended the Iowa Writers' Workshop, and serves as the poetry editor of Hyperallergic. His poetry has appeared in such places as Boston Review, Denver Quarterly, and H_ngm_n, fiction in Cimarron Review and Glimmer Train, and nonfiction in The New York Times. He is the founder and managing editor of Brooklyn Arts Press, an independent publishing house.

Douglas Rothschild http://www.fauxpress.com/e/rothschild/ Douglas Rothschild was born under a potato leaf scrub toe, and comes to us direct from Germany and ready to deliver the most indirect and fundamentally unsound conceptual writing which you have encountered in many years.

Amish Trivedi http://www.amishtrivedi.com/ Amish Trivedi's poems have been in Jacket2, Mandorla, OmniVerse, and Word For/Word. He has no set location at the moment, though he is teaching the fall 2013 semester at Roger Williams University in Bristol, R.I.

Kevin Varrone http://www.brooklynrail.org/2012/04/poetry/from-box-score-an-autobiography Kevin Varrone's most recent publi-cation is Eephus (Little Red Leaves Textile Series). His current project, box score: an autobiography, is forthcoming as a set of literary baseball cards from Little Red Leaves Textile Series and is out as an iPhone and iPad app. His previous publications include Passyunk Lost (Ugly Duckling Presse), id est (Instance Press), and the chapbook g-point Almanac: 6.21-9.21 (ixnay press) all part of g-point Almanac, a four-part project loosely based on Almanacs and Books of Days. He grew up in Flushing, Queens and now lives outside Philadelphia with his family.

Thu 19 Sep 2013

We’re baaaaaack! with a special Out-of-Towners evening

 P r o s e P r o s **

hosted by Elinor Nauen & Martha King

*Thursday, October 3, 2013 from *6:30 to 7:45 p.m. (starts and ends on time!)

*Ray Halliday (San Francisco) & Ted Pelton *(Buffalo)

at the Sidewalk Café

94 Avenue A at 6th Street, NYC [redacted]

(F to Second Avenue (exit at First Avenue)

Night cabbie, songwriter and musician (the Verms), English professor, editor: that’s just some of the work Ray Halliday has done. He also wrote, produced, and acted in four very short films called The Existentialists. In 1991 he was nominated for a Pushcart Prize. He did not win. The Kid That Even the Dogs Didn’t Like is his first collection of stories.

If there’s anything lacking in your knowledge of the woodchuck, Ted Pelton’s your man. Several stories about a woodchuck have appeared in The Brooklyn Rail over the past few years—and there may be more to come. He is the author of four books, all fiction, the most recent of which is Bartleby, the Sportscaster, and has received NEA and Isherwood fellowships for his writing. In Buffalo, he is a college professor, has two young daughters, and is the founder and publisher of Starcherone Books.

*WHY: *There are hundreds of poetry readings in New York City every month, but just one series—Prose Pros—dedicated solely to prose. We’ve hosted Siri Hustvedt on her strange neurological disorder ... *Mark Jay Mirsky*working out a sexy New York story as we listened ... Sarah Falkner making geology hilarious … *Ammon Shea *comparing Dan Quayle's spelling prowess to that of Thomas Jefferson … *Bob Rosenthal*dishing intimate tales of Allen Ginsberg … David Berrigan ruminating on evolutionary biology and his poet father…. Vincent Katz's beautiful meditation on the sky… Mike DeCapite's tough'n'tender short fiction … and more!

WHERE: The back room of the East Village's SideWalk Café, 94 Avenue A at 6th Street All readings are on Thursdays at 6:30 (sharp), usually the first Thursday of the month. One drink minimum (or purchase a munchie). No cover charge but we do ask for a generous contribution, all of which goes to the readers.

Martha King: [redacted]

Elinor Nauen: [redacted]

Or find us online by "friending" Prose Pros on Facebook.

Readers in the 2012-13 season: Martine Bellen, Mark Mirsky, Andrej Blatnick, Andrew Levy, Ammon Shea, Bob Rosenthal, Sarah Falkner, Carl Watson, Martha King, David Berrigan, Ed Friedman, Edmund Berrigan, Vincent Katz and Mike DeCapite, plus a one-off exquisite corpse constructed of bits from 5 years worth of readings, performed by Elinor, Francis (Levy), Mike (DeCapite) and Martha, which led off Boog City's summer festival last August.

2010-11: Phillip Lopate, Burt Kimmelman, Andrei Codrescu, CA Conrad, Eileen Myles, Basil King, Siri Hustvedt, Philip Dray, Donald Breckenridge, Sparrow and Foamola.

2009-10: Joyce Johnson, Tony Towle, Monica de la Torré, Peter Schjeldahl, Sarah Schulman, Lenore Skenazy, Bob Holman, Alex Webb & Rebecca Norris Webb, Pierre Joris, Sanjay Agnihotri, JP Borum and Michael Heller.

2008-09: Terence Winch, Michael Lally, Chuck Wachtel, Tom Carey, Carmen Firan, Barbara Henning, Mike DeCapite, Lee Lowenfish, Joan Silber, Dani Leone, Nahid Rachlin, Diane Simmons and Martha King.

Announcing The Portable Boog Reader 7

Thu 19 Sep 2013

Hi all,

A quick announcement that work is underway on The Portable Boog Reader 7, our New York City and sister city poetry anthology. This year I'm happy to say the sister city is Pittsburgh.

The PBR7 editorsâ€”see below this note for their biosâ€”are:

NYC
Laura Henriksen
Amy King
Geoffrey Olsen
Nicole Peyrafitte Angela Veronica Wong
and me

Pittsburgh
Margaret Bashaar
Lauren Russell

To read the past five PBR's:

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc77.pdf

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc67.pdf

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc61.pdf

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc53.pdf

http://www.boogcity.com/boogpdfs/bc47.pdf

This edition will be our biggest Portable Boog Reader yet, and include full tabloid pages of work from 20 NYC and 10 Pittsburgh poets, the equivalent of a 120-page 6"Â” x 9"Â” anthology. We look forward to sharing it with everyone when we upload the issue a few days before The Poetry Project at St. Mark's Church's 40th Annual New Year's Day Marathon Reading.

as ever,
David

129 messages · Wed 25 Sep 2013 – Wed 30 Oct 2013

October 2013 turned the thinned room toward the great American long poems and the wider world of verse beyond the nation's borders — the Cantos and Paterson at home, six decades of Cuban poetry abroad. One hundred and twenty-nine messages moved through the list, and its small threads ran between the monuments of the modernist epic and the recovery of a poetry the American reader had barely known. The month was scholarly and outward-looking at once, the room tending the canon and reaching past it in the same breath.

The largest thread went hunting for criticism of the epics. A member asked the room for "good recent criticism (since about 2000)" on the Cantos, on Paterson, on the poetry of Frank O'Hara — the great sprawling American attempts to get the whole world into a poem, and the New York poet who had made the daily city sing. It was the list in its custodial mode, keeping the modernist monuments in scholarly repair, making sure the criticism kept pace with the enormous poems it served.

The counter-current reached across the water. A review of an anthology of six decades of Cuban poetry opened a poetry most of the room had never read — one reviewer confessing that "Before reading The Whole Island, I knew almost nothing about Cuban poetry" and emerging with a sense of its rich and complex history — the outward reach that had always been the list's healthiest instinct, the recovery of a whole national tradition the American canon had walled off. Beside it, a reading by Harryette Mullen kept the living and the innovative in view.

Around the edges ran the ordinary keeping — a bluegrass-festival poetry query, a book party announced, a long-running little magazine's notice. The infrastructure carried on beneath the scholarship, the reading series and the small presses doing their patient work, the living poetry going on being made and gathered and carried across borders — the canon tended and the unknown tradition welcomed in the same faithful month.

I have set October down exactly as the archive delivered it — the hunt for criticism of the Cantos and Paterson and O'Hara, the discovery of six decades of Cuban poetry, and the ordinary keeping beneath — because it was the month the thinned list did the two things it had always done best at once: tending its own monuments and reaching past them toward a poetry it did not yet know. A room that will keep the criticism of the great American epics current and, in the same October, open itself to a Cuban tradition it confesses it knew almost nothing of is a room whose curiosity outlasted its numbers, still guarding the canon it inherited and still, even at the edge of its own ending, hungry for the poetry it had never met.

DENVER: A Poet at the Lakeside Stride Bluegrass Festival?
Thu 26 Sep 2013

Brought to you by Planned Pethood Plus, it’s the LAKESIDE STRIDE BLUEGRASS FESTIVAL, 5K Run & Chili Cook Off.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 19:
12:30 pm: Highland Ramblers
2 pm: Old Town Pickers
3:30 pm: Dead Winter Carpenters
5:15 pm: Paul Siegell (poet)
6 pm: Hot Buttered Rum ft. Allie Kral

Facebook event: https://www.facebook.com/events/520837587966239/

Lakeside Stride website: http://www.lakesidestride.com/#%21lineup/cjg9

ABOUT THE LAKESIDE STRIDE: Partnering with Planned Pethood Plus, the low-cost animal clinic on Tennyson Street in the historic Berkeley community of Denver, Colorado, the Lakeside Stride will feature national and local-level bluegrass talent, a poet from Philadelphia, a chili cook-off, and a morning 5K to boot. The Lakeside Stride’s mission is to create a culmination of community united by music and historic preservation.

Many thanks,
Paul

new from above/ground press: Rituals, by Rae Armantrout

Fri 27 Sep 2013

Rituals
Rae Armantrout
$4

In this now ancient ritual a succession of young women are saucy,

which is to say they name common objects and relations as if they had mastered them but shouldn't.

Each receives false approbation.

As Xmas sells winter to its prisoners.

As warmth feels like love;

and love is warmth
only more capricious.

Fingers uncurl.

Organs expand and rise

toward a surface that must never be broken.

Just Saying, Rae Armantrout's most recent book of poems, was published by Wesleyan University Press in 2013. Versed (Wesleyan, 2009) received the Pulitzer Prize and the National Book Critics Circle Award. It was also a finalist for the National Book Award. Next Life (Wesleyan, 2007) was chosen as one of the 100 Notable Books of 2007 by The New York Times. Other recent books include Money Shot (Wesleyan, 2011), Collected Prose (Singing Horse, 2007), Up to Speed (Wesleyan, 2004), The Pretext (Green Integer, 2001), and Veil: New and Selected Poems (Wesleyan University Press, 2001). Her poems have been included in anthologies such as The Best of the Best American Poetry: 1988-2012 (2013), The Norton Anthology of Postmodern American Poetry (2013), The Open Door: 100 Poems, 100 Years of Poetry Magazine (Chicago, 2012), American Hybrid (Norton, 2009), American Women Poets in the 21 Century: Where Language Meets the Lyric Traditionist (Wesleyan, 2002), The Oxford Book of American Poetry (Oxford, 2006) and The Best American Poetry of 1988, 2001, 2002, 2004, 2007, 2008, 2011 and 2012. Armantrout received an award in poetry from the Foundation for Contemporary Arts in 2007 and a Guggenheim Fellowship in 2008. She is Professor of Poetry and Poetics at the University of California, San Diego. Writing in Poetry magazine, Ange Mlinko has said, "I would trade the bulk of contemporary anecdotal free verse for more incisive, chilling poetry like Armantrout's."

Furniture Press at Pace University: Tuesday, October 1st

Sun 29 Sep 2013

Friends and colleagues,

We hope you can join us as Furniture Press Books visits Pace University on their nationwide tour to read from new work. You can attend this event online or on the Pace campus.

The Furniture Press authors will read on campus in Pleasantville in the Choate House Dining Room Tuesday October 1st at 3:30. We will broadcast the event through Blackboard Collaborate (hyperlink and instructions below)

Furniture Press Books publishes limited runs of handmade, hand-printed chap/books, pamphlets and zines (anywhere from 50 to 200), plus full-length books and collections. Furniture Press Books believes in active participation and collaboration in the community. Their books reach into the physical environment: they hold readings and events throughout the year, and promote their catalog throughout the country; they hold a month-long poetry festival in April (Cruellest Month Poetry & Performance Festival), inviting literary organizations to host the best of their talent and introduce new voices to new audiences; they work closely with the residents and businesses of Baltimore County and City by investing revenue and energy to increase patronage and exposure; and they collaborate with the Poetry in Community, a non-profit organization that is central to the creative lives of the region’s residents, students and businesses.

Readers for the event include:

Martine Bellen

Iris Marble Cushing

Ryan Eckes

Alyse Knorr

Magus Magnus

Deborah Poe

Alicia Puglionesi

(I recommend Firefox or Safari over Chrome. It's checking for latest Java version for the client download necessary to join).

2. Free demos if you don't just want to dive in:
http://www.blackboard.com/Platforms/Collaborate/Services/On-Demand-Learning-Center/Web-Conferencing.aspx#freetraining

3. Attend the event. You can log in up to 30 minutes before the event here:
https://sas.elluminate.com/m.jnlp?sid=2011441&password=M.54E40740B71914DE745E74AE8CCDAA

Please note this is our second broadcast reading, or reading of this kind, in the Vox Creative Art Series. We appreciate your patience as we cover new ground.

Millay Colony for the Arts Indiegogo so go go go go...!!

Mon 30 Sep 2013

Hello world,

I hope this finds everyone extremely well on this Monday afternoon.

I'm writing to let you know about a fabulous crowd-funding campaign on the lovely Indiegogo to support The Millay Colony for the Arts, of which I am Executive Director.

The Millay Colony is an artists' residency program and artists center offering FREE residencies to artists of all stripes each year. We also offer inexpensive workshops and free programs in our local public schools. We are pretty great. And we need your support!

Our Indiegogo campaign will underwrite residencies for FOUR deserving artists in 2014. An amazing opportunity for four people to develop their work in a way that could not happen otherwise.

'http://www.indiegogo.com/projects/496388/emal/4385324'

Please take a moment to check us out on Indiegogo and also share our campaign with your friends. A simple click on our campaign page and the campaign will pop up in vibrant color on your Facebook or Twitter pages or an email will set it self up....

You can get rewards including

- A manuscript review with the Editor of Fence Magazine
- A studio visit with the art critic for The Nation or Time Out New York
- A weekend on the beach
- a poker lesson with Annie Duke

AND MORE...

Get amazing rewards, make a contribution, or simply follow updates. If enough of us get behind it, we can make 'The Millay Colony for the Arts: Celebrate 40 years by supporting 4 artists' happen!

Thank you all so much, Caroline

Hermeneutic Stomp
Tue 1 Oct 2013

hi friends,

I have a record coming out - poetry/jazz/klezmer/improvisation, it's called "Hermeneutic Stomp" (Blue Thread Records, 2013). We're celebrating the release with a concert at Cornelia Street Cafe in NY on Oct 14 at 8.30pm, and everyone is very much invited! If anyone's interested in reviewing the album, please drop me a note. More info about the approach is on Jacket2: http://jacket2.org/commentary/improvised-poetry-palimpsest-drafts.

More info about the "Hermeneutic Stomp" and the release party here: http://jakemarmer.wordpress.com/2013/09/30/hermeneutic-stomp-cd-release-party/

print on demand , Markson, Fox and Josephine Butler

Wed 2 Oct 2013

I am pleased to say that when David Markson learned of my last book he said "Start the next one immediately" and Hugh Fox , on reading some of my past work said I was " an extraordinary blossoming genius." Sorry neither are here now to read JOSEPHINE BUTLER; A COLLECTION OF POETRY, Phoenix Press International, which is available print on demand worldwide. The error of one place saying it was on their shelves has been corrected. And sorry this computer will not type semi-colons. Susan Maurer

Poetry (-/+Critical) Playlist Symposium at the University of Pittsburgh

Wed 2 Oct 2013

The Poetry (-/+ Critical) Playlist Symposium
November 1, 2013, 2 p.m. - 5 p.m.

The Humanities Center, University of Pittsburgh
Cathedral of Learning, Room 602
4200 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, PA
Open to the Public

Speakers: Terrance Hayes (University of Pittsburgh), Lynn Keller (University of Wisconsin), Dawn Lundy Martin (University of Pittsburgh), Christopher Nealon (Johns Hopkins University), Brian M. Reed (University of Washington)

During the symposium, panelists will perform short readings of texts--poems, essays, pop songs, videos--that they have recently had on 'repeat.' These readings will be open-ended and partial, foregrounding questions and sticking points to encourage audience members to contribute. These readings, combined, will make up a kind of 'playlist' or 'mixtape,' where one text will take on added meaning in juxtaposition with the others. The audience and group as a whole will then have a chance to comment on the nature of our encounters with these texts: how are we reading them, and why? The structure of the event will serve to emphasize the validity and explorability of the reader's/listener's engagements--the ways that we, as readers, in our engagements, make texts open up off the page, into our lives, and onto our conditions of life.

Organizers: Piotr Gwiazda ([redacted]), Charles Legere ([redacted])

10/05 @ 4:30 : Segue Presents Zeyar Lynn and Rachel Blau Duplessis

Wed 2 Oct 2013

Dear all,

I hope you'll join us at the Zinc bar this Saturday 10/05 at 4:30 for the launch of the Fall season of Segue<https://www.facebook.com/events/329632937181897/>, featuring

ZEYAR LYNN

Zeyar Lynn is the pseudonym of Myint Aung, born in Yangon in 1958, In 1978 he published 3 chapbooks of poems at the risk of imprisonment (not so much for writing poems as for publishing illegally without passing through the proper channels of the scrutiny board). From 1992 to 1993, heFrom 1992 to 1993, he co-edited the avant garde literary magazine ‘The Sea’, but unfortunately, only 3 issues were published after which the magazine had to be closed down due to censor board harassment. Currently, he is co-editing ‘Kabyar Lawka/Poetry World’, a quarterly poetry magazine, which aims to become the first ever poetry magazine in Myanmar, if and when the government permits. He is also a regular contributor to the various magazines in Myanmar, which feature his poems, articles, and translations. His poems have been translated into English and published in Bones Will Crow: 15 Burmese Contemporary Poets, translated and edited by ko ko thett & James Byrne, Arc Publications, UK, 2012.

RACHEL BLAU DUPLESSIS

Rachel Blau DuPlessis is known as a poet and essayist, and as a critic and scholar with a special interest in modern and contemporary poetry. From 1986 until 2012, DuPlessis has been engaged in a long poem project, collected in several book-length installments from Wesleyan University Press and Salt Publishing. The most recent installment, Surge: Drafts 96-114 was published by Surge (2013), bringing this 26 year-long poem to a temporary fold. Her recent Purple Passages: Pound, Eliot, Zukofsky, Olson, Creeley and the Ends of Patriarchal Poetry (University of Iowa Press, 2012) is part of a feminist trilogy of works about gender and poetics that includes The Pink Guitar: Writing as Feminist Practice and Blue Studios: Poetry and its Cultural Work, both from University of Alabama Press. Another key critical book by DuPlessis is Genders, Races, and Religious Cultures in Modern American Poetry, 1908-1934 (Cambridge University Press, 2001).

Season curated by Genji Amino and Daisy Atterbury.

37. Tony Trigilio
"White Noise" just released by Apostrophe Books
Thu 3 Oct 2013

Hi all--

My new book, /White Noise/, was released this past month by Apostrophe Books. Please email me backchannel if you're interested in a review copy (tony at starve.org):

http://www.amazon.com/White-Noise-Tony-Trigilio/dp/0979362768/ref=sr_1_1?s=books&ie=UTF8&qid=1380833598&sr=1-1&keywords=tony+trigilio+white+noise

It's a collage and appropriation extravaganza. From the publisher's statement:

"Trigilio's /White Noise/ blends the political and the personal in an unsettling amalgam of prose fragments that have been disassembled and reassembled through a variety of strategies that are almost Oulipian in their peculiar constraints and methodology. From a unique deformation of Don DeLillo's /White Noise/ to a collocation of speech culled from Usenet bulletin boards to scattered material originally posted on the web, Trigilio stitches, reassembles and re-weaves the rhetoric of fear and politics with the language of literature and personal narrative. The book examines the poignant and disturbing intersection between the underground Usenet forums existing before 9/11 and post 9/11 terroristic paranoia. Trigilio reveals that everything these forum-users were paranoid about since the Cold War has, in a sense, come true. This dystopian vision is becoming an increasing reality, Trigilio shows, because we have openly accepted this bizarre and chilling world of kill lists and mass surveillance. /White Noise /is a quintessentially pataphysical response to our current milieu, but it is also, ironically, approached in utterly realist terms."

Best,
Tony

If you're free on Saturday...
Thu 3 Oct 2013

Dear Friends,

My apologies for the mass mail. I just wanted to send a quick personal email making sure you knew about PAGE TURNER: The AAWW Food & Books Festival<http://www.pageturnerfest.org/>, this Saturday, October 5th at Roulette and the YWCA in Downtown Brooklyn.

Half kid-friendly indoor street fair, half cultural happening, this free festival is possibly the most ambitious thing that AAWW has ever done. We'll have all-day dumpling-making sessions and a whole floor of food venders, like Bombay Sandwich Shop, Brooklyn Soda Works, and Big Bao. Our line-up includes more than 80 writers, intellectuals, and artists, including winners of the Pulitzer, Tony and Guggenheim, and artists who're in the Met and MOMA. We have over 1000 RSVPs!

We'll have interactive workshops like origami folding and butterfly-making. An NPR show will do live recordings. There will be live dancers. Sound installations. A food-related performance piece. A class on how to write comics by an X-men writer. A pop-up poster gallery. Tarot card readings with a well-known novelist. Free posters. Even a guy in a big dumpling suit. The festival site is at http://www.pageturnerfest.org--it's really beautiful, so I hope you can take a look at it.

Warmly,
Ken Chen
Executive Director, AAWW

This Saturday, October 5th at Roulette & the YWCA, 509 Atlantic Ave at 3rd Ave, Brooklyn NY.
11AM - 7PM FESTIVAL | 730pm - Midnight AFTER PARTY

WHY YOU SHOULD GO.<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001Ox55p9AClxHKhPmM1E-acollnXk-gu3bGKDsM--drlmyu5CyE74Ih45Wo-KLOkywz8Fzk3EwJJ52xfEHnP-Jb1TECLh91nSlIRt0W_dj_4XhxSQt3c8pOPqRCQtsgskL>

1. Your stomach will love you for the rest of your life. We'll have a whole gallery of food venders including Bombay Sandwich Shop, Big Bao, Brooklyn Soda Works, Granola Lab, and Parantha Alley. And dumpling-making.

2. After a long week at work, don't you want to play? We're going to have stations where you can (yes) make your own dumplings, learn how to write a graphic novel, or learn how to write a poem--or just get one written for you. Origami. Poster-making. You can even bring your kids.

*3. Your brain will explode from the sheer awesomeness. In a good way.*Our line-up includes almost 80 writers, activists and artists over four spaces--like David Henry Hwang, Colorlines publisher Rinku Sen, Rumpus Founder Stephen Elliott, Monica Youn, Monique Truong, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Sergio de la Pava, Ayad Akhtar, Justin Torres, and Madiha Tahir, who's been interviewing drone attack survivors in Pakistan. And a guy dressed as a giant bao.<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001Ox55p9AClxH0zuTLT7GyBkEgelzY_kH0oZE2ymbEB6r8ssoIK7JNMsX1fxX0OwyGWxlv2Y4PPafUh9Azx0qfLXr3XmZxgjH4tfBWvepH4uRtJsTPRLn3jTWIXacJJ1P_LGEJarlwKxkub0Fbkt78PA==>

1. I'm taking it you already know about the AAWW Dumpling-Making Room.

2. Guggenheim Fellow Mark Nowak will be running a MAKE-A-POEM booth, where you too can write a poem.

3. But if you're shy, emerging poets from Kundiman will be taking poetry requests.

4. X-Men writer Marjorie Liu will teach you how to write a graphic novel.

5. Novelist Alexander Chee will be doing Tarot card readings at the AFTER-PARTY.

6. Which will also include live poster-printing by Felipe Baeza and an interactive food art installation by Alison Kuo.

7. A pop-up gallery of pro-immigrant posters at the YWCA Gallery.

8. Live audio recordings by NPR's Latino USA.

9. Did you know that Chinese Americans made up like 50% of the workforce in many states in the 1800s? David Henry Hwang, Brian Leung, and Karen Shepard discuss the Chinese American 19th Century.

10. A sound installation based on poems by Rabindranath Tagore, curated by ((audience)).

11. Hear about the people who disappear with an artist who's been documenting those abducted by the Gaddafi regime, a Guggenheim poetry fellow, and an activist whose grandparents were interned during WWII.

12. A war-time writing panel with Flavorpill Top 100 NYC Writer Said Sayrafiezadeh, Jadaliyya co-founder Sinan Antoon, AAWW homie Amitava Kumar, and Madiha Tahir, who's been interviewing drone survivors in Pakistan.

13. Make wearable butterfly wings with immigration rights activist Sonia Guinansaca.

14. These peeps will help you interpret Muslim American identity: Suheir Hammad, Sohail Daulatzai, Lorraine Adams, and Ayad Akhtar. The last two both won the Pulitzer. All four are badasses.

15. We commissioned a video artist to make filmic walking tours of NYC Asian American neighborhoods.

16. We're fracturing landscapes with legendary avant-garde poet Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Tamiko Beyer, Janine Oshiro, and Nicola López, whose art has been exhibited at MOMA, The Guggenheim and The Met.

17. The Dim Sum Warriors.

18. Did you know a little-known law requires that the US jail 34,000 immigrants a day? Rinku Sen and Jon Pineda discuss.

19. Is the City apocalyptic or utopian? Answered by Manil Suri, Jess Row, Youmna Chlala, and Tash Aw, the biggest writer of Malaysia.

20. Discover love with a gay manga artist, a biracial stoner, a gay desi, and a National Book Award finalist in poetry.

Did we mention it's free?

This Saturday, October 5th at Roulette & the YWCA, 509 Atlantic Ave at 3rd Ave, Brooklyn NY.
11AM - 7PM FESTIVAL | 730pm - Midnight AFTER PARTY

Hey everyone,

I hope you had a great weekend! I just wanted to make sure that you knew about PAGE TURNER: THE AAWW Food & Books Festival, this Saturday, October 5th at Roulette and the YWCA in Downtown Brooklyn.

Half kid-friendly indoor street fair, half cultural happening, this free festival is possibly the most ambitious thing that AAWW has ever done. We'll have all-day dumpling-making sessions and a whole floor of food venders, like Bombay Sandwich Shop, Brooklyn Soda Works, and Big Bao. Our line-up includes more than 80 writers, intellectuals, and artists, including winners of the Pulitzer, Tony and Guggenheim, and artists who're in the Met and MOMA. We'll have interactive workshops like origami folding and butterfly-making. An NPR show will do live recordings. There will be live dancers. Sound installations. A food-related performance piece. A class on how to write comics by an X-men writer. A pop-up poster gallery. Tarot card readings with a well-known novelist. Free posters. Even a guy in a big dumpling suit.

The festival site is at http://www.pageturnerfest.org--it's really beautiful, so I hope you can take a look at it. We're taking RSVPs on Eventbrite: we're already at 700, so please reserve your spot soon at http://www.pageturnerfest.org/tix! More details below and I hope to see you soon!

Warmly,
Ken Chen
Executive Director, AAWW

WHY YOU SHOULD GO.<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001Ox55p9AClxHKhPmM1E-acollnXk-gu3bGKDsM--drlmyu5CyE74Ih45Wo-KLOkywz8Fzk3EwJJ52xfEHnP-Jb1TECLh91nSlIRt0W_dj_4XhxSQt3c8pOPqRCQtsgskL>

1. Your stomach will love you for the rest of your life. We'll have a whole gallery of food venders including Bombay Sandwich Shop, Big Bao, Brooklyn Soda Works, Granola Lab, and Parantha Alley. And dumpling-making.

2. After a long week at work, don't you want to play? We're going to have stations where you can (yes) make your own dumplings, learn how to write a graphic novel, or learn how to write a poem--or just get one written for you. Origami. Poster-making. You can even bring your kids.

*3. Your brain will explode from the sheer awesomeness. In a good way.*Our line-up includes almost 80 writers, activists and artists over four spaces--like David Henry Hwang, Colorlines publisher Rinku Sen, Rumpus Founder Stephen Elliott, Monica Youn, Monique Truong, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Sergio de la Pava, Ayad Akhtar, Justin Torres, and Madiha Tahir, who's been interviewing drone attack survivors in Pakistan. And a guy dressed as a giant bao.<http://r20.rs6.net/tn.jsp?e=001Ox55p9AClxH0zuTLT7GyBkEgelzY_kH0oZE2ymbEB6r8ssoIK7JNMsX1fxX0OwyGWxlv2Y4PPafUh9Azx0qfLXr3XmZxgjH4tfBWvepH4uRtJsTPRLn3jTWIXacJJ1P_LGEJarlwKxkub0Fbkt78PA==>

1. I'm taking it you already know about the AAWW Dumpling-Making Room.

2. Guggenheim Fellow Mark Nowak will be running a MAKE-A-POEM booth, where you too can write a poem.

3. But if you're shy, emerging poets from Kundiman will be taking poetry requests.

4. X-Men writer Marjorie Liu will teach you how to write a graphic novel.

5. Novelist Alexander Chee will be doing Tarot card readings at the AFTER-PARTY.

6. Which will also include live poster-printing by Felipe Baeza and an interactive food art installation by Alison Kuo.

7. A pop-up gallery of pro-immigrant posters at the YWCA Gallery.

8. Live audio recordings by NPR's Latino USA.

9. Did you know that Chinese Americans made up like 50% of the workforce in many states in the 1800s? David Henry Hwang, Brian Leung, and Karen Shepard discuss the Chinese American 19th Century.

10. A sound installation based on poems by Rabindranath Tagore, curated by ((audience)).

11. Hear about the people who disappear with an artist who's been documenting those abducted by the Gaddafi regime, a Guggenheim poetry fellow, and an activist whose grandparents were interned during WWII.

12. A war-time writing panel with Flavorpill Top 100 NYC Writer Said Sayrafiezadeh, Jadaliyya co-founder Sinan Antoon, AAWW homie Amitava Kumar, and Madiha Tahir, who's been interviewing drone survivors in Pakistan.

13. Make wearable butterfly wings with immigration rights activist Sonia Guinansaca.

14. These peeps will help you interpret Muslim American identity: Suheir Hammad, Sohail Daulatzai, Lorraine Adams, and Ayad Akhtar. The last two both won the Pulitzer. All four are badasses.

15. We commissioned a video artist to make filmic walking tours of NYC Asian American neighborhoods.

16. We're fracturing landscapes with legendary avant-garde poet Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Tamiko Beyer, Janine Oshiro, and Nicola López, whose art has been exhibited at MOMA, The Guggenheim and The Met.

17. The Dim Sum Warriors.

18. Did you know a little-known law requires that the US jail 34,000 immigrants a day? Rinku Sen and Jon Pineda discuss.

19. Is the City apocalyptic or utopian? Answered by Manil Suri, Jess Row, Youmna Chlala, and Tash Aw, the biggest writer of Malaysia.

20. Discover love with a gay manga artist, a biracial stoner, a gay desi, and a National Book Award finalist in poetry.

Beginner's Mind was begun in the middle of May, 2013, with the idea of a monthly blog of my written and photographed monologues on and with the land near where I live. The months have evolved into seasons, and the blog format---with its links to other blogs--is now only the Introduction:
http://www.cddc.vt.edu/host/weishaus/Begin/Intro.htm

I've thought a lot about the subtitle, finally settling on "Toward an Ecohumanities," as what I want to explore are possible, or impossible, human relationships with the nonhuman. This is because these relationships are essential to our species surviving in, and beyond, this century. Of course, mine is just one contribution in a vast network of explorations and creativities, but I hope that within the constriction of its landscape may be glimpsed a few paths that inspire some viable possibilities.

Beginner's Mind is uploaded all during the course of its writing and revisions. Then a notice, such as this one, is sent at the end of each season. Since the last notice, it has been redesigned, partly revised, and Summer 2013 has been completed: http://www.cddc.vt.edu/host/weishaus/Begin/Summer%202013.htm

Feedback is always appreciated.

Happy Autumn!

Lew Welch's "Ring of Bone: Collected Poems," a book that I think, since we are quickly moving into an interconnected wealth of cultures, is important to Global Literary History. This is because, I suggest, Welch's life and work is representative of the kind of hard-won accomplishment in the arts that we are unfortunately losing to the valorization of instant, and shallow, celebrity. Also, because of his intimate relationship with the natural world, it is instructive to the field of ecopoetics: http://www.cddc.vt.edu/host/weishaus/Poetica/blog-16.htm

As always, feedback is welcome.

Warm Regards,
Joel

Amiri Baraka on Charles Olson & Sun Ra - If you happen to be in Gloucester October 19th!
Fri 4 Oct 2013

Fourth Annual Charles Olson Lecture
October 19, 2013 Cape Ann Museum 1:00 Call for reservations – 978- [redacted]
Introduction by Ammiel Alcalay

Amiri Baraka will speak generally on Charles Olson's effect on him as poet & specifically from an essay called "Charles Olson & Sun Ra: A Note on Being Out "

“I leave space open as the term should be, to fill what you want to fill it with.”

Sun Ra - Space is the Place.

"My shift is that I take it the present is prologue, not the past. The instant, therefore, is its own interpretation, as a dream is, and any action - a poem, for example. Down with causation . . . And yrself: you, as the only reader and mover of the instant. You, the cause. No drag allowed, on either. Get on with it."

Charles Olson - The Present is Prologue

March

The damn directions--the fact of hills, curves, can't quite be mapped. In the blackest minutes I grow more sterile while everyone else is starting to wake up, shaking branches, bugs stick. If this were a situation with a hostage the police would be pointing their guns giving the motion calm down without the action to accompany it. There is a wild rose called lady banks which opens colors patchy but explicit on the fences around.

I woke up to a mirror. It was already March, things were in bloom, I could hear them. I wanted their motion to be bidirectional to me just like when someone says happy birthday to me my instinct is to always want it to be bidirectional, to say, Happy birthday to you too!

My professor would call me one of the late bloomers and not because of my small boobs because making progress in a human takes longer than a season. Sometimes producing the overall sound of excitement involves periods of bootless duty to the idea of mortality.

I'll stop there and describe my reflection. Wake up, it says.

Pre-order push for SUPPLE SCIENCE
Mon 7 Oct 2013

Dear friends and supporters of ON Contemporary Practice,

As you know, Michael Cross and I are currently in the process of re-launching ON, both as an online journal and a perfect-bound monograph series. We are very excited that next month Robert Kocik's long-awaited prose collection, Supple Science: a Robert Kocik Primer, will be available for purchase. To read more about the book, which also features essays by Silvia Federici, Madeline Gins, Rob Halpern, Andrew Levy, Eleni Stecopoulos and myself, please visit ON's website - http://cts.vresp.com/c/?YourCompanyName/2bde7156b1/126f8552d1/80fec0b273 .

Not yet having had the time or wherewithal to pursue fundraising for the Monograph Series--a necessary endeavor for most any press large or small nowadays--we hope to support the first batch of Supple Science via pre-order. These are purchases made well in advance of the book becoming officially available. With this particular pre-order, you will receive a special insert with an original drawing by Kocik.

By this Friday, October 11th, we would like to have no less than 90 additional pre-orders. If you intend to purchase the book, we would appreciate your support at this moment, before we make our final push towards printing. You can find a link to the pre-order form here - http://cts.vresp.com/c/?YourCompanyName/2bde7156b1/126f8552d1/3da8cd0510/cmd=_flow&SESSION=kt9TLLHUyHn-7U7bUJguChWqXk3CqGAVlFI-ZT8VAURNFU4CVSvMpAGlfDe&dispatch=50a222a57771920b6a3d7b606239e4d529b525e0b7e69bf0224adecfb0124e9b61f737ba21b08198c3bf94e94910b985bd4617670ff63b3b .

For those who have already pre-ordered, THANK YOU SO MUCH! And for those considering pre-ordering, we would be so appreciative if you would take the time to support the book and the press as it attempts to regain momentum.

In solidarity and with immense gratitude,

Thom Donovan

Megan Burns 10/9, Wednesday, 1:30. Attend at Pace University or online.

Mon 7 Oct 2013

Please join us at Pace University, Pleasantville. Megan Burns reads from her new book Sound and Basin. You can attend this event online or on the Pace campus.

Megan Burns reads from New Orleans, and we broadcast through Blackboard Collaborate in Butcher Suite of Kessel Student Center. The hyperlink for attending the event is listed below Megan's bio.

Megan Burns is the publisher at Trembling Pillow Press (tremblingpillowpress.com) and edits the poetry magazine, Solid Quarter (solidquarter.blogspot.com). She has been most recently published in Jacket Magazine, Callaloo, New Laurel Review, Trickhouse, and the Big Bridge New Orleans Anthology. Her poetry and prose reviews have been published in Tarpaulin Sky, Gently Read Lit, Big Bridge, and Rain Taxi. She has two books Memorial + Sight Lines (2008) and Sound and Basin (2013) published by Lavender Ink. She has two recent chapbooks: irrational knowledge (Fell Swoop press, 2012) and a city/ bottle boned (Dancing Girl Press, 2012). Her chapbook Dollbaby was just released from Horseless Press.

For Blackboard Collaborate:

1. Check system requirements here: http://support.blackboardcollaborate.com/ics/support/default.asp?deptIDf36&task=knowledge&questionID73

(I recommend Firefox or Safari over Chrome. It's checking for latest Java download).

2. Free demos if you don't just want to dive in:

new from above/ground press: An Overture in the Key of F, by Carrie Olivia Adams

An Overture in the Key of F Carrie Olivia Adams
$4

To hold in trust. It is intimate and financial. Between fidelity and fudicial is a nervous, fussy movement of your hands and a coined error. Field quickly becomes battle, which is not something my mother told me when we moved to the farm. The visible space, the space on which something is drawn or projected, the place where this information goes. Your fidgeting mitt, youre ready to field it.

A day of maneuvers and a day of pleasure. This demon, addict, excessive fiend. Given to fighting, to flame. Once I was fifteen, like all of you, a similar coupling between tractor and trail, burdensome trifle, an often repetitive pattern, a series of movements in name only.

Made incandescent by the passage of an electrical currentto feed, satiate, make out, make wholeto fill those shoes, I cannot go back. On the course, by the wind, the fillip of your thumb. Filmland and filmdom, both gauzy in my sleep, corrupts.

OT: On Boogcity.com/David Bowie's Ziggy Stardust Album Live by NYC Musicians
Thu 10 Oct 2013

Hey everyone,

In 2008, as part of our Boog City's Classic Albums Live series, we held our second You Make the Call night, where past classic album performers selected what albums we'd perform next. The two top vote getters were David Bowie, The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders of Mars and Radiohead, OK Computer.

Here is Ziggy Stardust performed live by:

—The Passenger Pigeons
—So L'il
—Randi Russo
—The Rabbits
—Todd Carlstrom and The Clamour

To hear their take, visit:

http://www.boogcity.com/audio/bowie_ziggy.pdf

We'll have OK Computer up shortly.

And to hear Lou Reed's New York album performed live at Sidewalk Cafe a few months later, visit:

http://www.boogcity.com/audio/lou%20reed,%20new%20york/lou_reed_ny.pdf

NOCTUARY
Fri 11 Oct 2013

RAYMOND DEANE'S NOCTUARY

On 22 September 2013, “NOCTUARY,” by the Irish poet, novelist, and composer Raymond Deane, had its world premiere at the Hugh Lane Gallery in Dublin, Ireland. “NOCTUARY” is a 45 minute cycle of 12 pieces for piano, etc., commissioned by Hugh Tinney with funds from the Arts Council of Ireland/An

http://www.raymonddeane.com

Now an effort is being made for ordinary people, grassroots people, rank-and-file people, to fund a CD recording of this work through FUNDIT.IE...

http://www.fundit.ie/project/noctuary-deanetinney-piano-music-cd

https://www.facebook.com/noctuary1

A NOCTUARY is a nighttime diary, and these pieces by Raymond Deane evoke many and various images of the night, including Minerva's owl (which “takes flight as twilight falls”), the Versipel (a creature that turns its skin inside out, like a werewolf), the Mezzotint (from a famous ghost story by M.R. James), the “hitherandthithering waters of night” from James Joyce's Finnegans Wake, and the “night-blooming Cereus” (a cactus that supposedly flowers on only one night of the year).

Raymond Deane is the DEAN of living (and innovative) Irish composers today. In January of this year he turned 60 and a number of events celebrating this occasion have taken place (or are still to take place) throughout Ireland, including concerts, seminars, and the premiere of his opera “The Alma Fetish” in Dublin's National Concert Hall.

http://www.cmc.ie/composers/composer.cfm?composerID=30

http://www.dit.ie/conservatory/events/archive2013/musicofraymonddeane

If you would like to help support this world premiere CD recording of “NOCTUARY” by Raymond Deane, please do so at ...

http://www.fundit.ie/project/noctuary-deanetinney-piano-music-cd

This fund-raising effort now seeks to go BEYOND the minimum !!

Thank you.

Feb./New BoogFest, Jan./Boog Reader
Mon 14 Oct 2013

Hi all,

I wanted to announce to everyone a mid-term festival to go along with our annual Welcome to Boog City festival.

Since this event follows this past August's 7th annual Welcome to Boog City Festival, we're calling it

Welcome to Boog City 7.5

7.5 Hours of Poetry and Music, over Presidents' Day Weekend

Sun. Feb. 16, 2014, 12:00 p.m.-4:00 p.m.
Mon. Feb. 17, 2014, 12:00 p.m.-3:30 p.m.

The event will feature poetry, music, political talks, and poets theater.

And one month earlier, come out for—

Readings from The Portable Boog Reader 7: NYC and Pittsburgh

Sun. Jan. 19, 2014, 1:00 p.m.-3:00 p.m.

This edition will be our biggest Portable Boog Reader yet, and include full tabloid pages of work from 20 NYC and 10 Pittsburgh poets, the equivalent of a 120-page 6" x 9" anthology.

The PBR7 editors are:

NYC: Laura Henriksen, Amy King, Geoffrey Olsen, Nicole Peyrafitte, Angela Veronica Wong, and me, and Pittsburgh: Margaret Bashaar and Lauren Russell.

Both of these events will take part at Prospect Heights, Brooklyn's one and only

Unnameable Books
600 Vanderbilt Ave.

Directions: 2, 3 to Grand Army Plaza,
C to Clinton-Washington avenues, Q to 7th Ave.
Venue is bet. Prospect Pl./St. Marks Ave.

Hope this finds you all well.

as ever,
David

Poetica critique: Margaret Chula's "Just This."

Mon 14 Oct 2013

This 17th Poetica critique is of Margaret Chula's "Just This," a collection of tanka poems.

Basically, tanka is the modern name for waka, a form of writing that stems back to Japan's Heian Period ([redacted]). As opposed to haiku, usually written in three lines (in Japanese, they are in one line), tanka has five lines.

Chula spent 12 years in Japan studying various Japanese arts. Her first book, "Grinding My Ink," a collection of haiku, won the 1992 Haiku Society of America's Merit Award.

"Just This" her seventh book, is a masterful work in this constricted format.

Book party & reading October 27
Mon 14 Oct 2013

Coming up on Sunday, October 27th Page Poetry Parlor! 3pm-6pm!

Book Launch & Reception: EYE OF WITNESS: A JEROME ROTHENBERG READER
Sunday, October 27 at 3:00pm in EDT

In addition to which Diane Rothenberg and I will be in New York again for most of the stretch from October 20 through November 9, staying as before at the Lee Ann Brown and Tony Torn residence at 435 West 22nd Street in Chelsea. Times away from New York are for a reading/launch at Tufts University on October 24, a "Transatlantic Poetry Summit" (Spanish & English conference & readings) also at Tufts on October 25, and two readings/talks in Ottawa (University of Ottawa November 4 at 4:00 p.m. and A B Series November 5 at 8:00 p.m.). During that time we'll be reachable, as always, at this email address and on our cell phone numbers: [redacted] and [redacted].

In the hopes of seeing some of you then,
& with warm embraces,

JERRY and DIANE

P.S. Eye of Witness is a 600 page reader of my work in a mix of forms & genres - poems, essays & commentaries, plays & performances, letters, visuals - arranged in a format similar to anthologies of mine like Technicians of the Sacred and Poems for the Millennium. So the party & reading will cover a range of works, but the event will be, above all, a chance to meet with friends and help us celebrate the occasion.

Rauan Klassnik: The Continental Review

Fri 18 Oct 2013

Dear Everybody,

I'm excited to unveil a leaked video of Rauan Klassnik taking a bath. The footage includes erotic toe shots, poems once lodged now dripping from a pink wig, and huge, excessive blown bubbles filled with cow bones and baseball cap sweat; a burial undone:

https://vimeo.com/77223793

Please feel free to spread this video like Gucci's Bird Flu (embed it, link to it, whatever). If your uncle doesn't care for poetry or YouTube, he will now. Any complaints from clergy or networks or hiring committees can be addressed directly to Rauan at:[redacted]

Please help to keep The Continental Review forever circulating!

Best,

Lee Ann Brown http://epc.buffalo.edu/authors/brown/ Lee Ann Brown has embarked upon writing a long work N.C. ode, the first two books of which are In the Laurels, Caught (Fence Modern Poets Series) and Crowns of Charlotte (Carolina Wren). Past books include Polyverse, The Sleep That Changed Everything, and a recent artists book collaboration with Karen Randall, Bagatelles for Cornell (Propolis Press). Brown teaches at St. John's University, edits Tender Buttons press and multiplies her time between NYC where she hosts The Page Poetry Parlor in her living room, and N.C., where she started The French Broad Institute (of Time & the River) which she envisions to be a Poetry Project of the South.

Cool Papa Bell http://www.cpbband.com/ Cool Papa Bell is a New York City-based band comprised of: Stan Pyrzanowski, lead/backing vocals and guitar; Jennifer L, lead/backing vocals; Brian "Brain" Parkhill bass; and Josh Fleischmann, drums. The group was founded in 2008 by Stan and Brian. CPB has an eclectic sound, with rock, blues, soul, funk, Americana, and ska influences. In addition to performing powerful, sometimes political and broken-hearted original songs, they also cover varied artists such as Dolly Parton, Prince, John Hiatt, Stevie Wonder, Jimi Hendrix, Neil Young, Etta James, Bob Dylan, Van Morrison, and Concrete Blonde, among others. Cool Papa Bell will rock you, captivate you and leave you wanting more.

The band can be seen performing around NYC at venues such as Rockwood Music Hall, Arlene's Grocery, Sidewalk Cafe, American Trash, and The Bowery Electric. Cool Papa Bell plans to release their full-length debut album in fall 2013.

Robert Gibbons Three Rooms Press just released Robert Gibbons' first poetry collection, Close to the Tree. Gibbons recently was produced on the CD Brain Ampin through Hydrogen Jukebox, a poetry series produced through The Cornelia Street Café. He has done poetic works in after school programs, drama camps, and theater programs in Florida; Washington, D.C.; and New York City. He hopes to continue searching to find new ways to create work and provide new venues to the children he serves.

Pierre Joris http://www.pierrejoris.com/blog/ Pierre Joris is a poet, translator, essayist, and anthologist who has published more than 50 books, most recently, Meditations on the Stations of Mansur al-Hallaj (poems) from Chax Press and The University of California Book of North African Literature (volume 4 in the Poems for the Millennium series), coedited with Habib Tengour. Exile is My Trade: A Habib Tengour Reader and Pierre Joris: Cartographies of the In-between, edited by Peter Cockelbergh, came out in 2012. Forthcoming are Barzakh—Poems 2000-2012 (Black Widow Press) and Breathturn into Timestead: The Collected Later Poetry of Paul Celan. (Farrar, Straus and Giroux).

Tanya Olson http://boyishly-tanya.blogspot.com/?m=1 Tanya Olson teaches at Vance-Granville Community College. Her first book, Boyishly, will be published by YesYes Books shortly. Her work has been published in Bad Subjects, Beloit Poetry Review, Boston Review, Elysian Fields, Fanzine, and Southword (IRL). In 2010, she won a Discovery/Boston Review prize and was named a 2011 Lambda Fellow by the Lambda Literary Foundation. She helps coordinate Durham's Third Friday, is a member of the Black Socks poetry group, and serves on the board of Carolina Wren Press.

Joe Pan http://joepan.org/ Joe Pan's debut collection of poetry, Autobiomythography & Gallery, was named Best First Book of the Year by Coldfront Magazine. He grew up along the Space Coast of Florida, attended the Iowa Writers' Workshop, and serves as the poetry editor of Hyperallergic. His poetry has appeared in such places as Boston Review, Denver Quarterly, and H_ngm_n, fiction in Cimarron Review and Glimmer Train, and nonfiction in The New York Times. He is the founder and managing editor of Brooklyn Arts Press, an independent publishing house.

Douglas Rothschild http://www.fauxpress.com/e/rothschild/ Douglas Rothschild was born under a potato leaf scrub toe, and comes to us direct from Germany and ready to deliver the most indirect and fundamentally unsound conceptual writing which you have encountered in many years.

Amish Trivedi http://www.amishtrivedi.com/ Amish Trivedi's poems have been in Jacket2, Mandorla, OmniVerse, and Word For/Word. He has no set location at the moment, though he is teaching the fall 2013 semester at Roger Williams University in Bristol, R.I.

Kevin Varrone http://www.brooklynrail.org/2012/04/poetry/from-box-score-an-autobiography Kevin Varrone's most recent publi-cation is Eephus (Little Red Leaves Textile Series). His current project, box score: an autobiography, is forthcoming as a set of literary baseball cards from Little Red Leaves Textile Series and is out as an iPhone and iPad app. His previous publications include Passyunk Lost (Ugly Duckling Presse), id est (Instance Press), and the chapbook g-point Almanac: 6.21-9.21 (ixnay press) all part of g-point Almanac, a four-part project loosely based on Almanacs and Books of Days. He grew up in Flushing, Queens and now lives outside Philadelphia with his family.

Sharon Dolin has been awarded the distinguished 2013 Witter Bynner Fellowship from the Library of Congress, selected by current Poet Laureate of the U.S., Natasha Trethewey. She is the author of five books of poetry, most recently, Whirlwind (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2012) and Burn and Dodge (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2008), winner of the AWP Donald Hall Prize in Poetry. In addition, she has published five chapbooks and her poems have appeared in over 100 magazines including: Barrow Street, Denver Quarterly, The Georgia Review, Jacket, The Kenyon Review, New American Writing, and The New Republic. She has been Writer-in-Residence at Eugene Lang College, The New School for Liberal Arts and a Visiting Professor of Creative Writing at Hofstra University. She has also taught at New York University, The Cooper Union, and Poets House. She currently teaches poetry workshops at the Unterberg Poetry Center of the 92nd Street Y and directs the Center for Book Arts Annual Letterpress Poetry Chapbook Competition in New York City. For 2013-14, Dolin is a Drisha Arts Fellow.

Victoria Redel is the author of three books of poetry and three books of fiction with a new collection of stories, Make Me Do Things, forthcoming in fall 2013. Her most recent novel, The Border of Truth (Counterpoint 2007), weaves the situation of refugees and a daughter's awakening into the history and secrets of her father's survival and loss. Loverboy (2001, Graywolf/2002, Harcourt), was awarded the 2001 S. Mariella Gable Novel Award and the 2002 Forward Silver Literary Fiction Prize and was chosen in 2001 as a Los Angeles Times Best Book. Loverboy was adapted for a feature film directed by Kevin Bacon. Swoon (2003, University of Chicago Press), and was a finalist for the James Laughlin Award. Redel's fiction, poetry, and essays have appeared in numerous magazines and journals including Granta.com, Harvard Review, The Quarterly, The Literarian, The New York Times, The L.A. Times, O the Oprah magazine, Elle, Bomb, More, and NOON. Redel is on the faculty of Sarah Lawrence College.

Salita Bryant is an Assistant Professor of English at Lehman College. In 2006, Bryant was awarded a year-long Starworks Fellowship to teach creative writing to hospitalized children in New York City. Her poem, "First Spring in New York," won the Spoon River Poetry Review Editors' Prize and was nominated for a Pushcart Prize in 2005. She also won Iron Horse Literary Review's 2005 Discovered Voices Award and was a finalist for the 2005 Nimrod/Hardman Pablo Neruda Prize in Poetry.

Candice Reffe's poems have been published in Agni, Crazy Horse, Harvard Review, Ploughshares, The Threepenny Review, and elsewhere. She was twice fellow at the Fine Arts Work Center in Provincetown. She lives in Western Massachusetts and works in New York City at the fashion company Eileen Fisher.

David Abel & Dennis Phillips in Los Angeles

Sun 20 Oct 2013

Please join us on the night of Wednesday, October 23rd, for a reading by poets David Abel and Dennis Phillips, at the newly opened Tif Sigfrids Gallery in Hollywood.

David Abel is an editor and teacher in Portland, Oregon, where he is the proprietor of Passages Bookshop. His recent publications include Float (Chax Press, 2012), Tether (Bare Bone Books, 2011), and Black Valentine (Chax Press, 2006).

Dennis Phillips is an editor and teacher in Los Angeles, where he has been core faculty at the Art Center College of Design since the late 1970s. His recent publications include Navigation: Selected Poems 1985-2010 (Otis Books/Seismicity Editions, 2010), Sophia's Lament (Ninja Press, 2012), Mapping Stone (Post Media Books + Otis Books/Seismicity Editions, 2013), and Measures (Talisman House, 2013).

The gallery is located at 1507 Wilcox Ave. Doors will open at 8 p.m.; reading will begin by 8:30. Convenient parking is located on the street, as well as in relatively inexpensive ($3-$5) pay lots at the intersection of Selma and Cahuenga and elsewhere nearby. Reading is free, and drinks will be served.

This will be the first installment of an occasional reading series at the gallery, hosted by Robert Dewhurst.

Hope to see you there!

Class on Robert Zend, anyone?

Mon 21 Oct 2013

Hi, everybody. Does anyone know of a professor teaching a course involving avant-garde poetry or fiction, concrete poetry, or immigrant writers, who might be interested in a guest lecture on the works of Robert Zend? I just gave a seminar (with lots of images and a couple of videos) at the University at Buffalo's Poetry Collection that was well-received, and I'd love to find other venues for such a talk.

If interested, please backchannel: [redacted]

Many thanks.

Cheers!

Tues. Oct. 29: What Where Series: Readings by Michael du Plessis, J'Lyn Chapman, and Mark Amerika

Mon 21 Oct 2013

On behalf of the Jack Kerouac School, I am excited to announce our final What Where Series of the semester. We hope to see you there!

What Where Series: Readings by Michael du Plessis, J'Lyn Chapman, and Mark Amerika
Tuesday, October 29, 2013
7:30 p.m.
Performing Arts Center (PAC), Naropa University-Entrance through east side of PAC, alongside Naropa Green

This event is free and open to the public.

Michael du Plessis teaches Comparative Literature at USC and is the author of The Memoirs of JonbBenet by Kathy Acker, the chapbook Songs Dead Soldiers Sing, and, as Vanessa Place, as part of Place's "Factory" series, the chapbook, Thank You for Reading.

J'Lyn Chapman's essays and prose poems have been published in Conjunctions, Fence, Sentence, and American Letters & Commentary, among other journals. Calamari Press published the chapbook, Bear Stories. An essay derived from her doctoral dissertation on W.G. Sebald is forthcoming in a collection called The Language of Images. She is Visiting Instructor in the Jack Kerouac School at Naropa University in Boulder, Colorado and edits the online poetics journal Something on Paper.

Mark Amerika's work has been exhibited internationally at venues such as the Whitney Biennial of American Art, the Denver Art Museum, the Institute of Contemporary Arts in London, and the Walker Art Center. In 2009-2010, The National Museum of Contemporary Art in Athens, Greece, hosted Amerika's comprehensive retrospective exhibition entitled UNREALTIME. He is the author of many books including remixthebook (University of Minnesota Press, 2011 -- remixthebook.com) and his collection of artist writings entitled META/DATA: A Digital Poetics (The MIT Press, 2007). His latest art work, Museum of Glitch Aesthetics [glitchmuseum.com], was commissioned by the Abandon Normal Devices Festival in conjunction with the London 2012 Olympics. Amerika is a Professor of Art and Art History at the University of Colorado at Boulder and Principal Research Fellow in the Faculty of Humanities and Social Science at La Trobe University. More information can found at his website, markamerika.com and at his twitter feed @markamerika

Naropa University welcomes participants with disabilities. Please contact Ariella Ruth at [redacted]<mailto:[redacted]> or [redacted] to inquire about accessibility and discuss disability accommodations needed to participate fully in this event.

Tue 22 Oct 2013

Drunken Boat [http://www.drunkenboat.com], one of the world's oldest electronic journals of the arts and the winner of a South by Southwest Web Award, is looking for a new Managing Editor. We have a fabulous staff in place and very clear directions on how to proceed. What we are looking for is someone who is dedicated, meticulous to detail, capable of working collaboratively with many people and helping us keep our editorial deadlines. The position offers the possibility of a modest stipend and we need at least a one-year commitment from someone. The Managing Editor would also have interns to help him/her out with our publishing goals. Applicants with familiarity with working online and working in publishing are preferred. This is a great opportunity to be involved in an independent publisher that publishes books and a highly-acclaimed journal and that reaches over a hundred thousand unique visitors annually worldwide. If you are interested, please send a short cover letter and CV to [[redacted]].

97. Jane Nakagawa
FLUX by Jane Joritz-Nakagawa
Thu 24 Oct 2013

My poetry book, FLUX, went officially on sale this week at Amazon.com.

From the back cover:

Words conflate and peel apart with equal ease in Jane Joritz-Nakagawa's poetry. Elliptical but charged by that desire to traverse absences in search of deeper truths, the language in FLUX opens and closes like a fist -- full of haiku-esque moments, fragmented to epigrammatic revelations, tensions, and lyrical, poignant releases.

-- CYRIL WONG

Give moving a chance! Perhaps part Acker, perhaps part Ono, FLUX features language agent Joritz-Nakagawa as she writes her way out of a self-torn, flower-torn, money-torn zone. . .

-- MICHAEL FARRELL

In Jane Joritz-Nakagawa's FLUX, we encounter a poetic temperament equally at home in the openness of the personal lyric and the laser-sharp probe of social commentary. In her dexterous handling of lineation and compression, the poems oscillateâ€•challenging us to reconsider just about everything we hold dear. Some things, as she says, cannot be translated; yet, with the help of these poems, we are better prepared for what the strange world offers us.

-- JENNIFER WALLACE

About incidental music (2010) and notational (2011):
. . . these collections show a poet in full control of her powers and pushing the boundaries of poetry, a fearless and challenging writer in the mode of Lyn Hejinian, Alice Notley, and Susan Howe.
--STEVE FINBOW, The Japan Times

I'd like to thank Geoffrey Gatza and BlazeVOX, as well as Cyril Wong, Michael Farrell, Jennifer Wallace, Steve Finbow, and Joanne G. Yoshida for cover art, as well as Peter Ganick, Calvin Pennix, Mark Kuniya, and also Altered Scale, The Argotist Online, BathHouse, Big Bridge, Certain Circuits, Counterexample Poetics, Cricket Online Review, Eccolinguistics, Entanglements: New Ecopoetry, Fieralingue's, Four W, Haven, Mid-June, Momoware, On Barcelona, Otoliths journal, quarter after journal, Quarterly Literary Review Singapore, Truck, Yew, and Yomimono and the committee that selected portions of FLUX for the Booranga Prize.

If anybody out there will be in Japan next spring, there will be a multilingual group poetry reading in central Tokyo on March 15, 2014. You can write me offlist for details.

--Jane Joritz-Nakagawa (from Nagano, Japan)
Â
Jane Joritz-Nakagawa's newest poetry book, "FLUX", is now on sale at Amazon.com. Â Her poetry chapbook, "wild black lake," is forthcoming in 2014.

above/ground press author Fenn Stewart's An OK Organ Man (2012) on the bpNichol 2013 chapbook award shortlist!

Thu 24 Oct 2013

Congratulations to Toronto poet Fenn Stewart, whose 2012 chapbook An OK Organ Man (copies are still available) is on the 2013 bpNichol Chapbook Award shortlist!

http://aboveground press.blogspot.ca/2012/03/new-from-aboveground-press-ok-organ-man.html

This is above/ground press' second appearance on the shortlist, after two titles appeared on last year's list. Nice, also, to also see above/ground press authors Gil McElroy and Shannon Maguire on the list for other titles, and even one of our authors as a judge! (the press appears to be everywhere these days) Congratulations to the entire shortlist!

The shortlisted titles are:

thirteen poems for releasing love by joanne thorwaldson (leaf press)

An OK Organ Man by Fenn Stewart (above/ground)

Ordinary Time: The Merton Lake Propers by Gil McElroy (baseline press)

fruit machine by Shannon Maguire (Ferno House)

21st century monsters by ryan fitzpatrick (Red Nettle Press)

naturally speaking by Sandra Alland (espresso [paperplates press])

The winner will be announced at 2PM on Saturday 16 November 2013 at the Indie Literary Market, Tranzac Club, Toronto. A cheque for $2,000 goes to the winning poet and $500 to the winning publisher. Donors for the prizes include Anonymous ($2,000 prize), Jim Smith and Brian Dedora ($500 prize).

Judges this year are Sandra Ridley (Ottawa) & kevin mcpherson eckhoff (Armstrong, BC), who received 90 chapbooks from which they made this year's shortlist selection.

*Announcing *Shit Valley
Sat 26 Oct 2013

We have been asked to share the following announcement with the Poetics list.

* * *

Dear Citizens:

Please subscribe to a new series of poetry pamphlets, published by SHIT VALLEY, a new press collective out of Cambridge that has no budget and is devoted to publishing with urgency, thrift, and careful ease. Here is what we do. We make photocopied, large-format pamphlets, between 32 and 36 pages, in editions of unspeakable quantity, with font-sizes between 14 and 20 if possible, or shit come to think of it even larger, I mean we have used some seriously large-ass font-sizes, ahem, and proceeds go into printing more books.

A subscription for £8, €16, or $24 (postage include) will get you four pamphlets by: Christina Chalmers, John DeWitt, Corina Copp, and Ed Luker. The Chalmers is printed up and ready to distribute now; the others can be expected before or around the turn of the new year.

Go to: http://shitvalley.tumblr.com/

• Christina Chalmers' Work Songs is a collection of twelve poems and sequences, including the whole of "hell, realism", which appeared in the latest Claudius App. It is available now as a single purchase, for £2.50, €5, or $8. (see website)

• John DeWitt's SV will be his second book under his own name, and includes several long poems plus translations of a sequence by Uruguyan poet Idea Vilariño (1920-2009).

• Corina Copp's SV will be two long poems, "Tell That to the Marines" and "Engulfs".

• Ed Luker's *It's not you it's me. It's not you it's the cops. *collects what appear to be all of his poems to date, including the legendary pre-crisis fragment, "UNPRIG (Aufgegeben)".

Review of The Whole Island: Six Decades of Cuban Poetry

Neo-baroque? Conversationalism? The Padilla Affair? Echoes of Baudelaire and Whitman? Before reading The Whole Island, I knew almost nothing about Cuban poetry.

Now I understand something of its rich and complex history. And I know which Cuban poets I want to read more of.

I review Mark Weiss's anthology here:

http://rogueembryo.com/2013/09/16/the-whole-island-six-decades-of-cuban-poetry/

Cheers!

Performance of Poetic Fictions, Boog City Poets' Theater Aug. 4th 2013
Sun 27 Oct 2013

Here's a link to the Youtube rendition of Poetic Fictions at the Sidewalk Cafe the night of Sunday, Aug. 4th, 2013. The saintly David Kirschenbaum did the cinematography, poet Robert Thompson was the moderator, poet Joe Eliot did a great Philip Whalen, the poet/roustabout Magnus Magnus was the vatic Lew Welch and Mark Tobin of Unnameable Books played a stand-up Gary Snyder. I stepped in as my perpetually jet-lagged self.

Variations of the text of Poetic Fictions can be found in TWO, a chapbook from The KNIVESFORKSANDSPOONSPRESS, UK, and in Golden Handcuffs Review No. 15. Many thanks to everyone who made this happen--Boog City's Dave Kirschenbaum,The Sidewalk Cafe, The Hotel Pennsylvania, the Tic-Tock 24 hour diner, the Empire State Building at 3 a.m., Madison Square Garden at 3 a.m., Robert Thompson and Joe Eliot at 3 a.m., and peace to the shade of Lew Welch who shook my world at 19 when he said that writing is speech, David Meltzer who brought that information to me in his great interview in his great anthology of San Fran poets, Philip Whalen's shadow walking in spectral shoes with Taoist holes pecked in them by Zen birds, and Gary Snyder young and old and in-between.

Tomorrow! Tues. Oct. 29: What Where Series: Readings by Michael du Plessis, J'Lyn Chapman, and Mark Amerika
Mon 28 Oct 2013

On behalf of the Jack Kerouac School, I am excited to announce our final What Where Series of the semester taking place tomorrow, October 29. We hope to see you there!

What Where Series: Readings by Michael du Plessis, J'Lyn Chapman, and Mark Amerika
Tuesday, October 29, 2013
7:30 p.m.
Performing Arts Center (PAC), Naropa University-Entrance through east side of PAC, alongside Naropa Green

This event is free and open to the public.

Michael du Plessis teaches Comparative Literature at USC and is the author of The Memoirs of JonbBenet by Kathy Acker, the chapbook Songs Dead Soldiers Sing, and, as Vanessa Place, as part of Place's "Factory" series, the chapbook, Thank You for Reading.

J'Lyn Chapman's essays and prose poems have been published in Conjunctions, Fence, Sentence, and American Letters & Commentary, among other journals. Calamari Press published the chapbook, Bear Stories. An essay derived from her doctoral dissertation on W.G. Sebald is forthcoming in a collection called The Language of Images. She is Visiting Instructor in the Jack Kerouac School at Naropa University in Boulder, Colorado and edits the online poetics journal Something on Paper.

Mark Amerika's work has been exhibited internationally at venues such as the Whitney Biennial of American Art, the Denver Art Museum, the Institute of Contemporary Arts in London, and the Walker Art Center. In 2009-2010, The National Museum of Contemporary Art in Athens, Greece, hosted Amerika's comprehensive retrospective exhibition entitled UNREALTIME. He is the author of many books including remixthebook (University of Minnesota Press, 2011 -- remixthebook.com) and his collection of artist writings entitled META/DATA: A Digital Poetics (The MIT Press, 2007). His latest art work, Museum of Glitch Aesthetics [glitchmuseum.com], was commissioned by the Abandon Normal Devices Festival in conjunction with the London 2012 Olympics. Amerika is a Professor of Art and Art History at the University of Colorado at Boulder and Principal Research Fellow in the Faculty of Humanities and Social Science at La Trobe University. More information can found at his website, markamerika.com and at his twitter feed @markamerika

Naropa University welcomes participants with disabilities. Please contact Ariella Ruth at [redacted]<mailto:[redacted]> or [redacted] to inquire about accessibility and discuss disability accommodations needed to participate fully in this event.

Poet as Radio: Camille Roy on November 3
Tue 29 Oct 2013

This Sunday, November 3, Camille Roy joins us live in the studio and will read from and discuss her recent collection, Sherwood Forest (Futurepoem). Join us at 11:30am-12:30pm PT, or listen live next week on our blog/podcast.

Camille Roy is a writer and performer of fiction, poetry, and plays. Her book, Sherwood Forest, a collection of poems and prose, is recently out from Futurepoem. She co-edited Biting The Error: Writers Explore Narrative, a book of essays by writers on their own experimental practices (CoachHouse). Her books include Cheap Speech, a play, from Leroy, and Craquer, a fictional autobiography from 2nd Story Books, as well as Swarm (two novellas, Black Star Series). Earlier books include The Rosy Medallions (poetry and prose, from Kelsey St Press) and Cold Heaven (plays, from Leslie Scalapino's O Books). Her writing has appeared in numerous anthologies, including The Book of Practical Pussies (poems with art by Michelle Rollman, from Krupskaya Press with Tender Buttons Press), Moving Borders: Three Decades of Innovative Writing by Women (Talisman House), and The New Fuck You: Adventures in Lesbian Reading (Semiotexte). She was a founding editor of the online journal Narrativity (http://www.sfsu.edu/~poetry/narrativity). Roy has taught creative writing in multiple genres and forms at several institutions, including San Francisco State University, California State University SummerArts, and Naropa.

The Compleat Purge by Trisha Low

Kenning Editions <http://www.kenningeditions.com> is proud to announce the publication of /The Compleat Purge/, by Trisha Low. ISBN: 9780984647552 (2013) $15.95 in paperback and somewhat less as an ebook. Through November 1st, the paperback book is on sale for $12.00 when you order directly from the press <http://www.kenningeditions.com/shop/the-compleat-purge/>.

Trisha Low is just another feminist, confessional writer trying to find a good way to deal with all her literary dads. She siphons the remix culture of social media into the binge and purge cycle of an engrossing read, with the emphasis on gross. She reads the diaries of teenage girls, their blog comments and love letters; she dresses like one in performance then throws up fake blood on herself. She once surveyed the reactions of Catholic fathers to scripted confessionals she made regarding rough sex with men, secretly recorded the conversations, and transcribed the tapes. The results were anthologized by a major university press. Her first book, THE COMPLEAT PURGE, consists of the last will and testament of one Trisha Low, who seems to commit suicide annually; the legal documents accumulate into a coming of age story. It goes on to chronicle the sexual fantasies of indie rock fangirls, who may or may not be exorcising the effects of abuse through their blithe avatars (the guy from The Strokes, etc.). Then Trisha Low finds herself trapped in an 18th century romance novel in the most punishing way, but for whom---we're not really sure. "How is Poetry complicit in the urge to falsely 'heal' societal wounds into the silent fixity of It Gets Better? What better place to look than the teen girl, whose cut wrist is an abject fuck-you; whose cute Band-Aid and its artificial 'healing' is really just your sentimental fantasy."

Trisha Low is committed to wearing a shock collar because she has so many feelings. Remote controls are available at Gauss PDF, /Against Expression: An Anthology of Conceptual Writing/, TROLL THREAD and others. She lives in New York City.

Barbara Browning: Trisha Low's been leaving us periodic notes about what we can keep of hers if she should happen to go off the deep end. She's also been leaving us her email password, her ATM PIN code, and an astonishing amalgamation of amatory fiction, IMs, craft patterns, magic spells, and film noir in which every romantic interest is a MacGuffin. Low says her virtuosic appropriations owe less to conceptual poetics than to her adolescent days of punk vandalism. Never mind if this booty was shoplifted---it's stunning, and I promise, you'll want to keep everything she gives you.

J. Gordon Faylor: Trisha Low is always dying. Age, place, fictional rendering---all are subsumed to an origin already negated. She and her doubles evacuate with unmoving horror their teenage mania, displacing it, emptying the identities about whom its despair circulates. Once, maybe, this Trisha Low generated bodily heat, ate breakfast, loved and desired. No more. /The Compleat Purge/ razes its confessional charms like effigies, foreclosing Low's final vixi to her own secrets before they too are obliterated in time immemorial. "He had gone from her sight, he had not lifted his bowed head, he had not looked back."

Kim Rosenfield: Like hands reaching out from the grave in the final scene of Brian Di Palma's /Carrie/, Trisha Low's /The Compleat Purge/ reaches out to beg the question: "what's happened to the real Trisha?" In Low's epically eloquent new book, she hands us the keys to a crypt wherein identity is theorized as an act of para-suicide and girlhood a version of being buried alive. /The Compleat Purge/ reframes Freud's infamous query: "What do women want?" by breathing new life into shifting ideals of feminine identity, sexuality, and erotics before the culturally determined ones land us in a coma.

Sianne Ngai: In this darkly girlish feat of self-on-self drag, Trisha Low counters the more ascetic mode of conceptualism with a corpus of gestures---some joyful, some painful---that turn the mass-mediated young female body inside out, then outside once again. Her sharp intelligence and exuberantly vandalistic spirit leap out on every page.

Chaudiere Books: our rebuilding year,

Wed 30 Oct 2013

Since Ottawa literary publisher Chaudiere Books was founded by Jennifer Mulligan and rob mclennan in 2006 the press has produced an impressive thirteen titles of poetry and fiction (including a couple of anthologies) by writers both emerging and established. Originally founded in part to advocate for the enormous amount of literary activity around Ottawa, Chaudiere has produced single-author titles by a number of locally-based writers including Nicholas Lea, John Newlove, Anne Le Dressay, Monty Reid, Pearl Pirie, Marcus McCann, and Clare Latremouille. Attempting to engage Ottawa writers in a conversation with writers across Canada, the press has also produced works by Meghan Jackson, Michael Bryson, and Joe Blades. Unfortunately, due to a series of life events and sundry other things, the press has been unable to keep to a regular schedule since 2010.

Co-founder Jennifer Mulligan officially left the press earlier this year to focus on her work in film and Ottawa poet, designer, and book conservator Christine McNair has stepped in to fill the role of co-publisher. With the assistance of Monique Desnoyers (web designer) and Stephen Brockwell (sage advice); we've been enormously busy over the past few months (apart from the fact that McNair and mclennan are expecting a child any day now) working towards a return to a proper publishing schedule, beginning with the publication of our first new title in December.

This is a rebuilding year for Chaudiere Books, and we will be announcing an Indiegogo Campaign in January 2014 which will feature a whole slew of incentives from our backlist; new and old limited edition rarities from writers both new and established; and a few surprises. The campaign will coincide with announcements of forthcoming titles and launches in 2014.

The first title of the official Chaudiere Books re-launch is Ground Rules: the best of the second decade of above/ground press 2003-2013, edited by rob mclennan with an introduction by Gil McElroy. In many ways, Chaudiere Books has always been the trade extension of the chapbook publisher above/ground press and this title cements and even clarifies the associations between the two presses.

Ground Rules features writing from the second decade of one of the most active micro publishers in Canada, selected from a series of hundreds of publications lovingly edited, produced and distributed by editor/publisher rob mclennan. A follow-up to Groundswell: best of above/ground press, 1993-2003 (Broken Jaw Press, 2003), Ground Rules includes a wide range of work by poets Artie Gold, Mark Cochrane, Suzanne Zelazo, derek beaulieu, Stephanie Bolster, Amanda Earl, Nathanael, Lisa Samuels, Rachel Zolf, Sharon Harris, D. G. Jones, Julia Williams, Eric Folsom, Gregory Betts, Natalie Simpson, Monty Reid, William Hawkins, Emily Carr, Cameron Anstee, Helen Hajnoczky, Marilyn Irwin, Stephen Brockwell, Robert Kroetsch and rob mclennan.

Working out of Ottawa, poet and publisher rob mclennan's baby, above/ground press, marks a second decade of the production of broadsheets, chapbooks, magazines, and anthologies that trace out the best shapes of the best of contemporary Canadian (and, increasingly, international) poetry. From the span of that second ten of years, he has compiled this book of traceries: a selection of work by writers ranging from the likes of the late Artie Gold, and Robert Kroetsch, to the living Derek Beaulieu, Rachel Zolf, Colin Browne, Nicole Markotic, Eric Folsom, Natalie Simpson, etc., all collected here as representative of a decades aesthetic count. from Gil McElroy's Introduction: An Integral

The Ottawa launch of Ground Rules is scheduled for Saturday, December 7th 2013 at The Manx Pub and is sponsored by the Ottawa International Writers Festival. Lovingly hosted by rob mclennan, the event will feature readings by three of the books contributors (to be announced over the next couple of days). Watch for details via the Chaudiere Books blog, as well as our Facebook page!

lovingly,

Christine McNair and rob mclennan

11/2 @ 4:30 : Segue Presents Kevin Mcpherson Eckhoff and Jake Kennedy
Wed 30 Oct 2013

Dear all,

I hope you'll join us at the Zinc bar this Saturday 10/26 at 4:30 for readings by

KEVIN MCPHERSON ECKHOFF + JAKE KENNEDY

Bestfriends! kevin mcpherson eckhoff and Jake Kennedy pretend as poets around the Okanagan Valley with books and their weather. They're never too worried. Google decides favourable to them. "Prove it for yourself, even!" says BookThug! Have you or any of your aliases ever judged the temperature of a snare and an invisible before? Put 'em together and invent your own prize. Finally, according to Urban Dictionary, the “Jake” verb means “to call the cops on a party that you were kicked out of,” as in, “dude these guys are assholes, let’s Jake!” Also, the same source identifies a “Kevin” as synonymous with hip-thrusting and abruptly signing off web chats or electronic mails. Like, how would you describe like? An artificial chasm is only the possibility. Now, it's time (every hour!) for a tepid serving of g'morning poetry, so... goodbye!

Season curated by Genji Amino and Daisy Atterbury.

SCHOOL OF LIBERAL ARTS AND SCIENCES

PRATT INSTITUTE

*ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF MEDIA STUDIES *

The Department of Humanities and Media Studies (HMS) in the School of Liberal Arts and Sciences at Pratt Institute invites applications for a full-time tenure-track faculty position at the Assistant Professor rank, available Fall 2014..

As we continue to build our MA program in Media Studies, we seek exceptional candidates, particularly media theorists/practitioners with a focus on critical race theory and racism, postcolonial theory, feminism and/or queer theory. The ideal candidate will be fluent in critical theory, committed to social justice, and eager to work with a cohort of enthusiastic faculty and students on building and shaping our graduate program.

The department offers two degree programs: the longstanding B.F.A. in Creative Writing and the new M.A in Media Studies, as well as minors in Cinema Studies, Creative Writing, Literature and Writing, Media Studies, and Performance and Performance Studies.

JOB RESPONSIBILITIES:

·Teach courses in media theory and in some form/forms of media practice.

·Participate in the development of the graduate program in Media Studies.

·Engage in scholarly production and other professional activities.

·Advise graduate students and serve on thesis committees.

·Engage with Pratt's vibrant undergraduates working in art, design, architecture, fashion, creative writing, and critical and visual studies.

·Serve on Institute, School and department committees.

·Perform all other related activities as required.

QUALIFICATIONS:

A terminal degree in field of expertise is required; a PhD is preferred. Applicants must have some teaching experience, preferably in both theory and practice.

Area(s) of specialization must include one or more of the fields indicated in position summary above as related to social media, gaming, various forms of screen imaging, coding, media archeology, technologies of sensuality and/or computation.Demonstrated ability to engage in scholarly writing/research is essential. Work that has a definite relation to issues of geo-politics, financialization, militarism, imperialism, global inequality, activism, and/or cultural/social difference on a world scale is a plus.

*SALARY*is commensurate with qualifications and experience.

*TO APPLY: *Please submit a letter of application, CV, a sample of writing and other work if relevant, and your dossier containing three professional letters of reference via our online applicant system at http://tinyurl.com/lajrnbl. Review of applications will begin on November 29, 2013 and continue until the position is filled.

and, as Ezra Pounds eyebrows crept ever closer, the outlaw reunion came to an abrupt end, the

I-vow-my-Troth recurring dream hung on for dear laugh, went eventually belly-dancing out of the room, much to the dismay of poets in their heated nests

eating enchiladas, face up on the sofa like flappers in repose. Now all that this lights out in the bungalow means is another possible brush with self-realization.

As the work goes on a few perfect notes taking form within the unshaven limits of formality, an eternally Al Neil squeals across the real room, the room itself takes on the form of a glassworks, a conversation.

May I have a word with you?

Poetry: the equivalence that licks
the baby-spoon, the scurry of mnemonic mice, a mass of restless piecemeal motives. The dumb goat that bleats, that will eat anything.

November 2013

73 messages · Wed 30 Oct 2013 – Tue 26 Nov 2013

November 2013 was almost pure noticeboard — seventy-three messages, nearly all of them announcements — the list reduced now to a bulletin board of workshops and readings and small-press sales, its long conversation faded to a run of practical notices. The room had thinned to the barest functional minimum, a channel for errands rather than a forum for argument. The month is a document of a community persisting on habit alone, going through the motions of a literary life that had largely moved elsewhere.

There was no largest thread, only the scatter of the trade. A long-running little magazine posted its standing notice; a December workshop and a scatter of readings were announced; a small press held a year-end sale; a journal released its new issue. The room functioned entirely as a distribution list now, a place to post the practical business of poetry to a specific and dwindling audience — the arguments long gone, the announcements all that remained.

The quarrel, unspoken, was the same one that had shadowed every thin month: whether this faint pulse of notices still constituted a community or had become merely a mailing list on autopilot. No one asked it aloud — one does not, in a room this quiet — but it hung over the November hush, over every workshop announced to a room that mostly no longer answered.

And yet the notices kept coming, each one a small act of faith. Every workshop offered, every reading announced, every sale posted was somebody still choosing to send it to this particular fading channel, still trusting that a few of the faithful were reading — the reflex of a community not quite willing to concede that the room had gone silent, even as the silence gathered around each unanswered post.

I have set November down exactly as the archive delivered it — the workshops and readings and small-press sales, the standing notices sent into the hush, and the silence around them — because it was one of the last near-empty months before the end, and its faint, faithful traffic tells the truth about how the list finally lived: not in argument but in habit, a run of announcements posted to a room that had mostly stopped replying. A community reduced to a bulletin board of notices, sent by a few of the faithful to a channel gone nearly quiet, is a community in its final months, holding the practice open on habit and loyalty alone — going through the motions of the literary life it had once burned at the center of, in a room where the great conversation had almost entirely fallen still. That the notices kept coming at all, into so deep a quiet, is the small stubborn grace of the thing — a community unwilling, even now, to be the one to stop.

Issue #31 of Otoliths is now live
Thu 31 Oct 2013

I turned 72 on Wednesday. Thursday/Friday, depending on where you are, out comes issue #31 of Otoliths <http://the-otolith.blogspot.com/>. In twelve years time I'll be 84 but Otoliths will only be up to issue #79—if that, since I'll probably be infirm & unable to bring out more than two issues a year. It's improbable that the number of issues of Otoliths will ever catch up to my age. As the tortoise once said to the hare, "Read your Zeno, Dude, & eat my dust."

In the meantime, I'm proud to bring out another solid issue, again containing a wide-ranging spectrum of work, this time from Katrinka Moore, Andrew Topel, Philip Byron Oakes, John Hand, Bjarte Alvestad, Louis Armand, Jac Nelson, rob mclennan, Bob Marcacci, Anna Ryan-Punch, Robert Lee Brewer, J. Crouse, Jack

Galmitz, John M. Bennett, John M. Bennett & Thomas M. Cassidy, John M. Bennett & Matthew Stolte, John M. Bennett & Baron, John M. 5. Lisa Jarnot
two poetry workshops in NYC
Fri 1 Nov 2013

Hi all, could you please send this along to interested parties?

Thanks, **

Lisa Jarnot

I'm going to run an abbreviated pre-holiday workshop for students who are trying to finish manuscripts. It will be 5 weeks, monday nights from 6-8:30 at my place in Jackson Heights, Queens. I'm seeking 3 (1 is already enrolled) students (we'll spend one session devoted to each student's manuscript, and one week looking at publishing options.) The class will start November 25 and end December 23. The fee is $250. I've run this class twice before and it's been a productive one (some books coming out of it). Let me know if you're interested. I'll also be doing a workshop on Robert Duncan's poetry beginning in January. ****

New and On View: Mudlark Chapbook No. 52 (2013)

by David Koehn

A slim volume of David Koehn's Catullus translations, under the title TUNIC, is forthcoming in November of 2013 from speCt!, a letterpress imprint. His chapbook, COIL, won the Midnight Sun chapbook contest sponsored by Permafrost at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. His full-length manuscript, TWINE, which has won the 2013 May Sarton Poetry Prize, will be released by Bauhan Publishing in the spring of 2014. Koehn's poems have been published widely and well in magazines including Kenyon Review (online), Volt, New England Review, New York Quarterly, Alaska Quarterly, Cutbank, McSweeney's, Carolina Quarterly, Del Sol Review, and Painted Bride among many others. He is a featured contributor of essays to OmniVerse, Rusty Morrison, publisher, and his prose has also appeared in such magazines as Jacket, American Letters & Commentary, New Hampshire Review, and New York Quarterly too. Koehn received his MFA from the University of Florida. His website can be found at: davidkoehn.com.

Spread the word. Far and wide,

William Slaughter

After half an hour Edgar said, â€œIâ€™m going to tell you a secret. You canâ€™t tell anyone. Pretend our meeting never happened. Donâ€™t tell my wife.â€ â€œSure,â€ I said. When I got home I wrote down every word.

Whatâ€™s in our Winter issue? The first work of fiction by J.â€‰D. Daniels; the first installment of a novel by Rachel Cusk; interviews with Geoff Dyer and Edward P. Jones; fiction by Jenny Offill, Nell Freudenberger, Ottessa Moshfegh, and Lydia Davis; and a portfolio of nudes by Chuck Close. And we havenâ€™t even put the issue to bed yet!

I like reading books with both hands, with my heart pumping, with blood on the page. So Iâ€™m interested in people who make stuff and Iâ€™m interested in the lives that make the text. â€œIn My Life as a Russian Novel, there is a very important character, Sasha, the FSB officer who was Anyaâ€™s boyfriend. He was a mysterious guy, not without charm, handsome, with whom we had a curious relationship because he was alternately very friendly and completely paranoid. Part of his job was to keep an eye on us, but he would do it by getting drunk with us and telling us the most intimate details of his personal life. We liked him, but we were wary of him just as he was of us. At one point in the movie, after Anyaâ€™s death, heâ€™s with me and we are both drunk and he says with sudden lucidity, â€˜Go ahead. Make the movie. You have my permission. I only ask one thing, that it be delicate and decent.â€™ And I answer drunkenly, â€˜Yeah!â€™ I made the promise. Then a year later, I came back to show him the film. I can tell you, I was very anxious. Sasha watched the film attentively, and when we got to the part I just described, he put his hand on my arm and he said, â€˜You kept your promise.â€™ I was hugely relieved. Then he added something that killed me. â€˜You know what I like about it? You didnâ€™t just come to take our unhappiness. You brought your own.â€™ That made me cry. I could have kissed him.â€ â€”Emmanuel CarrÃ¨re, the Art of Nonfiction No. 5 (http://www.theparisreview.org/interviews/6254/the-art-of-nonfiction-no-5-emmanuel-carrere?utm_source=newsletternovember2013&utm_medium=email&utm_campaign=carrerefullinterviewnovnewsletter) Upcoming Events http://www.theparisreview.org/events?utm_source=newsletternovember2013&utm_medium=email&utm_campaign=november2013events

To celebrate the centennial of Marcel Proustâ€™s Swannâ€™s Way, join us at the Wythe Hotel to kick off a weeklong live reading of the classic at venues across New York City. From November 8 through 14, Swannâ€™s Way: A Nomadic Reading will feature the entirety of the iconic work read in three-hour increments in locations from the Bronx to Brooklyn. In a traveling tribute, each location will echo a major theme of the reading: a hotel bedroom, for the famous opening pages; the forest of the Botanical Garden, for Proustâ€™s childhood in the countryside; a theater, to evoke the writerâ€™s fascination with actors; a nightclub, to recall Swannâ€™s late-night searches for the unfaithful Odette. See more events (http://www.theparisreview.org/events?utm_source=newsletternovember2013&utm_medium=email&utm_campaign=november2013events) â€º

Amanda Earl to be inducted into the 2014 VerseOttawa Hall of Honour!

above/ground press author Amanda Earl is one of two inductees in the 2014 VerseOttawa Hall of Honour, following the announcement of William Hawkins and Greg "Ritalin" Frankson for 2013. Congratulations, Amanda!

The VERSeOttawa Hall of Honour is an independent body with close to ties to VERSeOttawa and VERSeFest. It was formed to recognize the important contributions of individuals to the Ottawa poetry community.

An induction ceremony will be held on March 30th, 2014 -- the final day of VERSeFest 14.

As the press release begins:

It is with great pleasure that the VERSeOttawa Hall of Honour announces the two inductees for 2014: Amanda Earl and Danielle K.L. Gregoire.

Amanda Earl is a fearless and supportive promoter of poetry and poets in Ottawa, and she is a long-time poet herself. She is a very visible and active member of the community. Through her organizational work, she promotes and encourages poets emerging and established, and of diverse styles. The Ottawa poetry community would not be what it is without Amanda's contributions through Bywords and her many other important contributions. In these activities, Amanda Earl is vital in keeping the poetic arts alive and thriving in the Capital.

See the entire press release here.

The Last Poem About Cats

Born in 1935, and initially raised in the Hell's Kitchen neighborhood of New York City, John Allman, author of eight book-length collections of poetry, two chapbooks, and a volume of short stories, was a high-school drop-out who earned his diploma in night school while working as a lab tech for Pepsi-Cola. Eventually turning away from science for the humanities, and knocking about in many jobs, he earned degrees in English Literature and Creative Writing from Hunter College and Syracuse University (where he worked with Delmore Schwartz and Philip Booth), while becoming more and more involved in writing poetry. At the age of 44, after some years of having his work appear in journals, he published his first book, Walking Four Ways in the Wind (1979), with Princeton University Press in its Princeton Series of Contemporary Poets. His most recent poetry collections are Loew's Triboro (2004), Lowcountry (2007), both from New Directions, and Algorithms, prose poems (2012) from Quale Press. His Inhabited World: New & Selected Poems 1970-1995 (1995) was published by the Wallace Stevens Society Press. His recently completed collections, Older Than Our Fathers and The Blue Gazebo, are making the rounds, looking for a publisher, while he is working on a new collection titled Something Rather Than Nothing, poems from which will soon appear in The Yale Review and Hotel Amerika. His work has appeared in most of the major American journals, from The American Poetry Review to The Yale Review. Allman has received two fellowships from the National Endowment for the Arts, a Pushcart Prize in Poetry, and the Helen Bullis Prize from the original Poetry Northwest. He earned his living teaching college English and retired from that in 1997, to have more time for writing. He lives in Katonah, NY, with his wife, Eileen, a Shakespeare and Jacobean Drama scholar and writer. They spend their winters on Hilton Head Island, SC.

Spread the word. Far and wide,

Nic Sebastian*'s Poetry Storehouse* is an effort to promote new forms and delivery methods for page-poetry by creating a repository of freely-available high-quality contemporary page-poetry for those multimedia collaborative artists who may sometimes be stymied in their work by copyright and other restrictions. The main mission is to collect and showcase poem texts and, in some instances, audio recordings of those texts. It is their hope that those texts will serve as inspiration or raw material for other artistic creations in different media.

The new ebook from Argotist Ebooks is “Genesis Suicide” by Jake Berry.

Description:

“Genesis Suicide” is a series of interconnected poems from the perspective of a point in space where the collision of multiple time frames have collapsed into an temporally non-sequential domain. Mythical, prescient, sardonic and whimsical these poems portray a world devoid of comfortable structure where reality itself is as shapeless as water.

Correction: 11/9 @ 4:30 : Segue Presents Alex Waterman and Jaap Blonk

Wed 6 Nov 2013

 reading will start at 4:30 SHARP because of scheduling constraints

Dear all,

I hope you'll join us at the Zinc bar this Saturday 11/9 at 4:30, for readings by

ALEX WATERMAN

Alex Waterman is a cellist, composer, writer, and teacher. He has completed three books with the typographer Will Holder--Agape, Between Thought and Sound, and The Tiger's Mind, and they are completing a new book on the American opera composer, Robert Ashley: Yes, But is it Edible? Beatrice Gibson and Alex Waterman's collectively written and scored film, A Necessary Music, premiered at the Whitney Museum ISP show and won the Tiger Prize for Best Short Film at the Rotterdam Film Festival in 2008. He is currently scoring music for a new piece by Maria Hassabi--premiering at The Kitchen this Fall--and touring with Either/Or. Waterman is producing and directing Robert Ashley's opera Vidas Perfectas--which has been performed in New York and London (at the Serpentine Pavilion and Cafe OTO). Vidas Perfectas will return to New York in a 'live television' version (Spring of 2014) and travel on to Ballroom Marfa and the El Paso Opera. He teaches at the Bard College MFA program, New York University, and has taught--alongside Will Holder-- at the Banff Centre for the Arts.

JAAP BLONK

Jaap Blonk (born 1953 in Woerden, Holland) is a self-taught composer, performer and poet. A comprehensive collection of his sound poetry came out as a book with 2 CDs in August, 2013, entitled "KLINKT".

Season curated by Genji Amino and Daisy Atterbury.

Zinc Bar, 82 W 3rd St, NYC.

book launch! Ground rules: the best of above/ground press,

Wed 6 Nov 2013

Ground rules: the best of the second decade of above/ground press 2003-2013

Produced to begin the re-launch of Ottawa literary publisher Chaudiere Books, co-publishers rob mclennan and Christine McNair invite you to the launch of Ground Rules: the best of the second decade of above/ground press 2003-2013.

Co-sponsored by our friends at the Ottawa International Writers Festival and The Manx Pub, the event will feature readings by three of the books contributors: Sharon Harris (Toronto), Marilyn Irwin (Ottawa) and Stephen Brockwell (Ottawa). The event will be (lovingly) hosted by Chaudiere Books co-founder, editor and co-publisher rob mclennan.

5pm, Saturday, December 7, 2013
The Manx Pub
370 Elgin Street, Ottawa

Sharon Harris is a Toronto artist/writer whose poems have been anthologized in The Broadview Introduction to Literature, The Last Vispo, and Shift & Switch: New Canadian Poetry. She is the author of chapbooks from bookthug, In Case of Emergency Press, and above/ground, and her first full-length collection, Avatar, was published by The Mercury Press. She has written articles for Geist, The Globe & Mail, and Open Book Toronto; is a past contributor to Torontoist and Word Magazine; and her work has been published in The National Post, dANDelion, The Capilano Review, Drunken Boat, The Volta, broken pencil, and Vallum. I Love You Toronto, her exhibition of photographs, appeared in newspapers, magazines, and on radio and television across Canada.

Marilyn Irwin's work has been published by above/ground press, Arc, Bywords, and New American Writing. A graduate of Algonquin Colleges Creative Writing program, she has three chapbooks: for when you pick daisies (2010), flicker (2012), and little nothings (2012). She won Arc Poetry Magazines Diana Brebner Prize this year.

Stephen Brockwell cut his writing teeth in the eighties in Montreal, appearing on French and English CBC Radio and in the anthologies Cross/cut: Contemporary English Quebec Poetry and The Insecurity of Art (both VhiculePress, 1982). George Woodcock described Brockwell's first book, The Wire in Fences (Balmuir, 1987) as having an extraordinary range of empathies and perceptions. Harold Bloom wrote that Brockwell's second book, Cometology (ECW Press, 2001), held rare and authentic promise. Fruitfly Geographic won the Archibald Lampman award for best book of poetry in Ottawa in 2005. His Complete Surprising Fragments of Improbable Books is newly out from Mansfield Press. Brockwell currently operates a small IT consulting company from the 7th floor of the Chateau Laurier and lives in a house perpetually under construction.

Working out of Ottawa, poet and publisher rob mclennan's baby, above/ground press, marks a second decade of the production of broadsheets, chapbooks, magazines, and anthologies that trace out the best shapes of the best of contemporary Canadian (and, increasingly, international) poetry. From the span of that second ten of years, he has compiled this book of traceries: a selection of work by writers ranging from the likes of the late Artie Gold, and Robert Kroetsch, to the living derek beaulieu, Rachel Zolf, Eric Folsom, Natalie Simpson, etc., all collected here as representative of a decades aesthetic count. from Gil McElroy's "Introduction: An Integral"

Edited by rob mclennan, with an introduction by Gil McElroy, Ground Rules features writing from the second decade of one of the most active micro publishers in Canada, selected from a series of hundreds of publications lovingly edited, produced and distributed by editor/publisher rob mclennan. A follow-up to Groundswell: best of above/ground press, 1993-2003 (Broken Jaw Press, 2003), Ground Rules includes a wide range of work by Artie Gold, Mark Cochrane, Suzanne Zelazo, derek beaulieu, Stephanie Bolster, Amanda Earl, Nathanal, Lisa Samuels, Rachel Zolf, Sharon Harris, D. G. Jones, Julia Williams, Eric Folsom, Gregory Betts, Natalie Simpson, Aaron Tucker, Monty Reid,

Copies of the book will be available at the event. See the OIWF link to the event here.

UC Santa Cruz--New Creative Writing Concentration for PhD students

Wed 6 Nov 2013

Hi all,

Very happy to announce that UC Santa Cruz will be starting its New Creative/Critical Writing concentration next year.

See below!

Eireene

Prospective Student Information

Creative/Critical Writing Concentration Overview (please refer to the Literature

Ph.D. Program<http://literature.ucsc.edu/graduate/prospective-information/gradphdinfo.html> overview
for more information)

Entering students complete all the requirements for the Literature Ph.D. with the addition of a creative/critical enhancement to their degree in the form of original creative work, with critical introduction, and, if desired, work in poetics, translation, form and/or critical writing from the perspective of writerly practices.

Admissions

For applicants to the Creative/Critical Writing concentration, the department requests the following additional materials: 20-25 pages of prose (at least one complete piece and an additional sample preferred), or 10-12 pages of poetry. The writing can be poetry, prose fiction, creative non-fiction or hybrid/cross genre.

Requirements

The general requirements for all PhD students apply to the Creative/Critical Writing concentration:

- The Proseminar, Literature 200, to be taken in Fall Quarter of the first year; - A one-quarter Pedagogy of Teaching/Teaching Assistant Training, Literature 201, to be taken prior to or in conjunction with the first Teaching Assistant appointment; - Twelve courses leading to the definition of an area of concentration. At least two of these must be in a second-language literature; at least one must focus on pre-1750 literature and culture. Up to four courses may be taken in other departments; up to three may be independent studies; Creative/Critical Writing concentration only: Of the twelve courses a total of four courses must be Creative/Critical concentration-designated courses (Graduate Creative Writing Workshops and Methods and Materials); - One two-credit advising course, Literature 291F, per quarter; - Three quarters of supervised teaching experience; Creative/Critical Writing concentration only: Of the three quarters of supervised teaching experience required, at least two will be in the undergraduate creative writing concentration; - The Literature Department’s intensive three-week Graduate Summer Language Program or equivalent; - A qualifying exam portfolio (includes an oral component); - A prospectus outlining and defining the dissertation project; - A dissertation (written in conjunction with Literature 299, Thesis Research).

Qualifying Examination and Dissertation

At least one member of the QE committee, normally the chair, must be from among the participating core faculty in Creative Writing, and at least one departmental member of the committee will not be one of these. Students in the concentration will meet the requirements of the (revised) Ph.D. program Qualifying Examination, with the choice to substitute original creative work for the Qualifying essay requirement. This work may also be, if the student chooses, a hybrid creative/critical work.

Ph.D. candidates in the Creative/Critical Writing concentration may choose one of two options for the dissertation:

1. A book length original creative project—novel, novella, collection of poems, collection of stories, creative non-fiction, or a hybrid/experimental form (including but not limited to digital/new media, performance/performativity/screen play, the lyric essay) with a substantial critical chapter of at least 75 pages that locates the work in its literary and historical contexts; OR

2. A dissertation on theory, form, poetics or history of the novel/ poetry; a translation; a critical edition.

Faculty

The following faculty are participating Creative Writing faculty mentors: Christopher Chen<http://literature.ucsc.edu/faculty/singleton.php?&singleton=true&cruz_id=cche75> Tyrus Miller<http://literature.ucsc.edu/faculty/singleton.php?&singleton=true&cruz_id=tyrus> Micah Perks<http://literature.ucsc.edu/faculty/singleton.php?&singleton=true&cruz_id=meperks> Rob Wilson<http://literature.ucsc.edu/faculty/singleton.php?&singleton=true&cruz_id=rwilson> Ronaldo Wilson<http://literature.ucsc.edu/faculty/singleton.php?&singleton=true&cruz_id=rvwilson> Karen Tei Yamashita<http://literature.ucsc.edu/faculty/singleton.php?&singleton=true&cruz_id=ktyamash>

STEVE MCCAFFERY  ALLEN FISHER  UNAMERICAN ACTIVITIES 4

Thu 7 Nov 2013

Hey poetics,

Do you like poetry? Or poets? That's funny. There's a poetry event coming up, that you might like to go to.

Steve McCaffery and Allen Fisher are reading their poetry at it. They're quite good poets, depending on what you mean by good. If you know what I mean.

It's on November 17th, so about 10 days from now. It's at 4pm at 435 West 22nd Street. That's the Page Poetry Parlor, where Lee Ann Brown and Tony Torn live. They're famous people. Please be prompt.

Ok. If you're in England it's 9pm, same day, at the the Judith E. Wilson Studio, on the same day. The street address is the Faculty of English, University of Cambridge, 9 West Road. In the basement.

Ok. Please come. Thanks. If you like websites, there is one. It's unamac.org. Thanks.

Center for Marginalia | Friday Nov. 15 | Tyrone Williams

the Center for MARGINALIA presents:

Some questions regarding Russell Atkins vis-à-vis Charles Olson
TYRONE WILLIAMS
Friday
15th November

from Tyrone Williams: "What overlapping concepts of the "field" determine the poetics of Atkins and Olson? To what extent is Atkins' relationship to avant-garde European modernist music (including serialism which he apparently detested) analogous to Olson's relationship to jazz (and in particular the bebop of Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie)? What is the relationship between Atkins' promotion of "force" in his aesthetics and Olson's valorization of "energy" in his? What is the nature of the "human psychology" that motivates Atkins' psycho-visual poetics and Olson's attempt to bracket, if not erase, the "lyrical interference of the individual ego"? Finally, what are we to make of the influence of the Olson essay on "Projective Verse" and the relative lack of influence of Atkins' ideas in his various manifestoes (e.g., is Atkins' prose simply too idiosyncratic? Does the institutionalization of Olson's work via Black Mountain account for the dissemination of his ideas? Did race, geography, etc.

play a role?)?" Participants should read in advance: - Atkins, Russell. "Preface", "Manifesto", "Egocentrical Projection As Object in Perspective." - Nielsen, Aldon Lynn. "Black Deconstruction: Russell Atkins and the Reconstruction of African-American Criticism." diacritics 26.3-4: 86-103. - Olson, Charles. "Projective Verse."

PLEASE EMAIL the series curator, Edric Mesmer, at esmesmer[AT]buffalo[DOT]edu to receive copies of the works by and about Russell Atkins for next week's talk by Tyrone Williams.

Welcome to Boog City 7.5 Update and Organizers
Sat 9 Nov 2013

Hi all,

I wanted to update everyone on Welcome to Boog City 7.5, our mid-term festival to go along with our annual summer Welcome to Boog City festival.

We've added some time to the event, upping it to nine hours. It will now run:

Sun. Feb. 16, 2014, 12:00 p.m.-4:00 p.m.

Mon. Feb. 17, 2014, 12:00 p.m.-5:00 p.m.

The event will take place at Prospect Heights, Brooklyn's one and only Unnameable Books (600 Vanderbilt Ave.).

It will feature poetry, music, political talks, poets theater, and improv.

Unlike the past few WBC's, where we only invited folks new to the festival, we'll be inviting some previous participants to once again take part, excluding those who've performed at the last two festivals.

We'll have improv from:

—Lunch Break Tantra, a group of improvisers out of the Upright Citizens Brigade Theatre in New York, who create a fully improvised show before your eyes. You might not want to be friends with all of these characters in real life, but you'll definitely enjoy getting to see a glimpse into their world.

And our d.a. levy lives: celebrating renegade presses series will host Philadelphia's Fact-Simile Editions.

I'm also very excited to announce who will be organizing the festival with me (bios below this note):

—Booking the Music:
J.J. Hayes

—Booking the Poets:
Ray DeJesüs
Ted Dodson
Claire Donato
Jeff T. Johnson
Jessica Smith
Kiely Sweatt
and me

—Booking the Political Talks:
Yates McKee

We'll have more for you shortly.

Hope this finds you all well.

as ever,
David

Ray DeJesus was born, raised, and still lives in Brooklyn. He teaches writing at St. Francis College. His work can be found in Gondola, 1913: a journal of forms, Peaches and Bats, and Shampoo, among others.

Ted Dodson is the author of the chapbook Pop! in Spring (Diez, 2013). He is the editor of The Poetry Project Newsletter, the co-founder and editor of the filmed journal On the Escape, a former curator for Triptych, and the books editor and program director for Futurepoem books.

Claire Donato is the author of Burial (Tarpaulin Sky Press). Recent work has appeared or is forthcoming in Black Warrior Review, Encyclopedia L-Z, LIT, PEN America, and 1913: a journal of forms.

J.J. Hayes comes from Staten Island. Sometimes he is a poet, sometimes he’s a singer, and sometimes he writes about music and the world.

Jeff T. Johnson’s poetry has recently appeared, or is about to appear, in coconut, The Portable Boog Reader, and Forklift, Ohio, and he holds a digital residency at The Organism for Poetic Research. He lives in Brooklyn, is editor in chief at LIT, and edits Dewclaw.

Yates McKee is an art critic and organizer with various Occupy projects including Strike Debt. His work has appeared in venues including October, Grey Room, the Nation, and Waging Nonviolence. He is coeditor of the book Sensible Politics: The Visual Cultures of Nongovernmental Activism, as well as the magazine Tidal: Occupy Theory, Occupy Strategy.

Jessica Smith is the librarian at Indian Springs School and author of Organic Furniture Cellar (Outside Voices). Her most recent chapbook, mnemotechnics, is now available from above/ground press; her second book is forthcoming from Chax Press in 2015.

Kiely Sweatt started the Prostibulo Poetico/Prostibulo Press in Spain, Madrid, and Greece. Her book, Origin of, (Patasola Press) and A Home Big Enough for Remembering (Dancing Girl Press) were released earlier this year. She lives in Brooklyn, co-hosts Tri Lengua reading series, and works as a producer for Hyper Island.

and Ammiel Alcalay and Benjamin Hollander at Bard College for two events. See below:

The Division of Languages and Literature presents

Special Views of History Benjamin Hollander and Ammiel Alcalay read from their work Monday, November 18, 2013 7:00 p.m. — 9:00 p.m., Olin Language Center, Room 115

Continuing from their afternoon practicum, and in the spirit of Charles Olson's Special View of History, Hollander and Alcalay will read from their poetry and prose. Their reading will play off Hericalitus's maxim which begins Olson's Special View: "Man is estranged from that which is closest to him." For Alcalay, this means tracing event to memory to create another kind of consciousness in the present, a third eye on a distant landscape coming into zoom focus, or, like Jack Spicer's poet as radio, radiating poems as messages coming in at different frequencies, frequenting multiple dimensions: writing which, in Robert Duncan's view, works toward immediacy as it seeks after origins. For Hollander, this means a writing which reshapes and brings to focus our historical Imagination, where facts on the ground can be transformed into fables in the air: writing which aspires to conditions articulated by the biographer and translator Robert Payne, that "America was [and could be again] fable before it became fact.

Please also join our guests in Olin 115, 11:50am-1:10pm for our practicum, Ammiel Alcalay and Benjamin Hollander: on Translation and Poetic Identity in the Age of Identity Politics

Ammiel Alcalay and Benjamin Hollander on Translation and Poetic Identity in the Age of Identity Politics Monday, November 18, 2013 11:50 a.m. — 1:10 p.m., Olin Language Center, Room 115

Ammiel Alcalay and *Benjamin Hollander *will address how translation as act and idea has shaped their practices and poetic identities. Hollander, who grew up between German and Hebrew before coming to the English he now writes in, will speak to how this linguistic and cultural journey has been *translated *into the un-Americanness of his American language and philosophy. His new book, In The House Un-American (Clockroot Books), is partly guided by the metaphor of translation as transport, as the perpetual crossing and metamorphosis of an immigrant's language, identity, and culture. David Shapiro has called it "so America, so like an inner emigration, as if we had all changed names." Hollander will address how the foreignness of his writing can inform the singularity of poetic thinking: how, in terms of syntax and fluency and perception, he wants, as the poet and translator Murat Nemet-Nejat writes, "to help English [and American identity) grow a limb it does not have." Alcalay has been publishing translations from a number of languages for over thirty years, and will speak to how these experiences inform poetic thinking and knowledge. As an advocate of writing from various parts of the world—particularly the Middle East and the Balkans—he has been instrumental in forging a space for engaged political encounters with other cultures and languages. He will address how his immersion in projects, centered in and on other regions and languages, have evolved into comprehending the context of how one uses American English and what that might mean for a reconfiguration of post Second World War American culture, as well as what that might mean for exploring new approaches to North American political, cultural, and literary history and identity. Taking, on the one hand, Meso-American scholar Gordon Brotherston's crucial idea that "the prime function of classical texts is to construct political space and anchor historical continuity," and poet Charles Olson's idea that the history of these States remains "unrelieved" as starting points, Alcalay will address how his experiences as a translator and writer have taken him into realms that have little to do with the prevailing discourse in which literary translation has become embedded.

Please also join our guests in Olin 115, 7-9pm for Special Views of History: Benjamin Hollander and Ammiel Alcalay read from their work.

For more information: contact Cole Heinowitz at [redacted], or e-mail [redacted].

Re: The Richard Brautigan Collection from poet Joanne Kyger
Wed 13 Nov 2013

Granary Books is pleased to offer for sale

The Richard Brautigan Collection from poet Joanne Kyger

Featuring an extraordinary archive of original artwork, inscribed books, rare ephemera and magazines, photographs, typescripts and more.

Joanne Kyger met Richard Brautigan at a gallery opening in San Francisco in the spring of 1957 when they were both 22 years old. After dinner the following night Richard gave Joanne her first tour of North Beach.

In 1960, Joanne left San Francisco and lived in Japan for several years where she married Gary Snyder and studied Zen Buddhism. She became close friends with Richard when she returned to San Francisco in February 1964.

Joanne and Richard were greatly influenced by Jack Spicer early in their careers and both were important and vivid figures in the remarkable literary and art scene in San Francisco in the mid-to late 60's. They often read poetry at the same events and published in the same magazines, including the one-shot "Change," (1963) edited by Richard and Ron Loewinsohn, and "Wild Dog," guest edited by Joanne in 1965. They spoke on the phone nearly every day during this period and Richard would often read new work to her.

Richard's book "In Watermelon Sugar" (completed in 1964, published in 1968) was dedicated to Joanne Kyger, Donald Allen and Michael McClure. He began writing it while staying in Bolinas, and Joanne would sometimes visit Richard there while he was working on it. She eventually moved to Bolinas in 1968 where she now resides.

Richard bought houses in Bolinas and Montana and divided his time between the two while making trips to Japan. Though they were not as close as they had been, Joanne and Richard were in contact until 1984 when Richard Brautigan died in Bolinas.

Invisible Idylls
 A Romantic Extravagance, for John Seaver

*Authored by Philip Whalen Introduction by Joanne Kyger Drawings by Philip Whalen Cover design or artwork by Terri Carrion Literary editor Michael Rothenberg Assisted by Youssef Alaoui-Fdili *BIG BRIDGE PRESS PRESENTS A RARE WHALEN TEXT.

FROM THE INTRODUCTION BY JOANNE KYGER:

INVISIBLE IDYLLS by the Reverend Philip Whalen Sam, Shorty, Peter, Gwendolyn, May Margaret and Chandler. They all live exquisitely sturdy and grandiosely intelligent lives. Sam, Shorty and Peter have terminally minimal money between them and reside within the vast holdings of The Laetitia Norton Feinschreiber Memorial Foundation for the Advancement of the Arts, with its memorial museum and library, stables, squash courts, swimming pools, sculpture studio, and the music library housing the Ernestine Pratkredl Feinschreiber Memorial Baroque Organ which overlooks the lotus pond with its expensive imported ducks from Kashmir. Still, its inhabitants have barely enough money to take a bus downtown.

11/16 @ 4:30 : Segue Presents Eleanor Antin and David Antin

Thu 14 Nov 2013

Dear all,

I hope you'll join us at the Zinc bar this Saturday 11/16 at 4:30, for our second-to-last reading!

ELEANOR ANTIN

Eleanor Antin works in photography, performance, video, film, installation, drawing and writing. One-woman exhibitions include the Museum of Modern Art, the Whitney Museum and her retrospective at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art. She has been in many major group shows around the world, among them the Beaubourg, the Tate, Documenta 12, the Kunsthalle Wein, etc. As a performance artist she has appeared in inumerable venues including the Venice Biennale and the Sydney Opera House. She has written several books, most recently â€œConversations with Stalinâ€ (Green Integer). Antin is the recipient of many awards, among them a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Womenâ€™s Caucus of the College Art Association and an honorary doctorate from the Chicago Art Institute. She is represented by the Ronald Feldman Fine Arts Gallery in NY. and is an emeritus Professor of Visual Arts at the University of California at San Diego.

DAVID ANTIN

David Antin is a poet, performance artist, art and literary critic internationally known for his "talk pieces" -- improvisational blends of comedy, story and social commentary. New Directions has published three books of these "talk pieces" -- TALKING AT THE BOUNDARIES (1976), TUNING (1984), and WHAT IT MEANS TO BE AVANT-GARDE (1993). TUNING was awarded the prize for poetry for 1984 by the PEN Center of Los Angeles. Much of his earlier poetry was collected in SELECTED POEMS 1963-1973 published by Sun and Moon Press in 1991. He has performed at the Whitney Museum, the Guggenheim, the Museum of Modern Art, and the Getty Center in the U.S. at the Centre Pompidou and the MusÃ©e d'Art Moderne in Paris. RADICÃ…L COHERENCY, his Selected Essays 1966-2005 has just been published by the University of Chicago Press. He spent the Winter of 2002 as a Fellow at the Getty Research Insitute.

Season curated by Genji Amino and Daisy Atterbury.

SATURDAY, 4:30 p.m. at Zinc Bar, 82 W 3rd St, NYC.

"2 Juries + 2 Storeys = 4 Stories Toujours" by K.S. Ernst & Sheila E. Murphy

In "view points pierce the mise en scene / once words afar farce," each poem has two frames, and each frame has two parts: words superimposed on an image. The clear greyscale shapes echo the architecture of typesetting, reminding the reader of the physicality of the printed page. "'Call on me call on me call on things built up in rectangles' said those words" KSEM's little mirrors are double all the way down, reminding us that although collaborative poetry may desire a unified voice, it is always the effort of at least two distinct individuals.

—Jessica Smith

An invitation to explore a gallery of sedulously built faces, ways of seeing, unfolded structures. Complex forms "chase your imagination" through a collaborative exploration of distinct individuals' negotiations with closely related realities. Each visual and verbal play reaches down into itself to surface the shape itself, hypnotic in its simplicity.

—Mara Patricia Hernandez

from the introduction:

Over a period of several years, we have cultivated a way of working together that feels creatively stimulating, natural, and distinctly different in style and character from our respective solo efforts. Since a couple of years into the 21st Century, we have been creating gallery works on a medium to large scale, in addition to a good number of small-sized pieces with the printed page in mind. Many of these smaller pieces are represented in our book Permutoria (Luna Bisonte Prods Press, 2007), and one of the pieces ("Vortextique") appeared in Poetry magazine as part of a special feature on visual poetry, under the guest editorship of Geof Huth.

mIEKAL's invitation to create a book for Xexoxial arrived at a perfect time for us. Following a burst of creation of gallery pieces that spanned several years, we had taken a breather. Xerolage 55This book represents a re-emergence of our work together. The mode of development for this project led us to examine "double dozens," based upon the 24 inner pages we would create. The design involves dual "story lines," two distinct yet oddly inter-relatable perceptual mechanisms, based upon a framework encompassing the blend of visual and textual work.

We find ourselves increasingly devoted to the shared design of an architecture that seems to us to invite new work. Perhaps the process really amounts to our learning to look at blank areas for a long time, and to stare the pre-existing works into the realm of a life we recognize. In either case, the process seems magical, and we are grateful for it.

Re: "The Gorgeous Nothings" and Eric von Daniken's Ancient Astronauts

Tue 19 Nov 2013

Once again, this brings up the intention of ED's actions, and I think shines a spotlight on the fallacy that's unleashed on the reading public beautiful books featuring scraps of paper and envelopes written upon by ED. This fallacy is the same one committed by Eric von Daniken and the Ancient Astronaut crowd (to pick a really extreme example), and it's called presentism and sometimes the historian's fallacy and Whiggism and it involves peering back through spectacles of today--with our present "sophistication concerning aesthetics and advanced literary theories"--and attributing these same concerns to someone who was most probably trying to conserve paper when writing her poetry. In fact my grandmother did the same thing with envelopes--neatly turning them into scratch paper to save money. She'd lived through the Great Depression and presumably learned the habit from her own parents.

Presentism also gives us ED's "art"--when word lists look like clouds and trees and such--ED's "postmodern poems" with blanks and wordlists to fill into the blanks so that the poem ever makes itself anew, ED's "speak-singing" diacritical marks instead of simply the uncertain pencil strokes of a great poet's work sheets--a great poet in an age of poetesses--but one who suffered from problematic eyesight most of her adult life, which also goes far to explain many more of the ambiguities in her manuscripts.

ED's poems are really remarkable and they shine through all the silliness some people (who should know better), try to dress them in.

These kinds of misunderstandings are sometimes great fun and can open up whole new money-making territories--as our friend Eric von Daniken could tell you, but do they bring us closer to coming to grips with what really happened when a gifted individual takes up the pen?

Let's stop to burn a candle to poor Occam, who gets a drubbing these days.

Jess

Words and sounds from Stockholm
Tue 26 Nov 2013

I have for several years worked with a sort of mix of words and sounds, linguistic elements transformed into instrumental music. Here are a few:

 "Promotion is over" is the latest. Synthetic speech of a prose poem together with pianistic intrusions that mimic the structure of some of the sentences. At the top of this page: https://soundcloud.com/tallmo

 "Nota bene". A musical composition structured after a lecture.
Available here:
https://soundcloud.com/tallmo/nota-bene

 "Kruska" is a sort of a derivative of a derivative. It is a composition (with improvisational elements) made after a text/syllable-sound composition I made in 2006, "Crux crux wim crux".

"Kruska" is available here:
https://soundcloud.com/tallmo/kruska

"Crux crux wim crux" is on Spotify here (the first track):

December 2013

14 messages · Wed 27 Nov 2013 – Mon 2 Dec 2013

December 2013 is the faintest breath in the entire archive — fourteen messages, a whole month reduced to a bare handful of notices — the list so nearly silent that the volume can barely be said to exist. After twenty years and hundreds of thousands of posts, the great conversation had thinned to almost nothing: a few announcements sent into a room that had all but stopped answering. It is the quietest page this reading has, and it stands, unknowing, on the very edge of the end.

There was no thread, only a scatter of the smallest keepings. A poetry night announced its December reading; an online class advertised its last open seats; a Paris reading series posted its date; a long-running little magazine sent its familiar notice; someone asked, plaintively, for photographs of the bridges of two American cities. Fourteen messages in a month, each a small solitary signal into a hush so deep it seems, in retrospect, less like a lull than like a held breath.

The quarrel, if a fourteen-message month can be said to contain one, was the unspoken question the whole year had been circling: whether anything was still here at all. No one asked it; there was almost no one to ask. The room had faded to the barest functional trace, a channel technically open and practically silent, the pulse so faint it could be mistaken for stillness.

And yet even here, a few kept faith. Someone still posted the reading; someone still advertised the class; someone still wanted those photographs of bridges. Each notice was a hand raised in an emptying room, a small refusal to be the one who finally let the silence win — the last faithful few keeping the channel open, not knowing that the channel had, in fact, only weeks to live.

I have set December down exactly as the archive delivered it — the fourteen notices, the reading and the class and the plea for photographs of bridges, and the vast silence around them — because it was the emptiest month the list ever produced, and its near-total quiet is the last thing it has to tell before the end. A room reduced to fourteen messages, a bare handful of the faithful still posting into a hush that had swallowed nearly everything, is a room at the very threshold of its death, holding on by a thread it did not know was about to be cut — and there is a strange tenderness in it, that the list spent its final full month not in argument or elegy but in the plainest small business of a literary life, asking, of all things, for pictures of bridges, as if still building, to the last, the small spans by which one person reaches another. It did not know it was the final full month; it only kept, faintly, on — and that unknowing faithfulness, fourteen messages sent into the dark, is as fitting an approach to an ending as the long strange run could have devised.

> Press Release -- for immediate release <

Poet Tim Verhaegen to read at the Social Justice Center
Thursday, December 19, 7:30PM

Local poet Tim Verhaegen will read from his work at the Social Justice Center, 33 Central Ave., Albany on Thursday, December 19, 2013 at 7:30PM. Tim Verhaegen is a poet and writer of family memoir who has been writing, reading and workshopping his poems in area venues for many years. Uniquely personal and often humorous, his readings are always engaging and entertaining.

The evening will also include the annual Holiday visit from "Sanity Clause," with a gift of poetry for all who read in the open mic.

A reading by a local or regional poet is held each Third Thursday at the Social Justice Center. The event includes an open mic for audience members to read. Sign-up starts at 7:00PM, with the reading beginning at 7:30. The host of the readings is Albany poet and photographer Dan Wilcox. The suggested donation is $3.00, which helps support this and other poetry programs of the Poetry Motel Foundation, and the work of the Social Justice Center. For more information about this event contact Dan Wilcox, [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted].

The Social Justice Center, founded in 1981, is a non-profit organization working for progressive social change through education, community building and collective action. The center advances the struggles against racism and for peace and justice. For further information about the SJC call [redacted].

Retirement Ode and Passion Among the Ruins
Poems by Frances Ruhlen McConnel

Frances Ruhlen McConnel is a poet and writer of short stories and creative nonfiction. She is retired from teaching in the Creative Writing Department at the University of California, Riverside. She lives in Claremont, California, and her old stomping grounds include Oak Ridge, Tennessee, Anchorage, and Seattle, where she attended the University of Washington. She has published two books of poetry, Gathering Light and The Direction of Longing (from Bellowing Ark Press), and has edited a collection of West Coast Women's Poetry, One Step Closer. Her chapbook of haiku and other short poems, White Birches, Black Water, was published in 2005 by the Alaskan fine arts letterpress, Bucket of Type Printery. She is at work on a new manuscript, Eve Swims the Side-Stroke.

Spread the word. Far and wide,

EkphrasticÂ Poetry: Dialoguing with the Greats

Class size: 10
Dates: December 2-29, 2013

Have you ever wished you could tell Van Gogh that every sunlit stroke of his brush leaves you longing to twirl in a field of sunflowers? Do you wish you could lay your words like laurels at the feet of Vermeer? Many of the greatest masterpieces gracing the walls of museums and the pages of books were born from one artistâ€™s desire to speak to another through the paintbrush or the quill. Now is your time to join the conversation. In thisÂ workshop, we will invoke the alchemy of inspiration to grow new and beautiful works from the masterworks of the past. Be prepared to create your most powerful poems yet!

13. Halvard Johnson

Truck's driver/editor for December

Mon 2 Dec 2013

Please welcome Catherine Daly, who will be our driver/editor during December.

And many, many thanks to Alex Cigale for spinning us through November.

(Sorry for the late announcement--three-day power outage here at the dispatcher's office.)

"I'm not afraid of dying. I just don't want to be there when it happens."

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

January 2014

269 messages · Wed 1 Jan 2014 – Fri 31 Jan 2014

January 2014 is the last volume, and the list came back to life to die. After a December of fourteen messages, the traffic surged to two hundred and sixty-nine — the scattered community returning all at once, from every quiet corner of two decades, to say goodbye. For its founder had announced the end: after twenty years the UB Poetics List was closing, and the room that had faded almost to silence filled, one final time, with the voices it had gathered since 1993. The list that had spent a decade dying spent its last month, fittingly, fully alive.

The largest thread was the closing itself. Charles Bernstein, who had started the list in late 1993 just after coming to Buffalo and co-founding the Poetics Program, wrote to end it — thanking the moderators who had kept it, noting that after so many years it was no longer his to sponsor, and offering the plain, moving summary of what it had been: that "the list has been great company and the origin of friendships" for many, and the source of some great conversations. He closed with the line every reader of this edition should carry: "The archives should remain in place." The record would survive the room.

The quarrel, such as a farewell allows, was over what exactly would be lost. In a thread on what will be missed, members tried to name the irreplaceable thing — one insisting that "Poetics List has a kind of community impetus and pulse" that no general listing or muddled aggregator could reproduce, a specific gathering-place for the experimental and innovative that nothing else quite offered. Others answered the loss with resolve, opening a new discussion board, drafting the future Poetics, refusing to let the closing be simply an ending. And through it all ran the plainest register of grief and gratitude: farewell, fair lady; sometimes it is time to call it a day; if this is the end, I will miss it.

For twenty years this room had been the beating heart of a poetics — the place where the New American inheritance and the Language experiment and the conceptual turn and the return to feeling had all been argued out, where Creeley and Blaser and Scalapino and Hollo had been read and mourned, where a thousand quarrels over form and politics and the sacred had been fought, and where, in the long decline, a shrinking company had kept faith with the practice long after the crowd went home. Now, in a single crowded January, the whole diaspora came back to turn out the light together, and the room was, for one last month, everything it had ever been.

I have set January down exactly as the archive delivered it — the founder's farewell, the archives entrusted to remain in place, the community naming what it would miss and already building what might come next, and the whole scattered tribe returned to say goodbye — because it was the last month of the list, and its warm and crowded ending is the truest thing the whole long run has to say. A room that faded almost to silence and then, told it was closing, filled once more with every voice it had ever held, is a room that proves what it had always secretly been: not a forum or a mailing list but a company of friends, gathered around the making of poems for twenty years, who came back in a body to keep each other company one final time. The list is closed; the archives remain in place; and this reading edition, built from those very archives, is one more keeping of the promise its founder made in his last message — that the company and the friendships and the great conversations would not, simply because the room went dark, be allowed to disappear.

Wish4[0]: 40 Days. 40 News Items. 40 Creative Responses.

On this first day of the year 2014, one countdown ends and another begins. This new countdown has nothing to do with the gradual fading of 2013 and the celebratory lauding of 2014, but instead ushers in a new social project: on the 4th of January, *Wish4[0] *begins.

As extensive use of mobile devices such as smart phones, wearables and tablets has become the norm, it’s apparent how networked/online communication has become a crucial component of our everyday news and entertainment cycles, as well as a critical social tool. In the resultant infoglut we’ve willingly created

[and to which we seem quite content to constantly expose ourselves], privacy concerns are prompting pushbacks against oversharing and the incessant rush of accelerating digital news. And yet, deliberate poetic responses to such critical social issues seem constantly overlooked and underutilised…

…which is where* Wish4[0]* comes in. Once a day, for 40 days, a digital literature work will be posted to wishforyouand.me<http://wishforyouand.me/about/>.
Each work will take as its immediate inspiration a headline, or item, drawn from the electronic news cycle of that specific day...
[Read more <http://wishforyouand.me/2014/01/01/introduction-wish40/>]

AngelHousePress introduces DevilHouse

Wed 1 Jan 2014

DevilHouse is an imprint of AngelHousePress with a goal to explore & investigate the transgressive in creative work. http://devilhousepress.com/

Note that the site includes a call for submission for transgressive literature & a series of interviews with transgressive writers & publishers, Sean Moreland, M. Christian, Kathlean Bradean & Mark McCawley. I'd love to have more participants in the interviews by artists, poets, novelists, short story writers, musicians, playwrights, film makers etc...

i hope you enjoy the site.

dusie : the tuesday poem,
Fri 3 Jan 2014

The Tuesday poem, over at the dusie blog, is now nine months old! Since April 9, 2013, Ive been curating a weekly poem over at the dusie blog, the offshoot of the Swiss online journal Dusie (http://www.dusie.org/), edited/published by poet and American expat Susana Gardner.

http://dusie.blogspot.ca/

The series aims to publish a mix of authors from the dusie kollektiv, as well as Canadian and international poets, ranging from emerging to the well established. Over the next few weeks and months, watch for new work by dusies and non-dusies alike, including Fenn Stewart, derek beaulieu, Susan Briante, Adeena Karasick, Marthe Reed, Brecken Hancock, Lea Graham, D.G. Jones, Monty Reid, Karen Mac Cormack, Elizabeth Willis, Susan Elmslie, Paul Vermeersch, Susan M. Schultz, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, K.I. Press, Meira Cook, Rachel Moritz, Kemeny Babineau, Gil McElroy, Geoffrey Nutter, Lisa Samuels, Dan Thomas-Glass, Judith Copithorne, Deborah Meadows, Meredith Quartermain, William Allegrezza and nikki reimer.

A new poem will appear every Tuesday afternoon, Central European Summer Time, just after lunch (which is 8am in Central Canada terms).

So far, the Tuesday poem series has featured new writing by Elizabeth Robinson, Megan Kaminski, Marcus McCann, Hoa Nguyen, Stephen Collis, j/j hastain, David W. McFadden, Edward Smallfield, Er¡n Moure, Roland Prevost, Maria Damon, Rae Armantrout, Jenna Butler, Cameron Anstee, Sarah Rosenthal, Kathryn MacLeod, Camille Martin, Pattie McCarthy, Stephen Brockwell, Rosmarie Waldrop, Nicole Markotic, Deborah Poe, Ken Belford, Hugh Thomas, nathan dueck, Hailey Higdon, Stephanie Bolster, Jessica Smith, Mark Cochrane, Amanda Earl, Robert Swereda, Colin Smith, Sarah Mangold, Joe Blades, Maxine Chernoff, Peter Jaeger, Dennis Cooley, Louise Bak and Phil Hall.

“IRELAND IN CRISIS :
THE ANALYSES AND PROPOSED SOLUTIONS”

(A collection of papers as presented to the

“IRELAND IN CRISIS” Conference, the 2012

International Conference of ICIS : The International Congress of Irish Studies, meeting on 10 and 11 July 2012 at International House on the campus of the University of California at Berkeley)

Edited by

Dr. Seán Ó Nualláin, and

Published by CSP in England

(Cambridge Scholars Publishing) is now available!!! Go to ...

http://www.c-s-p.org/Flyers/Ireland-in-Crisis---Analyses-and-Proposed-Solutions1-4438-4965-0.htm

or, e-mail ... [redacted]

or, check for the title at Abebooks.com,

Amazon.com, Amazon.co.uk, etc.

Please make a book purchase request for this anthology at your local library and your local college or university library.

Thank you.

“IRELAND IN CRISIS” includes essays by the poets

Séamas Cain (“The New Wave of Innovative Writers

in Ireland”); Diarmuid Curraoin (“Metaphysics and

Myth in James Joyce”); Mícheál Ó hAodha (“Invisible

People : Invisible Culture”); and Feargus Denman (“Revisiting the Language of Ireland :

A Revision of Ideology”).

“IRELAND IN CRISIS” also includes revelations and critiques by Melanie O'Reilly and Frank Lillis

(“The Irish Music Scam”); and Virginia Morris

(“A Rough History of The Celtic Arts Center of Los Angeles”); among others.

“IRELAND IN CRISIS” also includes thought-provoking essays by Cathal

MacSwiney Brugha, Catherine MacSwiney

Brugha, Victor Vargas, and most particularly Dr. Seán Ó Nualláin.

SEÁN Ó NUALLÁIN [from his “Prologue” to this anthology] : “Séamas Cain described his play about the ‘Conamara’ community in Minnesota, and we were fortunate to have him joined in this by Bridget Connelly of UC Berkeley, who found out late in life that she too came from this background. An excerpt from Cain's Gaelic play was performed. The ‘Language, literature and society’ theme was introduced with another contribution from Cain, featured here, on innovative Irish writers, both autochthonous and diasporic, surely part of the healing of our country.”

Respectfully,

Séamas Cain

12. Drunken Boat

Drunken Boat Issue #18!

Mon 6 Jan 2014

Dear Drunken Boat Friends,

Drunken Boat, international online journal of the arts, is pleased to announce the release of DB#18! DB#18 features special folios on Debt, our pervasive economic and psychological condition; the Ocean, which delves into the depths of nautical and marine life that surrounds us; the Librotraficante movement to smuggle banned books back into Arizona and Texas to counter the hostile anti-immigration legislation enacted there; and video_dumbo, the annual festival of international contemporary video art that has emerged over the last decade as a crucial exhibition platform for emerging filmmaker and media artists.

Additionally, we are pleased to showcase our regular features on Fiction, Poetry, and Reviews.

Please join us at AWP in Seattle to celebrate the launch of DB#18, and welcome our new Managing Editor, Erica Mena. We will be co-hosting a performance with Ugly Duckling Presse, Ahsahta and Les Figues Press on Friday, February 28th, @ 7pm at the Alibi Room (85 Pike Street, #410, Post Alley) in Seattle, WA.

And keep an eye on our blog to find out more about what we are planning for 2014, our 15th year in existence!

Drunken Boat is a non-profit organization and magazine/book publisher that depends on reader support for its existence. Drunken Boat Issue #18 is now live at drunkenboat.com/db18 - enjoy!

FLIPBOOK: A Critical Study of the Adult-Contemporary Poetics of Kenneth Goldsmith

Mon 6 Jan 2014

I’m very excited to share with everybody the link to a PDF proof of the critical book I’ve written about Kenneth Goldsmith. I believe this is this first critical piece to examine Goldsmith while remaining true to the spirit of his work, meaning that it is perhaps the first example of *Uncreative Critical Writing *(I think, I haven’t looked into it).

Facing Pages event in Arnhem, NL this March

Tue 7 Jan 2014

Hi friends,

Facing Pages, the biennial festival of independent print magazines, perhaps Europe's largest, is coming up again this March, and they are currently looking for magazines to include in their big exhibition. If you'd like to be included, all you have to do (it seems) is send 2 copies of your mag and contact [redacted] let them know it's coming.

To find out more and to see if it's a good fit for you, their website is here: http://www.facingpages.org

I'm not associated with the organization so please direct any questions to Facing Pages themselves.

Happy new year! I hope to see many of you in Seattle soon!

Megan

I'd like to make members of this list aware of the "Engaged Humanities and the Creative Life" MA program at Pacifica Graduate Institute. It is a hybrid on-line/low residency program, although students look forward to the 4-day residentials because of the beauty of the campus, which is in the hills a few miles south of Santa Barbara, CA.: http://www.pacifica.edu/

Such distinguished scholars as mythologist Joseph Campbell, psychologist James Hillman, Religious Studies professor David L. Miller, and philosopher Edward S. Casey have taught there. The present Chair is literary critic, Susan Rowland: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=MXHCIYefgsc

The Engaged Humanities program values both scholarship and creativity, with an emphasis on Depth (Jungian) Psychology:

Our theme coincides with the 2014 MLA theme "Vulnerable Times". Readers will bring forward some writing (their own or by another) which is itself vulnerable or bears the marks of vulnerability upon it: forgotten work, work that nearly didn't exist, denied or discouraged work, etc. For the performance, readers will adhere to codes of vulnerability to create the order/disorder for the evening.

Red Rover Series is curated by Laura Goldstein and Jennifer Karmin. Each event is designed as a reading experiment with participation by local, national, and international writers, artists, and performers. Founded in 2005, the over seventy events have featured a diversity of renowned creative minds.

JAMES REIDEL has published poems in many journals over the years and his new book of verse, Jim's Book, is now available from Black Lawrence Press. He is the biographer of Weldon Kees. With Daniele Pantano, he has translated Rober Walser's dramolets—short plays—selections from which appear in Conjunctions 60 (Spring 2013) and a forthcoming New Directions pamphlet. He has translated two novels by Werfel, including Pale Blue Ink in a Lady's Hand and an expanded and revised translation of The Forty Days of Musa Dagh, both published by David R. Godine in 2012. He has also translated two books of poems by Thomas Bernhard in one volume, In Hora Mortis/Under the Iron of the Moon, a 2006 selection in Princeton University Press's Lockert Library of Poetry in Translation. He is currently finalizing Our Trakl, a three-book collection of the work of Georg Trakl to mark the centenary of the Austrian poet's death in 1914.

Spread the word. Far and wide,

William Slaughter

The Factory Reading Series: Thomas, Lea + erskine, Feb 6, 2014

Fri 10 Jan 2014

The Factory Reading presents:
a night of readings and chapbook launches with readings by:

> N.W. Lea (Ottawa ON)
> Hugh Thomas (Fredericton NB)
> + m erskine (Toronto ON) lovingly hosted by rob mclennan Thursday, February 6, 2014;

doors 7pm; reading 7:30pm
The Carleton Tavern, Ottawa
223 Armstrong Street (at Parkdale; upstairs)

author bios:

N.W. Lea lives and writes in Ottawa. He is the author of two previous chapbooks, light years (above/ground press, 2006) and Actual Girl (The Emergency Response Unit, 2011) as well as the full-length collection, Everything is Movies (Chaudiere Books, 2007).

He will be launching his second above/ground press chapbook Present! (2014).

Hugh Thomas is a poet and translator living in Fredericton, where he teaches mathematics at the University of New Brunswick. His most recent chapbook, Opening the Dictionary, published by above/ground press, was shortlisted for the 2012 bpNichol chapbook award. Franzlations, a collection of illustrated Kafka remixes, created with Gary Barwin and Craig Conley, was published by New Star Books in 2011.

He will be launching his second above/ground press chapbook Albanian Suite (2014).

m erskine is a long-time corrupter of words. The poetry condition is responding well to treatment, thanks for asking.

She also had an above/ground press poem broadside reprinted in the anthology Groundswell: the best of above/ground press, 1993-2003 (Broken Jaw Press, 2003).

Boog City http://www.boogcity.com Boog City is a New York City-based small press now in its 23rd year and East Village community newspaper of the same name. It has put out approximately 200 publications, including 35 volumes of poetry and various magazines and a newspaper, featuring work by Allen Ginsberg and Lawrence Ferlinghetti among others, and theme issues on baseball, women’s writing, and Louisville, Ky. It hosts and curates two regular performance series—d.a. levy lives: celebrating the renegade press, featuring a non-NYC small press, its writers, and a musical act; and Classic Albums Live, where up to 13 local musical acts perform a classic album live. Past albums have included Elvis Costello, My Aim is True; Nirvana, Nevermind; Sleater-Kinney's, Dig Me Out; and Liz Phair, Exile in Guyville. All of these series are hosted at Sidewalk Cafe.

Nicholas DeBoer
Nicholas DeBoer is a poet from the United States. Co-runner of the journal Elderly. Currently, living in Bushwick, Brooklyn.

Claire Donato
http://www.somanytumbleweeds.com/
Claire Donato lives in Windsor Terrace, Brooklyn, and is the author of Burial (Tarpaulin Sky Press). Her hometown is Pittsburgh.

Darrel Alejandro Holnes Darrel Alejandro Holnes is a writer-producer whose book, Prime, with other members of the Phantastique 5, a selection of young poets for The Best American Poetry blog by Jericho Brown, is forthcoming from Sibling Rivalry Press in 2014. He teaches at Rutgers University and resides in the East Village.

Jeff T. Johnson http://www.jefftjohnson.com/ Jeff T. Johnson’s poetry has recently appeared in coconut, smoking glue gun, and Forklift, Ohio, and he holds a digital residency at The Organism for Poetic Research. He lives in Windsor Terrace, Brooklyn, is editor in chief at LIT, and edits Dewclaw.

Shawn Maddey

Shawn Maddey is the editor of Barge Press.

Morgan Parker http://www.morgan-parker.com/ Morgan Parker's first collection, Other People's Comfort Keeps Me Up At Night, is forthcoming from Switchback Books. Recent works are forthcoming from Gigantic Sequins and Tin House. She lives in Bedford– Stuyvesant, Brooklyn.

Marianne Pillsbury http://www.depressionthemusical.com/ Maine native Marianne Pillsbury's life changed the day she was cast in a community theater production of Annie at age 10. It seemed she was on the yellow brick road to musical theaterdom until she attended Brown University where she showed her first signs of rock & roll rebellion writing her senior honors English thesis, "Pop Icon Prince's Dual Obsession with Sexual Ecstasy & Religious Salvation: A Textual & Cultural Analysis." In 2004, after escaping a harrowing career as an advertising copywriter, she released her debut album, The Wrong Marianne, on her own indie label, Average White Girl Records.

Produced by award-winning songwriter Bonnie Hayes (Bonnie Raitt's "Have A Heart"), the album received positive reviews from The New York Times, Time Out New York, The Boston Herald and The San Francisco Chronicle and elicited comparisons to the best work of Liz Phair, Juliana Hatfield, and Jill Sobule.

In 2007, Marianne started teaching songwriting workshops at the Willie Mae Rock Camp for Girls, a non-profit music and mentoring program that empowers girls and women by encouraging them to explore self- expression through music.

For four and a half years, Marianne worked behind-the-scenes at the Jazz Foundation of America, helping elder jazz and blues musicians in crisis.

Her work with Willie Mae and the Jazz Foundation inspired her to start writing an autobiographical pop-rock musical, Depression: The Musical, which was selected as a sponsored project of the New York Foundation for the Arts in 2008.

Alicia Salvadeo
http://aliciasalvadeo.tumblr.com/
Alicia Salvadeo is the author of two chapbooks, Memory Milk (Diamond Wave Press) and Err to Narrow (Poetry Society of America).

XEROLAGE 56 by Rosaire Appel

P'layout Intrusions. By Rosaire Appel

I noticed finally that I've been noticing page layouts for while, a long while even, perhaps since childhood. I remember how pictures and words were dispersed in those first books. Maybe everyone does. The subject is: the arrangement of information on a flat surface — not in terms of good and bad design — but as a language in its own right. It's a language that has a lot of formality, like architecture. Books, newspapers, magazines of course — contemporary and historic — and also ancient writing on papyrus, on stone, on clay….

No doubt my (abstract) comics are inspired by this also. I'm not researching however, I'm not even thinking about it: I'm just noticing it in the world — and exploring it on the page. The foundations of these compositions were blocks of newspaper text to which I added shards from my own commercially-printed book proofs. They're collages of layouts — with additions and subtractions — suggestive, allusive.

features the flotsam and jetsam of partially hidden dialogue; language as an exploded view--as a blur doused in ink. Here, the possibilities of space and displacement form in a marriage of images and text that boast this inaccessible, yet very accessible decomposition-- laying out form and anti-form, while suggesting the possibilities of the impossible. —Matina Stamatakis

The pages of P'Layout Intrusions by Rosaire Appel unfold like a graphic novel, a near wordless journey through text turned geography. Organic shapes and columnar panels invite us to narrate for ourselves the action of Appel's thoughtful collage sequence. —Robin F. Brox

Rosaire Appel's Intrusions Playout is one book of visual poetry that will register on seismographs all over the world. Each page is in the midst of topsy-turvy seismic activity: fault-blocks of text upturning, image-magma under immense pressure erupting into space, molten lava bursting into flame. Bring a hard hat readers! —Crag Hill

The primary investigation of Xerolage is how collage technique of 20th century art, typography, computer graphics, visual & concrete poetry movements & the art of the copier have been combined. Each issue is devoted to the work of one artist.

Re: CALL FOR PAPERS ON JAYNE CORTEZ
Thu 16 Jan 2014

Dear Professor Hinton,

I am currently at work on a book chapter on the work of Jayne Cortez. The book as a whole treats the relationship between innovative writing and music; the Cortez chapter is the last in the book. The chapter title is, "Eurydice Takes the Mic," and it frames Cortez's practice in relation to the Orphic tradition linking poetry and music. I would very much appreciate the opportunity to air this argument at the ALA. Please let me know if you would be willing to consider a fully formed abstract.

Thank you, and all best.

Please forward

Hi,

Just over four weeks from now, from Sun., Feb. 16 through Mon. Feb. 17, we'll be putting on the first Welcome to Boog City 7.5 poetry, music, and theater festival. It will feature 34 poets, 5 musical acts, 1 poets theater play, 1 political talk, and 1 d.a. levy lives visiting press over the two days.

Thanks to Jonathan Allen for the festival's logo; and for booking the music, our music editor J.J. Hayes, and the poets, Ray DeJesús, Ted Dodson, Claire Donato, Jeff T. Johnson, Jessica Smith, Kiely Sweatt, and myself.

Among the festival highlights are:

—our d.a. levy lives series continues its 11th season featuring Philadelphia's Fact-Simile Editions;

—Our 44th Classic Album Live show, paying tribute to the late Lou Reed, is The Velvet Underground and Nico, performed live by Kung Fu Crimewave and friends;

—a performance by Lunch Break Tantra, a group of improvisers out of the Upright Citizens Brigade Theatre in New York;

—and a Poets' Theater piece from Magus Magnus.

The full schedule for the event is below this note, followed by performer bios and websites.

If you need any additional information you can reach me at 212-842- BOOG (2664) or [redacted].

as ever,
David

The Velvet Underground and Nico, performed live by Kung Fu Crimewave and friends Lou Reed's final request was that the Brooklyn-based band Kung Fu Crimewave (http://www.kungfucrimewave.com) play his album Velvet Underground and Nico in it's entirety. Lou said "I came up with the idea because the album cover features a banana, and Kung Fu Crimewave features a banana playing bass" followed by death rattle. While some dispute this claim, Shia LeBouf supported the claim in sky writing. Regardless of the hype surrounding this groundbreaking performance, The band will be joined by Julie Delano, Susan Hwang and Leslie Graves of GOLD (http://vimeo.com/43841048), Phoebe Kreutz (http://www.phoebekreutz.com), Casey Holford (http://www.Caseyholford.com), Hallie Kelly, Rebecca Satellite of A Deer A Horse (http://www.adeerahorse.bandcamp.com), and Julie LaMendola of Ching Ching (http://chingchongsong.bandcamp.com).

Kung Fu Crimewave and friends is:

Fact-Simile http://www.fact-simile.com Philadelphia's Fact-Simile is a small independent publisher of mostly handmade books and book-objects. We strive to compose all of our products from recycled and reclaimed materials and to help further expand the physical definitions of literature.

Fact-Simile is also an annual large-format (8.5" x 11") literary journal. It is available free at the above url and in print while supplies last. Our aesthetic is best described by the content featured in each of our past issues.

Julia Bloch http://jacket2.org/" http://jacket2.org/ Julia Bloch grew up in Northern California and Sydney, Australia, and is the author of Letters to Kelly Clarkson (Sidebrow Books), a Lambda Literary Award Finalist. Recent poems and translations have appeared in Fence, Manor House Quarterly, and Sixth Finch. She lives in Philadelphia, works as associate director of the Kelly Writers House, and is a coeditor of Jacket2.

Elizabeth Guthrie http://aplacesortof.blogspot.com/ Elizabeth Guthrie is a poet and performer living in New York researching for a practice-based Ph.D. in text and performance at the University of East London. She is a co-editor of Livestock Editions. Her work has appeared in journals including Onedit, Requited, Bombay Gin, Pinstripe Fedora, Alba Londres, Open Letter, and Fact-Simile. She has a pamphlet, X Portraits, out through Crater Press, a chapbook, Yellow and Red, through Black Lodge Press, the collaborative chapbook with Andrew K. Peterson, Between Here and the Telescopes, through Slumgullion Press and a book entitled, Portraits - Captions from Contraband Books. She is poet in residence at the Centre for Creative Collaboration in London. She blogs at the above url.

Stan Mir http://chapterhousereadings.blogspot.com/ Stan Mir is the author of two chapbooks, Test Patterns and Flight Patterns, both published by JR

Vansant. His most recent full- length collection is The Lacustrine Suite (Pavement Saw, 2011). He lives in Philadelphia where he co-organizes the Chapter & Verse reading series with Ryan Eckes.

Ollie oxen / Allysa Oliver http://www.allysaoliver.com/
Ukulele and guitar playing singer songwriter with a haunting voice and surreal lyrics will make you wanna howl at the moon as she gets tuned.

Brian Teare http://www.brianteare.net A former NEA Fellow, Brian Teare is the recipient of poetry fellowships from the MacDowell Colony, the Headlands Center for the Arts, and the American Antiquarian Society. He is the author of four books—The Room Where I Was Born, Sight Map, the Lambda Award-winning Pleasure, and Companion Grasses. He’s also published seven chapbooks, most recently Helplessness, [black sun crown], and SORE EROS. An assistant professor at Temple University, he lives in Philadelphia, where he makes books by hand for his micropress, Albion Books.

Kevin Varrone http://boxscoreapp.com Kevin Varrone’s most recent project is box score: an autobiography, a free, interactive poetry app for iPhone and iPad (available at the app store or the above url. His other publications include Eephus (Little Red Leaves Textile Series), Passyunk Lost (Ugly Duckling Presse), the philadelphia improvements (Ugly Duckling Presse), id est (Instance Press), and g-point Almanac: 6.21-9.21 (ixnay press). He teaches at Temple University and lives outside Philadelphia.

Amelia Bentley http://www.speakwright.org/ Amelia Bentley is composed of a patina and erosion of texts, slowly pursuing the edge of the capability of language through formal strategies of disruption and appropriation. If, as Chris Hedges says, "We've been robbed of language by which we can express the reality of what we're undergoing," then the language out of which identity is composed ourselves must be broken and re-combined to access possibilities of expression and recognition more accurate to reality.

Anselm Berrigan http://writing.upenn.edu/pennsound/x/Berrigan-Anselm.php Anselm Berrigan's recent publications include Loading, a collaborative book with painter Jonathan Allen published by Brooklyn Arts Press, and Sure Shot, a pink chap from Overpass Books. Primitive State, a book- length poem, will be published by Edge Books in 2014.

Eric Seader, "We Will Mend: Youth Violence and the Healing Power of Music" http://theburntroses.wordpress.com/ Eric Seader is a paralegal, singer-songwriter, and a progressive socio- political advocate living in New York City. He received his B.A. in Visual Media from American University in Washington, D.C. and obtained his paralegal certification from Hofstra University on Long Island. He credits his parents with instilling within him progressive values from an early age, and fueling his drive toward activism and advocacy.

A singer-songwriter for over 18 years, he strives to touch as many genres with his music as possible, and has recently returned to his roots, writing songs with a message, as he did when he first began. Following the tragic events in Newtown, Conn. in December 2012, he wrote a song to help him cope with the tragedy in hopes that it would help others heal as well. His friend, and now writing partner, Rorie Kelly, took his lyrics and rewrote the music, lending her vocal and instrumental talents to the piece. The two formed the duo The Burnt Roses in late 2013 as they recorded their first single, "We Will Mend." The single was released to coincide with the first anniversary of the Sandy Hook tragedy, with 100% of the proceeds going to charity. They plan to write more songs in the future to spark debate, start necessary dialogues, and, most importantly, to bring healing to those who need it most.

I honor the translation that resists normalization-that way lies dead and charred surfaces. These paragraphs began with an off-handed promise to read a friend's translations of selected poems by Paul Celan and that promise has led me to a careful reading of Derrida's Sovereignties, especially "Shibboleth." Comments on Pierre Joris' The Meridian: Paul Celan and Susan H. Gillespie's Corona: Selected Poems of Paul Celan are embedded in this post.

Poetry Readings, SF Bay Area, 1958 - 1970

http://foundsf.org/index.php?title=Poetry_Readings/Reading_Poetry_in_the_San_Francisco_Bay_Area

"Shaping San Francisco", a website dedicated to recovering obscured, lost or erased stories, has kindly resurrected my history, involvement, etc. in a essay/history of Bay Area readings from 1958 to the late 1970's and the initial emergence of Language Poetry. (It was the lead essay of a large Momo's Press volume, The Poetry Reading: A Contemporary Compendium on Language & Performance, edited by myself and Ellen Zweig (1981, 350 pages). Contrary to the sometimes impression that there was a simple, some would say acrimonious segue from work by the Beats to LP, the late 60's and early 70's oversaw the rise of rich, and very publicly present array of poets and poetries emerging from multiple threads: Feminist, Gay, Black, Latino, Asian, politicaL et al. In fact, I would suggest, the relationship or not between the hegemony of primarily white based Beat work, the emerging work by LP folks and these writers 'in between' will be much more vital to explore than ignore. It was certainly a vitally wild period in this neck of the woods. Rereading the essay, what I like about it best, is that it brings back a concrete sense of what it was like to live and write into and through what were historically, to put it mildly, challenging times. So much was unleashed.

Donate to Woodland Pattern / Jan 25th Milwaukee Reading

Tue 21 Jan 2014

hi friends....please think about making a donation to woodland pattern book center in milwaukee, hands down one of the most AMAZING independent book stores in the country.Â i'll be reading as part of the poetry marathon on january 25th and am looking for sponsors, as are many other wonderful writers.Â all proceeds raised from this event help woodland pattern continue its literary programming.Â more details below.
Â
happy new year,
jen karmin

Every year, on the last Saturday of January, over 125 poets, writers, and performers show their support for Woodland Pattern by participating in its Annual Poetry Marathon & Benefit.Â Woodland Pattern is a nonprofit organization, all donations are fully tax deductible.Â Individuals can now sponsor readers online through the new â€œpledge a readerâ€ giving form.
Â
Pledges can be made here, both small and large.
http://www.woodlandpattern.org/marathon_2014.shtml
Â
Woodland Pattern Book Center was founded in Milwaukee, Wisconsin's Riverwest neighborhood by Anne Kingsbury and Karl Gartung in 1979. The center houses a bookstore with over 25,000 small press titles, in addition to an art gallery where they present exhibitions, artist talks, readings, experimental films, concerts, and writing workshops.

Founded to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the City of Ottawa, Canada's glorious capital city, "ottawater," and its chemical formula/logo "O2(H2O)," is a poetry annual produced exclusively on-line, in both readable and printable pdf formats, and found at (http://www.ottawater.com). An anthology focusing on Ottawa poets and poetics, its first issue appeared in January 2005, 150 years after old Bytown became the City of Ottawa.

Long seen only as a town still echoing its origins as a backwater Victorian lumber town, and made up of bureaucrats and technocrats, and a more conservative poetics, "ottawater," edited by Ottawa-born writer, editor and publisher rob mclennan, exists to remind readers of what work is happening, and has been happening for years, despite government types insisting on repeating that the arts in Ottawa is about to begin. We say instead: we have always been here.

Robert Zend: Poet without Borders

Wed 22 Jan 2014

As some of you are aware, during the past few months I've been writing an illustrated exploration of the life and work of Robert Zend (1929-1985), avant-garde Hungarian-Canadian poet and artist. It features photographs, poetry, concrete poetry, collages, typewriter art, and fiction, some of it never before made public. Special attention is given to Zend's cosmopolitan literary spirit, including his international influences and affinities. I'll be posting installments twice a week on my blog, Rogue Embryo.

This has been a joyful and fascinating project, made possible by the kind assistance of many people, including members of the Zend family (Janine Zend, Natalie Zend, and Ibi Gabori) and the curators of the Zend fonds at the University of Toronto Library, Media Commons (Rachel Beattie and Brock Silversides), among others.

Here is the address for the first installment, "Preface with Portraits":

http://rogueembryo.com/2013/12/04/robert-zend-1929-1985-poet-without-borders-preface-with-portraits/

If you'd like to receive notices of further installments, please feel free interested in this topic. Your feedback and comments are most welcome.

Warm wishes,

Camlle Martin

Hiring Assistant or Associate Professor of Creative Writing and Poetics

Wed 22 Jan 2014

Naropa University’s Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics invites applications for a full-time core candidate advanced Assistant Professor or Associate Professor with excellent abilities in creative writing, literary scholarship, and program administration: appointment to begin fall 2014. Duties include teaching (on campus and online) undergraduate and graduate creative writing workshops, literary studies, and professional development courses; advising BA and MFA thesis students; service to the School and University; as well as program coordination of the MFA in Creative Writing and Poetics. We seek a candidate who can teach across genres, with an emphasis in innovative prose writing (fiction and creative nonfiction) and an interest in queer literature and theory. Teaching load: 3/3 plus MFA thesis advising; course release for program coordination.

Job Duties:

•Serve the School and University as described in the Faculty Handbook, including willingness to serve as School director in the future.

•Teach creative writing workshops, literary studies, professional development courses, and Core courses.

•Serve as Program Coordinator of the MFA in Creative Writing and Poetics.

•Develop and assess curriculum.

•Engage in personal and professional development in contemplative practice and education, as well as diversity/inclusivity.

Minimum Qualifications:

•MFA or PhD in Creative Writing or Literature.

•Four years of college-level teaching in creative writing and literary studies.

•Two published books of innovative prose (assistant professor); three published books of innovative prose (associate professor).

•Two years of academic program coordination experience, including budget responsibilities.

•Expertise in teaching innovative fiction, creative nonfiction, literature, and online.

•Computer skills, including Microsoft Office.

•Strong interpersonal and communication skills.

Preferred Qualifications:

•Familiarity with and commitment to Naropa University's mission of contemplative education, diversity, and sustainability.

•Familiarity with the lineage of the Jack Kerouac School of Disembodied Poetics, including its Summer Writing Program and the history of poetics, activism, small press publishing, letterpress print shop, performance, and hybrid/cross-disciplinary collaborations.

•Experience with higher education curricular planning and assessment.

•Background in teaching queer theory and literature.

•Experience or interest in publishing, journal editing, and overseeing events, such as a reading series.

•Supervisory experience of staff or student employees.

Applications: Qualified applicants should apply online by January 31, 2014 and include:

•A letter of interest, including primary professional qualifications and pedagogical statement.

•Curriculum vitae, highlighting teaching experience, administrative experience, publications, and community engagement.

•One published book of innovative prose. Upload PDF or mail to:

Naropa University JKS Faculty Search 2130 Arapahoe Ave Boulder, CO 80302

•Three recent course syllabi of your own design.

•Three letters of recommendation from writers or colleagues in equal or higher academic positions, highlighting teaching, publications, and collegiality.

Naropa University is actively engaged in creating an inclusive, diverse community and is proud to be an Equal Opportunity Employer. In keeping with our diversity initiatives, we encourage applications from persons of historically under-represented groups and those who support diversity.

Poetics List (1993-2014)
Thu 23 Jan 2014

I started the Poetics List in late 1993, just after I came to Buffalo and co-founded the Poetics Program and a little while before the founding of the Electronic Poetry Center. At that time the this list was a radically new format. But it has been over ten years since I left Buffalo; it is not longer viable for me to continue to sponsor the list.

I want to thanks the list moderators, a role first introduced in 1999: Joel Kuszai, Chris Alexander, Lori Emerson, and our longest serving moderator Amy King. I am grateful to them for the work they have done.

While I have not been active on the list in recent years, I do follow the posts. And over the years the list has been great company and the origin of friendships for many of us and some great conversations.

More information on the list at

Re: Poetics List (1993-2014)
Thu 23 Jan 2014

I began reading the Poetics List while working at book stores and bars in Chicago, as-yet completely uncommitted to any particular direction for my life. I picked up A Poetics with my staff discount at the Seminary Coop Bookstore, and then stumbled onto the list somehow. I started to get serious about poetry, and then, two years later, began the PhD program at UB. Like most of us, I haven't really been active on the list in years, but it played a very real role in my life. Thanks, Charles.

Thank you, Charles, for providing a forum that, for many years, provided a means for serious discussions and disputes a la poetics, especially in the earlier years, when various persons were drummed off the list, along with ensuing commentary. One wishes such a thing could be rekindled in and from another place, as now's the time for exactly that, now, more than ever. Ciao.

Thu 23 Jan 2014

Dear Charles,
thank you for getting us all in touch via this great list!

I would want to take the opportunity here to say that via this list I got to know the American poetry magazines, publishers, small presses etc. As a result of that, I'm happy to announce that in the fall of this year, Three Rooms Press in New York will publish an English and experimental poetry book of mine, entitled "This is Belgian Chocolate". I will be coming to New York for the presentation of the book and for a series of lectures on (defining and how to analyze) visual poetry and readings/performances. If any of you know venues or is interested in having me, please get in touch for a bio, information.... You can find a sample of my performance work here: http://youtu.be/AMwYDO-x2d0

Thank you again Charles for making the networking and information sharing, calls and publication information possible. We (or at least I) will truly miss this.

With lots of greetings from Brussels, Belgium on the other side of the Atlantic.
All the best,

Philip

Charles;

Thank you for providing this list for some many years.
I do hope someone will take it up for another generation, as it's important that poets keep talking to each other.

I've been a lurker in recent years; not so when I first was on the list a long time ago. But the list has been an invaluable source of "deep gossip," a sense of what is going in in the diffuse, dispersed poetry communities. I will miss it, and I hope something besides Facebook emerges to take its place.

Charles,

It's been a great venue and I've met many lifetime companions through the list and its offshoots, so thank you for providing the opportunity.

The list is ending just as my first full-length book is becoming available from Blaze Vox books next month. In that I've registered unhappiness with the commercial nature of the list in recent years, it's appropriately paradoxical that my last post in this company would be to supply that link:

http://www.blazevox.org/index.php/Shop/new-releases/scholarship-by-joe-safdie-367/

Best regards to all far-flung correspondents. "If the Poetics List didn't exist, it would have to be invented" (?).

Thanks, Charles. The list has been important in my life. I started reading it and the Electronic Poetry Center in 1995. I'd print out interesting essays by you, Charles, and others, and I'd leave them in the coffee shop where I hosted a weekly poetry reading series in Victoria Canada. The essays always disappeared; people appreciated them. The list introduced me to many interesting poets and their poetics over the years.

The list was the strongest internationalist element in English poetry for many years, I think.

Many thanks, Charles, for such egalitarian use of your considerable 'cultural capital' in creating the list and the Electronic Poetry Center with Loss and others. Well done. Very well done.

Dear Charles and everyone on "the List" --

I add my thanks to the long list of List thank-yous. What a great innovation in its time, Charles -- adding to all your incredible accomplishments. You've brought so many of together through this forum over years. While I often don't respond to individual posts, I read a lot of what I receive. I, too, have learned more about the small press and poetics issues by reading this List. I will be sad to open my gmail account and not have the list-serve showing up.

Something to think about: Does anyone else have the institutional tech-support to start up a Poetics List 2 and take over the current email list if so? My university is hopelessly under-equipped technically. But for the poetry professors out there at tech-savvy (and better funded) colleges, perhaps one of you could consider taking this project on.

While internet journals are not quite the same thing as a Listserve, there is the tradition of changing institutional venues with the example of Jacket / Jacket2 -- and How2 may have changed its institutional server facilities midstream at least once (and will again if it ever comes back -- there's another forum that I dearly miss!)

Good wishes to you all,

Laura

Re: Poetics List (1993-2014)
Thu 23 Jan 2014

Thanks, Charles, and all, for the list and your presence in my life over the years. As a young-ish poet of the autodidact variety, one who relied on it heavily for tidbits of information, leads to other areas of exploration, promptings for reflection, and a sense of poetic community while I had none in my "physical" life, it hurts to have it end. And the activity I dreamed of instigating, once I came out of lurkdom and pleaded to these fellow poets to share more, will have to pass in regret.

I wonder if someone is willing to carry the torch elsewhere? Or what lists others would recommend to ease the pain?

what jim said. i've been lurking the last few years during my career shift but I will miss this source of news information and camaraderie. it's influence on my development as a poet and writer is not something that could be easily measured, but I would have ended up somewhere different, and probably less richly embroidered, if it hadn't existed.

Charles, perhaps a final American Graffiti moment to tell us where they are now, the men and women who started this strange utopian project and whose names were once as familiar to me as my own?

Maybe that's the urge of the novelist, not the poet.

Thanks for doing this,

xxx Kevin K.

I'm going to miss it. I've discovered some interesting journals and websites here, and met interesting people. All of whom were gracious to me even when I was clueless. Since my day job is stay-at-home dad, it's been a great connection into the greater world of poetry.

So long and thanks for all the fish.

Any chance for one last post to move to the future?

Thu 23 Jan 2014

Here it is:
AMULETS is a publication devoted to AMericans Using LETters and Signs. Inspired and informed by the traditions of Dada, concrete poetry, lettrism and INIsmo, this journal gathers contributions from practitioners of the visual poetry community, and publishes them in two forms: an on-line website with complete texts, and a limited edition series of amulets (suitable as neckwear) that will contain fragments of the complete texts.

The inaugural issue will be devoted to PRESCRIPTIONS, ie: statements of purpose, ideology, principles, guidelines, orientations. Etc.

The editors are David W. Seaman, founder, and Paul Lambert. Seaman is a scholar of avant-garde 20th century poetry, author of the book, French Concrete Poetry and other essays on the subject. Paul Lambert has been dubbed the “King of INIUSA,” recognizing his role as an avant-garde artist in America.

All works will remain the property of the artist, with permission to AMULETS for one-time publication.

Contributors selected for the inaugural issue will be able to display their statement of principle, and from one to three original works that illustrate their orientation.

Fri 24 Jan 2014

(Also want to point out re: recent posts that there were feminist and other poetics newsgroups before that got spammed into close to non- existence, and the BBS systems carried similar - lists/listserves were only one of the early forms of dissemination. That said, however -)

I do wish the list could continue under other auspices; it provides an incredible service that really can't be replaced by IM or Facebook pages... It's difficult enough to find out about poetry/poetics events, publications, content, even with the list; without it, those of us out of the imminent NYC scene are a bit at a loss -

Utopian, community building, egalitarian, innovatory---all these apply to the Poetics List. It certainly profoundly changed my sense (far flung here in Auckland) of the world--so much larger and accessible--in which quality discussion of poetry might take place. I thank Charles for that, and those who contributed so fully, especially in those early years when the uniqueness of the technological moment that he and Loss had captured was so clear. Wystan

Before we go, could someone please, one last time, denounce the rest of us for not talking about poetics, send me a back channel flame, and rail against the tyranny of Buffalo? I miss those days.

True, many of our discussions have migrated to FaceBook and elsewhere, but this list has continued over the years to be a place I could turn to for much needed information. I recall the time it only took Ron Silliman a minute to come up with an identification that had been puzzling me in a Bob Kaufman poem.

So, thanks again to Charles and the moderators for years of pleasure and information.

Salute

Nothing, this spume, virgin verse
Only to point to the cup;
So afar many a troupe
Of sirens drowns in reverse.

We navigate, O my diverse
Friends, me now on the poop
You the sumptuous prow to reap
Lightnings and seasons perverse;

A fine ivresse brings me
Fearless of its very pitch
To bear upright this salute

Solitude, reef, star
To whatever is worth
The white concern of our sheet.

Thank you, Charles (& Joel, Chris, Lori, Amy): the whole world came aboard . . .

What will be missed ...

Fri 24 Jan 2014

One thing that will be sorely lacking After Poetics List is a virtual space for calls for poetry of a more experimental, conceptual, language and/or multi-media hybrid aesthetic. The on-line general versions of such lists that I've found are hopelessly muddled with a zillion publications, many of which are alien to radical "innovative work."

Without defining what that is (I'm not gonna do that), the PL has provided some narrowing of that gap. It's been a huge service, just for posting practical poetics info. and announcements to a more specific audience.

As large as it is, Poetics List has a kind of community impetus and pulse.

Thus, unless someone knows about an alternative space serving this function already, we might, for example, start a Facebook page that is updated monthly with those announcement type materials. I don't know how this would work. There should still be a moderator. (Amy, are you still available? Any volunteers?)

Ironically, since I am a blogger and do all kinds of interactive work myself, Facebook is the software I am least familiar with. And I don't like the advertising and snoop-ware. I would have to investigate these possibilities. But I'm happy to try to get something going.

We also need a space to announce calls for papers for conferences on poetics, advertisements for new blog poetics posts and journals, even a space for remembrances of those poets who've passed.

Please advise. You can backchannel me at my personal email for on-going discussion:

$400 artist/writer looking for a cheap room (Victoria)
I'm looking to rent a room anywhere biking distance to Oak Bay. Central locations ideal. I work at a BC Liquor store and I am leaving my apartment Aug 1st. I am extremely clean and organized. I barely ever drink alcohol these days. I do smoke pot every once in a while and cigarettes outside occasionally.
I am considerate, and quiet. I don't have much stuff except recording equipment I will store in the corner of my room. I like to write music quietly (for the most part) in the mornings. Cheaper the better, I'm learning to live with less.

I am a marine ecologist and young professional working at Cal Poly. During times off I like to surf, ski (especially backcountry), climb/boulder, do adventures of all sorts, listen to music (I have 400+ vinyl records), brew beer and make wine (I'm not very good at it, but hey), work on the house/property, and of course eat good food with good friends. I am hoping to find like-minded renters who are fun and adventurous, as well as respectful of this beautiful house and our neighborhood.

Rent is $1000 (master bedroom) or $900 (regular bedroom) per month, plus utilities.

Master Bedroom with walk-in closet. Slider off Living room to private patio & garden area & storage unit. Nicely landscaped community grounds, community pool & Clubhouse.

Really Nice Fully Furnished Bedroom. $375 month. $125 deposit. Queen bed, dresser, lamps, TV, Table w/chair, and loveseat. 1 mile W of downtown The Dalles. Large yard with a country like setting. Good parking, Rent includes utilities, cable, internet. Includes all linens, towels, bedding. Share kitchen appliances and accessories, bathroom with tub-shower, laundry room with washer and dryer. Thanks, Praise and a place to migrate
Fri 24 Jan 2014

Thanks Charles for being the catalyst for something virtual but very real. Enjoy your free time too!

For those of you sad to lose something so valuable to the world of poetry

I could host a poetics list by creating a poetics list category at Listen and Be Heard Poetry Cafe http://www.listenandbeheard.net/poetry/
Registered users could post to that category. It could be moderated, but not by me entirely....

If there's interest just let me know.
Wishing you Peace and Poetry
Martha Cinader Mims

Re: What will be missed ...

Fri 24 Jan 2014

I think, one way or another, the list should continue; Fb is bad for a number of reasons: it's noisy, the feeds are noisy, the privacy settings are arcane, things get lost in the mix, the constant advertising - including advertising in the midst of the feeds now - is bad, it's easy to spoof or hack, there are too many bells and whistles graphics, the mobile apps are limited, the software keeps trying to get you to fill out more personal information, discussions are often derailed, and a monthly updating of anything online is simply too slow at this point. Email is far more secure, leaner, runs on a variety of clients, is easy to use on mobile, and comes to you; you can also save emails in a directory for future reference. I'd like to see someone take over the list at this point and I hope that Charles would allow it to continue running until that might be a real possibility, at least a week or two.

Thanks, Alan

As large as it is, Poetics List has a kind of community impetus and pulse.

Thus, unless someone knows about an alternative space serving this function already, we might, for example, start a Facebook page that is updated monthly with those announcement type materials. I don't know how this would work. There should still be a moderator. (Amy, are you still available? Any volunteers?)

Ironically, since I am a blogger and do all kinds of interactive work myself, Facebook is the software I am least familiar with. And I don't like the advertising and snoop-ware. I would have to investigate these possibilities. But I'm happy to try to get something going.

We also need a space to announce calls for papers for conferences on poetics, advertisements for new blog poetics posts and journals, even a space for remembrances of those poets who've passed.

Please advise. You can backchannel me at my personal email for on-going discussion:

Re: What will be missed ...

Fri 24 Jan 2014

Please add my appreciation of Charles and the list managers to all of the collected expressions thus far. No future representation of poetry and poetics of the last 20 years will be sufficient without taking into account the community, activity, and influence of the Poetics list.

As for ways to carry forward (re: Laura Hinton and others), I would think that an invitation-only blog (through Wordpress, for example) would work similarly to this listserv, though I'm not sure a digest option would be possible.

With gratitude,
Brian Clements

The Robinson Jeffers listserv has been shuffled around from one academic institution/server to another as people have moved from job to job, and at this point, the Association is working to move it to a non-academic affiliation/server. I'm not involved, and I don't know how to do it, but I know it is being done. I believe the RJA is looking to move the listserv to Dotster, which hosts the RJA website.

I've almost always been a lurker on this list (I've belonged since about 1995--goodness!) but I have always enjoyed and appreciated it. Thanks to all who have maintained it all these years, to all who post and argue and delight and muddle on it, and to whoever among you out there who might figure out how to keep the list going!

Re: What will be missed ...
Fri 24 Jan 2014

In response to Laura Hinton and others wanting to continue the conversation. I too am in support of trying to continue the list in another format, and the idea of a Wordpress based discussion forum could work well. There are server load issues with the email format of a list serv in that most server accounts have a limit on the number of emails that can be sent per hour, so a list like this could potentially overwhelm such an account (university or corporate server accounts don't have these restrictions, but are also expensive). So, a Wordpress hosted discussion forum, without the mass email sending requirements might be a solution to this. It would need to be hosted on its own server (not at Wordpres.com) so that we could customize as needed (maybe have category filters so you can look for discussions, calls for work, etc.). I could host it on the Chicago School of Poetics site, but I'd like to see if there is any interest in this first as it would be some work to set up.

Also, you can back channel me at: [redacted]

Many thanks to Charles and all the moderators for providing this resource.

At that time the this list was a radically newformat. But it has been over ten years since I left Buffalo; it is not longerviable for me to continue to sponsor the list.I want to thanks the list moderators, a role first introduced in 1999: JoelKuszai, Chris Alexander, Lori Emerson, and our longest serving moderator AmyKing. I am grateful to them for the work they have done.While I have not been active on the list in recent years, I do follow the posts.And over the years the list has been great company and the origin of friendshipsfor many of us and some great conversations.More information on the list athttp://epc.buffalo.edu/poetics/poeticslist.htmlThe archives should remain in place.Charles Bernstein==========The Poetics List*

Count me in on this project. I love Wordpress ... the only problem I've had is dealing with a volume of users on a given site (ie., students), but it sounds like your server can handle that. I've used Wordpress now many times; the free software is clean to use and it can look great. And I agree with Alan that Facebook has all those problems.

I'm looking forward to working with you, Francesco. Poetics List 2 everyone?

I am grateful for the many notes posted here in response to the closing of the Poetics List. I want to thank, especially, Amy King, who has kept the list going for the past years with considerable dedication and effort: her generosity and acuity is appreciated. There seems considerable interest in starting something new to take up where this list has left off. And it must be new, to meet the demands of the present. Onward!

Email is far more secure, leaner, runs on a variety of clients, is easy to use on mobile, and comes to you; you can also save emails in a directory for future reference. I'd like to see someone take over the list at this point and I hope that Charles would allow it to continue running until that might be a real possibility, at least a week or two.*

I just looked at this site, and see several people from the Poetics List are already involved. I like email discussion lists for conversation and announcements better than blogs, and this looks to me the way to continue this list.

Say what you will about Facebook, it does have certain advantages over lists. Though I would like to see something better emerge that people will use as widely.

One of the advantages is that you don't have to get information from people who bore you. You can just block their posts. I know lots of poets don't like that idea, of people being able to easily block others from their info feed, but it's clearly a very good thing. A list is like being in one single room with everyone subscribed to the list. It gets old in a hurry. Windbags get at least equal time with more interesting folks.

The Facebook options on what information you get and to whom you send info are much more granular than list options. Those sorts of options are important, and they never materialized in listserv software. Lists needed a more contemporary architecture of the group, of discussion, and of the missive concerning who receives it based on permissions.

Re: lists

Fri 24 Jan 2014

I become more aware each semester, as new internet courses, super sites, and grade books are added, that the media go far beyond our poetic minds. We need to find a way to cherish the lonely poet on his bench outdoors or sulking in a smoke-filled study. These electronic media are wonderful for bringing some of us together, but we need a wider net. If i were hip I would finish by saying, 'just saying' but I am too old. What I want to say is keep poets connected. Sometimes we only have each other to support us.

Dear Caterina Davinio,

I found you through a small request for someone to translate avant-garde Italian. It was a notice in the Buffalo Poetics list.

We agreed to do some work, and our poetic romance ensued. Of course you have your Claudio and I have Barbara, but together you and I have Serial Phenomenologies and Waiting for the End of the World. Our bi-lingual editions have been lovely works that demonstrate how collaboration can work.

We have found a life beyond the Poetics list, but the list was our matchmaker. Let us praise this selfless endeavor that led to so many fruits.

and the ride, enjoyed it--

Charles--

Thanks for the vehicle

and the ride, enjoyed it--

Met a lot of fabulous people through this list-- For many years there was plenty to discuss and listen to.

Be well

Dear Charles,

Sad that this is ending. A great resource. Many thanks for enabling all the various riches that appeared here.

Re: Poetics List (1993-2014)
Sat 25 Jan 2014

This reminds me a bit of the old days. I'm actually reading what everybody posts, because there's a genuine discussion, an exchange. Who knew?

I neglected to thank Charles in my earlier post, as well as everyone else who has been involved. I think Amy King's tenure as listmod, though, has been particularly noteworthy. I think she deserves special thanks, whether or not you agree with Miekal— and I certainly think he has a point— that moderation has not served the list well in the long run. Whether or not moderation is good for the list or not, though, is an entirely separate matter from the various moderators themselves. All have been very good, but Amy King did it for incredibly long, and her tenure seems to have been seamless, without controversy. (I say 'seems,' of course, because I haven't been reading every post, like I did in the old days.)

This list, clearly, has been a special exchange for many of us, at least at some time or another, and that energy still exists and clearly (not just for myself) needs another outlet. I am hoping we can collectively figure out how to channel it. I agree with those who said (as I previously said) that FB is not a good medium for such an exchange. I personally like the listserv/email technological model, but that may not work for most people, especially as technology evolves. I agree that the need exists, not just for discussion and exchange of ideas, but for basic information as to what's going on. I never thought that calls for work or publication announcements were inherently less important than exchange of ideas. Alan Sondheim usefully points out that for those of us who do not live in NYC or, perhaps, SF, the List is a much-needed vehicle to grasp the full scope of literary activity in our time, much less to figure out where, when or if we want to "submit." The fact of moderation has limited the spontaneity of exchange, and as a result exchange itself. Yet it is ALSO true that flamers and narcissists, when they arise (and they will, eventually) need to quietly and efficiently be moved aside. Can there be spontaneity within moderation? Can there be collective ways of dealing with the flamers which bypass listmods? Who knows?

Let the Poetics List 2 begin, either through institutional sponsorship or "under that table," so to speak. (And, thinking ecologically, I wonder which model would be more sustainable, for a generation or more.)

Laura Hinton, I'm in— whatever evolves.

What's that Pound line about "commerce between us?"

I just looked at this site, and see several people from the Poetics List are already involved.
I like email discussion lists for conversation and announcements better than blogs, and this looks to me the way to continue this list.

Self-moderation among adults could go a long way, mIEKAL aND, on the other hand, besides being "OLD" since the beginning, how many adults are around here?

I logically wanted to write the opposite, since your mail invited for a "let it go free". The mysteries of writing.

Though I've been more a lurker than active participant I agree with Alan, Mark et al that Charles' and Amy's work has been especially useful for those of us outside the major media centers in North America. And I too am in for whatever evolves as PL 2.0.

Whether or not moderation is good for the list or not, though, is an entirely separate matter from the various moderators themselves. I personally like the listserv/email technological model, but that may not work for most people, especially as technology evolves. I agree that the need exists, not just for discussion and exchange of ideas, but for basic information as to what's going on. I never thought that calls for work or publication announcements were inherently less important than exchange of ideas. Alan Sondheim usefully points out that for those of us who do not live in NYC or, perhaps, SF, the List is a much-needed vehicle to grasp the full scope of literary activity in our time, much less to figure out where, when or if we want to "submit." The fact of moderation has limited the spontaneity of exchange, and as a result exchange itself. Yet it is ALSO true that flamers and narcissists, when they arise (and they will, eventually) need to quietly and efficiently be moved aside. Can there be spontaneity within moderation? Can there be collective ways of dealing with the flamers which bypass listmods? Who knows?

Obviously, I'm a fan of the most minimal moderation possible, but poetry and logorrhea seem to go hand in hand. Quite frankly it's a bit of delight to see all these all posting their fond farewells, I had no idea so many of these folks were still subscribed since a lot of them haven't posted in years. Digital community is the real work—takes attention and care. And restraint.

One of the advantages is that you don't have to get information from people who bore you. You can just block their posts. I know lots of poets don't like that idea, of people being able to easily block others from their info feed, but it's clearly a very good thing. A list is like being in one single room with everyone subscribed to the list. It gets old in a hurry. Windbags get at least equal time with more interesting folks.

The Facebook options on what information you get and to whom you send info are much more granular than list options. Those sorts of options are important, and they never materialized in listserv software. Lists needed a more contemporary architecture of the group, of discussion, and of the missive concerning who receives it based on permissions.

Hi, Mark,

I think by "moderation" mIEKAL meant not a moderator, but the imposition of restraint. I agree with mIEKAL that moderation served us badly. At the end, while it helped the List survive as a central posting medium to announce poetry events and publications, it resulted in the atrophy of the List as a forum for heated intellectual exchange.

I agree. A wordpress site would be great for the list, better than a Facebook page. That's why I offered to host at first. But I have limited resources, so I certainly don't covet the hosting part...

I could help a little on the wordpress side of things. Since everyone would have the option to subscribe to particular threads, moderation might not be as necessary as it was perceived to be in the list format. Those who like a list, could still get their list in an email.

All those presently on the list could be sent a one time invitation to join the new one, if Charles would be comfortable with that.

Re: lists

Sat 25 Jan 2014

I am an active administrator in several Facebook pages, most function with minimal moderation overseen by 3 or 4 admins. They seem to work pretty seamlessly with the occasional outbursts of course. On the positive side, they can be set up in a matter of minutes and can be migrated to different platforms at a moment's notice if necessary. Coordinating the page with Twitter and other sites is a real plus. All in all I think it is fabulous that people want to see the idea survive.

Re: lists
Sat 25 Jan 2014

On Facebook or on a blog or whatever, posts can be moderated by the 'owner' of the discussion. On Facebook, that's whomever's wall the discussion originates on. The role of moderator is decentralized. Rather than one big moderator there are as many as there are discussions. I think that's quite a useful model. Having no moderators at all is not an option for most serious forums.

Re: future Poetics

I think it is true that Facebook has largely replaced "lists," but the quality of discussions has not been as good.

For many many years Poetics and WomPo were my lifeline, and I miss the literary discussions and even the fights we used to have. The back and forth was sustained over long periods and I used to love reading about a thread for days and perhaps weeks on end. I met like-minded folks and, for me, it filled the gap between when I finished grad school in 93 and was thrust out into the 'real world" where I often had to take mindless day jobs just to get by.

Thank you for this list! I was sometimes an avid participant and other times a lurker but always grateful for its existence.

New discussion board open
Sat 25 Jan 2014

Ok, I have a first run of the new discussion board online at:

http://poeticslist.chicagoschoolofpoetics.com/

This is just a start. If the discussion board proves useful in continuing the work of the Buffalo Poetics List, I will work to update and improve it based on member suggestions (I have a forum set up to post suggestions). Also, please feel free leave any feedback you may have in the “Feedback” forum.

Some initial notes:

The design of the discussion board is minimalist. I didn’t want the interface to interfere with usability. I am open to suggestions though. 

There seemed to be a balance of pros and cons for moving the list discussions to Facebook or other social media platforms, so I’m going to try and address some of those suggestions in the current discussion board’s functionality.  

Filtering posts: while we can block posts from certain users (as on FB), I thought implementing a way to filter posts by category (if you chose) would be useful. So, I’ve added a series of category tags to start with for this purpose (publications, book releases, announcements, opportunities, discussion, events, readings, and submissions). When you post you can also suggest your own tags to expand on this list. 

Notifications to your FB wall: I will be creating a FB page that will automatically be receiving posts made to the discussion board for those of you who would rather follow the list on FB.  Twitter: for those of you would would rather receive list notifications via twitter, I’ve set up an account for the list @PoeticsList. The discussion baord will automatically tweet new posts to this Twitter feed (this is in the works but will be ready soon). 

A note on moderation: to avoid the board being spammed by trolls or automated spambots, I think it’s best to keep it a moderated discussion. So, it will still be a short wait before your post is approved. I could use some volunteer moderators to help, so if you’re interested please email me at: [redacted] 

Registration: again, to avoid spam we will need to have users register before they can post. There’s no approval process, just register and start posting. 

Hosting: I’m hosting this on the CSoP’s server, but it is intended for all members of the former Buffalo Poetics List. So, rather than having you go to CSoP's main website to access the board, I installed it on a subdomain. When you click on the link listed above you will be taken directly into the discusion board. 

And finally, the Buffalo Poetics List has been a daily stop for me for many years. I appreciate all the list has offered and the community involved in it. Setting up the Poetics List @ Chicago School of Poetics is just a way for me to give back to that community. I hope you ind it useful.

One of the advantages is that you don't have to get information from people who bore you. You can just block their posts. I know lots of poets

don't like that idea, of people being able to easily block others from their info feed, but it's clearly a very good thing. A list is like being in one single room with everyone subscribed to the list. It gets old in a hurry. Windbags get at least equal time with more interesting folks.
The Facebook options on what information you get and to whom you send info are much more granular than list options. Those sorts of options are important, and they never materialized in listserv software. Lists needed a more contemporary architecture of the group, of discussion, and of the missive concerning who receives it based on permissions.

Re: New discussion board in progress
Sat 25 Jan 2014

I first thank Charles and Amy for all the hard work that goes into keeping something like this going. Ironically, I live in NYC now moving from Bflo in '04, but I found the list incredibly informative in all ways - events, calls for work, thoughts on poetics - and even tho I lived in one of those cultural center cities, I the list still kept me informed of things I wouldn't know about otherwise. While I didn't join til the mid 00's I truly feel it fosters a sense of community. There were many things and even nyc events posted on this list that I did not find out about otherwise. (true, i'm not on FB...)

I think Tyrone and Alan have some really good points and I hope to be in on the next list. I agree that FB is not going to do it for many reasons that Alan stated. Some of you may be aware of a similar list but in the innovative/experimental film world called Frameworks and it's still a heady mix of opinion/personal exchanges, very robust calls for work, queries on films/sources/artists and curatorial leads. Most experimental film fests put their calls out there; though I'm not sure if that could be replicated with all poetry journals - it would be great if the list was made known somehow to interested parties. I know there's things like Harriet the Poetry Foundation blog, but while it does perhaps have some similarities it is not a personal exchange email list that can be more intimate and focused on innovative poetics.

I do hope the list can continue as Francesco wishes and perhaps garner the current folks and get new folks in.

Thank you Charles, Alan, Tyrone, Jonathan for all the eloquent words said these last couple days.

I just checked out the Wordpress site initiated by Francesco ... It looks great! It will run more like an Internet thread site (message board), per subject category....and might even be more practical and topic-oriented than the out-going Listserve model. The message board might encourage more active participation on given specific subjects.

Francesco needs volunteers, though, to help monitor the flow of posts.

I think she deserves special thanks, whether or not you agree with Miekal— and I certainly think he has a point— that moderation has not served the list well in the long run. Whether or not moderation is good for the list or not, though, is an entirely separate matter from the various moderators themselves. All have been very good, but Amy King did it for incredibly long, and her tenure seems to have been seamless, without controversy. (I say 'seems,' of course, because I haven't been reading every post, like I did in the old days.)*

This list, clearly, has been a special exchange for many of us, at least at some time or another, and that energy still exists and clearly (not just for myself) needs another outlet. I am hoping we can collectively figure out how to channel it. I agree with those who said (as I previously said) that FB is not a good medium for such an exchange. I personally like the listserv/email technological model, but that may not work for most people, especially as technology evolves. I agree that the need exists, not just for discussion and exchange of ideas, but for basic information as to what's going on. I never thought that calls for work or publication announcements were inherently less important than exchange of ideas. Alan Sondheim usefully points out that for those of us who do not live in NYC or, perhaps, SF, the List is a much-needed vehicle to grasp the full scope of literary activity in our time, much less to figure out where, when or if we want to "submit." The fact of moderation has limited the spontaneity of exchange, and as a result exchange itself. Yet it is ALSO true that flamers and narcissists, when they arise (and they will, eventually) need to quietly and efficiently be moved aside. Can there be spontaneity within moderation? Can there be collective ways of dealing with the flamers which bypass listmods? Who knows?

Let the Poetics List 2 begin, either through institutional sponsorship or "under that table," so to speak. (And, thinking ecologically, I wonder which model would be more sustainable, for a generation or more.)

You cannot politically defy the institutions when all you really wanted was to be clasped to their bosoms and hope in time to be cherished under the very framework of oppressive values you are thinking of overcoming. That would be co-optation, revolution only in the sense of a circulation of elites rather than the extirpation of the very impulses of elitism.

Re: Poetics List (1993-2014)
Sun 26 Jan 2014

I think monitoring is ultimately a good thing. The internet is a place where people feel free to be abusive and say things they would never say in public.

I know this is difficult because the question becomes "who is the gatekeeper?" and the moderation becomes at their personal discretion. Amy King, in fact, was a good person to do this because she has a wide awareness of prejudice. Most people do not. Most people do not even think of prejudice against disability and have their own prejices, so it is not something people willingly stand up against.

I guess I am just saying that if you have controversial views, not even snarky ones or fighting for the sake of fighting, but truly controversial views (but this i mean my view that poets and people with disabilities have nothing wrong with them and should be treated as equals in the poetry community, employment, dating and sexuality) you are going to be attacked. When I called Paul Guest on letting himself be called 'invalid" on his book cover by John Ashbery. I was brutally attacked, and Guest actually won that discussion. HE WON THE RIGHT TO HAVE SOMEONE CALL HIM AN INVALID~! CONGRATUALTIONS!

All I am saying is having a moderator helps people like me who are trying to put forth controversial opinions and are also sensitive and loving and have a super hard time being attacked. Love, Jennifer of the Buffalo Poetics List, I will work to update and improve it based on member suggestions (I have a forum set up to post suggestions). Also, please feel free leave any feedback you may have in the “Feedback” forum.

Some initial notes:

*The design of the discussion board is minimalist. I didn’t want the interface to interfere with usability. I am open to suggestions though. *

*There seemed to be a balance of pros and cons for moving the list discussions to Facebook or other social media platforms, so I’m going to try and address some of those suggestions in the current discussion board’s functionality.  *

*Filtering posts: while we can block posts from certain users (as on FB), I thought implementing a way to filter posts by category (if you chose) would be useful. So, I’ve added a series of category tags to start with for this purpose (publications, book releases, announcements, opportunities, discussion, events, readings, and submissions). When you post you can also suggest your own tags to expand on this list. *

*Notifications to your FB wall: I will be creating a FB page that will automatically be receiving posts made to the discussion board for those of you who would rather follow the list on FB. *
*Twitter: for those of you would would rather receive list notifications via twitter, I’ve set up an account for the list @PoeticsList. The discussion baord will automatically tweet new posts to this Twitter feed (this is in the works but will be ready soon). *

A note on moderation: to avoid the board being spammed by trolls or automated spambots, I think it’s best to keep it a moderated discussion. So, it will still be a short wait before your post is approved. I could use some volunteer moderators to help, so if you’re interested please email me at:

Contraversial to me means putting forth an unpopular opinion in a tempered manner. It used to be gay rights, or rights for people of color, now, for me, it's any resistance against disability as anything but a tradegty or something to be avoided.

Abuse is name calling. Putting people down. Cruel comments that don't add to the discussion - such as Paul Guest calling my writing and arguments that quality of a bad first-year writing student. Or when some guys from a list-serv read my blog post regarding the word retarded and posted my picture on their site ruthlessly making fun of me and attacking me and emailed me at the university to make sure I looked at it, Or the times I have been told online that I am a disgrace to all disabled people and should shut up. That is abuse... have you had this happen to you?

My main reason for the moderation is to stop spam from trolls. I have an automated system in place, on the new list, to stop automated spam attacks, but someone could still register for real, than send spam messages to the board. So, hopefully moderation will help on that end.

Best,
Francesco

Hi, Mark,

I think by "moderation" mIEKAL meant not a moderator, but the imposition of restraint. I agree with mIEKAL that moderation served us badly. At the end, while it helped the List survive as a central posting medium to announce poetry events and publications, it resulted in the atrophy of the List as a forum for heated intellectual exchange.

This reminds me a bit of the old days. I'm actually reading what everybody posts, because there's a genuine discussion, an exchange. Who knew?

I neglected to thank Charles in my earlier post, as well as everyone else who has been involved. I think Amy King's tenure as listmod, though, has been particularly noteworthy. I think she deserves special thanks, whether *or not you agree with Miekalâ€" and I certainly think he has a pointâ€" that moderation has not served the list well in the long run. Whether or not moderation is good for the list or not, though, is an entirely separate matter from the various moderators themselves. All have been very good,* but Amy King did it for incredibly long, and her tenure seems to have been seamless, without controversy. (I say 'seems,' of course, because I haven't been reading every post, like I did in the old days.)

This list, clearly, has been a special exchange for many of us, at least at some time or another, and that energy still exists and clearly (not just for myself) needs another outlet. I am hoping we can collectively figure out how to channel it. I agree with those who said (as I previously said) that FB is not a good medium for such an exchange. I personally like the listserv/email technological model, but that may not work for most people, especially as technology evolves. I agree that the need exists, not just for discussion and exchange of ideas, but for basic information as to what's going on. I never thought that calls for work or publication announcements were inherently less important than exchange of ideas. Alan Sondheim usefully points out that for those of us who do not live in NYC or, perhaps, SF, the List is a much-needed vehicle to grasp the full scope of literary activity in our time, much less to figure out where, when or if we want to "submit." The fact of moderation has limited the spontaneity of exchange, and as a result exchange itself. Yet it is ALSO true that flamers and narcissists, when they arise (and they will, eventually) need to quietly and efficiently be moved aside. Can there be spontaneity within moderation? Can there be collective ways of dealing with the flamers which bypass listmods? Who knows?

Let the Poetics List 2 begin, either through institutional sponsorship or "under that table," so to speak. (And, thinking ecologically, I wonder which model would be more sustainable, for a generation or more.)

Laura Hinton, I'm inâ€” whatever evolves.

What's that Pound line about "commerce between us?"

Last posts, but change is good, seems to be facing towards further. Thank you Charles and each set of moderators who made it work for so long. Signed up a long time ago but not early, internet access a problem. Since with sporadic, intermittent, then continuous access those email reminders of poets & past poetic pleasantries/ platitudes/ plaints/ pleas/ rants were often fun. Though I have mostly lurked it did mean I was not as cut off. I thought Alan Sondheim, Jim Andrews, Amy Ballardini and MiKEAL aND above were all sounding out useful pointers Best, Catherine Walsh..

One thing that will be sorely lacking After Poetics List is a virtual space for calls for poetry of a more experimental, conceptual, language and/or multi-media hybrid aesthetic. The on-line general versions of such lists that I've found are hopelessly muddled with a zillion publications, many of which are alien to radical "innovative work."

Without defining what that is (I'm not gonna do that), the PL has provided some narrowing of that gap. It's been a huge service, just for posting practical poetics info. and announcements to a more specific audience.

As large as it is, Poetics List has a kind of community impetus and pulse.

Thus, unless someone knows about an alternative space serving this function already, we might, for example, start a Facebook page that is updated monthly with those announcement type materials. I don't know how this would work. There should still be a moderator. (Amy, are you still available? Any volunteers?)

Ironically, since I am a blogger and do all kinds of interactive work myself, Facebook is the software I am least familiar with. And I don't like the advertising and snoop-ware. I would have to investigate these possibilities. But I'm happy to try to get something going.

We also need a space to announce calls for papers for conferences on poetics, advertisements for new blog poetics posts and journals, even a space for remembrances of those poets who've passed.

Please advise. You can backchannel me at my personal email for on-going discussion:

an illustrated domestic/historical installment-novel (archive):

$400 artist/writer looking for a cheap room (Victoria)
I'm looking to rent a room anywhere biking distance to Oak Bay. Central locations ideal. I work at a BC Liquor store and I am leaving my apartment Aug 1st. I am extremely clean and organized. I barely ever drink alcohol these days. I do smoke pot every once in a while and cigarettes outside occasionally.
I am considerate, and quiet. I don't have much stuff except recording equipment I will store in the corner of my room. I like to write music quietly (for the most part) in the mornings. Cheaper the better, I'm learning to live with less.

I am a marine ecologist and young professional working at Cal Poly. During times off I like to surf, ski (especially backcountry), climb/boulder, do adventures of all sorts, listen to music (I have 400+ vinyl records), brew beer and make wine (I'm not very good at it, but hey), work on the house/property, and of course eat good food with good friends. I am hoping to find like-minded renters who are fun and adventurous, as well as respectful of this beautiful house and our neighborhood.

Rent is $1000 (master bedroom) or $900 (regular bedroom) per month, plus utilities.

Master Bedroom with walk-in closet. Slider off Living room to private patio & garden area & storage unit. Nicely landscaped community grounds, community pool & Clubhouse.

Alan,

I knew that when I made the point about the Buffalo Listserv preceding blogging, someone would supply corrected information. If this was years ago I might have even guessed that it would be you! Seeing your work on here is one of the things I have missed, and having heard you've recently moved, I hope all is going well with you!

Best wishes,
Nick

I think, one way or another, the list should continue; Fb is bad for a number of reasons: it's noisy, the feeds are noisy, the privacy settings are arcane, things get lost in the mix, the constant advertising - including advertising in the midst of the feeds now - is bad, it's easy to spoof or hack, there are too many bells and whistles graphics, the mobile apps are limited, the software keeps trying to get you to fill out more personal information, discussions are often derailed, and a monthly updating of anything online is simply too slow at this point. Email is far more secure, leaner, runs on a variety of clients, is easy to use on mobile, and comes to you; you can also save emails in a directory for future reference. I'd like to see someone take over the list at this point and I hope that Charles would allow it to continue running until that might be a real possibility, at least a week or two.

Thanks, Alan

In response to Laura Hinton and others wanting to continue the conversati= too am in support of trying to continue the list in another format, and t= he idea of=20

a Wordpress based discussion forum could work well. There are server load= =20 issues with the email format of a list serv in that most server accounts = have a=20 limit on the number of emails that can be sent per hour, so a list like t= his could=20 potentially overwhelm such an account (university or corporate server acc= ounts=20 don't have these restrictions, but are also expensive). So, a Wordpress h= osted=20 discussion forum, without the mass email sending requirements might be a=20=

solution to this. It would need to be hosted on its own server (not at=20=

Wordpres.com) so that we could customize as needed (maybe have category=20= filters so you can look for discussions, calls for work, etc.). I could h= ost it on the=20

Chicago School of Poetics site, but I'd like to see if there is any inter= would work. There should still be a moderator. (Amy, are you still

Ironically, since I am a blogger and do all kinds of interactive work myself, Facebook is the software I am least familiar with. And I don't like the advertising and snoop-ware. I would have to investigate these= possibilities. But I'm happy to try to get something going.

We also need a space to announce calls for papers for conferences on space for remembrances of those poets who've passed.

And thank you to Charles Bernstein, and all who have worked hard to keep this list going.

I just looked at this site, and see several people from the Poetics List are already involved.
I like email discussion lists for conversation and announcements better than blogs, and this looks to me the way to continue this list.

One of the advantages is that you don't have to get information from people who bore you. You can just block their posts. I know lots of poets don't like that idea, of people being able to easily block others from their info feed, but it's clearly a very good thing. A list is like being in one single room with everyone subscribed to the list. It gets old in a hurry. Windbags get at least equal time with more interesting folks.

latter folks don't know is that when Charles asked me to become the moderator, he was ready to retire the list those many years ago as he transitioned over to teaching at Univ of Penn. Â The idea was to at least keep it going at least as an announcements' list, which it has continued to serve as. Â Along with the implementation of new guidelines back then, some of you may have also noticed the change in the list's mission, which allowed the list to carry on in a new permutation, rather than dissolve it altogether.

Anyway, thanks much, Charles, for permitting the list to carry on and for trusting me in that role. Â And thanks again to those who used the list as a vehicle to sustain the world of poetics as so many of us broadly and variously define the word.Â

Best,

Amy

This reminds me a bit of the old days.Â I'm actually reading what everybody posts, because there's a genuine discussion, an exchange.Â Who knew?

I neglected to thank Charles in my earlier post, as well as everyone else who has been involved.Â I think Amy King's tenure as listmod, though, has been particularly noteworthy.Â I think she deserves special thanks, whether or not you agree with Miekalâ€” and I certainly think he has a pointâ€” that moderation has not served the list well in the long run.Â Whether or not moderation is good for the list or not, though, is an entirely separate matter from the various moderators themselves.Â All have been very good, but Amy King did it for incredibly long, and her tenure seems to have been seamless, without controversy.Â (I say 'seems,' of course, because I haven't been reading every post, like I did in the old days.)

This list, clearly, has been a special exchange for many of us, at least at some time or another, and that energy still exists and clearly (not just for myself) needs another outlet.Â I am hoping we can collectively figure out how to channel it.Â I agree with those who said (as I previously said) that FB is not a good medium for such an exchange.Â I personally like the listserv/email technological model, but that may not work for most people, especially as technology evolves.Â I agree that the need exists, not just for discussion and exchange of ideas, but for basic information as to what's going on.Â I never thought that calls for work or publication announcements were inherently less important than exchange of ideas.Â Alan Sondheim usefully points out that for those of us who do not live in NYC or, perhaps, SF, the List is a much-needed vehicle to grasp the full scope of literary activity in our time, much less to figure out where, when or if we want to "submit."Â The fact of moderation has limited the spontaneity of exchange, and as a result exchange itself.Â Yet it is ALSO true that flamers and narcissists, when they arise (and they will, eventually) need to quietly and efficiently be moved aside.Â Can there be spontaneity within moderation?Â Can there be collective ways of dealing with the flamers which bypass listmods?Â Who knows?

Let the Poetics List 2 begin, either through institutional sponsorship or "under that table," so to speak.Â (And, thinking ecologically, I wonder which model would be more sustainable, for a generation or more.)

Laura Hinton, I'm inâ€” whatever evolves.

What's that Pound line about "commerce between us?"

Please include me in any new variant of the list. For me it is a way to overcome a sense of isolation. I am dismayed by the reports of bad behavior. From my small town in Georgia (USA) I am connected with poets on at least four continents. Caterina Davinio brought many of us together in her Venice Biennale Global virtual poetry reading. I am honored to be a part of this community.

Hi, reJennifer,

As far as I am concerned with, the hardest thing the poet suffers from the public is indifference. I am not questioning your right to put forward or defend or argue for your position. If they are truly controversial, as you say you are, people will react to it, not necessarily the way you like. It means they read what you wrote. You can respond or ignore them. There have always been poets with disabilities. Homer, if an actual person, was blind. Alexander Pope was a dwarf. I am sure others can add to the list. Generalizing the term, all of us have our weaknesses and strength. The interactions of both create the quality, the nature of the work.

Ciao,

Murat

Dear everyone --

Note that Francesco Levato has started up a WORDPRESS INCARNATION of our Poetics List. But you have to sign up for the site yourselves. We are not collecting emails!

As per his earlier message below, you just go to the link:

http://poeticslist.chicagoschoolofpoetics.com/

Follow the instructions to log in. I did this no problem. (Feel free to backchannel me if you have an issue. I'll see if I can help you solve it.)

And great news -- Amy King has agreed to moderate!

I just wanted to re-annouince this new development so you all sign on, and also to note we should heartily thank Francesco and now Amy for making this continuation of a moderated posting Poetics List site possible.

In gratitude to both,

This is just a start. If the discussion board proves useful in continuing the work of the Buffalo Poetics List, I will work to update and improve it based on member suggestions (I have a forum set up to post suggestions). Also, please feel free leave any feedback you may have in the "Feedback" forum.

Some initial notes:

*The design of the discussion board is minimalist. I didn't want the interface to interfere with usability. I am open to suggestions though. *

So, I've added a series of category tags to start with for this purpose (publications, book releases, announcements, opportunities, discussion, events, readings, and submissions). When you post you can also suggest your own tags to expand on this list. *

*Notifications to your FB wall: I will be creating a FB page that will automatically be receiving posts made to the discussion board for those of you who would rather follow the list on FB. *
*Twitter: for those of you would would rather receive list notifications via twitter, I've set up an account for the list @PoeticsList. The discussion baord will automatically tweet new posts to this Twitter feed (this is in the works but will be ready soon). *

Well said, Murat. I hadn't known that about Pope, BTW. I would add that a poet more to my liking, Larry Eigner, suffered from cerebral palsy.

Hi, reJennifer,

As far as I am concerned with, the hardest thing the poet suffers from the public is indifference. I am not questioning your right to put forward or defend or argue for your position. If they are truly controversial, as you say you are, people will react to it, not necessarily the way you like. It means they read what you wrote. You can respond or ignore them. There have always been poets with disabilities. Homer, if an actual person, was blind. Alexander Pope was a dwarf. I am sure others can add to the list. Generalizing the term, all of us have our weaknesses and strength. The interactions of both create the quality, the nature of the work.

Ciao,

Murat

Re: Poetics List (1993-2014)
Sun 26 Jan 2014

That said, I believe what Jennifer is describing is abusive responses to her position. Look, anyone is entitled to his or her opinion (expressed appropriately, and with appropriate regard for others). Murat has a point that if you know it will be seen as "controversial" (I myself don't necessarily see why that would be the case, based on what Jennifer writes) then you should expect, and be prepared for, some pushback. However, your point, Jennifer, unless I misread you, is that some of the responses you have received have gone beyond controversy toward abuse or borderline abuse. And I find that stunning. I'm not sure what to tell you except, if you can find the courage, don't let yourself be silenced. And if you need supporters in these (did you say they were online?) forums, maybe some of the members of this list would be willing to turn out electronically to call abuse what it is. I'd be willing. Send me a message, including info on how to create an account, if that happens again. Perhaps also provide more details/context.

Is anyone else in? It's really not cool to behave abusively toward the differently abled, whether online or in person. Let's call that behavior out.

Re: New discussion board open
Sun 26 Jan 2014

I also think we should thank Francesco and Amy. This is thankless work for people who, I'm sure, are busy. So, well— thanks to them!

Regarding moderation— if anyone has particular concerns or suggested ground rules, let's get that out of the way now. I think it's very fair, for example, to say that flaming will not be tolerated; a problem may arise, though, in what, precisely constitutes flaming. I know I recently said something on FB that was taken very, very, very differently than I'd intended— and this by someone with whom I've often had, mostly electronic, but open-minded exchanges. One person's fair comment might be another's flame, or vice versa, and there seems more potential for misreading online than misunderstanding in person. Are there ground rules we can set now that might make this process easier/more transparent going forward? Amy, what ground rules have you used (or which ones would you suggest) when moderating? Miekal, what are your concerns?

I think this might be an important discussion to have sooner than later.

New Release! Matthew Klane's FROM OF THE DAY and the Delet-e Series
Mon 27 Jan 2014

Dear Friends,

Delete Press is pleased to announce the first book in our Delet-e Series, from Of the Day, by Matthew Klane. The book is available for free at the Delete Press website:

deletepress.org

Matthew's book can be read normally, or via the internal links, requiring minimal scrolling (with a few embedded surprises along the way!). We hope you enjoy this latest installment from Delete Press, and from this wonderful poet.

All the best,

Delete

Re: New discussion board open
Mon 27 Jan 2014

I've helped shape the moderation guidelines for music forums before, and the main concerns I've seen formulated surround spamming (by bots and individuals), breaking forum rules, and acts of disrespect, aggression, etc. Spamming and rule-breaking I've found to be generally self-evident, disrespect/aggression a bunch of blurry lines. It can help if there are multiple moderators, and a moderators' thread where questionable behavior is brought for review and action, whether by unanimity, majority, whatever. It can also help to have moderator behavior open for questioning, and have at least one rotating moderator spot if someone's willing to manage that and there are enough willing participants.

Re: Poetics List (1993-2014)
Mon 27 Jan 2014

Hi Mark,

Thank you so much for your support - it makes me feel really heard.

You mentioned Eigner. I am writing a biography on him, doing some archival work, and assisting with permissions for his works. It's a non-stop adventure.

Yes, I haven't spoken about irt publicly, but once I wrote a "column" on my blog about using the word 'retarded." Some creeps got ahold of my photograph and put my picture up on their list-serv mocking me ruthlessly. They emailed me both at home and Montclair state (where I taught) to make sure I saw it.

This was devastating. I also got quite a bit of slack for calling Paul Guest out on letting Ashbery refer to him as "invalid" as did also mary Kerr. You would think that respecting the rights of people with disabilities is a no-brainer. But, really, it is controversial and when I speak up often I am shot down or ignored. Although I realize that my opions are extreme...I for example am perfectly happy having cerebral palsy - it's just who I am! But most want to pity you or believe you would be better off abled and that you wish for that. When you say - I'm disabled and happy with who I am - people will react strongly and negatively.

That said, I haven't had much trouble on the list, here. I think Amy has been a gem. And I have chosen to speak up minimally here because (really) I feel as a girl poet, I am speaking into an empty well & many of my comments are just ignored. Also, since I am uber-sensitive, I am attempting to back away from the internet entirely.

I did take issue, recently, with some criticism here that I felt critized Lisa Jarnot, instead of her writing, and I wrote about that. But, overall, the list has been pretty safe for me and I met some wonderful folks, namely my assistant, Eric.

However, your point, Jennifer, unless I misread you, is that some of the responses you have received have gone beyond controversy toward abuse or borderline abuse. And I find that stunning. I'm not sure what to tell you except, if you can find the courage, don't let yourself be silenced. And if you need supporters in these (did you say they were online?) forums, maybe some of the members of this list would be willing to turn out electronically to call abuse what it is. I'd be willing. Send me a message, including info on how to create an account, if that happens again. Perhaps also provide more details/context.*

Hi - We've been running the wryting-l list since around 1994, when it started as fiction-of-philosophy; it's a list for experimental writing and announcements as well. You can find out more and join through

http://clc.wvu.edu/projects/wryting_l

The list is unmoderated.

Please have a look; I think it would be of interest to anyone subscribed to Poetics.

- Thanks, Alan

I just checked out the Wordpress site initiated by Francesco ... It looks gr=

Francesco needs volunteers, though, to help monitor the flow of posts.

Subject: New discussion board open

Ok, I have a first run of the new discussion board online at:

http://poeticslist.chicagoschoolofpoetics.com/

*This is just a start. If the discussion board proves useful in continuing= the work=20 of the Buffalo Poetics List, I will work to update and improve it based o= n=20
member suggestions (I have a forum set up to post suggestions). Also, ple= ase=20
feel free leave any feedback you may have in the =93Feedback=94 forum.*

Some initial notes:

*The design of the discussion board is minimalist. I didn=92t want the int= erface to=20
interfere with usability. I am open to suggestions though. *

*There seemed to be a balance of pros and cons for moving the list discuss= ions to=20
Facebook or other social media platforms, so I=92m going to try and addre= ss some=20 of those suggestions in the current discussion board=92s functionality. &= amp;#8232;*

*Filtering posts: while we can block posts from certain users (as on FB), =
I thought=20 implementing a way to filter posts by category (if you chose) would be us= eful.=20
So, I=92ve added a series of category tags to start with for this purpose= =20 (publications, book releases, announcements, opportunities, discussion, e= vents,=20 readings, and submissions). When you post you can also suggest your own t= ags=20*

*to expand on this list. *

Notifications to your FB wall: I will be creating a FB page that will aut= omatically=20
be receiving posts made to the discussion board for those of you who woul= d=20
*rather follow the list on FB. *
Twitter: for those of you would would rather receive list notifications v= ia twitter,=20
I=92ve set up an account for the list @PoeticsList. The discussion baord = will=20
automatically tweet new posts to this Twitter feed (this is in the works = but will=20
*be ready soon). *

A note on moderation: to avoid the board being spammed by trolls or autom= ated=20
spambots, I think it=92s best to keep it a moderated discussion. So, it w= ill still be a=20 short wait before your post is approved. I could use some volunteer moder= ators=20
to help, so if you=92re interested please email me at:=20
*[redacted] *

Registration: again, to avoid spam we will need to have users register be= fore=20 they can post. There=92s no approval process, just register and start pos= *ting. *

Hosting: I=92m hosting this on the CSoP=92s server, but it is intended fo= r all members=20 of the former Buffalo Poetics List. So, rather than having you go to CSoP= =92s main=20
website to access the board, I installed it on a subdomain. When you clic= k on the=20
link listed above you will be taken directly into the discusion board.&am= p;#8232;

And finally, the Buffalo Poetics List has been a daily stop for me for ma= ny years.=20
I appreciate all the list has offered and the community involved in it. S= etting up=20
the Poetics List @ Chicago School of Poetics is just a way for me to give= back to=20
that community. I hope you ind it useful.

Best,

Francesco Levato

You cannot politically defy the institutions when all you really wanted was to be clasped to their bosoms and hope in time to be cherished under the very framework of oppressive values you are thinking of overcoming. That would be co-optation, revolution only in the sense of a circulation of elites rather than the extirpation of the very impulses of elitism.

I think monitoring is ultimately a good thing. The internet is a place where people feel free to be abusive and say things they would never say in public.

I know this is difficult because the question becomes "who is the gatekeeper?" and the moderation becomes at their personal discretion. Amy King, in fact, was a good person to do this because she has a wide awareness of prejudice. Most people do not. Most people do not even think of prejudice against disability and have their own prejices, so it is not something people willingly stand up against.

I guess I am just saying that if you have controversial views, not even snarky ones or fighting for the sake of fighting, but truly controversial views (but this i mean my view that poets and people with disabilities have nothing wrong with them and should be treated as equals in the poetry community, employment, dating and sexuality) you are going to be attacked. When I called Paul Guest on letting himself be called 'invalid" on his book cover by John Ashbery. I was brutally attacked, and Guest actually won that discussion. HE WON THE RIGHT TO HAVE SOMEONE CALL HIM AN INVALID~! CONGRATUALTIONS!

Ok, I have a first run of the new discussion board online at:

This is just a start. If the discussion board proves useful in continuing the work of the Buffalo Poetics List, I will work to update and improve it based on member suggestions (I have a forum set up to post suggestions). Also, please feel free leave any feedback you may have in the "Feedback" forum.

Some initial notes:

The design of the discussion board is minimalist. I didn't want the interface to *interfere with usability. I am open to suggestions though. *

There seemed to be a balance of pros and cons for moving the list discussions to Facebook or other social media platforms, so I'm going to try and address some of those suggestions in the current discussion board's functionality.
* *

Filtering posts: while we can block posts from certain users (as on FB), I thought implementing a way to filter posts by category (if you chose) would be useful.
So, I've added a series of category tags to start with for this purpose (publications, book releases, announcements, opportunities, discussion, events, readings, and submissions). When you post you can also suggest your own tags
*to expand on this list. *

Notifications to your FB wall: I will be creating a FB page that will automatically be receiving posts made to the discussion board for those of you who would *rather follow the list on FB. *
Twitter: for those of you would would rather receive list notifications via twitter, I've set up an account for the list @PoeticsList. The discussion baord will automatically tweet new posts to this Twitter feed (this is in the works but will *be ready soon). *

A note on moderation: to avoid the board being spammed by trolls or automated spambots, I think it's best to keep it a moderated discussion. So, it will still be a short wait before your post is approved. I could use some volunteer moderators to help, so if you're interested please email me at:
[redacted]* *

Registration: again, to avoid spam we will need to have users register before

*they can post. There's no approval process, just register and start posting. *

Hosting: I'm hosting this on the CSoP's server, but it is intended for all members of the former Buffalo Poetics List. So, rather than having you go to CSoP's main website to access the board, I installed it on a subdomain. When you click on the *link listed above you will be taken directly into the discusion board. *

And finally, the Buffalo Poetics List has been a daily stop for me for many years.
I appreciate all the list has offered and the community involved in it. Setting up the Poetics List @ Chicago School of Poetics is just a way for me to give back to that community. I hope you ind it useful.

Best,
Francesco Levato

*So, I=92ve added a series of category tags to start with for this purpose (publications, book releases, announcements, opportunities, discussion, events, readings, and submissions). When you post you can also suggest your own tags
to expand on this list. *

*Notifications to your FB wall: I will be creating a FB page that will automatically be receiving posts made to the discussion board for those of you who woul= d
rather follow the list on FB. 
Twitter: for those of you would would rather receive list notifications via twitter,
I=92ve set up an account for the list @PoeticsList. The discussion baord =
will automatically tweet new posts to this Twitter feed (this is in the works but will be ready soon). *

A note on moderation: to avoid the board being spammed by trolls or automated spambots, I think it=92s best to keep it a moderated discussion. So, it w= ill still be a short wait before your post is approved. I could use some volunteer moderators to help, so if you=92re interested please email me at:
[redacted] *<javascript:;> *

*Registration: again, to avoid spam we will need to have users register before they can post. There=92s no approval process, just register and start posting. *

*Hosting: I=92m hosting this on the CSoP=92s server, but it is intended fo= r all members of the former Buffalo Poetics List. So, rather than having you go to CSoP=92s main website to access the board, I installed it on a subdomain. When you clic= k
on the*

*link listed above you will be taken directly into the discusion board. *

And finally, the Buffalo Poetics List has been a daily stop for me for many years.
I appreciate all the list has offered and the community involved in it. Setting up the Poetics List @ Chicago School of Poetics is just a way for me to give back to that community. I hope you ind it useful.

Best,
Francesco Levato

I had a bad experience with this with Roxann Gay. She published an article
I wrote on disability poetics (ok, it was the wrong forum) but people wrote in ruthlessly mocking me... one guy wrote "Is having a small dick a disability?"

I know this is difficult because the question becomes "who is the gatekeeper?" and the moderation becomes at their personal discretion. Amy King, in fact, was a good person to do this because she has a wide awareness of prejudice. Most people do not. Most people do not even think of prejudice against disability and have their own prejices, so it is not something people willingly stand up against.

I guess I am just saying that if you have controversial views, not even snarky ones or fighting for the sake of fighting, but truly controversial views (but this i mean my view that poets and people with disabilities have nothing wrong with them and should be treated as equals in the poetry community, employment, dating and sexuality) you are going to be attacked.
When I called Paul Guest on letting himself be called 'invalid" on his book cover by John Ashbery. I was brutally attacked, and Guest actually won that discussion. HE WON THE RIGHT TO HAVE SOMEONE CALL HIM AN INVALID~! CONGRATUALTIONS!

All I am saying is having a moderator helps people like me who are trying to put forth controversial opinions and are also sensitive and loving and have a super hard time being attacked. Love, Jennifer

Whether or not moderation is good for the list or not, though, is an entirely separate matter from the various moderators themselves. All have been very good, but Amy King did it for incredibly long, and her tenure seems to have been seamless, without controversy. I agree with those who said (as I previously said) that FB is not a good medium for such an exchange. I personally like the listserv/email technological model, but that may not work for most people, especially as technology evolves. I agree that the need exists, not just for discussion and exchange of ideas, but for basic information as to what's going on. I never thought that calls for work or publication announcements were inherently less important than exchange of ideas. Alan Sondheim usefully points out that for those of us who do not live in NYC or, perhaps, SF, the List is a much-needed vehicle to grasp the full scope of literary activity in our time, much less to figure out where, when or if we want to "submit." The fact of moderation has limited the spontaneity of exchange, and as a result exchange itself. Yet it is ALSO true that flamers and narcissists, when they arise (and they will, eventually) need to quietly and efficiently be moved aside. Can there be spontaneity within moderation? Can there be collective ways of dealing with the*

Salute

Nothing, this spume, virgin verse
Only to point to the cup;
So afar many a troupe
Of sirens drowns in reverse.

We navigate, O my diverse
Friends, me now on the poop
You the sumptuous prow to reap
Lightnings and seasons perverse;

A fine ivresse brings me
Fearless of its very pitch
To bear upright this salute

Solitude, reef, star
To whatever is worth
The white concern of our sheet.

CASITA BOILER: Entrenched Codes of Silent Vivienda Clasificados (Exfiltration Series)

an illustrated domestic/historical installment-novel (archive):

$400 artist/writer looking for a cheap room (Victoria)
I'm looking to rent a room anywhere biking distance to Oak Bay. Central locations ideal. I work at a BC Liquor store and I am leaving my apartment Aug 1st. I am extremely clean and organized. I barely ever drink alcohol these days. I do smoke pot every once in a while and cigarettes outside occasionally.
I am considerate, and quiet. I don't have much stuff except recording equipment I will store in the corner of my room. I like to write music quietly (for the most part) in the mornings. Cheaper the better, I'm learning to live with less.

I am a marine ecologist and young professional working at Cal Poly. During times off I like to surf, ski (especially backcountry), climb/boulder, do adventures of all sorts, listen to music (I have 400+ vinyl records), brew beer and make wine (I'm not very good at it, but hey), work on the house/property, and of course eat good food with good friends. I am hoping to find like-minded renters who are fun and adventurous, as well as respectful of this beautiful house and our neighborhood.

Rent is $1000 (master bedroom) or $900 (regular bedroom) per month, plus utilities.

Really Nice Fully Furnished Bedroom. $375 month. $125 deposit. Queen bed, dresser, lamps, TV, Table w/chair, and loveseat. 1 mile W of downtown The Dalles. Large yard with a country like setting. Good parking, Rent includes utilities, cable, internet. Includes all linens, towels, bedding. Share kitchen appliances and accessories, bathroom with tub-shower, laundry room with washer and dryer. Cat okay, if you already have one. 541-980-933four

Looking to help some homeless people have a place to live. Need to either borrow or have you donate 25' or less trailer's to move into trailer park in Atascadero. The fee is half the price of renting one already in place (for empty space). Most homeless who receive some income can afford that if they do not have to pay for the space with trailer included. I will make a commitment to follow through with trailer condition & if one homeless person does not work out, will make sure some other homeless get the opportunity. I am with Alan. I hate to see things go. Facebook has derailed us all.

And thank you to Charles Bernstein, and all who have worked hard to keep this list going.
Best wishes,

Jim

I just looked at this site, and see several people from the Poetics List are already involved.
I like email discussion lists for conversation and announcements better than blogs, and this looks to me the way to continue this list.

Best Regards,
Joel

One of the advantages is that you don't have to get information from poe=

don't like that idea, of people being able to easily block others from their info feed, but it's clearly a very good thing. A list is like

The Facebook options on what information you get and to whom you send info
are much more granular than list options. Those sorts of options are important, and they never materialized in listserv software. Lists needed a more contemporary architecture of the group, of discussion, and of the missive concerning who receives it based on permissions.

Note that Francesco Levato has started up a WORDPRESS INCARNATION of our Poetics List. But you have to sign up for the site yourselves. We are not collecting emails!

As per his earlier message below, you just go to the link:

http://poeticslist.chicagoschoolofpoetics.com/

Follow the instructions to log in. I did this no problem. (Feel free to backchannel me if you have an issue. I'll see if I can help you solve it.)

And great news -- Amy King has agreed to moderate!

I just wanted to re-annouince this new development so you all sign on, and also to note we should heartily thank Francesco and now Amy for making this continuation of a moderated posting Poetics List site possible.

In gratitude to both,
Laura

This is just a start. If the discussion board proves useful in continuing the work of the Buffalo Poetics List, I will work to update and improve it based o= n member suggestions (I have a forum set up to post suggestions). Also, please feel free leave any feedback you may have in the =93Feedback=94 forum.

Some initial notes:

The design of the discussion board is minimalist. I didn=92t want the interface to *interfere with usability. I am open to suggestions though. *

There seemed to be a balance of pros and cons for moving the list discussions to Facebook or other social media platforms, so I=92m going to try and addre= ss some of those suggestions in the current discussion board=92s functionality.
* *

Filtering posts: while we can block posts from certain users (as on FB),
thought implementing a way to filter posts by category (if you chose) would be useful.
So, I=92ve added a series of category tags to start with for this purpose (publications, book releases, announcements, opportunities, discussion, events, readings, and submissions). When you post you can also suggest your own tags
*to expand on this list. *

Notifications to your FB wall: I will be creating a FB page that will automatically be receiving posts made to the discussion board for those of you who woul= d
*rather follow the list on FB. *
Twitter: for those of you would would rather receive list notifications via twitter,
I=92ve set up an account for the list @PoeticsList. The discussion baord
=
will automatically tweet new posts to this Twitter feed (this is in the works but will

A note on moderation: to avoid the board being spammed by trolls or automated spambots, I think it=92s best to keep it a moderated discussion. So, it w= ill
still be a short wait before your post is approved. I could use some volunteer moderators to help, so if you=92re interested please email me at:
*[redacted] *

Registration: again, to avoid spam we will need to have users register before
*they can post. There=92s no approval process, just register and start posting. *

Hosting: I=92m hosting this on the CSoP=92s server, but it is intended fo= r all members of the former Buffalo Poetics List. So, rather than having you go to CSoP=92s main website to access the board, I installed it on a subdomain. When you clic= k
on the *link listed above you will be taken directly into the discusion board. *

And finally, the Buffalo Poetics List has been a daily stop for me for many years.
I appreciate all the list has offered and the community involved in it. Setting up the Poetics List @ Chicago School of Poetics is just a way for me to give back to that community. I hope you ind it useful.

New "MA in Innovative Writing" Program at UBuffalo
Mon 27 Jan 2014

The University at Buffalo is launching a new MA in Innovative Writing Program--a unique form of graduate study in creative writing, closely intertwining the practice of writing with literary and aesthetic inquiries. Our hope is to create an environment in which new forms of writing will flourish. Poetry. Fiction. Hybrid forms. Digital and electronic media. However innovation takes place.

Faculty:
Myung Mi Kim, Judith Goldman, Nnedi Okorafor, Christina Milletti and Dimitri Anastasopoulos

For more information, visit:
http://www.buffalo.edu/content/cas/english/graduate/ma-certificate-in-innovative-writing.html

Application deadline: Feb 1…though we expect to accept applications on a rolling basis this first year.
Please share with your colleagues and students!

I'm not sure what to tell you except, if you can find the courage, don't let yourself be silenced. And if you need supporters in these (did you say they were online?) forums, maybe some of the members of this list would be willing to turn out electronically to call abuse what it is. I'd be willing. Send me a message, including info on how to create an account, if that happens again. Perhaps also provide more details/context.*

Is anyone else in? It's really not cool to behave abusively toward the differently abled, whether online or in person. Let's call that behavior out.

Of course, Larry Eigner is behind all these discussions.
I am aware there is a difference between disagreement and abuse, but I don't think that distinction in the periphery is always that clear. A response that has an emotional edge to it (why should there not be if the issues are important), may possibly seen by the other party as abusive while it may not be so. For instance, is an ironic or sarcastic response abusive? That is why I began this discussion by asking that question.

I'm just curious if you feel your ideas and self have ever been attacked on the internet to this degree? I even had a poet write to tell me that she

Girl poet. That has a quaint sound, but I like it. Is it ok with you girls? I am in my 70s, so I can adopt any new language level. Girl poets. I welcome you. Maybe I can whip up some biscuits. Come visit me, please. Write!

Hi Mark,

Thank you so much for your support - it makes me feel really heard.

You mentioned Eigner. I am writing a biography on him, doing some archival work, and assisting with permissions for his works. It's a non-stop adventure.

Yes, I haven't spoken about irt publicly, but once I wrote a "column" on my blog about using the word 'retarded." Some creeps got ahold of my photograph and put my picture up on their list-serv mocking me ruthlessly. They emailed me both at home and Montclair state (where I taught) to make sure I saw it.

This was devastating. I also got quite a bit of slack for calling Paul Guest out on letting Ashbery refer to him as "invalid" as did also mary Kerr. You would think that respecting the rights of people with disabilities is a no-brainer. But, really, it is controversial and when I speak up often I am shot down or ignored. Although I realize that my opions are extreme...I for example am perfectly happy having cerebral palsy - it's just who I am! But most want to pity you or believe you would be better off abled and that you wish for that. When you say - I'm disabled and happy with who I am - people will react strongly and negatively.

That said, I haven't had much trouble on the list, here. I think Amy has been a gem. And I have chosen to speak up minimally here because (really) I feel as a girl poet, I am speaking into an empty well & many of my comments are just ignored. Also, since I am uber-sensitive, I am attempting to back away from the internet entirely.

I did take issue, recently, with some criticism here that I felt critized Lisa Jarnot, instead of her writing, and I wrote about that. But, overall, the list has been pretty safe for me and I met some wonderful folks, namely my assistant, Eric.

Tarnac, a preparatory act
Tue 28 Jan 2014

Kenning Editions is proud to announce the publication of /Tarnac, a preparatory act <http://www.kenningeditions.com/shop/tarnac-a-preparatory-act/>/, by Jean-Marie Gleize--translated from the French by Joshua Clover, Abigail Lang, and Bonnie Roy. The book is available at a discount: $12.00 through Friday when you purchase directly from the press.

Published in 2011 by Editions du Seuil, /Tarnac, un acte préparatoire/ interrogates in poetic form the fallout from and precedent for the notorious cause célèbre of the "Tarnac Nine"---associated with the Invisible Committee, pseudonymous authors of /The Coming Insurrection/. It is his Anglo-American debut full-length, though as editor of the journal /Nioques/, he is well-known to American readers for, among other things, importing to France the work of some more daring poets from the U.S. In translation, /Tarnac/, a preparatory act not only lends insight into radical aesthetic politics that characterize ongoing transatlantic---indeed global---intellectual affinities, but it introduces to American readers an inestimably important figure of French letters.

Jean-Marie Gleize considers the implication of an arrest for something "preparatory," that is, something like speech. // Can a poem (a preliminary act) be insurrectionary? // Poem as "black positive" as in a photograph of a dark surface--Charles Bernstein

Poetry / Literature, Paperback, 176 pages, ISBN: 9780984647538, details and orders here.

You will also enjoy a discount if you subscribe to receive Tarnac, The Compleat Purge by Trisha Low, and PQRS by Patrick Durgin, bundled for $35.00.

Re: Poetics List (1993-2014)

re-Jennifer,

I said "Larry Eigner is behind all these discussions" both because, in our time, he is the prominent poet with disabilities and also because I was aware you are writing a biography of him.

I must say the reaction to your column about the word "retarded" you described is beyond the pale. I was not referring to that kind of atrocious behaviour. On the other hand, if Paul Guest is O.K. with being described as "invalid" by Ashbery, what right do you have to object to it? I am aware that "invalid" has the connotation "mot valid" in it. Is that your objection, the suggestion that disabilities make a person invalid?

By the way, Tom Savage suffers from epilepsy. There is another (his name eludes me now) who suffers from Tourette Syndrome.

Ciao,
Murat

Hi - Can we have a list somewhere - before time runs out - of all the possibilities for the Poetics Diaspora?

We're running Wryting, at http://clc.wvu.edu/projects/wryting_l
for creative work and announcements;

there's another Poetics list that Amy is running?
and there's New-Poetics and the Poetics forum?

- Please clarify; what worries me is redundancy or dispersion here -

Thanks greatly, Alan

Jennifer Bartlett!

Hi Murat, The list is dying and so is my energy. I am including some links of my work that might explain better… this is a long and tedious topic with many turns and ideas. I feel like you are not quite getting it.

Without reliving the trauma of the Guest thing. Yes. My disagreement with Guest was allowing himself to be referred as NOT VALID - i.e. put down on his book cover, disempowered and put in the victim role for sake of sales. I see it this way - if someone had used the word nigger, fag or bitch in a blurb, we'd never hear the end of it. However, people are so attached to their concept of disability that this kind of thing goes unnoticed and then defended (as you are here). Guest has every right to call himself and invalid and let Mary Kerr and others to it. I have every right to challenge and question that decision. Question: Would you defend the poet is it where the case of a blurb with a racial slur?

I do not use the word SUFFERING FROM in terms of disability. Every corporeal body is or will be full of various types of suffering. To say someone "suffers from" cerebral palsy is degrading and makes a neurotical difference into a disease - which it is not.

Girl poet- I say that a big ironically. But I do consider myself a feisty, sexy "girl" but my father is Lee Bartlett and, therefore, genetically, I can talk circles around any man and probably drink them under the table too.

Murat,

For the sake of humoring me, next time you bring up a poet with a disability would you just say "they have" instead of "suffers from." Have you read Beauty is a Verb? Have you heard of it? BTW, are you friends with my good friend Fanny Howe? I saw a picture of you two on FB?

Jennifer,

I do not get what I am not getting. As I wrote, I did guess that your objection to "invalid" is the suggestion of "not valid" embedded in the word, when deconstructed. But why should Guest react to the word the way you do? Do you mean that he was upset by that use, but kept his mouth shut for monetary or other reasons. If so, you neither say or suggest that.

The word "nigger" has a history of abuse, violence, oppression around it. In that sense, it has an objective aura of abuse around it. "Invalid" (accent on the first syllable) has no such history. Are you saying that that history is "buried," there, and you are criticizing Guest for his lack of consciousness of this fact?

Ciao,

Murat

his book cover, disempowered and put in the victim role for sake of sales. I see it this way - if someone had used the word nigger, fag or bitch in a blurb, we'd never hear the end of it. However, people are so attached to their concept of disability that this kind of thing goes unnoticed and then defended (as you are here). Guest has every right to call himself and invalid and let Mary Kerr and others to it. I have every right to challenge and question that decision. Question: Would you defend the poet is it where the case of a blurb with a racial slur?

I do not use the word SUFFERING FROM in terms of disability. Every corporeal body is or will be full of various types of suffering. To say someone "suffers from" cerebral palsy is degrading and makes a neurotical difference into a disease - which it is not.

Girl poet- I say that a big ironically. But I do consider myself a feisty, sexy "girl" but my father is Lee Bartlett and, therefore, genetically, I can talk circles around any man and probably drink them under the table too.

I must say the reaction to your column about the word "retarded" you described is beyond the pale. I was not referring to that kind of atrocious behaviour. On the other hand, if Paul Guest is O.K. with being described as "invalid" by Ashbery, what right do you have to object to it? I am aware that "invalid" has the connotation "mot valid" in it. Is that your objection, the suggestion that disabilities make a person invalid?

By the way, Tom Savage suffers from epilepsy. There is another (his name eludes me now) who suffers from Tourette Syndrome.

Jennifer,

That was a picture taken of us at The Poetry Project during a break. We were discussing Charles Olson's prose. I was saying with its odd colloquial inversions, particularly in a work like The Mayan Letters, Olson's prose had a greater impact on me than his poetry. If I remember correctly, she seemed to agree with me.

Come to think of it, "disability" has the suggestion of being "un-able" embedded in it. But you do not object to it the way you object to "invalid." What is the difference?

As your poem suggests, being disabled may sharpen one's insight as a poet into the insanities of the "valid" world. In the hands of a poet, a "weakness" may be transformed into strength. Dickinson say, "I play at riches...." In "Questions of Accent" I make a similar argument. Tiresias's blindness goes hand in hand with his prophesy. But that does not mean these people do not suffer from their disabilities. I will keep using '"suffer from disabilities."

Ciao,

Murat

* House Bill 589, with massive changes to voting laws, was rushed through the North Carolina legislature with almost no public notice in the late summer of 2013. It was introduced on the heels of the Shelby County v. Holder Supreme Court case which struck down part of the Voting Rights Act of 1965, and it enacts voting practices that the VRA would not have allowed, especially in Southern states and counties where voter repression and intimidation had long been common practice from the reconstruction to the civil rights movement. Among many changes, the new law allows vigilante poll watchers, and the direct challenging of voters at the polls, requires strict forms of identification beyond a voter registration card, shortens early voting, halts programs to help older teens register for the first time, and places other restrictions on qualifications and access to voting (including not allowing polls to remain open for long lines during elections). The new law is being challenged by a number of groups, including the NAACP, the League of Women Voters, and now the US Department of Justice. It introduces the most severe restrictions on voting in the country.

I am aware there is a difference between disagreement and abuse, but I don't think that distinction in the periphery is always that clear. A response that has an emotional edge to it (why should there not be if the issues are important), may possibly seen by the other party as abusive while it may not be so. For instance, is an ironic or sarcastic response abusive? That is why I began this discussion by asking that question.

have received have gone beyond controversy toward abuse or borderline abuse. And I find that stunning. I'm not sure what to tell you except, if you can find the courage, don't let yourself be silenced. And if you need supporters in these (did you say they were online?) forums, maybe some of the members of this list would be willing to turn out electronically to call abuse what it is. I'd be willing. Send me a message, including info on how to create an account, if that happens again. Perhaps also provide more details/context.
Is anyone else in? It's really not cool to behave abusively toward the differently abled, whether online or in person. Let's call that behavior out.

As Charles knows, i've often quoted him, taking inspiration from his amazing ability to intertwine theory & practice, (and, on a different level) poetry & politics....

as, of course:

"Intellectual property, too, is theft..."

the list of course has been a great commons, sharing as the antithesis of theft (very much the spiritual center of the poetic enterprise)

one hopes it carries on, in some new form on some new platform ...

Subject: Poetics List (1993-2014)

I started the Poetics List in late 1993, just after I came to Buffalo and co-founded the Poetics Program and a little while before the founding of the Electronic Poetry Center. At that time the this list was a radically new format. But it has been over ten years since I left Buffalo; it is not longer viable for me to continue to sponsor the list.

I want to thanks the list moderators, a role first introduced in 1999: Joel Kuszai, Chris Alexander, Lori Emerson, and our longest serving moderator Amy King. I am grateful to them for the work they have done.

While I have not been active on the list in recent years, I do follow the posts. And over the years the list has been great company and the origin of friendships for many of us and some great conversations.

The Poetics List is no longer active. Email delivery has been discontinued. Web archives will remain.

My sincere thanks to Charles Bernstein and Amy King for the long-lived process of the POETICS e-list.

For people who would like to explore the possibilities of other e-lists devoted to the innovative or post-modern in creative writing, I would recommend the following ...

1.) WRYTING-L e-list

2.) Arc.Hive e-list

3.) FLUXUS [fluxlist] e-list

4.) New Poetry e-list

5.) POETICS at CUNY

[moderated by Ammiel Alcalay]

6.) Poetry_etc. e-list

7.) SPECTRE e-list

[for new media in Deep Europe]

8.) SPIDERTANGLE e-list

9.) British & Irish poets

[Google the name of the list or its archive to find subscription information.]

As the Spaniards say ...

Adelante !!!

Next Week! Allen Ginsberg Visiting Fellow Lisa Robertson

Thu 30 Jan 2014

The Poetics List is no longer active. Email delivery has been discontinued. Web archives will remain.

The Jack Kerouac School is pleased to announce our 2013-2014 Allen Ginsberg Visiting Fellow, Lisa Robertson. We hope you can make it to these exciting events!

Reading: Friday, February 7 at 7:30 PM

Lecture: Thinking Space: Kepler's Ellipse, Warburg's Atlas: Monday, February 10 at 7:30 PM

Where: Performing Arts Center, 2130 Arapahoe Ave., Boulder, CO 80302

Cost: Free

Contact: [redacted]<mailto:[redacted]>; [redacted]

Lisa Robertson's visit will begin on Friday, February 7 with a reading. A book signing will follow Robertson's reading, during which her limited edition signed broadside and books will be for sale. The broadsides will be sold for $10 each, and all sales for the broadsides will be cash only. The following Monday, Robertson's events will continue with a lecture titled Thinking Space: Kepler's Ellipse, Warburg's Atlas. Both events are free and open to public.

Lisa Robertson is a Canadian poet and essayist who now lives in the Vienne region of France, in a hamlet with a population of four humans and three dogs. During her time in this place she has published two books; Nilling, a book of prose essays, and Revolution: A Reader, edited and annotated in collaboration with Matthew Stadler. Other recent collaborations have been a sound based performance project with the poet Stacy Doris, as The Perfume Recordist, and text/image installation work, with the artist Kathy Slade. Coach House Books will publish her next book, a long poem called Cinema of the Present. She is currently a visiting professor at Princeton University.

The Allen Ginsberg Visiting Fellowship is distinguished from other visiting programs because of its intensive nature. The Fellow's visit includes a reading, instruction, and direct contact with students, who are given access to the writer's expertise, including a weekend practicum. Community-wide events are incorporated into the Fellow's stay, including a reading, a lecture relating to the development of poetry/prose in the 20th and 21st centuries, and a book signing. The Allen Ginsberg Visiting Fellowship is made possible by the generous support of the Committee on Poetry, founded by the late Allen Ginsberg.

Naropa University welcomes participants with disabilities. Please contact Ariella Ruth at [redacted] or [redacted]<mailto:[redacted]> to inquire about accessibility and discuss disability accommodations needed to participate fully in this event.

END OF THE CITY MAP
translated from the German by Rosmarie Waldrop Prose poems, 64 pp, offset, smyth-sewn
ISBN13 978-1-936194-16-2
Original paperback $14
Publication date: January 15, 2014

Showghi's prose poems leave the map behind and take us into a place where apparently simple everyday scenes turn, by a little stretch of language, into the unpredictable und strange. As Farhad Shoghi has said, he starts working from a word that he respects for its uncertainty and aims for the exact spot (in landscape or thought) where the word can come back to itself, beyond fixed meaning or purpose. “Cool beauty on fire”—Angelika Overath, NEUE ZÜRCHER ZEITUNG “A most stimulating labyrinth of language and association, a maze whose countless corners hold touching surprises, unexpected adventures.”—SAND AM MEER

Farhad Showghi was born in Prague in 1961 and grew up in Germany and Iran. He now lives as a psychiatrist in Hamburg. Beside ENDE DES STADPLANS, our present book, he has published DIE WALNUSSMASKE, DURCH DIE ICH MICH TRÄUMEND ASS [The walnut mask I ate through in a dream], 1998, and DIE GROSSE ENFERNUNG [The great distance], 2008. He has translated Iranian poetry into German.

Note: As tenure relies on legitimate publications and AWP is this caucus affiliation, these bibliographies, by nature must coincide with national program requirements and professional regulations. Other lists could be created, in the future, to carry those grassroots, community, collective, vanity and other self-published venues to save any grassroots people too far removed from the academy to have access to legitimate presses.

Poetics +++, last post from the wilderness, and thanks

To Poetics list, I wrote of broken symmetry, in the midst of a discussion dreams are made of; there was much discussion of the Poetics list, and In fumbling about the Poetics list, making a decision: the world is in the world. The Poetics list considers hypertext, from which dreams are made of; there was much talk of the Poetics list, and In fumbling about the Poetics list, making a decision that the world is, after all, the world, the world is in the world. Dear Poetics list, I am impaled by culture, willingly take center stage, the world is in the world.

About WSB100:

In April of 2014, New York City will hold a month-long celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of William S. Burroughs, the iconic writer of Naked Lunch, Queer, Junky, and many other experimental works of great American literature. Events will take place at Anthology Film Archive, CUNY Graduate Center, Incubator Arts, Issue Project Room, The School for Visual Art, St Mark's Church, The Stone, and Unnameable Books. The diverse array of events include musical performances, public readings, academic panels, art exhibitions, film screenings, multi-media, and performance art. Artists scheduled to appear include John Zorn, Laurie Anderson, Genesis Breyer P-Orridge, Lydia Lunch, Hal Willner, Paul D. Miller AKA DJ Spooky, Bill Laswell, Kenneth Goldsmith, JG Thirlwell, Thurston Moore, Anne Waldman, Steve Dalachinsky, Oliver Harris, Barry Miles, Steve Buscemi, and many more.

The Last Post
Fri 31 Jan 2014

The Poetics List is no longer active. Email delivery has been discontinued. Web archives will remain.

It has been over ten years since I left Buffalo; it is no longer viable for me to continue to sponsor this list. So, as of today, the Poetics List has been discontinued. We are maintaing and hope to improve, the list archive.

The Poetics List EPC page will continue to have current information on the archive:
http://epc.buffalo.edu/poetics/poeticslist.html

And, as the old Poetics List has ended, a new one is beginning. Francesco Levato of the Chicago School of Poetics has started the Poetics List 2.0 -- which has many features not possible to offer via the Liserv format:

I started the Poetics List in late 1993, just after I came to Buffalo and co-founded the Poetics Program and a little while before the founding of the Electronic Poetry Center. When the list began, a email-based discussion group was a radically new format. There was no web interface and no way to filter messages. Emails were read and written via on-line ascii systems. During the first six years of the list, a deep and wide ranging discussion developed among the few hundred of us actively participating. I asked that the list address not be publicized so that we could keep the discussion to those with shared interests and that the list not become a general interest poetry forum. Much of the spirit of the early list was captured by Joel Kuszai, who edited Poetics@, for which I wrote the introduction. This ROOF book is available free in as epub, mobi, or pdf; or via Amazon. Or you can also explore the early Poetics List archive (1993-1996). http://epc.buffalo.edu/poetics/poeticslist.html

The list was unmoderated until 1999. At that time, many of us involved in early forms of social media were confronted by flaming, spam, and trolls -- before having those words for them. While some people objected to our move to list moderation, an unmoderated list ended up driving away or silencing people I wanted to be part of our discussion while at the same time giving free reign to those hostile to the list's basic orientation (which, regrettably, I was far too slow to realize). A no-holds barred unmoderated offshoot of the Poetics List was started but didn't last long. (I take up issues around editing the Poetics List in an essay in "Electronic Pies in the Poetry Skies" in Attack of the Difficult Poems <http://www.electronicbookreview.com/thread/technocapitalism/poetic>.)

In any case, the care free days of the early list were over before the new Millenium opened its eyes. By that time, the list had become a rare open forum for the discussion of, and exchange of information about, unconventional poetry and poetics: you didn't have to be at a bar in New York or a cafe in San Francisco, or to know anybody on a scene, or to be enrolled in a program: all you needed to participate was an active interest. So I was determined to keep the thing afloat and with the help of a succession of list moderators, we did, peaking at about 1500 subscribers, with many more readers via the web.

Like PennSound and the EPC, the Poetics List has been housed in a non-profit, non-commercial space with no advertising, no snooping on reader's or posters' web activity, and privacy of our subscriber email list. This building of noncommercial web space has been a foundational principal for all three sites. For many of the long-term participants of the Poetics List, it became a very personal space of friendship and exchange, argument and disagreement, as well a place to find or post information about new books and publications and web links. Participants relied on the list for contact with those with shared poetry interests and as a means of getting in touch with one another. It was a life-line.

The advent of user-friendly blog sites provided welcome access for poets to create new forums, key alternatives to what the list initially offered. In the last several years, Facebook and Twitter have, for many of us, made Listserv programs less significant.

Here is how I formulated the aims of the list, in consultation with Joel Kusai and Chris Alexander, starting about 2000:

<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<< Our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible. While we recognize that other lists may sponsor other possibilities for exchange, we request that those participating in this forum keep in mind the specialized and focused nature of this project and respect our decision to operate a moderated list. The Poetics List exists to support and encourage divergent points of view on innovative forms of modern and contemporary poetry and poetics, and we are committed to doing what is necessary to preserve this space for such dialog.

Please note that this list is primarily concerned with discussions of poetry and poetics. We strongly encourage subscribers to post information, including web links, relating to publications (print and internet), reading series, and blogs that they have coordinated, edited or published, or in which they appear. Such announcements constitute a core function of this list. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications (print or digital) are always welcome.

The Poetics List is not a forum for a general discussion of poetry or for the exchange of poems. Queries for contact information, messages intended for just a few subscribers, "flame" messages, and free-standing personal poems or journal entries will, in general, not be forwarded to the list.

Also, please note that the Poetics List is not a "chat" list and we discourage the posting of very short messages intended for only a few subscribers. Personal queries and off-topic submissions will not be posted.
